

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

Gough Adds Northamptonshire
8. 27.

HISTORY,
TOPOGRAPHY, AND DIRECTORY
OF
NORTHAMPTONSHIRE;

COMPRISING

A GENERAL SURVEY OF THE COUNTY,

AND A

History of the City and Diocese of Peterborough,

WITH SEPARATE

HISTORICAL, STATISTICAL, AND DESCRIPTIVE SKETCHES OF
ALL THE TOWNS, BOROUGHES, PARISHES, VILLAGES, CHAPELRIES, HUNDREDS, AND MANORS,

AND A VARIETY OF

Archæological, Architectural, Agricultural, Biographical, and Geological Information ;

TO WHICH IS SUBJOINED

A LIST OF THE SEATS AND RESIDENCES OF THE NOBILITY, GENTRY, AND CLERGY.

Second Edition.

By FRANCIS WHELLAN & CO.

LONDON:

WHITTAKER AND CO., AVE MARIA LANE.

NORTHAMPTON: ABEL AND SONS, BOOKSELLERS, &c., 9 PARADE.

PONTEFRACT: RICHARD HOLMES, "ADVERTISER" OFFICE, MARKET PLACE.

PRICE, INCLUDING COLOURED MAP OF THE COUNTY, CLOTH, 30s.; OR HALF CALF, STRONGLY BOUND, 35s. THE MAP MOUNTED ON ROLLER, 4s. EXTRA.

1874.

[Entered at Stationers' Hall.]

PRINTED BY BALLANTYNE AND COMPANY EDINBURGH AND LONDON

P R E F A C E.

IN submitting a second and enlarged edition of the History, Topography, and Directory of Northamptonshire to their numerous patrons and the public, the proprietors feel it an imperative duty to tender their best thanks to the various literary, scientific, and official gentlemen of the county, as well as to the resident clergy, for the uniform courtesy with which they have received and instructed their agents, and furnished them with valuable contributions; as also for their promptitude in replying to their direct inquiries, and revising the articles submitted to them for correction. The assistance thus rendered has been of the utmost value, affording as it does the surest means of imparting to the work that degree of authenticity and usefulness which the proprietors desire should be its characteristics.

As the utility of works of this kind (embracing such a great variety of subjects) entirely depends on their correctness, simplified arrangement, and copiousness of information, the editor's attention, in the compilation of the present one, has been unremittingly directed to the attainment of these objects; and to secure them, every town, parish, village, and almost every house, has been visited by the agents, and the information either corrected or verified on the spot. The best topographical authorities have been studiously consulted, and all possible care taken, even at the expense of delay, in order to secure authentic information, thereby rendering the work as free from inaccuracies as is compatible with the vast amount of matter and the diversity of subjects compressed within its pages. It is therefore hoped that, after a minute examination, this volume, which they now with much deference submit to the ordeal of public criticism, will be found to give general satisfaction; and that any slight mistakes which may appear will be of no material deterioration to its general utility. To the inestimable histories of this county by John Bridges, Esq., and George Baker, Esq., which form the basis of the present work; and to the many excellent local publications by the late Rev. C. H. Hartshorn, O. W. Davys, Esq., Rev. G. A. Poole, M.A. ("On the Abbey Church of Peterborough," St Sepulchre's, Northampton, &c.); Mr F. A. Paley ("Remarks on the Architecture of Peterborough Cathedral"); Rev. W. D. Sweeting, M.A. ("Notes on Parish Churches," the "Triangular Lodge," Rushton, &c.); the late Rev. T. James, M.A. ("On Round Churches"); Murray's "Eastern Cathedrals;" De Wilde's "Rambles Roundabout," and others; as well as to several interesting papers read before the Architectural Society of the Archdeaconry of Northampton, they are deeply indebted for much valuable information. Their thanks are specially due to Samuel Sharp, Esq., F.S.A., F.G.S., of Dallington Hall, for his many important contributions and corrections, and whose able sketch of the "Geology of Northamptonshire," written expressly for this work (page 9), will, they doubt not, be read with much interest; and to their numerous subscribers, who have so munificently supported them in their arduous undertaking, and without whose aid the work could not be successfully carried out, they beg to offer their grateful acknowledgments.

The plan of the work comprises a general history and description of the county of Northampton, comprehending its geological features, rivers, climate and soil, civil divisions, internal communication, agriculture, mining industry, manufactures, local government, income and expenditure, ecclesiastical polity, charities, poor-law unions, lieutenancy, magistrates and public officers, members of parliament, &c. ; and a list of the high sheriffs of the county, from the 1st of Henry II. (1154) to the present time. It also embraces a general retrospective review of the early history of Britain, derived from the best accessible authorities, both ancient and modern, with especial reference to the Roman, Saxon, and Danish invasions, and exhibiting the manners and customs of the various races formerly dominant in this country; together with interesting details respecting the civil and ecclesiastical divisions of England, and the various changes that have taken place in the ancient subdivisions of the kingdom. This is followed by a history of the city of Peterborough and its great Saxon abbey, from its foundation by Peada in 655 to its suppression by Henry VIII. in 1540; the diocese of Peterborough, from the establishment of the see to the present time, with the annals of its bishops, and an elaborate architectural description of its magnificent cathedral. A history of the important town of Northampton, with its once celebrated castle and powerful priory; followed by topographical and statistical descriptions of all the boroughs, towns, parishes, townships, villages, and hamlets, arranged under the twenty hundreds into which the county is divided, showing their locality, territorial extent, rateable value, gross estimated rental, mineral productions, lords of the manors and principal landowners, and the population returns from 1801 to 1871; together with a digest of the manorial history of each place, given on the authority of those laborious antiquaries, Messrs Bridges and Baker; and historic sketches of the seats and mansions of the nobility and gentry, with biographical notices of the principal families; the nature and value of church livings, with a description of the churches, chapels, and public buildings, tithes and their commutation, endowed and other schools, hospitals, benevolent, literary, and scientific institutions, courts of law, charters and privileges of boroughs, &c., &c., and a variety of useful matter extracted from parliamentary reports and other authentic sources—the whole constituting for the important county of Northampton a faithful epitome of great local and historical interest.

In the Directory of each town and parish which follows its history will be found a new and important feature—namely, for Northampton and the other market-towns a full alphabetical arrangement, instead of a brief miscellany is given, in addition to the classification of trades and professions. The work is accompanied with a large new Map of Northamptonshire, reduced from the Ordnance Survey expressly for this work; having all the seats and the various divisions of the county neatly coloured, and the different lines of railway accurately delineated.

FRANCIS WHELLAN & CO.

PONTEFRAC, July 25, 1874.

INDEX OF PLACES.

- ABINGTON, 221
Abthorpe, 535
Addington Great, 741
Addington Little, 742
Adstone, 507
Ailesworth, 656
Alderton, 559
Aldwinkle All Sta., 743
Aldwinkle St Pet. 743
Althorpe, 291
Apethorpe, 683
Apetree or Appletree, 444
Armston, 722
Arthingworth, 820
Ashby Cold, 334
Ashby St Legera, 379
Ashley, 781
Ashton, 560
Ashton, 680
Ashton, 716
Astcote, 543
Aston-le-Walls, 442
Astrop, 486
Astwell, 501
Astwick, 480
Aynho, 462

BADEY, 382
Bainton, 650
Barby, 384
Barford, 821
Barnack, 650
Barnwell All Sts. 746
Barnwell St And. 705
Barton Segrave, 746
Benefield Up. & Lr. 708
Biggin, 716
Billing Great, 222
Billing Little, 225
Blakesley, 508
Blatherwycke, 782
Blisworth, 246
Boddington Upper and Lower, 445
Borough Fen Villa, 666
Bowden Little, 821
Boughton, 226
Bozeat, 908
Brackley, 465
Brackley Hatch, 470
Braddon, 512
Brampton, 783
Brampton Chapel, 293
Brampton Church, 294
Braunston, 386
Braybrook, 823
Brayfield-on-the-Green, 248
Brigstock, 784

Brigstock Park, 785
Brington Great, 296
Brington Little, 298
Brixworth, 854
Brockhall, 299
Broughton, 859
Buckby Long, 336
Bugbrooke, 300
Bulwick, 786
Burton Latimer, 747
Byfield, 446

CAER-DYKE, 634
Caldecot, 910
Caldicott, 553
Canons Ashby, 513
Carlton East, 788
Castle Ashby, 250
Castor, 652
Caswell, 519
Catesby, 390
Cathanger, 511
Chadstone, 253
Chalcombe, 473
Charlock, 537
Charlton, 493
Charwelton, 393
Chelveston, 909
Chester
Chipping Warden, 448
Chipping Warden Hun-dred, 441
Churchfield, 716
Clapton, 725
Clathorpe, 299, 311
Claycoton, 340
Cleley Hundred, 557
Clipston, 824
Cogenhoe, 253
Cold Higham, 537
Colleyweston, 685
Collingtree, 255
Corby, 789
Corby Hundred, 778
Cosgrove, 561
Coton, 328
Cotterstock, 686
Cottesbrooke, 341
Cottingham, 791
Cotton-end, 266
Courteenhall, 257
Cranford St And., 749
Cranford St John, 749
Cransley, 860
Cransley Little, 861
Creaton Great, 343
Creaton Little, 240
Crick, 344
Croughton, 475
Crowfield, 497

Culworth, 476

DALLINGTON, 303
Darlescote, 544
Daventry, 395
Deene, 792
Deenthorpe, 795
Deeping-gate, 665
Denford, 750
Denshanger, 573
Denton, 259
Descote, 544
Desborough, 826
Dingley, 795
Doddington Great, 875
Dodford, 411
Dogthorpe, 623, 649
Draughton, 828
Duddington, 687
Duncote, 519
Duston, 305

EAGLETHORPE, 724
Earl's Barton, 377
Eastcote, 543
Eastfield, 623, 649
Easton-on-the-hill, 688
Easton Maudit, 911
Easton Neston, 563
Ecton, 879
Edgcott, 451
Elkington, 347
Elmington, 716
Etton, 657
Evenley, 478
Everdon, 411
Eydon, 454
Eye, 658

FALCOTT, 502
Far Cotton, 266
Farndish, 912
Farndon East, 828
Farthinghoe, 480
Farthingstone, 416
Fawsley, 417
Fawsley Hundred, 376
Faxton, 867
Field Burcote, 519
Finedon, 751
Fineshade, 796
Floore, 309
Foster's Booth, 539
Fotheringhay, 690
Foxcote, 537
Foxley, 510
Furtho, 566

GAYTON, 539
Geddington, 797

Glaphorne, 694
Glendon, 830
Glinton, 660
Grafton Regis, 567
Grafton Underwood, 754
Greatworth, 455
Greens Norton, 516
Greens Norton Hun-dred, 505
Green's Park, 511
Grendon, 260
Gretton, 798
Grimsbury, 503
Grimscote, 539
Guisborough, 348
Guisboro' Hund. 333
Gunthorpe, 670

HACKLETON, 277
Haddon East, 312
Haddon West, 352
Hale, 785
Halse or Hawes, 470
Hamfordshoe Hun-dred, 874
Handley, 553
Hannington, 861
Hardington, 262
Hardwycke, 862
Hargrave, 912
Harlestone, 314
Harrington, 830
Harpole, 816
Harringworth, 830
Harrowden Great, 863
Harrowden Little, 864
Hartwell, 570
Hartwell Lodge, 571
Haselbeach, 832
Heathencote, 577
Hellidon, 420
Helmdon, 481
Helpstone, 661
Hemington, 709
Heyford Nether, 318
Heyford Upper, 321
Higham Ferrers, 913
Higham Ferrers Hun-dred, 906
Higham Park, 919
Hinton, 459
Hinton in the Hedges, 483
Holcot, 880
Holdenby, 322
Hollowell, 354
Holywell and Little London, 574
Horton, 268
Hothorpe, 561

- Houghton Great, 269
 Houghton Little, 271
 Houghton Hanging, 867
 Hulcote, 566
 Huscote, 504
 Huxloe Hundred, 739

 IROCHESTER, 919
 Irthlingboro', 754
 Ialip, 757
 Isham, 865

 KELMARSH, 833
 Kettering, 758
 Kilsby, 421
 King's Cliffe, 695
 King's Sutton, 484
 King's Sutton Hund., 460
 Kingsthorpe, 228
 Kirby, 511
 Kirby Hall, 799
 Kislbury, 825
 Knuston, 920

 LAMPORT, 866
 Laxton, 801
 Lilbourne, 355
 Lilford, 771
 Litchborough, 423
 Liveden, 727
 Loddington, 838
 Longthorpe, 624, 649
 Lowick, 772
 Luddington-in-the Brook, 711
 Luffield Priory, 520, 533
 Lutton, 698

 MAIDFORD, 520
 Maidwell, 835
 Marholm, 663
 Marston St Lawrence, 487
 Marston Trussell, 836
 Mawley, 867
 Maxey, 664
 Mears Ashby, 881
 Middlethorpe, 530
 Middleton, 792
 Middleton Cheney, 489
 Milton or Middleton
 Malsor, 273
 Moorend, 580
 More-Hay, 697
 Morton Pinkney, 522
 Moulton, 231
 Moulton Park, 234
 Murcott, 339, 369
 Muscott, 423

 NASEBY, 353
 Nassaburgh Hund., 568
 Nassington, 698
 Navisford Hund., 725
 Nethercote, 504
 Newark, 624-649
 Newbold, 825
 Newbold Grounds, 393
 Newborough, 666
 Nobottle, 491
 Newnham, 425
 Newton, 802

 Newton Bromshead, 921
 Nobottle Grove Hund.
 289
 Nobottle or Newbottle, 298
 Northampton, 99
 Almshouses, 145, 146
 Antiquities, 123
 Architectural Society, 152
 Assemblies, 161
 Assizes, 159
 Barracks, 157
 Banks, 157
 Billiard-rooms, 161
 Bills of Mortality,
 163 Borough Fund Account, 160
 Borough Gaol and House of Correction, 155
 Borough, Limits of, 128
 Borough Magistrates, 160
 Castle, 122
 Cathedral, 137
 Catholics, 139
 Cattle market, 162
 Cemetery, 158
 Chapels, 140
 Charities, 165, 220
 Charter of Incorporation, 115
 Charters (new) granted, 117
 Churches, 129
 Convent, 138
 Corn Exchge. Buildings, 157
 Corporation, 159
 Cotton, Manufacture
 of, 128
 County Court, 159
 County Gaol, 155
 County Hall, 155
 Courts of Law, and Record, 159
 Cricket Club, 161
 Crypts, 125
 Directory, 166
 Dispensary, 149
 Drinking - fountains,
 128
 Early History, 125
 Gas Works, 157
 Hospitals and Almshouses, 145
 Infirmary (general), 149 Langham's Almshouse, 146
 Literary & Scientific Institutions, 151
 Lunatic Asylum, 148
 Manufacturers, 126
 Markets and Fairs,
 162, 163
 Mayors, 160
 Mechanics' Institute,
 151

 Members of Parliament, 161
 Militia stores, 157
 Newspapers, 151
 Orphanage for girls, 147 Police Station (borough and county), 157
 Population, 129
 Post Office, 159, 166
 Provident Institution, 153
 Quarter Sessions, 159
 Racecourse, 161
 Railway Stations, 157
 Religious & Useful
 Knowledge Society,
 152
 Rifle Volunteer Corps,
 157
 Savings' Bank, 151
 Schools (public), 142
 Societies — Building,
 &c., 153
 St John's Hospital,
 145
 St Thomas' ditto, 146
 Theatre, 161
 Town-market and municipal boro., 128
 Union Workhouse, 150
 Victoria Promenade,
 161
 Waterworks, 157
 Wells, 158
 Workmen's Club,
 153
 Worthies, 164
 Northborough, 667
 Nortoft, 350
 Norton, 426

 OAKLEY GREAT, 803
 Oakley Little, 804
 Old Stratford, 563
 Old or Wold, 868
 Onley, 385
 Orlingbury, 869
 Orlingbury Hundred, 852
 Orton, 843
 Oundle, 711
 Overstone, 235
 Overthorpe, 504
 Oxenden Great, 837
 Oxenden Little, 822
 Oxney, 624

 PASSENHAM, 571
 Paston, 668
 Pattishall, 542
 Paulerspury, 574
 Peakirk, 671
 Peterborough, 589
 Abbey, 591
 Abbots, 592, 615
 Almshouses, 629
 Assembly Room, 627
 Banks, 629
 Billiard and Chess
 Rooms, 628

 Bishops, Annals of, 616
 Bishop's Manors, 620
 Bridge, 629
 Cathedral, 598
 Cattle Market, 627
 Cemetery, 628
 Chapels, 625
 Charitable Institutions, 626
 Charities, 587
 Church Building Association, 626
 Churches, 590, 621
 Corn Exchange, 627
 County Court and Probate Offices, 628
 Diocese, 615
 Diocese, Dignitaries
 of, 620
 Directory, 630
 Dispensary and Infirmary, 626
 Early History, 590
 Gas Works, 627
 Government & Franchise, 589
 Liberty Gaol, 627 Literary Institute, 627
 Magistrates, 630
 Markets and fairs, 591
 Market House, 626
 Masonic Lodge, 628
 Members of Corporation, 932
 Members of Parliament, 590
 Public Buildings, 626
 Railways, 589
 Railway Stations, 628
 Rifle Volunteers, 628
 River Nene, 590
 Schools, 625
 Societies, 626
 Union Book Club, 628
 Union Workhouse,
 629
 Piddington, 275
 Pilgate, 652
 Pilton, 728
 Pipwell, 849
 Pitsford, 237
 Plowman's Furze, 480
 Plumpton, 524
 Plumpton End, 577
 Polebrook, 721
 Polebrook Hundred, 704
 Potcote, 519
 Potterspury, 578
 Plummers Furze, 480
 Preston Capes, 429
 Preston Deanery, 278
 Preston Little, 430
 Purston, 487
 Puxley, 574
 Pytchley, 870

 QUINTON, 279

 RADSTONE, 493
 Raunds, 922

Ravensthorpe, 326	Stoneton, 451	Trafford, 448	Weston by Weedon, 531
Ringstead, 924	Stowe Nine Churches, 433	Twywell, 775	West Warden, 445
Roads, 581	Strixton, 930	UFFORD, 679	Whilton, 330
Rookenham, 804	Stuchbury, 495	Upton, 329	Whistley-Wood, 470
Rothersthorpe, 280	Sudborough, 774	Upton, 656	Whiston, 282
Rothwell, 838	Sulby, 851	WADENHOE, 738	Whitfield, 504
Rothwell Hundred, 818	Sulchay Walk, 703	Wakefield, 580	Whittering, 681
Rushden, 926	Sulgrave, 457	Wakerley, 811	Whittlebury, 531
Rushton, 841	Sutton, 656	Walgrave, 872	Wicken, 584
ST JAMES' END, 305	Sutton Bassett, 811	Walton, 670	Wigathorpe, 772
Salcey Lodge, 571	Syresham, 496	Walton, 487	Wilbarston, 817
Scaldwell, 871	Sywell, 882	Wansford, 680	Wilby, 905
Sewardale, 566	TANSOR, 701	Wappenham, 500	Willybrook Hundred, 682
Shuttlehanger, 583	Teeton, 328	Warkworth, 502	Winwick, 372
Sibbertoft, 849	Theddingworth, 851	Warkton, 776	Winwick (part of), 724
Silverstone, 525	Thenford, 497	Warmington, 723	Wollaston, 930
Slapton, 527	Thornby, 366	Watford, 367	Wood-Burcote, 553
Slipton, 773	Thornhaugh, 678	Weedon Beck, 435	Woodcroft, 658
Snoescomb, 415	Thorpe, or Thorpe Waterville, 730	Weedon Loys, 529	Woodend, 511
Southfields, 511	Thorpe Achurch, 730	Weekley, 812	Woodford, 458
Southwick, 700	Thorpe Lubbenham, 851	Weldon Great, 814	Woodford, 777
Southorpe, 652	Thorpe Malsor, 852	Weldon Little, 814	Wood-Newton, 702
Spelhoe Hundred, 218	Thorpe Mandeville, 499	Welford, 369	Wootton, 283
Spratton, 239	Thorpe Underwood, 843	Welton, 439	Worthorpe, 677
Stamford Baron, 673	Thrapston, 731	Wellingborough, 883	Wyken Hurst, 586
Stanford, 364	Thrupp-grounds, 423	Werrington, 670	Wymersley Hundred, 244
Stanion, 809	Thurning, 722	West Farndon, 460	YARDLET GOBION, 579
Stanwick, 929	Thurning, 722	West Hay, 697	Yardley Hastings, 286
Staverton, 431	Tichmarsh, 736	Westhorpe, 489	Yarwell, 703
Stean, 494	Tiffeld, 544	Weston Favell, 241	Yelvertoft, 373
Stoke Albany, 810	Towcester, 546	Weston by Welland, 816
Stoke Bruerne, 582	Towcester Hundred, 533
Stoke Doyle, 729

INDEX OF SUBJECTS, FAMILIES, AND PERSONS.

ABBAYS—See Monastic Institutions	Avon, source of, 12, 360	Botantines, 356
A'Beckett, Thomas, 103	Aulus Plautius, 22	Boughton Green Fair, 228
Abington Abbey Retreat, 221	BAGSHAW, Edward, 859	Bovata (off)Land, 75, 933
Aborigines, 14	Baker, Miss Ann Elizabeth, 165	Bowles, Wm. Lisle, M.A., 486
Achurich, John de, 731	Baker, George, Esq., 165	Braunston Tunnel, 396
Agricola, 26, 27	Baptism of 10,000 persons in one day, 42	Braybrooke, Robert de, 824
Agriculture, 6	Barrow Dyke, 34	Braye, the Baroness, 365
Alfred the Great, 52, 67	Bartlett's Well, 854	Bretwalda, 40, 46
Allectus, 32	Bateman Family, 833	Bridges, John, 747
Althorpe Park, 291	Batsaddle Lodge, 869	Bridgewater, Dukedom of, 466
Ancalites, 20	Battle of Middleton Cheney, 491	Brigantes, 21, 23, 30
Andrew, George (Bishop), 404	Battle of Danes Moor, 453	Brinavis, 34
Ancient Britons, 12	Battle of Edgcott, 116	Brine, Rev. —, 763
Ancient Divisions of Land, 75	Battle of Hastings, 60	Britannia Prima, 28
Ancient Chimney Piece, 483	Battle of Naseby, 360	Britannia Secunda, 28
Ancient History, 12, 33	Battle of Northampton, 116, 265	Brown, Robert, 164
Anglesey, 25	Beacon Hill, 931	Brudenell Family, 793
Anketel Mallore, 109	Beaufu, William, 164	Buccleuch, Duke of, 813
Antiquities, 123, 277, 320, 332, 355, 360, 498, 533, 547, 573, 665, 741, 813, 831, 917	Bedford Levels, 712	Burrow Hill, 457
Arbury Bank, 451	Belgæ, 22	Burroughs, The, 349
Arbury Hill, 34, 382, 498	Bell, Thomas, 708	Burgesses Summoned to Parliament, 113, 114
Area of England, Scotland, and Ireland, 98	Ben Jonson, 565	Bury Hill, 547
Arthur, 40	Bernard, Edward, D.D., 576	Butler, Rev. Alban, 444
Attrebatea, 29	Berry Mount Hill, 477
Askham, John, 894	Bibroci, 20	CAER CARADOC, 23
Augustine and Paulinus, first Archbishops of Canterbury and York, 41, 42, 44	Bishops of Peterborough—See Diocese	Caledonians, 26, 32
	Blencowe, Judge, 488	Camulodunum, 22
	Blencowe, William, 489	Canals, 5
	Boadicea, 25, 26	Canute, 56
		Caractacus, 22, 23
		Carausius, 31

- Cardigan, Earl of, 793
 Cardinal Wolsey, 399, 596
 Carey, Dr William, 238, 576
 Carleon, 29
 Cartwright Family, 463
 Cartwright, Dr Thomas, 164
 Carucates (of land), 75
 Cassivellaunus, 20
 Cassu, 20, 29
Castles—
 Barnwell, 705
 Brackley, 466
 Castle Hymel, 796
 Drayton, 773
 Fotheringhay, 690
 Higham Ferrers, 914
 Northampton, 122
 Rockingham, 806
 Roman castles. See Roman
 Wall, 30
 Sulgrave, 457
 Sibbertoft, 849
 Catesby Family, 380
 Cathedral. See Peterborough
 Ditto Catholic, 137
 Catholics, 139
 Catyeuchlane, 16, 29
 Cecil Family, 675
 Celta, the, 14
 Cenimagni, 20
 Cenulf, 48
 Chaponne, Mrs, the authoress,
 775
 Chapels, 140
Charities, 88
 Chipping Warden Hundred,
 442
 Cleley ditto, 558
 Corby ditto, 779
 Fawley ditto, 377
 Greens-Norton ditto, 506
 Guilsborough ditto, 333
 Hamfordshoe ditto, 874
 Higham Ferrers ditto, 907
 Huxloe ditto, 740
 King's Sutton ditto, 462
 Nassaburgh ditto, 587
 Navisford ditto, 726
 Nobottle-grove ditto, 290
 Orlingbury ditto, 853
 Polebrooke ditto, 705
 Rothwell ditto, 819
 Spelhoe ditto, 220
 Towcester ditto, 534
 Willybrook ditto, 683
 Wymersley ditto, 245
 Charnel House, 841
 Charter, 122
 Charwell, source of, 412
 Chaucer the Poet, 235
 Chester, 29
 Chesterfield, 29
 Chichele, Archbishop, 918
 Christianity introduced, 41
 Churches, &c., 90
 Civil divisions of England, 80, 86
 Clare, John, 149, 661
 Clarke, Samuel, 470
 Claudius, 24
 Clifford hill, 271
 Climate, air, &c., 6
 Colchester, 29
 College (All Saints'), 119
 Collingbourn the Author, 380
 Compton Family, 251
 Constantius (Emperor), 32
 Constantine the Great, 32
 Convent of Notre Dame, 138
 Coritani, 16, 29
 Cornavii, 23
 Cosmo the Third, 121
 Cotton manufacture, 128
 County Asylum, 380
 County rates and expenditure, 8
 County Constabulary, 3, 97
 County Courts, 4
 Crane, Sir Francis, 583
 Cranmer, 597
 Crispe, Sir Nicholas, 310
 Cromwell, Lieut.-General, 120
 Cromwell, Thomas, 452
 Crypts, 125
 Cumberland, Richard, 929
 Cunobelin, 21
 Cyric Seant, 419
 DANE-GELD, 55, 74
 Danes' camp, 264
 Danes, invasion of, 50, 52, 56
 " Manners and customs,
 &c., 51
 Danesmoor, 453
 David, King of Scotland, 101
 Davis, William, 583
 De Lacy, Roger, 358
 Demetæ, 30
 De Ros Family, 386
 Dictum de Kenilworth, 287
 Divisions (County), 2
 Dobuni, 16, 30
 Dod, John, M.A., 419
 Doddridge, Dr, 122, 140
 Dodford, Robert, 413
 Domesday Book, 73, 76
 Dowbridge, 356
 Druidism, 17, 25
 Dryden, the poet, 744
 Dunmonii, 22, 29
 Durobrivæ, 34
 Durotriges, 29
 Dyer, the poet, 356
 EADWINE, 43, 44
 Earl Godwin, 57
 Earl Thurferth, 99
 Earl of Warwick, 375
 Earthquakes, 122
 Eboracum (York), 31
 Ecclesiastical divisions, 84
 Edgar, 50, 54
 Edmonds, Sir Clement, 279
 Edward the Confessor, 57, 58
 Edward I., 113
 Egbert, 49
 Ellesmere, Earl of, 466
 Empeon, Sir Richard, 546, 564
 Ethelbald, 47
 Ethelbert (King), 40
 FAIRFAX, Sir Thomas, 120
 Fairs, List of, 98
 Fane Family, 684
 Fermor, Richard, 564
 Feudal system, 70
 Fiefs, 70
 Fires at Northampton, 120, 122
 Fisher, James, 243
 Fitzwilliam Family, 655
 Flavia Cæsariensis, 28
 Fletcher, the Dramatist, 164
 Foxhill, 849
 Freeman, Rev. Langton, 332
 Friend, Rev. Robert, 476
 Friend, John, M.D., 476
 Fuller, Dr Thomas, 745
 Fuller, Andrew, 762
 GARRICK, David, 221
 Gastrell, Francis, D.D., 528
 Gaunt, John of, 235
 General History, 1
 General Infirmary, 147
 Genius of Wellingboro', 890
 Geology, 9, 306, 312
 Gilded Acre, 686
 Gill, Dr John, 763
 Gloucester, 29
 Godwin, Francis, 862
 Gog and Magog, 288
 Golden Ash, 235
 Grafton Family, 568
 Grafton, Honour of, 568
 Greenwood, Henry, 513
 Gregory the Great (Pope), 41
 Guilds, 119
 Gunpowder Plot, 380, 845
 HADRIAN (Emperor), 30
 Hales, Sir Edward, 575
 Halifax, the Earl of, 269
 Hall, Rebecca, 385
 Hardington Union Workhouse, 285
 Hardicanute (King), 57
 Hardrada, 59
 Harleston Stone, 314
 Harold (King), 57, 59
 Harrington, James, Esq., 330
 Hartwell Park, 571
 Hartwell Spring, 431
 Hastings Family, 369
 Hartshorne, Rev. C. H., 102, 265
 Hatton, Sir Christopher, 322
 Hawley Family, 417
 Head, Sir Francis Bond, 838
 Henchman, Humphrey, 747
 Hengist, 38
 Henley, Lord, 368
 Henry VIII., 88
 Hervey, Rev. James, 165, 242,
 267
 Hides (of Land), 75
 Highways, 86
 High Sheriffs, 91
 History of Northampton, 99
 Holcot, Robert, 880
 Holdenby House, 324
 Holland, George, B.D., 404
 Horæ, 38
 Hudson, Rev. Dr Michael, 658
 Hundred, 81
 Huntingdon, Countess of, 502
 IOWEN, 21, 23, 25, 29
 Ina (King), 86

- Incorporation, first charter of, 115
 Iron (production of), 165, 885
 Ise, source of, 360
 Isham Family, 866
- Jews, persecution of, 109; execution of, 113
 Judith, Countess, 101, 249, 286
 Julius Cæsar, 15
- KALENDER Meadow, 342
 Kilsby Tunnel, 421
 Knightley Family, 418
 Knolles, Richard, 336
 Kyneburga, St., 605, 653
- LANGHAM Family, 342
 Lane, Lord Keeper, 317
 Law, Rev. William, 696
 Leam, source of, 420
 Leapor, Mary, 489
 Leigh, J. Ward Boughton, 349
 Leland's tour, 117
 Levellers, the, 120, 121
 Levinz Baptista, D.D., 479
 Levinz, Sir Creswell, 479
 Lieutenantancy, Magistracy, &c., 95
 Lincoln, 29
 Lingard, 51
 Lis, Simon de St., 100, 263
 Lulham bridges, 665
 London, 29
 Longman's Hill, 238
 Lucas, Charles, 404
 Lye, Rev. —, 253
- MAGNA CHARTA, 466
 Maltmill Green, 422
 Mangrove, 377
 Manning, Rev. Owen, 869
 Manny, Sir Walter, 235
 Manor, 84
 Manufactures, 126
 Marmion, Shakerley, 464
 Mastin, Rev. John, 359
 Maxima, 28
 Mayflood, 121
 Measurement, &c., in Dome-day Book, 933
 Medes Well, 590
 Medeshamstede, 590
 Mercia, 39, 45
 Militia, 86
 Minerals, 9, 10, 11
 Monastic Institutions, 88; suppression of, 89
- ABBEYS—
 Bec in Normandy, 436
 Delapre, 118
 Duston, 118, 307
 Fineashade, 796
 Peterborough, 591
 Pipwell, 849
 Sulby, 851
- FRIARIES. See Northampton, 118
- NUMERICALS—
 Castor, 653
- Fotheringhay, 693
 Peakirk, 672
 Rothwell, 839
 Sewardale, 566
 Weedon, 435
- PRIORIES—
 Canons Ashley, 514, 533
 Catesby, 391
 Chalcombe, 474
 Daventry, 398
 Deene, 794
 Everdon, 414
 Luffield, 520
 Northampton, 112, 117
 Stamford Baron, 674
 Weedon Loys, 529
 Whittering, 682
- Montacute, William de, 429
 Montagu Family, 706
 Moothill, 850
 Morgan, Judge, 319
 Morton, Earl of, 301
 Morton, Rev. John, 838
 Municipal and Parliamentary Divisions, 83
- Nene, source of, 12, 360, 431
 Norman Conquest, 60
 Norman dynasty, 67
 Northamptonshire Rifle Volunteers, 98
 Northampton, John of, 164
 „ „ Richard and Adam of, 164
 Norton Wood, 427
- O'BRIEN Family, 221, 223
 Odin, 36
 Odo, Bishop of Bayeux, 71, 76
 Offa, 47
 Old Scarlet, 603
 Ordovices, 23, 30
 Origin of Fairs, Wakes, &c., 111
 Ostor Hill, 352
 Ouse, source of, 480
 Overstone family, 236
 Oxenbridge, John, M.A., 404
 Oxbang (of land) 75, 933
- PAGE, Rev. Eusebius, 750
 Palmer family, 788
 Parai, 29
 Parker, Dr Samuel, 164
 Parker, Samuel, 164
 Parr, Catherine, 518
 Parr, William, Marquis of Northampton, 517
 Peada, 435, 591
 Penda, 45
 Perio grounds, 700
 Petrified skull, 776
 Phœnicians, 13
 Picts and Scots, 32, 33
 Pilgrimage of grace, 89
 Pindar, Sir Paul, 893
 Pipe rolls, 102
 Place House, 283
 Plague, the, 120
 Plowden Family, 443
 Pole, John de la, 223
- Pomfret, Earl of, 565
 Poor Laws (old and new), 87
 Poor Law Unions, 2, 4
 Brackley, 469
 Brixworth, 858
 Daventry, 402
 Hardingstone, 285
 Kettering, 763
 Northampton, 150
 Oundle, 716
 Peterborough, 629
 Potterspury, 579
 Stamford, 676
 Thrapston, 733
 Towcester, 550
 Wellingborough, 893
- Poor rates, 1
 Population and other statistics, 1
 Portway, 463
 Portus Itius, 18
 Pouch, Captain, 120
 Powys Family, 771
 Prefect, 27
 Preston, John, D.D., 321
 Priories. See Monasteries
 Ptolemy, 29
 Puritans, the, 120
 Pytchley hounds, 855
- QUEEN ANNE of Denmark, 559
 Queen Anne's bounty, 86
 Queen Catherine, 596
 Queen Eleanor's cross, 114, 264
 Queen Elizabeth, 119
 Queen Elizabeth (Widville), 569
 Queen Mary, 617
 Queen of Scots (Mary), 606, 617; her execution, 691
 Queen Victoria, 122, 126
 Queen's oak, 570
 Quintain, the, 230
- RAILWAYS, 5
 Randolph the poet, 426
 Redwell, the, 383
 Reform Act, 83
 Remarkable events, 80
 Richard Cœur de Lion, 109
 Richard III., 116
 Richborough, 29
 Rivers, 4
 Roads, 6
 Robinson family, 749
 Rockingham Forest, 806
 Roman colonies, 23, 29
 Roman invasion, 18
 Romans, departure of, 33
 Roman forces, 18, 20
 Roman remains, 34, 306, 318
 Roman roads, 34, 546
Roman Encampments—
 Arbury Hill, 382, 498
 Barrow Dyke, 238
 Black Grounds, 449
 Borough Hill, 397
 Castle Dykes, 416
 Chester, 920
 Guilsborough, 348
 Huntsborough, 264
 Rainsborough, 492

- Sulgrave, 457
 Wallow Bank, 450
Roman Stations, 28
 Castor, 653
 Chipping Warden, 449
 Daventry, 397
 Lilbourne, 356
 Towcester, 547
 Roman wall, 30
 Round Hill, the, 356
 Royal Military Depot, 436
 Royal Villas, 229
 Royal Visits to Northampton, 119
 Rush Mills, 266
 Rydon Hill, 420
- Sr Lor's Well, 530
 Samwell Family, 330
 Sanctuaries, 90
 Sanders & Tollmache Families, 831
 Savings' Banks, 151
 Saxons, 31, 35, 38
 „ manners and customs, &c., 65
 Saxon Heptarchy, 38, 49 ; mythology and religion, 36 ;
 titles of honour, &c., 61
 Segontiaci, 20
 Severus, Emperor, 30
 Sewage-farm, 879
 Shawney, Great, 427
 Shipley, William, 164
 Shooter's Hill, 741
 Sibberton, 679
 Silures, 22, 30
 Smith, John, 404
 Socage, 933
 Sommers, Will, 564
- Spas, and other remarkable springs, 158, 226, 227, 229,
 239, 301, 384, 423, 480, 486,
 509, 516, 578, 590, 705, 828,
 835, 838, 852, 908, 929
 Spencer family, 291, 297
 Sponne, William, D.D., 551
 Stafford, Lord Ralph, 282
 Stanbridge, John, 321
 Stephens, Rev. Jeremiah, 285
 Stoke Park, 582
 Stone coffins, 124
 Stone-pit Field, 441
 Studdbury Hill, 431
 Suetonius Paulinus, 24, 26
 Summary of the county, 933
 Swallow Holes, 708
 Swapham, Robert de, 608
 Sweyne, King of Denmark, 56
 Swinford, Catherine, 235
- TACITUS, 24
 Taylor, William, 321
 Theodosius, 32
 Thicknesse, Philip, 481
 Three-shire-pit, 478
 Tithes, origin of, 86
 Tosto or Tostig, 57, 59
 Tournaments, 112
 Towcester, conflicts at, 547-43
 Towe, source of, 457
 Trade and commerce of the early Britons, 15, 16
 Triangular Lodge, 845
 Trinobantes, 20, 29
 Tresham, Francis, 845
 Tresham, Sir Thomas, 270, 847
 Tripontium, 34, 356
 Trying or Riding, 81
 Turnpikes, Railways, &c., 5
- VARIOUS manors given by the Conqueror to his followers,
 84
 Venerable Bede, 44
 Verulam, 24
 Vespasian, 22
 Vicars Apostolic, 140
 Villa, 84
 Virgates (of Land), 75, 933
- WAKE, Sir Isaac, 224
 Wakefield Lodge, 580
 Wakes or Feasts, 112
 Wallow Bank, 450
 Walthefo, 100, 286
 Wansford in England, 680
 Wareing, William, D.D. (bp.), 138
 Wars of the Barons, 113
 Wars of the Roses, 116
 Washington, Geo. (gen.), 161
 Wat Tyler, rebellion of, 115
 Welland, source of, 850
 Welstead Leonard, 222
 Werburge, St., 435
 Whitewell Hill, 435
 Whittlebury Forest, 532
 Wickliff, 115
 William the Conqueror, 60, 68,
 79
 Willoughby de Broke Family, 327
 Willoughbrooke stream, 682
 Wilson Elizabeth, 522
 Winwidfield, 45
 Winwood, Sir Ralph, 464
 Werce, Geoffrey de, 345
 Wulphere's (King) palace, 435
- YARDLEY Chase and Oak, 238

SEATS AND RESIDENCES OF THE NOBILITY, CLERGY, AND GENTRY.

- ABINGTON Rectory, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile E.N.E. of Northampton, Rev. L. H. Loyd, M.A.
 Abthorpe Vicarage, 3 miles W.S.W. of Towcester, Rev. S. C. Skeels, M.A.
 Addington Great Hall, 4 miles S.W. of Thrapston, Mr Thos. Walters
 Addington Great Rectory, 4 miles S.W. of Thrapston, Rev. R. Doke
 Addington Little Vicarage, 5 miles S. of Thrapston, R. A. Boodle, M.A.
 Adstone Vicarage, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. of Daventry, Rev. Francis Keeling, M.A.
 Aldwinkle All Saints Rectory, 4 miles N.E. of Thrapston, Rev. R. Roberts, B.A.
 Aldwinkle St Peter's Rectory, 4 miles N.E. of Thrapston, Rev. H. Ward, M.A.
 Althorp House, 4 miles N.W. of Northampton, Earl Spencer
 Apethorpe Hall, 4 miles N.W. of Wansford, Earl of Westmoreland
 Arthingworth House, 14 miles of Northampton, Capt. The Hon. Chas. Hy. Cust, J.P.
 Arthingworth Manor, Rev. Hy. R. Rokeby, B.A.
 Ashby Cold Vicarage, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.N.W. of Northampton, Rev. G. Bateman, M.A.
- Ashby St Legers Lodge, 5 miles N. of Daventry, Wm. Jas. Angerstein, Esq.
 Ashby St Legers Manor House, 4 miles N. of Daventry, William Senhouse, Esq.
 Ashby St Legers, 4 miles N. of Daventry, Rev. J. Jenkins, M.A., vicar Ashley Rectory, 5 miles E.N.E. of Market Harborough, Rev. R. T. P. Pulteney, M.A.
 Ashton Rectory, 7 miles S. of Northampton, Rev. A. C. Neely, M.A.
 Astrop, 6 miles S.E. of Banbury, Capt. C. W. J. Unthank
 Astrop House, 5 miles S.E. of Banbury, Sir William Richmond Brown, Bart.
 Aston-le-Walls Rectory, 8 miles N.E. of Banbury, Rev. Henry Thorpe, M.A.
 Aynho Hall, 6 miles W.S.W. of Brackley, David Fullerton, Esq.
 Aynho Rectory, Rev. F. W. Cartwright, M.A.
- BADBY House, 1 mile S. of Daventry, Hon. J. G. H. Massey
 Badby Vicarage, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. of Daventry, Rev. William Scrutton, M.A.

- Bainton Hall, 5 miles E. of Stamford, J. L. Jackson, Esq.
- Barby Manor House, 5 miles N.W. of Daventry, Lumley Chivers Arnold, Esq.
- Barby Rectory, 6 miles N.W. of Daventry, Rev. Laurence Jackson, M.A.
- Barnock Rectory, 4 miles E. of Stamford, Rev. Canon M. Argles, M.A.
- Barnwell Rectory, 2 miles S.E. of Oundle, Rev. G. W. Huntingford, M.A.
- Barton Seagrave Hall, 1½ mile S.E. of Kettering, Dowager Viscountess Hood and Capt. Tibbits, J.P., D.L.
- Barton Seagrave Rectory, 2 miles S.E. of Kettering, Hon. and Rev. J. Marsham, B.A.
- Belmont House (Duddington), 5½ miles S.W. by S. of Stamford, Major Frederick Bowman
- Benefield Rectory, 3 miles W. of Oundle, Rev. A. Lendrum, M.A., curate
- Biggin Hall, 1½ mile S.W. of Oundle, J. D. Russell, Esq., J.P.
- Billing Hall, 4 miles N.E. of Northampton, D. H. Cary-Elwes, Esq.
- Billing Great Rectory, 4 miles N.E. of Northampton, Rev. Joseph Walker, M.A.
- Billing Little Rectory, 3½ miles E. of Northampton, Rev. T. C. Hughes, B.A.
- Blakesley Vicarage, 4 miles W. of Towcester, Rev. James Jenkins
- Blatherwyck Hall, 8 miles N.W. of Oundle, Hy. de Stafford, Esq.
- Blatherwyck Rectory, Rev. S. Backler, M.A.
- Blisworth House, 5 miles N.E. of Northampton, Capt. Maunsell
- Blisworth Rectory, Rev. Wm. Barry, M.A.
- Boddington Rectory, 9 miles S.W. of Daventry, Rev. Edward T. Sale, B.D.
- Boughton House, 2 miles E. of Kettering, Duke of Buccleuch, K.G., D.C.L.
- Boughton Rectory, 3½ miles N.E. of Northampton, Rev. G. S. Howard-Vyse, M.A.
- Bowden Little Rectory, 1 mile S.W. of Market Harborough, Rev. Thos. Fredk. Jerwood
- Bozeat Vicarage, 6 miles S. of Wellingborough, Rev. J. F. Pizey, M.A.
- Brackley Lodge, Captain The Hon. Robert Wellesley Grosvenor
- Brackley Vicarage, Rev. Francis Henry Thicknesse, M.A.
- Braddon House, 3 miles W. of Towcester, Rev. Cornelius Ives, M.A.
- Braddon Rectory, Rev. F. Steward, M.A., curate
- Bragborough Hall, 3 miles N.W. of Daventry, R. H. Lamb, Esq.
- Brampton Rectory, 3½ E. of Market Harborough, Rev. S. L. Smith, M.A.
- Brampton Church Rectory, 4 miles N.W. of Northampton, Rev. G. F. de Teissier, B.D.
- Braunston, Lieut-Colonel J. H. Lowndes, J.P.
- Braunston Rectory, 3 miles N.W. of Daventry, Rev. Lewis Gilbertson, B.D.
- Braybrook Rectory, 3 miles S.E. of Market Harborough, Rev. J. W. Field, M.A.
- Brigstock Vicarage, 6 miles N.W. of Thrapston, Rev. J. P. Sandlands, M.A.
- Brington Great Rectory, 7 miles N.W. of Northampton, Rev. F. J. Ponsonby, M.A.
- Brixworth Hall, 6 miles N. of Northampton, Rd. Lee Bevan, Esq.
- Brixworth Vicarage, Rev. Hy. E. Gedge, M.A.
- Brockhall House, 2 miles of Weedon, Rev. T. C. Thornton
- Brockhall Rectory, Rev. T. K. Brown, M.A.
- Broughton Rectory, 2½ miles S.W. of Kettering, Rev. G. H. Forbes, B.A.
- Buckby Hall, Rugby, 5 miles N.E. of Daventry, Lieut-General Sir F. Horn, K.C.B.
- Buckby Long Vicarage, Rev. C. A. Yate, M.A.
- Bugbrooke Rectory, Weedon, 6 miles S.W. of Northampton, Rev. J. H. Harrison, M.A.
- Bulwick Hall, Wansford, 7 miles S.W. of Oundle, Lieut.-Col. Thos. Tryon, J.P.
- Bulwick Rectory, Wansford, Rev. J. H. Holdich, M.A.
- Burleigh House, 1½ mile S.E. of Stamford, Marquis of Exeter
- Burton Latimer Rectory, 3½ miles S.E. of Kettering, Rev. F. B. Newman, M.A.
- Byfield Rectory, 7½ miles S.W. by S. of Daventry, Rev. F. H. Curgenven, M.A.
- CANONS Ashby House, 12 miles S. of Daventry, Sir H. E. L. Dryden, Bart.
- Carlton Park, 3 miles S.W. by W. of Rockingham, Sir Geoffrey Palmer, Bart.
- Carlton Rectory, Rev. Thos. Owen Hall, B.A.
- Castle Ashby, 7½ miles S. of Northampton, Marquis of Northampton
- Castle Ashby Rectory, Rev. Lord Alwyne Compton, M.A.
- Castor House, 4 miles W. of Peterborough, F. A. White, Esq.
- Castor Rectory, 4½ W. of Peterborough, Rev. J. J. Beresford, B.D.
- Catesby House, 4 miles S.W. of Daventry, R. E. Sheppard, Esq.
- Chalcombe Priory, 4 miles N.N.E. of Banbury, Mrs Cornwallis
- Chalcombe Vicarage, 3½ miles N.N.E. of Banbury, Rev. Wm. Alexander Ayton, B.A.
- Charlton Lodge, Brackley (see Newbottle), Geo. Henry Salisbury, Esq.
- Charlton (Holly House), Brackley (see Newbottle), John M. W. Harris, Esq.
- Charwelton Rectory, Rev. P. W. Storey, B.A., vicar of Fawsley
- Chipping Warden Rectory, 6 miles N.N.W. of Banbury, Rev. B. J. F. Doyle, B.A.
- Churchill House, 2 miles N.E. of Daventry, Henry Haig, Esq.
- Clapton Hall, 5 miles E. by N. of Thrapston, Mr D. E. Winder
- Clapton Rectory, Rev. D. C. Sheddon, M.A.
- Clay-Coton Rectory, 7 miles N.E. of Rugby, Rev. J. C. Poole, M.A.
- Clipston, John R. Wartnaby, Esq.
- Clipston House, 4½ miles S.S.W. of Market Harborough, J. B. Hanbury, Esq.
- Clipston Rectory, Rev. Edm. Thompson, M.A.
- Cogenhoe Rectory, 5 miles E. of Northampton, Rev. C. H. Burnham, M.A.
- Cold Higham Rectory, 4 miles S.W. of Towcester, Rev. W. H. C. Clarke, M.A.
- Collingtree, 3 miles S. of Northampton, Pickering Phipps, Esq., M.P.
- Collingtree Rectory, Rev. G. B. Hill
- Collyweston Rectory, 3½ miles S.W. of Stamford, Rev. N. B. Milnes, M.A.
- Corby Rectory, 10 miles N.W. of Thrapston, Rev. B. E. W. Bennett, M.A.
- Cosgrove Hall, 2 miles N. of Stony Stratford, J. C. Mansel, Esq.
- Cosgrove Rectory, Rev. Geo. Jenkins, M.A.
- Cosgrove Cottage, Mrs Mansel

Cotterstock, 2 miles N.N.E. of Oundle, Capt. James Rickett, H.C.S.
 Cotterstock Hall, Marquis of Huntley
 Cotterstock Vicarage, Rev. A. J. Abbey, M.A.
 Cottesbrooke Grange, H. Hay Langham, Esq.
 Cottesbrooke Hall, 9½ miles N.W. of Northampton, Francis Nathaniel Langham, Esq.
 Cottesbrooke Rectory, Rev. J. T. Drake, B.C.L.
 Cottingham Rectory, 2 miles S.W. of Rockingham, Rev. W. Yates, M.A.
 Courteenhall Hall, 5 miles S. of Northampton, C. C. Dormer, Esq.
 Courtenhall Rectory, Rev. Aug. Dampier, M.A.
 Cranford Hall, 4 miles E. of Kettering, Sir John B. Robinson, Bart.
 Cranford Rectory, Rev. F. L. Robinson, M.A.
 Cransley Hall, 3 miles S.W. of Kettering, William S. Rose, Esq., J.P.
 Cransley Vicarage, Rev. Henry James
 Creaton Rectory, 8 miles N.W. of Northampton, Rev. E. Crow, M.A.
 Crick Rectory, 6 miles of Rugby, J.B. Gray, B.D.
 Croughton House, 3½ miles S.W. of Brackley, Beville Ramsay, Esq., J.P.
 Croughton Rectory, 3½ S.W. of Brackley, Rev. John Lister, M.A.
 Culworth Rectory, 7½ miles N.E. of Banbury, Rev. Charles Hill, M.A.

DALLINGTON Hall, 1½ mile W. of Northampton, Samuel Sharp, Esq., F.S.A., F.G.S.
 Dallington Vic. Rev. Thos. C. Beasley
 Daventry Rectory, Rev. J. M. Collyns, M.A.
 Deene Park, Wansford, 7 W.N.W. of Oundle, Countess of Cardigan and de Lancastre
 Deene Rectory, Rev. Edward T. Sylvester
 De-la-Pre Abbey, half a mile S. of Northampton, J. A. S. Bouverie, Esq., J.P.
 Denford Vicarage, 1½ mile S. of Thrapston, Rev. Edward Sandford
 Desborough Manor House, Lieut.-Col. Thomas Arthur
 Desborough Vicarage, 5 miles S. of Market Harborough, Rev. William Wilson, B.A.
 Dingley Hall, 2½ miles E. of Market Harborough, Henry V. F. Hungerford, Esq.
 Dingley Rectory, Rev. J. B. Cobham, M.A.
 Doddington Vicarage, 2½ miles S. by W. of Wellingborough, Rev. M. W. Gregory, M.A.
 Dodford Vicarage, 3 miles E. of Daventry, H. J. Thompson, M.A.
 Draughton Rectory, 10 miles N. of Northampton, Rev. Thomas M. Cookesley, M.A.
 Drayton House, 3 miles N.W. of Thrapston, Mrs Stopford Sackville and S. G. Stopford Sackville, Esq., M.P.
 Duddington Manor House, 5 miles S.W. by S. of Stamford, W. G. Jackson, Esq., J.P.
 Duddington Vicarage, Rev. E. F. Green, L.M.
 Duston House, 2 miles W. of Northampton, William Butlin, Esq.
 Duston Vicarage, Rev. Peake Banton

EAGLESTHORPE House (Warmington), John Laurance, Esq.
 Earl's Barton Grange, 3½ miles S.W. of Wellingborough, Mr John Phipps
 Earl's Barton Hall, Capt. S. L. Greaves
 Earl's Barton Vicarage, Rev. D. T. Knight, M.A.
 Easton Rectory, 2 miles S.W. of Stamford, Rev. H. W. Charlton, M.A.

Easton Maudit Vicarage, 11 miles of Northampton (vacant)
 Easton Neston House, 1 mile N.E. of Towcester, Earl of Ellesmere
 Easton Neston Vicarage, Rev. R. C. Collins (see Towcester)
 Ecton House, 5 miles S.W. of Wellingborough, Ambrose Isted, Esq.
 Ecton Rectory, Rev. Charles Tizard Davies, M.A.
 Edgcott House, 6 miles N.E. by N. of Banbury, Richd. A. Cartwright, Esq.
 Edgcott Rectory, Rev. Arden Bayley, B.A.
 Etton Rectory, 6½ miles N.E. of Peterborough, Rev. Chas. Mossop, M.A.
 Evenley Hall, 1 mile S.W. of Brackley, Col. Campbell
 Evenley Vicarage, Rev. Edward Worsley
 Everdon Hall, 4 miles S.S.E. of Daventry, David St. Paul, Esq.
 Everdon Rectory, Rev. H. Luxmoore, M.A.
 Eydon Hall, 9 miles S.W. of Daventry, Col. Henry Cartwright Eydon Rectory, Rev. J. Arthur Empeon, M.A.
 Eye Vicarage, 3½ miles N.E. of Peterborough, Rev. G. Thurnell, M.A.

FALCONER's Hill, ½ mile N.W. of Daventry, Capt. Stopford
 Farming Woods Hall, 6 miles N. of Thrapston, Lord Lyveden
 Farndon Hall, 2 miles S.W. of Market Harborough, Mrs Fagan Farndon Rectory, Rev. Alf. Wm. Wilson, M.A.
 Farthinghoe Lodge, 4 miles N.W. of Brackley, The Hon. and Rev. Wm. Blackwood Farthinghoe Rectory, Rev. F. Litchfield, M.A.
 Farthingstone Rectory, 7 miles N.W. of Towcester, Rev. Amos Westoby, M.A.
 Fawley Hall and Park, 4 miles S.W. of Daventry, Sir Rainald Knightley, Bart., M.P.
 Finedon Hall, 3 miles N.E. of Wellingborough, Mrs. F. Dolben
 Finedon Vic., Rev. George Woodfield Paul, M.A.
 Fineshade Abbey, 7 miles W. of Wansford, E. H. C. Monckton, Esq.
 Floore House, 5 miles S.E. of Daventry, Major Fairfax Cartwright Floore Vicarage, Rev. F. P. Johnson, M.A.
 Fotheringhay Vicarage, 4 miles N.N.E. of Oundle, Rev. A. A. Longhurst, M.A.

GAYTON House, 5 miles S.W. of Northampton, Major J. S. Ferguson
 Gayton Rect. Rev. Nicholas John Temple, D.D.
 Geddington Priory House, Kettering, Mrs. and Capt. J. W. Wetherall
 Geddington Vicarage, 3½ N.E. of Kettering, Rev. T. C. B. Cornwell, M.A.
 Glendon Hall, 3 miles N.N.W. of Kettering, Richard Booth, Esq.
 Glendon Rectory, Rev. Richard Morton, M.A.
 Glinton Rectory, 6 miles N. of Peterborough, Rev. W. Cape, M.A.
 Grafton Regis Rectory, 4½ miles of Stony Stratford, Rev. J. B. Sams, M.A.
 Grafton Underwood Rectory, Hon. and Rev. C. J. Vernon, B.A. & J.P.
 Great Oakley Hall, 5 miles N. of Kettering, Capt. A. de Capell Brooke Great Oakley Rectory, Rev. Arthur Charles Tomblin, B.A.

Greatworth Rectory, 5 miles N.W. by N. of Brackley, Rev. Hy. Dyke, B.A.
 Greens Norton Hall, near Towcester, Harry Nicholl, Esq.
 Greens Norton Rectory, 2 miles W.N.W. of Towcester, Rev. Thos. Coldwell, M.A.
 Grendon Vicarage, 8½ miles S.S.W. of Northampton, Rev. Daniel Brent, D.D.
 Gretton Vicarage, Uppingham, 2½ miles N.E. of Rockingham, Rev. Arthur White, M.A.
 Grimsbury House, nr. Banbury, Mrs Churchill
 Guileborough Grange, 11 miles W. of Northampton, Lady Clifton
 Guileborough Hall, Dowager Countess Spencer and Lady S. Spencer
 Guileborough Vic. Rev. T. S. Hichens, M.A.

HACKLETON Vicarage, 5½ miles S.E. of Northampton, Rev. W. H. Gough, M.A.
 Haddon East House, 8 miles N.W. of Northampton (vacant)
 Haddon East Vic. Rev. W. P. Mackesy, M.A.
 Hannington Rectory, 7 miles N.W. by W. of Wellingborough, Rev. John Downes, M.A.
 Hardingstone Vicarage, 1½ mile S.E. of Northampton, Rev. Rt. Hy. Cox, M.A.
 Hardwycke House, 3 miles W. by N.W. of Wellingborough, Rev. Thos. Richards, M.A.
 Hargrave Rectory, 5 m. E. of Higham Ferrers, Rev. Robert Silby Baker, B.A.
 Harlestone Park, 4 miles N.W. of Northampton, Lady Southampton
 Harlestone Rectory, Rev. David Morton, M.A.
 Harpole Hall, 5 miles W. of Northampton, Robert Oldry, Esq.
 Harpole Rectory, 5 miles W. of Northampton, Rev. R. B. Dundas, M.A.
 Harrington Rectory, 7 miles W. by N. of Kettering, Hon. & Rev. H. F. Tollemache, M.A.
 Harringworth Vicarage, 5 miles E. of Rockingham, Rev. F. H. M. Blaydes, M.A.
 Harrowden Great Vicarage, 2 miles N.W. of Wellingboro', Rev. W. C. Roughton, M.A.
 Harrowden Hall, 2 miles N.N.W. of Wellingborough (unoccupied)
 Hartwell Lodge, 7 miles S.S.E. of Northampton, Rev. G. C. Cursbam, B.A.
 Haselbeach Hall, Dowager Viscountess Milton
 Haselbeach Rectory, 12 miles N. by W. of Northampton, Rev. William Bury, M.A.
 Hellidon House, 5 miles S.W. of Daventry, Robert Canning, Esq.
 Hellidon Vicarage, Rev. C. S. Holthouse, M.A.
 Helmdon Rectory, 5 miles S. of Brackley, Rev. Frederick Barnes, M.A.
 Helpston Vicarage, 7½ miles N.E. of Peterborough, Rev. J. A. L. Campbell, M.A.
 Hemington Vicarage, 4½ S.E. by E. of Oundle, Rev. B. N. Cherry, B.A.
 Herne Lodge, Oundle, Captain L. C. Brown
 Heyford Manor House, Weedon, Rev. J. T. H. Smith, M.A.
 Heyford Nether Vicarage, Weedon, 7 miles W. of Northampton, Rev. T. W. Crawley, M.A.
 Higham Ferrers Vicarage, Rev. E. Templeman, B.A.
 Hinton in the Hedges Rectory, 1½ mile E. of Brackley, Rev. George D. Atwood
 Holdenby House, 6½ miles N.W. by N. of Northampton, Lady Clifden Holdenby Rectory, Rev. Frederick Cecil Alderston, M.A.

Holcot Rectory, 7 miles N.E. of Northampton, Rev. Robert Montgomery, M.A.
 Hollowell Vicarage, 9 miles N. of Northampton, Rev. W. R. Burgess, M.A.
 Holly Lodge, Moulton, 3½ miles N.N.E. of Northampton, Mr P. Jeyes
 Horton House, 6 miles S.E. of Northampton, Rev. Sir Henry John Gunning, Bart.
 Hothorpe House, 4½ miles S.W. of Market Harborough, Henry Everett, Esq.
 Houghton Great House, 3 miles S.E. of Northampton, Thomas Coales, Esq.
 Houghton Great Rectory, Rev. Wm. Henry Spencer, M.A.
 Houghton Little House, 3½ miles E. of Northampton, Mrs Lucy Smyth
 Houghton Little Vic., Rev. Christopher Smyth

IRTHLINGBOROUGH Rectory, 5 miles W. of Wellingborough, Rev. J. V. Theed, M.A.
 Isham Rectory, 4 miles N. of Wellingborough, Rev. R. J. Clarke, M.A.
 Islip Rectory, 1 mile N.N.W. of Thrapston, Rev. N. F. Lightfoot, M.A.

KELMARSH Hall, 12 miles N. of Northampton, R. C. Naylor, Esq., J.P.
 Kelmarsh Rectory, Rev. Richard Dalton, M.A.
 Kettering Rectory, Rev. Henry Lindsay, M.A.
 Kilsby Vicarage, 6 miles N.W. of Daventry, Rev. Anthony Bunting, B.A.
 Kingscliffe Rectory, 6½ miles N.W. of Oundle, Rev. Edward Du Pré, B.A.
 King's Sutton House, 5 miles S.E. of Banbury, Mrs Willes and Wm. A. Willes, Esq.
 King's Sutton Vic. Rev. E. W. Urquhart, M.A.
 Kingthorpe Hall, 1½ mile N. by W. of Northampton, Rev. Wm. Thornton, M.A.
 Kingthorpe Vicarage, Rev. J. H. Glover, M.A.
 Kislbury Rectory, 3½ W. by S. of Northampton, Rev. J. T. H. Smith, M.A.
 Knuston Hall, 3 S.E. of Wellingborough, Quintus Vivian, Esq.

LAMPORT Hall, 9 miles N. of Northampton, Sir E. C. Isham, Bart.
 Lampport Rectory, Rev. Robert Isham, M.A.
 Laxton Hall, Uppingham, 8 miles N.W. of Oundle, Lord Carbury
 Laxton Vicarage, 8½ miles of Oundle, Rev. W. J. Pattison, LL.B.
 Lilbourne Vicarage, 4 miles E.N.E. of Rugby, Rev. R. C. Evers, M.A.
 Lilford Hall, 3 S. by W. of Oundle, Lord Lilford
 Litchborough House, 6 miles N.W. of Towcester, Arthur Wm. Grant, Esq.
 Litchborough Rectory, Rev. W. A. Taylor, B.A.
 Little Oakley, 5½ miles N.N.E. of Kettering, Rev. V. C. Turner, rector
 Loddington House, Kettering, Capt. J. T. Wetherall
 Loddington Rectory, 4 miles W. of Kettering, Rev. D. T. Gladstone, M.A.
 Lowick Rectory, 2 miles N. of Thrapston, Rev. Wm. L. Collins, M.A.
 Luton Rectory, 5 miles S.E. of Oundle, Rev. C. J. Gibbon, M.A.

MAIDFORD Rectory, 6 miles N.W. of Towcester, Rev. Wm. Egerton Tapp, M.A.
 Maidwell Hall, 10½ miles N. of Northampton, Wm. Belgrave, Esq.

- Maidwell, Rev. John L. Whiteford, M.A., rector
 Marholm Rectory, 4 miles N.E. of Peterborough, Rev. R. S. C. Blacker, M.A.
 Marston Hall, 3 miles W. by S. of Market Har-borough, B. E. Bennett, Esq.
 Marston House, 5 miles N.W. of Brackley,
 John Alexander Blencowe, Esq.
 Marston Rectory, 3 miles W. by S. of Market
 Harborough, Rev. William Law, M.A.
 Marston St Lawrence, Vicarage 5 miles N.W. of Brackley, Rev. Thomas Blencowe, M.A.
 Maxey House, 2 miles S. of Market Deeping,
 John C. Sharpe, Esq.
 Maxey Vicarage, 2 miles S. of Market Deep-ing, Rev. Charles Cookson, B.A.
 Mears Ashby, Brookside, Henry Park Stockdale, Esq.
 Mears Ashby Hall, 7 miles N.E. of Northampton, H. M. Stockdale, Esq., J.P., D.L.
 Mears Ashby Vic., Rev. Henry Bowmar, M.A.
 Middleton Cheney Rectory, 3 miles N.E. of Banbury, Rev. Wm. Edward Buckley, M.A.
 Middleton Cheney (The Holt), 3 miles N.E. of Banbury, Thomas Hunt, Esq.
 Mill House, 2 miles N.N.E. of Oundle, Capt.
 James Rickett, H.C.S.
 Milton Ferry, 3 miles W. of Peterborough,
 John Yeoman Esq., J.P.
 Milton House, 3 miles W. of Peterborough,
 The Hon. Mrs Fitzwilliam
 Milton Rectory, 3 miles S. by W. of Northampton, Rev. John Brown, M.A.
 Morton Pinkney Manor House, 8 miles W. by
 N. of Towcester, Baroness Sempell
 Morton Pinkney Vicarage, Rev. Francis
 Jones, M.A.
 Moulton Grange, 6 miles N.E. of Northampton,
 Henry O. Nethercote, Esq.
 Moulton Vicarage, Rev. Thomas Sanders, M.A.
 Moulton Park, 2½ miles N.N.E. of Northampton, Sir John B. Robinson, Bart.
- NASEBY Vicarage, 12 miles N.N.W. of Northampton, Rev. J. R. Briscoe, B.A.
 Naseby Woolleys, George Ashby Ashby, Esq.,
 J.P. and D.L.
 Nassington Vicarage, 6 miles N. of Oundle,
 Rev. H. S. Bagshaw, LL.B., curate
 Newborough Vicarage, 4 miles N.E. of Peterborough, Rev. G. A. Willan, M.A.
 Newbottle Manor House, 4½ miles W. of Brackley, T.R.B.L.M. Cartwright, Esq., J.P.
 Newbottle Vicarage, Rev. William Noble
 Newnham Hall, 2½ miles S.E. of Daventry,
 Miss Ann Hickman
 Newton Bromashold Rectory, 3½ miles S.E. of Higham Ferrers, Rev. Wm. Taylor, M.A.
 Northborough Rectory, 7 miles N.N.W. of Peterborough, Rev. W. A. White, B.A.
 Northampton (see Directory)
 Norton Hall, 2 miles E.N.E. of Daventry, Alfred Seymour, Esq.
 Norton Vicarage, Rev. Thomas Corser, M.A.
- OLD Rectory, 9 miles of Northampton, Rev. T.
 H. R. Shand, M.A.
 Orlingbury Hall, 4 miles N.W. by W. of Wellingborough, A. A. Young, Esq., J.P.
 Orlingbury Rectory, Rev. H. D. Hilton, M.A.
 Oundle Vicarage, Rev. Charles Hopkins, M.A.
 Overstone Hall, 5 miles N.E. of Northampton,
 Lord Overstone
- Overston Rectory, 4 miles N.E. of Northampton, Rev. E. J. Birch, B.A.
 Oxenden House, 3 miles S. of Market Har-borough, William Henry Harrison, Esq.
 Oxenden Rectory, Rev. Edward Parker, M.A.
- PASSENHAM Rectory, 1½ mile N.W. of Stony Stratford, Rev. G. M. Capel, B.A.
 Paston Hall, 2½ miles N. of Peterborough,
 Mrs Strong
 Paston Rectory, Rev. Joseph Pratt, M.A.
 Pattishall Manor House, 4 miles N.N.W. of Towcester, George Osborn, Esq.
 Pattishall Vicarage (Nether), Rev. H. F. Welch
 Pattishall Vicarage (Upper), Rev. Charles A.
 Perring
 Paulerspury Rectory, 3 miles S. of Towcester,
 Rev. W. H. Newbolt, M.A.
 Peakirk Rectory, 6 miles N. by W. of Peterborough, Rev. E. James, M.A.
 Peterborough (see Directory)
 The Palace, the Lord Bishop of Peterborough
 The Deanery, the Very Rev. the Dean of Peterborough
 Pilton Rectory, 3 miles S.S.W. of Oundle,
 Rev. F. G. Hodgson, M.A.
 Pipwell Hall, Kettering, Hon. A. Fred. Hood
 Pitsford Rectory, 5 miles N. of Northampton,
 Rev. John Day, curate
 Polebrook Rectory, 2½ miles E.S.E. of Oundle, Rev. H. V. Broughton, M.A.
 Pottersbury Vicarage, 3 miles of Stony Stratford, Rev. R. E. Crawley, M.A.
 Preston Capes Rectory, 5 miles S. of Daventry, Rev. V. Knightley, M.A.
 Preston Deanery Hall, 4½ miles S. of Northampton, Edward Singleton, Esq.
 Pytchley House, 3 miles S. by W. of Ketter-ing, Capt. C. H. Heycock
 Pytchley Vicarage, 2½ miles S. by W. of Kettering, Rev. J. H. Bullivant, B.A.
 Quinton Rectory, 4½ miles S.E. of Northampton, Rev. Geo. Edward Cole, M.A.
- RADSTONE Vicarage, 2½ miles N. of Brackley, Rev. C. E. Thompson, M.A.
 Raunds Hall, John K. Nichols, Esq.
 Raunds Vicarage, 6 miles W. of Thrapston,
 Rev. Charles Porter, M.A.
 Ravensthorpe Vicarage, 9½ N.W. of Northampton, Rev. Wm. A. Strong, M.A.
 Roade Vicarage, 5½ miles S. of Northampton,
 Rev. A. W. Annand, M.A.
 Rockingham Castle, Leicester, 9 miles N. of Kettering, George Lewis Watson, Esq.
 Rockingham Rectory, Rev. H. J. Bigge, M.A.
 Rothersthorpe Vicarage, 4 miles S.W. of Northampton, Rev. J. P. Carey, M.A.
 Rothwell Vicarage, 4 miles N.W. of Kettering,
 Rev. Richard Morton, M.A.
 Rushden Hall, 1 mile S. of Higham Ferrers,
 F. W. Sartoris, Esq.
 Rushden House, Henry Wm. Currie, Esq.
 Rushden Rectory, Rev. John T. Barker, M.A.
 Rushton Hall, 3½ miles N.W. of Kettering,
 W. C. C. Thornhill, Esq.
 Rushton Rectory, Rev. A. Hawkes, M.A.
 Rye Hills, Guilsborough, 10 miles N.W. by N.
 of Northampton, R. Stephens, Esq.
- SALCEY Lodge, 8 miles from Northampton, Hy.
 Fitzroy, Esq.

Scaldwell Rectory, 8 N. by E. of Northampton, Rev. A. H. Cole-Hamilton, M.A.
 Shelbroke Lodge, 4 miles S. by W. of Towcester, R. E. Oliver, Esq.
 Sibbertoft Vicarage, 6 S.W. of Market Harborough, Rev. M. J. Berkeley, M.A. F.L.S.
 Sibbertoft (The Cottage), Capt. E. S. Berkeley
 Southwick Hall, 3 miles N.N.W. of Oundle, Rev. G. H. W. Capron Southwick Vicarage, Rev. Thomas Richard Brown, M.A.
 Spratton Grange, 8 miles N. of Northampton, A. A. Berens, Esq., J.P.
 Spratton Hall, 7 miles N. of Northampton, Captain Mildmay Clerk
 Spratton Vic., Rev. John L. Roberts, M.A.
 Stanford Hall, Rugby, Hon. Maria Cave
 Stanford Vicarage, Rev. John Lindsay, M.A.
 Stanwick Hall, 2½ miles E. by N. of Higham Ferrers, Cecil A. S. Wetenhall, Esq.
 Stanwick House, Spencer Pratt, Esq.
 Stanwick Rectory, Rev. Geo. Mansfield, LL.D.
 Staverton Vicarage, 2 miles S.W. of Daventry, Rev. Jacob Ley, B.D.
 Stoke Albany House, 5 miles E. of Market Harborough, General Corbet Cotton
 Stoke Albany Rectory, Rev. W. R. P. Waudby
 Stoke Bruerne Rectory, 4 miles E.N.E. of Towcester, Rev. Philip Hy. Lee, M.A.
 Stoke Doyle Rectory, 2 miles S.W. of Oundle, Rev. C. H. W. Capron, M.A.
 Stoke Doyle (The Villa), Colonel and the Misses Hunt
 Stowe Nine Churches Rectory, 6 miles S.E. of Daventry, Rev. H. Crawley, M.A.
 Sudborough Rectory, 3 miles W. of Thrapston, Rev. Wm. Duthy, M.A., R.D., and J.P.
 Sulby Hall, 1 mile N.E. of Welford, Lady Elizabeth Villiers
 Sulby House, Wm. Allen Woddrop, Esq.
 Sulgrave Vicarage, 7 miles N.W. of Brackley, Rev. W. Harding, M.A.
 Sutton Vicarage, 6½ miles W. of Peterborough, Rev. W. Murton, M.A.
 Syresham Rectory, 4 miles N.E. of Brackley, Rev. O. P. Sergeant, M.A.
 Sywell Rectory, 6 miles of Northampton, Rev. Robert Baillie, M.A.

TANSOR Rectory, 2 miles N.E. of Oundle, Rev. H. T. Liveing, M.A.
 Teeton House, Northampton, 1½ miles S.E. of Ravensthorpe, Miss Langton
 Thenford House, 5½ miles N.W. by W. of Brackley, Mrs & Walter M. Severne, Esq.
 Thenford Rectory, 5½ miles N.W. by W. of Brackley, Rev. Arthur Severne, M.A.
 Thornby Hall, Rugby, J. W. Bateman, Esq.
 Thornby Rectory, Rugby, 3½ miles S. of Welford, Rev. John Couchman, M.A.
 Thornhaugh Rectory, 1 mile N. of Wansford, Rev. Henry Fuller, M.A.
 Thorpe Achurch Rectory, 4½ miles N.N.E. of Thrapston, the Hon. and Rev. E. V. R. Powys, LL.B.
 Thorpe Hall, 1½ mile W. by S. of Peterborough, C. J. Strong, Esq.
 Thorpe Lubbenham Hall, 2 m. W. of Market Harborough, Stratford Hugh Stratford, Esq.
 Thorpe Malsor Hall, 2½ miles W. by N. of Kettering, Rev. G. E. Maunsell, M.A.

Thorpe Mandeville Rectory, 6 miles N.E. by E. of Banbury, Rev. R. P. Humfrey, M.A.
 Thorplands, 6 miles N.E. of Northampton, Mr George Turner
 Thrapston Rectory, Rev. William Salmon Bagshaw, M.A.
 Thurning Rectory, 5½ miles S.E. of Oundle, Rev. William Whall, M.A.
 Tichmarsh Rectory, 2 miles E. of Thrapston, Rev. F. M. Stopford, M.A.
 Tiffeld Rectory, 2 miles N. of Towcester, Rev. J. T. H. Delafons, M.A.
 Towcester (see Directory)
 Twywell Rectory, 3 miles W. of Thrapston, Rev. John Edward Else, M.A., curate

UFFORD Rectory, 8 miles N.W. by W. of Peterborough, Rev. Thomas Paley, B.D.
 Upton House, 2 miles W. of Northampton, Gervase Wright, Esq.
 Upton Vicarage, 6 miles W. of Peterborough, Rev. William Andrew, M.A.

WADENHOE House, 4½ miles S.W. of Oundle, Right Hon. G. W. Hunt, M.P.
 Wakefield Lodge, 4 miles S.E. of Towcester, Duke of Grafton Wakerley Rectory, 7 miles N.E. of Stamford, Rev. Edward Holmes, B.A.
 Walcot Hall, 3 miles N. of Wansford, R. H. C. Neville, Esq.
 Walgrave Hall, 9 miles of Northampton, Mr Richard Knight
 Walgrave Rectory, Rev. E. H. Gifford, D.D.
 Wappenham Rectory, 5 miles S.W. of Towcester, Rev. Thomas Scott, M.A.
 Warkton Rectory, 2 miles E.N.E. of Kettering, Rev. Hy. Stobart, M.A.
 Warkworth Rectory, 2 miles E. of Banbury, Rev. John Meredith, A.K.C., curate.
 Warmington Vicarage, 3 miles N.E. of Oundle, Rev. R. J. Hoare, M.A.
 Watford Court, 4½ miles N.N.E. of Daventry, Lord Henley
 Watford Vic., Rev. William Seymour, D.C.L.
 Weedon Beck Vicarage, 4 miles S.E. of Daventry, Rev. John S. Winter, M.A.
 Weedon Loys Vicarage, 6 miles W. of Towcester, Rev. Thomas L. Soley, M.A.
 Weekley Vicarage, 1½ mile E. of Kettering, H. H. N. Howard, M.A.
 Weldon Rectory, Wansford, 8 miles W. of Oundle, W. F. Hatton, B.A.
 Welford Vicarage, 8 miles S.W. of Market Harborough, Rev. Geo. Ayliffe Poole, M.A.
 Wellingborough (see Directory)
 Welton Place, 2 miles N.E. of Daventry, Col. R. T. Clarke
 Welton Vicarage, Rev. Daniel Darnell, M.A.
 Werrington Hall, 3½ miles N.W. of Peterborough, C. U. Griffin, Esq.
 Weston Hall, 6½ miles W. of Towcester, Col. the Hon. Hy. Hely Hutchinson
 Weston Favell Rectory, 2½ miles E. of Northampton, Rev. R. H. Knight, M.A.
 Weston-by-Welland Vicarage, 4 miles N.E. of Market Harborough, S. Danby, B.D.
 West Haddon Hall, Rugby, 8 miles N.E. of Daventry, Mr Thos. E. Smith
 West Haddon Rect. Rev. G. L. W. Fauquier, B.A.
 West Haddon (The Cottage), Mr George Lenton

Westwood House, 1 mile W. of Peterborough, H. H. English, Esq.	Wollaston, 3½ miles S. by E. of Wellingborough, George Burnham, Esq.
Whilton Lodge, 4 miles E.N.E. of Daventry, John A. Craven, Esq., J.P.	Wollaston Hall, Joseph Hill, Esq., J.P.
Whilton Vicarage, Rev. R. Skipwith, M.A.	Wollaston, Adam C. Keep, Esq.
Whiston Rectory, 6½ miles E. by S. of North- ampton, Hon. and Rev. L. C. R. Irby, M.A.	Woodford House, 2½ miles S.W. of Thrapston, Hon. Mrs Arbuthnot
Whitfield Rectory, 2 miles N.E. by N. of Brackley, Rev. Lewis Paige, M.A.	Woodford House Vicarage, 7½ miles S. of Daventry, Rev. H. H. Minchin, M.A.
Whittlebury, 4 miles S. by W. of Towcester, Lord Fitzroy	Woodford, Thrapston, Chas. Hy. Plevins, Esq.
Whittlebury Lodge, Robert Loder, Esq.	Woodford Rectory, 2½ miles W. of Thrapston, Rev. C. Smyth, M.A.
Whittlebury Vicarage, Rev. A. J. Street, B.A.	Woodnewton Vicarage, 4½ miles N. by W. of Oundle, Rev. H. M. Roxby, M.A.
Wicken Park, 4 miles W.S.W. of Stony Strat- ford, Lord Penrhyn	Wootton Hall, 2 miles S.W. of Northampton, Mr Thomas Phillips.
Wicken Rectory, Rev. E. Cadogan, M.A.	Wootton Rectory, Rev. Wm. W. Woolcombe, M.A.
Wilby Rectory, 2 miles S.W. of Welling- borough, Rev. Henry Dale, M.A.	Worthington House, Stamford, George Cayley, Esq.
Winwick Rectory, 8 miles N.E. of Daventry, Rev. A. L. Bromhead, M.A.
Winwick Vicarage, 7 miles S.E. of Oundle, Rev. Robert Rowden, M.A.	YARDLEY Hastings Rectory, 8 miles E. of Northampton, Rev. D. B. Langley, LL.D.
Wittering Rectory, 2½ miles N.W. by W. of Wansford, Rev. E. H. Everett	Yelvertoft Rectory, 7 miles E. of Rugby, Rev. Charles Wincoll

ERRATA, ETC.

Page 129, line 7 from top, for 24 miles from Stamford, read 36 miles.

„ 225, bottom, for the inscription on the font in Little Billing Church, read the following, which is correct :—

WILBERTVS ARTIFEX ATQ. CEMEN-
TARIVS HVNC FABRICAVIT
QVISQVIS SVVM VENIT MERCEDE
CORPVS PROCVL DVBIQ CAPIT.

„ 326, Kissingbury parish, read the Rev. J. T. H. Smith, M.A., rector.

„ 353, top, for Guilsborough parish, read Haddon West parish.

„ 419, Fawley Church, leave out the words “ for whom the Rev. P. W. Story officiated.”

„ 591, 22nd line from top, for June 9th, read June 29th.

„ 628, 1st line, third paragraph, for Union Bank, read Union Book Club.

„ 697, King's Cliff Directory, for George Giles, read George Miles, timber merchant.

„ 822, Bowden Little Church, the trustees of the late T. J. Jerwood are patrons, and the Rev. Thomas Frederick Jerwood is the present rector.

GENERAL HISTORY AND DESCRIPTION

OF THE

COUNTY OF NORTHAMPTON.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE is an inland county, in the South Midland division of England. It receives its name from Northampton, its capital or chief town. It is very irregular in form, and borders on more counties than any other in the kingdom. It is bounded on the north by the counties of Lincoln, Rutland, and Leicester; on the west by those of Warwick and Oxford; on the south by Buckinghamshire; and on the east by Bedfordshire, Huntingdonshire, and Cambridgeshire. Its greatest length, from Crowland Bridge in the north-east, to Aynho in the south-west, is seventy miles. It varies in breadth from seven to twenty-six miles. The county has an area of 629,912 statute acres, of which 580,000 are arable and pasture. It contains 333 parishes, 5 chapelries, and 56 hamlets. The population in 1801 was 131,525; in 1811, 141,353; in 1821, 163,097; in 1831, 179,336; in 1841, 199,228; in 1851, 212,380; in 1861, 227,704; and in 1871, 243,891, of whom 120,859 were males, and 123,032 females. Since the first census in 1801, the population has increased by 112,366 persons, or 85 per cent. The number of inhabited houses in 1871 was 52,539; of uninhabited, 2505; and 300 were in process of erection. The number of houses assessed to the house duty (value £20 and upwards) in the year ending April 1871, was 4536. The population per cent. of men and women married in 1870 who signed the marriage register with marks was—men, 20·0; women, 22·0. The amount of real property assessed to the Income and Property Tax (Schedule A), in the year ending April 1871, was £1,613,556. The gross estimated rental, according to valuation lists approved for 1871, was £1,645,144. The amount of rateable value was £1,391,431. The amount levied for poor rates, in the year ending Lady-day 1871, was £175,390. The statistics of the several classes of rateable property in the county for the year 1872, as supplied to the Local Government Board by the clerks to the Assessment Committees, were as follow:—Rateable value of land, £919,952; buildings, £343,653; railways, £93,421; mines and other kinds of property, £33,163; making a total of £1,389,789, comprised in 59,663 separate assessments. The following is a tabular statement relating to the different unions in the county, showing the number of separate assessments, and the amount assessed to each:—

A

Unions.	Lands.	Buildings.	Railways.	Mines and other Property.	Separate Assessments.
Northampton . .	£46,718	£109,796	£7277	£6524	11,015
Hardingstone . .	45,327	10,465	7769	333	2082
Potterspury . . .	32,775	20,618	6422	1091	3073
Towcester	63,108	10,920	7861	2323	3836
Brackley	76,731	12,906	1583	617	3714
Daventry	104,070	19,125	16,484	3546	4881
Brixworth	87,873	12,488	365	1364	3281
Wellingborough . .	80,955	29,536	8858	3382	8123
Kettering	80,971	23,334	8606	6047	2324
Thrapston	59,958	13,115	1502	2535	3957
Oundle	86,360	15,466	712	1799	3763
Peterborough . . .	155,106	65,884	25,982	3602	9614

For legal purposes, Northamptonshire is in the Norfolk Circuit. The assizes are held at Northampton, the first town in the circuit to which the judges proceed. There are two courts of quarter sessions—one for the county, and the other for the Liberty or Soke of Peterborough, which has a commission of the peace, a gaol, and a treasurer; and makes its own levy in the nature of a county rate. The county is divided into nine petty sessional divisions, exclusive of the Liberty of Peterborough, which constitutes a separate division. The boroughs of Northampton and Peterborough have separate commissions of the peace, and courts of quarter sessions. The boroughs of Daventry and Higham Ferrers (in each of which the mayor and ex-mayor are magistrates) form parts of the petty sessional divisions of Daventry and Wellingborough, the county justices having concurrent jurisdiction. The county gaol and house of correction is at Northampton; and there are borough gaols at Northampton and Peterborough. For ecclesiastical purposes connected with the Established Church, the county is in the province of Canterbury, and with the counties of Leicester and Rutland, constitutes the diocese of Peterborough. Northamptonshire and Rutlandshire form the archdeaconry of Northampton, and comprise fifteen rural deaneries, five of which are in Rutlandshire, and the remaining ten in Northamptonshire. The archdeaconry of Northampton comprises 206 rectories, and 127 vicarages; total, 333 livings. A more detailed account of ecclesiastical affairs will be found at a subsequent page.

DIVISIONS.—At the time when the Domesday survey was taken, in the year 1086, Northamptonshire contained thirty hundreds, but a considerable part of Rutlandshire was then included. By a later division, these hundreds were reduced in number to twenty-eight, besides the “Burgh of St Peter” (Peterborough); and in the reign of Henry II. they were reduced to twenty, the present number, and called by the names which they now bear. There are in the county one city, Peterborough; the county and market town of Northampton; the borough and market towns of Brackley and Higham Ferrers; and the market towns of Daventry, Kettering, Oundle, Thrapston, Towcester, and Wellingborough. Kingscliffe, Rockingham, Rothwell, and Weldon were formerly market towns. There are ten lieutenancy sub-divisions. Before the passing of the Reform Act of 1832, Northamptonshire returned nine members to Parliament, namely—two knights of the shire, two members each for the city of Peterborough and the boroughs of Northampton and Brackley, and one member for the borough of Higham Ferrers. By that Act the number of members was reduced to eight, Brackley and Higham Ferrers being disfranchised, and the county formed into two divisions, north and south, each division returning two members. The extent of the borough of Northampton was unaltered by the Boundary Act of 1835 (but for parliamentary purposes, St James End, Far Cotton, and part of Kingsthorpe were added in 1868), that of Peterborough was increased by the addition of such parts of the parish of St John the Baptist as were not previously included in the city. The northern division of the county comprehends the Liberty of Peterborough, otherwise the hundred of Nassaburgh, the hundreds of Corby, Hamfordshoe, Higham Ferrers, Huxloe, Navisford, Orlingbury, Polebrook, Rothwell, and Wilbybrook. The court for the election of the members is held at Kettering; and the polling places are Brixworth, Clipston, Earls Barton, Easton-on-the-Hill, Eye, Gretton, Helpstone, Irthlingborough, Kettering, King's Cliffe, Little Bowden, Oundle, Peterborough, Raunds, Rothwell, Stanion, Thrapston, Wansford, Wellingborough, Wilbarston, and Wollaston. The southern division comprises the hundreds of Chipping Warden, Cleley, Fawsley, Green's Norton, Guilsborough, King's Sutton, Nobottle Grove, Spelhoe, Towcester, and Wymerley. The place of election of members is Northampton, and the polling places are Brackley, Brafield, Braunston, Bugbrooke, Byfield, Cold Ashby, Crick, Culworth, Daventry, Harlestone, King's Sutton, Long Buckby, Maidford, Middleton Cheney, Moulton, Northampton, Potterspury, Roade, Spratton, Towcester, Wappenham, and Weedon Beck. From the Parliamentary Return, No. 17 of Session 1872, we learn that the number of electors in the county is 19,975.

COUNTY RATES AND EXPENDITURE.—The income of the county of Northampton, from the 30th September 1871 to the 30th September 1872, was £19,945, 15s. 0½d., including the following items:—Balance due from treasurer, £2376, 7s. 4½d.; interest from Bank, £19; rates, £11,672, 11s. 11½d.; received from the Treasury for criminal prosecutions, £782, 6s. 10d.; for the removal and maintenance of convicts, £482, 17s. 2d.; from mats and matting sold at the gaol, £1077, 16s. 3d.; from fine stamps sold, £427, 18s. 2d.; from fee stamps sold, £1822, 11s. 10d.; from magistrates' clerks' fees, £108, 1s.; from the inspectors of weights and measures, £98, 3s. 9d.; from the Northampton Improvement Commissioners, £250; from the Liberty of Peterborough, on account of the building of the new bridge, £500; from sundry sources, £303, 15s. 5d. The expenditure of the same year was £19,637, 13s. 11½d., leaving a balance due from the treasurer to the county of £308, 1s. 1d. The principal items of expenditure were as follow:—Commitment and conveyance of prisoners to gaol, £120, 7s. 2d.; prosecutions, £647, 18s. 8d.; repairs and alterations of gaol, &c., £1811, 7s. 1d.; taxes and rates, £31, 11s. 1d.; maintenance, &c., of prisoners, £744, 13s. 9½d.; officers' rations and clothing, £80, 10s.; salaries and pensions, £1622, 6s. 10d.; sundry charges and expenses, £4128, 19s. 5½d.; judge's house, £187, 10s. 1d.; county hall, £225, 9s. 4d.; chief constable's house and clerk's residence, £54, 1s. 0½d.; militia storehouse, £569, 3s. 9d.; lunatics, £2322, 12s. 6d.; new county asylum, £1558, 1s. 1d.; coroners' salaries, £793, 15s. 9d.; Peterborough bridge, £1949, 3s. 11d.; bridges, £667, 6s. 11d.; magistrates' clerks, £1775, 16s.; Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, £1365, 14s. 10d.; clerk of the peace, £720, 15s. 9d.

COUNTY CONSTABULARY FORCE.—For police purposes the county is divided into nine divisions, exclusive of the Liberty of Peterborough, which has a separate police force. The boroughs of Daventry, Higham Ferrers, and Northampton have also their own police. The divisions for the county are—Brackley, Bowden Little, Daventry, Kettering, Northampton, Oundle, Thrapston, Towcester, and Wellingborough, whose aggregate force amounts to 120 men—viz., 1 chief constable, 5 superintendents, 1 chief clerk, 10 inspectors, 12 sergeants, and 91 constables. The county rates and expenditure, so far as relates to the constabulary force for the year ending 30th September 1872, are as follow:—Balance due from treasurer, £778, 18s. 8d.; interest, £7, 2s.; rates, £7866, 17s. 8½d.; Paymaster-General for one-fourth of the pay and clothing of the force, £2110, 2s. 8d.; policemen's rents, £239, 15s. 11d.; service of summonses and execution of warrants by police, £185, 5s. 7d.; miscellaneous receipts, £30, 4s. 8d.; making a total of £11,218, 7s. 2½d. The expenditure was—For salary to chief constable, £460; pay of superintendents, inspectors, sergeants, and constables, £7319, 17s. 11½d.; allowance to superintendent for horses, £225, 14s.; contingent expenses, £514, 15s. 11d.; special duty, &c., £269, 5s. 10d.; extra allowance for boot and oil money, £222, 13s. 7d.; clothing, £467, 14s. 1d.; station houses, £720, 11s. 2½d.; other expenses, £627, 19s. 4d.; making a total of £10,828, 11s. 11d.; leaving a balance due to the county from the treasurer of £389, 15s. 3½d.

COUNTY COURTS.—There are in Northamptonshire nine county court districts—namely, Brackley, Daventry, Kettering, Northampton, Oundle, Peterborough, Thrapston, Towcester, and Wellingborough. The names of the several parishes comprised in each district will be found under their respective towns.

POOR-LAW UNIONS.—There are twelve in the county—namely, Brackley, Brixworth, Daventry, Hardingstone, Kettering, Northampton, Oundle, Peterborough, Potterspury, Thrapston, Towcester, and Wellingborough. For the parishes and other places belonging to the different unions see the towns or villages in which they are situated.

RIVERS.—Northamptonshire is singularly independent as to water, for all its rivers take their rise within its boundaries; not a single stream, however insignificant, runs into it from any other district, while there is not a county bordering upon it that is not, in some degree, supplied from its various and ample sources. The chief rivers of the county are the Nene, the Welland, the Avon, the Cherwell, the Ise, the Leam, the Ouse, and the Towe—the two first-named being the principal. In addition to these there are several minor streams which water and drain the county. The greater part of Northamptonshire belongs to the basin of the Nene, but a small portion of the north and north-west boundaries belongs to the Welland basin. Another small portion on the west side drains into the Severn, and the southern extremity of the county to the basins of the Ouse and the Thames. The Nene, which is the principal river in the county, is formed by the confluence of two streams, one of which rises near Arbury Hill, two miles south-west of Daventry, and flows eastward to Northampton, where it is joined by the other stream, the "Northern Water," from the village of Naseby. At Northampton the Nene becomes navigable for small vessels, and flows north-east through the county, passing near Wellingborough and Higham Ferrers to Thrapston and Oundle. Below the last-named town it reaches the border of the county, which, for some distance, it separates from Huntingdonshire. At Peterborough the navigable channel of the Nene leaves the county altogether, but the "Muscat River," or "Catswater Drain," which is an ancient channel or arm of the river, follows the border of the county about eight miles further, till it unites with an arm of the Welland from near Crowland. The length of the Nene in this county, or on its border, is about sixty miles. In its course it passes through a pleasingly diversified and picturesque country, amidst localities rendered memorable by historical events of the highest interest. Its principal tributaries are the Ise, twenty-four miles long, which passes near Rothwell and Kettering, and joins the Nene near Wellingborough; and the Harper's Brook, fifteen miles long, and the Willow Brook, fifteen miles long, which rise in Rockingham Forest, in the north-west part of the county. The Welland has its source at Sibbertoft, five miles south-west of Market Harborough, and flows to the border of the county, which it separates successively from Leicestershire, Rutlandshire, and Lincolnshire. It passes near Rockingham, Market Harborough, Stamford, and Deeping. Between the last-named town and Crowland, where it approaches within a few miles of the Nene, it quits the county for Lincolnshire. The course of the Welland in Northamptonshire is nearly fifty miles. It has no tributaries of any moment in the county. The navigation of the Welland commences at Stamford, from which town there is a navigable cut to Deeping. The Ouse rises near Brackley, from the spring called Ousewell, and runs at some distance from this county till it comes near Stony Stratford, where it passes near the hundred of Cleley, and a little lower receives the river Towe, which, having watered Towcester, runs, after a winding course of many miles, into the Ouse near Cosgrove. The Cherwell and Leam rise near each other, in the neighbourhood of Daventry, near one of the sources of the Nene. The Cherwell, forming with the Leam the western boundary of the county, dividing it from Oxfordshire, flows into the eastern sea ; and the Leam runs by Catesby and Staverton into Warwickshire, where it gives name to the two Leamingtons, and then loses both its name and its waters in the Ouse. A little farther north of the sources of the Nene, Cherwell, and Leam, at the village of Naseby, rises the Avon, which, running westerly, leaves this county near Lilbourne, and passes into Warwickshire. The extreme northern point of the county, surrounded and intersected as it is by rivers, is very liable to inundations, and forms the commencement of the fenny tract extending to the Washes of Lincolnshire.

CANALS.—The Grand Junction Canal commences at Braunston, on the borders of Warwickshire, where it unites with the Oxford Canal, and passing through a tunnel eastward directs its course towards Blisworth, from which place there is a branch to Northampton, and then through another tunnel between Blisworth and Stoke Bruerne, of very difficult and expensive construction, to Cosgrove, thence into Buckinghamshire. This canal affords the means of communication, through the Oxford Canal, with all the canals in the district round Birmingham, and through the Grand Union Canal with the Trent and Mersey Navigations. It also furnishes water communication with the metropolitan district. The Grand Union Canal commences in the Grand Junction in Norton parish, near Daventry, and runs northward to the Leicester Canal, near Foxton, sending branches to Welford and Market Harborough.

RAILWAYS.—The principal railways that traverse Northamptonshire are the London and North-Western, the Great Northern, the Midland, and the Great Eastern. The main line of the London and North-Western enters the county near Ashton, and crosses it in a direction nearly parallel with the Grand Junction Canal through Blisworth, Weedon, and Crick to Rugby. On this line are the Stowe Hill and Kilsby tunnels: the former, running under the Watling Street, at Weedon, is 509 yards; and the latter, one mile and three quarters in length. A branch of this line proceeds from Blisworth through Northampton, Wellingborough, Higham Ferrers, Thrapston, and Oundle, to Peterborough, where it joins the Great Eastern and other railways. From Northampton there is a branch line to Market Harborough, and there is another from Wansford to Stamford. The Rugby and Stamford branch skirts the northern boundary of the county, and has stations at Welford and Rockingham. The Buckingham, Brackley, and Banbury Junction, now called the Buckinghamshire Branch of the London and North-Western line, passes through the southern extremity of the county, commencing at Bletchley, and passing through Winslow, Buckingham, Brackley, and on to Banbury. The great Northern main line, from London to the North, passes through Peterborough, from which place it has a branch line to Stamford, another to Spalding, and thence to Grimsby. The Midland Company's main line from St. Pancras, through Bedfordshire, enters this county near Irchester, and has a station at Wellingborough, from which place the company has running powers on the London and North-Western line to Northampton, where a junction is formed with its Northampton and Bedford branch. From Wellingborough, the Midland line proceeds by Kettering to Market Harborough, Leicester, and the North. There is a branch from Syston, in Leicestershire, to Stamford, and thence through Helpstone and Walton to Peterborough. From this city there is another branch to Wisbeach, and there is also a branch from Kettering, by way of Thrapston, to Huntingdon and Cambridge. The Northampton and Bedford branch passes through, and has stations at Horton, and at Olney in Bucks, and joins the Midland main line a little north of Bedford. The Great Eastern Railway branch from Ely terminates at Peterborough. The Northampton and Banbury junction from Blisworth passes through Towcester, Wappenham, and Helmdon, and joins, near Farthinghoe station, the Buckinghamshire branch of the London and North-Western line. A new line called the East and West Junction is now in course of construction, and will be opened about the end of the present year (1873). It begins near Towcester, where it forms a junction with the Northampton and Banbury line, and, passing through Blakesley, Canons Ashby, Byfield, and Aston-le-Walls, proceeds to Fenny Compton, in Warwickshire, where it joins the Great Western, and thence to Stratford-on-Avon and Worcester. A direct line is proposed from Market Harborough to Nottingham; and there is, also, a line projected from Seaton, in Rutlandshire, by way of King's Cliffe to Wansford, a distance of about 15 miles, to form a junction with the Northampton and Peterborough line.

ROADS.—Northamptonshire is intersected by the following principal roads, viz.:—One from London to Coventry, Chester, and Liverpool, which enters it at Stony Stratford and crosses on the Watling Street, by Towcester, Daventry, and Braunston to Warwickshire. A second comes from London to Leicester, Derby, and the Midland and Northern counties. It enters this county near Horton, and crosses by Northampton, Kingsthorpe, and Market Harborough to Leicestershire. The London and Nottingham road by Bedford enters near Higham Ferrers, and crosses by Kettering into Rutlandshire. That from London to Lincolnshire enters the county at Peterborough, and crosses by two branches—one through Market Deeping, and the other through Crowland. These are the principal roads through the county, but others traverse it in various directions, uniting its towns with each other and the several counties, the chief of which is that which enters from Oxfordshire and runs north-eastward through the extreme length of the county, by Brackley, Towcester, Northampton, Wellingborough, Thrapston, and Oundle to Peterborough. There are ten Highway Districts, which comprise the whole of the county except the liberty of Peterborough and the boroughs mentioned in a previous page.

AGRICULTURE.—"Northamptonshire," observes a recent writer, "has many advantages in point of climate and soil, and has for a long time been comparatively well cultivated and productive." The soil is generally adapted to produce both corn and pasture of a superior quality. A small proportion only of the surface is poor, from the thin staple of the soil, or from a cold, impervious subsoil. Leaving out the natural woods, which are considerable, that which remains unproductive for want of cultivation is trifling, and could easily be improved. The climate is mild and healthy. The subsoil being mostly rocky, allows all superfluous water to run down through it; and where a stratum of clay intervenes, the inequality of the surface allows a ready discharge of the water. There are no mountains in the county, nor have the hills any considerable elevation, but the general surface, except a portion of the low flat land north of Peterborough, may be, on an average, about 300 feet above the level of the sea, reaching to 500 feet on the western border, where it forms some of the highest table land in the kingdom. This may be considered its greatest height, if we except the summits of some hills about Daventry, which rise to the height of 800 feet above sea level. The following elevations are from actual survey:—River Nene, above Northampton, 195 feet; river Ouse, near Stony Stratford, 200; Grand Junction Canal at Blisworth and Weedon, 315; Grand Junction Canal at Braunston Tunnel, 375; Buckby Road, half a mile from Daventry, 430; and Arbury Hill, near Daventry (highest point), 804 feet.

Owing to its inland situation and the absence of lofty hills, Northamptonshire is not so subject to heavy and continuous rains as the more western counties are. The surface is pleasingly diversified by gentle swells and depressions, interspersed with woods and plantations. The black mould of the Fens, when they have been drained and cultivated, is considered the richest soil in the county; but the most desirable for the farmer is the brown crumbling loam of the uplands. Where this soil is of sufficient depth, it will produce abundant crops of wheat, barley, beans, and oats; and it is peculiarly adapted to the growth of turnips and all kinds of green crops. There is a considerable portion of limestone rock in the county, but there is no appearance of chalk. (See Article on Geology.) The calcareous portion of the soil, which in some rich land hastily analysed was found to be from ten to fifteen per cent., is in a very divided state, and must greatly influence the fertility. The heavier kinds of soil, which are more retentive of water, are found to produce excellent pasture, and consequently are left in grass, as being more profitable to the farmer than tillage. Although more food might be produced from the land by tillage, and more hands usefully employed, it is doubtful whether the farmer would be so well remunerated for his risk, trouble, and outlay, as he is by grazing cattle. The implements of husbandry in use in this county have of late years been very much improved, and the old clumsy plough of a century ago, with the other implements then in use, have given way to those of modern invention and improvement. "The old course of husbandry," says a recent author, "was the triennial: a clean fallow, wheat, beans, and oats, on the best heavy soils; and wheat, peas, and barley on the lighter. The introduction of turnips and clover has changed the system and greatly improved the produce. But where turnips are not suited to the soil from its compact nature, the clean fallow, at least every fourth year, is still retained. On some lands barley and oats are sown after wheat. In the improved rotations the land is frequently left three years in grass, and then ploughed up again, which brings it to the convertible system generally adopted in the north. The most common error is that of cropping the land too often after it is broken up from grass, and reducing it to too low a state before it is recruited with manure or improved by pasturage. This error is not so injurious on very rich soils, but when the soil is of inferior quality it destroys all the advantage gained by several years' lying in grass. There is a great difference between natural inherent fertility, such as that of rich loams and alluvial deposits, and that which is produced by manuring and pasturage. The first will bear much ill-usage, but the latter will not."

The permanent pastures in most parts of Northamptonshire are of an excellent quality; and the extent of meadow-land of this description, including all that has been laid down of late years, and the artificial grasses raised on arable land, as given in the Parliamentary returns, amounted in 1871 to 266,209 acres, and in 1872 to 269,548 acres. From the same returns we learn that in 1871 the total number of acres under all kinds of crops, bare fallow, and grass, was 547,796, and in 1872, 555,180. There were under corn crops in 1871, 188,626 acres; in 1872, 187,106 acres; under green crops in 1871, 49,674; in 1872, 46,826; under clover, sanfoin, and grasses, under rotation, in 1871, 33,765; in 1872, 37,815 acres. The percentage of corn crops to the total average under all kinds of crops, bare fallow, and grass, was, in 1871, 34·3; and in 1872, 33·7. The number of horses used solely for agriculture, &c., as returned by occupiers of land, was, in 1871, 19,289; in 1872, 19,232; the proportionate number to every 100 acres under crops, bare fallow, and grass, was, in 1871, 3·5; in 1872, 3·4. The total number of cattle returned was, in 1871, 95,929; in 1872, 106,181; the proportionate number to every 100 acres under crops, bare fallow, and grass, was, in 1871, 17·5; in 1872, 19·1. The total number of sheep returned in 1871 was 496,860; in 1872, 511,896; proportionate number to every 100 acres, as before, 90·7 in 1871, and 92·2 in 1872. The return gives, in 1871, 34,120 pigs; in 1872, 41,130; or in 1871, 6·2 to the 100 acres, and in 1872, 7·4. We are further informed that in 1871 there were 81,332 acres under wheat; in 1872, 81,286; under barley or bere, in the same years respectively, 54,494 and 54,013; under oats, 18,671 and 20,039; rye, 716 and 515; beans, 21,230 and 21,206; peas, 11,683 and 10,047; total under corn crops, 188,186 and 187,106. In the same two years respectively there were under potatoes, 3093 and 3409 acres; turnips and swedes, 28,523 and 26,346; marigold, 6086, and 5124; carrots, 403 and 280; cabbage, kohlrabi, and rape, 3395 and 2544; vetches, lucerne, and any other green crop, except clover or grass, 8174 and 9123; total under green crops in 1871, 49,674; and in 1872, 46,826 acres. In 1872 there were under orchards, 663 acres; market gardens, 321 acres; nursery gardens, 173 acres; woods, including coppices or plantations, excepting gorse land and garden shrubberies, 24,142 acres.

The fattening of cattle is a principal object of the Northamptonshire farmer, and many of the animals are fed to extraordinary sizes. The short-horn breed has for many years been the favourite stock, and has now almost superseded the once famous long-horn, chiefly from the example of the late Earl Spencer and the Marquis of Exeter, whose breeds of short-horns have been highly prized. These two noblemen, and many others who have been great breeders, find it as profitable as fattening; but the majority of farmers who have not the same advantages prefer buying cattle that have been reared on less valuable land, justly considering that animals reared on poor land, and in a more severe climate, will thrive better and improve faster than those bred in a milder climate and on rich pastures. Hence they buy Scotch, Welsh, and Irish cattle in autumn to eat the coarse grass remaining in the pastures after the fat beasts are sent to market, and finish them on grass the following summer, when they generally realise a good profit, though the animals may not grow to a large size. Some few farmers feed the Scotch cattle during the winter on turnips, but generally those who can spare turnips for this purpose buy a larger sort of cattle in the autumn. Many Durham short-horns and Hereford long-horns are bought in the spring, carried on at grass till near winter, and then finished with turnips, oilcake, &c. They make abundance of rich manure, and if, in addition to this, they pay for the food which they have consumed, the farmer is generally satisfied. The improved short-horn breed is acknowledged by the best judges to unite as many good qualities as can well be found in any other breed; the Hereford long-horn may dispute the prize of aptitude to fatten, but the quantity of milk given by the latter is so deficient that the Northamptonshire farmers who breed cattle prefer the short-horn breed as being on the whole the most profitable. It is yet a disputed point amongst the farmers whether the small Scotch Highland cattle do not pay fully as well for their pasture and stall-feeding as either the short-horns or Hereford long-horns, at least on land of an average quality; but all are agreed that the breed of short-horns, especially those of the late Earl Spencer and the Marquis of Exeter, cannot be surpassed. This was proved some years ago at an Oxford agricultural meeting, when the Earl accepted a challenge which was given by a well-known Sussex breeder, who proposed to show a hundred head of Suffolk beasts against the same number of any breed. The judges, though one of them was a Sussex man, had no hesitation in giving their award in favour of Lord Spencer's short-horns.

The breed of sheep most common in the rich pastures of Northamptonshire is the improved Leicester, and since long wool has been in request, and sells dearer in proportion to the weight of the fleeces than the finest short wool, scarcely any other breeds are in repute. The Southdown, on account of the flavour of their flesh, may dispute the pre-eminence with the Leicester breed, but no other sheep can enter into competition with the latter. Some fine flocks of breeding ewes are kept in the county, and rams of the best quality are bought or hired for the season at very high prices.

There are in Northamptonshire many considerable estates, but the farms are in general not very large. They are generally let from year to year, with the understanding that the tenant will not be removed so long as he pays the rent and keeps the land in a proper state of cultivation. This is very well on estates which are in settlement, but where they are liable to be sold the tenant has no great security, and will not invest much capital in useful improvements of which he may not reap the benefit. More leases have, however, been granted of late years, and a more improved state of cultivation has been the consequence. The farm buildings have been described by Mr Donaldson and Mr Pitt, in their surveys, as being inconvenient both as to architecture and situation, and unworthy of the fertility and fruitfulness of the soil; but in this respect there is now a manifest improvement. The large unsightly barns, formerly considered so indispensable to thrash and house the corn in, have, in numerous instances, been reduced; the corn is now stacked in the open air on frames of wood, on stone or iron pillars, and thrashed by machinery. And many of the old farm houses, with their low and unhealthy rooms, have been removed; new and commodious dwellings and excellent farm buildings have been erected; and the comfort and respectability of the tenants have increased in proportion.

GEOLOGY.—The county of Northampton possesses many points of great geological interest. It is situated about midway upon the great belt of Oolitic and Liassic formations, which traverses England from the coast of Dorsetshire on the south, to the northern shores of Yorkshire on the north-east. Taking a general section of the county, we find that the Lias forms the great basal foundation, and has an aggregate thickness of about 850 feet, consisting of from 150 to 200 feet of the Upper Lias, about 30 feet of the Middle Lias or Marlstone, and something like 650 feet of the Lower Lias. The clay of the Upper Lias is largely worked for brick-making; but the bricks of Northamptonshire are not remarkable either for quality of material or for colour, either when new or weathered. This clay abounds with palæontological remains; those of the large ichthyosauri and teleosauri, ammonites, belemnites, of several species of Ostreæ, &c. It has also yielded a unique crustacean, a clawless lobster (like a large prawn), Pencus Sharpii, Woodward.

The Middle Lias, or Marlstone, is an abundant water-bearing formation, and from this, by a well 168 feet deep, the Water Company of Northampton furnishes to the town a copious supply of pure and not hard water.

Above the Lias, repose the peculiar and interesting Inferior Oolite beds of the "Northampton Sand" (so called by the Government Survey), having an aggregate thickness of about 80 feet. These beds have been classified into two divisions—the lower division, of about 60 feet in thickness, being that which yields an abundance of iron ore, for which Northamptonshire has become so famous. This ore has now (1873) been worked for upwards of twenty years, and during that time a quantity exceeding a million and a half tons of pig-iron has been produced. At the present time, about 20,000 tons per week of the ore are being excavated, yielding on an average nearly 40 per cent. of pig-iron. One-fourth of this ore is smelted in the district, but the greater portion is sent off for admixture with other ores to Merthyr Tydvil, in South Wales, and to Staffordshire. It is remarkable that in the Roman times—probably in the third and fourth centuries—Northamptonshire was a great iron-producing district; but its resources in this direction remained dormant until about the year 1850, when the discovery of the great value of these iron-bearing beds was again made. The beds of the lower division, depending upon local favourable conditions, yield easily-worked, durable, and richly-coloured building stone. They are highly fossiliferous, and have yielded many species not known in other districts: among these are a star-fish—Stellaster Sharpii, Wright; and the bivalves—Lima Sharpiana, Etheridge; L. Dustonensis, Etheridge; and Trigonia Sharpiana, Lycett.

The upper division of the "Northampton Sand" consists of a nearly white silicious sand, frequently intercolated with clay, worked for terra cotta in the neighbourhood of Stamford; and in places exhibits, in situ, a plant bed, with horizontal layers of super-growth, overlying a bed (running up to 18 inches) of vertical root perforations. Some geologists, however, consider that the latter are not root perforations, but are the traces of equisetel plants. Sometimes this white sand is found sufficiently indurated to constitute a good building stone. Many important buildings, including the Northamptonshire General Infirmary, were built during the last century of this stone.

The upper division and the upper part of the lower division of the Northampton Sand, as indicated by the presence of plant remains, and much drifted wood, and certain bivalve and univalve fossils, and by the frequent occurrence of ripple-marked surfaces, have partly an estuarine and partly a littoral origin. The upper division has been termed by the most recent geologists, in contradistinction to higher beds in the district having similar characteristics, the "Lower Estuarine" series.

The Lower Estuarine series is surmounted by a very important formation, made up of several and very various beds, chiefly of oolitic limestone, and which, traversing Rutland and passing into Lincolnshire, where it has attained its greatest development (a thickness of about 200 feet), has hence been called the "Lincolnshire Limestone." The fossiliferous contents of these beds demonstrate that they are also Inferior Oolite ; and other reasons there are for concluding that they are the uppermost group of the Inferior Oolite series in this district.

At the base of the "Lincolnshire Limestone" occurs, at Collyweston and Easton, a thin bed of a calcareo-arenaceous character, which, upon exposure to frost, readily splits up into slates, not in the planes of cleavage as in the case of Welsh or Westmoreland slates, but in the planes of its finely laminated stratification. This slate is extensively used in the district, having, in ancient times, formed the prevalent roofing material of the locality, and has been employed by Sir George Gilbert Scott, the celebrated architect, for the roof of the new chapel of St John's College, Cambridge, as also for that of the rebuilt nave and aisles of St Sepulchre's Church, Northampton, and other important erections. The production of these slates forms the staple trade of the two important villages named above, and furnishes employment to a considerable industrial population. These slate beds are probably a local variation only. Among the more remarkable fossils found in them are—a beautiful and previously unknown winged univalve, termed Pteroceras Bentleyi, after a gentleman well known in the district ; a crustacean of the genus Pseudophyllia (a small lobster) ; and a unique star-fish, found by the writer, Astropecten Cotteswoldia, var. Stamfordensis, Wright.

Of the limestones above this so-called Collyweston slate, the lower beds are, for the most part, marly and soft, and occasionally supply a pure cream-white stone, well adapted and much used for interior domestic work, and for carved work in churches. Higher beds yield good rough durable building stone, and are traversed by a very shelly and partially crystalline bed, the stone of which, taking a good polish, has been termed the "Stamford Marble," and is very ornamental for chimney-pieces. The whole of these beds are quarried extensively for lime-burning, the lime produced being of excellent quality.

Passing upwards from these marly beds of limestone, our attention is drawn to one of the most important building stones in the kingdom—the widely known "Ketton Freestone," the equivalent stone in Northamptonshire being the "Weldon Stone," quarried at the place of that name. Both Ketton itself and Casterton, where a very fine example of the same stone is quarried, are only just without the confines of the county, in Rutland, which abuts on the northern limit of the Northern Division of Northamptonshire. This stone is of that peculiar grain from which the term "Oolite" (or roe-stone, or egg-stone) is derived. It is composed entirely of small egg-shaped grains, embedded in a calcareous matrix. A polished section of the stone generally shows that each of these ova-shaped grains has a minute silicious nucleus enclosed in concentric calcareous films. It is a stone very easily worked, is of a good cream colour, and very durable, hardening under atmospheric exposure. St Dunstan's Church, in Fleet Street, London, several of the colleges at Cambridge, and many churches in the district, are built of it. It is not very fossiliferous, but has yielded the characteristic form, Terebratula fimbria of Sowerby.

Classing with, but higher in, the geological scale of the county than the "Ketton Freestone," is a very shelly kind of stone called "Barnack Rag." This stone was quarried at Barnack even so far back as the time of the Romans, and has proved to be of a very durable nature, many of the churches and several of the cathedrals of the district having been built of it. Some beds of this stone seem to be composed almost entirely of shells agglutinated together by a calcareous cement. The Barnack quarries have been exhausted for nearly 400 years, and at this time the stone is not worked in any other locality, unless, as some geologists have considered, the Weldon stone be its equivalent.

Above these several beds of the "Lincolnshire Oolite," lies unconformably a series of argillaceous or clay beds, having at their base a ferruginous band. These form, in this district, the lowest beds of the Great Oolite. The ferruginous band is rich in fossils of this geological division. The clays themselves have yielded, in more than one locality, remains of the gigantic Crocodilian Saurian the Cetiosaurus, also two varieties of a bivalve peculiar to the district—Næra Ibbotsoni, Morris. The presence of drifted wood, of a plant bed, and of similar characteristics to those of the "Upper Division" of the "Northampton Sand," indicate that these clays are also of an estuarine origin, and they have therefore been termed the "Upper Estuarine" series. They are worked for brickmaking.

Above these clays is a series of limestone beds, some zones of which are very fossiliferous, and yield a fine stone for chimney-pieces, hearths, &c. They burn into a good lime. A shelly and sub-crystalline bed at Alwalton, near Peterborough, takes a good polish, and has been called "Alwalton Marble." The detached slender columns of the beautiful Early English west front of Peterborough Cathedral were composed of this marble, but having become decomposed from atmospheric action, another material has been substituted. In some localities, these beds abound with the remains of a small lobster, a variety of Eryma elegans, Oppel, and generally with the teeth, scales, and spines of several species of fish, of the genera Hybodus, Lepidotus, Pycnodus, and Strophodus. From this bed at Blisworth also, have been obtained two examples of a fish not found elsewhere—Pholidophorus Flesheri, Agassiz. From the bed at Kings-thorpe, has been obtained a fine cone of a pandanaceous plant, allied to the "Screw-pines" of Norfolk Island, in the Pacific Ocean. This plant is not only of a new species, but of a new genus, and has been named by Mr Carruthers, F.R.S., head of the Botanical Department, British Museum, Kaidacarpum Ooliticum. Fossil fruit of a plant (Carpolithes) is not uncommon in the same bed. In the neighbourhood of Oundle also, has been found an elegant little star-fish, having five attenuated and tortuous rays, which has been named Ophiurella Griesbachii, after the late Rev. Mr Griesbach, an eminent geologist, who formerly lived at Wollaston, in this county.

Surmounting this limestone occurs occasionally a variegated clay bed, characterised by an abundance of the small Ostrea sub-rugulosa, Morris & Lycett. This takes the place of the "Bradford Clay" of the West of England. Above this is the "Forest Marble," and over a wider area the "Cornbrash," both of which abound in beautifully-preserved fossils: over all is the "Oxford Clay," yielding numerous Ammonites, Belemnites, large Oysters, Saurians (including the huge Pliosaurus), masses of wood converted into jet, &c.

The foregoing represent the range of "Secondary" formations in the county; but the high lands are frequently capped with a thick bed of the "Boulder Clay" and "Glacial" gravels, containing fragments from nearly the whole series of Primary and Secondary Rocks: Liassic, Kimmeridge Clay, and Oxford Clay fossils being frequently found beautifully preserved in masses of Septaria. The valley gravels abound with large tusks and teeth of Elephas Antiquus, E. primigenius, and an Elephas of an intermediate species; and teeth of Rhinoceros tichorhinus, bones of Hippopotamus major, teeth of Equus caballus and E. fossilis, and a head of Bos primigenius, have also been found. The peaty fluviatile bed above the gravel contains at its base numerous remains of the aboriginal small ox Bos longifrons, Red Deer, Horse, Wild Boar, &c.

As to the geological geography of the county, as has been observed, the Lias forms the foundation, so to speak, of the whole district, but is exposed in the valleys. The Ironstone occurs at its greatest thickness in the neighbourhood of Northampton, or in the mid-section of the county. It is quarried largely at Duston, Blisworth, Gayton, and Stow Nine Churches, to the west of Northampton; and at Cogenhoe, Wellingborough, Finedon, Woodford, Cranford, Glendon, and other places east and north-east of Northampton. It ranges in the latter section as far as Stamford, where, with every prospect of success, it is now being quarried upon the estate of the Marquis of Exeter. Smelting furnaces have been erected at Heyford, Wellingborough, Finedon, and elsewhere. The ironstone thins out in the southern part of the county, and disappears, and the ferruginous beds of the Middle Lias, or Marlstone, in the neighbourhood of Banbury, commercially takes its place.

The "Lincolnshire Limestone" is the characteristic stone of the Northern Division of the county, north of the river Nene; but it thins out near Kettering and near Maidwell, about eight miles north of Northampton, and does not recur again in the Southern Division. Its place, for all purposes of a limestone, is taken in the middle of the county, and in the Southern Division, by the "Limestone" of the "Great Oolite," which generally caps the high lands. The "Forest Marble" only occurs in the neighbourhood of Peterborough, and over a very limited area. The "Cornbrash" crops out from under the Oxford Clay (based by the "Kello-way Rock") on the southern escarpment of the Nene Valley, ranging in from Bedfordshire at a point upon the boundary of the county near Rushden, and extends, by Oundle, nearly to Peterborough. In like manner, it crops out north of the Nene, near Sudborough, extending by Lowick to the Aldwinckles, and reappearing upon many escarpments near Oundle. It also caps the high grounds north of the Addingtons and Woodford, at Islip, at Bulwick, at Upton, occurs at a lower level at Helpstone, and is the surface rock over a large area to the north and north-west of Peterborough.

The "Oxford Clay" overlies the "Cornbrash," where, as stated, the latter crops out upon the southern escarpment of the Nene Valley, and it spreads out over a considerable area of elevated land far into Bedfordshire: considerable patches of it also occur in the same elevated position to the north of the Aldwinckles, and to the north and west of Oundle; while in the neighbourhood of Peterborough it occupies only the low grounds, and spreads out over the great level of the Cambridgeshire and Lincolnshire fens.

Very high table land occurs about Naseby, from the water-shed of which rise:—The Avon, which flows westwards (forming the northern boundary of the county from Welford until it passes into Warwickshire), and by Warwick and Stratford-on-Avon, into the Severn and the Bristol Channel; the Welland, which takes an easterly direction, and passing by Stamford to Spalding, flows into the Boston Deep, forming the northern boundary in that direction, to a point near Crowland; and the Nene, which flows southward, until at Northampton it forms a conflux with its western branch, and turns easterly, passing by Peterborough and Wisbeach, also to the Boston Deep. The Nene forms the southern boundary of the county between Elton and Peterborough. There are many minor streams tributary to these the important rivers of Northamptonshire, which is thus intersected by numerous valleys; upon the escarpments of which, owing to the prevalent alternation of pervious and impervious beds, occur the numerous springs of pure water for which the county has a reputation.

It will be seen from the foregoing sketch that the county is fortunate in its mineral wealth—in its iron, its richly-coloured ferruginous and its more excellent oolitic building-stone, its lime, its Collyweston roofing-slates, its brick-clays, its sand, and its gravel. More than a quarter of a century ago, some £30,000 was expended in sinking a shaft at Kingsthorpe, in a fruitless search for coal. Recently, the question of the presence of coal in the county has again been mooted; but to geologists it is an idle question. From the nature and thickness severally of the strata of the nearest coal-field of Warwickshire, and of the intervening district, it is not impossible that below the present shaft at Kingsthorpe (967 feet deep) would be found the Trias beds to the thickness of 800 feet, the Permian beds 2000 feet, and the Coal Measures (before workable coal could be found), 750 feet: a depth in all of more than 4500 feet; being nearly twice that of any existing mine, and reaching far below the point at which, with known appliances, it is possible to extract coal. Moreover, Mr Hull, F.R.S., Director of the Government Geological Survey for Ireland, who, more than any other scientific man, has made coal and the coal-fields his special study, concludes that the great English coal-field never did extend into Northamptonshire, and that therefore, at any depth, coal cannot be found in the county.

ANCIENT HISTORY.—A dense obscurity veils the early history of Britain. Of its primitive condition we are almost entirely ignorant, and we possess no certain knowledge of the time when, or the race by whom, this island was originally peopled. Pliny tells us that the name of the first civilised man who is recorded to have had any dealings here is Midacritus. He was most probably a Phœnician sea-captain or merchant, who came to the south-western end of Britain, to the part now called Cornwall, and took thence in his ship back to his home in Tyre or Sidon a cargo of the tin with which the Cornish territory abounds. His countrymen, the Phœnicians, and their kinsmen colonists, the Carthaginians, continued for many centuries to carry on the British tin trade which Midacritus had commenced. The important settlement which the Tyrians made in very early times at Gades (now Cadiz), on the Atlantic coast of Spain, must have greatly facilitated this traffic between the dwellers near the Mediterranean and the tribes of North-Western Europe. Niebuhr has even supposed that the Phœnicians founded their colony at Gades for the express purpose of promoting their ancient and most valuable commerce with Britain. The importance of this commerce may be, to some extent, appreciated by us, if we call to mind, first, that by far the greater part of the metallic implements, arms, and works of art of the ancients were made of bronze; and, secondly, that tin, the chief ingredient of the composite metal bronze, is found in very few parts of the world, and nowhere else so abundantly as in the south-western parts of our island. It is certainly possible that the Phœnicians, whom we know to have voyaged and traded in the Red Sea, and in the Indian Ocean, as far at least as Ceylon, may have voyaged further eastward, and drawn supplies from the tin mines at Malacca, but there can be no reasonable doubt that Britain furnished them with their chief stores of this important metal.

The Phœnicians were the first civilised men, but they were not absolutely the first men, that came to the British Isles. We have no written account of the tribes they found here; but we have certain proof that they did find the land inhabited, and that its inhabitants were, at the time of the arrival of the Phœnician ships, a comparatively savage race, to whom the Phœnicians taught the art of working in metals, and probably other means and appliances of life. We learn this from the ancient burial-places, and the relics contained in them, which are to be found in many parts of our island, and which of late years have been examined and compared one with another with remarkable industry and sagacity. The sepulchral mounds and stone heaps, which are reasonably considered to be the oldest of all that exist in Britain, contain numerous implements of stone and bone; such as arrow-heads, spear-heads, adzes, and mallets, but none of any kind of metal. This proves that there were tribes here who were hunters, and who had some rude practice, of carpentry (possibly of masonry also), but who knew not how to work in metal, and who were destitute of metallic weapons and tools. We find another class of ancient tombs in Britain, not so old as those which contain stone or bone implements exclusively. This second class of tombs contain weapons and other articles made of metal, and (with the exception of a few small golden ornaments) the metal is always bronze. Moreover, this bronze is an alloy of copper and tin blended in the best, or nearly the best, possible proportionate quantities. These facts are rightly considered to prove that the early inhabitants of Britain did not themselves discover the use of metals, and the art of working in metals, but that they learned those things from foreigners. It is also a very remarkable fact that no relics of copper are found in these ancient burial-places. Copper is abundant in Britain; it is a metal very easily worked, and, though inferior to bronze, it is so far hard and firm when wrought that weapons and tools made of it would have been of very great value to men who previously used nothing but stone or bone to point their spears, to fell their trees, and to rough-hew their canoes with. If the early natives of this island had discovered and had taught themselves metallurgy, they must have begun with the use of the simple metal copper, and could not have at once acquired the necessary knowledge and skill for making an alloy of copper and tin, and for making also that alloy in the best proportions of one metal to the other which the experience of ages had sanctioned. The tribes found by the Phœnicians in Britain were not merely supplied by them with metal implements, but were also taught how to make them. This is proved by the numerous moulds for adzes and other implements that are found among the relics of the bronze period of British archæology. Glass beads are also discovered; but there is, as yet, no evidence that the men in whose tombs they were found knew how to make glass. It is far more probable that the Phœnician merchants brought the beads here, and used them in traffic with the inhabitants of the island, just as, in modern times, British sailors and merchant adventurers have used glass beads in traffic with the savages on the coast of Africa, and in the islands of the Pacific Ocean.

We come now to the questions : Of what race were these early inhabitants of Britain whom the Phœnicians found here ? and is there any ground for supposing that any other race had dwelt here at a still earlier period ? Here, again, we are without express historical authority, but there are means for forming at least a probable conjecture as to the truth. There is every reason to believe, from the geographical position of our island, and other circumstances, that the first inhabitants of Britain came here from Gaul ; and that, like the Gauls, they were of the Celtic branch of the Aryan family of nations. We know that the first dwelling-place of man was in Central Asia, whence, as mankind multiplied, its various families and tribes radiated and spread themselves over the other parts of the world. The natural line of progress from Armenia or Mesopotamia to Britain would be through Gaul, and we have the very important fact that the names of places and persons in both Gaul and Britain, at the earliest periods respecting which we have any precise historical information, are unquestionably Celtic. To the present day our rivers and mountains, and other great natural objects, retain Celtic appellations—that is to say, they bear names which have a meaning in Celtic, but are utterly unmeaning if treated as names given by a Finnish, a German, a Basque, or any other than a Celtic population. There is consequently very strong proof of the great antiquity of a Celtic population here, and there is an utter absence of proof of any other population having preceded it. It has, indeed, been thought by some antiquaries that they exhibit, in the size and development of the skulls and other human relics found in the tombs of the Stone period, a general inferiority to those found in the Bronze period. In the latter the skull seems to be better developed, and the framework of the body to have been larger, than is the case with the former. Hence they argue, that if we consider the remains found in the tombs of the Bronze period to be Celtic, we ought to assume that some other population, feebler than the Celts, such as the Finnish, preceded the Celtic race in the occupation of this country, and left its memorials in the tombs of the Stone period. But does it not seem as reasonable to ascribe the improvement and increased size in the skulls and bones of the bronze-containing tombs to the immense improvement that must have been made in the physical as well as mental condition of the native tribes when the Phœnicians taught them the use and workmanship of metals ?

Whether the Phœnicians communicated to the rude Celts, whom they found here, other arts, and whether they imparted to them aught of the science and of the religious ritual of Asia, is and must ever be a mere matter of speculation ; we have no certain evidence on the subject. Many have thought that the ancient architectural structures that are found in the British Isles, and especially the round towers of Ireland, were raised by men of Eastern race, or, at least, by disciples of oriental teachers ; and that these mysterious edifices were designed for the services of the same creed that prevailed in lands beyond the remotest waters of the Mediterranean. The supporters of these theories refer to some fragments of old poems (one of which purports to be copied from a Carthaginian writer), and which speak dimly of “ Ionian Islands,” of “ holy headlands,” and of mystical orgies, in the far North-Western Atlantic. The truth of these speculations is possible ; of some it is probable, but of none can it be demonstrated by such proof as is sufficient to make history.

As the power of Phœnicia declined, her mighty colony, Carthage, drew to herself an increased and increasing share of the lucrative commerce with Britain ; and at last she held it entirely in her own hands. The line of navigation to Britain was jealously guarded as a state secret from all other nations ; and history has recorded the spirited patriotism of a Carthaginian shipmaster, who was bound from Gades to this island, and who, on seeing himself followed and tracked by a Roman ship, purposely steered upon a shoal, and led his pursuers into the same destruction. The Carthaginian captain saved himself on a fragment of the wreck, and on his return to Carthage the senate paid him the value of the cargo that he had sacrificed. But at last the Romans discovered the passage; and after the destruction of Carthage and the complete conquest of the Spanish peninsula by the Roman arms, some traffic between the British Isles and the countries bordering on the Mediterranean may still have been carried on by the citizens or the subjects of Rome, along the old Phœnician route; but it is probable that, during the last two centuries before the Christian era, the greater part of British produce that was imported into the civilised parts of the ancient world, was brought along what we may term the overland route, across Gaul, to the cities of Marseilles and Narbonne.

The line of traffic with Britain was opened by Greek enterprise at an early period, but still long after the establishment of the Phœnician trade, which was, we believe, always conducted by what may be called the long sea voyage, round Spain and the west of Gaul. The Greek colony of Massalia was founded about 600 years B.C. The Massalians were pre-eminent, even among the Hellenic colonies, for their spirit of maritime enterprise and commercial activity. They did much towards civilising the Gallic and Ligurian tribes in the vicinity of their city, and they extended their trading operations throughout Gaul, and as far as the parts of Britain that lay nearest to Gaul. The products of Britain were brought across the channel to the Gaulish coasts, and thence up the Seine as far as that river was navigable. They were conveyed by pack-horses from the Seine to the upper waters of the Rhone, and were then re-shipped and brought down the last-mentioned river to the ports on the Mediterranean. This was one line of traffic across Gaul; but the Massalians also availed themselves of the Rhine, the Loire, and the Garonne, and vessels from the mouths of these rivers frequented the British coasts. The Roman colony of Narbo, now Narbonne, which was established by the Romans about 114 B.C., shared with Marseilles in the overland traffic with Britain, and gradually acquired the larger portion of it. But it was Greek enterprise that originated this communication with our island, as Phœnician enterprise had first traced the still more daring and still more ancient Atlantic route.

Hitherto we have been searching and testing and drawing inferences from a few historic facts respecting Britain, which we gather with difficulty from the scanty and the scattered memorials of many—we know not of how many—centuries. The regular consecutive history of our country begins from the time when the Romans approached our shores, not as traders but as conquerors, and it is to the pen of our first and greatest Roman assailant that we owe the first general narrative of deeds performed—the first clear description of men and manners existing in this island. Julius Cæsar invaded Britain in the years 55 and 54 B.C. In the 4th and 5th books of his Commentaries, he has told of the operations of his troops here, and he has also given an account of the land and of its inhabitants as he found them. From his writings, aided by other sources of information, especially by those furnished by Strabo and Diodorus Siculus, who lived within half a century of Cæsar's time, we may form a generally clear index of who and what our predecessors in the island were at the commencement of the last half century before the birth of our Lord.

We have already stated that the inhabitants of Britain at this time were Celts, and there seems to be satisfactory proof that there were two branches of the Celtic tribes in the British Isles in Cæsar's time. One we may term the British or the Cambrian branch; and it still exists as a language and as a race in Wales. Formerly it was spread over the whole of those parts of this island that are now termed England and Wales, and also over the southern parts of what is now called Scotland. The other, and more ancient branch of the Celtic stock, survives in the native Irish, in the Highlands of Scotland, and the Manksmen of the Isle of Man. Of these two branches, the Cambrian Celts were the most numerous and important; and it was almost exclusively with them that the Romans first came into contact.

In the earliest divisions of our island it is doubtful whether this county was included solely in the dominions of the Coritani or Coritavi, who inhabited Lincolnshire, Leicestershire, Rutlandshire, &c., or in those of the Catyeuchlani, who possessed Buckinghamshire and Bedfordshire, and the counties to the south and south-east; or in those of the Iceni, who dwelt to the east. Perhaps these nations may have occupied each a portion; and the Dobuni of Gloucestershire and Warwickshire may have also had some parts of the western border.

The Britons, when they attracted the notice of the Romans, were a numerous people (in Cæsar's opinion), but subdivided into many independent tribes, each under its own king or chieftain. Diodorus Siculus confirms the judgment of Cæsar as to the populousness of Britain, and states that the natives lived, for the most part, on peaceable terms with each other—an honourable distinction from the incessant spirit of border warfare and civil strife which generally raged amongst the little independent states of antiquity; especially as we know, by the gallantry with which the Britons resisted Rome, that their usually pacific bearing among themselves did not arise from any lack of manly courage. The tribes of the maritime districts, as might have been expected, were less barbarous than those of the interior; and agriculture was extensively practised in the south of the island—so much so that corn formed one of the principal articles of export from Britain to the Continent. Hides, tin, lead, slaves, and fierce hunting dogs are mentioned among the other things with which Britain supplied foreigners. It is remarkable that the Britons do not appear to have taken any part, either as shipowners or mariners, in the trade with Gaul and other countries. They seem to have possessed no sea-going, or even any coasting vessels. Their only experience of navigation was what might be gained on the rivers and lakes; and even there they do not appear to have employed any vessels more capacious or solid than their coracles—frail boats, made of slight ribs of wood, covered with hides, such as the Welsh fishermen still use on the Wye, or which the traveller may see on some of the rivers and lakes of Ireland. The northern Britons seem to have advanced little beyond the hunter's and the shepherd's state. They are described as subsisting chiefly on milk, on the flesh of their cattle, or on the produce of the chase. Buildings are said to have been numerous in the island; but British towns were merely spaces amid the woods and morasses, fortified with a stockade, like the Pahs of the New Zealanders of the present day, whom the Britons also resembled in their custom of tatooing and painting themselves. On the other hand, the art of working metals had become general. They used copper coins and iron bars of a specified weight as money; and the fact of a nation using money as a medium of exchange, instead of dealing by barter, proves a great advance from the savage state. Their practice, also, of employing armed chariots in battle, implies skill in rearing and training horses. It proves, moreover, some advance in mechanical art; and their general use of chariots has been deemed by some writers to prove the existence of formed roads. Diodorus praises the simplicity of the manners of the Britons, and the honesty of their dispositions. Cæsar has mentioned the existence of one custom among them, which some modern writers have thought so improbable that they term it a mere Roman fable, while others have regarded it as proving that the ancient Britons were sunk in the lowest depths of barbarism. Cæsar says that it was a common thing among them for ten or twelve men of near relationship to have their wives in common. Those who know to what an extent polyandry, as it is termed, has prevailed, and still prevails, among oriental tribes of considerable civilisation, and that it was only abolished within the last twelve or thirteen years in the Kandyian territories of Ceylon, a portion of the British dominions, will not be hastily led, by this part of Cæsar's narrative, to question either his veracity or the accuracy of his information, as to this or as to the more favourable portions of the account which he gives of the Britons.

Cæsar tells us that the religion of the ancient Britons was the Druidical. The Gauls are said to have learned this creed from Britain, where it originated, and where the special knowledge of its most profound mysteries was preserved. The Druids were the priests, the lawgivers, and the judges of the people. No clear and authentic record of their tenets has come down to our times. We learn vaguely from Cæsar that they discussed and taught much concerning the stars and their movements, and the magnitude of the universe, of the nature of matter and its compounds, of the power of the immortal gods and their intervention in the affairs of men. We know that they held the doctrine of the immortality and the transmigration of souls, doctrines to which the Romans attributed the contempt of death and resolute bravery of the British warrior. To the Druids the oak and the mistletoe were objects of special reverence. Whether Stonehenge and the other similar vast structures of remote antiquity, which still exist in Britain, where designed as shrines for the Druidical rites, is uncertain, though the authority of the leading archæologists of the day is in favour of their being sepulchral monuments; but it is certain that the horrid practice of sacrificing human beings was largely practised by the Druids. It was also common to place round their huge stone-idols frames of wicker-work, under which the victims were placed and were then burnt to death. It was probably the horror with which these sacrifices inspired the Romans, and their dread of the magical power and of the mysterious rites that were ascribed to the Druids, that made the Romans except the Druidical religion from the contemptuous toleration which they usually granted to the creeds and rituals of conquered nations. Wherever the Romans acquired power, they extirpated Druidism with the most searching severity; and, as the tenets of the Druids were never committed to writing, the traditions of them rapidly perished, except so far as the Romans had observed and recorded them before the final subjugation of Gaul and Britain. It is more than probable that the political institutions of the Britons resembled those of their Celtic kinsmen in Gaul. They would, therefore, have, besides their kings and princes, a privileged class, a noblesse, among them. The mass of the people was in almost a servile state. They were daring in war, but rather furious than firm in battle—of this failing the Romans profited. It was remarked of them, after their conquest, that under a just government they were eminently loyal, and fulfilled their civic duties of provincials with readiness, but that they rose up freely and fiercely against insult and oppression. Such is an epitome of what is known regarding the people of Britain at about the time of Cæsar's invasion, and there can be no doubt that much of this description is applicable to the people of that part of the country now known as Northamptonshire.

Up to this era the religious creed of the Druids, imperfectly known to us, prevailed in every part of the island. Often must the dense woods and forests of Northamptonshire have witnessed most barbarous rites; often must their echoes have repeated the agonising shrieks of human victims, consumed in slow flames, as sacrifices to demon gods. The Druids seem to have possessed some knowledge of the sciences; the art of writing was likewise familiar to them; but dark and gloomy, indeed, was their faith—dark as the oak forests in which its solemnities were held—gloomy as the strange belief that they derived their origin from Dis or Pluto, which led them to compute their time by nights rather than by days. Few traces of Druidism now remain in Northamptonshire, although it prevailed during so many centuries. One vestige still lingers in different parts of the country, viz., the Beltane bonfire, till recently kindled near some of the villages on Midsummer Eve. In this fire bones or dead animals were burned, whilst the spectators danced round it, thus proving it to have been originally a sacrifice to the false god Bel, Belus, or Baal, who was once as much worshipped on the banks of the Nene and the Avon, as by the streams of Babylon or Nineveh. Neither was wholly unknown, though adored by another name.

When Britain at last yielded to the rule of the Cæsars, Roman arts, customs, and religion superseded the British. The young nobility assumed the Roman costume, and, finally, almost surpassed their conquerors in luxury. During the Roman occupation, a period of full four hundred years, Northamptonshire was included in the province of Flavia Cæsariensis, cities and towns adorned the province, and in them temples, palaces, and baths vied in magnificence with those of Italy. Northamptonshire was not forgotten. We now find the Druidical religion superseded by another superstition, less sanguinary and more refined perhaps, but still foul and hideous. The gods of the Pantheon were worshipped in Northamptonshire, and altars were raised to Jupiter, Mars, Venus, and Apollo, on places where, in after years, the triumphant standard of the cross was reared.

Having determined on the invasion of Britain, Cæsar, towards the close of the summer of the year 55 B.C., sent over here a Gaulish chieftain, named Commius, whom he had made ruler over a conquered Gallic tribe, and who was supposed to have friends and kinsmen in this island, with instructions to represent to the maritime tribes the greatness of the Roman power, and to persuade them to seek safety by a prompt submission. This diplomatic preliminary was of little use, as Commius was instantly arrested and cast into chains by the Britons. Cæsar further summoned before him a number of the Gaulish merchants and mariners who were supposed to be best acquainted with the landing-places of the island, and with the country near the coasts. Cæsar was at this time in the country of the Morini, which included the Gaulish coast opposite to Britain, between the parts that are now Calais and Boulogne. The place that Cæsar chose for his embarkation was the Portus Itius, which seems to have been the harbour afterwards called Witsand. Here he collected a fleet of eighty merchant-ships and other vessels to serve as transports; and he also ordered to the same place his squadron of war-galleys, which he had built and employed during the preceding year in his war with the maritime tribes of North-Western Gaul. His army, in his first expedition, consisted of only two legions; the effective force of his infantry was probably about 8000 men. A small body of cavalry was ordered to embark at a point about eight miles below the place whence Cæsar sailed, but this part of his army never reached Britain.

Early on the 26th of August, while it was yet night, the fleet of transports, with Cæsar and his infantry on board, and accompanied by the war-galleys, sailed from Witsand. About eight or nine in the morning he was under the cliffs of Dover. The Britons were assembled in large numbers to oppose a landing, and he judged it inexpedient to try to effect one in a place where his men would be so much exposed to the enemy's javelins, and to other missiles from the neighbouring heights. He anchored, and waited till three in the afternoon, still expecting to be joined by the ships with the cavalry. About half-past three the tide began to make again and run to the northward, in which direction Cæsar knew he should find a better landing-place. He accordingly weighed anchor, and coasting northwards, with wind and tide in his favour, he came rapidly opposite the shelving coast and low open country near the sites of modern Deal and Walmer. The Britons watched his movements, and hastened along the shore to be in readiness to meet him. Their cavalry and their war-chariots kept up with the Roman fleet, and the infantry followed as fast as possible. Cæsar, therefore, was obliged to force a landing. It was now nearly low-water, and the war-galleys and the larger merchant-vessels could not come up to the sloping shingle of the beach. Consequently, the Roman soldiers from the smaller vessels could only gain the beach in inconsiderable numbers, and the rest were obliged, when the ships grounded, to leap down into water several feet deep, and make to the shore, encumbered by their heavy armour, and unacquainted with the places where they had to fight. The British cavalry and war-chariots dashed boldly at them as they struggled up the beach, preventing each attempt by the legionaries to form in regular order. The British infantry also soon came up and took an active share in the conflict. Little encumbered by armour, and accustomed to the confusion of irregular warfare, the Britons rushed into the water to grapple with their embarrassed invaders, or showered their javelins down upon them as they struggled in the waves. But discipline at length prevailed; the Britons were beaten back, and the Roman soldier, as in every other part of the world, was the conqueror. The Britons were at first panic-stricken by their defeat, and they sent envoys to Cæsar's camp. The Roman general received them with an appearance of graciousness, and directed them to send hostages, a direction which they promised to obey as soon as the necessary persons could be brought from the interior. But on the fourth day after Cæsar's landing, two disasters befell him that encouraged the Britons to resume hostilities. His cavalry, which ought to have sailed and landed with him, lingered on the Gaulish coast until the 30th of August, when they sailed for Britain. They crossed the Channel, and were in sight of Cæsar's camp, when the wind freshened to a gale and drove them dispersedly along the Straits of Dover. And on the night of that same day a worse calamity ensued, against which the Romans, if their seamanship had equalled their military qualities, might have been better prepared. The slight ebb and flow of the Mediterranean had not prepared them for the force of the spring-tides of the Channel, but Cæsar and his officers might have taken warning by what they must have already experienced on the opposite shores of Gaul. On the fourth night after his arrival here, there was a high spring-tide, which was increased by the same gale which had blown the ships with his cavalry on board off the coast. All Cæsar's fleet—both the vessels that had been hauled ashore and those that were at anchor—were lifted up and dashed together by the waves. A large part of the fleet was entirely destroyed, and the rest was so damaged as to be no longer seaworthy. Encouraged by these events, the British chiefs resolved to try to destroy the strangers, and to ensure Britain from further attempts at invasion. The situation of Cæsar, in his camp on the Deal flats, was indeed critical. He had no cavalry. He had brought no stores of provisions with him, and the disaster to his fleet had cut him off from all communication with Gaul. He suspected the hostile designs of the Britons, though they kept up the semblance of submission, and he took speedy means to counteract them. With that laborious energy which was the great characteristic of the Roman soldiery, his men, under his direction, soon repaired the least shattered ships, using as materials the timber and tackle of those which had suffered most. He soon had a small squadron fit for sea, and reopened his communications with the Continent. Meanwhile large detachments of his troops were daily employed in reaping and bringing in the corn from the cultivated districts in the neighbourhood. The Britons watched for the opportunity which this division of his forces seemed likely to offer. At last, one field only of the corn-land near Deal remained unreaped. This seems to have been the most distant from the Roman camp, and the uncleared forest nearly surrounded it. Knowing that the Romans would come to this field, the Britons lay in ambush in the woods. The seventh legion, being one half of Cæsar's force, was sent by him on the dangerous but indispensable duty of bringing in the corn. The Britons waited till the Romans laid aside their arms, and dispersed to begin reaping, and then, rushing out of the forest, they assailed them furiously, killing some before they could regain the spot where their arms had been placed; and even when the Romans had recovered their weapons, and rallied round the guard which had been left over them, the Britons prevented them from forming in regular order, and pressed them hard on every side, especially with charges of cavalry and war-chariots.

The news of the critical position of the seventh legion soon reached Cæsar, and he led the greatest part of the tenth to its rescue. On arriving at the scene of action, Cæsar found his men at the very brink of destruction, driven together in a confused mass, and surrounded by the exulting Britons, who were showering javelins on their almost helpless foes. By a steady charge of the picked troops whom he was leading, Cæsar broke through the circle of the British, and gave them a check, during which the seventh legion was able to open into regular formation. The action was soon renewed; and it is clear, from the account given by Cæsar himself, that he gained no victory, and was barely able to bring his men safely back to his camp. He speaks emphatically of the alarm which the war-chariots of the Britons caused among his veteran soldiers. Encouraged by this advantage, the Britons collected in large numbers, and a few days afterwards ventured on a pitched battle against Cæsar near his camp. But here the discipline and superior weapons of the Roman legionaries prevailed; and in the interval Cæsar had received some reinforcements from the Continent, especially some Gaulish cavalry, which proved of great service to him in the battle. He gained a victory which enabled him to quit Britain without discredit, and even with a show of success. But he saw clearly that a much larger army than one or two legions was requisite for making any effective impression on the islanders. Accordingly, in the next year, he assembled at the Itian harbour a force of upwards of 20,000 Roman infantry and 2000 cavalry, to act against Britain. A fleet of 800 vessels brought him and this force to his former landing place; and the Britons, terrified at the formidable appearance of the Roman armament, attempted no resistance to his disembarkation. But when he advanced into the interior he was encountered with great bravery, and no inconsiderable military skill, by the natives, who had placed themselves under the chief command of Cassivellaunus, king of the Trinobantes, a powerful tribe that dwelt north of the Thames. They disputed the passage of the river Stour with great obstinacy, but were at last driven back with heavy loss by the steady valour of the Roman legionaries. Cassivellaunus then followed the prudent strategy of avoiding all pitched battles, and harassed the Roman army by repeated skirmishes and alarms as he retreated before them. Cæsar determined to carry the war into the British chieftain's own territories, and marched accordingly for the Thames, striking across the regions now called Kent and Surrey, for a point in the stream sufficiently high from the sea for the river to be fordable. The summer is reported to have been one of unusual drought; and the spot where Cæsar forced the passage of the Thames is believed, from very ancient traditions, to have been at Coway Stakes, where the river is usually six feet deep, but becomes fordable in very dry seasons. When Cæsar arrived on the bank of the Thames, he perceived a large force drawn up on the other side to oppose him; the bank, moreover, was planted with sharp stakes, and others of the same kind were fixed in the bed of the river beneath the water. Cæsar gained intelligence of this from prisoners and deserters. He accordingly sent the cavalry in advance, and brought up the infantry immediately in the rear. So great was the ardour and impetuosity of the soldiers, that whilst their heads alone appeared above the water, the enemy, unable to sustain their attack, abandoned the bank and fled precipitately.

One defeat was sufficient to break the alliance which Cassivellaunus had formed against the Romans; and the superiority of the latter once demonstrated, the different tribes that had been oppressed by that chieftain seem to have thrown the blame of their resistance on his influence, making a merit of their personal hostility towards him, and seeking an alliance with the invaders. First came messengers from the Trinobantes of Middlesex and Essex, who offered to submit to the Romans, on condition that they should espouse the cause of their young chief Mandubratius, and restore him to the sovereignty of his tribe, which Cassivellaunus had usurped. The treaty was soon arranged. The example the Trinobantes was soon followed by the Cenimagni, the Segontiaci, the Ancalites, the Bibroci, and the Cassii. The first of these tribes lay to the north of the Trinobantes, in the present county of Suffolk; the Segontiaci occupied the greater part of the present counties of Hampshire and Berkshire; the Bibroci inhabited a thickly-wooded country, containing the celebrated forest of Anderida, including a small part of Hampshire and Berkshire, and stretching through the modern counties of Sussex and Surrey into the eastern parts of Kent; the position of the Ancalites is less certain, but they perhaps lay on the north of Berkshire and on the western borders of Middlesex; and if the Cassii were the same tribe that was called by Ptolemy the Catyeuchlani, as is supposed, they formed the link between these other tribes and the Trinobantes, stretching through the modern counties of Hertford, Bedford, and Buckingham. The envoys of these tribes informed Cæsar, "that the town of Cassivellaunus was not far off, surrounded by woods and marshes, and occupied by a large number of men and cattle. The Britons call by the name of town a place in the fastnesses of the woods surrounded by a mound and trench, and calculated to afford them a retreat and protection from hostile invasion. Cæsar immediately marched to this place, which he found extremely strong, both by nature and art; nevertheless, he assailed it at once in two different quarters. The enemy stood their ground for a time, but at length gave way before the onset of our men, and abandoned the town by the opposite side. A number of cattle were found there, and many of the enemy were slain or taken prisoners in the pursuit."

Cæsar had now received the submission of a very large tract of country, extending from sea to sea, and completely surrounding the country of the Cantii, in which he had first landed. All these tribes seem to have bargained for protection against Cassivellaunus, and it is probable that they had been all more or less brought under his rule. This had been the case also with Cantium or Kent, which was then ruled by four kings or chiefs, called by Cæsar, Cingetorix, Carvilius, Taximagulus, and Segonax. When Cæsar marched across the Thames, Cassivellaunus, driven from his own country, seems to have formed the project of cutting him off from the coast, and, marching into Kent, he sent to the four Kentish chiefs just named his orders to assemble their forces immediately, and join him in surprising the naval camp of the Romans. This attack was, like so many others, unsuccessful; the assailants were beaten from the camp with considerable slaughter, and a young chief of consideration was taken prisoner. This action convinced Cassivellaunus that it was in vain to contend with his irregular warriors against the discipline of the Roman veterans; and now, finding that even his own subjects were disaffected to him, and had made their peace with the invaders, he also offered to submit. His proposals were accepted, for Cæsar was now anxious, for various reasons, to return to Gaul; and having agreed upon a tribute which the Britons were to pay annually to the Roman people, and given his injunction to Cassivellaunus not to make war upon Mandubratius or the Trinobantes, who were naturally supposed to have incurred his hatred by their being the first to submit, Cæsar led his legions back to Gaul, carrying with him the hostages which he had taken from the British chiefs as pledges for their fulfilment of the terms of the treaty. The campaign lasted about seven weeks. As the Roman general mentions in his commentaries that his fleet was obliged to make two voyages in order to carry over to the Continent his army and the great number of captives that had been collected, we may conclude that the slave-hunting operations of the campaign had been successful. In other respects the invasion was a failure. Britain sent no tribute, and Rome did not attempt to exact its payment. The short remainder of Cæsar's life was fully occupied in quelling the last desperate attempts of the Gauls to recover their independence, and in hostilities with his fellow-countrymen. After his death came another period of revolution and civil war among the Romans; and the ultimate victor in those struggles, Augustus Cæsar, was unwilling, both from disposition and from policy, to enter upon schemes of distant and precarious conquest in an island which the Romans still looked upon as beyond the pale of the civilised world.

During the reigns of Augustus and Tiberias, making together a period of nearly eighty years, the British States which had submitted to Julius Cæsar were left in a position of friendship or alliance with Rome. During this period three of the British kingdoms made considerable progress in extending their power over a large portion of the island. While Augustus was Emperor of Rome, Cunobelin (or Cymbeline), King of the Trinobantes, acquired a permanent authority over nearly the whole of Southern and Central Britain. Northwards of his territories the power of the Iceni extended from sea to sea, from the parts since called Lincolnshire, Norfolk, and Suffolk on the east, to North Wales on the west, thus including the Midland Counties, and amongst them what is now Northamptonshire. The Mersey and the Humber divided the Iceni from the Brigantes, who formed the third great state in the island, and whose dominion was spread from coast to coast as far northward as the mountains and morasses of Caledonia. It is not to be supposed that the sovereign of any of the three British powers that have been mentioned ruled over a perfectly united and well-organised kingdom. Each little district and each petty tribe had still its own local prince or chief, but all were more or less subject to one of the three dominant states. The British coins of this period are of themselves sufficient proof that the natives of the island, especially the portion ruled over by Cunobelin, were making rapid progress in the interval between the invasions of Cæsar and that of Claudius. This was doubtless caused to a great extent by increased intercourse with Gaul, a country which was now becoming thoroughly Romanised. But it is vain to speculate on the degree or the kind of civilisation to which free Britain might have raised itself, aided by the peaceful influences only of Rome. The fifth of the Roman Emperors, Caligula, was induced by British refugees to renew the enterprise of the first Cæsar, and the whole island, except the extreme north, was thoroughly conquered by the Romans in a forty years' war, during which many splendid proofs of heroic patriotism were displayed on the side of the unsuccessful British, as well as many specimens of high military genius and stubborn valour on the side of the ultimately triumphant invaders. We can here only glance rapidly at some of the main occurrences in the first of the four conquests of our island.

In the year of our Lord 43, the war was renewed by the Roman general, Aulus Plautius, with four legions and a body of auxiliary cavalry from Batavia and Germany, whose services in swimming rivers and dashing at the Britons in positions which the defenders deemed inaccessible, proved of the utmost value to the Roman general. Plautius and his lieutenant, the celebrated Vespasian, overran the southern district of the island, and marched upon the capital city of the Trinobantes, called Camulodunum, which appears to have been on or near the site of the modern town of Colchester, in Essex. Of the two sons of Cunobelin, who had headed the defence, one fell in battle near the Thames, the other, Caractacus, retired among the Silures, the hardy mountaineers of Wales, to renew thence the struggle with the Romans. Plautius drove before him the remains of the British army in upon Camulodunum. The Roman general refrained from an attack upon them in that position, but sent information to the emperor Claudius, who hastened to command in person his legions in Britain. On the arrival of Claudius they again crossed the Thames, defeated the Britons in battle, and took possession of Camulodunum, the capital of Cunobelin. The Britons now submitted, and the emperor hastened back to Rome to celebrate his triumph, leaving Plautius in command of the army. The emperor and his son were both honoured with the title of Britannicus, and a coin was subsequently struck to commemorate the conquest of the Britons.

That conquest, however, was as yet very imperfect, and included only the south-eastern district of the island. But a foreign power, like that of Rome, established in a hostile manner in one district of Britain, could not long remain without excuses for attacking the others. The south-western division of the island, extending from Hampshire to the extremity of Cornwall, was held by two powerful tribes, called the Belgæ and the Dumnonii. This territory was now invaded by Vespasian, and after an obstinate, and apparently a long struggle, in which Vespasian fought nearly thirty battles and captured twenty of the British fortified ports, these two tribes were reduced to submission. Previous to the year 50, Aulus Plautius was recalled, and he seems to have left the Roman legions engaged in war with the Britons. It was now the tribes of the interior who had taken up arms against the invaders, and were making inroads upon the tribes who had submitted to them, considering their submission as a just cause for plundering them. In the midst of this confusion, a new governor of Britain arrived from Rome. His name was Ostorius Scapula, a good soldier, and a man of eminent abilities. He had no sooner landed than he collected such troops as were at hand, and falling upon the Britons unexpectedly, defeated them with great slaughter, and drove them out of the Roman territory. He then proceeded to enclose and protect the latter with a line of forts from the Nene to the Severn, from which it appears that the whole country within these rivers, from the furthest coast of Norfolk to the Land's End, and thence to the extreme point of Kent, had, at this time, voluntarily or by compulsion submitted to the power of Rome. Among those who had submitted voluntarily was the extensive and powerful tribe of the Iceni, who occupied the modern counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge, and Huntingdon. The Iceni were jealous of the attempt of the Romans to establish their power by these forts, and, confident in their own strength, which had not yet been tried with the Romans, they put themselves at the head of a confederacy, with some of the neighbouring tribes, and when Ostorius marched against them, they prepared for battle in a place which they had enclosed with ramparts of earth, with a narrow entrance to hinder the approach of cavalry. But this was of little avail against the discipline of their opponents; and Ostorius, with only a few cohorts of auxiliaries, attacked them in their entrenchments, made a breach for the entrance of his cavalry, and defeated them with great slaughter. The Iceni now returned to their obedience, and other tribes, which had before hesitated, submitted.

Beyond the boundary which Ostorius had formed by his line of forts, the interior of the island was inhabited by tribes, who were fiercer and less civilised than the southern nations. The chief of these was the great tribe of the Brigantes, extending through the mountainous and wooded districts from the borders of Lincolnshire, through Yorkshire, Lancashire, Westmoreland, Cumberland, Durham, and Northumberland. The lesser tribes, such as the Cornavii and Coritavi (the latter inhabiting what is now the counties of Northampton, Leicester, Rutland, Derby, Nottingham, and Lincoln), which were intermediate between the tribes subject to the Romans and the Brigantes, probably acknowledged the superiority of the latter. The Brigantes seem to have been so much discouraged by the defeat of the Iceni, that they sought the alliance of, or rather bought their peace with, the Romans. Ostorius, relieved from the hostilities of the various tribes just mentioned, carried his arms into Shropshire and North Wales, and had reached the shores of the Irish Sea, when he was recalled by a revolt of the Brigantes, which was apparently partial and easily subdued. The only formidable enemy now in arms on the borders of the Roman possessions, was the tribe of the Silures, which had rallied under Caractacus, the defeated son of Cunobelin, who, after various turns of fortune, had been elected the chief of this tribe, and entered into a confederacy with the Ordovices of North Wales. After the defeat of the Brigantes, Ostorius gave his attention to the interior arrangements of the province committed to his charge. He made Camulodunum, which was raised to the rank of a colonia, the headquarters of the Roman power, and established there a numerous body of veterans, among whom the conquered lands were distributed. The city was adorned with public buildings, and was increased in size and importance. Having settled these things to his satisfaction, Ostorius marched against Caractacus and his Silurian adherents. We have no narrative of the campaigns, during which the British hero and his followers kept the legions at bay, or retaliated for the gradual advance of the Roman lines through the hill country of west Britain, by rapid and daring inroads among the districts that had submitted to the invaders. We know generally that Caractacus maintained the war for nine years, that he gained many advantages, and fought many drawn battles; and that his skill and valour extorted the admiration of his conquerors. Local tradition points to a lofty hill in Shropshire, as the last stronghold of the Celtic chief, and the scene of his last battle. The hill still bears the name of Caer-Caradoc, the fort or town of Caradoc, the real name of the hero, which the Romans latinised into Caractacus. The legions of Ostorius stormed that position in spite of a brave resistance. Caractacus himself escaped from the slaughter of the battle, and from the massacre of the sack and the pursuit, but his wife and children were taken prisoners, and his surviving brothers surrendered themselves in despair to the Roman general. Caractacus fled to the dominions of Cartimandua, his wife's mother, who then reigned over the Brigantes, the powerful British state of the north.

Cartismandua betrayed him to the Romans, and Caractacus was taken captive to Rome, with his wife and children to grace the triumph, which the emperor Claudius celebrated for the victories which his generals had gained in Britain. The loss of their leader did not discourage the Silures, who, trusting to their woods, continued to carry on a fierce warfare against the Romans, cutting off their stragglers, and in more than one instance nearly overwhelming the legions, which were left to erect fortresses in their country. "After this," says Tacitus, "there was incessant fighting, generally of a predatory character; sometimes the armies would meet in the woods, at other times in the midst of the marches, according as chance or their own headlong valour directed—many an engagement took place by accident, while others were the result of stratagem and military manœuvre; many an expedition was undertaken to revenge some previous defeat, while others had plunder for their object; and they were sometimes undertaken by order of the generals, and at other times without their knowledge. The Silures were the most obstinate in their resistance, and their obstinacy was increased, by the threat of the Roman commander, that he would root the very name of the Silures out of Britain, as he had done with the Sigambri, who had been transported to Gaul. These words enraged the Silures, who assailed and cut off two cohorts of the auxiliaries, and stirred up the other tribes to revolt, by giving them a large share of their booty, and thus exciting their love of plunder. In the midst of these disorders, Ostorius, overcome by the troubles with which he was surrounded, departed this life; and the Britons rejoiced at his death, not merely as if they had gained a battle, but rather as if the war was entirely at an end."

Before the war against Caractacus had been concluded, the Romans had begun to strengthen their dominion over the conquered British territories, by founding colonies, and by building and fortifying towns. Camulodunum, which was on the site of the old stronghold of the Trinobantian kings, was the first of these in date, and also in importance. A large number of discharged veterans from the Roman legions received settlements there—a senate-house, a theatre, and stately temples to Roman gods, soon appeared where nothing loftier than the rude huts of the natives had formerly been erected. But by far the stateliest temple of all in the new town of the invaders, was dedicated, according to the degrading and impious flattery which had become habitual to the Romans since they obeyed a single ruler, to the man-god, to the divine emperor Claudius. Another Roman settlement was planted at Verulam; and although London was not yet dignified as a Roman colony or municipal city, it speedily became a populous and thriving commercial town, largely resorted to by merchants and traders from the nearest provinces of the continent. But these advances and consolidations of Roman power and civilisation were accompanied with much misgovernment and oppression. There was not only the suffering caused to the Britons, whose lands were taken from them to be divided among the Roman colonists, or to endow the Roman temples and priests, but there was also, wherever the Roman authority extended, a cruel system of military conscription, by which the ablest and most promising of the British youth were taken from their homes and drafted into the auxiliary cohorts attached to Roman legions, that were serving in distant regions of the empire. There was also heavy taxation by land-tax, by poll-tax, and by customs, aggravated by requisitions of corn and military stores; the frequency and severity of such exactions depending on the arbitrary will of the rulers. But besides all these evils, and worse than all other evils, were the licence, the insolence, and the brutality which the numerous officials of the dominant race practised upon the provincials, unless when kept in check by a governor, not only personally just and pure, but of unusual activity and strictness, in controlling the misconduct of his subordinates. Britain appears to have been negligently ruled for the ten years after the overthrow and capture of Caractacus; and the usual results are traceable in the ill success of the Roman arms, against the yet unsubdued Britons, and in the disorder and disaffection of those tribes that were under Roman authority. In A.D. 61, Suetonius Paulinus, a general of proved ability, who had lately taken the command of the imperial forces in the island, prepared to strike a decisive blow against what seemed to be the stronghold of the opposition to Rome. This was the island now called Anglesey, close to the Welsh coast, where the Druids, who had been driven out of Gaul and out of every part of Britain, subject to Roman influence, had established their rites, and where they had collected the chief survivors of the priestly caste, and their most devoted and fanatical adherents. Suetonius concentrated the best Roman troops that were in Britain, marched upon the western coast, forced the passage to the island of Anglesey, after a short but sharp conflict, and then gave to the sword and the flame the Druids, their groves, their idols, and all the votaries that had gathered round them, to give or to seek protection. The success of Suetonius was complete. But while he was winning the little isle of Anglesey, all the remainder of Britain was nearly lost to Rome.

The indignant impatience of the Roman rule, which causes already described had made general in the island, was nowhere more vehement than among the Iceni, the powerful British tribe, which had received the Romans willingly as friends and protectors, but now experienced in them the most arrogant and cruel oppressors. Prasutagus, the Icenian king, who had been Rome's most submissive adherent, was dead. In the hope of propitiating the goodwill of the Romans to his family, he had made the emperor joint-heir with his two daughters. But the agent of the Roman Government seized on all the possessions of the deceased prince; and under the pretence that Boadicea, his widow, had secreted some of his wealth, ordered her to be stripped and scourged. This abominable cruelty was accompanied by worse outrages on her daughters, who were given up by the Roman official to the brutal violence of the slaves. At the appeal of their queen the Iceni rose at once to arms. Every Roman, every minister and partisan of Rome, every symbol of Roman domination, was swept away from the face of the land. Pouring from their own territories over those of the Trinobantes and the other southern Britons, the victorious Iceni called upon their countrymen to join them against the common enemy, and the summons was promptly and terribly obeyed. Camulodunum, which was looked upon as the headquarters of Roman power, was stormed and burnt. Verulamium had the same fate. London, which appears to have been largely inhabited by subjects of Rome, was utterly destroyed, and traces of the fate of this, the first Roman London, may yet be found beneath the soil of our modern capital. It was computed that 70,000 Romans and friends of Rome were massacred in these three places, besides those who were surprised and cut down in the smaller posts and camps—in their rich estates and pleasant villas, where they had been dwelling in fancied security among the despised natives. No insurrection could be more just than this of the British against Rome. But, as is unhappily too commonly the case, a holy cause was sullied by atrocious cruelty. That the Britons gave no quarter—that in the heat of the victorious assault they slew all of the enemy's race or following, whatever might be the victim's sex or age—such horrors were the common incidents of ancient warfare. But it is even now shocking to read the narrative of the tortures which they systematically inflicted on their captives. They especially chose out the most beautiful and high-born of the Roman ladies who fell in their power to undergo the most lingering and loathsome sufferings, and to be exhibited to the public gaze under the worst possible circumstances of ignominy and agony. The Roman historian remarks that the British insurgents seemed to have had a presentiment how Rome would punish the revolt, and to have been eager to avenge themselves beforehand.

The tidings of these calamities recalled Suetonius from his conquests in the west. Swiftly and firmly he made his way eastward with the 14th legion and its auxiliary cohorts and cavalry, effecting on his march a junction with part of the 20th legion. Of the other two legions stationed in Britain, one, the 9th, had rashly engaged the insurgents, and had been defeated with heavy loss; the commander of the other, the 2nd legion, was terrified at the number and strength of the enemy, and refused to obey his general's orders to join him, or to move beyond the shelter of his fortified camp. When Suetonius met and engaged the vast host of the British, he had not more than 10,000 men under his command ; but the complete defeat which the Britons suffered from this small but well-disciplined and ably-handled force, is one of the most signal among the numerous proofs which history gives of how useless is the attempt of undisciplined levies, however ardent their patriotism, however great their personal bravery, and however superior their numbers, to compete with an army of regular troops, well trained, well commanded, and who could add military spirit, and reliance on each other, to the courage natural to them as men. The slaughter of the British in this battle was enormous, and the Romans justly ranked the victory of Suetonius as equal to the most splendid that had been won in the times of the old commonwealth. Boadicea poisoned herself after her defeat, and the fugitives from the battle made no effort to reunite and to maintain the war. Suetonius moved his troops, now largely reinforced from the continent, across the districts that had revolted, laying waste everything with fire and sword. A famine, which swept off even more than had perished in massacre or battle, was the natural result of the devastations which both insurgents and Romans had committed in this short but dreadful war.

Britain lay for some years in the quiet of exhaustion under Roman rule ; but she was not thoroughly reduced into orderly subjection as a Roman province until the illustrious Agricola was sent, A.D. 78, by the emperor Vespasian, as governor of Britain and commander-in-chief of the Roman forces in this island. Agricola united the virtues of a philosopher and the talents of a statesman to the courage and skill of a consummate general. He saw that something more than victories in the field, followed up by vindictive slaughter and havoc, was required to win Britain effectively and permanently to Rome. He took care to make the military power of Rome thoroughly respected and feared while he commanded her legions, but he sought also to make her imperial supremacy less hated. In eight campaigns he completely quelled all revolt, all insubordination, all national independence that lingered, or that had revived in southern and central Britain ; and he advanced his conquest also northward, through what are now the northern counties of England and the Lowlands of Scotland. Including all this within the Roman frontier, he drew a line of fortification across from the Frith of Forth to the Frith of Clyde, which was to protect Rome's subjects from the wild tribes of the north. These clans, the Caledonians, as they were then termed, were already formidable to their southern neighbours, and Agricola determined to break their power, for a time at least, by seeking and defeating them in their own territory. He twice led his legions north of the Firth of Forth, compelling the submission of the tribes along the eastern coast, and winning in his last campaign a celebrated victory at the Grampian Hills over a large host of Caledonians, whom their great chief, Galgacus, had gathered together to dispute the further progress of the Romans. During these campaigns in the far north of Britain, the Roman fleet sailed along the eastern coast, and co-operated with the land forces. And when the legions returned to winter quarters in the south, after the battle at the Grampians, the fleet, by Agricola's orders, continued its voyage, and sailed round the northern extremity of the island, returning down along the western coast, and up the channel to its station at the harbour, afterwards called Sandwich. This voyage put an end to the speculations of some of the scientific Romans who had previously maintained that Britain was not an island.

The conquest of Ireland seems to have been intended by Agricola, who considered that a single legion would have been sufficient for that purpose. But this was not to be. The Romans did not invade Ireland, for the jealousy of the Emperor Domitian recalled Agricola from his command before he could commence his intended expedition. But though Agricola's schemes of conquest were left thus imperfect, he seems to have successfully accomplished the more difficult and more honourable task of establishing orderly government, and of awakening a spirit of loyal obedience in the territories which he found or left subdued. The first necessity was to repress the rapacity and insolence of the Roman officials towards the natives, and Agricola commenced this by himself setting an example of moderation, fairness, and courtesy. He reformed the system of taxation and requisitions, especially cutting down those imposts which benefited the tax-gatherers rather than the treasury, and abolishing all the vexatious and arrogant forms and regulations, which galled the provincials more by pressing on their sense of insult than the actual amount of the claim injured them by draining their resources. Any complaint by a native was heard promptly and patiently, and, if well founded, was followed by the exemplary punishment of the offender. At the same time, Agricola encouraged the Britons to adopt the customs, the language, and the garb, and to familiarise themselves with the comforts and the elegancies of Roman civilisation. The vigorous and equal administration of justice, the strict maintenance of order, and the assurance of safety for person and property, co-operated with these softening influences in leading the Britons to cultivate the arts of peace, and to substitute steady commercial activity for their old rugged, independent, martial restlessness. The Roman towns that had perished in Boadicea's insurrection were restored in increased opulence and splendour, and others, of almost equal wealth, were rapidly founded in the most favourable situations throughout the greater part of the island. Harbours were deepened, docks and wharves were constructed, and roads of still enduring solidity were made from place to place. The primary object of the Roman engineers in the construction of these roads was to facilitate the rapid movement and concentration of troops, but their works served also to give the most important stimulus to internal traffic, and to break down the barriers of little local nationalities, and of petty provincial exclusiveness.

The Roman power was now firmly established in the island. The tribes which had submitted made no attempt to recover their independence. The successors of Agricola, instead of conducting the legions in the field, were employed in protecting the public tranquillity, in settling the details of the provincial government, and in assimilating the state of Britain to that of the other countries which had been incorporated in the empire. A short sketch of this system will not be unacceptable to the reader. It is thus described by Lingard:—"The governor was denominated the prefect or proprætor of Briton. His power was supreme within the island, but precarious in its duration, and dependent on the will of the emperor. He united in his own person every species of authority which was exercised by the different magistrates within the city of Rome. He commanded the army; he was invested with the administration of justice; and he possessed the power of substituting his own notions of equity in the place of the strict letter of the law. An authority so extensive and irresistible would frequently give birth to acts of injustice; and though the imperial court and senate-house were open to the complaints of the natives, yet the distance of the capital, and the influence of friends, promised, or rather insured, impunity to the oppressor. In a few years, however, the exorbitant power of the prefects was confined by the emperor Hadrian, who laid down a system of rules for the regulation of their conduct, and established a uniform administration of justice through all the provinces of the empire. Subordinate to the prefect, but appointed by the emperor, was the procurator or quæstor. It was his duty to collect the taxes, and to administer the revenues of the province. That revenue arose from a variety of imposts: a poll-tax, which was not confined to the living, but extended to the funerals of the dead; a tax on legacies, the sale of slaves, and purchases at auctions; the tenth part of the produce of mines; and a certain proportion of corn, hay, and cattle, which was paid either in kind or in money, at the option of the procurator. He was also employed, occasionally, in the dishonourable office of a spy; and his reports were frequently swelled with exaggerated accounts of the riches, the power, and the ambition of the prefect; for the distance of that officer from the seat of government, and the natural strength of the island, were constant sources of suspicion to the emperors. The amount of the army maintained in Britain must have varied according to circumstances. When Plautius undertook the reduction of the island, he was at the head of four legions with their auxiliaries, a force which, at a moderate calculation, would exceed 50,000 men. If the different military stations, which were so thickly scattered over the county, had all been garrisoned at the same time, they would have required a still greater number; but it is probable that, in proportion as the Roman power was established, many of them were abandoned. Into the ranks of the legions none but Roman citizens could claim the privilege of admittance; but the auxiliaries were composed of provincials who had not obtained the freedom of the city, or of barbarians, whom the fate of war or the prospect of wealth had drawn into the imperial service. These auxiliaries nearly equalled the legionaries in number. They were all foreigners; for though by the law of conscription the natives were compelled to serve, they were not permitted to remain in the island. At home they might have employed their swords in asserting the independence of their country, but on the continent they were unconnected with the inhabitants; for their subsistence, they depended on the bounty of the emperor; and far from combining to subvert, were always prepared to support the throne of their benefactor. What their number might be is uncertain; but there exists evidence to show that they amounted to at least six and twenty cohorts; that they were dispersed as far as Egypt and Armenia; and that some of them had acquired the surname of 'Invincible' from their valour. When the Roman conquests in Britain had reached their utmost extent, they were irregularly divided into six provinces, under the government of prætors appointed by the prefect. The long tract of land which runs from the western extremity of Cornwall to the South Foreland in Kent, is almost separated from the rest of the island by the arm of the sea now called the Bristol Channel, and by the course of the river Thames. This formed the most wealthy of the British provinces; and from priority of conquest, or proximity of situation, was called Britannia Prima. Britannia Secunda comprised the present principality of Wales, with the addition of that tract which is included by the Severn, in its circuitous course towards St George's Channel. Flavia Cæsariensis was the next in order, but first in extent. It was bounded on two sides by the former provinces, and on the two others by the Humber, the Don, and the German Ocean. This division included Northamptonshire and the neighbouring midland counties. To the north of the Humber lay the province of Maxima. It reached the Eden and the Tyne, and its opposite shores were washed by the western and eastern seas. Valentia followed, including the Scottish Lowlands as far as the Friths of Clyde and Forth. The tribes beyond the friths formed the sixth government of Vespasiana, divided from the independent Caledonians by the long chain of mountains which rises near Dumbarton, crosses the two counties of Athol and Badenoch, and stretches beyond the Frith of Murray. But the greater part of this province was wrested at so early a period from the dominion of Rome, that it is seldom mentioned by writers. To each of these divisions was allotted a separate government under the general superintendence of the prefect; but the interests of the rulers were most jealously separated from those of the provincials. Every Briton by his birth was excluded from all offices of trust and authority in his own country, and every holder of such office was prohibited by law from marrying a native, or purchasing property within the island. Throughout these provinces were scattered a great number of inhabited towns and military posts, the names of which are preserved in the itineraries of Richard and Antonius. They were partly of British and partly of Roman origin, and were divided into four classes, gradually descending in the scale of privilege and importance. The first rank was claimed by the colonies. It had long been the policy of Rome to reward her veterans with a portion of the lands of the conquered nations; and for this purpose those situations were generally selected which combined the double advantage of a fruitful soil and a military position. Each colony was a miniature representation of the parent city. It adopted the same customs, was governed by the same laws, and with similar titles conferred on its magistrates a similar authority. In Britain there were nine of these establishments; two of a civil and seven of a military description, viz.: Richborough, London, Colchester, Bath, Gloucester, Carleon, Chester, Lincoln, and Chesterfield, so that Northamptonshire did not possess a colony. In the constitution of the military colonies we discover a striking similitude to the feudal tenures of later ages. The veteran received his land from the bounty of the emperor, and was obliged to enrol his sons in the army as soon as they should attain to the years of manhood. Disgrace, imprisonment, and sometimes death, was the punishment of the youth who refused to serve the benefactor of his father and his family. The advantages enjoyed by the colonies were nearly equalled, in some respects surpassed, by the privileges of the municipal cities; the inhabitants of which were exempted from the operation of the imperial statutes, and with the title of Roman citizens possessed the right of choosing their own decuriones or magistrates, and of enacting their own laws. Privileges so valuable were reserved for the reward of extraordinary merit, and Britain could boast of only two municipia, Verulam and York. But the jus Latii, or Latian right, as it conferred more partial advantages, was bestowed with greater liberality. Ten of the British towns had obtained it from the favour of different emperors, and were indulged with the choice of their own magistrates, who, at the expiration of the year, resigned their offices, and claimed the freedom of Rome. That freedom was the great object of provincial ambition; and by the expedient of annual elections, it was successfully conferred on almost all the members of each Latin corporation. The towns possessing this privilege were Inverness, Perth, Dumbarton, Carlisle, Catterick, Blackrode, Cirencester, Salisbury, Caistor in Lincolnshire, and Slack in Longwood. The remaining towns were stipendiary, compelled, as the term imports, to pay tribute, and governed by Roman officers, who received their appointments from the prætor. These distinctions were, however, gradually abolished. Antoninus granted to every provincial of rank and opulence the freedom of the city. Caracalla extended the indulgence to the whole body of the natives."

Britain was now entirely subjected to the power of imperial Rome. Its people had irrecoverably lost their independence, and they soon lost their nationality when their new rulers began to divide Britain into departments. The very nations, many of whom had so bravely fought for their freedom, lost their names, and gradually merged into Roman subjects. A little more than thirty years after the recall of Agricola, the celebrated geographer, Ptolemy, published his survey of the world as then known, in which he has given us a very exact survey of the coasts of Britain and Ireland. From this account, compared with the allusions of other writers, it appears that the south-eastern part of the island, or the district now forming the county of Kent, was occupied by the Cantii, a large and influential tribe, which in Cæsar's time was divided among four chiefs or kings. To the west, the Regni held the modern counties of Sussex and Surrey, from the sea coast to the Thames. Still further west, the Belgæ occupied the country from the southern coast to the Bristol Channel, including nearly the whole of Hampshire, Wiltshire, and Somersetshire. The whole of the extensive district extending from the Belgæ to the extreme western point of the island, including Devonshire and Cornwall, was occupied by the Dumnonii or Damnonii. On the coast between the Dumnonii and the Belgæ, the smaller tribe of the Durotriges held the modern county of Dorset. On the other side of the Thames, extending northward to the Stour, and including the greater part of Middlesex, as well as Essex, lay the Trinobantes. To the north of the Stour dwelt the Icenî, extending over the counties of Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridge, and Huntingdon. The Coritavi possessed the present counties of Northampton, Leicester, Rutland, Derby, Nottingham, and Lincoln; and the south-eastern part of Yorkshire was held by the Parisi. Between the tribes last enumerated, in the counties of Buckingham, Bedford, and Hertford, lay the tribe called by Ptolemy the Catyuchlani, and by others Catuvellani. Another name for this tribe, or for a division of it, was the Cassi. West of these were the Attrebates, in Berkshire; and still further west were the Dobuni, in the counties of Oxford and Gloucester. All these tribes are supposed to be later settlers than the tribes of the interior, those nearest the coast being always, of course, the more recent colonies. The interior of the island northwards was occupied by the Brigantes, who held the extensive districts, difficult of approach on account of the mountains and woods, extending from the Humber and Mersey to the present borders of Scotland. This extensive tribe seems to have included several smaller ones. The Brigantes are believed to have been the original inhabitants of the island, who had been driven northward by successive invasions and settlements, and they appear to have been the least civilized tribe of South Britain; their wild independence was encouraged and protected by the nature of the country they inhabited. Wales was also inhabited by a primitive population. The northern counties, Flint, Denbigh, Montgomery, Merioneth, and Caernarvon, with the island of Anglesea, was the territory of the Ordovices. The south-eastern counties of Cardigan, Caermarthen, and Pembroke, were held by the Demetæ. The still more celebrated tribe of the Silures inhabited the modern counties of Hereford, Radnor, Brecknock, Monmouth, and Glamorgan. Between these and the Brigantes lay the Cornabii or Carnabii, who occupied the present counties of Warwick, Worcester, Stafford, Salop, and Chester, and perhaps the adjoining part of Flintshire.

For many years after Agricola's administration, Britain is little mentioned by the Roman historians. Their silence is emphatic proof that it was generally peaceful and prosperous. In the year 120, the emperor Hadrian visited Britain, and corrected several abuses which had grown up in the administration of the island. It is clear that the incursions of the northern clans into the civilised and rich districts to the south were becoming frequent and formidable. The cautious and pacific Hadrian, instead of attacking and punishing the marauders in their own territories, or even repairing the fortified lines of Agricola, made an inner and more easily defensible barrier against the Caledonians, by building a massive wall across the island, from the Tyne to the Solway Firth, an extent of seventy miles, accompanied on its southern side by an earthen vallum and a deep ditch, and fortified with a formidable series of twenty-three towns, or stations, with intermediate mile-castles and watch-towers. But none of these precautions effectually checked the northern tribes. The warfare on the border continued. Still, Roman Britain advanced in prosperity and power; and when we reach the period in the history of the Roman empire when insurrections and civil wars became almost incessant, and when competitors for the supreme power sprang up wherever there was a daring general or a disorderly body of soldiery, we shall find Britain exerting no slight influence in determining who should be the emperor of the Roman world. On the death of Pertinax, in the year 193, the Prætorian guards at Rome, who murdered him, sold the sovereignty to Didius Julianus. Clodius Albinus, who then commanded in Britain, refused to acknowledge a Cæsar thus infamously created. The Roman forces in the island and the provincials gave their support to Albinus, who, though he did not assume the imperial title, was in effect for four years a British sovereign, the head of an independent state. But the Syrian legions compelled their general, Niger, to assume the purple, and the Illyrian legions made an emperor of their general, Severus. In the civil war which followed, Severus was successful. While he was engaged in destroying Didius and Niger, he pretended to court the friendship of Albinus, conferred upon him the title of Cæsar, and, making him nominally his associate in the empire, caused money to be coined in his name, and statues to be erected in his honour. But Albinus discovered, too late, with what unrelenting ferocity Severus had determined to sweep every rival from his path. Albinus raised large forces among the Britons, and, joining them to the small Roman force that he had under him as governor of this island, he crossed over to Gaul, and advanced upon the approaching army of Severus. They met near Lyons, and the historian who describes the encounter, bears witness to the valour of the British troops. Albinus was captured and beheaded, and Severus was left the sole and undisputed emperor of Rome.

The withdrawal of the legions must have weakened Britain, and the loss of the native levies, which Albinus had led to perish in Gaul, must have increased this weakness. The lieutenants of Severus, whom he sent to command in Britain, were unable to check the Caledonian and Mæatian assailants of the Roman provinces, and they even stooped to the disgraceful and futile expedient of buying off for a time the hostility of the invaders. In the year 208, Severus came here in person, and, though it was late in the season, he drew together the armies from different parts, and with those he had brought with him concentrated a vast force, and at once marched to meet the enemy. The latter were astonished at the rapidity of his movements, and, quickly ceasing their hostilities, they sent envoys, who met him, perhaps, at Eburacum (York), begging for peace, and offering to make amends for their previous offences. But Severus had come too far to be so easily satisfied, and he was resolved to deprive them of the power of further hostility. He detained their ambassadors for some time, and then sent them away without any answer to their demands. The emperor established his court at Eburacum, the second city of the island, and the station of the sixth legion. He there made extensive preparations for the war, and at the beginning of the year 209, he put his forces in motion. With true Roman perseverance he advanced to the extreme end of Caledonia, forming a military road as he proceeded, which he evidently designed for use in future campaigns. The sufferings of the Roman army in this march were horrible, though they did not fight a single battle, or even see an enemy in battle array before them. The Caledonians harassed the flanks and rear of the invading forces, while toil, famine, and disease thinned the Roman ranks more fearfully than the sword. Severus is said to have lost 50,000 men in this march. But still the Roman emperor, though more than sixty years old, and so ill that he was obliged to be carried in a litter, moved his legions forward, cutting down forests, levelling hills, making marshes passable, and constructing bridges over rivers. At last the Caledonians offered to submit to Rome. Severus received their submission, granted them terms of peace, and led his army back to Eburacum, where he passed the winter. With the spring of the year 210, came tidings of a fresh Caledonian inroad, and Severus, in his fury, gave orders for the Roman army to be concentrated, and to begin another northern march, not to subdue but to exterminate the barbarians. But the hand of death was on the emperor himself. Before the campaign could be opened, Severus died at York (A.D. 211), leaving the conduct and completion of the Caledonian war to his son, Caracalla, who was with him, and who, according to some accounts, hastened his father's death. Caracalla was eager to return to Rome, and concluding a hasty treaty with the northern tribes, set out for that city.

A long period passed over, and many emperors sat on the throne, before Britain is again mentioned by the ancient historians. The government seems to have been carried on with silent tranquillity, which leaves us to suppose that the island prospered, and that it was visited by no great dangers or troubles to excite attention at Rome. But the ravages of the northern tribes never entirely ceased, and towards the close of the third century we find a new scourge afflicting the Romanised portion of the island. The fierce and adventurous warriors of the maritime region of Northern Germany now began to infest the coasts of Britain and Gaul with their piratical squadrons. The Roman writers call them "Saxons," and it is probable that Saxons from the Elbe and the Eyder, and the adjacent regions, supplied many of the leaders and the crews of these dreaded fleets; but, without doubt, Franks, Frieslanders, Angles, Jutes, and even Danes and Norsemen, participated in their enterprises and shared in their plunder. These attacks became so frequent and destructive that a Roman officer was especially appointed by the emperors Diocletian and Maximian to collect a fleet, and to protect the coasts of Britain and Gaul from the pirates. This officer was named Carausius, by birth a Batavian, and a man of high courage and ability. The power which he acquired and wielded in his new station excited the jealousy of the emperors, but Carausius anticipated their designs against him by assuming the imperial purple, and openly claiming and exercising the rights of an independent sovereign over Britain. Having thus proclaimed himself the equal and colleague of Diocletian and Maximian, the talents of Carausius enabled him to retain his authority during a period of seven years. History has left us no account of how his government was carried on, but he was evidently a man of very extraordinary abilities, for it is said that, during this period, he not only set the power of Rome at defiance, but that he protected his subjects from the Saxons, and that he compelled the barbarians of the north to keep within the limits of their woods and marshes. He was the first, and, for a long time, he was the last ruler of this island that discerned the great truth that Britain, to be strong and free, must have the sovereignty of the seas. Many of the still extant coins of Carausius have the figure of a ship on the obverse, as the best emblem of a British monarch's power.

Diocletian and Maximian made several attempts to break the power of Carausius, but he set the emperors at defiance, and with his fleets held secure mastery of the seas round the coasts of Gaul and Spain, as far as the entrance of the Mediterranean. In 292 the emperors strengthened their government by the appointment of two Cæsars, Constantius and Galerius; and Constantius, to whose lot the provinces of the west fell, prepared immediately to reduce the island chieftain. Constantius having collected a very powerful army, made a rapid march to Boulogne, which he captured, obtaining possession also of a large squadron of the fleet of Carausius that lay in the harbour. But while he was preparing for the more difficult task of attacking Carausius in his island kingdom, the emperors were freed from their formidable rival by the dagger of a domestic traitor. Allectus, the friend and confidential minister of Carausius, conspired against his master and slew him, and for three years reigned over Britain in his stead. At last the troops of Constantius effected a landing, and, carrying all before them, soon made their commander the master of Britain. Constantius resigned all the dominion that had been assigned to him southward of the Pyrenees, and contented himself with the rule of Gaul and Britain. He generally resided in this island, the city of York being his favourite capital and seat of government. His mild and prosperous reign here, from 297 to 306, was only troubled by the persecution of the Christians (303-305), in which he was compelled to take part by the orders of the emperors. In the year 305 Diocletian and Maximian resigned the imperial power, leaving the empire to Galerius and Constantius; the latter died at York in 306, and on his death his son, the celebrated Constantine, was saluted as Cæsar and Augustus by the troops, and willingly recognised by the British provincials. Constantine remained resident in our island, though his acts are not recorded, until, six years afterwards, he was called away to enter upon the contest which ended in making him sole ruler of the Roman world. The events of his long reign (A.D. 306-337), the civil wars, his reuniting the whole Roman Empire under his sole sovereignty, his transfer of the seat of Imperial Government from Rome to Constantinople, his long toleration and ultimate conversion to the Christian faith, all these things are matters of general history. Under him, and the princes of his family who ruled after him until 363, Britain appears to have been generally tranquil and prosperous, though occasionally troubled by the misgovernment of the imperial prefects, and by the attacks of the northern tribes, and also by those of the Saxons.

From this period the Caledonians and the Mæatæ no longer appear in history. The Picts and Scots make, so to speak, their first appearance. The Scots were a colony, or rather a series of colonies, from Ireland, who, in the third and following centuries, came over to North Britain, where they ultimately acquired such prominence as to give their name to the land. The Picts appear to have been a Caledonian tribe, who, in the frequent feuds between clan and clan, grew strong at the expense of the Mæatæ. In the year 368 Theodosius commanded the Roman forces in Britain, and completely freed the civilised part of the island from the Scottish and Pictish invaders. He even restored to Roman rule the province which included the districts that are now the Scottish Lowlands, as far as the Firths of Clyde and Forth. This province had long been abandoned by the Roman rulers of Britain as utterly untenable against the tribes of the neighbouring Highlands, but Theodosius reannexed it to the empire, and gave it the name of Valentia, in honour of the then reigning emperors Valens and Valentinian. The government of Theodosius was the last period of order and prosperity for Britain as part of the Roman empire. In 383, a general named Maximus, who had long served in this island, and who (according to some chronicles and traditions) was a Briton by birth, and married to a British princess, was compelled by his own mutinous soldiery to declare himself emperor. He did not remain long in Britain after assuming this title; but his brief reign was pernicious to this country by draining it of the bravest part of its population. Maximus determined to dethrone Gratian, the then recognised Emperor of the West, and to make himself master of Italy, Gaul, and Spain. His popularity among the British enabled him to call to his standard large numbers of the native youth, and with these, and nearly all the regular troops that had been stationed here, Maximus invaded the Continent. He was at first successful. Gratian fled from him and was slain. Theodosius, Emperor of the East (son of the Theodosius whose exploits in Britain have been mentioned), for a time acknowledged Maximus as his co-equal in empire. He reigned with dignity, and severely chastised the Picts and Scots, who attempted to renew their inroads. With a view probably to ensure his hold upon Gaul, Maximus gave to a British officer named Conan large territories in Armorica, the modern Brittany, to be held by Conan, and the British warriors who followed him, on condition of rendering military service to Maximus and his successors in the wars. Maximus perished soon after this grant in an attempt to conquer Italy; but the British colonists in Brittany retained their settlements there, and were joined by many others of their fellow-countrymen who had formed part of the forces of Maximus. These Britons appear never to have revisited their country, and the native writers lament the defenceless state in which it was left by their absence, exposed to the insults of its inveterate enemies. This favourable opportunity did not escape the vigilance of the Picts and Scots. They experienced only a feeble resistance from the small force that remained in the island, and returned home laden with the plunder of the provinces. Their repeated inroads impelled the Britons more than once to beg for assistance from the commanders of the Roman troops in Gaul, and temporary aid from that quarter was sometimes obtained. The last Roman officer that came here not only defeated and drove back the Picts, but repaired the old fortified lines of Severus, and the watch-towers along the coast. He is said also to have laboured hard to teach the British leaders sufficient military and engineering skill to guard and maintain these barriers against their enemies. Then, leaving behind him a large supply of arms and military stores for the Britons to use in their own defence, the imperial officer embarked with his legion, and the Roman eagle finally disappeared from Britain 473 years after the invasion of Julius Cæsar.

In the course of the long period during which Britain formed part of the Roman empire, its original Celtic population must have been largely tinged by the admixture of many foreign elements. When a province was won by the Roman arms, its permanent possession was secured not only by posting troops in it, but, in a far greater degree, by planting in it colonies of Roman citizens, which formed the best outworks and strongholds of Roman power. (See page 23.) Besides the colonists there were adventurers and speculators of every class from Rome, and from other countries subject to Rome, who swarmed into the conquered land, especially if fertile and well situated for commercial operations. Some came for traffic, some as place-hunters, some as money-lenders, and some as teachers. In those centuries of the domination of Rome during which Britain was subdued and held by her, the Romans who received settlements in the regular colonies were chiefly veteran soldiers from the legions. But a practice grew up of rewarding not only the legionaries, but the barbarian of the auxiliary cohorts, by grants of land; and from the reign of Severus to the downfall of the imperial power, large districts of territory were from time to time assigned to bodies of soldiery, on terms much resembling the feudal tenures of Europe in the Middle Ages. In this way large bodies of foreign races, who had served under the Roman standards, settled in this country, and, indeed, when we consider how the legions themselves were recruited during the last ages of the Roman empire, and how often the legions themselves were filled up by the levies of barbarians on the frontier—when we consider this, we shall be able to form some idea of the diversity, as well as of the amount, of the new streams of population that were brought into the island during the three centuries and a half of Roman rule. But the influence of Roman conquest upon Britain is not to be estimated merely by the extent to which it displaced the old and introduced a new population. The superior effects of Roman civilisation are to be carefully considered and remembered, whatever we may think of the relative numbers of those who imposed it, and of those by whom it was adopted. The Roman roads, the Roman encampments, the massive remnants of Roman architecture, the Roman tessellated pavements, the Roman sculptures, the Roman weapons, and the numerous Roman articles for domestic use and ornament, that are still found in Northamptonshire, as well as in almost every county in Britain, would be of themselves sufficient evidence that a powerful, a wealthy, and highly civilised nation once dwelt here; and we know from history how eagerly and successfully the Britons in every part of the country—what is now Northamptonshire included—learned and imitated the arts and refinements of their conquerors. It may be deserving of remark, that great improvements in agriculture must also have been effected here by the Romans, and that the country must have been enriched by them with the introduction of many vegetables and fruits, and of modes of agriculture and horticulture.

The principal Roman roads passing through Northamptonshire were two—the Watling Street, and the Ermin Street. The Watling Street, which entered the county near Stoney Stratford, passed on to Lactodorum, whose site is occupied by the modern Towcester, then turned slightly north to Weedon, at which point a cross-road turned off, leading to what some have considered two towns, Isannavatia and Benaventia, which have been placed at Burnt Walls and Burrow Hill, ancient sites near Daventry, though others have imagined it to be one town under two different names. The main road continued its course from Weedon in a straight line across an open country to the neighbourhood of the modern town of Lilbourne, near which it crossed the Avon. Here stood a town called Tripontium, which must have possessed something remarkable in its bridge or bridges across the river. Tumuli and earthworks scattered over the country around, again mark it as a place of some importance. The Watling Street then enters Leicestershire. The Ermin Street, coming from Essex through Cambridgeshire, enters Northamptonshire at Caistor in the eastern part of the county, and, crossing the Welland, directs its course to Lincolnshire. The Roman stations in the county, in addition to those above mentioned, are Brinavis at Chipping Warden, and Durobrivæ at Caistor. There were encampments at Arbury Hill, Barrow Dyke, Castle Dyke, Chester, Guilsborough, Huntsborough, Rainsborough, Sulgrave, and Wallow Bank; and numerous indications of Roman residences or posts may be traced along the valley of the Nene. At Cotterstock, a little below Oundle, at Drayton House, Lowick, near Thrapston, and at Woodford, just above Thrapston, all near or upon the left bank of the river, have been discovered tessellated pavements and other antiquities. At Ringstead, near Thrapston, and Chester, near Wellingborough, both on the right bank of the Nene, are the remains of camps or posts. It seems not unlikely that several of these posts belonged to the line of defence formed by Ostorius against the yet unconquered tribes to the northward. Durobrivæ may have been the first station above the fens, which formed of themselves a sufficient barrier on that side. The stations or forts at Ringstead, Chester, Weedon-Beck, and Arbury Hill, were doubtless the work of Ostorius; and the post of Isannavatia and Benaventia, we may reasonably suppose to have been fortified by him. At Isannavatia, or at Arbury Hill, at the head of the Nene, the line of defence probably turned southwards, past Brinavis, at Chipping Warden (the bank and ditch of which there are traces in that neighbourhood may have formed part of it), but at what point it turned westwards and joined the Severn, can scarcely be determined. Rainsbury camp, in the south part of the county, was probably a post on this line. A full description of these stations and encampments will be found in the histories of the parishes in which they are respectively situated.

The Christian religion was preached in Britain at a very early period, but, at the distance of so many ages, it is impossible to discover by whom. Tradition gives the name of Lucius as a British king who was a believer in the gospel, and tells us that he sent to Rome Fagan and Dervan to be more perfectly instructed in the Christian faith, and that these envoys having received ordination from Pope Eleutherius, at their return, under the influence of their patron, increased the number of the proselytes by their preaching, and established the British after the model of the continental Churches. But independently of the authority of tradition, we have undoubted proof that the believers were numerous, and that a regular hierarchy had been instituted before the close of the third century. For by contemporary writers the Church of Britain is always put on an equality with the Churches of Spain and Gaul; and in one of the most early of the western councils, that of Arles, in 314, we meet with the names of three British bishops, Eborius of York, Restitutus of London, and Adelphius of Lincoln. The first persecutions of the Christians in the Roman empire had not extended to Britain, but Constantius, of whom we have spoken at page 32, received peremptory orders to destroy the Christian churches in the countries which he governed, and to punish with death all who refused to worship the gods of Rome. His just and humane disposition made him reluctant to take part in these cruelties, but he could not venture to suppress the imperial edicts, or to wholly disobey them. He dismissed from his service the members of his household who refused to obey Cæsar by renouncing their faith, but he also dismissed those who thought they could secure their temporal interests by apostasy. Constantius told these renegades that there could be no fidelity towards man in those who had proved traitors to their God. But however much the prudence and humanity of Constantius might temper the persecution where his personal influence extended, he could not repress the fanatical zeal with which many of the inferior and local Roman magistrates and officers put into execution the sanguinary commands of the Roman emperors. Many Christians perished in this island during the last two years of the reign of Diocletian and Maximian; and the memory of the first British martyr, Alban, has been perpetrated by chronicle, by legend, by local tradition, and by the town that yet bears his sainted name. On the resignation of the purple by Diocletian and Maximian, Constantius and Galerius, as we have seen before, assumed the title of emperors; and the freedom of religious worship was restored to the Christian inhabitants of the island. From this period we hear no more of the British Church till the time of St Augustine.

We have seen Britain, after three centuries and a half of Roman domination, abandoned by her conquerors, and left to rule and defend herself. But when a nation is disunited and weak, self-rule means anarchy, and self-defence means exposure to plunder and subjection. For about fifty years after the Romans left this country, it was an almost helpless prey to the Picts and Scots; and when, at last, the Britons in their misery called in the Angles and Saxons from beyond the German Ocean to the rescue, these auxiliaries effected in their own behalf a conquest of the land they came to save. The Saxon princes established themselves monarchs in England, where their descendants have remained during the subsequent fourteen centuries. These Angles and Saxons are described by Ptolemy, the first writer who mentions them, as of Scythian descent. They were certainly a branch of the great Teutonic class of the Aryan family of nations.

As early as the middle of the second century, we find the Saxons in possession of that part of the modern Duchy of Holstein which lies between the mouths of the Eyder and the Elbe. The Baltic side of the Duchy, which still bears the name of Anglen, was the country of the Angles; and the home of the Jutes or Jutlanders, stretches indefinitely northwards. Two centuries later, these tribes, under the general name of Saxons, possessed the whole country between the Eyder and the Rhine. In the middle of the fifth century, the time of their first obtaining a footing in Britain, their territory embraced the whole of the land washed by the German Ocean, including both East and West Friesland, Holland, and Zealand, besides Westphalia, Saxony, and the countries farther north. The part of these regions in which the Saxons had their home when first they figured in the world's history, consists of numerous islands, and of a shore marked by intricate windings, creeks, and bays, exposed, moreover, to all the influences of northern tempests and cold. Everything there seemed to combine to ensure maritime proficiency and a hardy spirit of adventure. The Angles and Saxons became all that the physical geography of their country would lead us to expect. Steady industry they despised. Their swords were their only trust. Plunder by sea and land was their chief vocation. Band after band, as they subdued districts, settled in them, compelling the vanquished to cultivate the ground for them, while they sallied forth themselves from season to season in search of new adventures and new spoil. Every man had his chief, to whom he promised fidelity, and when an enterprise was of sufficient importance to embrace several chiefs, one was invested with supreme authority for the occasion. For arms they used the bow, the sword, the spear, the battle-axe, and a club with spikes projecting from a knob at the end. The last three of these weapons were of great bulk and weight. The men of the Saxon race were generally above the middle stature, powerfully made, and could make their war-weapons fall with terrible effect upon an enemy. They wore helmets, the metal of which descended to the ear on each side, and sometimes sent a line of protection down the centre of the forehead. Of course, these descriptions apply to the Saxons of the fifth century—the earlier adventurers of this race possessed little of this martial presence. In those earlier times, the vessels of the Saxons were mostly of lath and osier work, overlaid with skins; but in later times the chiule, or keel, of the Saxon pirate vied in spaciousness and strength with the Roman galley. So armed, and with such means of voyaging at their command, the Saxon sea-kings, as they were often called, became the terror of their time, especially along the coasts of Gaul and Britain.

Long before Saxon England was heard of, both Roman Britain and Belgium had their well-known "Saxon shore," that is, coast lands so called in consequence of their special exposure to attacks from these freebooters. In the fifth century the strength, the dexterity, the fearlessness, and the cruelty of the Saxons had combined to make them the most formidable enemy of civilisation north of the Rhine. Constantine the Great, Theodosius, and Stilicho made vigorous efforts to check the incursions of the Saxons in their time, and to put down their piracies. But as the strength of the empire diminished, the audacity of these marauders increased. In fact, they made rapid progress in the art of war by means of the practice into which they were called by such attacks. The event to be desired was, that their successes should give them opportunities of settlement, and an inducement to relinquish a mode of life so pregnant with evil to themselves and to humanity. Their characteristics were such as to ensure them a foremost place in the race of civilisation, should circumstances ever dispose them to such pursuits. When they landed in this country, the Saxon tribes worshipped a number of gods, foremost among whom was Odin, or Woden. Their ideas of happiness after death were in keeping with their other characteristics. They aspired to the brutal heaven of Valhalla, there to eat of that fabulous boar whose flesh never diminished, and drink mead out of the skulls of their enemies. Those who fell not in the red ranks of battle dwelt for ever, after death, with Hela the Terrible, in the Hall of Cowards; and the only prayers they offered up were that they might die in the combat, and pass at once, while their wounds were still fresh, to the halls of their heathen heaven. And now we find another change of religion in Northamptonshire, a fresh system of idolatry. The Scandinavian deities supplanted the gods of the Pantheon; and thus, instead of Jupiter and Mercury, temples and altars are raised to Woden and Thor. These, then, were the men whom the Britons called in to assist them in their dire necessity.

The Saxon conquest of Britain differed, in several important respects, from every other settlement of a Teutonic people within the limits of the Roman empire. Everywhere else the invaders gradually adopted the language and religion of the conquered. If the conquerors were heathens at the time of their settlement, they gradually adopted Christianity. If they had already adopted Christianity in its Arian form, they gradually changed their heretical creed for that of the Catholic Church. Everywhere but in Britain the invaders gradually learned to speak some form, however corrupt, of the language of Rome. Everywhere but in Britain the invaders respected the laws and arts of Rome. Everywhere but in Britain the local divisions and local nomenclature survived the conquest. Nearly every Gaulish tribe mentioned by Cæsar has left its name still to be traced on the map of modern France. In Britain everything is different. The conquering Saxons entered Britain as heathens, and, after their settlement in the island, they still retained the heathen worship of their fathers. They were at last converted to Christianity, but it was not by the Christians whom they found in the island, but by a special mission from Rome, the common centre of Christianity. The bishoprics and ecclesiastical divisions of Britain are not, as in Gaul, a heritage of Roman times, representing Roman political divisions. Our episcopal sees are foundations of later date than the Anglo-Saxon conquest of Britain, and the limits of the dioceses answer, not to anything Welsh or Roman, but to the boundaries of ancient British kingdoms or principalities. And, as the Saxons in England retained their religion, so they also retained their language, and retained it far more permanently. A few Celtic, and still fewer Latin words, found their way into English from the first day of the conquest, and a somewhat larger stock of Latin ecclesiastical terms was naturally brought in by the Christian missionaries. But with these two very small classes of exceptions, the language retained its purely Low Dutch character down to that great infusion of Romanee words into its vocabulary, which was a result, though not an immediate result, of the Norman conquest. In Britain, too, the arts of Rome perished, as did also its laws, which exercised no influence upon our insular jurisprudence, until, in times after the Norman conquest, the Civil Law was introduced as something utterly foreign. In England again, as is seen in Northamptonshire, and every other county, the local nomenclature is throughout essentially Teutonic. A few great cities and a few great natural objects still retain names older than the Saxon conquest; but the great mass of the towns and villages of England bear names which were given them by the Angles and Saxons of the fifth and sixth centuries, or by the Danes of the ninth and tenth. In short, though the extirpation of a nation is an impossibility, there is every reason to believe that the Celtic inhabitants of those parts of Britain which had become English at the end of the sixth century had been as nearly extirpated as a nation can be. The women would, doubtless, be largely spared, but as far as the male sex is concerned, we may feel sure that death, emigration, or personal slavery, were the only alternatives which the vanquished Britons found at the hands of the Saxons. The nature of the small Celtic element in the English language would of itself prove the fact. Nearly every Welsh word which has found its way into English expresses some small domestic matter, such as women and slaves would be concerned with; nearly all the words belonging to the nobler occupations, all the terms of government and war, and nearly all the terms of agriculture, are thoroughly Teutonic. In short, everywhere but in Britain an intruding nation sat down by the side of an elder nation, and gradually lost itself in its mass. In Britain, so far as such a process is possible, the intruding nation altogether supplanted the elder nation. The process of the conquest again, its gradual character, the way in which the land was won, bit by bit, by hard fighting, was of itself widely different from the Gothic settlements in Spain or Italy. This peculiar character of the Saxon conquest would of itself favour the complete displacement of the former inhabitants, by giving the remnant of the vanquished in any district the means of escape to those districts which were yet unconquered.

This remarkable contrast between the conquest of Britain by the Saxons and the other Teutonic settlements within the empire, seems to be due to two main causes. The position of Britain differed from that of Italy, or Gaul, or Spain, and the position of the Angles and Saxons differed from that of the Goths, or Burgundians, or even Franks. The event alone might seem to show that the Roman occupation of Britain had not brought about so complete a Romanisation of the country as had taken place in Gaul or Spain. The evidence of language looks the same way. In Spain and in Gaul the ante-Roman languages survive only in a few out-of-the-way corners: the speech of the land is Roman. But in Britain, whatever is not English is not Roman but Celtic. The surviving Britons retained, and still retain, their own native language, and not the language of their Roman conquerors. It would seem that the Roman occupation of Britain was, after all, very superficial, and that, when the legions were withdrawn, things largely fell back into their ancient barbarism. The Saxons, therefore, found a more stubborn, because a more truly national, resistance in Britain, than their Teutonic kinsmen found elsewhere. But, on the other hand, they did not find that perfect and striking fabric of Roman laws, manners, and arts, which elsewhere impressed the minds of the conquerors, and changed them from destroyers into disciples. Again, the Goths above all, and the Franks in some degree, had long been familiar with Rome in peace and in war. They had resisted Roman attempts at conquest, and they repaid them in kind. They had served in the Roman armies, and had received lands and honours and offices as the reward of their services. They were, in short, neither wholly ignorant of Roman civilisation nor utterly hostile to it. But the Saxon people came from lands where the Roman standard had never been seen. They had never felt the charm which led Gothic kings to glory in the title of Roman generals, and which led them to respect and preserve the fount of Roman civilisation, and the monuments of Roman art. The Saxons appeared in the isle of Britain purely as destroyers: nowhere else in Western Europe were the existing men and the existing institutions so utterly swept away. They wiped out everything Celtic and everything Roman. A more fearful blow never fell upon any nation than the landing of the Angles and Saxons was to the Celts of Britain.

Our authorities in relation to the first settlement of the Saxons in England are two fold—Saxon and British. Putting the two accounts together, it is easy, we think, to see that the two brothers, Hengist and Horsa, who are said to have led the first invaders, must have been real persons, and that there must be an historical substance in what is reported concerning them. Hengist is said to have been the first Saxon ruler of Kent. He led his Jutes there about the year 449, but does not appear to have become sovereign of Kent before 473. His direct descendants reigned over a land which, as the nearest portion of Britain to the Continent, has ever been the first to receive every foreign immigration, but which, notwithstanding, prides itself to this day on its specially Teutonic usages, which have vanished elsewhere. Sussex, the kingdom of the South Saxons, was the second state established, and was founded by Ella in 496. The state of the West Saxons dates from 519: it embraced Surrey, Berks, Dorset, Somerset, and Devon, with parts of Hampshire and Cornwall. Cerdic was the founder of this sovereignty. North of the Thames lay the three great kingdoms of the Angles. One of these, probably the most purely Teutonic realm in Britain, occupied the great peninsula, or rather island, between the fens and the German Ocean, which received from them the name of East Anglia. Erkenwin laid the foundation of the state of the East Saxons, which comprehended Essex, Middlesex, and the southern part of Hertfordshire. This kingdom commenced in 542. Far to he north, from the Humber to the Forth, lay the great realm of the Northumbrians, sometimes united under a single prince, sometimes divided by the Tyne or the Tees into the two kingdoms of Bernicia and Deira. Both these kingdoms have a large sea-board, but they are not, like Wessex, distinctly attributed to a personal founder from beyond sea. The first recorded king of the Northumbrians is Ida, who began to reign in 547: the first recorded king of the East Angles is Offa, who began to reign in 571. These dates give the beginnings of the kingdoms, but they do not give the beginnings of the Anglo-Saxon settlements in those countries. What Ida and Offa did was apparently to unite districts ruled by several independent, or at most confederated, Ealdormen into a single kingdom. Meanwhile, in the middle of Britain, a power equal to any of the others was growing up, in which the same process is still more plainly to be discerned. The kingdom of the Mercians, the march or border land against the Welsh, appears at the end of the sixth century as a powerful state, but it has no distinctly recorded founder, no distinctly recorded date of origin. It seems to have grown up from the joining together of a great number of small principalities, probably of much more varied origin than the different portions of the other kingdoms. The prevailing blood was Anglian; but it is certain that the Mercian kingdom was considerably enlarged at the expense of the Saxons. The West Saxon conquests north of the Avon, the principalities of the Heviccas and the Magesætas (the Magesætas answer to the present county of Hereford, the Heviccas to the counties of Worcester, Gloucester, and part of Warwick), were cut off from the West Saxon body, and were constrained, along with all the other states of mid-England, to admit the Mercian supremacy. Northamptonshire, of course, formed part of the Mercian kingdom. Mercia, throughout its history, appears far more divided than any other part of England, the result, no doubt of its peculiar origin. But it must not be supposed that the other kingdoms formed compact or centralised monarchies. Wessex was a union of several kindred principalities, each having its own ealdorman or under-king, though united under the supreme chief. At one time five West Saxon kings appear in a single battle. So in Kent there were kings of East and West Kent—a fact which has left its memory in our ecclesiastical arrangements of the present day. No other English shire contains two bishoprics: the two sees of Canterbury and Rochester still bear witness to the existence of two distinct kingdoms within the present shire. So in East Anglia, the two divisions of the race—the North and the South Folk—have left their almost unaltered names to two modern counties. But in these cases the principalities seem to have been formed by separate, though kindred, detachments of colonists, each of them ruled by a prince of the one royal house. In Wessex each successive conquest from the Welsh seems to have formed a new principality; but the national unity of the West Saxon people was never lost, and it does not appear that any but princes of the line of Cerdic ever ruled within their borders. But in Mercia a crowd of wholly independent principalities seem to have been gradually united under one common rule—a type of the fate which the whole island was destined to undergo, though not at the hands of Mercia. The year 586 is the earliest date we have of the appearance of Mercia. It will be seen from these statements that more than a century and a half intervened between the founding of the first of the English states and the last. It will be seen, moreover, that the conquests of the Saxons and Angles followed the exact course which had been taken by the Romans. From the coast of Kent the invaders gradually spread themselves southward, northward, and westward. Where the Romans had been the most ascendant, there the Saxons and Angles gained their chief and earliest victories. Thus did the portion of this island, since known by the name of England, pass into the hands of the people from whom it has derived its name.

Besides these Saxon kingdoms there were still many important districts yet retained by the old inhabitants. Cornwall was long held by the Britons, or the Welsh, as the English called and still call them. The parts which we call North and South Wales were British; and further to the north lay Cumbria and Strathclyde, also British. The Caledonian Highlands were ranged over by the Scottish and Pictish tribes, of whose struggles with one another we know nothing beyond the fact that such struggles took place, and that the result was in favour of the Scots.

Of the British chieftains who signalised their valour against the Saxon invaders, we possess only an imperfect catalogue. The first is Aurelius Ambrosius, who is described as of Roman origin, the son of parents that had worn the purple, a brave, faithful, and unassuming warrior. He seems to have fought against Hengist, and to have perished in a domestic quarrel. The fame of Natanleod has been preserved by the Saxon Chronicle. He was the opponent of Cerdic, and, falling in battle, left his name to a considerable district in Hampshire. The territory of Urien, and the scene of his prowess, lay in the north. Ida and his Angles experienced in him a formidable antagonist, but the Briton, after a long and in some instances a successful struggle, was deprived of life by the jealousy of a confederate chieftain named Morcant. The fame of Arthur has eclipsed that of all his contemporaries. Yet if we divest his memory of that fictitious glory which has been thrown round it by the imagination of the bards and minstrels, he will sink into equal obscurity with his fellows. We know neither the period when he lived, nor the district over which he reigned. He is said to have fought and to have gained twelve battles. In most of these, from the names of the places, he seems to have been opposed to the Angles in Lincolnshire, from the last at Mount Badon, to the Saxons under Cerdic or Cynric. This, whether it was fought under Arthur or not, was a splendid and useful victory, which for forty years checked the further progress of the invaders. Perhaps when the reader has been told that Arthur was a British chieftain, that he fought many battles, that he was murdered by his nephew, and was buried at Glastonbury, where his remains were discovered in the reign of Henry II., he will have learned all that can be ascertained at the present day respecting that celebrated warrior, the hero of Tennyson's "Idylls of the King," and of many other poems both ancient and modern.

As we have seen above, the Saxon conquerors had established eight independent kingdoms in the island, though, from the frequent union of Bernicia and Deira under the same head, they have generally been considered as only seven. The history of their different dynasties would perplex and fatigue both the writer and the reader. A sufficiently accurate notion of the period which precedes the preponderance of the West Saxon kings may be obtained by attending to the reigns of the more powerful monarchs, for there was frequently one among the number whose authority was acknowledged by all or by most of his contemporaries. The title by which he was designated was Bretwalda, the wielder or sovereign of Britain. Whether he obtained it by the influence of his power, or received it from the spontaneous suffrage of his equals, is doubtful, nor do we know whether any duties or prerogatives were attached to his dignity. By Bede the title is given to seven of the Saxon princes; other historians add an eighth. To their reigns may with propriety be referred the principal events which occurred during the period that England was under their government and control.

We have already spoken of the descent of Ella on the southern coast, and his subsequent success. It is difficult to conjecture by what means he acquired the precedence among the confederate chieftains, but he is named as the first Bretwalda. The kingdom of Sussex, which he founded, was the smallest and the least powerful of the English States. This distinction may perhaps have been conceded to some pre-eminence which he enjoyed in his native county, or to some exploit, the memory of which has perished. Ethelbert, the fourth King of Kent, appears to have been the first to disturb the harmony which had united the Saxon princes. At the age of sixteen he was taught to believe that the dignity of Bretwalda belonged to him as the representative of Hengist. Under this impression he led an army against Ceawlin, King of Wessex, and grandson of Cerdic, by whom he was defeated at Wimbledon. Ceawlin afterwards directed his arms against the Britons, who were obliged to acknowledge his power, and he assumed the title of Bretwalda, which title appears to have been recognised by both Britons and Saxons. The disgrace which had at first clouded the young Ethelbert, King of Kent, was afterwards dispersed by the glory of a long and prosperous reign. At the death of Ceawlin, in 593, he had acquired, by what means we are not informed, the dignity of Bretwalda, and his authority was admitted by all the English princes south of the Humber.

About the year 590, when the southern part of Northumbria was an independent kingdom named Deira, some English children were obtained thence by foreign slave-dealers, and were exposed for sale in the market-place at Rome. Abbot Gregory, of the Roman Monastery of St Andrew, passed by, and was struck with the remarkable beauty of the children. In answer to his inquiries, he was told that they came from the island of Britain, and that the inhabitants of that island were heathens. Gregory lamented that such beautiful beings should be under the power of the Prince of Darkness, and he asked of what race the captives came. On being told that they were Angles, he exclaimed, "They are rightly named, for their faces are angelic, and such should be the co-heirs of the angels in heaven." The answer to some more questions caused some more play upon words, but the impression which the scene made on Gregory's heart was deep and permanent. He resolved that the gospel should be preached to the English race. Forthwith he sought an audience of the Pope, whom he begged to send missionaries to England, offering himself as one of the band. But his presence in Rome was valued too highly both by the Pope and the citizens for a consent to his departure to be obtained. The enterprise was delayed for a time, but though deferred, it was not forgotten by the apostolic Gregory, whose heart yearned for the conversion of the English; and in 596, on his elevation to the Popedom by the acclamations of the clergy, the senate, and the people of Rome, he resolved to carry out his project. For this purpose he formed a band of forty missionaries, under the leadership of Augustine, Prior of St Andrew's Monastery, whom he despatched from Italy to try and effect the great work which he so long had had at heart.

When the missionaries came to England, Ethelbert of Kent was Bretwalda, in the Isle of Thanet. Intelligence of their arrival was brought to him, and also the object of their journey, viz., the conversion of the country to the Christian religion. Ethelbert could not be unacquainted with the Christian religion. It was probably the belief of the majority of the British slaves in his dominions. It was certainly professed by his queen, Bertha, the daughter of Charibert, King of Paris. The English prince received the missionaries under an oak in an open field, at the suggestion of his priests, who had told him that in such a situation the spells of the foreign magicians would lose their influence. At the appointed time Augustine was introduced to the king. Before him were borne a silver cross, and a banner representing the Redeemer; behind him his companions walked in procession, and the air resounded with the anthems which they sung in alternate choirs. As soon as the interpreter had explained the object and motives of their mission, Ethelbert replied that he had no inclination to abandon the gods of his fathers for a new and uncertain worship; but as the intentions of the strangers were benevolent, and their promises were inviting, they might preach without molestation, and should be supported at his expense. This favourable answer filled them with joy; and they proceeded to Canterbury, chanting as they went the following prayer: "By Thy great mercy, O Lord, turn away, we beseech Thee, Thy anger from this city and Thy holy temple, for we are sinners. Hallelujah!" The care of the queen had already prepared a residence for the missionaries. They were lodged in the ancient church of St Martin, which had originally belonged to the Britons, and had lately been repaired for Liudhard, a Christian prelate who came with Bertha from Gaul. Curiosity led the English to visit the strangers; they admired the ceremonies of their worship, compared their lives with those of the pagan priests, and learned to approve a religion which could inspire so much piety, austerity, and disinterestedness. With secret pleasure Ethelbert viewed the alteration in the sentiments of his subjects; on Whitsunday, in the year 597, he professed himself a Christian, and received the sacrament of baptism, and on the following Christmas ten thousand of his subjects followed the example of their sovereign. Thus was the Christian religion founded among the English, a people who owe, under God, their conversion to Christianity to Rome and the labours of monks, more than any other nation in Europe.

The willing mind of Ethelbert was now quickened by the letters and presents of the Pope. He exerted all his influence to second the efforts of the missionaries. As soon as Augustine had received the episcopal consecration from the Archbishop of Arles, in France, the king retired to the city of Reculver, and gave to the missionaries Canterbury and the surrounding country. By his munificence the Church of St Saviour, originally built by the Britons, was repaired and allotted for the residence of the bishop and his clergy; while a new monastery was raised without the walls for the use of the monks, and dedicated in honour of the apostles St Peter and St Paul. At the same time the number of the missionaries was augmented by the care of Gregory, and their success was rapidly extended to the boundaries of the kingdom. As each portion of Kent embraced the new doctrine, the heathen temple was converted into a Christian church, and, in order to wean the converts from their idolatrous practices, they were permitted, instead of the feasts which they had formerly celebrated around the altars of their gods, to assemble upon the more solemn festivals in the neighbourhood of the church, and to partake of a sober repast. To preside over the more distant converts, Augustine conferred the episcopal dignity on his disciple Justus. The new prelate fixed his residence in Rochester, the capital of West Kent, which was, no doubt, ruled by an independent prince, but on whom the conversion of Ethelbert was not without great influence. The kingdom of Essex was, at this period, governed by Saberct, the son of its founder, and the nephew of Ethelbert. The influence of the uncles introduced a missionary, the Abbot Mellitus, to the notice of Saberct, who soon consented to be baptized. The episcopal consecration was conferred on Mellitus; and London, which is represented as a populous and commercial city, was selected for the see of the new bishop.

From the conversion of the Saxons, the zeal of Augustine was directed to the reformation of the Britons. During a century and a half of unsuccessful warfare, the ancient discipline of their Church had been nearly abolished, and the lives of their clergy were disgraced by vices the most repugnant to their profession. To which of the British sees the archiepiscopal jurisdiction had been originally attached, is at present unknown; but Gregory had written to Augustine that he had subjected all the bishops of Britain to his authority. The missionary, with the aid of Ethelbert, prevailed on the British prelates to meet him at a place which has since been called Augustine's Oak, in Worcestershire. In points of doctrine there appears to have been no difference between Augustine and the British clergy. But he wished for uniformity in the keeping of Easter, in the administration of baptism, and that the British clergy should join with the missionaries in preaching to the English. These things the British prelates refused, and no further efforts were then made to bring the old British and the new English churches into communion.

The reign of Ethelbert lasted fifty-six years. Before his death he published a code of laws to regulate the administration of justice. For this improvement he was indebted to the suggestions of the missionaries, who, though they had been accustomed to the forms and decisions of Roman jurisprudence, did not, in legislating for the Saxons, attempt to abolish the national notions of equity, but wisely retained the principle of pecuniary compensation, a principle universally prevalent in the northern nations. Those crimes which appeared the most repugnant to the well-being of society were scrupulously enumerated; theft in its different branches, murder, sacrilege, insults offered to female chastity, and infractions of the peace of the king and the Church; and to each was attached a proportionate fine, which rose in amount according to the dignity of the person against whom the offence was committed. From these laws it appears that all freemen were classed according to their property, and the offices which they held. To each class was allotted its peculiar mund and were. The mund was the peculiar mulct which was intended to provide for the security of each individual, and of those under his roof. Thus the mund of a widow, if she were of the highest rank, was fifty shillings; of the second, twenty; of the third, twelve; and of the fourth, six. The were was the sum at which the life of each person was rated. If he was killed, the murderer paid it as a compensation to his family; if he himself transgressed the laws, he forfeited it, in lieu of his head, to the king. But murder was not only an offence against individuals, it was also considered as an injury to the community, and the criminal was compelled to make what was esteemed a compensation to the violated justice of his country as well as to the family of the deceased. For this purpose, besides the were, he paid an additional fine, called the wite, which was received by the king or the chief magistrate of the district. The same distinctions and the same punishments with a few variations arising out of times and circumstances, were retained in all the laws of succeeding legislators.

Ethelbert died in 616. He was succeeded by his son, Eadbald, the violence of whose passions nearly replunged the nation into that idolatry from which it had just emerged. The youth and beauty of his step-mother, the widow of Ethelbert, induced him to take her to his bed; and when the missionaries admonished him to break the unnatural connection, he abandoned a religion which forbade the gratification of his passions. At the same time, the three sons of Saberc—their father was dead—restored the altars of the gods, and banished from their territory the Bishop Mellitus. With Justus of Rochester he retired into Gaul, and Laurentius, the successor of Augustine in the see of Canterbury, had determined to follow their footsteps. On the morning of his intended departure, he made a last attempt on the mind of Eadbald. His representations were successful. The king dismissed his step-mother, and recalled the fugitive prelates. The sincerity of his conversion was proved by his subsequent conduct, and Christianity, supported by his influence, assumed an ascendancy which it ever afterwards preserved. The English princes refused that obedience to Eadbald which they had paid to his father, and the dignity of Bretwalda passed from the Jutes to the more powerful nation of the Angles. The East Anglian throne was at this time filled by Redwald, one of the Uffingas. He had formerly paid a visit to Ethelbert, and at his persuasion had professed himself a Christian. But he subsequently fell away, and strove to stifle his conscience by uniting the two worships, and in the same temple, by the side of the statue of Woden, dedicated an altar to the God of the Christians. In order to understand the subsequent conduct of Redwald, we must avert for a short time to the history of Northumbria. Edilfrid, the grandson of Ida, was a restless and sanguinary prince, who for several years had directed all his efforts against the neighbouring Britons. In many districts they had been entirely extirpated by his arms, in others they were happy to purchase his forbearance by the payment of an annual tribute. On the death of Aelta, the founder of the kingdom of Deira, Edilfrid, who had married his daughter, took possession of his dominions. Aelta had left a son of the name of Eadwin, about three years old, who was conveyed beyond the reach of Edilfrid, and, after undergoing many vicissitudes, found shelter in the court of Redwald of East Anglia. As soon as the news that Eadwin was protected by Redwald reached the ear of Edilfrid, he proclaimed war, and by forced marches hastened to surprise the East Anglians. But the latter met him on the right bank of the Idel, in Nottinghamshire, and totally defeated the Northumbrians. The conquerors hastened to improve their advantage. By the men of Deira Eadwin was received with acclamations of joy; the children of Edilfrid fled into the northern parts of the island; and the Bernicians submitted cheerfully to the good fortune of the son of Aelta. Redwald having placed his friend on the united throne of the two kingdoms, returned in triumph to his own dominions.

Northumbria, which the martial genius of Edilfrid had raised to an equality with the most powerful of the English states, under the government of Eadwin assumed a marked superiority, and conferred the title of Bretwalda on him and his immediate successors. The steps by which he attained this pre-eminence are not recorded, but the history of his conversion to Christianity has been preserved by the pen of that glory of the early English Church, Venerable Bede. In the ninth year of his reign, Eadwin had married Ethelburh, daughter of Ethelbert, the deceased King of Kent. The zeal of Eadbald had previously stipulated that his sister should enjoy the free exercise of her religion, and had obtained from Eadwin a promise that he would himself examine the evidences of the Christian faith. The queen was accompanied by Paulinus, a Roman missionary, who had lately been consecrated a bishop. Eadwin kept his word so far as the practice of Christianity by Ethelburh went, but showed no inclination to embrace it himself. It was in vain that Paulinus preached, that the queen entreated, that Pope Boniface V. sent letters and presents. Eadwin appeared immovably attached to the religion of his fathers. The kingdom of Wessex was at this time governed by two princes, Cwichelm and Cynegils, the successors of Ceolwulf. They bore with impatience the superiority assumed by Eadwin. They were unable to contend with him in the field, and, therefore, attempted to remove him by assassination. Eomer, in the quality of an envoy, demanded an audience of Eadwin. He had concealed under his clothes a poisoned dagger, and while the king was listening to his discourse, he aimed a desperate stroke at Eadwin's heart. Lilla, one of the thanes present, noticed the movement, and threw himself between Eadwin and the dagger, thus giving his life for his king. So great was the force of the blow, that Eadwin was wounded through the body of his attendant. Every sword was instantly drawn. But Eomer defended himself with such desperate courage that he killed another thane before he was overpowered by numbers. The preceding night Ethelburh had been delivered of a daughter, and Eadwin publicly returned thanks for his own preservation and the health of his queen. Paulinus did not omit the opportunity of ascribing both events to the protection of Christ, whose resurrection from the grave had been that very day celebrated by the queen. His discourse made an impression on the mind of the king, who permitted him to baptize his daughter, and promised to become a Christian if he returned victorious from his expedition against the perfidious King of Wessex.

Eadwin marched against his West Saxon enemies at the head of a powerful army, and was everywhere victorious. Cwichelm and his brother were killed, as well as large numbers of the West Saxon chieftains, and their country was ravaged by the Northumbrians. Having satisfied his feelings of resentment, Eadwin returned to his dominions, and was reminded of his promise by Paulinus. From that moment he abstained from the worship of the pagan gods, though he still hesitated to embrace Christianity. But his repugnance was at last overcome. He called an assembly of his councillors, and required each to state his views on the subject. After a long debate Paulinus was introduced, and explained the principal doctrines of Christianity; the result was, that a large number of the thanes present became Christians, and the conversion of the Northumbrians soon followed. When Gregory the Great arranged the future economy of the English Church, he directed that the northern metropolitan should fix his residence at York. Eadwin accordingly bestowed on Paulinus a house in that city, and was baptized in a church hastily erected for the ceremony. Pope Honorius was immediately informed of the event, and at his request granted the use of the pallium to the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, with the permission that, when one of his prelates died, the survivor should consecrate his successor without waiting to consult the Roman Pontiff. The empire of Eadwin was more extensive than that of any preceding Bretwalda. The islands of Anglesey and Man were subject to his authority; all the princes of the British paid him tribute; and if among the English kings Eadbald of Kent retained a nominal independence, he owed the benefit not to his own power, but to the influence of his sister Ethelburh. As a token of his authority, he had the tufa—a military ensign of Roman origin—always borne before him when he appeared in public.

In the year 586 a colony of the Angles of Deira, under the command of Creoda, crossed the Humber, and, after clearing the coast of the Britons, pushed their conquest behind the East Angles, till they had reached the very centre of the island. They were in general called Mercians, but some of them took the name of Middle Angles, from their central position. Bede tells us that Mercia was divided by the river Trent into north and south. North Mercia was computed to contain 7000, South Mercia 5000 hides or lands of families. We need not say that Northamptonshire was comprised in South Mercia. After the death of Ceorl of Mercia, Penda, the son of his predecessor, possessed the power without the title of king. He was then advanced in age, a brave and experienced warrior, and of insatiable ambition. For some years he bore with impatience the sway of the Northumbrian; at last he found in Ceadwalla, King of North Wales, an associate of equal daring and of similar views. They united their armies, unfurled the standard of rebellion, and marched into Yorkshire. The battle was fought in Hatfield Chase, between the Don and the Torre, in the year 633. The Northumbrian army was routed, and Eadwin perished with great part of his followers. The confederates exercised without mercy the license of victory. They differed in religion, for the Britons were Christians, the Mercians idolaters; but both were equally solicitous to wreak their resentment on the vanquished, the one that they might revenge the injuries formerly inflicted on their country, the other that they might punish these apostates from the worship of their fathers. Of the two, the Britons were the more savage. They spared neither age nor sex, and their cruelty, instead of being appeased by the death, exulted in the torture of their captives. Having spread devastation from one end of the country to the other, they separated. Ceadwalla remained to accomplish his boast of utterly exterminating the Northumbrians; Penda marched with his Mercians into the territory of the East Angles, which he gave to fire and sword. Ceadwalla was the last British prince who could boast of having carried on aggressive war, as distinguished from mere plundering inroads, into the territory of any English people. Not long afterwards, in 641, Oswald, the restorer of the Northumbrian kingdom, and the sixth Bretwalda, fell in another battle against the heathen Mercians. The arms of Penda were no less successful against the West Saxons. Even before the overthrow of Eadwin, in 628, he had annexed to Mercia the northern conquests of Ceawlin, and sixteen years later, in 644, Cenwealh—who afterwards appears as an extender of the West Saxon frontier at the expense of the Welsh—was for a while driven from his kingdom by the same terrible enemy. Penda, in short, came nearer to achieving the union of the whole English nation under one sceptre than any prince before the West Saxon Egbert. Everything looked as if the permanent dominion of Britain were destined for Mercia, and even as if the faith of Christ were about to be plucked up out of the land before it had well taken root. But it was impossible that England should now fall back under the rule of a mere heathen conqueror. The dominion of Penda appears in English history as a mere passing tyranny, and, though he must have possessed more real power than any one English prince had done before him, his name finds no place in the list of Bretwaldas. At last, the seventh prince who bore that title, Oswiu of Northumberland, checked him in his last invasion, and in 655 slew him in the battle of Loiden (now Leeds), on the river Winnaed, subsequently called Aire. The place was named Winwidfield, or the field of victory, a name which, obscure as it now sounds, marks an important turning-point in the history of this island. Penda, at the time of his death, was eighty years old; of these he had reigned thirty, during which period he was a continual persecutor of Christianity, and slew five pious kings; yet, like some of the heathen emperors of Rome, he had many Christians in his court, from whom he exacted a strict observance of their religious duties; and it is remarkable that all his children were Christians—some of them, eminent for sanctity, were afterwards canonised. Penda may be properly accounted the last pagan king of all England; he was the thirteenth in descent from Woden; and with him, on this, the last of his fields, fell thirty princes of the blood royal.

Of his successors, kings of Mercia, eight successively enjoyed the dignity of Bretwalda (659 to 800). Of his family were three martyred princes, and five canonised widows or virgins, besides several who were by the Saxons accounted amongst the blessed. The strife between the creed of Christ and of Woden was thus finally decided; the Mercians embraced the religion of their neighbours, and Northumberland again became the leading power of Britain. Under her two Bretwaldas, Oswald and Oswiu, the English dominion was, seemingly for the first time, extended beyond the Forth, and Picts and Scots, as well as Saxons and Britons, admitted the supremacy of the Northumbrian king. But the greatness of Northumbria lasted no longer than the reigns of Oswiu and his son Ecgrith. The latter was slain in battle against the Picts, the northern dominion of Northumberland died with him, and the kingdom itself, which had been for some time the most flourishing and advancing state in Britain, became utterly weakened by intestine divisions. It sank into utter insignificance, and stood ready, as we shall subsequently see, for the irruption of a new race of conquerors.

But the Mercians did not tamely submit to the degradation of their country. Three thanes, Immin, Eafha, and Eadbert, took up arms to recover the independence of Mercia. They expelled the Northumbrian magistrates, and conferred the sceptre on a prince whom they had anxiously concealed from the researches of the Bretwalda—Wulphere, the youngest son of Penda. This prince had his chief seat at Weedon-Beck, which his brother and successor, Ethelred, converted into a monastery, which was afterwards destroyed by the Danes (see Weedon, at a subsequent page). In defiance of the Northumbrians he retained his authority, and in 657 united under his government the Mercians, the Middle Angles, and the Lindiswaras, or natives of the county of Lincoln. With equal spirit, and eventually with greater success, Wulphere opposed his southern rivals, the kings of Wessex. In the first conflict the chance of war made him the prisoner of Coinwath, but with the recovery of his liberty he obliterated the disgrace of his defeat. At the battle of Pontisbury the forces of Wessex were dispersed, the victors ravaged the country of their enemies, and the Wihtwaras, the inhabitants of the Isle of Wight, submitted to the dominion of Wulphere. That prince was now the most powerful on the south of the Humber, and he employed his authority in promoting the diffusion of Christianity among his people, so that at length idolatry disappeared in Mercia. The power of Wulphere declined as rapidly as it had risen. Towards the end of his reign he was defeated by the Northumbrians, and lost the province of Lindiswaras. The men of Wessex, who had borne his superiority with impatience, were encouraged by the victory of the Northumbrians to try again the fortune of war. Though the battle was not decisive, it contributed to break the power of Wulphere, at whose death Ecgrith, the Northumbrian monarch, overran and subjected the kingdom. Wulphere was succeeded by his brother, Ethelred, who had married Osthryda, the sister of Ecgrith. To this alliance he was perhaps indebted for the crown of Mercia. He led an army against Lothaire, king of Kent, burnt the villages and churches, carried off the inhabitants, and destroyed the city of Rochester. He next demanded the province of the Lindiswaras from Ecgrith. A war ensued, Elfwin, the brother of the Northumbrian, was slain, and Ethelred recovered possession of the disputed territory. For many years he reigned with honour, and at last, abdicating in favour of his nephew Cœnred, the son of Wulphere, he became a monk in the Monastery of Bardeney, was raised to the office of abbot, and died at an advanced age in 716.

Cœnred was a prince whose piety and love of peace are loudly applauded by our ancient chroniclers, but whose short reign of five years affords only a barren theme to the historian. As soon as Ceolred, the son of the preceding monarch, was of an age to wield the sceptre, Cœnred resigned the crown, and travelling to Rome, received the monastic habit from the hands of Pope Constantine. Offa, the son of Sighere, was the companion of his pilgrimage and the imitator of his virtues. The reign of Ceolred was almost as tranquil as that of his predecessor.

Once only had he recourse to the fortune of arms, against Ida, King of Wessex. The battle was fought at Wodensbury, and the victory was claimed by each nation. But Ceolred degenerated from the piety of his fathers, and by the licentiousness of his morals alienated the minds of the Mercians. In the eighth year of his reign, as he sat at table with his thanes, he suddenly lost his reason, and shortly after, in 716, expired in the most excruciating torments. He was buried at Lichfield. Contemporary with Ceolred was Ethelbald, a descendant of Alwin, the brother of Penda. He was in the vigour of youth, graceful in his person, ambitious of power, and immoderate in his pleasures. To avoid the jealousy of Coelred, who looked upon him as a rival, Ethelbald had concealed himself among the marshes of Croyland, where he was hospitably entertained by Guthlac, a celebrated hermit. As soon as he heard of the death of Ceolred, he assumed the sceptre without opposition, and afterwards, to testify his gratitude for his former benefactor, raised a magnificent church and monastery over the tomb of Guthlac. Of the kings who had hitherto swayed the Mercian sceptre, Ethelbald was the most powerful. From the Humber to the Channel, he compelled every tribe to obey his authority. The kings of Wessex struggled impatiently against his ascendancy, but every effort appeared only to rivet their chains. They were compelled to serve him as vassals, and to fight the battles of their lord. At length, in 752, Cuthred undertook to emancipate himself and his country, and in the fight of Burford, in Oxfordshire, was successful. Ethelbald did not long survive this disgrace. Beornred, a noble Mercian, aspired to the throne, and a battle was fought on the hill of Seggeswold, in Warwickshire. This was in 755. The king either fell in the engagement or was killed by his own guards on the following night. His body was buried in the monastery of Repandune. Beornred, by the death of Ethelbald, obtained momentary possession of the crown, but the thanes espoused the cause of Offa, a prince of royal descent, and the usurper was defeated in battle, and driven out of Mercia. Offa employed the first fourteen years of his reign in the subjugation of his domestic enemies, and the consolidation of his own power. In 771, he first appeared in the character of a conqueror, and subdued the Hestingi, a people inhabiting the coast of Sussex. Three years afterwards he invaded Kent, and routed the natives at Oxford. From the more feeble, he turned his arms against the more powerful states, and soon raised the Mercian kingdom to a greater degree of real power than it had ever held, even during the momentary dominion of Penda. He conquered from the Welsh the land between the Severn and the Wye, a permanent and useful acquisition for the English nation, which he is said to have secured by the great dyke which still bears his name. On the other side of Britain, all the smaller states—East Anglia, Essex, Kent, and Sussex—were brought more or less completely under his power. Victorious over all enemies in his own island, Offa, as the mightiest potentate of the West, corresponded on equal terms with Charles the Great, the mightiest potentate of the East.

The chair of St Peter was filled at this period by Adrian, the friend and favourite of Charles the Great. In 785, two papal legates, the Bishops of Ostia and Tudertum, accompanied by an envoy from the Frankish monarch, landed in England, and convoked two synods, one in Northumbria, the other in Mercia. In the latter, which was attended by Offa, and by all the princes and prelates south of the Humber, the legates read a code of ecclesiastical laws composed by order of the Pope for the reformation of the English Church. It was heard with respect, and subscribed by all the members. The ambition of Offa did not omit the opportunity of attempting a project which he had long meditated. Jaenbercht, Archbishop of Canterbury, had formerly offended the king, and had been deprived by him of all the manors which belonged to his see in the Mercian territories. From the man, the enmity of Offa was transferred to the church over which he presided. Why, the king asked, should the Mercian prelates be subjected to the jurisdiction of a Kentish bishop? Why should the most powerful of the English kingdoms be without a national metropolitan? According to his wishes, a proposition was made in the synod that the jurisdiction of Canterbury should be confined to the three kingdoms of Kent, Sussex, and Wessex ; that one of the Mercian bishops should be raised to the archiepiscopal rank ; and that all the prelates between the Thames and the Humber should be placed under his jurisdiction. Jaenbercht did not acquiesce without a struggle in the degradation of his church ; but the influence of Offa was irresistible ; and Higebert of Lichfield was selected to be the new metropolitan. Still the papal sanction was necessary, and messengers were sent to Rome to obtain it. The envoys of Offa urged the great extent of the province of Canterbury, and the propriety of appointing a native metropolitan to preside over the churches of so powerful a kingdom as Mercia. The advocates of the Archbishop of Canterbury alleged the letters of former pontiffs, the prescription of two centuries, and the injustice of depriving an innocent prelate of more than one half of his jurisdiction. Adrian assented to the wishes of the king. The pallium with the archiepiscopal dignity was conferred upon Adulph, the successor of Higebert, in the see of Lichfield, and Jaenbercht was compelled to content himself with the obedience of the Bishops of Rochester, London, Selsey, Winchester, and Sherburne.

The most powerful of the English princes were ambitious of an alliance with the family of Offa. Brihtric and Ethelred, the kings of Wessex and Northumbria, had already married his daughters Eadburga and Elfleda ; and Ethelbert, the young king of the East Angles, was a suitor for the hand of their sister, Edilthrida. This prince, by the advice of his council, proceeded with a numerous train to Mercia. He was received with the attention becoming his dignity, and expressions of affection most flattering to his hopes. The day was spent in feasting and merriment. In the evening, Ethelbert retired to his apartment, but he appears to have been murdered during the night, and, as it is thought, not without the knowledge of Offa, who immediately annexed East Anglia to his other possessions. The Mercian prince honoured the memory of Ethelbert, whose blood he had shed, by erecting a stately tomb over his remains, and bestowing rich donations on the church of Hereford, in which they reposed. About the same time he endowed the magnificent Abbey of St Alban's. But his heart was corroded with remorse, and his body enfeebled by disease. Within two years, in 794, he followed Ethelbert to the grave, and was buried near Bedford, in a chapel on the banks of the Ouse. It was a tradition of the neighbourhood that a few years afterwards the river overflowed, and that his bones were carried away by the inundation. Ecgferth, who had been crowned nine years before, succeeded his father. The ancient writers indulge in reflections on the misfortunes of a family, the establishment of which had cost its founder so many crimes. Ecgferth died without issue after he had possessed the crown about five months. Of his sisters, Elfleda became a widow soon after her marriage ; Eadburga died in poverty and exile in Italy ; and Edilthrida finished her days in the Abbey of Croyland. Within a few years after the murder of Ethelbert, Offa and his race had disappeared for ever.

The throne of Mercia was next filled by Cenulf, descended from another of the brothers of Penda. His reign was as prosperous as Offa's. He fought much against the Welsh, and drove them back as far as Snowdon. He had also wars with the men of Kent, and took their king, Eadberht Pren, prisoner, but subsequently set him at liberty. His next undertaking was an act of justice—to restore to the successors of St Augustine the prerogatives of which they had been despoiled at the imperious demand of Offa. The authority of the metropolitan of Mercia had been endured with reluctance by the English prelates, his former equals, and the Archbishops of Canterbury and York seized the first opportunity of conveying to the king the sentiments of the episcopal body. He acquiesced in their wishes ; a letter in his name, and that of the nobility and clergy, was written to Pope Leo. III., and Ethelheard, Archbishop of Canterbury, proceeded to Rome to plead in person the rights of his church. A favourable answer was obtained, and Ethelheard, at his return, summoned a council of twelve bishops, in which it was declared that the decree of Pope Adrian had been surreptitiously obtained, and the metropolitan of Lichfield was reduced to his former station among the suffragans of Canterbury. After a prosperous reign of twenty-six years, Cenulf was killed in an expedition against the East Anglians. He was succeeded by his only son, Kenelm, a boy of seven years old, who is said to have been shortly afterwards murdered by order of his elder sister, who hoped to obtain the crown. But in this she was disappointed. Ceolwulf, her uncle, the brother of Cenulf, ascended the throne. But two years afterwards he was driven out by one Beornwulf, a Mercian, who had no better title than his power and opulence. In the time of Offa and Cenulf it seemed as if Mercia was going to be the supreme power in all Britain. But it was not so to be. The abilities of Beornwulf are said to have been unequal to his station, and he was soon compelled to yield to the superior genius of Egbert, King of Wessex, who first made the kings of the West Saxons to be lords over all the land of the English.

Egbert passed thirteen years of his youth and early manhood (from 787 to 800) in the court and camp of Charles the Great (Charlemagne), while banished from Wessex by King Brihtric. He must have learned statesmanship as well as soldiership from Charles, and the example of the Frankish monarch, in consolidating as well as in extending power was not lost on the English prince. The death of Brihtric in 800 left Egbert the sole lineal representative of the royal house of Cerdic, and the nobles of Wessex now invited him to return, and to reign in his native land. Under his sway, the ascendancy of Wessex over the other states became firmly established, and before his death, in 837, Egbert was paramount ruler over all the states that had formed the Anglo-Saxon Heptarchy. The power of the West Saxon kings might be assailed, and at last overthrown, by foreign invaders, but it was never again disputed by rival potentates of English blood. In short, as Charles founded the kingdom of Germany, Egbert at least laid the foundation of the kingdom of England. In his reign of thirty-six years, he reduced all the English kingdoms to a greater or less degree of subjection. The smaller states seem to have willingly submitted to him as a deliverer from the power of Mercia. East Anglia became a dependent ally; Kent and the smaller Saxon kingdoms were more closely incorporated with the ruling state. While in East Anglia kings of the old line continued to reign as vassals of the West Saxon over-lord, Kent, Essex, and Sussex were united into a still more dependent realm, which was granted out as an appanage to some prince of the West Saxon royal house. Northumberland, torn with civil dissensions, was in no position to withstand the power which was growing up in the south of Britain. At the approach of a West Saxon army, the Northumbrians seem to have submitted without resistance, retaining, like East Anglia, their own line of vassal kings. But Mercia was won only after a hard struggle. Egbert had inherited war with Mercia as an inheritance from his predecessors. The first year of his reign, before he had himself returned to assume the crown to which he had been chosen, was marked by a successful resistance to a Mercian inroad; and even many years after, in 823, one of the greatest victories of his reign, the fight of Ellandun, was a victory over Mercian invaders within the West Saxon realm. That victory deprived Mercia of all her external dominion; it was immediately after it that Egbert annexed the smaller kingdoms which had become Mercian dependencies. Four years later, Mercia itself had to submit to the conqueror, and though it retained its kings for another half century, yet they now received their crown at the hands of the West Saxon over-lord. It was immediately after the submission of Mercia that Egbert received the far more easily won submission of Northumberland, which completed his work of welding all the Teutonic kingdom of Britain into one whole. But while thus occupied, he had also to carry on the usual warfare with his Celtic neighbours. The power of the Cornish Britons was now utterly broken; the English frontier seems to have been extended to the Tamar, and the English supremacy to the Land's End. Against the North Welsh, that is, the inhabitants of Wales proper, Egbert was equally successful, and from the year 828, all the Celtic inhabitants of Britain south of the Dee were vassals of the West Saxon king. But his power seems not to have extended over the Picts, the Scots, or the Strathclyde Welsh. In fact, the Northern Celts, except so far as they came in for their share of the Danish invasions, enjoyed, from about this time, a century of unusual independence. Egbert, therefore, when at the height of his power, was not lord of the whole isle of Britain. To win that title was the work of the West Saxon conquerors of the next century.

But at the time when the English conquerors of this island were thus beginning to be consolidated into one nation and one state, they were assailed by a new race of conquerors, who threatened to crush the English as completely as the Anglo-Saxons had crushed the Romanised Britons, whom they found here. These invaders, who made the third great element of the modern English nation, were the warriors of Scandinavia, the general name of the great peninsula of north-eastern Europe, and of the islands and small peninsula at its south, which now make up the kingdoms of Norway, Denmark, and Sweden. The English chronicles generally speak of the Scandinavians who attacked this island as Danes; the French writers give the title Normen (men of the north) to the Scandinavians who ravaged the continental part of Western Europe, and in the early Irish annals the Scandinavian invaders who settled in Ireland are termed Ostmen, that is, men from the east. Scandinavia, at the time when its warlike population became the terror of Western Europe, was subdivided into many little kingdoms and principalities, and it is probable that each leader of a piratical fleet filled up the crew of his ships with adventurers from any part of the countries where the Scandinavian tongue was spoken and the old pagan faith retained. A feeling of common nationality seems to have existed among all the hosts and bands of the northern sea-rovers. It was very rarely that they turned their arms against each other; and one of the highest authorities in the history of the period, Sir Francis Palgrave, has expressed a belief that the northern pirates conducted their enterprises, in the last half of the ninth century, against the Gauls, the British islands, the coasts of the North Sea, of the Channel, of the Atlantic, and even of the Mediterranean, as one people, on one vast scheme of predatory yet consistent invasion.

The Danish invasions of England fall naturally into three periods, each of which finds its parallel in the course of the Saxon conquest of Britain. As the Saxons plundered and desolated long before they actually settled, so now their northern kinsmen follow the same course. We first find a period in which the object of the invaders seems to be simple plunder. They land, they harry the country, they fight, if need be, to secure their booty, but whether defeated or victorious, they equally return to their ships, and sail away with what they have gathered. This period includes the time from the first recorded invasion till the latter half of the ninth century, or from 787 to 855. Next comes a time in which the object of the Northmen is clearly no longer mere plunder, but settlement. Just as the Saxons and Angles had done before them, the Danes come now in much stronger bodies; and instead of sailing away every winter with their plunder, they effect permanent settlements in a considerable part of the country. This took place between 855 and 897. During the greater part of the tenth century, we read of few or no invasions from Scandinavia itself, but the West Saxon lords of Britain were engaged for more than fifty years in a constant struggle to reduce and retain in obedience the Danes who had already settled in the island. A short interval of peace, the glorious reign of Edgar, follows; but towards the end of the tenth century, the plundering invasions of the Danes begin again, and they soon assume altogether a new character. The history of England, for a long term of years, is one record of constant struggles with the power of Denmark. This forms the third period.

There was a close original affinity between the Scandinavians and the ancient Germans. Their languages were branches of the same stock, and the political institutions of the Danes and other Northmen were as free and as popular as those of the Germans, which they generally resembled. Like the Angles and Saxons, the Scandinavians chose their kings from among certain families, which were believed to be descended from Odin. The free warriors of the state assembled at the Tings, as the popular assemblies for both elective and judicial purposes were called, and selected or confirmed the new sovereign, who was then elevated on the shields of the noblest warriors amid the clash of arms and approving shouts of the people. The king was regarded as the natural leader of the national force on great occasions, but the independent warriors, who had given him his title, often thought fit to follow chiefs of their own choice on particular expeditions. Without the consent of the assembled freemen in the Ting the king could not make a law, or levy a tax, or raise an army. Besides these general assemblies, each Scandinavian state had its meetings of the freemen of each district for matters of local self-government, and each state was, for this purpose, divided into hundreds. As brave on land as was his Teutonic kinsmen, the Dane far surpassed the Teuton in adventurous love of the sea, and in boldness of maritime enterprise, sometimes as a merchant or peaceful colonist, but more frequently as a plunderer and a conqueror. Led by their sea-kings, younger sons of royal houses, whose palace was the war-ship, and whose heritage the sea, the Scandinavian warriors swept every European coast during the ninth and tenth centuries, often fixing themselves as lords and masters on the fair lands which they had overrun, and it is up to them that many a royal and noble pedigree in almost every part of Europe still is traced. They clung to the martial creed of Odin with even fiercer enthusiasm than the primitive Britons had once displayed. War, especially war by sea, was the favourite occupation in which a Danish free-man sought to live, and in which he prayed to die. But it would be grossly erroneous to suppose that ferocious valour was the only merit of the Danes, and that their armies were mere bands of barbarous freebooters. Women in Scandinavia were regarded with honour, and often with chivalric devotion. The country's laws, as freely administered by freemen towards freemen, were generally respected and obeyed. The Danish warrior delighted in poetry, and held in high esteem both the minstrel's art and the minstrel's person. The skilful miner and the dexterous worker in metals were highly valued by him, but the able shipwright ranked higher still. Laws were established for the protection of merchant vessels. It is certain that the Danish settlements in Ireland, at Dublin, Waterford, and other sea-ports, were the seats of important commerce; and there is proof that Scandinavian traders carried on an extensive traffic with the far East, through Russia and the great rivers of Central Asia. Still, after every possible allowance for probably accompanying advantages, we cannot doubt that the inroads of the Danes into England caused an almost incalculable amount of misery and waste. Northamptonshire had its full share of suffering during the fearful irruptions of these barbarous persecutors, who sought to uproot Christianity and to establish foul idolatry where lately the one true God was worshipped in peace. Their cruelty towards the Christians of all ages and both sexes was great. "They could conceive no greater pleasure," says Lingard, "than to feast their eyes with the flames of the villages which they had plundered, and their ears with the groans of their captives, expiring under the anguish of torture. Their route was marked by the mangled carcasses of the nuns, the monks, and the priests whom they had massacred. Towns, churches, and monasteries were laid in ashes; and so complete was their destruction, that succeeding generations could with difficulty trace the vestiges of their former existence."

Egbert made a vigorous resistance to the Danes, and generally succeeded in repelling their attacks upon England during his reign, though he more than once suffered defeat in his encounters with these new enemies. The reigns of his son and grandson were almost wholly taken up by the struggle with the Northmen. In the reign of Ethelwulf, the son of Egbert, it is recorded, under the year 865, that the heathen men wintered for the first time in the Isle of Sheppey. This marks the transition from the first to the second period of their invasions. It was not, however, till about ten years from this time that the settlement actually began. Meanwhile the sceptre of the West Saxons passed from one hand to another. Four sons of Ethelwulf reigned in succession, and the reigns of the first three among them make up together only thirteen years. In the reign of the third of these princes, Ethelred I., the second period of the invasions fairly begins. Five years were spent by the Northmen in ravaging and conquering the tributary kingdoms. Northumberland fell an easy prey, and one or two puppet princes did not scruple to receive a tributary crown at their hands. In 868 they entered Mercia, they seized Nottingham, and the West Saxon king was unable to dislodge them from that stronghold. Two years later East Anglia was completely conquered, and its king, Edmund, died a martyr. At last, in 871, the full tide of invasion burst upon Wessex itself. King Ethelred, the first of a long line of West Saxon hero-kings, supported by his great brother, Alfred, met the invaders in battle after battle with varied success. He died in 871, in the thick of the struggle, and Alfred succeeded. In this year, the last of Ethelred and the first of Alfred, nine pitched battles, besides smaller engagements, were fought with the Danes in Wessex. At last peace was made; the Northmen retreated to London, within the Mercian frontier; Wessex was for a moment delivered, but the supremacy won by Egbert was lost. For a few years Wessex was subjected to nothing more than temporary incursions, but Northumberland and part of Mercia were systematically occupied by the Northmen, and the land was divided among them. The last native king of the Mercians, Burhred, the brother-in-law of Alfred, had already been deposed by the Northmen, and, in 874, had gone to Rome, where he ended his days. At last the Northmen, now settled in a large part of the island, made a second attempt to add Wessex to their possessions. For a moment the land seemed conquered; Alfred himself lay hid in the marshes of Somersetshire; men might well think that the empire of Egbert and the kingdom of Cerdic itself had vanished for ever. But the strong heart of the most renowned of Englishmen, the saint, the scholar, the hero, and the lawgiver, carried his people safely through this most terrible of dangers. Within the same year the standard of Wessex was again victorious, and the Northmen were driven to conclude a peace which Englishmen, fifty years sooner, would have deemed the lowest depth of degradation, but which now might fairly be looked upon as honourable, and even as triumphant. By the terms of the peace of Wedmore, made in 878, the Northmen were to evacuate Wessex and the part of Mercia south-west of the Roman road called Watling Street; they, or at least the chiefs, were to submit to baptism, and they were to receive the whole land beyond Watling Street as vassals of the West Saxon king. Guthrum, the Danish king, was accordingly baptized by the name of Ethelstan; he took possession of his new dominions, and observed the peace with decent fidelity down to his death in 890.

A large part of England thus received a colony of Danish inhabitants. They gave their name to their conquest, and England was divided into Wessex, Mercia, and Danalagh, the region where the Danish law was in force. This Danish occupation was a real settlement of a new people in the land. There is no reason to think that any extirpation or expulsion of the native inhabitants took place, such as that which accompanied the Anglo-Saxon conquest. But the displacement of landowners, and the general break-up of society, must have been far greater than was afterwards effected by the Normans. How extensive the Danish occupation was is best seen in the local nomenclature. The West Saxon counties retain to this day the names and the boundaries of the principalities founded by the first successors of Cerdic. In some of them there is not one dominant town in a shire, as in Berkshire and Devonshire; several shires contain a town bearing a cognate name, as Somerset and Dorsetshire, which contains the cognate towns of Somerton and Dorchester. But these towns are merely cognate; the shires are not called after the towns like Gloucestershire and Northamptonshire. In short, the local divisions of Wessex were not made, but grew. Mercia, on the other hand, has every appearance of having been artificially mapped out. The shires, with two exceptions, Shropshire and Rutland, are called after the towns, and, in most cases, the county groups itself round its capital as round an acknowledged and convenient centre. The names of the old principalities vanish, and their boundaries are often disregarded. One principality is divided among several shires, and another shire is made up of several ancient principalities. We can hardly doubt that the old divisions were wiped out in the Danish invasions, and that the country was divided again either by the Danish conquerors, or, more probably, by the English kings after the reconquest. Again, the names of the towns and villages throughout a large part of the ceded territory show the systematic way in which the land was divided among the Danish leaders. Through a large region stretching from Warwickshire to Cumberland, but most conspicuously in Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, and Leicestershire, the Danish termination by marks the settlements of the invaders, and, in a vast number of cases, the name of the manor still retains the name of the Danish lord to whom it was assigned in the occupation of the ninth century. Names like Carlby, Haconby, Kettilby, Thorkillby, tell their own story. In two cases at least the Danes gave new names to considerable towns. Streoneshalh and Northweorthig exchanged their names for the new ones of Whitby and Derby. This last town is one of considerable importance in the history of the Danish settlement. It formed, along with Lincoln, Leicester, Nottingham, and Stamford, a member of a sort of confederation of Danish towns, which, under the name of the Five Boroughs, often plays a part in the events of the tenth and eleventh centuries.

Guthrum lived about eleven years after his treaty with Alfred, and during that period England was little harassed with Danish wars. The other renowned chiefs of the Scandinavians—Rolf, Godfrey, Siegfried, Osketyl, and for a long time Hastings—preferred plunder and conquest in the feeble and disunited realm of France, to an encounter with the well-organised forces of “England’s Darling,” as Alfred was fondly styled by his subjects after his deliverance of them from foreign oppression. The land, though not wholly unvexed by marauders, or by strife between Anglo-Dane and Anglo-Saxon, had a season of comparative rest, and during this calm the great English king was unremittingly active in strengthening the national defences. He built fortresses at the principal harbours, and along the other parts of the coasts where an enemy was likely to disembark. He took especial care that the inhabitants of these places should be supplied with arms, and trained how to use them. Ruined towns and cities were rebuilt and fortified, and the highways and bridges were effectually repaired. While thus preparing on land against war, Alfred saw clearly the importance of availing himself of England’s first and best natural defence, the “silver streak of sea.” He sedulously applied himself to the creation of a maritime force that might cope with the Scandinavian sea-kings on their own element. In constructing his fleets, he did not merely imitate those whom he wished to conquer, but he built ships superior in every respect to those which the Danes were in the habit of using. To secure his country from foreign enemies was naturally Alfred’s earliest care; but it was far from being the sole object of his reign. He strove with equal solicitude to give his subjects the blessings of domestic order and good government. He was a wise ordainer of laws for his people; not introducing many novelties, but selecting and remodelling with skill and prudence the best portions of the old familiar laws of the land. Besides ordaining good laws, Alfred provided carefully for the equally important matter that the laws should be ably and honestly administered. He was patient and painstaking to the utmost in hearing and deciding the numerous cases that were brought before him by way of appeals from inferior tribunals. He was very careful in the selection of judges, and watched their conduct with unremitting attention. English writers, who lived long after the time of Alfred, have ascribed to him the division of the country into shires, hundreds, and tithings, and have called him the founder of trial by jury, of frank-pledge, and of other national institutions. All this is wholly unwarranted by any good historical evidence; but the fact of such traditions respecting Alfred’s benefactions to England growing up and becoming prevalent among Englishmen, shows the veneration and love with which the great English king was regarded. But, even if we look only to what is clearly and indisputably proved to have been done by him, we shall find enough to justify the strongest expression of national gratitude. Besides his rescuing and guarding his country from foreign oppression, besides his labours as a legislator and as chief magistrate of the nation, besides his encouragement of commerce and the enlightened activity with which he sought knowledge of distant lands, and promoted communication with their inhabitants, he was, above all, eminent by his zeal for the restoration of religion, and for the advancement of learning among his own countrymen. After the dreadful havoc of the Danish wars, the English had sunk far below the degree of civilised splendour and literary cultivation, which their ancestors had acquired in the time of Bede. The Danes attacked with peculiar ferocity the cathedrals, the churches, and the monasteries. In the sack of these the only libraries in the land perished; and in the slaughter of the clergy and monks the only secular, as well as sacred, teachers were destroyed. Alfred himself has told us that when he came to the throne "Learning had fallen to so low a depth among the English nation that there were very few on this side of the Humber who were able to understand the church ritual, or to translate a letter out of Latin into English; and I know there were not many beyond the Humber who could do it. I cannot think of one able to do so on the south side of the Thames when I began to reign." Such was the intellectual condition of England in the early years of Alfred's reign; but before its close he was able, in his own emphatic words, to thank God that those who occupied the seat of the teacher were truly capable of teaching. The courage, the sagacity, and the perseverance with which he reclaimed his country from barbarism and ignorance are fully equal to the heroism which he had displayed in his warfare for independence against foreign tyranny. Besides restoring the religious edifices and monastic establishments, he founded schools in the chief towns of his realm; he invited able instructors from abroad; he gave every possible encouragement to such of his subjects as showed zeal and aptitude for literature or science, and he strictly refused promotion to the uneducated and negligent.

In 893, within thirteen years after the submission of Guthrum, a still more formidable Danish chief attacked England, and Alfred prepared to meet him. Hastings, one of the most renowned champions of the north, collected a powerful army on the French coast, from among the Danish bands that long had been plundering the Continent, and he succeeded in throwing this force across the Channel in two divisions, one of which landed on the south-eastern coast of Kent, while the other, under the command of Hastings himself, sailed up the estuary of the Thames. These Danes were veterans in war, and the high genius of their commander and their disciplined valour made them trebly perilous to the land they assailed. But the England of 893 was very different from the England which the former Danish invaders had desolated. Alfred had given his people superior military organisation; he had revived their old patriotic spirit, and there was no disunion or disaffection among them. Still the war was stubbornly maintained for more than three years, and in the course of it Northamptonshire and nearly every part of the country was traversed by contending armies. At last the English prevailed. Hastings, after clinging to the land which he had designed to conquer with the greatest tenacity and skill, abandoned his scheme of conquest, and the remnants of his host departed from the shores of England. It was not permitted to Alfred to enjoy many years of tranquillity after this last desperate struggle with his old enemies. He died in 901, in the fifty-fifth year of his age, and was buried at Winchester.

The three immediate successors of Alfred—Edward, Athelstane, and Edmund—by their wisdom and perseverance, matured the successful system of consolidation which that prince had begun. The next reigns, those of Edred and Edwy, were devoid of political interest. But on the accession of Edgar, in 959, the kingdom attained a degree of grandeur and prosperity previously unknown. Under the vigorous administration of the Bishops Dunstan and Odo, the boundaries of the kingdom became co-extensive with the present limits of England, and the people enjoyed peace and security. During the whole of this long reign the country was not disturbed by a single war, the kings of Scotland and Man, and the princes of Wales and Strathclyde, tendered their homage, and the friendship of England was courted by neighbouring princes. The prevalence of general security facilitated the growth of commerce and industry, and many foreign improvements were introduced. Edgar was well aware that all his exertions would be fruitless as long as the country lay exposed to the Scandinavian pirates. He therefore prepared a numerous fleet, which he divided into three divisions, and yearly every summer, when the Northmen were accustomed to begin their enterprises, he summoned his ships, and, embarking successively in each of his squadrons, made the circuit of his dominions. Dismayed at this display of power, the sea-kings avoided the shores of England during the whole of his reign.

In connection with the administration of justice, a most remarkable institution had been gradually growing up. The civil wars of the Heptarchy, and the lengthened struggles with the Danes, had driven many men from their ordinary occupations into the fens and woods, where, losing their habits of industry, they took to rapine and plunder. To repress this disorderly state of society, many stringent laws were enacted. No man could quit his shire without the consent of the ealdorman; and every one above the age of twelve was obliged to attach himself to some patron, since, when found without a home, he was liable to be punished as a vagabond. During the reign of Edgar this supervision became extended into a regular system, known as the law of Frank-pledge. By this law the whole population was distributed into a number of petty societies, called tithings or free burghs, which consisted of ten householders, and extended over every village throughout the kingdom. So that if an offence were committed, the tithing was bound to present the offender in court, that he might make reparation in his own property and person; but if he escaped, the tithing was not answerable for his offence, unless they failed to exculpate themselves from participation in his crime or flight.

In the reign of Edgar, the English power attained the greatest splendour, and the important subject of legislation received a corresponding advance. During this short but tranquil interval, numerous laws were enacted, and jurisprudence began to be studied with a view to its practical application. After Edgar's death, however, in 975, the kingdom began rapidly to decline. Edward the Martyr, who succeeded him, before he had reigned three years, was assassinated through the treachery of his stepmother, Elfrida, to make way for her son Ethelred, a prince destitute of every noble quality. Perceiving the increasing weakness of the kingdom, the Danes, who had ceased their depredations for nearly a century, now began seriously to contemplate the conquest of the island. Always a laggard in open war, Ethelred tried in 1001, the cowardly and foolish policy of buying off the enemies that he dared not encounter. The tax called the Dane-gelt was then levied to provide "a tribute for the Danish men, on account of the great terror which they caused." To pay money thus was in effect to lure the enemy to renew the war. In 1002, Ethelred tried the still more weak and wicked measure of ridding himself of his enemies by treacherous massacre. Great numbers of Danes were now living in England, intermixed with the English population. Ethelred resolved to relieve himself from all real or supposed danger of these Scandinavian settlers taking part with their invading kinsmen, by sending secret orders early in November throughout his dominions for a general massacre of the Danes. On the thirteenth of that month, the festival of St Brice, the unsuspecting victims, with their wives and families, were seized by the populace, and the horror of murder was in many places aggravated by every insult that national hatred could suggest. At London, where they had fled for protection to the churches, they were massacred in crowds around the altars. Among the victims was a royal Danish lady named Gunhilda, who was sister of Sweyn, King of Denmark, and who had married and settled in England. She was compelled to witness the death of her husband and her child, and was then slain herself, imprecating with her last breath the vengeance of her brother upon the cowardly murderers. That vengeance was not long delayed. Sweyn collected in Denmark a larger fleet and army than the north had ever before sent forth, and solemnly vowed to conquer England or perish in the attempt. He landed on the south coast of Devon, obtained possession of Exeter by the treachery of its governor, and then marched through western and southern England, marking every shire with fire, famine, and slaughter. But he was unable to take London, which was defended against the repeated attacks of the Danes with strong courage and patriotism. In 1010, the Danes appear to have struck deeper into the heart of the country than they had hitherto done. By the end of November in that year they reached Northamptonshire. They pushed on to Northampton, burned the town and ravaged the neighbourhood. They then struck southwards, ravaged Wiltshire, and by mid-winter came back to their ships, burning everywhere as they went. Sixteen shires—the ancient chroniclers stop to reckon them up—had now been ravaged with fire and sword. Northumberland and the western and northern shires of Mercia, were still untouched; and the western part of Wessex, which had suffered severely in former years, seems to have seen no enemy since Sweyn's march from Exeter to Salisbury. But the shires of East Anglia, Essex, Middlesex, Hertford, Buckingham, Oxford, Bedford, Cambridge, Huntingdon, Northampton, Kent, Surrey, Sussex, Hants, Wilts, and Berks, all had been more or less harried. The spirit of the nation was now crushed, and its means of defence were utterly exhausted. In 1013, the wretched King Ethelred fled to Normandy. Sweyn was acknowledged king in all the northern and western shires, but he died in 1014, while his vow of conquest was only partly accomplished. The English now sent for Ethelred back from Normandy, promising loyalty to him as their lawful king, "provided that he would rule over them more justly than he had done before." Ethelred willingly promised amendment, and returned to reign amid strife and misery for two years more. His implacable enemy Sweyn was dead, but the Danish host which Sweyn had led was still in England, under the command of Sweyn's son, Canute, a prince equal in military prowess to his father, and far superior to him and to all other princes of his time in statesmanship and general ability.

Ethelred died in 1016, while the war with Canute was still raging. Ethelred's son, Edmund, surnamed Ironside, was chosen king by the great council then sitting in London, but great numbers of the English made their submission to Canute. The remarkable personal valour of Edmund, strongly aided by the bravery of his faithful Londoners, maintained the war for nearly a year, when Canute agreed to a compromise, by which he and Edmund divided the land between them. But within a month after this, Edmund died by an assassin's hand, and Canute obtained the whole realm of the English race. England, Norway, and Denmark were now united under one sceptre, and Canute was the most powerful monarch in Europe. He made this country his place of residence, and his vast resources secured his dominions from foreign invasion. In consequence of the distracted state of the country, the commencement of his reign was marked by insecurity and oppression; but as confidence increased among his English subjects, and there was no longer fear of a successful rival, his administration assumed a milder form, and he gained the good-will, if not the affections, of the English. This reign is remarkable for one important innovation, the formation of the first regular army which had been maintained in England since the withdrawal of the Roman legions. The former kings had solely depended on the voluntary services of their subjects, who were bound by the tenure of their lands to aid the sovereign in repelling foreign invasion. But Canute, on account of his extended dominions, found it convenient to retain constantly at his court a number of chosen warriors as a body-guard, who accompanied him on all his expeditions, and who were designated "Hus-earls," or household troops.

Canute died on the 11th November 1035, and his remains were deposited in the ancient burial-place of the West Saxon kings at Winchester. Two of his sons (Harold Harefoot, 1035-1040, and Hardicanute, 1040-1042) reigned here for a short time after him. But on the death of the last of these, the nation called a prince of the old Saxon house of Cerdic to the throne, and Edward, surnamed the Confessor, became King of England from Easter Day 1043 to the time of his death, January 5, 1066. Edward was a son of King Ethelred, and had been sent by that sovereign, towards the end of his unhappy reign, to the court of the Duke of Normandy for safety. Edward had remained there till recalled to England by Hardicanute in 1041. Thus Edward's youth and early manhood had been passed away from his country. England, during his reign, was in reality more governed by a few powerful nobles than by the king. Earl Leofric was ruler of Mercia; Earl Siward of Northumbria, but Earl Godwin (by whose influence Edward was mainly placed on the throne), was the most powerful of them all, and was generally regarded as the true old English chief, and as the champion of the nation against the foreigners, whom King Edward brought over with him from Normandy. Earl Godwin and his sons were rulers of all Wessex, Sussex, Kent, Essex, and East Anglia. The best part of England was thus in the hands of this great family, and their influence seemed confirmed by the marriage, which, soon after Edward's accession, was contracted between the king and Godwin's daughter, Editha. Although placed on the throne by the influence of Godwin's family, Edward never manifested a sincere attachment to that house. On one occasion, Godwin having refused to chastise the people of Dover for resisting the insolent behaviour of Eustace of Boulogne, a Norman count, who had been on a visit to Edward, the earl and his sons were outlawed, and Editha deprived of her honours. Godwin and his sons fled from the kingdom, and assembled a small force, with which they returned to the southern coast; and so strong was the national feeling in their favour, that the king was reluctantly compelled to come to an accommodation. Godwin attested before the assembled Witanagemote his innocence of the crimes laid to his charge; his lands and honour were restored to him, and the Lady Editha returned to court; most of the foreigners and Normans were outlawed, and the kingdom returned to its former quiet state. Godwin, however, did not long survive this reconciliation. On April 12, 1066, as he was sitting at the king's table, he was seized with a fit, and expired three days after in speechless agony, leaving his son Harold to succeed to his honours. The generosity of this young nobleman's character conciliated the favour of most of the nobles, while his military talents were displayed by the facility with which he restored Malcolm to the Scottish throne, and chastised the encroachments of the Welsh princes.

Edward, who was childless, perceiving the danger of leaving the kingdom without an heir, sent to Hungary to invite Edward, the son of Edmund Ironside, to return. The joy of the nation at the prospect of an undisputed succession was quickly changed into astonishment and grief, for immediately after his arrival in England the prince was cut off by a sudden and mysterious disease. During the short interval between his landing in England and his death, he had by some means been kept at a distance from his uncle, and it was suspected by many that he was a victim of Harold's ambition. His son, Edgar the Etheling, was a mean competitor by the side of the brave and accomplished Harold, and the English never bore a sincere regard to him, on account of his foreign birth and education. About the end of the summer of 1065, an insurrection broke out among the Northumbrians. Tostig, the brother of Harold, had governed that people with the rapacity of a despot and the cruelty of a barbarian. In the preceding year he had perfidiously murdered two of the noblest thanes in his palace at York; at his request Editha had ordered the assassination of Gospatric in Edward's court, and the recent imposition of an extraordinary tax, as it was universally felt, had armed the whole population against his government. In the beginning of October the insurgents surprised York. Tostig fled; his treasures and armoury were pillaged; his guards, to the number of two hundred, both Danes and English, with their commanders, were made prisoners, conducted out of the city, and massacred in cold blood on the north bank of the Ouse. Elated with their success, the insurgents chose for their future earl, Morcar, or Morkere, the son of Elfgar. Morkere did not sit quietly down to reign in Northumberland. He at once marched southwards. On his march he was joined by the men of the shires of Lincoln, Nottingham, and Derby. These were the districts in which the Danish elements were strong, especially in their chief towns, which were reckoned among the famous Five Boroughs. At the head of this force he entered Northamptonshire, nor did he pause till he reached Northampton. This town was probably chosen as the headquarters of the insurgents as being, like Northumberland itself, under the government of Tostig. At Northampton, Morkere was met by his brother Eadwin, at the head of the men of his earldom, together with a large body of Welsh. Here Harold met the insurgents. When he inquired into the nature of their demands, they replied that they were freemen, and would not tamely submit to oppression; that they required the confirmation of the laws of Canute, and the appointment of Morkere to the earldom of Northumberland. Harold returned to the king, who was then at Bretford, near Salisbury, and obtained the royal assent to their requests; but during his absence, and at their departure, the forces of Morkere plundered the country round Northampton, burnt the villages, and carried away several hundreds of the inhabitants, who were destined to a life of slavery, unless their ransoms should be afterwards paid by their friends. Tostig, dissatisfied with the pacification, repaired to St Omer, the usual asylum of his family. Though Morkere was appointed to the earldom of Northumberland, its outlying portions, the shires of Northampton and Huntingdon, were now detached from it, and bestowed on Siward's young son, Waltheof, who thus became earl of Northamptonshire and Huntingdonshire.

If on this occasion Harold appears to have deserted the cause of his brother, we may attribute his moderation not only to the formidable appearance of the insurgents, but also to a prudent regard for his own interest. King Edward was hastening to his grave; and the success of Harold's projects required his presence in London, a period of tranquillity, and the good-will of the people. He returned to London on the 30th November, five weeks before Edward breathed his last. The monarch, previously to his decease, had the satisfaction of living till the Abbey Church of Westminster was dedicated, a work which had been the great object of his solicitude during his latter years. When the Witan opposed his journey to Rome, Leo IX. authorised him to commute his intended pilgrimage for some other work of piety. With this view he set apart the tenth of his yearly revenue, and rebuilt from its foundation the Church of St Peter, at the western extremity of the capital. On Christmas Eve he was attacked by the fever which ultimately proved fatal. For three days he struggled against the violence of the disease, held his court as usual, and presided with affected cheerfulness at the royal banquets. On the festival of the Holy Innocents, December 28th, the day appointed for the dedication of the new church, he was unable to leave his chamber. The ceremony was, however, performed. The queen, Editha, took the charge of the decorations, and represented the royal founder. But his absence, and the idea of his danger, diffused a deep gloom among the thousands who had assembled to witness the ceremony. After lingering a week longer, Edward died on the Eve of the Epiphany, January 5, 1066, and was buried on the following day with royal pomp in the church which he had erected, and where his bones still remain. If we estimate the character of a sovereign by the test of popular affection, we must rank Edward among the best princes of his time. The goodness of his heart was adored by his subjects, who lamented his death, and bequeathed his memory as an object of veneration to posterity. The blessings of his reign are the constant theme of our ancient writers. He was pious, kind, and compassionate, the father of the poor and the protector of the weak, more willing to give than to receive, and better pleased to pardon than to punish. Under the preceding kings, force generally supplied the place of justice, and the people were impoverished by the rapacity of the sovereign. But Edward enforced the laws of his English predecessors, and disdained the riches which were wrung from the labours of his subjects. Temperate in his diet, unostentatious in his person, pursuing no pleasures but those which his hawks and hounds afforded, he was content with the patrimonial estates of the crown; and was able to assert, even after the abolition of that fruitful source of revenue, the Dane-gelt, that he possessed a greater portion of wealth than any of his predecessors had enjoyed. To him the principle that the king can do no wrong was literally applied by the gratitude of the people, who, if they occasionally complained of the measures of the government (and much reason they had to complain of the appointment to bishoprics of aspiring and rapacious adventurers), attributed the blame not to the monarch himself, of whose benevolence and piety they entertained no doubt, but to the ministers, who had abused his confidence, or deceived his credulity. It was, however, a fortunate circumstance for the memory of Edward that he occupied the interval between the Danish and Norman conquests. Writers were induced to view his character with more partiality from the hatred with which they looked on his successors and predecessors. They were foreigners, he was a native; they held the crown by conquest, he by descent; they ground to the dust the slaves whom they had made, he became known to his countrymen only by his benefits. Hence he appeared to shine with a purer light amid the gloom with which he was surrounded; and whenever the people under the despotism of the Norman kings had an opportunity of expressing their real wishes, they constantly called for "the laws and customs of the good King Edward." He was the first English prince who touched for the king's evil. The surname of "the Confessor" was given to him from the bull of his canonisation issued by Alexander III. about a century after his decease.

On the death of Edward, Harold was proclaimed king in an assembly of the thanes and citizens of London, and the next day witnessed the funeral of the late, and the coronation of the new sovereign of England. To strengthen his influence with the nobility, Harold married Editha, the daughter of Alfgar, and sister of Eadwin and Morkere, the two powerful earls of the north. Nevertheless, he had many difficulties to contend with. His brother Tostig, who had been expelled by the people for his bad government in Northumbria, fled to Norway, where he induced the king to fit out an expedition against England. In the meantime, William, Duke of Normandy, as soon as he heard of the accession of Harold, sent to demand the surrender of the crown, under the pretence that it had been bequeathed to him by Edward. As Harold refused to accede to the request of William, each determined to appeal to the sword, and the English no less than the Normans were astonished at the mighty preparations made to decide the important quarrel. Harold proceeded with an army to the Sussex coast, in order to oppose William, should he attempt an invasion. While he was in the south, he was informed that Tostig and Hardrada, King of Norway, had landed in the north, where, having defeated the combined forces of the earls Eadwin and Morkere, they were preparing for the subjugation of the country. Harold hastened to the scene of action, and was the first herald of his own arrival. Surprised with only half his troops about him, the Norwegian king sent three messengers to the fleet to hasten the march of his men, while he retired slowly to Stamford Bridge, on the Derwent, not far from York. There he drew up his warriors in a compact hollow circle. The royal standard occupied the centre; the circumference was composed of spearmen, while the whole was surrounded by a line of spears fixed in the earth, and pointing outwards in an oblique direction. While thus arranging his forces, Hardrada was conspicuous for his black charger, gigantic stature, blue mantle, and glittering helmet. As he rode round the circle his horse fell. "Who," asked Harold, "is that chieftain on the ground?" Being told that it was Hardrada, "He is," returned the king, "a gallant warrior, but his fall shows that his fate is approaching." When all was ready for the onset, Harold offered his brother Tostig terms of peace, and the earldom of Northumbria. Tostig inquired what he would give his ally the king of Norway ; " Seven feet of earth for a grave," was the answer, and instantly the irregular masses of the English cavalry dashed against the terrible array of the enemy. Unable to make an impression, they broke, according to their custom, rallied at a distance, again charged, and again recoiled. The excited Norwegians could no longer restrain their fury; they saw the enemy retiring in disorder, and they rushed forward to complete the apparent rout. Their movement left a gap in the circle, into which the English infantry immediately poured, and the contest of discipline became a vast and complicated series of personal encounters. Amidst the struggle, Hardrada was shot through the neck with an arrow. Tostig, deaf to the repeated offers of his brother, continued the fight. The remainder of the Norwegians now arrived, and the fury of the battle was redoubled. The ardour of the English finally prevailed, and all the Norwegian chiefs of note shared the fate of Tostig and Hardrada. This action is considered as one of the most bloody that is recorded in our annals, and the whitening bones of the invaders lay for generations upon the field, the dread and wonder of the traveller. The courage of Harold was tempered with humanity. He sent for Olowe, the younger son of Hardrada, who, accompanied by his bishop, and the Earl of the Orkneys, obeyed the summons of the conqueror. He experienced a courteous reception, swore to live in amity with England, and was dismissed with twelve ships to return to his own country. A few days were necessarily employed by Harold in taking possession of the Norwegian fleet, securing the spoil, and refreshing his exhausted troops. He repaired to York, but the public rejoicings of the citizens could not subdue his impatience to learn the motions of his remaining and more formidable competitor. The king was seated at the royal banquet, and surrounded by his thanes, when news was brought that William of Normandy had landed, with an immense army at Pevensey, in Sussex. On the receipt of this intelligence, the king flew to the capital, where he was joined by thousands of his subjects ; and so great was the quickness of his movements, that, although in the beginning of October he was feasting at York, yet on the fourteenth of the same month, he had reached the camp of the Normans. At Senlac, a place about eight miles from Hastings, where the town of Battle now stands, Harold selected for his post an eminence that looked towards the sea, and was protected in the rear by an extensive wood. He formed his men on the brow of the hill, the men of Kent occupying the van, protected in front by palisades. The royal banner, richly ornamented with gold and precious stones, bearing as its device the figure of " a fighting man," floated over the centre of the army. Around this banner stood Harold, his two brothers Gyrth and Leofaine, and the body-guard of Londoners. The Normans were arrayed in three lines upon an opposite declivity ; the archers, the heavy armed infantry, and lastly, ranged in five bodies, the dense array of knights and men-at-arms. William, we are told, " out of a pious care for the interests of Christendom, and to prevent the effusion of Christian blood, sent out, as mediator between both, a monk, who proposed these terms to Harold—either to resign the government, or to hold it as a tenure in fee from the Norman, or to decide the matter in single combat with William." To this last proposition, the thanes who surrounded Harold replied, " No strife between a man and a man shall decide the liberties of thousands." On the messenger's return, both armies prepared for the great struggle in which they were about to engage ; and at " the hour of tearce," nine o'clock, on the morning of the fourteenth of October in the year of grace 1066, Toustain the Fair advanced with the banner of William, shouting at the same time the song of Rollo. The Normans immediately raised the war-cry, " God is 'our help ;" " Christ's Rood the Holy Rood," was the answering cry of the English. The archers drew their bows, and the Norman infantry charged, but quickly yielded to the rage of the English. Scarcely had they retreated, when the entire body of their cavalry swept onwards, dashing the whole weight of horse and rider against the English ranks, which moved not a step, but stood with feet that seemed rooted to the earth, swinging their heavy battle-axes with rapid and unerring aim. Helmet, hauberk, buckler, everything yielded to that terrible weapon. The left wing of the Normans broke and fled; a cry arose that the Duke was slain, and his whole army began to waver. William took off his helmet to reassure his men, and the battle was again begun. The English pursuers were surrounded, and at last destroyed, and once more all subsided into close and deadly strife. Still rang the fierce war-cry of the struggling combatants, still rang loud amid the clash and turmoil, the strokes of the ponderous battle-axe. Twice did William cause his men to flee, and twice were the pursuers trampled under foot, and yet the rage of battle was undiminished, and the main body of the English as unyielding as ever. William's ranks were fearfully weakened. One fourth of his bravest soldiers were among the slain. And yet, although the autumnal sun was fast sinking in the western sky, he seemed as far from victory as when the fight began. But, all at once, confusion appeared in the English lines. Harold was nowhere to be seen. An arrow had pierced his brain, and he had fallen on the dead bodies of his valiant brothers. The English now began to relax their efforts. The Normans seized the opportunity, and rushed forward, some to complete the route, some to capture the royal standard. But not yet was victory theirs. Every one that approached the banner fell beneath the dreaded battle-axe. At last twenty of the bravest Normans undertook to secure the prize—ten fell in the attempt, but the task was achieved. "The sun had set, the first star was in heaven, the 'fighting man' was laid low, and on that spot where now, all forlorn and shattered, stands the altar-stone of Battle Abbey, rose the glittering dragon that surmounted the consecrated banner of the Norman victor." Thus ended this memorable and fatal battle. On the side of the victors, almost sixty thousand men had been engaged, and more than one fourth were left on the field. The number of the vanquished, and the amount of their loss, are unknown. By the vanity of the Norman historians, the English army has been exaggerated beyond the limits of our credibility; by that of the native writers it has been reduced to a handful of resolute warriors; but both agree that with Harold and his brothers perished all the nobility of the south of England, a loss which could not be repaired. The king's mother begged as a boon the dead body of her son, and offered as a ransom its weight in gold. But the resentment of William had rendered him callous to pity and insensible to all interested considerations. He ordered the corpse of the fallen monarch to be buried on the beach; adding with a sneer, "He guarded the coast while he was alive, let him continue to guard it after death." By stealth, however, or by purchase, the royal remains were removed from this unhallowed site, and deposited in the Church of the Holy Cross, at Waltham, which Harold had founded before he ascended the throne.

Before we address ourselves to the consideration of the next great epoch in our history, the Norman conquest, we may conveniently pause and survey the main features of the early English laws and institutions, the general conduct of the people in these early times, and the character of early English literature and art. A general sketch is all that can be here attempted. But it is a very important part of our subject, inasmuch as the foundations of much that exists among us were laid in early English or Anglo-Saxon times, and also because it is impossible to have clear knowledge and sound judgment as to the constitutional history of our country since the Norman conquest, unless we first comprehend what the system was which the victorious Normans found in existence here, and which they changed and modified, but never wholly destroyed.

The free population of Anglo-Saxon England (exclusive of the kings, whose power and position will be separately described) consisted of nobles called Eorls, and of commoners called Ceorls. This is usually given as the main classification of early English ranks; and perhaps, if we take eorl and ceorl as respectively equivalent to the old English phrases of "gentle" and "simple," we shall rightly understand the distinction. The eorls were gentle-folk, the ceorls were simple-folk. The upper class, the eorls, are also often called the Thanes. But a well-born man in Saxon times was not a thane unless he possessed a certain amount of landed property. The possession of land gave him not only the title of thane, but also important political and social privileges. It is convenient, therefore, when speaking of the Anglo-Saxon gentry, to call them thanes; and it is also desirable to do so, because in the later times (after the Danish influences had become extensive here) the title "earl" (the same word as eorl, and as the Danish jarl) came into use in the Danish meaning of governor of some district, without any reference to a man's pedigree. The ceorls were by far the most numerous class. They held the position now held by the yeomanry, the tenant farmers, and the best circumstanced of the peasantry of the land. We must not forget that the agricultural population far exceeded the town population; and when we speak of Anglo-Saxon classes, dwellers in the country are to be understood. The towns and their inhabitants will be adverted to presently. The Saxon ceorl was obliged to be under the protection and patronage of some man of superior rank, as his lord. By far the greater number of the ceorls held their land of some lord to whom they rendered certain services for their occupation. Ceorls of this description could not leave the land without the lord's consent; and when the estate passed to an heir or devisee, or was otherwise transferred to a new owner, the resident ceorls passed with the property in the land to the new lord. This looks very like serfdom or villeinage; but still the English ceorl was essentially a freeman. He had a right to bear arms. He could acquire and hold property in his own right. If an injury was inflicted on him, the were-gild, or compensation appointed by law, was paid to him or to his family, and not to the lord. The ceorl was a legal witness. He could sue and be sued. He was "law-worthy," to use an old phrase. He was a "lawful man," to use another old phrase that still is employed in our judicial proceedings. The ceorl must also be considered to have had important political rights and duties, if the taking part in the administration of justice is held, as it certainly ought to be held, to be a part of political government. The ceorl, as already stated, was a member of a tithing. The members of the tithing chose among themselves their head-man or tithing-man, who was the peace officer of the district. Also, under his presidency, they exercised a salutary jurisdiction over members of their own body about local disputes of small value but frequent occurrence. A number of tithings grouped together made up the hundred, a combination for local self-government very general among all the Germanic and Scandinavian nations. The hundred had its court presided over by the hundred's Ealdor, whose post has been taken by the high constable of after times. This court decided cases in which the inhabitants of more than one tithing were interested, unless the important nature of the case made it fit for the superior tribunal of the assembled thanes of the whole county—that is, of the shire moot, or county court.

But there is another institution very important with reference to the political and social rights of the ceorls, the institution of the township (the original in many respects of the manor of after times), which must have been created here as the results of the English conquests, and as a consequence of the position in which the wealthier and more powerful English warriors would find themselves with reference to their poorer comrades, as well as with reference to the unexterminated portion of the subdued population. A township was a domain belonging to a powerful Englishman, to an opulent thane, who dwelt there in his homestead, and was lord of the township. Besides his slaves, a class of the population to be spoken of presently, there was grouped around him a number of ceorls, some holding lands of the lord on various conditions of service, some tilling the lands that were tenanted by others. Each township had its reeve, its elective chief officer, and the ceorls of every township chose from among their own body four good and lawful men, who, together with the reeve, represented the township in the judicial courts of the hundred and shire. Each township had also its own local courts for affairs of small importance. The townships were very numerous; and though they did not quite overspread the whole country, by far the greater portion of it was comprised within the area of some township or other. Frequently the district of a township was the same as that of a tithing. In this, as in other cases also, the township system of self-government superseded the tithing system. But the tithings were still kept up, especially for the purposes of frank-pledge, which will be subsequently described.

We have already seen that the ceorl, if a member of a township, was represented in the hundred court by the reeve and four men of the township. The thanes of the district had a right, and were bound to attend in person; and it was from them that twelve men were chosen whose especial province it was to make presentments on behalf of the hundred before the superior court of the whole shire. The four men and the reeve of each township within the shire attended this last-mentioned tribunal, the shire moot, or county court. But they had no right to take part in its deliberations, or to vote in it, any more than they had in the still higher court of the Witan, the supreme court of the kingdom. The four men and the reeve of each township attended the Witanagemote also, but it was only for the purpose of obtaining justice when the inferior tribunals had failed to administer it.

The thanes, the gentry of the lands, had many privileges besides the natural authority with which wealth and high birth invest their possessors. Athane's oath in court was considered equal to the oath of six ceorls. The were for slaying him was six times the amount of the were for taking a ceorl's life. The thanes of each shire pronounced the decisions of the county court, and they had also the right of attending and taking part in the deliberations and decrees of the Witan. The thanes were the lords of the townships that have been described. Their local dignity and power must have been practically even more important than their share in the general government of the commonwealth. But while we observe the strong influence of the aristocratical element in the early English polity and social system, we must always remember that this superior body of the thanes was not an exclusive caste or a strictly hereditary noblesse. It was an aristocracy of the best kind—an aristocracy always open to receive recruits from the ranks below it. Any ceorl who could acquire a certain amount of landed property might become a thane, and the successful merchant could raise himself to the same rank.

The spirit of municipal self-government, which had flourished so much in the cities and towns of this island while under Roman rule, was at least equally vigorous in the early English times. The Burg (as the city or town was usually called, meaning a fortified place), was organised like a hundred. The men of the burg chose from among themselves their borough reeve or port reeve, as the head of the civic community was called. Every free householder who paid scot (that is, who contributed to the local taxes), and who bore lot (that is, who was ready to bear his share of local duty), was a burgess, with full right to deliberate, to vote, to elect, and to be elected. Smaller associations of some of the burgesses among themselves, called guilds, were general in the Anglo-Saxon towns, and did much to nourish the national aptitude for political organisation and orderly self-government.

At the head of the commonwealth was the king, its commander-in-chief, and its chief magistrate, but by no means its master. The king could only act in important matters by the advice and with the concurrence of his great council, the Witan, which we have had occasion to mention so often. The Witan was summoned and presided over by the king. It was composed of the bishops, of the principal abbots, of the more powerful nobles, the ealdormen or earls, who were sub-rulers or lord-lieutenants over large districts, and of the thanes, who had a general right of attendance, and most of whom must have exercised that right according to the locality where each Witanagemote was convened. The thanes who resided in or near the place would naturally attend in large numbers, but it is not to be supposed that those resident in distant shires could often undergo the then serious toil and cost of a journey for the purpose. It was in and with his Witanagemote, and not otherwise, that the king made laws and imposed taxes. Another decisive proof of the limited character of the Anglo-Saxon monarchy is the fact that it was only with the consent of his Witan that the king could make grants of the public domains or the "folk-land," that is, of the land of the people. The theory that the sovereign is the paramount proprietor of all land was utterly alien to Anglo-Saxon ideas and institutions. The land conquered by a German tribe did not become the king's land, but belonged to the victorious community. In the times when the English were effecting their conquests, the process by which a portion of land was allotted to each victorious warrior, as his absolute property, was probably short and simple; but in the later Anglo-Saxon ages, the grant was made by charter (Bôc), whence land of this kind—land that was a man's own absolute private property—was termed Boc-land, in contradistinction to folk-land, which still remained the property of the collective people.

The Witan appears also to have exercised the power, when a king died, of choosing his successor from among the members of the royal family. All the royal houses among the Anglo-Saxons, before the consolidation of the various kingdoms, claimed to be descendants of Odin. As Mackintosh has observed, this pedigree continued to be illustrious after it had ceased to be regarded as divine. The extinction of all these houses, except that of Cerdic, the founder of the West Saxon dynasty, may have facilitated the submission of the Anglo-Saxons generally to Cerdic's descendants. It certainly became a recognised principle that the king must be a member of this family, and the next male heir of the deceased sovereign was usually the successor, unless his tender age at the time when the throne became vacant, or some other decided personal disqualification for the vigorous and immediate discharge of the duties of royalty, induced the Witan to set him aside, and to nominate some other and more competent member of the royal family as king. The new ruler was said to be "chosen and raised to be king." His title was given not merely by his royal pedigree, but by the consent of the nation that he should rule over them, that consent being expressed by the vote of the great council, and ratified by the popular acclaim at the then important ceremony of the coronation.

Notwithstanding these limitations on monarchy among the Anglo-Saxons, the king possessed great power according to law, and his practical importance in the state was greater still. We must remember that the Anglo-Saxon period of our history was, with the exception of a few epochs of tranquillity, a period of almost ceaseless warfare, carried on within England itself; and we know how much the executive authority necessarily predominates in such seasons over the other branches of government, and what immense personal influence the executive chief, if he be an energetic and successful commander, is certain to acquire. The Anglo-Saxon king, as general guardian of the peace of the commonwealth from domestic disturbers, could, at his discretion, call out the Fryd, the armed levy of all the freemen of either a particular district or of the whole realm. He could of his own authority fine public officers, and even private individuals, for such neglect of duty as brought imminent danger on the public interest. He had the right of maintaining a body-guard, chosen by himself, of armed retainers, on whom he could confer nobility for service. Besides his own private property, he possessed, as king, large domains of crown lands, though he could not alienate them without the consent of the Witan. His right to receive portions of the fines in many criminal cases, and to take for himself the confiscated chattels and lands of offenders, was in those times an important source of revenue. He had the prerogative of pardon. He appointed the ealdormen, the rulers or lord-lieutenants of the shires, and many other important officers. His own more immediate officials, his chamberlain, and others, had seats in the Witan, and exercised a continually increasing influence in that assembly. The king's right of naming the time and the place at which the Witan should meet must in skilful hands have been a valuable instrument for securing a majority.

This brief sketch of the main rights of royalty among the Anglo-Saxons must be taken as chiefly applicable to the last century or two centuries of the Anglo-

Saxon rule. The king of the first Saxon settlers here had far less power. It has been already pointed out, that the new position assumed by Anglo-Saxon royalty was, in a great degree, caused by the influence of the institutions of imperial Rome, which were habitually studied and admired by the Churchmen, who were generally the most important advisers and ministers of the Anglo-Saxon kings, and who always formed a very large portion of the great councils of the realm. The influence thus exercised by the Church in state affairs, was very great; and we may remark, as a general characteristic of the Anglo-Saxons after their conversion, the high position which they assigned to their clergy. The bishops and the principal abbots were members of the Witangemote, important by their numbers, and still more important by their intellectual superiority to the general mass of the thanes around them. In the county court, the bishop of the diocese presided jointly with the ealdorman, and even the humblest priest took rank, as a mass-thane, with the landed gentry. A large proportion of the wealth of the land belonged to the Church. The obligation to pay tithes is declared and enjoined by many extant Anglo-Saxon laws; and, besides the right to these, the Church was largely endowed with domains for her cathedrals and monasteries, and with glebe for her parish priests. The district of which the tithes and other ecclesiastical dues were paid to a particular local church, and the inhabitants of which were ministered to by the priest of that church, made up a preost scyre, a parish. And by far the greater part of Anglo-Saxon England (though not all), was divided into parishes; a division which, in after times, has been generally adopted for purposes of secular local self-government.

Besides these various classes of the free population of the land, there was also a lower class of human beings, who were in absolute slavery. They were called by the Anglo-Saxons "Theowes," "Esnes," and "Thralls." Many of them were probably descendants of the conquered Britons. But others were of English race, being either criminals who could not pay the fines imposed on them by the laws, and who had been thereupon sold into bondage, or been guiltless but wretched beings, who had sold themselves into slavery from the pressure of extreme poverty. This seems to have frequently happened during the famines which so often affected England, or parts of England, in those days. The will of a Saxon lady, still extant, directs the emancipation of her slaves of this kind, and describes them emphatically as "the men who bent their heads in evil days for food." The laws even recognised the right of a father, under the pressure of extreme necessity, to sell his child into slavery, but this could not be done without the child's consent, after the child was seven years old. The law so far protected a slave, that a were, or compensation money, was required from those who grossly maltreated him, but this money was payable, not to the slave himself, or to his family, but to his master. This made of itself a broad distinction between the slave and the lowest freeman. The law, as among the freemen themselves, appointed curiously minute tariffs of compensation for bodily injury, from the loss of a finger nail to the loss of life; and there were separate tariffs according to the rank of the injured party. It was not, however, in all cases, that the criminal could redeem himself from punishment by a money payment. Some crimes were inexpiable, save by the forfeiture of the offender's life. Among these were treason, military desertion, housebreaking, contrived murder, and open theft.

A man charged with crime had a speedy and public trial in the Anglo-Saxon times; he was also tried before a number of people, and was not made dependent for condemnation or acquittal, on the caprice or subserviency of any officer of the crown. These are very important principles in criminal jurisprudence. They are among the most valuable principles of our modern system of trial by jury, and we may therefore say correctly, that some of the great principles of trial by jury flourished among our Anglo-Saxon ancestors. An Anglo-Saxon criminal trial was conducted in the presence of the assembled members of the Hundred Court, or of the County Court; the latter being the tribunal before which all serious charges were investigated. It will be remembered that all the thanes, that is, all the landed gentry of the country, formed this last-mentioned court, being presided over by the bishop and the ealdorman, or by the bishop and the shire reeve or sheriff, who frequently acted in the ealdorman's stead. A man might be accused before this tribunal, either by the presentment of the chief men of his hundred, or of his township, or by the appeal of the injured party. We see, in this first mode of accusation, the clear original of our modern grand juries, but we shall see little resembling our modern jury trial as we proceed. When the culprit was thus arraigned, he had to prove his innocence by either compurgation or ordeal; but before the trial, the court ascertained whether the accused was or was not a man of good character. If his lord and two other thanes would come forward and swear that the man had not been convicted of crime for some stated period, he was looked on as a man of good character, and allowed to clear himself of the specific charge against him more easily than the culprit who could not obtain the necessary witness to good conduct, and who was therefore considered to be under a greater presumption of guilt. If the accused party wished to clear himself by compurgation, he swore to his own innocence, and he was required to produce neighbours to swear to their belief in it; the effect of such neighbours' oaths being estimated, not by the means of knowledge as to the specific charge possessed by the persons who swore, nor by their character, nor by their number, but by their "worth," in the Anglo-Saxon scale of persons, according to which the oath of one lord was equal to the oaths of six ceorls. A much less amount of compurgatory oath was needed for the man of proved character, than for others. If the culprit, either from inability to procure compurgation, or for any other reason, elected to be tried by the ordeal, and to abide "the judgment of God," as it was termed, the caldron of boiling water, or the red hot iron, was prepared before the assembled court, and the accused man, in their presence, plunged his arm up to the wrist in the water, or carried the iron in his bare hand, for nine paces. He was declared guilty or innocent, according to the appearance or non-appearance of marks of scalding or of burning within a limited time. Such was the ordeal for a man of reputed good character; but the man of ill repute, or of no repute, was obliged to plunge his arm up to the elbow in the caldron, or to bear a red hot iron of treble weight.

E

With the exception of the local disputes in matters of small amount, that might be settled in the tithing or in the hundred, the thanes assembled at the county court determined all civil controversies. The early English laws were careful and minute in requiring all transfers of property and other contracts of any importance to be made as publicly as possible, so that when a dispute as to ownership arose, it might be decided by an appeal to the memory of the neighbours, and to public notoriety. Instances were not uncommon in civil disputes, and may sometimes have occurred in criminal proceedings, where a select number were chosen from among the multitude present at the county court, to whom the decision of the matter in dispute was committed, on account of their superior information respecting it, as well as by reason of the confidence which the litigants felt as to their integrity. We see here again some of the rudiments of the system of trial by jury, such as afterwards grew up, but by no means enough to warrant the assertion that trial by jury is an Anglo-Saxon institution.

Much interesting and amusing information, respecting the social usages and domestic life of the Anglo-Saxons, has been compiled in several well-known works, but our limits will not allow more than a very brief notice of them here. Agriculture was extensively though rudely practised, rye and oats being grown as well as wheat, and used as human food. Barley was largely cultivated, and beer had already become the national beverage. But we find also frequent mention of orchards and of vineyards. Large herds of swine were bred and fattened in the extensive forests of beech and oak. Oxen and horses seem to have been bred in considerable numbers, and sheep were so numerous, that wool had already become the chief article for exportation. The sea fisheries employed a great portion of the population of the coast; salt works were numerous in the same districts, and mines were worked, though seemingly not with the same activity and skill as in former times. Among home trades, the arts of embroidery and of working in gold appear to have been most successfully practised. There are proofs of Anglo-Saxon merchants carrying on commerce in many cities of France and in Italy. There was also considerable traffic with Ireland, with Flanders, with many of the German towns, with the Scandinavian kingdoms, and even with Iceland. Foreign merchants, while resident here, were under the special protection of the king. Chester, Bristol, Pevensey, Hythe, Dover, Sandwich, and, above all, London, are among the places mentioned as most resorted to for commercial purposes.

There is only one other point in the Anglo-Saxon national character, as evidenced by the manners and customs of the people, which we can pause to notice, but it is a very important one. It is the great and general respect paid to women. This is proved to some extent by the laws and judicial records, which show that a woman could hold lands and other property, and that she could bequeath them and deal with them as freely as a man could deal with his. But it is proved in a far higher degree, by the numerous drawings and illuminations to be found in the old manuscripts, and which represent scenes of outdoor and indoor common life. We find in them no sign of the women of the household being treated as the inferiors of men. Both sexes are seated together at meals, both appear assembled together at festivals. The Saxon lady stands by the side of the lord, while they distribute bread to their poor retainers. And what is equally significant of national good feeling and true civilisation in a people, it is clear that women were not employed among the Anglo-Saxons in the laborious duties of agriculture, or generally in any outdoor occupation.

One subject yet commands our attention. What was the state of the language and literature of the country in Anglo-Saxon times? We are irresistibly drawn to the consideration of the Anglo-Saxon language, because it is essentially our own language; and also, because it is a language which is now overspreading the world more than ever was done before by any other language, ancient or modern. It may also be observed, that ours is the only modern language which, at so early a period of its existence as the Anglo-Saxon stage of English, developed a literature not consisting of mere ballads and legal formulas, but a literature both copious and varied, and which even now well deserves study for its own sake, as well as for its connection with the English of after ages. That Anglo-Saxon and English are essentially the same language, though many additions have been made in the course of centuries to the primary Anglo-Saxon element, is a fact in philology too clear to require any demonstration here. Poetry is the branch of early English literature, of which the most valuable specimens have been preserved. The Anglo-Saxon poems were not written in rhyme, but in short alliterative lines, so framed and so arranged by the best writers, as to produce an extremely agreeable and effective rhythmical modulation. The finest Anglo-Saxon verses are to be found in the epic poetry of Cædmon, on the Creation, the Fall of the Rebel Angels, the Temptation of Man, and other Scriptural subjects. King Alfred's writings form the most valuable part of this old English literature. Alfred's works are nominally translations, but they contain so much original matter, that we have a right to look upon them as being to a great extent the genuine productions of an Anglo-Saxon mind, as well as the expressions of an Anglo-Saxon tongue. This is particularly the case in Alfred's version of the general history of the world by Orosius, and in his paraphrase of the metrical portions of Boethius's Consolations of Philosophy. The sacred literature of the Anglo-Saxons which has been preserved to our times, is very copious. It is remarkable, not only for the number of homilies and other original compositions, but for its numerous versions, some rhythmical, some in plain prose, of large portions of the Sacred Scriptures.

The Norman dynasty was founded by Rollo, one of the most famous of the sea-kings, who, having subdued the north of France, was induced by the exhortations of Franco, the archbishop of Rouen, to embrace Christianity, and subsequently he consented to hold Normandy as a fief of the crown of France. Sixth in descent from Rollo was William, surnamed the Conqueror, who, at his accession to the duchy, had to contend with numerous competitors. But his activity and bravery baffled all their efforts, and at the time he undertook the conquest of England, he had the reputation of being one of the boldest knights, and most enterprising sovereigns, in Christendom. The preparations of William to secure the English crown, and the decision of the question on the field of Senlac, have already been described. On the news of Harold's defeat and death reaching London, the citizens proclaimed Edgar the Etheling, king of England. But Edgar's abilities were not equal to his position, and the first place in the council devolved upon Stigand, the archbishop of Canterbury; and the direction of military affairs was committed to the two earls, Eadwin and Morkere. Their first efforts were unsuccessful, and the confidence of the citizens was shaken by the feeble resistance which a numerous body of natives had opposed to an inferior force of five hundred Norman horse. William contented himself with burning the suburbs; he was unwilling or afraid to storm the walls, and resolved to punish his opponents by destroying their property in the open country. Leaving London, he spread his army over the counties of Surrey, Sussex, Hampshire, and Berkshire. Everything valuable was plundered by the soldiery, and what they could not carry away was committed to the flames. Eadwin and Morkere, seeing no means of retrieving the lost fortunes of their country, retired to the north, while Archbishop Stigand, and a deputation from the citizens and clergy, waited on the Conqueror, and proffered to him the crown, stipulating only for their ancient laws and privileges. William accepted this submission, and appointed Christmas-day for his coronation; but London was even at this period a wealthy and powerful city, and the Normans did not consider it safe to enter, until a strong fortress had been erected, which now forms part of the Tower of London, to command the city.

On the day of his coronation at Westminster Abbey, the circumstance of an armed champion defying all competitors was first introduced. When the English, who were present at the ceremony, were asked whether they choose William for their king, they shouted their assent. Their acclamations became the signal for plunder and massacre. The Norman bands, that had been stationed outside the abbey, feigned alarm at the outcry; but, instead of gathering about their king, they set fire to the houses in the neighbourhood and began to plunder. William was left with none but the prelates at the altar. The English, both men and women, had fled to provide for their own safety; and of the Normans, some had hastened to extinguish the flames, the others to share in the plunder. The service was completed with precipitation, and the Conqueror took the usual oath of the English kings, with this addition, that he would govern as justly as the best of his predecessors, provided the natives were true to him. This ceremony took place on Christmas-day 1066. What might have been the character of William's government, had all things proceeded amicably, it may be difficult at this distance of time to determine. But certain it is, that at the commencement of his reign the king showed a laudable desire to gain the good will of his new subjects. He confirmed the leading nobility in the possession of their estates, and conferred many important offices on those whom the common dictates of prudence would have led him to distrust, had he contemplated any gross violation of the English liberties. The ancient laws, and the mode of administering justice, were strictly preserved. It is even asserted by some historians, that William at this time endeavoured to acquire the English language, that he might the better understand the wishes of the nation. But the sense of conquest produced an indomitable resentment in the minds of the people, and they watched with jealousy the erection of castles in all the principal towns, as if to over-awe the inhabitants. The Normans, haughty, tyrannical, and proud, were looked upon by the English as foreigners and usurpers, while the very first act of the government was highly unpopular. William confiscated the estates of those who had fallen at Hastings, affecting to treat them as traitors. This, which was no act of tyranny, according to the Norman institutions, was looked upon by the English in a far different light. They regarded those brave men as the defenders of their country's cause, and could not but consider the partition of their estates amongst the Norman favourites as an intolerable act of oppression. William's departure to the continent gave these discontents time to ripen, and the cruel and arbitrary conduct of those whom he had placed at the head of affairs, drove the people to exasperation by new impositions. The flames of rebellion spread, and the whole country rose in arms; but the people wanted generals to lead them and castles to sustain their revolt, while the energy and alacrity of their enemies disconcerted all their measures. The Normans that had returned as far as Hereford, met with fearful retribution from the hand of Edric the Wild. Copsi, who had consented to rule the country north of the Tyne, as the vassal of the Conqueror, was implored, but in vain, to renounce the connection, and fell beneath the sword of his countrymen. William, hearing of the storm which was threatening, hastened from the continent, and, by liberal promises and timely condescension, detached the Londoners from the popular party; he then invited the English nobles to his court, and professed to repose in them the utmost confidence. But this disaffection had taught William to mistrust his English subjects, and he determined henceforth to treat them as a conquered nation. Having divided the energies of his enemies, he led his army, which now contained some English troops, against the men of Devon and Cornwall, who had openly appeared in arms, and when Exeter was taken by assault, he divided the land among the victors.

In the north a more formidable condition had been formed by Eadwin and Morkere, with Malcolm of Scotland and the Welsh princes, who had promised their assistance to restore Edgar the Etheling to the throne; and in the conquered provinces, a secret plan is said to have been formed for the massacre of the Normans, similar to that of the Danes in the reign of Ethelred. Perceiving his danger, William immediately crossed the Mames, besieged and took Derby, Lincoln, and York, overran the whole of Northamptonshire, the other midland counties, and the north, and erected strong castles at York, Nottingham, Warwick, Lincoln, Huntingdon, and Cambridge. The cities opened their gates and submitted without a blow, but no sooner had he departed than the whole population rose to arms and wreaked their vengeance upon the Norman garrisons. The slender ties which had previously preserved the rights and titles of the inhabitants, were now dissolved, and acts of oppression and spoliation became of daily occurrence. "William," says Malmesbury, "bearing in mind the evil effects of the mild government of Canute, which had ended in the entire expulsion of the Danes, determined to secure his conquest by rivetting such fetters that the English would no longer have it in their power to resist;" and with this design, he determined to enforce the rigours of the feudal system. But the war of independence was not yet over. The inhabitants of the Danelagh still retained much of their ancient ferocity, and continued to solicit the aid of their Danish and Norwegian kinsmen. William, on his part, sent rich presents to Sweyn, king of Denmark, to induce him to remain at peace; but the entreaties of his subjects finally prevailed, and the king was compelled to equip a fleet of two hundred and forty sail, which anchored in the Humber at the beginning of autumn. Experience had taught the people that the Norman was not to be compared to the Danish rule, and everywhere the English rose to join their standard. Eadwin, Edgar, and Morkere hastened from Scotland, and the united forces advanced to the attack of the Norman castles, which were taken, and their garrisons sent prisoners to the Danish fleet. But William, taking advantage of the winter season, which prevented military operations, sent an embassy to the court of Denmark, and, by large promises of money, induced the king of Denmark to recall his forces at the end of winter. The English, now deserted by their allies, were unable to maintain the defensive against the disciplined forces of the Normans, and the whole country, from the Humber to the Tees, was reduced by the avenging conqueror to one vast desert.

All England now submitted to the Normans, and William commanded that universal transfer of landed property which, in a few years, entirely changed the aspect of the country. Feudal castles sprang up on every domain, and the whole surface of the island was divided into sixty thousand military fiefs, which were lavishly bestowed upon his Norman followers. The few English who still retained possession of their lands, gladly sought shelter under the protection of the king or some powerful baron, and by the twentieth year of his reign, the whole of the allodial lands were converted into feudal tenures. By this time, so universal had become the hatred of the English to the military tyranny of William, that the whole of the higher classes had either perished in battle or fallen by the sentence of military tribunals. Many had fled into Scotland, and many more to the East, where, under the command of Siward, the brave Earl of Gloucester, they entered the service of the Greek emperor, and for many years defended Constantinople against the power of the Turks. Others took to the woods, which then covered so many parts of the kingdom, Northamptonshire among the rest, or joined Hereward in the fens of Lincolnshire and Cambridge-shire, whence they issued and attacked the Normans on the highways, and plundered those who submitted to them, while the mass of the people bowed to the servitude they were unable to avoid. Failing in a generous resistance, the English now commenced a system of individual assassination, and whenever a Norman was overtaken unarmed, he was set upon and slain. As the people sympathised in this deed, there was no means of bringing the offender to punishment. William, therefore, was obliged to institute a special law for the protection of the Normans, called the "presentment of Englishy." By this law it was enacted that, in every hundred where a murder was committed by an unknown hand, a jury should be empanelled, to determine whether the murdered man were of Norman or English extraction; if of the former, the whole hundred was severely fined. And this stringent measure was finally successful. Every one was interested in preventing that for which every one was responsible; but in the reign of Henry II. this court finally disappeared.

In accordance with his promise before the battle of Hastings, William rewarded his followers with the lands of the vanquished, taking care, however, to attach to these grants those peculiar restrictions and burdens which are so well known as the characteristics of the feudal system; a system extending at that time throughout the greater part of Europe, and still forming the basis of many of our institutions. The principal feature of this remarkable system was, that the lands were always held, not as an ownership, but as an hereditary tenancy, continued as an absolute right so long as the conditions upon which it was granted were complied with. In those troubled times, military service was the usual and most honourable, but by no means the necessary condition. In the composition of feudalism we notice two essential elements: the land, which was held thus conditionally, and what was called the fief or feud, and the vassal or feudatory, who held the fief. Whether fiefs were at first given for a limited period or for life, and at what time they first became hereditary, cannot now be clearly ascertained. When the fief was large, the vassal often bestowed a part upon others, upon terms similar to those by which he himself possessed the whole, and he thus became a "mesne" or intermediate lord. In England, the distinction between real and personal vassals was continued throughout the Anglo-Saxon period; and as the law required every one, from the king to the ceorl, to place himself under a lawful superior, all became personal, though many were by no means real vassals.

Fiefs were created by investiture, which was of two kinds: the proper investiture, which was an actual delivery of the land by the lord to the vassal, in presence of his convassalli or equals; and the improper investiture, or symbolical delivery of the land by a wand or turf. In the case of a proper investiture, the lord declared the services which his tenant had to perform at the time of the investiture, in the presence of the convassalli; and it became usual to give the tenant a writing, containing a statement of such services, witnessed by the convassalli, in order that they might not be forgotten. In the case of an improper investiture, the lord delivered to the tenant such writing, with directions to some person to give him actual possession. Besides the investiture, the grant of a fief was accompanied by two other ceremonies : that of fealty, when, standing erect, the vassal swore fidelity to his lord ; and that of homage, when, unarmed and bareheaded, on his knees, with his hands placed between those of his lord, he repeated these words :—"Hear, my lord, I become your liege man of life and limb, and earthly worship ; and faith and truth I will bear to you to live and die. So help me God." The ceremony was concluded with a kiss, and the vassal was thenceforth bound to respect and obey his lord ; the lord to protect his vassal, and to warrant to him the possession of his fief. After the lord had thus granted out lands as fiefs, the proprietor remained in him, and he had also the seigniorship or right to fealty, and the other services reserved in the grant. And as the lord and vassal were mutually bound to defend each other, the former could not alienate the fief without the consent of the latter, who might originally have become his tenant, from reliance on his power and courage, which qualities another lord might not happen to possess. And if the vassal were evicted of the fief, his lord was bound to recompense with another fief of equal value, or to pay him for what he had lost. On the same principle, if the lord failed in his duty to his vassal, as in not protecting and defending him, he forfeited his seigniorship. As the lord had granted the fief on condition of some service rendered by his tenant, it followed that if such condition could no longer be performed, as when the vassal died without heirs, the fief returned to him again. If the heir of a fief was a minor, he became the ward of the lord ; and when the fief descended to a daughter, the lord claimed the right to dispose of her in marriage, and also the homage and services of her husband.

Feudalism had attained its complete development about the time of the conquest, and in that mature condition was transplanted into England. As nearly the whole of the landed proprietors had engaged in the struggle for independence, nearly all the lands of the kingdom had become forfeited to the crown. The few English that retained their estates were harassed, and often dispossessed by the Normans. Redress was generally promised, but seldom obtained ; and the old nobility rapidly shrunk into the middle and lower classes, happy if they could but preserve a fragment of their former possessions. Of the confiscated property, William retained a considerable portion, besides the whole of the ancient royal domains ; the remainder he parcelled out among his followers. He possessed no fewer than one thousand four hundred and thirty-two manors, in different parts of the kingdom. The next to him was his brother Odo, distinguished by the title of the Earl-Bishop, who held almost two hundred manors in Kent, and two hundred and fifty in other counties. Another prelate, highly esteemed, and as liberally rewarded by the conqueror, Geoffrey, bishop of Coutances, left at his death two hundred and eighty manors to Roger Mowbray, his nephew. Robert, Count of Mortaigne, the brother of William and Odo, obtained for his share nine hundred and seventy-three manors ; four hundred and forty-two fell to the lot of Alan Fergant, earl of Bretagne ; two hundred and ninety-eight to that of William Warrenne, and one hundred and seventy-one to Richard de Clare. Other estates, in greater or smaller proportions, were bestowed on the remainder of the foreign chieftains, according to the caprice or the gratitude of the new sovereign.

This division of the land was the result of William's policy. He was well aware that on the continent the strength of a vassal was often equal to that of his lord ; he knew that he himself, and many other French feudatories, had often defied with impunity all the power of their suzerain, the King of France. He knew, moreover, that the sub-vassals took the oath of fealty to the mesne lord only, and considered themselves bound in consequence to adhere to him in every quarrel, even against his suzerain or chief lord. Thus every large fief became a separate kingdom, having no connection with the suzerain, except so far as the mesne lord thought proper. William resolved that none of these evils should exist in England ; his grants, therefore, were comparatively small, and generally consisted of estates scattered over different parts of the kingdom. No single baron could be compared for a moment with the individual power of the king. To remedy the second evil, William compelled all the sub-vassals, all those that held of his own feudatories, to assemble on Salisbury Plain, and swear allegiance, not only to their immediate superiors, but to himself ; thus impressing strongly upon the minds of his people the supreme right and dominion of the crown. But this was not all. They no longer promised obedience to their lord alone, but swore to be true to him against all men, save the king and his heirs. William was not satisfied with these changes. He made another innovation, which was unknown even to feudalism, except in some parts of Germany, and which insured him no small control over the passions of his vassals. He introduced the custom of "wardship" and "marriage," a custom that more or less for six hundred years excited the indignation of the nobles. By this custom the king took possession of the revenues of all his vassals that were under age. If he chose, he could remove them from their friends, and bring them up in his own residence. But he was required to pay the expenses, and to put his ward when of age in possession of his land, without receiving the ordinary payment of the "relief." An heiress could not marry, even during the life time of her father, without the consent of her lord, or the payment of a heavy fine. On her father's death, she remained under the guardianship of her lord till the age of sixteen, and for so long a term beyond that age as she chose to remain single. The pretext for these harassing regulations was a necessary attention to the interests of the lord, whose fee might otherwise come into the possession of a man unable or unwilling to comply with the obligations, but avarice converted them into a constant source of emolument to the lord, by inducing him to sell the marriages of heiresses to the highest bidder.

Besides all these unusual conditions, William introduced all the ordinary burdens of feudalism. First, His vassals held their land by military service, and had to maintain in the field a determinate number of knights for forty days every year. The force that could thus be raised amounted to 60,000 horsemen. Even the church lands were subjected to these conditions, unless it could be proved, to the satisfaction of the Norman lawyers, that they had been given as free alms. Second, To military service was always attached the obligation of suit or attendance at the court of the chief. The king's immediate vassals were expected to meet three times every year. They and the officers of his household formed his "great council," or, as it was called under Henry I., his parliament. William entertained his nobles and the foreign ambassadors with unsparing magnificence. At Christmas, Gloucester was the usual scene of royal festivity, Winchester at Easter, and Westminster at Whitsuntide. Besides these fixed periods, the crown vassals were to assemble whenever summoned, unless they could show a reason for their absence. Although the object of the meeting was to consult for the safety of the nation, to furnish the king with aids, and to enact new or amend the ancient laws, yet, on the whole, it was rather a judicial than a legislative assembly ; its chief business was to decide causes and receive appeals. At first all the tenants or barons of the king, including the bishops, were obliged to repair to the great council. Many whose fiefs were small regarded this rather as a burden than as a privilege, and when their lands became subdivided by marriage and descent, they gradually abandoned the meeting, till, in the reign of John, the distinction that was thus formed of greater and lesser barons became clearly defined. Both classes were still summoned on emergencies, but the latter gradually subsided into the mass of the commons. Third, Of the relief sufficient mention has already been made. It consisted at first of arms and weapons, but was afterwards paid in money. Primer Seisin was the relief paid by a vassal who was of age before he came to the estate ; it was larger than the common relief, as if it were to compensate for the loss of the emoluments of wardship. Aids, or escuages, were feudal payments that were levied from the vassals of the crown on three occasions : whenever the lord was taken prisoner, when his eldest daughter was married, and when his son was knighted. Sub-vassals had to pay a fourth escuage whenever their immediate lord had to pay his relief. The king's vassals claimed, and generally exercised, the right of fixing the amount of this escuage. Yet each vassal of the crown levied it from his own dependants at his pleasure ; although it was usual for him either to rate each of his knight's fees at a certain amount, or to exact a fixed proportion of the movables of each individual. From the preceding notices, the reader will be able to form some notion of many of the sources from which the king's revenue was derived. From all these feudal services, from his numerous manors, from tolls in fairs and markets, from an occasional land-tax, from a tallage or capitation-tax levied upon the English, and from a hearth-tax of one shilling on every house, the Conqueror acquired a daily income of the enormous sum of £1061, while the expenses of the government were comparatively light, and those of war fell, in great measure, upon the vassals.

The better to facilitate the entire feudalisation of the country, and to insure due payment of the taxes, William sent commissioners to take a survey of the kingdom. The time at which the survey was compiled has been variously given by historians, ranging from 1083 to 1087 ; but without going into the question, it will be sufficient for the purpose of the present work to state, that the portion relating to Northamptonshire was compiled after the death of Queen Matilda, who died on the 3d of November 1083 ; for we read in the survey that the king gave Scaldwell to the Abbey of St Edmund'sbury, "for the soul of Queen Matilda." The whole survey was completed in 1086, and is known as the Domesday Survey. By the survey, the Conqueror obtained a perfect knowledge, not only of the possessions of the crown, but of the names and estates of the different landowners ; it also gave him the means of ascertaining the military strength of the country, and, not his least consideration, it pointed out how the revenue might be increased. Any or all of these may be assigned for the compilation of the survey, and it can scarcely be doubted that each must have been duly weighed in the mind of the Conqueror ; but, after an attentive study of the passages of Domesday, we are led to the conclusion that the increasing of the revenue was the principal object William had in view. As we have just said, the survey was compiled by commissioners appointed by the king, those for the midland counties, and probably for the rest of the kingdom, being Remigius, bishop of Lincoln, Walter Giffard, earl of Buckingham, Henry de Ferers, and Adam, brother of Eudo Dapifer. The commissioners were to inquire by the oaths of the sheriffs, the lords of the manors, the priests, reeves, bailiffs, and six villeins of every village, into the name of the place, who held it in the time of King Edward, who was the present holder, how many hides there were in the manor, how many ploughs in demesne, how many men, how many villeins, how many cotarii, servi, and freemen ; how many socmen, how much wood, meadow, and pasture ; what mills and fish-ponds, how much was added or taken away, what was the value in King Edward's time, and what at present, and how much each freeman or socman had or has ; and this is to be triply estimated, viz., in King Edward's time, when King William gave it, as it was at the time of the survey, and if any advance might be made in the value it was to be stated. No doubt the jurors went more into particulars than was absolutely required, which gave reason for the complaint of the Anglo-Saxon chronicle, "that there was not one single hide, nor a yard of land (quarter of an acre), nay, moreover (it is shameful to tell, though he thought it not shameful to do it), not even an ox, nor a cow, nor a swine, was there left that was not set down." The returns of the commissioners from the different parts of the country were sent to the exchequer, where they seem to have been much compressed, and copied in the abbreviated form that we now find in Domesday. Domesday Book has always been considered of the greatest value and authority in legal proceedings. Appeals to the decision of this survey occur at a very early period. The proof of ancient demesne still rests with this survey, and it is frequently referred to in courts of justice, both in public matters and in subjects of private interest. If a question now arises whether a manor, parish, or lands, be ancient demesne of the crown, the issue must be tried by Domesday Book, whence there is no appeal, nor can any averment be made against it.

The survey shows that the town of Northampton had been greatly enlarged by King William. Edward the Confessor had in the old town sixty burgesses, having as many mansions, of which number, by the time of the survey, forty-seven only were occupied. In the "new town," King William had forty burgesses, besides which 230 houses are enumerated as belonging to various abbeys and persons; so that at the time of the survey there were at least 330 houses in the old and new towns, thirty-five of which were wasted or unoccupied, besides half a waste mansion belonging to one Baldwin. The summary of the population of Northamptonshire, as calculated by Sir Henry Ellis, in his introduction to Domesday, is as follows:—Tenants in capite, 66; under tenants, 261; ancillæ or bondwomen, 59; bordarii, 2056; burgesses in Northampton, 87; fabri, 2; francigenæ, 3; homines, 6; Liberi homines, 3; milites, 10; præpositus, 1; presbyteri, 66; servi, 807; socmanni, 1062; villani, 3952—total, 8441. This must not be taken as an exact enumeration of the entire population; for women, children, and those persons who were attached to the households of the great lords, are not mentioned in the survey. From the large sums paid by the "Fabri" at Green's Norton and Towcester, it would appear that they must have been iron workers, and not smiths, and that the iron ore of the country was worked there in the time of the Confessor; but the "Fabri" appear to have discontinued their labours after the conquest. Many places are mentioned in this portion of the survey as belonging to Northamptonshire, which do not now form part of the county. A large district of Rutlandshire, under the title of Wiceslea Wapentake, embracing the townships of Barrowden, Belmesthorpe, Bisbrooke, Caldecote, Casterton Magna, Casterton Parva, Empingham, Essendine, Glaston, Horne, Kelthorpe, Ketton, Luffenham (north and south), Lyddington, Ryhall, Seaton, Snelston, Drystoke, Thorp by Water Thorp, Tickencote, Tinwell, and Tolthorpe, is surveyed as part of Northamptonshire. Tinnere, Glington, Egforde, Etton, Hedham, Shelswell, Shipton, and Sibford, in Oxfordshire, Wavre, Sawbridge, Whitacre, and Wicford, in Warwickshire; Stibbington in Huntingdonshire, and Puddington in Bedfordshire, are also mentioned as being in Northamptonshire. By some oversight possibly, Lapley and Marston, both lying in Cuttlestone hundred, in Staffordshire, have been placed in this portion of the survey. Several places also are mentioned whose names have disappeared with the lapse of time. Barford was formerly a hamlet of Rushton. "Hantone," which appears to have been in the neighbourhood of Finedon, is no longer to be found. "Cilverdescote," in Gravesend, the modern Fawsley hundred, has entirely disappeared, and "Cildecote" now only remains in the name of Chilcote's Cover, near Cold Ashby. "Brime," which appears to have lain in Sulton hundred, is also lost. The king's demesne of Portland cannot now be traced, but from the references to the churches of St Peter and All Saints, it is possible that it had some connection with the town of Northampton, and was probably attached to the castle.

A few remarks, in elucidation of some of the obscurer terms met with in Domesday Book, may not be deemed out of place here. The Geld, or Dangeld, was originally a fixed tax on every hide of land. As we have seen at a previous page, it was first imposed by Ethelred to raise money to purchase peace with the Danes. This tax, from which the Confessor had relieved the English, was revived by William at an early period of his reign; but he made it subject to many exemptions. The demesne lands of churchmen and religious houses were uniformly excused. The demesne lands of the great lords and barons were likewise exempted; and partial exemptions were made in favour of the barons of the exchequer, the sheriffs of counties, and the assessors and collectors of the tax; a few exemptions also were claimed under special grants from the king, and hence it will be readily understood, the produce of the tax was much diminished. Moreover, after the conquest, numbers of estates must have been devastated, and the greater part had decreased in value, so that many would be unable to pay the tax imposed on them. We learn from Domesday that Danegeld was paid throughout Northamptonshire. The Hide of Anglo-Saxon times seems to have been an undetermined portion of land, sufficient for the maintenance of a family; and from this uncertain measure, it appears to have settled down into a fixed amount. The Carucate of land, or plough-land, is described as being so much arable as could be managed with one plough, and the beasts belonging thereto in a year; having meadow, pasture, and houses for the householders, and cattle belonging to it, and is generally considered as the Norman form of the Anglo-Saxon hide. The Virgate, or yard-land, was a portion of the hide, varying in different places according to locality, from a fourth to a seventh part, and containing various numbers of acres, from fifteen to forty-eight. In the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth centuries, as we learn from the inquisitions on Monastic lands, estates were portioned out to the villeins by virgates and half virgates, each performing certain customary services, according to the amount of his holding. In some manuscripts such tenants are called virgataii. The Hydrarium for the county of Northampton, stated by Baker and Bridges to be of the time of Henry II., distinguishes large and small virgates; but the difference between them does not appear. The Bovata, or Oxgang, comprised as much land in extent as might be tilled by the labour of one ox in the course of the year, and appears to have been the eighth part of a carucate, eight oxen generally forming a team. It must have varied, like all other measures of the kind, according to the weight of the soil, for we have notices of bovates of eighteen, seventeen, sixteen, and even eight acres. The word acre, from the Roman ager and Anglo-Saxon acer, a field, appears originally to have signified no certain quantity of land; but for practical purposes, we may assume our actual acre not to differ very materially from the Anglo-Saxon. The Servi and Aucillæ were slaves and bondwomen, except that their lives and limbs, and the chastity of the women, were under the protection of the law; they could be disposed of at the pleasure of the lord, and be bought and sold like cattle. Hallam, in his "History of the Middle Ages," is of opinion that the servi or serfs were the descendants of the Britons. "For though his own crimes, or the tyranny of others, might possibly reduce a Saxon ceorl to this condition (slavery), it is inconceivable that the lowest of those who won England with their swords should, in the establishment of the new kingdoms, have been destitute of personal liberty." The Villani of Domesday were tenants of small portions of land, held at the will of the lord, but having no permanent interest therein. The villein was part and parcel of the estate to which he belonged; he could not leave it, but was a servant for life, receiving as wages sufficient land for the support of himself and his family. If he left his lord, he could be recovered as a chattel, unless he lived for a year and a day in a privileged town or borough without being claimed by his lord, and so obtained his freedom. He could accumulate no property; everything he possessed belonged to his lord. His services, which were not only base, but uncertain, both as to time and quantity, varied in different places. They generally consisted in ploughing, harrowing, mowing, and doing other agricultural work on the lord's demesne. The services of the villein in course of time became customary, and we find them set out very carefully in different inquisitions, the particular services being stated minutely in the survey of each place, and so by degrees the villein ripened into the copyholder of the present day; for, being allowed to hold land at the will of the lord for many years without interruption, he acquired a right to hold on rendering the accustomed services, which are generally at the present day commuted for a money payment. He possessed this title only by custom, and to prove it had reference to the court-roll of the manor, from which custom of holding by copy of court-roll, he was called a copyholder. The Bordarii were of a less servile condition than the villani and servi, and seem generally to have been tenants holding small portions of land by various services. Some appear to have paid a rent in money, and supplied the lord with certain provisions; others again, by the service of thrashing twice a week, and sailing wherever the lord commanded. Spelman considers the Bordarii to have been tenants of small portions of land and a cottage (bord being the Anglo-Saxon word for cottage), by the service of thrashing, tilling, sowing, drawing wood and water, &c.; and this view is borne out by passages in the various inquisitions. The Socmen were free men, holding their lands by fixed and limited services, their lord having no power to deprive them of their lands, so long as those services were duly performed. It would seem that the socmen generally had power to dispose of their lands at will, for where such is not the case, we find it so specified; and even then, although the socman could not sell or alienate his land, he was still a free man in person, and bound to his lord by no other service than that by which he held his land. The socman could commend himself, or put himself under the protection of any lord of his choice. The services of the socmen of Stamford are distinctly specified in Domesday; they held their lands in demesne, and could put themselves under the protection of any lord they pleased the king having no more power over them than the amending of their forfeiture, heriot on the succession of the heir and toll. Hallam, in his "History of the Middle Ages," says, "Nobody can doubt that the villani and bordarii of Domesday Book, who are always distinguished from the serfs of the demesne, were the ceorls of Anglo-Saxon law; and I presume the socmen, who so frequently occur in that record, though far more in some counties than in others, were ceorls more fortunate than the rest, who, by purchase, had acquired freeholds, or by prescription and the indulgence of their lords, had obtained such a property in the outlands allotted to them that they could not be removed, and in many instances might dispose of them at pleasure. They are the root of a noble plant, the free soccage tenants or English yeomanry, whose independence has stamped with peculiar features both our constitution and our national character." Few churches are mentioned in the survey, but in those counties where they are least noticed, Northamptonshire being one of them, the greatest number of presbyteri or priests will be found. The scribes, who abbreviated Domesday Book from the original returns of the commissioners, seem to have considered that the mention of the one implied the existence of the other, so that it may be consistent to infer, that wherever we find a priest mentioned, there existed a church. It is worthy of remark also, that it appears to be peculiar to the survey of Northamptonshire, to class the presbyteri with the villeins and bordars.

The order generally observed in writing Domesday Book was to set down at the head of every county the king's name, and then a list of the bishops, religious houses, churches, and great men, according to their rank, that held of the king, in capite or serjeantry, in that county. After this list of tenants, the manors and possessions which belonged to the king and each owner throughout the whole county, whether they lie in the same or different hundreds, are collected together, and minutely noted, with their under-tenants. The following is a list of the chief tenants mentioned in Domesday Book, as holding the manors in "Northantonscire" at the time of the Norman survey:—

- | | |
|--|---|
| I. King William | XVII. Lewin the Priest, and other Clerics |
| II. The Bishop of Bayeux | XVIII. The Earl of Moriton (Mortain) |
| III. The Bishop of Durham | XIX. The Earl of Mellent |
| IV. The Bishop of Coutances | XX. The Earl Allan |
| V. The Bishop of Lincoln | XXI. The Earl Alberic |
| VI. The Abbey of Peterborough | XXII. The Earl Hugh |
| VII. The Abbey of Westminster | XXIII. Hugh de Grentmaison |
| VIII. The Abbey of St Edmund | XXIV. Hugh de Luri |
| IX. The Abbey of Ramsey | XXV. Henry de Ferieres |
| X. The Abbey of Thomey | XXVI. Robert de Todent |
| XI. The Abbey of Crowland | XXVII. Robert de Stratford |
| XII. The Abbey of Coventry | XXVIII. Robert de Oilgi |
| XIII. The Abbey of Evesham | XXIX. Robert de Veci |
| XIV. The Abbey of Grestain | XXX. Robert de Buc |
| XV. The Church of St Remigius, at Rheims | XXXI. Radulf Pagenel |
| XVI. Ausger the Chaplain | XXXII. Radulf de Limes |
| | XXXIII. Robert White |

XXXIV. William de Cahainges	XLVIII. Gunfrid de Cioches
XXXV. William Peural (Peveril)	XLIX. Sigar de Cioches
XXXVI. William, the son of Ausculf	L. Suain
XXXVII. William Loneth	LI. Sibold
XXXVIII. Walter de Aincurth	LII. Oger, the Briton
XXXIX. Walter Flandrensis	LIII. Drogo de Beurere
XL. Winemar	LIV. Maino, the Briton
XLI. Guy de Renbodcurth	LV. Eustace de Huntedune
XLII. Eudo, the son of Hubert	LVI. The Countess Judith
XLIII. Ghilo, the brother of Ausculf	LVII. Gilbert Cook
XLIV. Goisfrid Alselin	LVIII. David
XLV. Goisfrid de Manneville	LIX. Richard
XLVI. Gilebert de Gaud	LX. William, and other Thanés
XLVII. Goisfrid de Wirce

Having thus provided for his own interest, William had the good policy to refrain from tampering with the remaining rights and institutions of the conquered. The laws and customs peculiar to the three great divisions of the kingdom were respected and enforced, and the ancient courts were suffered to remain. The greatest change was in the Witangemote, and even this was more in name than in reality. The king's court and the great council, the two courts which supplanted the Witan, are sometimes used synonymously; but at other times the great council implies a more full attendance of the royal vassals than was necessary to constitute the court of a king. In both these courts the suitors were Normans, and the pleadings were, therefore, conducted in their native tongue. In the other courts English was generally used. In the administration of justice, the system of penalties was retained; but instead of being clearly defined, they were left to the mercy or caprice of the lord, and were therefore termed "muerciciments." Under the sway of the English kings, a large proportion of the fines used to become the property of the ealdorman. This practice the Norman earls continued; of all the fines awarded to the crown, every third penny was theirs. The usual form of the ordeal was suffered to remain; but the judicial combat, or "wager of battle," was added, and could be demanded by either of the parties, provided he was a Norman. The spiritual and temporal courts were separated, and the old distinction of classes—viz., ealdormen, greater and lesser thanes, ceorls, and theows—became known as earls or counts, barons, knights or esquires, free tenants, villeins, and neifs. When William had settled his new dominions, the outline of his policy was imitated by his barons. Each estate consisted of two portions—one, called the demesne, contained the residence of the lord; the land cultivated and inhabited by his villeins; certain portions held by "souage," that is, by rent, or other free and conventional services, including suit or attendance in the court of the lord; and, lastly, townlands, held by a tenure called "burgage," which often varied even in the same town. The second portion of the estate was divided into knights' fees, given on condition of military service on horseback for the customary period. The number of these subinfeudations depended upon the holder of the entire fee; if it were less than the number of knights required by his tenure, he was obliged to hire substitutes. By this means the obligation of military service fell, in reality, upon the smaller portion of the estate. The quantity of land that constituted a knight's fee is not accurately known; it was sometimes, if not always, five hides, or carucates—a fief escheated or reverted to the king by the failure of heirs in the line of the tenant in capite, the person that held directly of the crown; also, when by felony, treason, or omission of the military service, the actual tenant incurred the penalty of forfeiture. In the time of Henry II., the military service, or scutage, as it was often called, began to be compounded for money, each scutage being valued at the rate of about three pounds.

The position of William towards the close of his reign might have appeared to be as splendid as ambition could aspire to, or as genius and good fortune could achieve. But that seeming prosperity was clouded by many troubles, arising chiefly from dissensions in the Conqueror's own family. Before William invaded England, he had declared his eldest son, Robert, heir to the duchy of Normandy, and had required the Norman nobles to pay homage to the young prince. But he never allowed the exercise of substantial authority by Robert, or by his other sons; and it is a remarkable fact that not a single hide of land in the conquered realm of England was granted to any of them. Instigated by the French king, who was jealous of William's power, Prince Robert demanded that he should be made real ruler of Normandy. William replied that he did not mean to begin to undress before bed-time. Many of the Norman nobles were discontented with the stern government of the old king; and, aided by them and by the King of France, Robert endeavoured to seize upon the dukedom which his father withheld from him. A series of desolating wars on the frontier of Normandy followed, in the course of which the father and son came into personal conflict with each other. Prince Robert had taken refuge in the French king's castle of Gerberoi, in the Beauvoisin. King William besieged him there for some weeks; and, in a sally made by the garrison, William, who had led a body of cavalry to repel it, was charged by a knight from the opposite ranks, who wounded him in the arm, and forced him from the saddle. The helmets then worn disguised the faces of the combatants so far, that neither William nor his antagonist knew each other until the overthrown and wounded king called for help. Then Robert—for it was he who had stricken William down—knew his father's voice. The prince instantly alighted, and raised his father upon his own horse. He then knelt and begged for forgiveness; but William cursed him bitterly, and rode away. The entreaties of William's queen, Matilda, procured soon afterwards a short reconciliation between the father and son, but their dissensions were soon renewed; and when William lay on his death-bed his first-born child was an exile in arms against him.

But however much William might be hated, nothing could shake his power. His eldest son was in open rebellion. His brother Odo, who had served him so ably in the conquest of England, and had been rewarded with so many manors in Northamptonshire and other parts of the country, had conspired against him, and was shut up in one of his dungeons. Many more of the Norman nobles, whom he had led to victory and gorged with spoil, were known to be traitorous malcontents. The conquered English hated him with unabated, though oft-baffled enmity. All his powerful neighbours—the kings of France, of Scotland, of Norway, and of Denmark—were eager to give aid to any one who would oppose or distress him; yet William reigned on with unflinching pride and undiminished success, "with cold heart and bloody hand," as a Norwegian bard tells us. As years passed on, old age impaired the vigour of the Conqueror's bodily frame, but it neither softened nor enfeebled his spirit. Twenty-one years after the battle of Hastings, one of the usual wars was being carried on between him and the King of France for the possession of some territories adjacent to Normandy. William had been taken ill and lay sick at Rouen, when a coarse jest of the French monarch on William's corpulency and seeming languor was reported to him, which incensed him so much, that as soon as he was able to mount his war-horse, he led an army into the disputed district, laying all things waste with such ferocity as was remarkable even in the man and in the age. He took the city of Mantes, and ordered it to be given to the flames, without sparing even the churches and other religious edifices. He watched the blaze of destruction, and then, in his cruelty and hardness of heart, rode in among the ruins to feast his eyes with the near sight of the desolation which he had made. Fire yet smouldered in some of the embers over which his war-horse was pacing, and the animal plunging suddenly and violently, cast the rider forward on the pommel of the saddle. William was severely and dangerously injured, and he was conveyed to Rouen, where he lingered in agony for six weeks. His conscience was awakened on his deathbed. He sent large donations for the restoration of the churches in Mantes; and he directed that the vast treasures which he had accumulated in England should be distributed among the churches and the poor of the kingdom. He directed also the release of his State prisoners—Norman as well as English—some of whom had lain in his dungeons for more than twenty years. He then ordained the future rule of his dominions. He told the assembled Norman barons that the duchy of Normandy and its dependencies were the natural inheritance of his son Robert, to whom the Norman nobles had already paid homage. He expressed a wish that his son William should obtain the conquered kingdom of England, and assigned to the youngest son, Henry, a legacy of money only.

William the Conqueror died early on the morning of the 9th of September 1087. From the events which followed his death, the reader may judge of the unsettled state of society at the time. The knights and prelates hastened to their respective homes to secure their property; the citizens of Rouen began to conceal their most valuable effects; the servants rifled the palace, and hurried away with their booty; and the royal corpse for three hours lay almost in a state of nudity upon the ground. At length the archbishop ordered the body to be interred at Caen; and Herluin, a neighbouring knight, out of compassion, and for the honour of God and the Norman name, conveyed it at his own expense to that city. At the day appointed for the interment, Prince Henry, the Norman prelates, and a multitude of clergy and people, assembled in the Church of St Stephen, which the Conqueror had founded. The mass had been celebrated, the corpse was placed on the bier, and the Bishop of Evreux had pronounced the panegyric of the deceased, when a voice from the crowd exclaimed, "He whom you have praised was a robber. The very land on which you stand is mine. By violence he took it from my father, and, in the name of God, I forbid you to bury him in it." The speaker was Asceline Fitz-Arthur, who had often, but fruitlessly, sought reparation from the justice of William. The truth of the charge was notorious, and a murmur of attestation and assent from those around followed his words. The assembled prelates were compelled to buy the grave. Silver was paid down then and there to Asceline as the price of the burial-spot, and a sufficient indemnity for the whole of his land was guaranteed to him. The body of the man, for one of whose numerous crimes a tardy compensation had thus been made, was then committed to the earth.

William's character has been drawn with apparent impartiality in the Anglo-Saxon chronicle, by a contemporary and an Englishman. That the reader may have the opinion of one who possessed the means of forming an accurate judgment, we give the passage from the chronicle:—"If any one wish to know what manner of man he was, or of how many lands he were the lord, we will describe him as we have known him; for we looked on him, and some time lived in his court. King William was a very wise man, and very rich; more worshipful and stronger than any of his foregangers. He was mild to good men who loved God, and stark beyond all bounds to those who withstood his will. On the very place where God gave him to win England he reared a noble monastery, and set monks therein, and endowed it well. He was very worshipful. Thrice he bore his king-helmet every year when he was in England; at Easter he bore it at Winchester, at Pentecost at Westminster, and in mid-winter at Gloucester. And there were with him all the rich men over all England—archbishops and diocesan bishops, abbots and earls, thanes and knights. Moreover, he was a very stark man, and very savage; so that no man durst do anything against his will. He had earls in his bonds who had done against his will, bishops he set off their bishoprics, abbots off their abbeys, and thanes in prisons; and at last he did not spare his own brother Odo. Him he set in prison. Yet, among other things, we must not forget the good frith which he made in this land; so that a man that was good for aught might travel over the kingdom with his bosom full of gold without molestation; and no man durst slay another man, though he had suffered never so mickle evil from the other. He ruled over England, and, by his cunning, he was so thoroughly acquainted with it, that there is not a hide of land of which he did not know both who had it and what was its worth; and that he set down in his writings. Wales was under his weald, and therein he wrought castles; and he wielded the Isle of Man withal. Moreover, he subdued Scotland by his mickle strength; Normandy was his by kinn; and over the earldoms called Mans he ruled ; and if he might have lived yet two years, he would have won Ireland by the fame of his power, and without any armament. Yet truly, in his time men had mickle suffering and very many hardships. Castles he caused to be wrought, and poor men to be oppressed. He was so very stark. He took from his subjects many marks of gold, and many hundred pounds of silver ; and he took some by right and some by mickle might, for very little need. He had fallen into avarice, and greediness he lived withal." "He let his lands to fue as dear as he could ; then came some other and bade him more than the first had given, and the king let it into the hands of the man who bade the most. Nor did he reck how sinfully his reeves got money of poor men, or how many unlawful things they did ; for the more men talked of right law, the more they did against the law." "He also set many deer-friths, and he made laws therewith, that whosoever should slay hart or hind, him man should bind. As he forbade the slaying of harts, so also did he of boars. So much he loved the high deer, as if he had been their father. He also decreed about hares, that they should go free. His rich men moaned, and the poor men murmured ; but he was so hard, that he recked not the hatred of them all ; for it was need they should follow the king's will withal if they wished to live, or to have lands or goods or his favour. Alas, that any man should be so moody, and should so puff up himself, and think himself above all other men ! May Almighty God have mercy on his soul, and grant him forgiveness of his sins."

Of the numerous historical events which have occurred in Northamptonshire, subsequent to the Norman Conquest full accounts will be found in the histories of the various towns, parishes, and other places in which they have taken place. Of those connected with the General History of England, we may mention the annexation of Ireland to England, in the reign of Henry II. (1172) ; the granting of Magna Charta by King John (1215) ; the successful invasions of France by Edward III. and Henry V. ; the wars between the houses of York and Lancaster, called the "Wars of the Roses," which distracted the kingdom in the fifteenth century, and in which nearly the whole of the ancient nobility were destroyed ; the suppression of the Religious Houses by Henry VIII. ; the establishment of Protestantism under Edward VI. ; the restoration of the old religion by Queen Mary, and the re-establishment of Protestantism by Elizabeth ; the peaceful union of the crowns of England and of Scotland under the sovereign James I., by virtue of his descent from Henry VII., whose great-grandson he was (1603) ; the beheading of his son, Charles I. (1649), and the establishment of the commonwealth ; the restoration of monarchy under Charles II. (1660) ; the Revolution, in which James II. lost his crown, and was succeeded by his daughter Mary, with her husband, William, Prince of Orange (1688) ; the accession of George I., elector of Hanover, the first of the present reigning family, who came to the throne (1714) by virtue of his descent from James I., whose great-grandson he was ; and the Union between Great Britain and Ireland, in the year 1800, from which time Ireland has ceased to have its own Parliament, and the British Islands have been denominated the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or the British Empire.

CIVIL DIVISIONS OF ENGLAND, &c.—The Anglo-Saxons in England, as we have already seen, formed successively under kings, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight small states, which were gradually reduced by conquest to three (Wessex, Mercia, Northumbria), that remained to a certain extent distinct and important after they had been finally incorporated into one. Ingulphus affirms that Alfred divided the kingdom into counties, hundreds, and tythings, when he had an inquisition taken, which served as a model of the Domesday survey. The division of England into counties, each having an ealdorman discharging civil and military functions under the king and his council, was evidently based upon the old divisions of the country. The shire is an important division of the kingdom, and each shire has numerous officers—(1) a lord-lieutenant, who is also (2) custos-rotulorum, or keeper of the archives, except in counties of cities ; (3) a sheriff, who appoints (4) an under-sheriff ; (5) justices of the peace, all appointed by the Crown ; (6) a county treasurer, and (7) a clerk of the peace, generally an attorney, who is appointed by the custos-rotulorum ; (8) the county coroners are elected by the freeholders, as (9) the knights of the shire were formerly. The revenue of the shires is chiefly derived from rates, which are struck by the justices of the peace at quarter sessions. The rates, which were formerly collected by the high constables (or constables of hundreds), are directed under 7 and 8 Vict., c. 33, to be collected by the board of guardians, and to be paid by them to the county treasurer. The county expenditure, as is seen at page 3, is chiefly incurred in maintaining bridges, jails, police, prisoners, lunatic asylums, and the various county officers ; some of whom are paid, although the majority of offices are honorary, and are discharged gratuitously.

Next to the shire came the trything or riding, a term which implies a third part ; a mode of division in England now peculiar to Yorkshire, but common in Lincolnshire and some other counties in the Anglo-Saxon era. The chief magistrate was called the trything-man, or lathgrieve, and presided over three, four, or more hundreds, formed into what was called a "trything," in some places a lathe, and in other places a rape ; hence we have the lathes of Kent, the rapes of Sussex, the parts of Lincoln, and the trythings or ridings of Yorkshire. Subdivisions of the shires have existed since the age of Alfred, and hundreds, tythings, and hides are named in the early Anglo-Saxon laws, charters, and other records. The notices are, however, by no means precise, nor are they all consistent either with themselves or with what is found to exist of the ancient divisions in later times. The simplest view may be thus stated : England was divided into hides, about 274,950 in number, and a hide of land, containing 100 or 120 acres, supported a free family ; ten such free families constituted a tything ; ten or twelve tythings a hundred ; an indefinite number of hundreds a shire. The hundred is used in the Domesday return as a well-defined territorial division of the county. The hundred in East Anglia consisted of twelve leets (peoples) grouped by threes in four head-leets ; and the hypothesis, that the hundred generally should contain twelve tythings, each of which had a head-man, tything-man ; and the twelve tything-men of the hundred, a foreman or hundred-man at its head, meeting in court twelve times a year, represents the Teutonic and northern theory of this institution as accurately, perhaps, as any other that has been proposed. On this hypothesis, England should have been divided into 2263 hundreds, and 27,156 tythings ; districts undoubtedly of a convenient size for many administrative purposes, and agreeing pretty closely with the number of subdistricts (2195) and enumeration districts (32,543) into which the country has been divided for the purpose of registration and of taking the census.

In naming the districts corresponding to hundreds in Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, and Nottinghamshire, the term "hundred" was abandoned, and "wapentake" was used ; and in the four northern counties of Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmoreland, we find "ward" used for the same purpose. This naming is supposed to have arisen from the warding or guarding necessary in that part of the country against the frequent incursions of the Scots. There is another peculiarity in the northern counties ; the parishes, like those of Scotland, are seven or eight times as large as the parishes of the midland and southern counties of England. The hundred-man, above mentioned, was the captain of his hundred in the time of war, as well as their civil magistrate in time of peace ; and for the performance of his duties he received one-third of all the fines imposed in his court. The court commonly met once every month, and all the members, in imitation of their German ancestors, came to it in arms ; a custom from which it obtained the name of the "wapentac" or "wapentake." At the beginning of each meeting, all the members touched with their spears that of the hundred-man, in token of acknowledging his authority and being ready to fight under his command. In these courts the archdeacon, and sometimes the bishop, presided with the hundred-man, and both civil and ecclesiastical affairs were taken cognisance of in them. The hundred courts did not possess the power of inflicting capital punishment, and an appeal lay from them to the trything, the next superior court.

The divisions existing in all the counties of England and Wales, for the purposes of special and petty sessions, are in general based upon the hundreds and other ancient county subdivisions. By the authority of various Acts of Parliament, the justices at quarter sessions may alter and rearrange these sessional divisions, and they are empowered to adopt the same limits as poor-law unions. In the exercise of these powers the justices have occasionally transferred parishes and places from one division to another, and, for the convenience of the constables or of the public, annexed such parishes to others in a particular hundred of the division to which they have been assigned. By this transference, the parishes thus dealt with for a special purpose have come to be considered, for all purposes whatever, parts of the hundred to which they have been added, and have thenceforward been deemed as much part of the hundred as any of the other parishes which may have been named as belonging to it in the Domesday survey. The census returns show that in 1871 there were 700 petty sessional divisions throughout England, and 193 boroughs with petty sessions, 97 of the latter having separate quarter sessions also. For police purposes there are 622 divisions, including 167 boroughs with police not under county control.

On the invasion of England by the Anglo-Saxons, as we have seen in preceding pages, the woods were no longer the towns of the natives. The British Celts had been collected in cities, polished but subjugated by the Roman legionaries, who lived in villas, on taxes which their publicans collected. As the Roman towns still existed, some of their forms and institutions may have remained, and have impressed on the populations of London, York, and other cities some modification of the national institutions of the Anglo-Saxons and Scandinavians. These modifications can, however, rarely be traced. The condition and circumstances were no longer the same in the fertile cultivated soil of England as they had been on the western shores of the Continent, and the new races adapted themselves to the change; but their relations to each other, to their families, and to their princes required free institutions of a character very different from the provincial organisation of the declining Roman Empire. The Anglo-Saxon borough was a modification of the hundred; the burgesses were bound to each other as neighbours, responsible for each other to surrounding communities, sharing common burdens, classified further in guilds of trades or companies, which sprang up with the division of labour, and banded firmly together for the defence of their walls and dwellings. "It must be clearly understood," observes one of the ablest of our constitutional historians, "that a Saxon burgh was nothing more than a hundred, or an assemblage of hundreds, surrounded by a moat, a stockade, or a wall; and the name of the hundred was actually given to some of the most considerable cities, burghs, and towns of England. No right was conferred or destroyed by the feeble fortification which protected the burgesses; and the jurisdiction of the burgh-moote, or port-moote, differed from that possessed by the analogous district in the open country, only in consequence of the police required by a more condensed population, and the institutions, perhaps of Roman origin, which incorporated the trading portion of the community; all of which were extraneous to the primitive territorial jurisdiction of the burgh, and in no respect affecting its constitutional existence or nature." The eleven cities of London, Bristol, Canterbury, Chester, Exeter, Gloucester, Lichfield, Lincoln, Norwich, Worcester, York, and the five towns of Kingston-upon-Hull, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Nottingham, Poole, Southampton, in England, and two, Caermarthen and Haverfordwest, in Wales, are "counties of themselves;" as was also the city of Coventry till a comparatively recent period. The cities on the old Roman sites maintained their independence of the country around them, as well as of the early Anglo-Saxon kingdoms, to a larger extent than other towns, as is indicated by their independent county jurisdiction.

Some of the ancient boroughs fell into decay, new boroughs sprang up in other parts of the country, many towns were created boroughs for purposes not now very intelligible, and with the rapid increase of population which began after 1750, and has gone on now for more than a century—through four successive generations—the houses have spread beyond the limits of the old boroughs and cities. In 1835 a great change was made in their constitution, and the limits of many were enlarged by the adoption of the new boundaries, settled for the purpose of parliamentary elections, after an inquiry by commissioners into the circumstances of each place. The commissioners appointed to inquire into municipal corporations, experienced at the outset of their labours some difficulty in ascertaining the number of corporate bodies in England and Wales. Acting upon the best information that they were able to collect, they visited and instituted inquiries in 285 places. Of these, 16 contained corporations which proved to be of a character exclusively memorial, 178 were subsequently placed under the operation of the Municipal Corporation Act (5 & 6 Will. IV., c. 76), and two of the number (Hartlepool and Ashton-under-Lyne) were at a more recent period brought under the provisions of that statute on new charters being granted to them; the remaining 89 were ultimately left undisturbed by the legislative enactment. During the period which has elapsed since the investigation was made into the condition of the municipal boroughs, some of the unreformed corporations have ceased to exercise any active functions, having become, in fact, either extinct or dormant, while others, although still claiming to be corporations, are municipal only in name. By section 141 of the Municipal Corporations Act, charters of incorporation may be granted to towns on the petition of the inhabitant householders, if her Majesty, by the advice of the Privy Council, shall think fit to grant them. The number of towns which have so obtained charters since 1835 is 45, but several considerable places are still without municipal corporations. The total number of municipal boroughs in England and Wales, in 1871, was 224, and within their limits there were 1,229,214 inhabited houses, and a population of 6,606,909. The affairs of municipal boroughs are administered by councils, elected in the several wards; by a mayor and aldermen, elected by the council; auditors and assessors, elected by the burgesses; a treasurer and a town clerk, appointed by the council. Such functionaries exist in every reformed borough; others may be appointed. Justices of the peace may be appointed by the Queen; so may salaried police magistrates, and a recorder, after petition by the council to the Crown. There are coroners of the borough. The control of the police, the administration of justice, the lighting and paving of the streets, and other local functions are in the hands of the corporation.

Considerable changes were made in the parliamentary representation of England and Wales by the Reform Act of 1867 (30 and 31 Vict., c. 102). The franchises were altered, the limits of existing parliamentary boroughs were extended, new boroughs were created and others disfranchised, new divisions of some counties were made, and the number of members underwent redistribution. The boroughs disfranchised by this Act were Totness, Reigate, Great Yarmouth, and Lancaster; and subsequently a further disfranchisement of English boroughs was made by the Scotch Reform Act of 1868 (31 and 32 Vict., c. 48), those boroughs being Arundel, Ashburton, Dartmouth, Honiton, Lyme Regis, Thetford, and Wells. The boroughs enfranchised in 1867 were Chelsea, Darlington, the Hartlepoles, Stockton, Gravesend, Burnley, Staleybridge, Wednesbury, Middlesborough, Dewsbury, and (by the division of the Tower Hamlets) Hackney. A member was also given to the University of London. An additional representative was given to Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, Leeds, Salford, and Merthyr Tydfil; while the following boroughs were reduced each to one representative—Evesham, Marlborough, Harwich, Richmond, Lymington, Chippenham, Bridport, Stamford, Chipping Wycombe, Poole, Knaresborough, Andover, Leominster, Tewkesbury, Ludlow, Ripon, Huntingdon, Maldon, Buckingham, Newport (Isle of Wight), New Malton, Tavistock, Lewes, Cirencester, Bodmin, Great Marlow, Devizes, Hertford, Dorchester, Lichfield, Cockermouth, Bridgnorth, Guildford, Chichester, and Windsor. The alterations in the divisions of counties were as follow: Cheshire was divided into north, mid, and south; Derbyshire into north, south, and east; Devonshire into north, east, and south; Essex into north-west, north-east, and south; West Kent into west and mid; North Lancashire into north, and north-east; South Lancashire into south-east and south-west; Lincolnshire into north, mid, and south; Norfolk into west, north-east, and south-east; Somersetshire into east, mid, and west; Staffordshire into north, west, and east; East Surrey into east and mid; and the West Riding of Yorkshire into north, mid, and south.

After his accession in 1066, the Conqueror seized, besides the Crown lands, the lands of the Anglo-Saxon or Danish proprietors who fell in the battle of Hastings; and in the course of his reign acquired the estates of many rebellious thanes. As we have already seen, he distributed a large portion of these lands as the pay of past and future services among the chieftains in his army, who retained large domains for themselves, and distributed the rest on similar terms among the officers and men under their command. The estates of the Church, and of the chief monasteries also, passed into the hands of the Norman clergy. In the Domesday Record the kingdom is divided into counties; the counties into the lands of the king, bishop, and tenants in chief; and these again into manors, under the respective hundreds, which generally are the whole or parts of several manors. Villa was another term for manor or lordship. The manor was what Bede had called the "place" (locus), in the midst of which the churches were built, or the old temples had stood; the village and surrounding neighbourhood, where the people lived for the sake of society and of defence, with their headman or thane. The home of the chief tenant often became a castle in the period immediately following the Norman Conquest. The lord-resident, either in a castle, with its keep and mount, in a hall, or in a fortified house, and with his court encroaching on the hundred court, for a time gave a new character and name to the township, the priestshire, or the parish; but it is much more probable that the old subdivisions, which had existed for centuries, and are sometimes named vills in the reign of Edward the Confessor, were chosen as the limit of the manor, than that the country was wholly recast and divided into the same number of new districts in the reign of William I. Manors underwent changes, and new manors were frequently created, until the statute Quia emptores put an end to their increase in the reign of Edward I. (1290). The lords of new manors probably erected churches and appointed clergymen, according to the common theory; but the parish boundaries, surrounding the old township, guarded by the spiritual supervision of the priest, and by the tithe-owner, were not originally derived from the manor, and only assumed their legitimate importance in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when they were made the area of the district which by rates maintained its own poor. The term parish is frequently used by the clergy in one sense, and by the poor-law authorities in another; while in the census returns of 1871 a new term, "civil parish," has been adopted to designate a place separately rated to the relief of the poor, and not otherwise described.

The division of the country ecclesiastically into dioceses, archdeaconries, and deaneries took place in very early times. Most of the present bishoprics were founded in the Anglo-Saxon period, and on their first formation had their limits coextensive with the boundaries of the kingdoms of the sovereigns who formed them. Subdivisions soon, however, were discovered to be necessary, and the Council of Hereford, convened by Archbishop Theodore, decreed that, as the faithful grew to be more numerous, the number of sees should also be increased. The first subdivision was made by this prelate in the diocese of York; and the various princes, with the sanction of the Pope, subsequently made repeated alterations, until at length the whole arrangement settled into its existing shape, excepting the additions made by Henry VIII., and by the recent Act of Parliament. Henry, with a portion of the proceeds of the confiscated monasteries, founded seven new bishoprics—viz., Gloucester, Bristol, Peterborough, Oxford, Westminster, Chester, and Man. The bishopric of Westminster, however, only lasted till 1550, when it was again incorporated with the see of London; and the Act of 6 and 7 Will. IV., c. 77, united into one the sees of Gloucester and Bristol, and created two additional, Manchester and Ripon. By this statute the Ecclesiastical Commissioners were authorised to alter the limits of nearly all the rest, by effecting a transference of parishes from one to another, with a view to the more convenient distribution of territory and population. The diocese of Peterborough contains the entire county of Northampton, except parts of the parishes of Thurning, Winwick, and Warkworth; part of the county of Derby—viz., parts of the parishes of Appleby and Packington, and part of Hartshorn, with boundary formerly extra-parochial; part of the county of Huntingdon—viz., the parish of Washingley, and parts of the parishes of Luddington and Lutton; the whole of Leicestershire, except parts of the parishes of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Seal, Merevale, and Ravenstone; the entire county of Rutland; and part of Warwick—viz., parts of the parishes of Claybrooke and Hinckley. The number of inhabited houses in the diocese, in 1871, was 115,467, and the population 532,957. (See page 2.)

Archdeacons anciently were only members of chapters without territorial jurisdiction. The assignment of specific limits for archdeaconries took place soon after the Conquest. The Act of 6 and 7 Will. IV., c. 77, gives power to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to rearrange the boundaries of the ancient, and to form certain new archdeaconries. Rural deaneries were recognised ecclesiastical divisions of a diocese in Anglo-Saxon times. They seem to have been designed to correspond with the hundred in the political division of the country, as archdeaconries were possibly intended to correspond with counties. The etymology of the word (decanus) favours this idea; and it is not improbable that all such deaneries originally embraced districts with ten churches, and no more; their boundaries, once settled, never having been disturbed, although increase of population caused an increase in the number of religious edifices. In the diocese of Peterborough there are two archdeaconries, Northampton and Leicester, the former comprising the deaneries of Brackley, Daventry, Haddon, Higham Ferrers, Northampton, Oundle, Peterborough, Preston, Rothwell, Weldon, Weedon, and Rutland, or twelve in all; the latter includes Akeley West, Akeley East, Christianity or Leicester, Framland, Goscote, Guthlaxton, and Sparkenhoe, or seven in all, making a total of nineteen deaneries, several of which are divided into "portions," each "portion" having its own rural dean and other officers.

The ancient primary division of the land, for spiritual purposes, was exclusively into parishes; but, in the course of time, as population increased, and additional churches were erected, certain portions of particular parishes came to be assigned by custom to the newly-established places of worship; and these at length, under the name of chapelries, acquired boundaries as definite and generally recognised as those of the parent parish. This is especially the case in the more northern counties, where, the parishes being of very large extent, while the population has increased with great rapidity, the need for such a further subdivision soon became apparent. The number of such chapelries throughout England and Wales is not accurately known, but it must be very considerable. In more modern times many other districts have been originated by the force of similar circumstances, without, however, having obtained, by custom or otherwise, any legally-recognised boundaries. These conventional districts are generally created, upon the erection of a new church in any populous parish, by private arrangement between the rector or vicar of the mother church, and the incumbent of the new benefice, and are formed solely for the purpose of securing a more effective spiritual oversight of the entire population. Since 1856 the functions of the commissioners for building new churches have been merged in those of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, the latter body and the bishops being now the sole authorities empowered to assign legal districts to churches where this is not done by special

Act of Parliament. England is ecclesiastically divided into 2 provinces, 28 dioceses (including Sodor and Man), 71 archdeaconries, and 728 rural deaneries; altogether about 3000 ecclesiastical districts have been constituted, and the total number of cures or benefices in the country is estimated at about 13,080.

Extra-parochial places, which ought no longer to exist, as such places, as the term implies, were included in no parish, and are usually found to have been the site of religious houses, or of ancient castles, the owners of which did not permit any interference with their authority within their own limits; and in early times the existence of such exemptions from the general government of the county is not surprising. In the language of the ancient law of England they were not geldable nor shire ground; and as the sheriff was the receiver-general in his own county, extra-parochial places were not taxable, nor within the ordinary pale of civil jurisdiction; and the inhabitants are still virtually exempt from many civil duties and offices, served not without inconvenience by others, for the benefit of the community at large.

The laws relating to the Militia may be said to affect directly or indirectly every man in the country. In the several counties subdivisions of lieutenancy have been constituted for the purpose of raising the militia quotas; provision has also been made for the making of lists of men liable to serve, and for the balloting and enrolling of men to supply vacancies. The acts authorising these proceedings being suspended only, they may be put in force at any time by order in Council. Throughout England there are altogether 621 subdivisions of lieutenancy. Of these subdivisions there are ten in Northamptonshire—viz., those of Brackley, with a male population of 9036; Daventry, 10,516; Kettering, 11,034; Little Bowden, 4436; Northampton, 37,614; Oundle, 6770; Peterborough, 12,852; Thrapston, 6309; Towcester, 8092; and Wellingborough, 14,200; making a total male population of 120,859.

Under the Act for the better management of highways in England (25 and 26 Vict., c. 61), a new set of county divisions is in the course of formation for applying the principle of union of parishes, which has worked so advantageously under the new Poor-Law. By this statute power is given to justices in general or quarter sessions, to issue orders for dividing their county into highway districts, to consist of parishes and places not comprised within the jurisdiction of boards constituted under other Acts. The Act came into effect in 1863, and 443 highway districts have been formed under its provisions; the character of the measure being obtained, it has only been partially adopted.

About the year 690, Ina, King of the West Saxons, made a code of laws the fourth section of which is to the following purport: "The first-fruits of seeds, or Church dues, arising from the product of corn, &c., are to be paid at the feast of St Martin, and let him that fails in the payment forfeit forty shillings," as Lambert reads it; or, according to Sir Henry Spelman, sixty shillings; and, besides, pay the dues twelve times over. In section 62d, "Church dues are to be paid where the person owing them dwells in the midst of winter." These laws appear to be the first on record respecting such maintenance for the Church, and on this account are mentioned here. The gifts and oblations which the primitive Christians, in their devotedness and zeal for religion, made as acts of piety, were transformed by usage and custom into a right, and are now advanced into the firmer title of ordinance. Hence modern lawyers say that titles are due of common right, as having existed since the first establishment of churches, and made regular from the division of parochial limits.

QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY.—From a very early period every bishop and clergyman has been required to pay the amount of his first year's incumbency into a fund called, in consequence, "First-Fruits;" and every succeeding year, as long as he is in possession of his living, he has been required to pay one-tenth part of his income into a fund hence called "The Tenth." In 1290 a valuation for this purpose was made of all the ecclesiastical livings in England, and the book containing that record is preserved in the Remembrancer's Office under the title of "Valor of Pope Nicholas IV." At the time of the Reformation there was a law passed, that the first-fruits and tenths should be applied to the use of the State, and that any bishop or clergyman neglecting to pay these imposts into the public treasury should be declared an intruder into his living, and should forfeit double the amount; and in order to ascertain the full amount, an accurate and full valuation was made of all the ecclesiastical livings in England and Wales. Except during a short period in the reign of Queen Mary, the first-fruits and tenths continued to be paid into the public exchequer till the reign of Queen Anne, who, deploring the wretched condition of many of the poor clergy, owing to the insufficiency of their livings, determined that the first-fruits and tenths of all the livings of the bishops and clergy should be paid into a fund called "Queen Anne's Bounty," and that the amount should be appropriated to the augmentation of the livings of the poor clergy. As there was no fresh valuation instituted in the time of Queen Anne, the first-fruits and tenths continued to be paid according to that made by Henry VIII. in 1535, and which was registered in what was called the Liber Regis, the King's Book, to which we shall frequently have to refer in the accounts of Church livings, at subsequent pages. That this payment might not operate oppressively, the first year's income was to be paid by four annual instalments, and all livings of small value were entirely exempt, and hence are called discharged livings. For the faithful administration of Queen Anne's Bounty Fund, the archbishops and bishops were all made governors, along with a number of other persons, and the administration has been in their hands from that time. Since the establishment of this fund, an enormous increase has taken place in the value of Church livings, except those of the lower class, though the first-fruits and tenths continue to be paid on the valuation of 1535, which yields only an annual income of about £15,000. A very large sum would now be derived if the first-fruits and tenths were collected on the valuation of the revenues of the Established Church in England and Wales, made on an average of the three years, ending December 31st, 1831, and presented to Parliament in 1835, as appears from the Report of the Commissioners appointed by his late majesty King William IV., and which amounted to an aggregate net income of £3,055,564 per annum. The valuation of all the benefices within the limits of this work, in 1535, and in the Commissioners' Report of 1835, will be shown at subsequent pages in the histories of the various parishes and chapelries in the county.

POOR-LAWS.—As Judge Blackstone says, the Poor-Laws are founded on the very principles of civilised society; and when the lands became property, they carried with them the charge of providing for the destitute. The proprietors of land under the feudal system provided for the poor; and after the introduction of Christianity, the indigent were supported out of the tithes and estates of the churches and monastic institutions. Many of the latter were richly endowed for religious, educational, and benevolent purposes. This was the state of things when Henry VIII. suppressed the monasteries and confiscated their property, part of which, as has been stated, was the real bona fide property of the poor, who were thus deprived of their ancient rights, and left in a state of the utmost destitution, which obliged Queen Elizabeth to impose poor-rates on all occupiers of land, houses, and other property.

The maladministration of the old poor-law had become an evil of the greatest magnitude, which was eating like a canker into the heart of the nation; pauperising the labouring population of whole counties, reducing them to a state of deep degradation, taking away the motive and the reward of industry, and oppressing that capital which was intended to employ and remunerate labour. In some counties the regular employment of labourers had nearly ceased, many farmers paying their workmen only half wages, and sending them to the overseers for what more was necessary for the bare subsistence of their families. This system cut the very sinews of industry, took away its reward, and levelled all distinctions of skill and awkwardness, and virtue and vice. It made the labourer a pauper, left him without any encouragement for good conduct, and gave him a positive interest in marrying early, however imprudently, as his allowance from the parish was so much per head ; and it was so calculated that he was more comfortable with a large than a small family. In like manner, women having illegitimate children were actually gainers by their shame, in consequence of the parish allowance. But the new Poor-Law Act of 1834 amended both the law and the practice ; it benefited both the employers and the employed, and raised the labourers of whole counties from the condition of paupers to that of independent workmen, by diverting immense sums of money from the degrading channel of parish pay into the honourable channel of wages of labour. The unions, already named at page 4, will be fully described at subsequent pages.

CHARITIES.—Charitable institutions and bequests, both for the relief and education of the poor, are as numerous in Northamptonshire as in any part of the kingdom, as will be seen in the histories of the towns and parishes, where we have given brief but explicit accounts and descriptions of the public institutions, almshouses, and benefactions of each place ; in which task we have availed ourselves of the Reports of the Commissioners deputed by Parliament to inquire into the State and Appropriation of Public Charities in England. This commission owed its existence to that indefatigable lawyer and senator Henry Brougham, the late Lord Brougham and Vaux, who doubtless intended it to have been conducted in a more effective and less expensive manner, similar to those which had been instituted for the same purpose in several previous reigns. It came into operation in 1817, but did not finish till 1835, though in 1827 no less than £138,850 had been paid by the nation to the commissions, in salaries and other extravagant charges. The reports comprise thirty-six large folio volumes, published for the use of Parliament and the public libraries. The spirit of all that relates to Northamptonshire has been transferred to these pages, together with the substance of the last year's reports, published by the trustees and managers of the other institutions and charities, which afford such publicity of their receipts and expenditure.

MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS.—During the ages of Catholicism, monasteries possessed a great portion of wealth and population in every part of the kingdom. Some of them enjoyed exclusive jurisdiction and peculiar exemptions and privileges ; others were dependent, and some were still more subordinate. These establishments included the various distinctions of abbeys, priories, nunneries, colleges, preceptories, commanderies, hospitals for lepers, &c., besides a much larger number of chantries, guilds, and free chapels. The preceptories and commanderies of knights hospitallers, and knights templars of St John of Jerusalem, were peculiars, governed by distinct laws, and privileged by military service. The cells were houses belonging to large monasteries, where the monks sent their junior brethren when too much crowded at home, or to perform the penance enjoined for non-compliance with monastic rules. The nature of the other institutions may be ascertained from the particular description given of them in the course of this work. England appears to have been inferior to no other country in the number of these religious institutions, and no country was more profuse in granting means for their support. Many of them were richly endowed ; and prior to their suppression, appear to have been possessed of a considerable part of the landed property of the country, and which, doubtless, furnished the great cause for their confiscation by Henry.

Henry VIII. succeeded to the throne, April 22d, 1509, when only sixteen years of age, and at the time of his accession gave promise of future goodness and piety ; expectations, however, which proved illusive, for never before nor since did such a monster in human shape pollute the royal seat of the chaste St Edward. Henry VII. bequeathed his son the largest amount of riches ever accumulated by an English sovereign, £1,800,000 in gold and silver was found in his coffers, a sum fully equal to £20,000,000 of our present currency ; yet this enormous wealth, joined to his vast yearly revenues, proved all too little to satisfy the cravings of this avaricious tyrant ; for, even after he had seized the Church's large revenues, amounting at the lowest computation to £1,600,000.

per annum, he was continually complaining of poverty, and oppressing his subjects by taxes and imposts.

The real character of Henry did not manifest itself for some years. The early part of his reign was only marked by moderation and a devout attention to religion, which lasted whilst he was guided by the counsels of Cardinal Wolsey. About the year 1521, when the novel doctrine of Martin Luther, then spreading over the Continent, began to insinuate itself into England, Henry published a treatise in defence of the seven sacraments, which Luther had assailed: it was entitled "Assertio Septum Sacramentorum Adversus Martin Luther;" and it received so much approbation from Pope Leo X. that his Holiness conferred on the author the title of "Defender of the Faith," little imagining that Henry would so soon become the greatest enemy the Catholic Church had to contend with. Unhappily the good dispositions of the king did not long continue. His heart became inflamed with pride and an impure love; in defiance of all laws, divine and human, his wife, Catherine of Arragon, was put away for Anne Boleyn; and from the date of that adulterous union, the records of Henry's reign form the foulest pages of English history.

The suppression of the monasteries was effected by this monarch, more, doubtless, for the gratification of his own avarice than for the benefit of his subjects. In a few years the king suppressed about 700 abbeys, priories, and nunneries, 90 colleges, 2400 chantries, free chapels, &c., and more than 110 hospitals. The monks and nuns, &c., were turned adrift, and their estates and possessions were seized by the king, who, after retaining sufficient to satiate his own greedy concupiscence, divided the rest among those favourite courtiers who assisted to gratify his wicked propensities. As the poor for some years suffered much from the dissolution of the monasteries, which were founded for their benefit as well as for religious purposes; and as great numbers of the people, and of the nobility and gentry, were still adherents of the old faith, great dissatisfaction and popular discontent manifested itself throughout the country, especially in the northern counties, where the people broke out into open rebellion, to the number of 30,000 men, under Robert Aske, a gentleman of considerable fortune and influence in Yorkshire. This rising was called "The Pilgrimage of Grace," and had for its object the re-establishment of the Catholic religion. The king promised to redress their grievances, but, freed from his apprehensions, forgot to redeem his promise, and in a short time the Pilgrims were again in arms, but were overpowered by the troops under the Duke of Norfolk, and many of the leaders were executed at Tyburn, Carlisle, &c.

Northamptonshire possessed many richly-endowed monastic and religious establishments; and some of the oldest specimens of ecclesiastical architecture in England are to be found in the county. Most of these old churches present excellent examples of every variety of style, from the rude Saxon to the latest perpendicular. The churches of Brixworth, Barnack, Brigstock, Castor, St Peter's and St Sepulchre's, Northampton, and Peterborough Cathedral, have considerable portions of Norman architecture; also the parish churches of Brockhall, Castle Ashby, Cotterstock, Dodford, East Haddon, Harpole, Helpstone, Kingsthorpe, Maxey, Moulton, Peakirk, Pitsford, Polebrook, Weedon Beck, and some others, present more or less of Norman character. Barnwell, All Saints', Canons Ashby, Easton, Finedon, Fotheringhay, Lowick, Raunds, Rushden, St Mary's Church, Stamford Baron, Stanwick, King's Sutton, Titchmarsh, Warmington, Whiston, Wilby, and Wollaston are all worthy of notice for their beauty or for the curious features they present. They will be found fully described in the histories of their respective parishes.

Northamptonshire, in the olden time, was rich both as to the number and variety of its religious and charitable institutions—her Gothic abbeys, priories, and nunneries, those sacred abodes of learning, piety, and sanctity, where wretchedness and indigence ever found shelter and relief. Her beautiful valleys, extensive forests, parks, and rich meadows, and the lordly castles, with their floating banners looking down in grey majesty on the scene. In every village, however small, a church or chapel reared its tower or spire or bell-turret above embosoming trees, with its little green nook of consecrated ground, where the rural dead rested in peace.

Many of these interesting churches have undergone at different periods numberless alterations, but few, if any, of an improving kind, and many of the very worst description which even ignorance or bigotry could effect. The frightful whitewash which obliterated family memorials, and defaced fresco-paintings and armorial shields, &c., under the pretext of cleanliness and comeliness, the splendid oak stalls cut up to make way for wooden boxes called pews, and the utter disregard of architectural rules displayed, both externally and internally, in these alterations, are painful subjects to dwell upon. Happily, however, these anomalies are fast disappearing, and nowhere, perhaps, has the desire for the restoration of churches more actively displayed itself than in this county. Under the auspices of the Architectural Society of the Archdeaconry of Northampton, many of the old churches have either been restored or rebuilt; and in nearly all have alterations and additions been judiciously effected during the last twenty years.

Though necessarily altered in many respects to accommodate the change in religion, these interesting structures still retain indelible accessories of Catholic rites. The sedilia, the piscina, and lyconoscope remain in most, and many contain traces both of the roodlofts and chantry parclooses. In the old churches the chancel, or sanctuary, containing the high altar, was in all cases the most elaborately decorated part of the sacred edifice. The sanctuaries of the chantries, which are usually the side aisles of the nave, have in many instances been richly endowed. "These had separate altars, having each a priest, who said mass daily; hence, very frequently, the whole of the side aisles, or chapels, were latticed in or otherwise defined, but not as the Rev. Dr Whitaker infers, to define the family vault. In fact, a chantry was often founded by the last of an ancient line, whose fathers were buried either in the churchyard or nave of the church; and the altar was endowed by him, that the adorable sacrifice of the mass might be offered in perpetuity for his own soul, and the souls of his kinsfolk, and for all Christian souls." Northamptonshire, as we have already seen, is rich in the number and beauty of her sacred edifices; and Camden's description of the county, written about two centuries ago, is equally applicable at the present day; for it is now, as it was then, "a champaign country, very populous, and everywhere adorned with noblemen and gentlemen's houses, and very full of towns and churches, insomuch that in some places there are twenty, in others thirty spires or steeples, more or less, in view at the same time."

"How beautiful they stand,
Those ancient churches of our native land!
Amid the pasture fields and dark green woods,
Amid the mountain clouds and solitudes;
By rivers broad, that rush into the sea;
By little brooks, that with a lisp'ing sound,
Like playful children, run by copse and lea!
Each in its little plot of holy ground.
How beautiful they stand
Those old grey churches of our native land!"

SANCTUARIES.—The privilege of sanctuary was granted to many churches in England, and was intended, generally, to be only temporary. Within forty days after a felon or a murderer had taken refuge he was to appear before the coroner, clothed in sackcloth, and there, in the presence of credible witnesses, confess the nature of his crime, and abjure the realm. But this abjuration of the realm lasted only during the lifetime of the reigning sovereign, after whose death the culprit had free right to return unquestioned to his home, if not previously pardoned (Rastall's "Col. of Sta. Art. Abju." sec. iii.) When kept under proper restraint, the sanctuary was a public benefit, and moderated the rigour of the common law. It allowed time for criminals to make restitution, and for the falsely accused to prove their innocence, whilst without this respite they might have suffered immediate punishment or death. In these sanctuaries offenders had their food provided in the refectory during thirty days, and if they were persons of any distinction, they had a lodging in the dormitory, or in a house within the precincts; and men generally slept in chambers over the door for the purpose of admitting such fugitives at any hour of the night. At the end of their probation, their privileges protected them to the border of the county—and they could claim the same security a second time under the like circumstances. But if a felon's life was saved a third time by the privilege of sanctuary, he became permanently a servant of the Church. This privilege being frequently abused, the Parliament of Westminster in the first of Richard II. (1378) ordained that if any took sanctuary with purpose to defraud their creditors, their lands and goods should be answerable to the discharging of their debts. Pope Innocent VIII., in 1487, granted a bull authorising the apprehension of persons who had issued from sanctuary to commit robbery or murder, although they should have taken refuge there; and that persons accused of high treason, who had taken sanctuary, might be guarded so as to prevent their escape. This was confirmed by his successor, Alexander VI., in 1493, and by Julius II. in 1504 ("Rymer," vol. xii. p. 541, and vol. xiii. p. 104).

Certain privileges of sanctuary have been recognised from the earliest ages. Moses was directed to appoint three cities of refuge for unpremeditated homicides. In heathen countries the temples and sacred enclosures offered an asylum to those who fled to them. Some authors think the rule was introduced into Britain by Lucius, King of the Belgae, who reigned towards the close of the second century. It is certain, however, that the custom of taking sanctuary in Christian churches existed in the fourth century; but the privilege does not appear to have received the sanction of the Holy See until the time of Pope Boniface V., about A.D. 620. The custom is unquestionably recognised in the code of laws promulgated by Ina, King of the West Saxons, in 693, and again by the laws of Alfred the Great in 887. It was also formally noticed and established by William the Conqueror in the fourth year of his reign. The privileges of sanctuary were greatly curtailed at different intervals by Henry VIII.; they were further abridged by an Act of James I., and finally taken away by statute c. 28, 1624, the 21st of that king's reign (Gibbon's "Codes," c. 50).

HIGH SHERIFFS OF NORTHAMPTONSHIRE.

FROM THE ACCESSION OF HENRY II. IN 1154, TO THAT OF GEORGE I. IN 1714.

(From Bridges' "History of the County.")

1154 Richard Basset	1176 Hugh Gundevill, and	1195 Simon de Pateshull
1155 Simon Fitz-Piers	" Thomas Fitz-Bernard	1196 Simon de Pateshull
1156 Simon Fitz-Piers	1177 Thomas Fitz-Bernard	1197 Simon de Pateshull
1157 Simon Fitz-Piers	1178 Thomas Fitz-Bernard	1198 Simon de Pateshull
1158 Simon Fitz-Piers	1179 Thomas Fitz-Bernard
1159 Simon Fitz-Piers	1180 Thomas Fitz-Bernard
1160 Simon Fitz-Piers	1181 Thomas Fitz-Bernard	JOHN.
1161 Hugh Gubiun	1182 Thomas Fitz-Bernard	1199 Simon de Pateshull
1162 Hugh Gubiun	1183 Thomas Fitz-Bernard	1200 Simon de Pateshull
1163 Hugh Gubiun, and	1184 Geoffrey Fitz-Piers	1201 Simon de Pateshull
" Simon Fitz-Piers	1185 Geoffrey Fitz-Piers	1202 Simon de Pateshull
1164 Simon Fitz-Piers	1186 Geoffrey Fitz-Piers	1203 Simon de Pateshull
1165 Simon Fitz-Piers	1187 Geoffrey Fitz-Piers	1204 Peter de Stokes
1166 Simon Fitz-Piers	1188 Geoffrey Fitz-Piers	1205 Robert de Saucei, and
1167 Simon Fitz-Piers		" Henry Fitz-Piers
1168 Simon Fitz-Piers	RICHARD I.	1206 Peter de Stokes
1169 Robert Fitz-Sawin		1207 Walter de Preston
1170 Robert Fitz-Sawin	1189 Geoffrey Fitz-Piers	1208 Walter de Preston
1171 Robert Fitz-Sawin	1190 Richard Engaine	1209 Robert de Braybroc
1172 Robert Fitz-Sawin	1191 Richard Engaine	1210 Robert de Braybroc
1173 Robert Fitz-Sawin	1192 Geoffrey Fitz-Piers	1211 Robert de Braybroc
1174 Hugh Gundevill	1193 Geoffrey Fitz-Piers	1212 Robert de Braybroc
1175 Hugh Gundevill	1194 Geoffrey Fitz-Piers	1213 Robert de Braybroc

1214 Robert de Braybroc
1215 Robert de Braybroc

HENRY III.

1216 Fulk de Breant
1217 Fulk de Breant
1218 Fulk de Breant
1219 Fulk de Breant
1220 Fulk de Breant
1221 Fulk de Breant
1222 Fulk de Breant
1223 Fulk de Breant
1224 Ralph de Trublevill
1225 Ralph de Trublevill
1226 Ralph de Trublevill
1227 Ralph de Trublevill
1228 Stephen de Segrave
1229 Stephen de Segrave
1230 Stephen de Segrave
1231 Stephen de Segrave
1232 Stephen de Segrave
1233 Stephen de Segrave
1234 Henry de Baud
1235 Henry de Baud
1236 Henry de Baud
1237 Henry de Baud
1238 Henry de Baud
1239 Henry de Baud
1240 William de Coleworth
1241 William de Coleworth
1242 Alan de Maydewell
1243 Alan de Maydewell
1244 Alan de Maydewell
1245 Alan de Maydewell
1246 Alan de Maydewell
1247 Alan de Maydewell, and
" Simon de Thorp
1248 Simon de Thorp
1249 Simon de Thorp, and
" Robert Basset
" Robert Basset
1251 Robert Basset, and
" William de Lisle
1252 William de Lisle, and
" Hugh de Manneby
1253 Hugh de Manneby
1254 Hugh de Manneby
1255 William de Lisle
1256 Hugh de Manneby
1257 Hugh de Manneby
1258 Eustace de Watford
1259 Simon de Pateshull
1260 Simon de Pateshull
1261 Simon de Pateshull, and
" Alan la Zusche
1262 Alan la Zusche
1263 Alan la Zusche
1264 Alan la Zusche
1265 Alan la Zusche, and
" Eustace de Watford
1266 Warin de Bassingburn
1267 John le Moyne
1268 John le Moyne
1269 John le Moyne
1270 Wm. de Boyvill
1271 William de Boyvill

EDWARD I.

1272 Roger de Seiton
1273 Roger de Seiton
1274 Gilbert de Kirkeby

1275 Gilbert de Kirkeby
1276 Gilbert de Kirkeby
1277 Gilbert de Kirkeby
1278 Gilbert de Kirkeby
1279 Thos. de Arderne
1280 Robert le Baude
1281 Robert le Baude
1282 Robert le Baude
1283 Robert le Baude
1284 Robert le Baude
1285 Robert le Baude
1286 Robert le Baude
1287 Robert le Baude
1288 Robert le Baude
1289 Robert le Baude
1290 John Druel
1291 John Daundelyn
1292 John Druel
1293 John Druel
1294 John Druel
1295 John Druel
1296 John Druel
1297 John Druel
1298 John Druel
1299 John Druel
1300 John Druel
1301 Robert Devere
1302 John de Ashton
1303 John de Ashton
1304 John de Ashton
1305 John de Ashton
1306 John de Ashton
1307 John de Ashton

EDWARD II.

1307 John de Ashton
1308 Almarie de Noers, and
" Simon de Grenehull
1309 John de Willughby
1310 John de Willughby
1311 John de Willughby
1312 Geoffrey de Braden
1313 John de Wale
1314 Nicholas de Segrave
1315 Eustace de Burnaby, and
" John de Ashton
1316 John de Hornby
1317 Robert de Ardern
1318 Richard de Lymsey,
" Robert de Veer, and
" John de Bowdon
1319 Giles de Cugenho, and
" John de Whitlebury
1320 John de Whitlebury, and
" Humphrey de Bassing-
burne
1321 Humphrey de Bassing-
burne
1322 John de Seymour
1323 John de Seymour, and
" John Daundelyn
1324 John Daundelyn
1325 John Daundelyn
1326 John Daundelyn

EDWARD III.

1327 William de Seymour of Hanyngton
1328 Eustace de Burneby
1329 Thos. Wake, Blisworth

1330 Thomas de Buckton
1331 Thomas de Buckton
1332 Wm. Lovell, Chevalier
1333 William Lovell
1334 Thomas de Buckton
1335 Thomas de Buckton
1336 Thomas Wake
1337 Thomas Wake
1338 Thomas Wake
1339 Thomas Wake
1340 Thomas Wake
1341 Thomas de Pabenharn
1342 Thomas de Pabenharn
1343 Thomas de Buckton
1344 Robert de Pavely
1345 Robert de Pavely
1346 Walter Parles
1347 Walter Parles
1348 Walter Parles
1349 Richard Blundell
1350 Richard Blundell, and
" Walter Parles
1351 Peter Malore
1352 Walter Parles
1353 Walter Parles
1354 John de Keynes
1355 John de Keynes
1356 John de Keynes
1357 John de Keynes
1358 John de Keynes
1359 Andrew de Landwath
1360 Walter Parles
1361 Richard Wydevill
1362 Richard Wydevill
1363 Richard Wydevill
1364 Richard Wydevill
1365 Richard Wydevill
1366 Richard Wydevill
1367 Richard Wydevill
1368 Thomas de Preston
1369 Thomas de Preston
1370 Richard Wydevill
1371 Simon de Pateshull
1372 Simon Warde
1373 John Carnell
1374 Thomas de Preston
1375 Robert de Botevilyn
1376 John Carnell

RICHARD II.

1377 Thomas de Preston
1378 John Carnell
1379 John Pavely
1380 John Wydevill
1381 John Lyons, Chevalier
1382 Roger de la Chambre
1383 Nicholas Lillyng
1384 Roger de la Chambre
1385 John Wydevill, and
" Ralph Grene
1386 John Pavely
1387 Roger de la Chambre
1388 Ralph Parles
1389 John Pavely
1390 John Wydevill
1391 John Tyndale
1392 John Malore
1393 John Mulsho
1394 John Harwedon
1395 Henry Mulsho
1396 John Werrewyk

1397 John Weldon
1398 John Mulsho

HENRY IV.

1399 Nicholas Bradeshagh and
" John Warrewyk
1400 John Cope
1401 John Chitewode
1402 Ralph Parles, and
" Giles Malorye
1403 Warin Lucien
1404 John Cope, and
" Ralph Greene
1405 Ralph Greene
1406 Thomas Wydevill
1407 Ralph Greene
1408 Ralph Parles
1409 Thomas Mulsho
1410 Thomas Mulsho
1411 John Chitewode
1412 Matthew Swetenham

HENRY V.

1413 Thomas Wake, and
" Ralph Parles
1414 Ralph Greene
1415 Thomas Wydevill
1416 Thomas Grene
1417 John Mantel
1418 Thomas Wake
1419 John Pilkington
1420 Thomas Wydevill
1421 Thomas Wydevill

HENRY VI.

1422 Thomas Wydevill
1423 John Holand
1424 John Catesby
1425 John Wakerly
1426 Thomas Chambre
1427 Sir John Knwet, Knt.
1428 Thomas Wydevill
1429 George Longeville
1430 William Braunsparth
1431 Sir John Colepepper
1432 Thomas Chambre
1433 Thomas Wydevill
1434 Thomas Wake
1435 John Holland, Chevalier
1436 William Vaux
1437 Richard Wydevill
1438 Thomas Chambre
1439 Eustace Burnaby
1440 Sir John Holand
1441 Sir Thomas Greene
1442 William Catesby
1443 John Merbury
1444 Henry Greene
1445 Walter Mauntell
1446 Thomas Wake
1447 Sir John Holand
1448 Eustace Burnaby
1449 William Vaux
1450 Thomas Wake
1451 William Catesby
1452 Nicholas Griffin
1453 William Vaux
1454 Sir Thomas Greene
1455 Sir William Catesby, Kt.
1456 Nicholas Griffin

1457 Thomas Greene
1458 Robert Olney
1459 Walter Mauntell
1460

EDWARD IV.

1461 William Fayrefax
1462 Thomas Wake
1463 Thomas Wake
1464 Walter Mauntell
1465 Henry Greene
1466 Henry Huddleston
1467 Ralph Hastings
1468 Roger Salisbury
1469 Guy Wolston
1470 William Newenham
1471 Ralph Hastings
1472 John Hulcott
1473 Henry Huddleston
1474 Richard Griffin
1475 Richard Knightley
1476 Roger Salisbury
1477 William Downhall
1478 William Catesby
1479 William Newenham
1480 Robert Pemberton
1481 Thomas Lovett
1482 Robert Wytteburly

RICHARD III.

1483 Robert Wytteburly
1484 Roger Wake
1485 Richard Burton

HENRY VII.

1485 Henry Veer
1486 Richard Knightley
1487 Guy Woolston
1488 David Philips
1489 Thomas Hasilwood
1490 Thomas Lovet
1491 Sir Guy Woolston
1492 Robert Wittlebury
1493 Sir Richard Vaux
1494 John Danvers
1495 John Dyve
1496 William Hertwell
1497 William Zouche
1498 Humphrey Catesby
1499 Richard Burton
1500 Fulk Woodhull
1501 Thomas Andrewes
1502 Thomas Vaux
1503 John Dyve
1504 Nicholas Griffin
1505 Thomas Lovett
1506 John Tresham
1507 Sir Richard Knightley
1508 Thomas Mulsho

HENRY VIII.

1509 Sir Thomas Parre
1510 Sir Richard Knightley
1511 John Spencer
1512 Ralph Lane
1513 John Catesby
1514 Robert Matthew
1515 Nicholas Woodhull
1516 Sir Nicholas Vaux
1517 Sir William Parre

1518 William Gascoyne
1519 Sir Thomas Lucy
1520 John Mulsho
1521 Sir William Parre
1522 Sir John Clarke
1523 Sir Wm. Fitz-Williams
1524 Sir Thomas Tresham
1525 Sir Walter Mauntell
1526 Sir Humphrey Stafford
1527 Nicholas Woodhull
1528 Sir Wm. Fitz-Williams
1529 Sir John Clarke
1530 Richard Cave
1531 Sir William Spencer, and
" David Cycill
1532 David Cycill
1533 Sir William Parre
1534 Sir Thomas Griffin
1535 Sir John Clerke
1536 Sir William Newenham
1537 Sir William Parre
1538 Anthony Catesby
1539 Sir Thomas Tresham
1540 Sir William Newenham
1541 Sir Robert Kirkeman
1542 Sir Richard Catesby
1543 Thomas Brudenell
1544 Thomas Griffin
1545 John Cope
1546 Thomas Cave

EDWARD VI.

1547 Humphrey Stafford
1548 Sir Thomas Tresham
1549 Thomas Andrews
1550 Sir Richard Catesby
1551 John Spencer
1552 Thomas Lovell

MARY.

1553 Sir Thomas Cave
1554 Sir Valentine Knightley
1555 Sir Thomas Tresham
1556 Sir Thomas Andrews
1557 Sir John Fermour
1558 Sir John Spencer

ELIZABETH.

1558 Sir John Spencer
1559 Edward Mountagu
1560 Thomas Lovett
1561 Thomas Spencer
1562 Thomas Catesby
1563 Sir John Lane
1564 Edward Brudenell
1565 Sir Humphrey Stafford
1566 Edward Elmes
1567 Sir Richard Knightley
1568 Thomas Andrews
1569 William Saunders
1570 Sir Ed. Mountagu
1571 Sir John Spencer
1572 Thomas Lovett
1573 Thomas Tresham
1574 Edward Olney
1575 Roger Cave
1576 Thomas Brooke
1577 Sir Edward Brudenell
1578 Sir Thomas Cecil
1579 William Chauncey

1580 Sir Richard Knightley
 1581 John Isham
 1582 Edward Griffin
 1583 Sir John Spencer
 1584 Eusebius Isham
 1585 Bartholomew Tate
 1586 Thomas Andrews
 1587 Edward Saunders
 1588 Sir Ed. Mountagu
 1589 Sir George Fermour
 1590 Sir John Spencer
 1591 Edward Watson
 1592 Anthony Mildmay
 1593 Tobias Chauncey
 1594 John Reade
 1595 Edward Mountagu
 1596 Thomas Mulsho
 1597 Richard Chetwood
 1598 Erasmus Dreyden
 1599 William Browne
 1600 Sir Edward Mountagu
 1601 Sir Robert Spencer
 1602 George Shirley

JAMES I.

1603 George Shirley
 1604 William Tate
 1605 Arthur Throgmorton
 1606 John Freeman
 1607 Sir William Samwell
 1608 Sir Wm. Fitz-Williams
 1609 Thomas Elmes
 1610 Sir William Saunders
 1611 Sir Thomas Tresham
 1612 Sir John Isham
 1613 Sir Eusebius Andrews
 1614 John Wiseman
 1615 William Wilmer
 1616 Geoffrey Chibnall
 1617 Sir Thomas Brooke
 1618 Sir Hatton Fermour
 1619 Sir Simon Norwich
 1620 Sir Erasmus Dryden
 1621 Sir Lewis Pemberton
 1622 John Hanbury
 1623 Moses Tryon
 1624 Edward Shuckburgh

CHARLES I.

1625 Sir William Chauncey
 1626 Sir Richard Knightley
 1627 Sir John Davers
 1628 John Wyrley
 1629 Sir Henry Robinson
 1630 Thomas Elmes
 1631 Francis Nicholls
 1632 Sir John Hewett
 1633 Sir Lewis Watson
 1634 Sir Richard Samwell
 1635 Sir John Dryden
 1636 Charles Cokaine
 1637 Sir Robert Banaster
 1638 Sir John Hanbury
 1639 Philip Holman
 1640 Sir Chris. Yelverton
 1641 Sir Anthony Haselwood
 1642 Sir William Wilmer
 1643 Edward Fermour
 1644 Edward Fermour
 1645 William Ward

COMMONWEALTH.

Under Cromwell and his son, from 1649 to 1659, no returns are made.

CHARLES II.

1660 to 1665 blank
 1666 Joseph Hanbury
 1667 Sir Robert Dryden, Bart.
 1668 Tobias Chauncey
 1669 Robert Andrews
 1670 Thomas Elmes
 1671 William Stafford
 1672 William Langham
 1673 John Thornton
 1674 Basil Brent
 1675 John Bridges
 1676 Edward Harby
 1677 — Norton
 1678 Charles Neale
 1679 Richard Saltonstall
 1680 Sir Roger Cave, Bart.
 1681 Thomas Ward

1682 Harvey Ekins
 1683 John Briscoe
 1684 Sir Matthew Dudley, Kt.

JAMES II.

1685 Henry Benson
 1686 Charles Kirkham
 1687 Edward Saunders
 1688 Thomas Andrews

WILLIAM AND MARY.

1689 William Haslings, and
 " Thomas Andrews
 1690 Thomas Catesby
 1691 John Creed
 1692 Sir William Craven
 1693 Francis Arundell
 1694 Thomas Cartwright

WILLIAM III. (alone.)

1695 Richard Lockwood
 1696 William Ward
 1697 William Cuthbert
 1698 Lucy Knightley, and
 " Thos. Thornton
 1699 Thomas Langham
 1700 Elmes Steward
 1701 William Ward

ANNE.

1702 Sir Caesar Child, Bart.
 1703 Randolph Wikes
 1704 Sir James Langham
 1705 Sir Erasmus Norwich, Bt.
 1706 Edward Stratford, and " Henry Stratford
 1707 Sir Richard Newman,
 Bart.
 1708 Elmes Spinks
 1709 Joseph Ashley
 1710 John Freeman
 1711 Lucy Knightley
 1712 Richard Freeman
 1713 John Wiseman
 1714 John Robinson

FROM THE THIRD YEAR OF THE REIGN OF GEORGE III. (1763) TO THE PRESENT YEAR (1873).

1763 Sir M. d'Anvers, Bart., Culworth.
 1764 Sir B. Williams, Bart., Clapton.
 1765 J. Harper, Esq., Burton Lattimer.
 1766 Sir G. Robinson, Bart., Cranford.
 1767 Sir J. Langham, Bart., Cottesbrooke.
 1768 T. Powys, Esq., Silford.
 1769 T. Langton, Esq., Teeton.
 1770 L. Knightley, Esq., Fawsley.
 1771 Sir W. Wake, Bart., Courteenhall.
 1772 F. Beynon, Esq., Spratton.
 1773 W. Hanbury, Esq., Kelmarsch.
 1774 L. Burton, Esq., Ringstead.
 1775 J. Clarke, Esq., Welton.
 1776 Sir J. Isham, Bart., Lampport.
 1777 R. Andrew, Esq., Harlestone.
 1778 J. Clark, Esq., Rulwick.
 1779 R. Parker, Esq., Peterborough.
 1780 Benjamin Kianey, Esq., Knuston.
 1781 N. Raynsford, Esq., Brixworth.
 1782 H. Sawbridge, Esq., East Haddon.

1783 M. Woodhull, Esq., Thenford.
 1784 R. Kerby, Esq., Floore.
 1785 W. L. L. Ward, Esq., Guilsborough.
 1786 Sir J. P. Knight, Bart., Biggin.
 1787 W. Walcot, Esq., Oundle.
 1788 Jph. Ashley, Esq., Ashby St Ledgers.
 1789 R. Hanwell, Esq., Long Buckby.
 1790 J. Willes, Esq., Astrop Wells.
 1791 Sir W. Wake, Bart., Courteenhall.
 1792 S. Rudge, Esq., Tansor.
 1793 Sir John D. Knight, Canons Ashby.
 1794 R. Booth, Esq., Glendon.
 1795 V. Knightley, Esq., Fawsley.
 1796 A. E. Young, Esq., Orlingbury.
 1797 Sir W. Langham, Bart., Cottesbrooke.
 1798 T. R. Thornton, Esq., Brockhall.
 1799 Martin Lucas, Esq., Northampton.
 1800 E. Bouverie, Esq., Delapre Abbey.
 1801 J. Sibley, Esq., Northampton.
 1802 R. E. Elwes, Esq., Great Billing.

- 1803 J. H. Thursby, Esq., Abington.
 1804 C. Tibbits, Esq., Barton Seagrave.
 1805 J. C. Rose, Esq., Cransley.
 1806 T. Carter, Esq., Edgcott.
 1807 T. Tryon, Esq., Bulwick.
 1808 G. T. Evans, Esq., Laxton Hall.
 1809 R. Andrew, Esq., Harlestone.
 1810 W. Sawbridge, Esq., East Haddon.
 1811 W. Strickland, Esq., Brixworth Hall.
 1812 P. Denys, Esq., Easton Neston.
 1813 G. Rush, Esq., Farthinghoe.
 1814 J. P. Clarke, Esq., Welton Place.
 1815 L. Vernon, Esq., Stoke Park.
 1816 Sir J. Langham, Bart., Cottesbrooke.
 1817 Sir C. Knightley, Bart., Fawsley.
 1818 J. Booth, Esq., Glendon.
 1819 Sir J. H. Palmer, Bart., Carlton.
 1820 J. Cooke, Esq., Hothorpe.
 1821 T. P. Maunsel, Esq., Thorpe Malsor.
 1822 J. Nethercoat, Esq., Haselbeech.
 1823 T. W. Hunt, Esq., Polebrook.
 1824 W. Abbot, Esq., Moulton Grange.
 1825 T. Williams, Esq., Rushden.
 1826 G. Payne, Esq., Sulby Hall.
 1827 J. J. Blencowe, Esq., Marston; St Lawrence.
 1828 H. H. H. Hungerford, Esq., Maidwell.
 1829 S. A. Severn, Esq., Thenford.
 1830 R. Pack, Esq., Floore.
 1831 B. Botfield, Esq., Norton Hall.
 1832 W. W. Hope, Esq., Rushden Hall.
 1833 W. R. Rose, Esq., Harlestone Park.
 1834 William Wood, Esq., Brixworth.
 1835 Lewis Loyd, Esq., Overstone Park.
 1836 W. Harris, Esq., Wootton House.
 1837 W. Willes, Esq., Astrop House.
 1838 J. Reddall, Esq., Dallington.
 1839 W. Drayson, Esq., Floore Fields.
 1840 Thos. Alderson Cooke, Peterborough.
- 1841 Sir Robt. Hy. Gunning, Bart., Horton.
 1842 Hon. P. S. Pierrepont, Evenley Hall.
 1843 Sir A. de Capell Brooke, Bart., Gt. Oakley.
 1844 Sir H. E. L. Dryden, Bart., Canons Ashby.
 1845 Hon. R. Watson, Rockingham Castle.
 1846 A. A. Young, Esq., Orlingbury.
 1847 T. Tryon, Esq., Bulwick.
 1848 Col. H. H. Hutchinson, Weedon Soys.
 1849 Henry Neville, Esq., Walcot.
 1850 W. B. Stopford, Esq., Thrapston.
 1851 Sir C. E. Isham, Bart., Lamport.
 1852 L. Christie, Esq., Preston Deanery.
 1853 C. C. Elwes, Esq., Great Billing.
 1854 Lord Henley, Watford Court, Rugby.
 1855 T. V. Sartoris, Esq., Rushden.
 1856 O. W. Hamborough, Pipwell Hall.
 1857 W. H. J. M. Dolben, Esq., Finedon.
 1858 J. C. Mansel, Esq., Cosgrove.
 1859 Hon. C. H. Cust, Arthingworth.
 1860 Wm. Capel Clarke Thornhill, Rushton Hall.
 1861 J. E. Severn, Esq., Thenford.
 1862 W. Smyth, Esq., Little Houghton.
 1863 George Ashby Ashby, Esq., The Woolleys, Naseby.
 1864 Alfred Rush, Esq., Farthinghoe Lodge.
 1865 R. A. Cartwright, Esq., Edgcott House.
 1866 Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam, Milton, Peterborough.
 1867 W. S. Rose, Esq., Cransley.
 1868 Hy. de Stafford O'Brien, Esq., Blatherwycke.
 1869 Lieut.-Col. the Hon. F. W. C. Villiers, Sulby Hall.
 1870 G. L. Watson, Esq., Rockingham Castle.
 1871 Sir G. Palmer, Bart., Carlton Park.
 1872 Hy. O. Nethercote, Esq., Moulton Grange.
 1873 Sir Wm. R. Brown, Bart., Astrop Park.

PRINCIPAL OFFICERS OF THE COUNTY.

Lord-Lieutenant—His Excellency the Earl Spencer, K.G., Althorp Park, Northampton, and The Castle, Dublin. High-Sheriff—Sir William Richmond Brown, Bart., Astrop Park, Kingsutton, Banbury. Under-Sheriff—H. P. Markham, Esq., 2 Dergate, Northampton. Clerk of the Peace—H. P. Markham, Esq., County Hall, Northampton. Treasurer—M. A. Boeme, Esq., Union Bank, Northampton. Financial Clerk—Mr G. Robinson, Treasurer's Office, County Hall, Northampton. Surveyor—E. F. Law, Esq., Abington Street, Northampton.

ACTING JUSTICES OF THE PEACE FOR THE COUNTY AND DEPUTY-LIEUTENANTS.

*Those marked * are Deputy-Lieutenants.*

Chairman of Quarter Sessions—Right Hon. George Ward Hunt, M.P., Wadenhoe House, Oundle.

Deputy-Chairman—Henry Minshall Stockdale, Esq., Mear's Ashby Hall, Northampton.

- Arbuthnot Art. Esq. Woodford Hs. Thrapston.
 Arbuthnot Charles Hussey Vivian, Esq. Woodford House, Thrapston.
 Arkwright Robert Wigram, Esq. Knuston Hall, Wellingborough.
 Arthur Lieut.-Col. Thomas, Manor House, Desborough, Kettering.
 *Ashby George Ashby, Esq. The Woolleys, Naseby, Rugby.
 Barrington The Hon. Percy, Westbury Manor, Buckingham.
 Barrington Walter Bulkeley, Esq. Westbury Manor, Buckingham.
- Bateman The Right Hon. the Lord, Shobdon Court, Hereford.
 Bennett Rev. Hy. Leigh, Thorpe Pl. Chertsey.
 Berens Alexander Augustus, Esq. The Grange, Spratton, Northampton.
 Bevan Richard Lee, Esq. Brixworth Hall, Northampton.
 Bigge Matthew Robert, Esq. Islip, Thrapston.
 Booth Richard, Esq. Glendon Hall, Kettering.
 Booth Thomas, Esq. Cosgrove Priory, Stony Stratford.
 Bouverie John Augustus Sheil, Esq. De-la-Pre Abbey, Northampton.

- Brooke Sir William de Capell, Bart. The Elms, Market Harborough.
- Brooke Richard Lewis de Capell, Esq. The Elms, Market Harborough.
- Brown Sir William Richmond, Bart. Astrop Park, King's Sutton, Banbury.
- Burghley Lord Brownlow, Hy. Geo. Burghley House, Stamford.
- Campbell Col. George Herbert Frederick, Evenley Hall, Brackley, and 42 Onslow Gardens, London.
- Capron Rev. George, Halliley, Stoke Doyle, Oundle.
- Cartwright Aubrey Thomas Carter, Esq. Edgcott, Banbury.
- Cartwright Col. Henry, Eydon Hall, Banbury.
- Cartwright Major Fairfax William, M.P. Flore House, Weedon.
- *Cartwright Rd. Aub. Esq. Edgcott, Banbury.
- Cartwright Thomas Robert Brook Leslie Mellville, Esq., Newbottle, Brackley.
- Cartwright William Cornwallis, Esq. M.P. Aynho, Banbury.
- Cavendish William Thomas, Esq. Thornton Hall, Stony Stratford.
- Charlton The Rev. William Henry, Easton Rectory, Stamford.
- Christie William Langham, Esq.
- *Clarke Rd. Trev. Esq. Welton Pl. Daventry.
- Clarke Rev. William Henry, Cold Higham, Towcester.
- Craven John Albert, Esq. Whilton Lodge, Daventry.
- Cust The Hon. Charles Henry, Arthingworth, Northampton.
- Dormer Clement Cottrell, Esq. Courteenhall, Northampton.
- Drake Rev. John Tyrwhitt, Cottesbrooke Rectory, Northampton.
- *Dryden, Sir Henry Edward Leigh, Bart., Canons Ashby, Daventry.
- Duncan, William George, Esq. Bradwell House, Stony Stratford.
- Duthy Rev. William, Sudborough, Thrapston.
- Eaton, Chs. Ormtn. Esq. Toilethorpe, Stamford.
- Ellesmere, The Right Hon. the Earl of, Easton Neston House, Towcester, and Worsley Hall, Manchester.
- Elwes Val. Dud. Hy. Cary, Brigg, Lincolnshire.
- Empson Rev. Arthur John, Eydon Rectory, Banbury.
- Exeter The Most Noble the Marquis of, Burghley House, Stamford.
- FitzRoy Lord Augustus Charles Lennox, Whitebury, Towcester.
- FitzRoy Lord Frederick John, Wakefield Lodge, Stony Stratford.
- *Grafton The Most Noble the Duke of, Wakefield Lodge, Stony Stratford.
- Gunning George William, Esq. Horton House, Northampton.
- Gunning Rev. S r Henry John, Bart. Horton House, Northampton.
- Halford Sir Henry St John, Bart. Wistow, Leicestershire.
- *Hambrough Oscar William Holden, Esq. Pipwell Hall, Kettering.
- *Henley The Lord, M.P. Watford Ct. Rugby.
- Higgins Wm. Francis Esq. Turvey House, Bedford.
- Hill Joseph, Esq. Wollaston.
- Holroyd George Frederick, Esq.
- Hopkinson William Landen, Esq. M.D. St Martin's, Stamford.
- Hopkinson Rev. Wm. Great Gidding, Oundle.
- *Hunt Right Hon. George Ward, M.P. Chairman of the Court of Quarter Sessions, Wadenhoe House, Oundle; 15 Prince of Wales' Terrace, Kensington, London.
- Hutchinson Col. The Hon. Henry Hely, Weston-by-Weedon, Towcester.
- Isham Rev. Rt., Lampport Rectory, Northampt.
- Jackson William Goddard, jun. Esq. Dud-dington, Stamford.
- *Knightley Sir Rainald, Bart. M.P. Fawsley Park, Daventry.
- Knightley Rev. Val. Preston Capes, Daventry.
- Lamb Richard Howson, Esq. Bragborough Hall, Braunston, Rugby.
- Langham Herbert, Esq. Cottesbrooke Park, Northampton.
- *Leigh Ed. Allesley Boughton Ward Boughton, Esq. Newbold-on-Avon, Rugby.
- Lindsay Col. Loyd, M.P. Overstone Park, Northampton.
- Litchfield Rev. Francis, Farthinghoe Rectory, Brackley.
- *Lilford The Right Hon the Lord, Lilford House, Thrapston.
- Lowndes Lieut.-Col. John Henry, Braunston, Rugby.
- *Lyveden The Right Hon. the Lord, G.C.B. P.C. Farming Woods, Thrapston.
- Mansel John Christopher, Esq. Cosgrove Hall, Stony Stratford.
- Maunsell Thomas Cokayne, Esq. Blisworth House, Northampton.
- Morrell Charles, Esq. Bosbury, Ledbury.
- Morgan George Manners, Esq. Biddlesden Park, Brackley.
- Naylor Richard Christopher, Esq. Kelmarsh Hall, Northampton; Hooton Hall, Chester.
- Nethercote Henry Osmond, Esq. Moulton Grange, Northampton.
- *North Col. John Sydney, M.P. Wroxton Abbey, Banbury.
- Northampton The Most Noble the Marquis of, Castle Ashby, Northampton.
- Oliver Robert Edmund, Esq. Sholebrooke Lodge, Towcester.
- Orlebar Rd. Esq. Hinwick Hall, Wellborough.
- Overstone The Right Hon. Lord, Overstone Park, Northampton.
- Palmer Sir Geoffrey, Bart. Carlton Park, Rockingham, Leicester.
- Pell Albert, Esq. M.P. Hazelbeach, Northampton.
- Pemberton Rev. Edward Robert, Eagle Lodge, Ramsgate.
- Pennant The Hon. Archibald Charles Henry Douglas, Wicken Park, Stony Stratford.
- Penrhyn The Right Hon. the Lord, Wicken Park, Stony Stratford, Penrhyn Castle, Bangor.
- Perceval Charles George, Esq. Calverton, Stony Stratford.
- Pilgrim, Charles, Esq.
- Pratt Spencer, Esq. Stanwick House, Higham Ferrers.
- Ramsey Beville, Esq. Croughton Prk. Brackley.
- Robinson Jno. Blenc. Esq. Cranford, Ket'ring.
- Rokeby Rev. Henry Ralph, Arthingworth Manor, Northampton.
- Rose W. George, Esq. Wolston Heath, Rugby.

Rose Wm. Somerset, Esq. Cransley, Kettering.
 Rush Alf. Esq. Farthinghoe Lodge, Brackley.
 Russell Jesse David Watts, Esq. Biggin Grange, Oundle.
 Russell Jesse Watts, Esq. Biggin Grange, Oundle.
 Russell Rev. Robert Norris, Beachampton, Stony Stratford.
 Sackville S. G. Stopford, Esq. M.P. Drayton House, Thrapston.
 Salmon Henry Thomas, Esq. Fern Park, Tockington, Almondsbury, Gloucestershire.
 Sartoris Frederick Urban, Esq. Rushden Hall, Higham Ferrers.
 *Severne John Edmd. Esq. Thenford, Banbury.
 Seymour Alf. Esq. Norton Hall, M.P. Daventry.
 Small Rev. Harry Alexander, Clifton Reynes, Olney, Bucks.
 Smith, Jno. Williams, Esq. Manor Ho. Oundle.
 *Spencer His Exclly. the Earl, K.G. The Castle, Dublin; Althorp Park, Northampton.
 *St Paul Dd. Rd. Esq. Everdon Hall, Daventry.
 Steele Major-Gen. Thomas Montague, 36 Chester Square, London (S.W.)
 Stockdale Henry Minshall, Esq. Deputy-Chairman of the Court of Queen's Sessions, Mear's Ashby Hall, Northampton.
 Stopford Capt. Edward, R.N. Daventry.
 Stratton John Locke, Esq. Turweston House, Brackley.
 Stratton Geo. Esq. Husband's Bosworth, Rugby.
 Tailby William Ward, Esq. Skeffington Hall, Leicester.
 *Tibbits John Borlase, Esq. Barton Seagrave, Kettering.
 Thornhill William Capel Clarke, Esq. Rush-ton Hall, Kettering.
 Trevelyan, Rev. William Pitt, Calverton Rectory, Stony Stratford.
 Tryon Lieut.-Col. Thomas, Bulwick Park, Wansford.
 Vernon The Hon. and Rev. Courtney John, Grafton Underwood, Kettering.
 *Vernon The Hon. Fitzpatrick Henry, Laundimer House, Oundle.
 Vivian Major Quintus, 17 Chesham Street, Belgrave Square, London (S.W.)
 Wake Drury, Esq. Pitsford, Northampton.
 Westmoreland The Right Hon. the Earl of, Apethorpe, Wansford.
 Walpole Reginald Robert, Esq. Hanslope Park, Bucks.
 Watson George Lewis, Esq. Rockingham Castle, Leicester.
 *Wilkins Thomas, Esq. Denbury House, Newton Abbot, Devon.
 Willes Charles Thomas, Esq. Manor House, King's Sutton, Banbury.
 *Young Allen Allicocke, Esq. Orlingbury, Wellingborough.

CLERKS TO THE MAGISTRATES.—Brackley—A. Weston, Esq. Middleton Cheney—A. Weston, Esq. Daventry—E. C. Burton, Esq. Kettering—G. W. Lamb, Esq. Little Bowden—G. W. Lamb, Esq. Northampton—Wm. Tomalin, Esq. Oundle—E. C. Sherard, Esq. Peterborough—N. Wilkinson, Esq. Stamford Baron—D. J. Evans, Esq. Stony Stratford—E. S. Harris, Esq. Thrapston—Geoffrey Hawkins, Esq. Towcester—R. Howes, Esq. Wellingborough—G. H. Burnham, Esq.

COUNTY CONSTABULARY.

Those marked thus † are Sergeants' Stations.

HEADQUARTERS.—Office—St Giles' Square, Northampton. Chief Constable—H. L. Bayly, Esq., St. Giles' Square. Chief Clerk—Mr William T. Lalor, 25 Wood Street. Surgeon—H. Terry, jun., Esq., St. Giles' Street. Inspector Detective—Thomas Swain. Drill-Instructor—Sergt. Wm. Delworth.

BRACKLEY DIVISION.—Superintendent—J. Osborn, Towcester. Inspector—Charles Botterill, Brackley. Stations—† Middleton, Cheney, King's Sutton, Helmdon, Grimsbury, Culworth, Brackley, Upper Boddington, Moreton Pinkney.

DAVENTRY DIVISION.—Superintendent—John Bailie, Weedon. Inspector—D. Browning, Daventry. Stations—† Byfield, West Haddon, † Weedon, Staverton, Long Buckby, Crick, Everdon, Daventry, Braunston.

KETTERING DIVISION.—Dep. C. C. and Superintendent—W. Stoker, Kettering. Inspector—Daniel Norman, Kettering. Stations—Broughton, Rothwell, Kettering, † Gretton, Geddington, Desborough, Corby, Burton Latimer, Cottingham.

LITTLE BOWDEN DIVISION.—Dep. C. C. and Superintendent—W. Stoker, Kettering. Inspector—William Tye, Little Bowden. Stations—Wilbarston, Welford, Naseby, Kelmarsch Clipstone, Little Bowden.

NORTHAMPTON DIVISION.—Superintendent—L. Poole, Wellingborough. Inspector—G. Williamson, Northampton. Stations—Roade, † Yardley Hastings, St James' End, † Northampton, Moulton, Kingsthorpe, Little Houghton, Hardingstone, Far Cotton, Spratton, Harpole, Floore, East Haddon, Bugbrooke, Brixworth, Walgrave, Hackleton, Weston Favell.

OUNDLE DIVISION.—Superintendent—J. F. Noble, Oundle. Inspector—J. T. Evans, Oundle. Stations—Warmington, Oundle, † King's Cliffe, Easton, Barnwell All Saints', Bulwick, Nassington, Benefield.

THRAPSTON DIVISION.—Superintendent—J. F. Noble, Oundle. Inspector—Robert Kitchen, Thrapston. Stations—Raunds, Woodford, Titchmarsh, Thrapston, Brigstock, Ringstead.

TOWCESTER DIVISION.—Superintendent—J. Osborn, Towcester. Inspector—Henry Packer, Towcester. Stations—Yardley Gobion, Towcester, Silverstone, Potterspury, Paulerspury, Foster's Booth, Deanshanger, Blisworth, Blakesley, Green's Norton, Old Stratford.

WELLINGBOROUGH DIVISION.—Superintendent—L. Poole, Wellingborough. Inspector—

G

Henry Martin, Wellingborough. Stations—Wollaston, †Wellingborough, Rushden, †Irthlingborough, Irchester, Little Harrowden, Grendon, Finedon, Earl's Barton.

LIBERTY OF PETERBOROUGH.—Chief Constable—H. L. Bayly, Esq., Northampton. Clerk—Mr W. T. Lalor, Northampton. Superintendent—Jas. Hurst, Peterbro'. Stations—Eye, Barnack, Castor, Wansford, †Helpston, Werrington, †Peterborough, Peakirk, Boongate.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE RIFLE VOLUNTEERS.

1ST ADMINISTRATIVE BATTALION.—Lieutenant-Colonel—William Henry, Duke of Grafton. Majors—His Excellency John Poyntz, Earl Spencer, K.G.; Samuel Isaac. Adjutant—Henry Landon. Hon. Quartermaster—J. Wykes. Sergeant-Major—Spencer. Surgeon—W. W. Clark, M.D.

ALTHORP (1).—Captain—Drury Wake. Lieutenant—Hbrace A. D. Seymour.

TOWCESTER (2).—Captain—Henry J. Fitzroy. Lieutenant—Richard Howes. Sergeant-Instructor—Henry Gibson.

NORTHAMPTON (3).—Captain Commandant—William G. Hollis. Captains—George N. Wetton, Henry Cooper, George Turner, Joseph Muscott. Lieutenants—Richard Phipps, Willan Jackson. Ensigns—E. J. Rice, J. J. Houghton. Sergeant-Instructor—John Vince.

PETERBOROUGH (6).—Captains—Thomas James Walker, John Beecroft. Lieutenants—James Bristowe, John Graves. Ensigns—G. F. D. Gaches, Alf. N. Leeds. Quartermaster-Sergeant—J. B. Craig. Colour-Sergeant—F. E. Noble. Drill-Sergeant—W. Fowler.

PETERBOROUGH ENGINEER CORPS.—Captain—Leonard John Deacon. 1st Lieutenant—George Harrison. 2d Lieutenant—John Copeman Lound.

WELLINGBOROUGH (7).—Ensign—Wm. E. Askham. Quartermaster-Sergeant—T. Rogers.

DAVENTRY (8).—Captain—Edmund Charles Burton. Lieutenant—Thomas Willoughby. Drill-Sergeant—Lucius Lucas.

KETTERING (9).—Lieutenant—J. Barber. Ensign—Charles East. Quartermaster-Sergeant—John Cluff. Drill-Sergeant—J. Savage.

LIST OF FAIRS IN NORTHAMPTONSHIRE.

Boughton Green—June 24th, 25th, and 26th, for cattle, horses, and pleasure. Brackley—Wednesday after February 25th, April 19th, Wednesday after June 22d, Wednesday after October 11th, December 11th (pleasure). Brigstock—April 25th, September 4th, November 22d (cattle and pleasure). Brixworth—June 5th (pleasure). Daventry—First Monday in June, second Tuesday in February, in March, Easter Tuesday, May 9th, June 6th, 7th, second Tuesday in July, August 3d, last Monday in August, second Tuesday in September, October 2d (cheese); 3d, 27th, second Tuesday in November, second in December (cattle). Fotheringay—Third Monday after July 5th (horses, cattle, and pleasure). Higham Ferrers—Tuesday before February 5th, March 6th, Thursday before May 12th, June 28th, Thursday before August 5th, October 11th, December 6th (cattle). Katering—Thursday before Easter, Friday before Whit-Sunday, Thursday before October 11th, Thursday before December 21st (sheep, cattle). King's Cliffe—Tuesday before October 29th (cattle, cheese). Long Buckby—May 1st, October 11th (cattle). Northampton—Second Tuesday in January, February 20th, third Monday in March, April 5th, May 4th, June 19th, August 5th, 26th, September 19th (cheese); first Thursday in November, November 28th, Friday before Great Smithfield Market (cattle); first and second Saturday after September 29th (hiring); July (wool). Oundle—February 25th, and six preceding days (horses); Whit-Monday, October 12th (stock and pedlary). Peterborough—July 10th, 11th (cattle, horses, and wool); October 2d and 3d (also general). Rockingham—September 25th (cattle). Rothwell—Trinity Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday (stock and general). Thrapston—First Tuesday in May, Tuesday after October 11th (sheep, cattle, and pleasure). Towcester—Shrove Tuesday, May 12th, October 29th (cattle); Tuesday before October 10th (hiring). Weldon—First Thursday in February, May, August, and November. Wellingborough—Easter Wednesday (cattle); Whit-Wednesday (pleasure); October 29th (sheep, cattle). West Haddon—May 2d (cattle); last Friday in September (hiring). Yardley Hastings—Whit-Tuesday.

EXTENT AND POPULATION OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

	Square Miles.	Population.
England and Wales,	58,320	22,704,108
Scotland,	30,687	3,358,613
Ireland,	31,754	5,402,759
Islands in the British Seas,	354	144,430
Army, Navy, and Merchant Seamen abroad,	207,198
Totals of the United Kingdom in 1871,	121,115	31,817,108

HISTORY

OF THE

TOWN OF NORTHAMPTON.

NORTHAMPTON, "the proud beauty of the Midlands," as it has been very appropriately designated, occupies the gentle ascent and summit of an eminence on the northern bank of the river Nene, or Nen, in the centre of a rich agricultural country, remarkable for its rural beauty and picturesque scenery, and over which it commands delightful and extensive prospects. The origin of the town is involved in the almost impenetrable gloom which is cast over the aborigines of Britain. Its site was the border of two British tribes—in front of a vast forest extending to the river Welland. The town boasts of great antiquity. Some authors affirm that it was founded by Belinus, a British king, whilst others contend that it is of Roman origin; but there is every reason to suppose that it was founded by the ancient Britons, as aboriginal towns are generally found seated on the banks of rivers, which formed boundaries to the various tribes. In the Saxon Chronicle it is first written Hamptune, in the time of Edward the Elder; and when Alfred divided the kingdom into shires, it was considered of sufficient importance to give its name to the county, when the word North was prefixed to its former appellation, by way of distinguishing it from other towns of the same name. Tacitus mentions the rivers Antona, Aufona, and Sabrina, the first of which is supposed to be our river Nene, and the second the Avon; but Camden contends that the Antona is the Avon, and the Aufona the Nene. "Higher up the country, northward," says he, "arises the river Aufona, or Avon (for Avon, in the British tongue, is a general name for all rivers); it is called Nene by the inhabitants;" and this opinion is strengthened by the name Northantone, which the town is called in Domesday Book; thus retaining so much of the original name of the river, and thereby tending to prove its British origin, as the aborigines generally derived the names of their towns from the rivers, streams, or other characteristics of the locality.

Northampton was in the possession of the Danes in the reign of Edward the Elder, from 917 to 921. "In 917," says the Saxon Chronicle, "after Easter, the army of the Danes rode out of Hamptune and Leicester." In 918, Earl Thurkytel, the "Captains," and almost all the first men that belonged to Bedford, and many of those that belonged to Hampton, submitted to Edward; but in 921 we find them, in conjunction with other barbarians from Leicester, breaking their parole, and unsuccessfully assailing Towcester, which had been previously fortified by Edward. Before the expiration of the same year, the "army" was defeated at Bedford and Maldon; and Earl Thurfeth, and all the force that "owed obedience to Hampton, as far north as the Welland, submitted to him, and sought him to be their lord and protector." It would appear that the population of the kingdom was at this time mixed; for in the next year, 922, Edward commanded the town of Nottingham to be restored, and occupied as well by the English as the Danes; "and all the people," says the Saxon Chronicle, "who were settled in Mercia, as well Danish as English, submitted to him." In 1010, "after suffering severely from the desolating struggles between the Danes and the English, Northampton was almost ruined by the Danish King Sweyn and his troops, who, in their ravages throughout the kingdom, broke into these parts, burnt it to the ground, and nearly depopulated the adjacent country, penetrating the kingdom of Mercia, and, in a more particular manner, exercising their cruelty upon nuns, friars, and Christian priests."

In 1015 the county was traversed, and much oppressed, by Canute. In 1065, Tostig, who succeeded the brave Earl Siward in the earldom of Northumbria, ruled with so much cruelty and tyranny that the Northumbrians revolted, and furiously attacking his house, he very narrowly escaped with his family, and fled into Flanders. The insurgents seized his treasures, and appointed Morcar to be their earl. Harold, brother of Tostig, being appointed by the king to vindicate the royal authority and quell the insurrection, began his march; while Morcar, at the head of the Northumbrians, advanced southward, and was joined by Edwin his brother, and a body of the men of his earldom. The two armies met at Northampton, but, happily, arrangements were effected without bloodshed. Harold, on being convinced of his brother's misconduct, abandoned his cause, and having interceded with the king in favour of the insurgents, Morcar was confirmed in his earldom. Harold afterwards married Morcar's sister, and obtained from Edward the Confessor the government of Mercia for Edwin.

Whilst Harold was arranging these matters with the king, the Northmen, aided perhaps by the exasperated Britons, committed many outrages in the town and neighbourhood, killing many of the inhabitants, burning their houses and corn, seizing numbers of their cattle, which they led away with them, together with several hundred prisoners. After the subjugation of the country north of the Humber by the Conqueror, Waltheof, Gospatrick, Morcar or Morkere, and Edwin, were forced to submit. Waltheof, the well-known son of Siward Earl of Northumberland, was one of the most formidable of the Conqueror's opponents; but William, respecting the misfortunes of the heroic champion of a fallen race, not only gave him his liberty, but generously confirmed him in his former honours, adding to them the earldoms of Northampton and Huntingdon. He also, in 1070, gave him in marriage his niece Judith, the daughter of Odo Earl of Albemarle; but the union was an unfortunate one, for the cruel wife, by base and probably false accusation of his having favoured the revolt of the Barons, procured his condemnation, and he was beheaded at Winchester in 1076, leaving two daughters by Judith. There was at this time in William's court a valiant Norman knight, named Simon de St Liz, son of Randoel le Ryche, who came over with the Conqueror. Of Simon's person one feature is recorded. He was lame in one of his legs. But this misfortune, instead of marring his prospects, turned to his advantage; for when the king would have given him Judith in marriage, the treacherous widow of the noble Waltheof refused the alliance with scorn, it is said, on account of his lameness. St Liz, happy in being thus rejected, married her daughter Maud instead, and so succeeded to the greater part of Waltheof's estates, and to his titles, and thus became the first Norman Earl of Northampton.

In 1084, Simon and his young wife Maud granted the Church of All Saints, and the other nine churches of the town, together with an estate of three carucates of land, three meadows, a holm (hulmum), some houses (hospites), and twenty shillings of the town farm, &c., to the Priory of St Andrew, which henceforward he submitted in perpetuity to the Abbey of St Mary de Caritate, on the Loire, in France. He not only richly endowed, but it is said rebuilt the Priory of St Andrew, and re-edified the town, which, with the hundred of Fawsley, then of the value of £40 per annum, had been given him by the Conqueror to provide shoes for his horses.

"Were it within the scope of this inquiry," says Mr Hartshorne, in his "Memoirs of Northampton," "we might here linger to reflect on the contradictory feelings that actuated the sentiments of the age; contrast the early life of the soldier, his ambition, rapine, and thirst for bloodshed, with the remorse and devotion of his declining years: we might observe how the two extremes of human nature became strangely blended together in the same individual; how the restless and savage warrior, whose hands were stained with violence and crime, became transformed, under a happier impulse, into the humble penitent and the mortified recluse."

About the same period (1084) St Liz built the castle, and surrounded the town with embattled walls, in which were four gates, named, from their respective situations, Eastgate, Westgate, Northgate, and Southgate; besides these there was, southward of the Eastgate, another, but smaller gate or postern, called the Durngate, which led towards the river, from which circumstance it is supposed to have derived its name, Dur, or Dour, being a British word signifying water. Bridges says, "The Eastgate, much the fairest of all, was large and high, embellished with shields of arms and other ornaments of stonework, and over the other gates were chambers inhabited by the people. The walls, which were ascended by steps, formed a communication from one part of the town to another, and were broad enough for six persons to walk abreast." In the second of Henry III. (1217, 1218), mention is made of a tower at the south-east corner, which is supposed to have been an armoury, as well as a place of communication with the castle by means of a mount called the Castle Mount. In Henry the Fourth's time it was called "Latymer's Tower," it being then in the hands of Lord Latimer; and in 1409 it was granted to John de Etton and others. In the reign of Richard III. it was in the possession of John Chauncey, ancestor of the Chauncys of Edgcote; and Sir John Lamb, Chancellor of the diocese of Peterborough, was its owner and occupier in the time of Charles the First.

Henry gave Maud in marriage to David, the patriotic Earl of Northamptonshire, the brother of Edith, afterwards called Matilda, Henry's Saxon queen. David succeeded Alexander King of Scotland in May 1124, still retaining the English earldom.

About the year 1084, when the Domesday survey was made, Northampton, as we have seen at page 74, contained 295 inhabited houses, and 35 ruined and uninhabited. In the time of Edward the Confessor it had 60 burgesses, with as many dwelling messuages; but in 1086, when the survey was completed, 14 of the latter were in a state of ruin, and the remainder, 40 burgesses, were in the possession of the Crown. There were also 40 houses in the new town held by King William; 41 inhabited, and 6 waste, in the possession of the warlike Bishop of Constance and six other ecclesiastical proprietors; Earl Morton had 35 inhabited houses and 2 waste; and William Peveril, the Conqueror's natural son, who married Adeliza, and founded the Abbey of St James for black canons, had 29 uninhabited houses and 3 waste. The Countess Judith, William's niece, who married and betrayed Waltheof, had 15 houses inhabited and 1 waste.

The majority of the houses belonged to proprietors of Norman origin, and only a few were in the possession of persons of Saxon or Danish name. The annual value ranged from 4d. to 16d., and from 1s. to 4s. in weight of silver. Exclusive of the 86 houses belonging to the burgesses, the rent of 203½ houses, of which 21½ were waste and 2 paid nothing, was 211 shillings and 8 pence, which is equal in weight of silver to nearly 3 shillings per house of our present money. A sheep and its fleece would have paid the rent of 2, and a quarter of wheat of 3 houses.

The burgesses of Northampton paid annually to the sheriff £30, 10s. (£88, 9s. in weight of our present coin) for the farm of the town, and it very probably contained All Saints' and nine other churches at the time. The Countess Judith received £7 out of the issues of the borough. Nearly all the houses were of wood, or of watling plastered over with clay, without chimneys or glass windows, and the uninhabited houses soon fell into ruins. In the Domesday Book they are said to be waste (vastæ). The little labour they cost, and the frail construction of the Saxon towns, may be inferred from the haste and ease with which they were erected; and the facility with which towns were destroyed and burnt down, is evidence to the same effect.

The town of Northampton belonged to the Crown at this time (1086), and it was held as a borough by the burgesses and resident inhabitants by the tenure of socage (see page 76); and from being a royal demesne, and holding their town by burgage tenures, the burgesses paid £30, 10s. annually to the sheriff (who in those days was the king's farmer, bailiff, rent and revenue collector, &c.) as the rent of the town, which was one of the sources from whence the national expenditure was defrayed. About the beginning of the twelfth century the town was much improved, and began to assume a superiority over the other towns in the county; and from its central situation, and the security of its fortifications, it became the residence of our kings, and the seat of several conventions and parliaments. In 1106 Henry I. visited Northampton, where he had an interview with his brother, Robert Duke of Normandy, to accommodate the differences then subsisting between them, and because the king would not return what he had won from him in Normandy, they parted in hostility.

After the death of his son, in the Blanche Nef, the same monarch and his court revisited Northampton in the year 1122-23, and twenty-third of his reign, and celebrated the festival of Easter with great pomp and splendour; and in the thirty-first year of the same reign (1131) a parliament was assembled here, in which the English barons swore homage or fealty to the Empress Maud or Matilda, on whom the king, her father, had settled the right of succession. In 1136 a council was held at Northampton by King Stephen, at which all the bishops, abbots, and barons of the realm were present, when several promotions were made in the Church for the purpose of attaching the clergy to his interest. The son of Simon de Liz, who followed the interests of Stephen, and died in 1152-53, was present also at this council. Camden says "he was a young man guilty of every irregularity and impropriety." The same monarch held his court here in 1144, "when Ranulph Earl of Chester, who came to tender his services, was seized and kept prisoner till he had surrendered the Castle of Lincoln and other fortresses as a security for his future allegiance, he being suspected of conspiring with the Duke of Normandy against the king.

The town seems to have materially increased in value about this time. The Rev. C. H. Hartshorne, quoting from the Pipe Rolls, states that the "king's farmer, in 1130, rendered an account of the farm of the borough. He paid into the exchequer £90, 14s. 3d.; he disbursed in fixed payments £8, 2s. 1d.; in fixed alms to the monks of Northampton 20s., and to the same monks 3s. 8d. for their land, which the king took within his castle; being in all exactly £100; so that within the fifty years which intervened between the Conqueror's survey and this time, the fee-farm of the town had increased from £30, 10s. to £100, as just stated." There is no doubt that even this sum was below the real value of the town. In the thirty-first Henry II. the burgesses suffered a fine of 200 marks (£386 of our coin) to hold their town in capite. "This," says Mr Hartshorne, "is the first important change observable in the tenure. The town was still held in free socage—that is, exempt from any acknowledgment of service to the Crown except in money. The burgesses had it now immediately from the king, and no longer paid their rent through the sheriffs." "And," continues the same writer, "in consequence of the burgesses now holding their fee-farm as tenants in capite, they became liable to regular assessment for aids; and although it is true they had paid them on two previous occasions, it was only doing as other towns did under the same circumstances—one of which occasions being to make provision for Henry II. marrying his daughter Matilda to the Duke of Saxony, from whom descends the present house of Brunswick—this payment must be regarded rather as a voluntary contribution (donum) arising out of the emergency than as a regular annual tax. And in confirmation of this, we see that although the burgesses made a donation of forty marks in the second of Henry II., they did not offer any during the four succeeding years." In the tenth of this reign (1163-64) the famous assembly of nobles and prelates was held at Clarendon, in Wiltshire, when the celebrated statutes or constitutions were made "for the good order of the kingdom, and for the better defining the boundaries of ecclesiastical jurisdiction." One of these regulations provided that ecclesiastics convicted of offences against the laws of the land should be delivered to the civil magistrate for punishment; but Thomas à Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury, having refused his assent to these articles, as invading the rights of the Church, a council was convened at Northampton in the following year, before whom he was summoned to appear and answer to the charges of perjury, contumacy, &c., which should then be exhibited against him. A large concourse from different parts of the kingdom assembled on this occasion. The primate lodged at St Andrew's Priory during his stay, and was attended by the populace in triumph in his passage through the streets. The king was busy with his dogs and falcons when he arrived. On their first interview Henry refused the proffered kiss of peace—exercised the office of public prosecutor, John of Oxford presiding at the trial. It was held at the castle, to which the archbishop proceeded on the morning of October 18th, resolved to deny the authority of the court, and refer his cause to the tribunal of the Pope. He celebrated beforehand the mass of St Stephen, the first martyr, the office of which begins with the words, "Sederant principes et adversum me loquebantur"—"Princes also did sit and speak against me." Afterwards he set out to the court on horseback, arrayed in pontifical robes, bearing the silver archiepiscopal cross in one hand, and holding the reins in the other. Enraged at his thus presenting himself, the king withdrew into an inner apartment, followed by the barons and bishops, leaving him alone in the great hall in which the assembly sat. Shortly, Robert Earl of Leicester returned, followed by the barons, and began to read his sentence, upon which the primate rose, saying, "Son and earl, hear me first. I forbid you to judge me. I decline your tribunal, and refer my quarrel to the decision of the Pope. To him I appeal." With these words he rose from his seat, and carrying the cross in his hands, moved slowly towards the door. In his passage through the hall some of the courtiers, "whose mean spirit derived satisfaction from striking a fallen man," murmured the words perjuror and traitor, and catching up straw from the floor, threw it in his face. Stopping short, and facing his assailants, the archbishop, in cold and haughty tones, said, "If the sacredness of my order did not forbid it, I would answer with arms those who call me perjuror and traitor." He then mounted his horse and returned to his lodgings, followed by the acclamations of the inferior clergy and the people, among whom he was exceedingly popular.

That same night the archbishop opened his house to the poor and the humble. He caused a bountiful supper to be laid out in the hall, and in all the chambers of the house. The doors were thrown open, and the beggar by the wayside, the outcast, and the hungry were invited to enter freely. All who came were made welcome, so that the house was filled with guests—the archbishop himself supping with them and presiding at the repast. In the dead of the night, when the visitors at this strange banquet had taken their fill and departed, Becket disguised himself in the dress of a monk, and, accompanied by two friars, escaped from the town. A hasty journey of three days brought him to the fens of Lincolnshire, where he remained a little while concealed in a hermit's hut. On resuming his journey, he called himself by the Saxon name of Dereman, and passed without suspicion to the coast. Embarking in a small boat, he reached the harbour of Gravelines in safety; and resuming his journey, as before, on foot, and after encountering many privations, the archbishop and his companions reached the Monastery of St Bertin, in the town of St Omer.

Here he waited the result of his applications to Louis of France and to Pope Alexander III. The replies, which soon arrived, were entirely in his favour. Louis was glad of an opportunity of annoying Henry by extending protection to the archbishop, and the Pope supported his cause as being that of the Church and of justice. His Holiness desired him to retain the archiepiscopal dignity which he had resigned into his hands, and the Abbey of Pontigny, in Burgundy, was given to him as a place of residence.

The king, on hearing of his flight from Northampton, proclaimed a sentence of banishment against all the kindred of the archbishop, young and old, of both sexes. The banished prelate, however, appears to have supported with dignity and contentment his misfortune and sudden loss of power, and the condition of poverty to which he was reduced. But his life was by no means an idle one, much of his time being occupied in writing and correspondence. Some of the English bishops appear to have sent him epistles full of reproaches, for no other reason than to add to the weight of his misfortune and humiliation, which pressed heavily upon him. The lower ranks of the people and the inferior clergy, however, retained their attachment to him, and secret prayers were offered up for the success of his undertakings, and for his safe return amongst them.

Meanwhile Henry, in 1165, conducted an expedition into Wales, which resulted in the complete destruction of his forces; and in revenge for his defeat, he, in one of his ungovernable fits of passion to which he was so addicted, committed the most terrible acts of cruelty upon the persons of the innocent hostages which had been placed in his hands by the Welsh chiefs. He ordered men's eyes to be torn out, and the faces of the women to be mutilated by having their noses and ears cut off. It is related that the unhappy victims of these barbarities were the sons and daughters of the noblest families in Wales. In 1166, soon after the return of Henry from this expedition, an insurrection broke out in Brittany, which compelled his presence in that province. When the news of his arrival on the Continent reached Thomas à Becket, he left Pontigny and went to Vezelay, near Auxerre. At the festival of the Ascension he addressed the crowd assembled in the great church, and while the bells were being solemnly tolled, and the candles burned upon the altar, the archbishop pronounced sentence of excommunication against whosoever held to the constitutions of Clarendon, or kept possession of the property of the See of Canterbury, mentioning by name several of the Norman favourites of the king.

When Henry heard of this new act of hostility on the part of Becket, his fury, it is said, was altogether ungovernable. He exclaimed "that it was attempted to kill him body and soul; that he was surrounded by none but traitors, who would not attempt to relieve him from the persecutions inflicted upon him by one man. He threw his cap from his head, flung off his clothes, and rolling himself in the coverlet of his bed, began to tear it to pieces with his teeth." When his passion had in some degree subsided, he wrote letters to the King of France and to the Pope, demanding that the "sentences of excommunication should be annulled, and threatening that if Becket continued to receive shelter from the Cistercians of Pontigny, all the estates in his dominions belonging to that order should be confiscated." The archbishop was forced to remove to Sens, where he remained under the protection of the King of France. After a series of petty wars had taken place between Louis and Henry, a peace was concluded in A.D. 1169, when efforts were made by the Pope and the King of France to effect a reconciliation between Henry and the primate. A meeting took place between the two kings, and Becket, having consented to submit to his sovereign, was conducted to his presence. The archbishop expressed his willingness to submit to his majesty in all things; but he introduced the qualifying clause which he had formerly used—"Saving the honour of God." The king angrily rejected such obedience, saying that whatever displeased Becket would be declared contrary to the honour of God. The archbishop persisted in requiring such a reservation; the two kings rode away without giving him any salutation, and the archbishop departed from the place much dejected. No man now offered him lodging or bread in the name of the King of France; and on his journey back, the Primate of all England was compelled to ask alms from the priests and the people.

Another conference took place, but was broken off suddenly, and resulted in a quarrel between Louis and Henry. Peace was, however, once more concluded between them, and Henry, fearing that the Pope might ultimately sanction Becket's proceedings, and permit him to lay all England under an interdict, reluctantly promised to conclude final terms of reconciliation with the archbishop. On the 22d July 1170, a solemn congress was held, and after terms of peace had been arranged between the two kings, a private conference took place between Henry and the primate. They rode together to a distant part of the field in which the meeting took place, and conversed with something of their old familiarity. The king promised to redress the grievances of which Becket complained, and the usual forms of reconciliation took place, with the exception of the kiss of peace, which the king now, as on a previous occasion, refused to give. We "shall meet in our own country," said the king, "and then we will embrace." The archbishop undertook to render to the king all due and loyal service, while Henry promised to restore the privileges and estates of the See of Canterbury. It is related that, to the astonishment of all present, when Becket bended the knee on parting from his sovereign, the king returned the courtesy by holding the stirrups of the man to whom he had refused the kiss of peace.

Some delay took place on the king's part in the fulfilment of these conditions; and while compelled to remain a while on the coast of France, sinister rumours reached him there. He was told that enemies were lying in wait for him, and that if he returned to England it would be at the risk of his life. With a spirit unsubdued by reverses, he declared that he would return though he were sure of losing his life on touching the shore. He carried with him the Pope's letter of excommunication against the Archbishop of York and the Bishop of London; and these he forwarded before him by a trusty messenger, who delivered them in public to the prelates whom they concerned.

In a vessel sent by Henry to convey him to England, the archbishop landed at Sandwich, December 1, 1170, where he was received with great rejoicings by the people. The nobles, however, held aloof, and the few whom he saw did not attempt to conceal their hostility. The barons who met him on his way to Canterbury are said to have threatened his life, and were only restrained from violence by the king's chaplain, John of Oxford, who accompanied him from France. He endeavoured to obtain an interview at Woodstock with his former pupil, Prince Henry, the king's eldest son, but was forbidden by the royal command, and he was ordered to proceed at once to his diocese and there to remain. The time of Christmas was approaching, and he proceeded to his diocese, guarded by the poor people, who protected him from the various insults offered by his enemies, who sought a pretext for attacking him on the way.

The royal order which confined the archbishop to his diocese was published in the towns, and with it another edict, which declared that whoever looked upon him with favour should be regarded as an enemy of the king and the country. Signs like these were not to be mistaken, and it scarcely needed the acute intellect and foresight of the primate to perceive that his end was approaching. On Christmas Day he preached to the assembled crowd in Canterbury Cathedral, choosing as his text the solemn words, "Veni ad vos, mori inter vos"—"I have come to die among you." He told the people, that whereas one of their archbishops had already been a martyr, another would soon be so also; but he declared that before he died he would avenge some of the wrongs which had been inflicted upon the Church.

The prediction of the primate was soon followed by its fulfilment. The bishops who had been excommunicated by the Pope's letters hastened to present themselves before Henry in Normandy, and demanded redress. "We entreat you," they said, "in the name of your kingdom and of its prelates. This man is setting England in flames. He marches with a number of armed men, both horse and foot, going about the fortresses, and endeavouring to obtain admission into them." When Henry heard this false statement, he burst into a violent fit of rage. "What!" he cried; "a man who has eaten my bread—a beggar who first came to my court riding a lame pack-horse, with his baggage at his back—shall he insult the king and royal family, and the whole kingdom, and not one of the cowards who eat at my table will deliver me from such a turbulent priest?"

These words proved to be the death-warrant of the archbishop. Four knights who were present—Richard Brito, Sir Hugh de Morville, William Tracy, and Reginald Fitzurse—bound themselves by an oath to support each other to the death, and suddenly departed from the palace. On the fifth day after Christmas the conspirators arrived in the neighbourhood of Canterbury, and having collected a number of armed men to overcome any resistance that might be offered, they proceeded to the palace, and entered the apartment of the archbishop, who was at the dinner-table, with his servants in attendance. He saluted the Normans, and desired to know what they wanted. They remained for some minutes silently gazing at him. At length Reginald Fitzurse rose up, and said that they were come from the king to demand that the persons excommunicated should be absolved, the suspended bishops restored to their benefices, and that the primate himself should answer the charge of treason against the throne. The archbishop replied that not he but the Pope had excommunicated the bishops, and that he only could absolve them. "From whom, then, do you hold your bishopric?" Fitzurse demanded. "The spiritual rights I hold from God and the Pope, and the temporal rights from the king." "What, then, the king did not give you all?" "By no means." This reply was received with murmurs by the knights, who twirled their gauntlets impatiently. "I perceive that you threaten me," the archbishop said; "but it is in vain. If all the swords in England were hanging over my head, they would not alter my determination." "We do, indeed, dare to threaten," said Fitzurse; "and we will do more." With these words he moved to the door, followed by the others, and gave the call to arms. The door of the room was instantly closed, and the attendants entreated him to take refuge in the church, which communicated with the house by a cloister. He, however, retained his place, although the blows of an axe, which Fitzurse had obtained outside, resounded against the door. At this moment the sound of the vesper bell was heard, and the archbishop then rose up and said, that since the hour of his duty had arrived, he would go into the church. Directing his cross to be carried before him, he passed slowly through the cloisters, and advanced to the choir. While he was ascending the altar steps of St Bennet, in the cathedral, Fitzurse entered the church clad in complete armour, and waving his sword, cried, "Come hither, servants of the king!" The other conspirators immediately followed him, armed to the teeth, and brandishing their swords.

It was already twilight, which, within the walls of the dimly-lighted church, had deepened into obscurity. The archbishop's attendants entreated him to fly to the winding staircase which led to the roof of the cathedral, or to seek refuge in the vaults underground. He rejected both these expedients, and stood still to meet his assailants. "Where is the traitor?" cried a voice. There was no answer. "Where is the archbishop?" "Here I am," he replied; "but here is no traitor. What do ye in the house of God in warlike equipment?" One of the knights seized him by the sleeve, telling him he was a prisoner. He pulled back his arm violently. Once more they called upon him to absolve the bishops; once more he refused; and Fitzurse, drawing his sword, struck at his head. The blow was intercepted by the arm of one of the prelate's servants, who endeavoured to protect his master, but in vain. A second and a third blow descended, and while blood was streaming from his face, some one of his assailants whispered him to fly and save himself. But the martyr paid no heed to the speaker, and clasping his hands, he bowed his head, and commended his soul to God and the saints. The assassins now fell upon him with their swords and quickly despatched him; and when Brito had cut off the top part of his head, Hugh de Morville with the point of his sword drew out all his brains and scattered them on the floor; and another of them is said to have kicked the prostrate body, saying, "So perish a traitor!"

The deed thus accomplished, the conspirators passed out of the town without hindrance ; but no sooner had they done so than the news rapidly spread through the place, and the inhabitants, in the utmost excitement, assembled in crowds in the streets, and ran towards the cathedral. Seeing the body of their beloved archbishop stretched before the altar, men and women began to weep, and while some kissed his feet and hands, others dipped linen in the blood with which the floor of the sacred edifice was covered. It was declared by the people that he was a martyr ; and though a royal edict was published forbidding any one to express such an opinion, the popular feeling still manifested itself. It was even attempted by some of the soldiers to seize the corpse ; but the monks, who had received an intimation of the design, buried it hastily in the crypt of the cathedral. The assassins fled to Knaresborough, in Yorkshire, which belonged to Morville, and there lived a short time by themselves, the most degraded menials refusing to attend them. Afterwards they went to Rome, when the Pope enjoined them a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, which Morville, with two of his companions, diligently performing, lived and died there, true penitents, it is said, and were buried before the gate of the Church of Jerusalem, with this epitaph, "Here lie the wretches who martyred blessed Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury." Their deaths occurred within three years after the saint's martyrdom.

The King of France seconded the feeling of the English people with regard to this cowardly murder. He wrote to the Pope, entreating him to punish, with all the power of the Church, "that persecutor of God ; a Nero in cruelty, a Julian in apostasy, and a Judas in treachery." Whether Henry was or was not guilty of the murder is a question which must always to some extent remain doubtful. The French Court, as well as some historians of our own country, have always believed him guilty, having known or directed the designs of the assassins. When, however, the intelligence was conveyed to him he exhibited extreme grief, shutting himself up within a private room, and refusing either to see his friends or to taste food for three days. The extraordinary penance which he afterwards underwent at the tomb of the martyr would appear to prove his consciousness of guilt ; but that penance may as reasonably be regarded as having a political object, or he may have felt that he was to some extent guilty in having used language which might without difficulty be construed to have such meaning. And the manner of that death—a prelate, whose office was regarded with the highest veneration, slain at the altar—an old man slain in cold blood, not by robbers, but by soldiers and knights of fame,—such a death, with the indignation it excited, was well calculated to induce feelings of remorse in the breast of the king. He sent legates to Rome, with assurances of his innocence to the Pope Alexander, who threatened to place the whole kingdom under an interdict, as a punishment for the outrage upon Heaven and the Church. Some time elapsed before Alexander changed his purpose, and was prevailed upon to confine his anathema to the actual murderers and their abettors.

"On reviewing the remarkable career of Thomas à Becket," observes a popular writer, "it appears difficult to form a just estimate of his character. That he sometimes acted independently of principle, and displayed qualities better suited to a soldier than a priest, is beyond question. But that his sudden conversion was mere hypocrisy, his piety assumed, and his aims altogether selfish—accusations which have frequently been brought against him—is much less certain. When the religious habit was first assumed by Becket, he (probably) accepted it as a step to power, and with little regard to the sacred functions it conferred upon him ; but when he was called to a higher office, and he felt that the dignity of his order was placed in his keeping, he determined to support that dignity. What was the precise character of the motives which actuated him it is vain to inquire ; but it is at least possible that he was sincere in the course he pursued, and that he believed the interests of religion to be identified with the power of the Church."

Allusion has already been made to the benefits conferred upon the nation by the reforms which he introduced, and to the veneration with which the people regarded him. Though the popular regard is not always to be taken as a criterion of excellence, yet, in process of time, the true is distinguished from the false, and the instincts of the people are rarely long deceived. Neither the mitre which he wore, nor the Saxon blood which flowed in his veins, could have placed the archbishop so high in the estimation of the nation, or in the affections of the people, unless there had been also high and sterling qualities in the man. There are well-authenticated accounts of his conduct at the time of his death—that hour when the mask of the hypocrite usually falls away, and something of his true character seldom fails to show itself. At this time, then, we find Thomas à Becket presented to us in an aspect which must command the respect even of those who take the worst view of his previous life. With far more courage than his knightly assassins, we see him refusing to attempt a flight, which might have shown a consciousness of guilt; preserving in the face of death a calm and undaunted brow; and, as we are told by one of the chroniclers, employing his last words in securing the safety of his friends and servants. On being told that he must die, the archbishop replied, “I resign myself to death; but I forbid you, in the name of the Almighty God, to injure any of those around me, whether monk or layman, great or small.” It is worthy of note that the only primate who, since the Conquest, and previously to the time of Becket, had placed himself in opposition to the will of his sovereign, was Anselm, who, although a Norman by birth, was essentially English in sympathies, and who exerted himself in the cause of the people against their oppressors. The primates who succeeded Anselm were more easily moulded to the will of their sovereign; they were Ranulph, or Raoul, William of Corbiel, and Theobald, the immediate predecessor of Thomas à Becket.

Gilbert Becket (the father of the archbishop) was a Saxon yeoman, who was born in London in the reign of Henry I., and having, like many of his race, entered the service of a Norman baron, followed his lord in the capacity of squire or attendant to the Holy Land about the beginning of the twelfth century. Having borne his share of the dangers and sufferings of “the soldiers of the Cross,” as the Crusaders were called, he was made prisoner and reduced to slavery. In this condition he attracted the notice of a young maiden, the daughter of a Saracen chief, and gained her affections. With her assistance he succeeded in effecting his escape and returning to England; whither, also, the faithful damsel, who now found herself unable to live without him, determined to find her way. She knew only two words of English—London and Gilbert. With the help of the former she obtained a passage in a ship which carried returning pilgrims and traders; and by means of the latter—running from street to street, and repeating the words “Gilbert! Gilbert!” amidst the wonder and derision of the crowd—she found the man she loved. Gilbert Becket appears to have received her tenderly and honourably. With the advice of the clergy he caused her to be baptized, and having changed her name to that of Matilda, he married her. The strange circumstances connected with this marriage caused it to become famous throughout the country, and it was made the subject of several popular ballads and romances.

Henry, on his return from the Continent, landed at Southampton, whence he proceeded to Canterbury for the purpose of undergoing that extraordinary penance already alluded to. He rode all night without resting on the way, and when, at the dawn of day, he came in sight of Canterbury Cathedral, he immediately dismounted from his horse, took off his shoes and royal robes, and walked the rest of the way barefoot along the stony road. On arriving at the cathedral, the king, accompanied by a great number of bishops, abbots, and monks, including those of Canterbury, descended to the crypt in which the corpse of Thomas à Becket was laid. Gilbert Foliot, Bishop of London, addressed the people, and said, “Be it known to all here present, that Henry King of England, invoking, for his soul's salvation, God and the holy martyrs, protests before you all that he never commanded nor desired the death of the saint; but as it is possible that the murderers availed themselves of some words spoken imprudently, he implores his penance from the bishops now assembled, and is willing to submit his naked flesh to the discipline of the rods" (Matthew Paris). The king knelt upon the stone of the tomb, and, stripping off part of his clothes, exposed his back to the scourge. Each of the bishops then took one of the whips with several lashes used in monasteries for penance, and each in turn struck the king several times on the shoulders, saying, "As Christ was scourged for our sins, so be thou for thine own." The rest of the monks present, to the number of about eighty, then took the whips, and it is said that many of these, who were of Saxon descent, gave their blows with vigour. The scourging did not end the acts of humiliation. Henry remained a day and a night prostrate before the tomb, taking no food, nor did he even quit the place. The fatigue which he thus underwent brought on a fever, which confined him for several days to his chamber. This display of repentance, whether real or assumed, produced a reaction in the king's favour among the people, and he once more recovered the popularity he had lost.

In 1173, Anketil Malore, one of the partisans of Prince Henry in his unnatural rebellion, advanced at the head of a considerable force from Leicester to Northampton, where, having defeated the burgesses with the king's troops, he plundered the town, and returned, carrying off 200 of the inhabitants prisoners. This rebellion was suppressed by the king. In 1174 the Scots invaded the northern borders, and were defeated in an engagement near Alnwick, in Northumberland, and William their king was taken prisoner. He was conducted to King Henry at Northampton, where Roger de Mowbray, Earl Ferrers, and the Bishop of Durham; and Anketil Malore and William Dive, constables of the Earl of Leicester, also attended to surrender the several castles which they held against the king.

Peace having been restored throughout the kingdom, Henry, with his prisoners, retired to Normandy. Councils sat at Northampton in 1176 and 1177: in the latter, where the assembly was mixed and numerous, Henry restored to the Earls of Chester and Leicester their ancient honours and forfeited possessions. In the 26th of this reign (1179) a convention of the barons and prelates was held here, to amend and enforce the constitutions of Clarendon. By this council the kingdom was divided into six circuits, each to be visited by three justices itinerant, which was the first important approximation to our present constitution. By Henry's command, the King of Scotland, with the bishops and abbots of that kingdom, attended this council, to profess their subjection to the Church of England; but a dispute arising between the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, the Scots were permitted to return home without making any acknowledgment. In the following year the king kept his Christmas at Nottingham, and came from thence to Northampton, where a convention of the States was called to settle his affairs in England before he went to visit his foreign dominions. In 1189 a number of Jews were plundered and cruelly persecuted at Stamford, and a Christian, named John, enriched himself with their spoils; but upon coming to Northampton, he was murdered at night by the master of the house at which he lodged, who threw the body without the walls of the town, and made his escape. The corpse was afterwards buried, and the place of interment was superstitiously visited as the grave of a martyr.

Richard Cœur-de-Lion commenced his reign on the 3d of September of this year, and on the 14th of the same month he held a council at the Abbey of Pipwell, in this county, which was attended by the whole of the English and Irish bishops, and all the abbots and priors throughout England, as well as a numerous assemblage of the nobility and gentry. The object of this great and extraordinary meeting was to organise a crusade for the recovery of the Holy Sepulchre from the hands of the infidels. On the 14th of November, Richard issued a charter from Bury St Edmunds to the burgesses of Northampton, in which he conceded that none of them should be compelled to plead without the walls of the borough, except pleas of outholdings; that they should have acquittance of murder within the borough; that none should be compelled to establish his own innocence in a criminal, or his rights in a civil cause, by duel; that they should be quit of toll and lastage throughout England, and enjoy all the free customs and liberties of citizens of London. He granted them the town of Northampton, with all its appurtenances, in fee-farm, at an annual rent of £120 (£349 of our money) a year (a hundred years before, at the Domesday survey, the farm of the town was £30; the pound of silver at both periods bore about the same proportion to the pound of the present time, or nearly 2'906 to 1), and the privilege of electing their own magistrate or provost. In 1191, during the absence of the king in the Holy Land, a quarrel arose between Prince John and Longchamp Bishop of Ely, the chancellor; but a regulation having been made with a view to John's interest respecting the custody of the castles in the kingdom, the Castle of Northampton was committed to Simon de Pateshull, who, in the event of the king dying without issue, engaged to deliver it up to John. In 1193, Richard, soon after his return from captivity in Germany, kept the festival of Easter at Northampton, and probably knelt in thankfulness in the round Church of St Sepulchre, so suggestive of the object for which his wars and his perils had been undergone. At this meeting Richard entertained William King of Scotland, who now moved for a grant of the northern counties, under the pretence that his ancestors had formerly enjoyed them. By the advice of his council, Richard rejected this petition; but, as a mark of friendship, granted William and his heirs a charter for defraying their expenses when summoned to attend the councils of England; after which the two kings proceeded from Northampton to Winchester, where Richard was a second time crowned.

In the tenth of this reign (1198), Geoffrey Fitz-Walter paid forty shillings to be discharged from the inspection of the coinage here. This is the first official reference to a mint at Northampton, though it is believed to be of greater antiquity. In the seventh of King John (1205), Peter de Stokes paid sixty marks for liberty to work with four stamps for one year; and in 1230 the burgesses paid sixty shillings out of the profits of coinage, and £36 arising from the said profits, which had been due for some years past; but how long it subsisted is quite uncertain.

On the death of Richard I., John, his brother and successor, being then in Normandy, the barons assembled in council at this place, and were induced, by the adherents of the new monarch, to take the oath of allegiance to him upon certain conditions for which they had expressly stipulated. In the beginning of this reign a charter was granted to the town of Northampton, empowering the burgesses to elect a reeve from amongst themselves, "and four of the more legal and discreet men from the borough to keep the pleas of the Crown, and all other pleas belonging to it in the same town, and to see that the reeves rightly and lawfully treat as well the poor as the rich." "This," says Mr Hartshorne, "is all the burgesses of Northampton appeared to have gained in the present reign, unless we include them in the general advantages ratified by Magna Charta, which expressly defined burgage-tenure as pure socage, and that these tenures and holding by fee-farm exempted the tenants from military service."

John seems to have been particularly partial to the town itself, for with the exception of the third and fourth years of his reign, which he spent exclusively on the Continent, he paid it annual visits, and sometimes three or four visits in the same year; and here Shakespeare, in the historical play of "King John," represents him as bearing the cause of the Falconbridges. Mr Hartshorne says, "We can certainly fix it as his residence for at least sixty-four days after he became sovereign of England. In the tenth year of his reign, having taken umbrage at the citizens of London, he caused the Court of Exchequer to be held here from Michaelmas till Christmas, and an allowance of £5, 1s. was accordingly made to the sheriffs of London and Middlesex for their charges in conveying hither the rolls and exchequer of the barons, and the exchequer and rolls of the Jews." In three years after this time, John, returning from an expedition against the Welsh, assembled a council of the nobility here, at which the Papal legates, Pandulph and Durand, attended for the purpose of adjusting those differences which had long subsisted between him and the Holy See ; but the concessions made by the king not being sufficient, he not being able to restore to the clergy their confiscated effects, the treaty was broken off, and the king was solemnly excommunicated by the nuncios.

In 1210 the king arrived at Northampton on Good Friday (27th April), whither he had ordered the Earls of Hereford and Ferrers to conduct Llewellyn, and issued letters of safe convoy, dated 16th March, from Woodstock for that purpose ; and here he remained to the end of the month. Previous to the war between the king and the barons, the latter bound themselves by an oath to demand a restoration of the rights and liberties granted by the charter of Henry I., and determined, in case of refusal, to force the king to compliance. John, having refused his consent, the barons met in arms at Stamford, and proceeded with a numerous army to Brackley, where commissioners from the king at Oxford were deputed to confer with them. The barons presented a memorial of their grievances at this conference, and the terms of redress being transmitted to the king, he indignantly rejected them. The barons, incensed at the refusal, resolved to seize his fortresses, and, under Robert Fitz-Walter, directed their march to Northampton, where they laid siege to the castle, and endeavoured to reduce it ; but not being provided with battering-engines, they were compelled to retire, after having spent fourteen days in a fruitless attempt to take it. It was, however, one of the four castles placed in their custody as security for the fulfilment of the conditions of Magna Charta in 1215. In the bloody reaction, and the war at the close of John's reign, the enmity of the town and castle broke out ; the townsmen killed many of the garrison under the command of Fulk de Breaut, a valiant but base-born Norman, and then a resolute royalist, and the soldiers in retaliation burnt a great part of the town.

In the second year of his reign, Henry III. kept the festival of Christmas here, being entertained by Fulk de Breaut, who had the year before assembled a body of troops from Northampton and other castles of which he was governor, and assaulted and plundered the town of St Albans, and threatened to burn the abbey and town if his demand for a large sum of money were refused by the abbot. From thence, with a large body of troops and many prisoners, he returned to Bedford. In 1224, in consequence of sentences of excommunication having been pronounced by the Archbishop of Canterbury and his suffragan bishops against the disturbers of the public peace, the Earl of Chester and those of his faction made their submission to King Henry at Northampton, and surrendered into his hands the castles and honours which they held of the Crown. Fulk de Breaut, for his misdemeanours and depredations having been fined by Henry de Braybrok and other justices itinerant at Dunstable, sent a party of soldiers, who violently seized Henry de Braybrok and imprisoned him at Bedford. The king and council laid siege to that place, took it by storm, and William the governor, brother to Fulk de Breaut, with some others were hanged ; the castle was destroyed, and Fulk himself was soon after sent out of the country, and sworn never to return. In 1227 the king exacted 1200 marks (£2,320 of our coin) of the burgesses of Northampton, by way of aid, besides the fifteenths generally levied. A council of the barons was held here in the same year, to settle the misunderstanding which arose between Henry and his barons in consequence of cancelling the charter of the forests which had been granted in his minority.

In 1236, the twentieth year of Henry's reign, the Fair, which had been usually, kept in All Saints' Churchyard, was by a royal mandate ordered to be removed and to be held in future in some open place. Fairs are supposed to have had their origin in the great concourse of people at the solemnisation of festivals, and particularly the feast of the patron saint to whom the church was dedicated. This fair was kept on the festival of All Saints, and was of very ancient standing, and probably had its rise before the Conquest, as the second Simon de St Liz gave the tenth of his profits arising from the said fair to the Convent of St Andrew.

Hence the feasts and wakes in most parts of the country, and their frequent intrusion on sacred ground.

Staveley, in his "History of Churches in England," gives the following account of the origin of wakes or feasts. He says: "This feast of the wake seems to have taken its beginning from an epistle of Pope Gregory the Great to Abbot Mellitus, who came with the monk Austin upon the conversion of the Saxons in this island; wherein his advice was, that the idolatrous temples should be transformed into Christian churches; and whereas the pagan Saxons had used there to sacrifice to their idols, that from thenceforth the Christians, upon the day of consecration, should erect booths of the boughs of trees, near or about the said edifices, wherein to rejoice, feast, and celebrate the memories of the saints and martyrs to whom they were de novo to be dedicated, as we find it in Bede; and thenceforth not only upon the very day of dedication, but anniversarily on the saint's day the feasting and solemnity was continued, wherein, besides the commemoration of the saint or martyr, the devout munificence of the founder and endower of the church was also gratefully remembered. At which times the use was for many of the inhabitants, and chiefly of the younger sort, to meet together, and going up and down the village, to cry out aloud together, Holy wakes, holy wakes, and then to their feasting and sports. But then these festivals in time came to degenerate, the people diverting to gluttony, drunkenness, and other disorders, which occasioned some prohibitions of the solemnity; and Mr Dugdale hath produced an old legend of St John Baptist, whereby some discovery may be made of the wakes and vigils, and of disorders which usually did attend them, as follows:—

"And yee shall understand and know how the Euyns were first found in old time: In the beginning of Holy Church, it was so that the Pepull cam to the Chirch with Candellys brening, and wold Wake, and coom with Light towards Night to the Chirch in their Devotions: and after, they fell to Songs, Dances, and Harping and Piping, and also to Glotonie and Sin, and so toured the holyness to cursydness; wherefore holi faders ordained the pepull to leue that waking, and to fast the euyn. But it is called Vigilia, that is, waking in English, and it called the Euyn, for at Euyn they were wount to coom to the Chirch."

In 1240, the twenty-fourth year of this reign, the Earl of Cornwall, Gilbert Mareschal, and many other nobles, assembled here; and swearing to each other, resolved upon a journey to Jerusalem. Peter de Savoy, the queen's uncle, arrived in England about Christmas in the following year, was entertained during the holidays, and knighted by the king at Westminster Abbey. A tournament was appointed to be held at Northampton in April, between De Savoy, who was very vain of his address in arms, and Roger Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, who had previously distinguished himself in the lists. This combat, which appeared to be merely for a trial of skill, was likely to end seriously, as the real object was to determine whether the English or the foreigners were the most dexterous at tilting.

The king seemed to favour the foreigners, who at the place of meeting appeared the stronger party, and fortunately became sensible of his imprudence in time to forbid the tournament. Henry, in the year 1245, gave ten marks (£19, 1s. 3d.) to purchase books for a library, and a chalice for the reception of the blessed sacrament to the Church of All Saints, with small vessels of silver to the other parish churches in the town. In 1252 the Sheriff of Northampton was ordered to have white glass painted with the story of Dives and Lazarus placed in the castle windows. The town had charters from Henry III. in the eleventh, twenty-third, thirty-ninth, forty-first, and fifty-second years of his reign. The mayor was made escheator, and had the returns, to the exclusion of the king's sheriffs and bailiffs.

In this reign an attempt was made to establish a university in the town in consequence of disputes among the students of Oxford and Cambridge. A Welsh student in Oxford shot a servant of the Pope's legate in 1238. Quarrels subsequently arose between the scholars and the town, between the northmen and southmen. Many of the scholars left Oxford and went to Northampton, where they were subsequently joined by some Cambridge scholars about the year 1258, when they commenced a university with the king's permission. Fuller commends "their judgment in choice of so convenient a place, where the air is clear, and not over-sharp; the earth fruitful, yet not over-dirty; water plentiful, yet far from any fennish annoyance; and wood conveniently sufficient in that age. But the main is, Northampton is near the centre of England; so that all travellers coming thither from the remotest parts of the land, may be said to meet by the town in the midst of their journey, so impartial is the situation of it in the navel of the kingdom." The king believed the university would improve the town; but Oxford, the centre of the royalist forces, and only thirty miles off, became alarmed, and complained loudly of the injury. Four years afterwards, Henry, by letters-patent, addressed "Majori et civibus suis," ordered the Northampton University to be abolished and the scholars to quit.

The animosity between the king and the barons continuing, and there being no prospect of reconciliation, it was determined by both parties to appeal to arms. In 1263 the royalists assembled at Oxford, and with a well-appointed army made an attack on Northampton, which was defended by Simon de Montfort (son of the Earl of Leicester) and many of the principal barons of that party. Unsuccessful in their first attempts, the besiegers had recourse to stratagem. The king, who was encamped in the meadows on the south-east of the town, invited the barons to a parley from the walls, and in the meantime a breach was made on the opposite side of the town, near St Andrew's Monastery, by Philip Basset and some pioneers, who effected an entrance. The barons being thus surprised, fought desperately—the younger Montfort particularly distinguished himself by his bravery; but the king's party were victorious, took possession of the town and garrison, and made prisoners of fifteen knights bearing banners, with sixty others of an inferior degree, and many officers of note. Several of the soldiers were afterwards accused of having prepared combustibles for burning the city of London, and put to death.

After the defeat of Henry and Prince Edward at Lewes by the Earl of Leicester, the castle was retaken (1264), and the Montforts celebrated a brilliant tournament on the 19th of April, to which all the knights and barons throughout the realm were invited. It is said that the town was retaken again by Henry the same year, and that he made many prisoners.

Burgesses were now summoned to Parliament: "the earliest writs of summons to cities and boroughs of which we can prove the existence are those of Simon de Montfort, bearing date 12th December 1264." Edward held a parliament at Northampton in January 1266, when several of the rebellious barons were deprived of their seats, and De Montfort was banished. Peace being now restored, many of the nobles, at the suggestion of Othoboni, the Pope's legate, determined upon proceeding to the Holy Land; and on Midsummer Day, in the fifty-second year of his father's reign, 1267, Prince Edward, with upwards of a hundred knights, here assumed the cross before his departure. The king, with Queen Eleanor and the Princess Eleanor, the latter probably passing by the site of her present monument of Queen's Cross, were here on this occasion. The burgesses of the town received a singular privilege from the Crown in 1270, by being permitted to keep their dogs in the town and suburbs without lawing them. "In the barbarous enactments associated with the forest laws," says Mr Hartshorne, "there was one decreeing that no person should keep a dog without cutting off the three fore-claws, or the ball of each foot, in default of which mutilation the owners were liable to an amercement of three shillings. This mode of effectually preventing dogs running in the forest originated in the laws of Canute."

In 1277 three hundred Jews were executed here for clipping the king's coin; and in two years afterwards, the seventh of Edward I., the Jews of Northampton were accused of having crucified a Christian boy on Good Friday, for which atrocious act fifty of them were drawn at horses' tails and hanged. Edward not being very favourable to them, having deprived them of many of their liberties, no doubt this was a pretence for plundering and persecuting them.

Grants of a school and houses at Northampton, formerly belonging to the Jews, are upon record, which, by the offences and conviction of their owners, came into the hands of the Crown; and parts of a Hebrew inscription, said to be to the memory of a rabbi, have been dug up in St Sepulchre's parish.

Two citizens from London and twenty other towns, including Northampton, were summoned by Edward I. to the Parliament of Acton Burnell in 1283-84. David Prince of Wales, the last sovereign prince of one of the most ancient ruling families of Europe, was barbarously executed at Shrewsbury at this time, and Northampton was favoured with one of his four quarters. Edward spent some days here in August 1290, when he entertained the monks of the several orders three days successively, and was in the neighbourhood of Northampton nearly a month. Queen Eleanor's remains passed through Northampton this year on its way to London, the cortège resting at the place south of the town where the monumental cross erected to her memory now stands.

In 1298, the twenty-sixth of Edward I., the burgesses of Northampton were commanded by writ to choose two representatives to meet the king at York on the feast of Pentecost, there to consult on the business of the realm. "This is the first instance," says Mr Hartshorne, "of Northampton returning members to Parliament, and also the earliest instance of the town being directed to choose representatives of their feelings in matters concerning the government of the State. It is true that conventions and councils had previously been summoned, and several to Northampton; but, until the present moment, the legislative assemblies of England did not assume a constitutional character. This seems to be the earliest occasion when representatives were freely and independently sent forth to give utterance to the popular voice, and Northampton was one of the seventy-six selected to return members to Parliament." In 1299 the burgesses of Northampton were privileged to elect a mayor and two bailiffs annually on the feast of St Michael.

In the twenty-ninth year of his reign (1300), Edward the First and Margaret his queen kept their Christmas here; and soon after his death, in 1307, a parliament was held at Northampton, in October, to consider the ceremonial of his burial, the coronation and marriage of the prince his successor, and the state of the nation.

"The name of Edward the First," writes Mr Hartshorne, "when regarded in connection with Northampton, is linked with associations commanding an interest far beyond its vicinity, since the sepulchral monument in the neighbourhood, consecrated by sincere affection to the memory of his queen, is a work not only seizing admiration by its just proportions and purity of design, but one to which all Englishmen who are imbued with a lofty feeling for art may proudly refer, as an evidence that at this remote period their own countrymen were capable of conceiving, as well as executing, the most sublime ideas of architectural beauty."

In 1313, the sixth of Edward II., the sheriff of the county was commanded, by royal mandate, to direct public proclamation to be made, that no jousts or tournaments should be held during his absence in Scotland. Another parliament met here in July 1317, in which an impostor or lunatic, named John Poydras, a tanner's son at Exeter, was brought to trial for affirming that he was the son of Edward I., and real heir to the crown of England; that he had been changed at nurse, and that the king was the son of a carter, and substituted in his stead. Producing no evidence in support of his assertions, he was condemned and executed. In 1328, the second year of the reign of Edward III., a parliament was summoned to meet at Northampton three weeks after Easter, for the ratification of the peace concluded with the Scots. Many of the nobility and prelates refused to attend in consequence of the shameful terms of the treaty, which the king, acting under the influence of his mother, Queen Isabella, and her favourite, Mortimer, was induced to sanction, but which was now confirmed and executed, and the famous evidence, called Ragmas Roll, with all the other records brought by Edward I. from Scotland, were delivered up to the Scotch commissioners. The first statute of Northampton was enacted at this parliament, specifying in what cases pardon of felony should be granted, and who should be justices of assize. Queen Isabella, it is said, was lodged at the Priory of St Andrew during the sitting. In 1336, the tenth of this reign, a council was summoned to meet here on the 25th June, to consider the proper measures to be taken against France, and preparations were now making for war. In the following year (1337) the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of Northampton obtained licence for a fair to be held here, beginning on the Monday after the octave of the Holy Trinity, and to continue for the twenty-seven following days. This fair has long fallen into disuse.

In 1338, the twelfth year of his reign, the third parliament assembled at Northampton, when the king, who had previously taken his departure for the Continent, was represented by Edward the Black Prince. Edward, who was appointed keeper of the realm during the absence of his father, effectively urged this great council to supply the necessary aids for carrying on the war abroad. Northampton was the seat of another parliament in the fourth year of Richard II. (1381): it met on the 5th of November. John Kirkeby, who had killed the Genoese envoy during the insurrection which broke out in London in the preceding year, and which crime was declared by both Houses high treason, was brought here to have the law carried into effect, as it was apprehended that a tumult might occur if he had been tried in London. This was the last parliament held at Northampton. It was also remarkable for having originated the capitation, or poll-tax, a levy of three groats per head upon all persons above the age of fifteen, and which led to the rebellion of Wat Tyler and Jack Straw. Bridges tells us that it met in the chancel of All Saints' Church, and continued thirty-three days. The knights of the county received four shillings per day, which was equal in our coin to ten shillings and fourpence, and would then purchase half a quarter of wheat; those of Bedford and Buckingham received the same pay for thirty-five days; those of Lancashire for forty-eight days, and those of Northumberland for fifty-one days,—wages in proportion to their respective distances.

In the second Edward III., the parliament summoned here sat only twenty days, when the knights of the shire of Norfolk, the burgesses of Norwich, had twenty-eight days' wages; those from Cornwall thirty-two days' wages, of which twelve were for going and returning. The allowance to knights of the shire was twice the amount of that to members of boroughs, the former receiving four shillings, the latter two shillings per day. By a charter of eight Richard II. (1384–85), the assize of bread, wine, and beer, the survey of weights and measures, and the cognisance of forestallers and regraters of flesh and fish within the liberty of the town, were confided to the mayor.

The Black Friars of the order of St Augustine, which first came into England in 1221, held provincial chapters at Northampton in the years 1338, 1340, and 1343. A general chapter of the same order, held here in 1359, ordained the number of canons to be sent to Oxford, and a return of the defaulters was made by the visitors to a chapter convened at St James's Abbey in 1446.

About the year 1369 the peculiar doctrines of Wickliffe were first propagated in this county, and seem to have met with much favour in Northampton; for, notwithstanding the earnest opposition of the clergy, it would appear that they were cherished by several of rank, the mayor himself being tainted with the heresy. A formal complaint was made to the king in council by one Richard Stormesworth, a woolman, that the chief magistrate, John Fox, harboured in his house James Collyn, the first maintainer of Lollardy in Northampton, and that he encouraged the preaching of the Lollards contrary to the inhibitions of the Bishop of Lincoln. The result of the complaint is not stated. In the ninth of Henry VI. an Act of Parliament was obtained for paving the town at the expense of the inhabitants, and in the twenty-third of the same reign (1445) the town obtained its first charter of incorporation, and the title of mayor, bailiff, and burgesses ; a grant was also made by which the mayor was appointed escheator. This charter became void in a few years, in consequence of several Acts of legislation passed after it, and a new charter, embodying the like privilege, was received in the thirtieth year of the same reign ; but Mr Hartshorne informs us that it was not until the thirty-eighth year of this reign that Northampton was stated by royal grant to endure in perpetual succession an incorporated town.

In July 1460, during the Wars of the Roses, which deluged the kingdom with blood, a decisive battle was fought in the vicinity of the town, on the south bank of the river Nene, between the Yorkists and Lancastrians. Henry came from Coventry with his forces to check the progress of the Earls of March and Warwick, who, with a numerous army, were hastening triumphantly from London into the midland counties ; and having crossed the Nene, posted his army in the plain between Hardingstone and Sandysford, having the river in their rear, the Monastery of De la Pre on their right, and strong entrenchments in front. Henry and Margaret his queen were lodged on this occasion in the Grey Friars. The Yorkist army was perceived advancing on the morning of the 9th of July, in three divisions, commanded by the Earl of March, afterwards Edward IV., and the Earl of Warwick (" the King-maker "), and Lord Falconberg. A conference having been refused by the king, the battle commenced on the following day, July 10th. Henry's entrenchments were easily forced, and being deserted by Lord Grey de Ruthyn, his army was completely routed, taken prisoner himself, and upwards of ten thousand of his soldiers slain, or drowned in attempting to cross the river. The slaughter in this sanguinary conflict, says Stow, fell chiefly on the nobility and gentry, the common people being spared by order of the Earls of Warwick and March ; and the Duke of Buckingham, the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Lords Beaumont and Egremont, with Sir William Lucy and several other nobles and officers of distinction, were left dead on the field. Henry was brought a prisoner into Northampton, the hostile earls treating him with great tenderness and respect ; he was received in procession at his entrance, and conveyed to London in a few days. The queen, the young Prince of Wales, and the Duke of Somerset fled into the county of Durham, from thence into Wales, and afterwards into Scotland.

1461. At a parliament convened at Westminster by Edward IV., a charter of pardon was granted under the great seal to the burgesses for any part they had taken in the late wars. A formidable insurrection having broken out in Yorkshire in the ninth year of Edward IV. (1469-70), a party of the insurgents defeated the King's army at Edgcote in this county, and captured Earl Rivers and Sir John Woodville, the father and brother of the queen, at Grafton. They brought their victims to Northampton and beheaded them.

On the death of Edward IV. in 1483, the Prince of Wales, then only thirteen years of age, was at Ludlow. Richard Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III., was in the marshes of Scotland. The widowed queen sent immediately for her son, and on the 22d of April he reached Stony Stratford under the escort of Earl Rivers. Richard, who had now determined to usurp the throne, contrived to reach Northampton on the same day, to which place Earl Rivers and Lord Richard Grey came to salute him on the part of the young king. They all met in apparent friendship, and spent the evening convivially. Rivers and Grey had quarters for the night assigned to them, but guards were secretly placed over them, and all the outlets from the town were secured. All rode together next day to Stony Stratford ; but before reaching the town, Earl Rivers was entrapped into an ambuscade and seized. Lord Grey was afterwards arrested in the young king's presence, and with Sir Thomas Vaughan and Sir Richard Hawse brought back to Northampton. The lords were shortly afterwards beheaded at Pontefract.

Richard himself was slain in August 1485, in the decisive battle fought between him and Henry Earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII., at Bosworth field. The army of Henry consisted of six thousand men, that of Richard not less than twelve ; but Lord Stanley, going over to Richmond, turned the fortune of the day. The body of Richard was found among a heap of slain, and ignominiously thrown across a horse, and carried amidst the insults of a mob to Leicester, where it was interred in the Church of the Grey Friars. His crown being found by one of Henry's soldiers on the field of battle, was immediately placed on the head of the conqueror, the whole army crying out, "Long live King Henry!" With Richard III. ended the race of the Plantagenets, who had possession of the crown for about three hundred and thirty years; and with them the contests between the houses of York and Lancaster, in which more than a hundred thousand men lost their lives either by the sword or the executioner.

The power of the castle declined with the civil wars, and Richard's affectation of popular measures, if it did not secure the support of the north and Northampton, left them disaffected to his successor, Henry VII. An insurrection broke out in the north, in which the Duke of Northumberland was killed. It was suppressed, and the leaders were hanged at York. Leicester and Northampton had shown symptoms of disorder, and advantage was taken of it to alter the popular constitution of the borough. It appears to have been the design to supply the place of the castle and the priory by a Burgess aristocracy with exclusive privileges. In the eleventh year of this king's reign (1495) a charter was granted to the town for two fairs, for regulating the administration of justice within the liberties, and sanctioning the appointment of a recorder.

A little before the dissolution of the religious houses, Henry VIII. despatched his librarian, Leland, on a tour of inspection through England. His commission was dated the 25th of the king's reign (1533-34), and he has left us the following notes of his visit to Northampton in his "Itinerarium:" "The towne of Northampton stondesth on the north side of the Avon Ryver (the Nene), on the browe of a meane hille, and risith still from the south to the north. At the old building of the towne was of stone, the new of tymbre. There be in the walls of Northampton four gates. The castelle stondesth hard by the west gate, and hath a large kepe. The area of the residew is very large, and bullewarkes of yerth be made afore the castelle gate.—Paroche Churches in Northampton, within the waulles, be seven; whereof the Church of Al-Halowes (All Saints) is principale, standing yn the harte of the towne, and is large and welle builded. There be in the suburbs two Paroche Churches, whereof I saw one yn the west suburbe as I rode over the West Bridge, fairly archid with stone, under the which Avon itself, not yet augmented with Wedon water, doth ren.—There is a Chapelle of St Caterine sette in a cemiterie in the towne, longing to the Church of Al-Halowes, where that paroche dooth byri. And I saw the ruins of a large chapelle without the north gate." Leland mentions "St Andreas," the late Priory of Black Monks, White Friars and Grey Friars, the Hospitals of St John and Thomas.

St Andrew's Priory, as has been seen before, was repaired or rebuilt, and endowed in 1084 by Simon de St Liz, Earl of Northampton and Huntingdon. He is sometimes called the founder, which cannot be correct, since Ingulphus says that among the monks he found at Crowland in 1076, there were two who had been professed here. By whom it was founded and the date of its foundation are equally unknown. It was situated on the north side of the town, bordering on the river, the present modern Church of St Andrew partly occupying its site. It was certainly the most important of the religious establishments in Northampton, and the most amply endowed; for besides possessing the ten churches of the town, with various lands at Hardingstone, Hackleton, Brafield, Ecton, and Yardley, granted by St Liz and his countess Maude, "that they may not, at the day of judgment, before all bystanders, appear with empty hands;" Grimsbold endowed it with the church and tithe of Moulton and Bowden; Otger, with the tithe of Horton; and Acard, with the tithe of Spratton. The Church of St Sepulchre was bestowed upon it by Henry I., who, with King David of Scotland and King Stephen, confirmed many other early grants. The churches of the town included in the above ten which were given to the priory by Simon, and of which no traces are to be found at this day, were called—St Michael's, St Mary's, St Gregory's, St Edmund's, and St Bartholomew's.

Besides the Priory of St Andrew, the Cluniac order possessed an establishment for nuns at De la Pre, and an hospital at Kingsthorpe. The Monastery of St Andrew is thus described by Doctor Richard Layton in a letter to Lord Cromwell: "At St Androse, in Northampton, the howse is in debt gretly, the lands solde and morgagede, the fermes let owte, and the rent recevide beforehand for x, xv, xx yeres. Chauntrey's fowndeth to be paide oute of the londs, and gret bods off forfeitures therupon for non-payment. The howse is iij hundret pownds in revenews. Jhane Petie, the prior, now is a bachelor of divinitie, a gret husbonde and a good clerke, and petie it is that ever he cam ther. If he were promotede to a better thyng, and the king's grace wolde take hit into his hands, so myght he recover all the lands agayne, which the prior shall never." The quiet play on Petie's name, says a recent writer, the politic way in which the head of the house was gained over, and the cogent reasons for seizing the possessions, are characteristic of the times and the men; but the mismanagement, improvidence, and anticipation of the revenues are easily conceived, as they have been perpetuated, more or less, in the English Church down to the present day. The priory was surrendered in 1538, and the prior was made first dean of Peterborough Cathedral. Thus fell this house of friars, which had been founded and peopled nearly 500 years before by the Count de St Liz and Maude; which held all the churches of Northampton under grant, and innumerable possessions besides. Its revenues were rated, on its surrender, only at £263, 7s. 1½d. clear of all deductions, the gross income being £334, 13s. 7d.

The lease of the edifice, with one water-mill, &c., was renewed at the survey by the commissioners, twenty-ninth Henry VIII. (1st March 1536), at £4; a field of six acres at 8d. an acre, and others at the same rate. The house and the demesne lands of nearly 700 acres were granted by Edward VI. to Sir Thomas Smith, and it was in this way "the lands were recovered again." The other religious houses within the walls of Northampton which surrendered in 1539 were—the Friars' Manor, Franciscans or Grey Friars, founded in 1245, and supported by the town. In speaking of this order, Bishop Tanner says, "Not long after their coming into England, in 1224, they endeavoured to settle in this pleasant town, and hired first an habitation in the parish of St Giles, but fixed afterwards northward of the market-place, where they had the largest and best house of all the friars in Northampton, built upon ground given them by the town, and therefore the inhabitants are said to be the founders." There are now no remains of this house, but a street in the immediate neighbourhood of its site bears its name, Grey Friars' Street. At the dissolution it was valued at £6, 13s. 4d., and the friary was granted to a Rd. Taverner. Kerr Street occupies the greater part of the site of the church belonging to this monastery. The Friars' Preachers, or Black Friars (Dominicans), founded about 1240 by John Dalynghton. This house was situated in the Horse-Market, of which some wall, and parts of gable ends, and a buttress still remain. Its revenues were worth only £5, 11s. 5d. a year. The Carmelites, or White Friars, founded in 1271 by Simon de Montfort and Thomas Chetwood, stood a little above the Grey Friars and to the east of it; some traces of its site have recently been discovered at the corner of Kerr Street, but there are no remains of the building. It was valued at £10, 10s. per annum. The Augustinian Friars, in Bridge Street, near the south gate, founded in 1322, by John Longville of Wolverton. Some arches of this building existed a few years since, but have now disappeared; but there are some portions of the walls left still, and a part of a gable and buttress, built up among the houses in Court No. 1. Its revenues are unknown.

Besides these religious establishments, there were two of considerable note without the walls, but in the vicinity of the town—namely, St James's Abbey, on the western suburb, founded by William Peverel, natural son of the Conqueror, who gave it forty acres of land, together with the church and mill of Duston. The founder died in 1112, but the exact date of the foundation of the abbey is not known. In the register of this abbey mention is made of St Martin's Chapel, in St Martin's Street, but of which nothing certain is known. Another abbey stood without the south gate, founded in the reign of Stephen by Simon de St Liz, the second of that name, Earl of Northampton, for nuns of the Cluniac order, and was called St Mary de la Pre. There are no remains of this house now. The mansion of J. A. S. Bouverie, Esq., still called De la Pre Abbey, occupies its site. There were also the five following guilds or fraternities within the walls, mentioned in the survey of 1548: The guild in honour of the body of Christ, within the parish church of All Saints, was valued at £12, 14s. yearly, out of which was paid £5, 6s. 8d. to the officiating priest. A guild to the honour of the Holy Trinity and the Blessed Virgin Mary was founded in All Saints' Church in the 16th of Richard II. (1392-93), whose possessions, clear of all deductions and salaries of priests, &c., amounted to £35, 11s. 9d. A fraternity in honour of St Catherine was founded in the same year, in the Church of St Mary, whose revenues were valued at £11, 8s. 6d., out of which was deducted £1, 10d. in rents resolute, and £5, 6s. 8d. to the stipendiary chaplain. In St Giles's Church was the fraternity of St Clement, which at its dissolution was valued at £8, 11s. yearly; of which was deducted in rents resolute 15s. 8d., and in an annual stipend to the priest £4. In 1532, Margaret Wheler, widow, appointed a solemn dirge and mass to be yearly celebrated in the Chapel of Corpus Christi, in All Saints' Church. The revenues for its support in 1548 were valued at £1, 8s. 10d. clear of all deductions.

The College of All Saints was founded in 1459, with liberty of purchasing to the value of twenty marks. It consisted only of two fellows. In 1535 it was found, clear of all reprises, to be worth £1, 19s. 4d. College Lane, now called College Street, in this town, takes its name from it.

King Henry VIII. with a royal train visited Northampton on the 21st of July, 1540, and after sleeping at the house of a Mr Humfrie, without the south gate, proceeded to York.

This town, as well as several other places, seems to have fallen into decay about this time, either from its ceasing to be a resort of the Court, or of the blighting effects of the civil wars, or of Henry the Seventh's interference with the free government of the town, which was now vested in a self-elected body. The preamble of an Act of Parliament, twenty-seventh of Henry VIII. (1535-36), says, "Forsomuche as dyvers and many howses, messages, and tenementis of habitations in the towns of Nottingham, Shrewsbury, Ludlowe, Brydgenorth, Quynborowe, Northampton, and Gloucester, are now and of long time have been in great ruin and decay, and specially in the principal and chief streets there being, in the which streets have been beautiful dwelling-houses there well inhabited, while at this day much part thereof is desolate and void groundis, with piteous cellars and vaults lying open and uncovered, very perilous for people to go by in the night without jeopardy of life." . . . And the Act proposes, "for remedy whereof, be it enacted, that if the owners within three years after proclamation by the mayors, sheriffs, or bailiffs, do not sufficiently re-edify and build the houses, it shall be to the lords of whom such vacant ground is holden to enter immediately and have it to them and their heirs for ever. If the said lords do not re-edify the building on the vacant ground within three years, the mayors, sheriffs, bailiffs, or commonalty of the towns are to have and to hold it for ever, clearly discharged of all rents going out of the same; if the mayor, &c. &c., do not build, then the ground is to return to the first owner."

Queen Elizabeth visited Northampton, "as she travelled hence in stately progress to Burleigh," in 1564; was received with great ceremony, and at her departure was presented by the magistrates with £20 in a purse valued at £6. The remainder of the day was spent by the people in bull and bear baiting. The town has still a Bearward Street.

The parish registers of Northampton date from about the period (1603) when Elizabeth obliged the clergy to make a protestation, in which they bound themselves to keep the register-book of births, deaths, and marriages in a proper manner. The parish of St Giles is from 1559; St Peter from 1578 for burials and marriages, and 1596 for baptisms.

A fire broke out in 1566, which destroyed several houses.

Camden, speaking of Northampton in 1607, says, "The town itself seems to have been built entirely of stone, has handsome buildings, is large, and surrounded by walls, from which one has a prospect of a spacious plain every way." This year (in May) while the parliament was sitting, the country people suddenly assembled in great numbers, and "bent all their strength to level and lay open the common, without exercising any measure of theft or violence upon any man's goods or cattle." This lawless multitude of men, women, and children termed themselves "Levellers," and selected for their leader a man named Reynolds, whom they surnamed Captain Pouch, from a large pouch or purse which he wore by his side. This fellow so far imposed upon the credulity of the ignorant peasantry as to make them believe that he possessed a charm that rendered him invulnerable, and would protect them all provided they would refrain from evil deeds and cursing and swearing, and that he had the king's authority for levelling the enclosures of the commons; but eventually the riots were suppressed, and Captain Pouch was hanged, drawn, and quartered. Upon searching the valuable pouch, it was found to contain a piece of cheese.

Northampton was honoured by a visit from King Charles I. and his queen, Henrietta, in 1634, when some costly pieces of plate were presented to them by the town; and it is stated in the "Ædes Althorpianæ" that the queen of James I. and Prince Henry, in their journey from Edinburgh to London, came from Holdenby to Northampton, where they were received in great state by the magistrates.

The Puritans held frequent conferences here in the reign of Elizabeth, relating to the Book of Discipline and other matters, having many abettors in the town and county; and Northampton was a stronghold of the Independents and Baptists in the seventeenth century.

In 1637 the court of eyre for the forests south of the Trent sat here, under the Earl of Holland, chief justice, as head of the commission, assisted by five other judges and many of the nobility and gentry. The plague which ravished London in 1636, where 23,359 persons died, appeared at Northampton in this (the following year), when more than 500 persons perished in five months. On this occasion the market was kept on the heath (supposed to be the site of the present race-course), and the inhabitants were not permitted to attend it without a certificate from the mayor. In the civil wars between the king and the Parliament in 1642, Northampton sided with the latter, and was garrisoned under Lord Brooke; the walls were repaired, and the fortifications strengthened; the south and west bridges were converted into drawbridges, and additional works thrown up in defenceless places. Saltpetre was collected out of the old cellars of the town, and converted into gunpowder at the mill on the brook in Cow Meadow. Fuller states that Northampton, in his time, was famous for saltpetre and pigeons. In a pamphlet published on the 9th of September in that year, we find an account of a skirmish here. It is stated that it is feared the "Cavaliers will make an assault upon Northampton; but that town hath a strong garrison in it, and have repaired their walls, and made strong fortifications in it; and the county hath raised £5000 in money, and 300 horse for the service of the Parliament; and at the time of the Cavaliers' approach they had finished their fortifications, and had placed two pieces of ordnance thereupon, and played against them for the space of two hours, putting the Cavaliers to flight, and slaying about twenty of them." The Earl of Essex arrived here on September 9th, where 15,000 men were assembled, and then marched into Worcestershire. Northampton was the general rendezvous from whence Colonel Whetham, the governor, frequently sent aid to the Parliament forces in their attacks on Banbury and other places. Lieutenant-General Cromwell was here on the 30th of March 1645, with a body of 1500 horse and two regiments of foot, on his way to Rugby, where they intended to quarter that night. General Sir Thomas Fairfax passed through Northampton on the 30th December 1647, at the head of three regiments of horse, three regiments of foot, and 500 dragoons, being sent with £200,000 to the Scottish army; and Cromwell's infantry marched through Northampton without shoes or stockings in 1648; the town, however, sent 1500 pairs of this useful staple after him to Leicester.

In 1649 a body of mutineers from the Parliamentary authority, called the Levellers, under a man named Thomson, with two troops of horse, took possession of Northampton, and seized the ordnance, magazines, and moneys, but were speedily subdued and put to flight by Cromwell. In 1662, by order of the king in council, the walls of the town were ordered to be demolished (together with the walls of Gloucester, Coventry, Leicester, and Taunton, because these towns had sided with the Parliament), part of the castle was taken down, and the site was sold; and thus "the priory and the castle, raised by the feudal baron of the Conqueror, were destroyed by the Crown." Northampton was visited by a frightful storm of thunder and rain in May 1663, which occasioned a flood, since remembered as the May Flood, which tore away parts of the south and west bridges, and destroyed several houses in Bridge Street.

On the 12th of May 1669, Cosmo the Third, Grand Duke of Tuscany, visited this town, and received the respects of the corporation in form. In the account of his travels, Northampton is described as being 2120 paces round the walls; the streets and buildings in a good and respectable style of architecture; the chief part of them built of stone and earth, and a good deal ornamented. A dreadful fire occurred in Northampton on Monday, September the 20th, 1675, when the greater part of the town was consumed, including the market-cross, and All Saints' Church. The fire was first discovered at noon, in the cottage of a poor woman, in a lane near the castle. A strong west wind blew the flames towards some thatched buildings in St Mary's Street, thence communicating to the back of the Horse-Market, spreading its ravages to Durngate, which is nearly half a mile from where it originated; and in the space of six hours upwards of 600 houses, wherein dwelt 700 families, were burnt to the ground, and eleven lives lost. Dr Conant, the vicar of All Saints', says that "in the Drapery it made a noise like thunder, to the terror of all those who were near that place." A singular circumstance is said to have occurred during the fire: the servant of an apothecary brought a barrel of gunpowder out of a cellar, which he carried under his arm through Gold Street whilst it was burning on both sides, covering it only with the skirts of his coat, and, wonderful to relate, he carried it off in safety. The morning after the fire the town lay reeking and burning in every direction, and apprehensions were entertained of a fresh outbreak, when three rainbows appeared in the heavens, the harbingers of a great shower, which fell in torrents over the devoted town, and totally extinguished the fire. The amount of property destroyed was estimated at various figures: Dr Conant estimated it at £250,000, including the Church of All Saints, which was valued at £50,000, whilst others reduce it to £160,000, &c. A subscription was immediately instituted to rebuild the town, when the large sum of £25,000 was collected by briefs and private charity, a sum exceeding by £7000 the general subscription raised after the memorable fire in London; and the king contributed 1000 tons of timber out of the Whittlebury forest, besides remitting the duty of chimney-money to the town for seven years.

The following are amongst the list of benefactors to the sufferers: The Earls of Northampton and Sunderland, £120 each; Lord Arlington, Bishop of Litchfield and Coventry; Sir William Farmer, Sir William Langham, George Holman, Esq., and Paul Wentworth, Esq., £100 each. The city of London contributed £5000; the town of Manchester, £155; Nottingham, £150; Oxford University, £450; the city of Oxford, £124; Stratford-on-Avon, £180; Warwick, £171; York, £100; Lincoln, £118; Derby, £150; Cambridge University, £286; the town of Cambridge, £85; Coventry, £200; and Banbury, £110. The noble Earl of Northampton, the then recorder, after administering largely to the wants of the sufferers, and opening a subscription for their immediate relief, procured an Act of Parliament for rebuilding the town, which soon rose from its prostrate condition in renewed beauty, with very little difference in the arrangements of the streets, &c. The judges, the justices of the county, the Mayor of Northampton, and eleven others, were made a court of record to decide cases of dispute, and to make rules in respect of party walls and buildings. The houses were ordered to be covered with lead, slate, or tiles. A man not free might obtain his freedom by building a house worth £300; and places not built on within three years were to be disposed of.—A reminiscence of the Act of Henry the Eighth.

A charter, granted in 1668, placing the government in the hands of a mayor, bailiffs, ex-mayors, ex-bailiffs, and a common council, "the company of '48," was included in a pretty general forfeiture, and a new one was issued in 1683, appointing only forty burgesses, and reserving to the Crown the power of placing or displacing the members; but upon being found impracticable, it was declared void, and the former charter was in force till 1795. In June 1779 another fire broke out, in which eight houses in Sawpit Lane, and a wool warehouse, and two houses in St Sepulchre's Church Lane, were destroyed; and on the 17th February 1792 a calamitous fire occurred at the "Shoulder of Mutton Inn," on the west side of the Market Square (the site of the house now adjoining the Queen's Arms to the north), which entirely consumed it; and the landlady, Mrs Marriott, her five children, and two lodgers perished in the flames, Mr Marriott, the landlord, escaping. The town was visited on the 20th December 1720, between the hours of eleven and twelve o'clock at night, by "the greatest flood that has been ever known in this age." It broke into several houses, warehouses, and cellars, damaging considerable quantities of goods, and drowning forty sheep. Two shocks of earthquake were felt here on the 30th September 1750 and 28th of October 1776. The former, which was violent, and lasted nearly a minute, threw down part of an old wall in College Street; the latter was felt in the town and neighbourhood for two or three seconds, and a ball of fire was plainly seen by many persons at the same time.

In the beginning of the eighteenth century education made some progress in this place. Dr Doddridge removed his academy from Market Harborough, in 1729, to Northampton, where it continued until after his death in 1752, when it was removed by the trustees under Dr Ashworth to Daventry. The navigation of the river Nene was extended to Peterborough, under an Act of Parliament, 12th of Anne, and another in 1725; to Oundle, Thrapston, Higham Ferrers, and Wellingborough in 1726, and to Northampton in 1762. The river received an accession of traffic by a branch of the Grand Junction Canal at Blisworth in 1815.

A general infirmary was founded in 1747, a hospital in 1793. In 1844 her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria passed through Northampton, and gave her name to a new dispensary; and in 1858 a homœopathic dispensary was established.

THE CASTLE.—"The Castel," says Leland, "stondeth hard by the west gate, and hath a large kepe. The area of the residue is very large, and bullewarkes of yerth be made afore the castel gate." That this fortress was built by Simon de St Liz soon after the Norman Conquest there is scarcely a doubt. Some antiquarians suppose that it was erected on the site of a more ancient structure—whether of British, Roman, Saxon, or Danish origin is a matter of conjecture. As there is no mention made of the castle in Domesday Book, it could not have been completed till after that survey was taken.

It appears from the account of Norden, that even in the year 1593 this castle was much decayed, and the walls defenceless. "This town," says he, "is a faire towne, with many faire old buildings, large streets, and a very ample and faire market-place; it is walled about with a wall of stone, but meane too of strength: neare unto the towne there standeth an eminent castle, ruynous." Since Norden's time most of these ruins have been swept away or levelled, and now only a few fragments of foundation-walls and parts of the fosses remain. The inner ballium was nearly circular, and surrounded by a lofty wall, with bastion towers at irregular distances. This was again encompassed by a deep and wide fosse. A broad ballium, or area for the garrison, extended for some distance, and was guarded by an outer vallum, with barbican, &c. The general extent and character of the earthworks may still be traced.

A late writer says, "This fortress, situated on an eminence without the west gate of the town, was defended on three sides by a deep trench or fosse, whilst the river served as a natural barrier on the western side. On the north side was the entrance gate, before which stood the barbican, protecting a road down to the river-side called Castle Lane, and which no doubt was for the use of the garrison. On the south side of the inner ballium are the remains of the round tower, with narrow looped lights, and west of it a postern gate, which formerly had a low elliptical arch of plain Norman mouldings. This communicated with a terrace on that side between the wall and the ditch, and which led round the castle. The outer ballium extended on the south side to the walls facing Black Lion Hill. In this direction and eastward the ferruginous character of the soil may be seen, as well as the construction of the foundations of the walls. On the west side there is an arch of semi-Norman character; and in this part more of the original wall is seen than in any other part of the building. On the east of the castle, until lately, stood a mount called Castle Hill. From its height and situation it no doubt was raised for a communication between the garrison in the castle and the tower in the south-eastern part of the town. It was possessed by the Crown in the reign of Henry II., and afterwards intrusted to some constable or castellan appointed by the sovereign. In the civil war of 1246, Simon de Montfort was its governor on the part of the confederated barons. We have previously related how it was taken by stratagem by the king. The castle again remained in possession of the Crown till the third year of the reign of Edward III. (1329.) Thomas Wake, then sheriff, claimed the custody of it, as annexed to the county, and belonging to his jurisdiction; and it being found by inquisition then taken to have been immemorially attached to that office, it was ordered to be given up to be held by the said sheriff and his successors. Within the castle was a royal free chapel dedicated to St George. Previous to the year 1675 this fortress was used as the county gaol, and the two courts of justice were held here. In 1662, pursuant to an order of the king and council, the walls and gates, and part of the castle, were demolished, and the site of it afterwards sold to Robert Haselrig, Esq., in whose family it remained until recently." In 1730 we find the castle premises advertised to be let, in the Northampton Mercury of that time, as well as "the dwelling-house of Sir Arthur Haselrig, Bart., situate in the parish of St Peter, in the town of Northampton, with good gardens, brew-house, stables, coach-houses, and all other conveniences fit for a gentleman's family; and with it, if desired, will be let the Castle of Northampton, and two large orchards, planted with young fruit-trees, and very good and convenient pasture-ground for horses and cows, useful to a family, and also a very commodious kennel for a pack of hounds, with boiling-houses, &c., situated in the said castle orchard." A few years past the house remained unoccupied for a considerable time, when some of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood, imagining that all property in it was lost, took forcible possession, and did much damage, till at length the magistrates of the town interposed, and some of the misguided people were punished. The house is situated in Marefair: it consists of three bays out of five originally, and was for several years the residence of the late George Baker, Esq., the antiquarian and county historian. His sister, Miss Baker, who compiled the "Northamptonshire Glossary," also died here. There are now no vestiges to indicate the foundation of this ancient baronial castle except the earthworks and the south postern opposite the river.

ANTIQUITIES.—In 1823, upon the removal of an old lamp-post, an ancient stone of memorial was discovered on the Wood Hill, adjoining the south-east corner of All Saints' Churchyard. The inscription is mutilated; there is only a part of it left; it is therefore difficult to form an opinion of its age. It reads something like this, CORRUIT HOSTIS CERE VICTVS ERAT. It has reference to some defeat of an enemy, or to one of those sanguinary conflicts which formerly occurred here, but the nature of which it is impossible to make out. At the west end of Newland is a field which is considerably sunk, and was called the Potter's Field. There is a wall with buttresses, which shows that it must have been in use at an early period, from the necessity of having such a protection to the gardens on that side. From the style of architecture the buttresses are, no doubt, the only vestige remaining above ground of the Monastery of the Grey Friars. The kiln attached probably to this field was found about thirty years ago, in digging out the foundations of houses in Newland; it was similar in construction to those discovered at Castor by Mr E. T. Artis. Fragments of a yellow and red pottery, and some covered with a green glaze, were discovered. In digging out the foundations of a house adjoining Lady Lane or Mount Street in 1846, a part of the church floor was discovered. The encaustic tiles were ornamented with the double vesica piscis, interlaced in white on a bluish ground; the bottom of the foundations were about two feet four inches. At six feet from the surface a layer of black ashes, and at that level a skeleton was discovered buried in a grave with stone sides, and a large slab at the top. This was not removed, as the allotment did not extend so far. In forming the present Augustine Street, the site of the Augustinian Friary, several tiles have been found bearing the arms of the Longeville family, one of whom founded the friary in 1322. In deepening a cellar in Gold Street, near the Horse-Market, about twenty-seven years ago, a jug of red pottery was discovered, and with it, but not at so low a depth, burnt wood was found, the remains of some early fire in this locality.

At the north-east corner of the Market Square stands one of the few houses which escaped the fire in 1675. On the front are shields with the following arms over the first floor: 1st, Or, two bars, gules, in chief, three torteauxes. Crest, a knot, commonly called Wake's Knot, for Wake. 2d, A chevron, between three stags' heads cabossed. Crest, a chapeau, or cap of maintenance; if ever surmounted by any device, it has been destroyed. 3d, Three bars ermine. Over the window the second arms are repeated, with a crescent for difference, and without the crest; but a motto in Welsh, HEB DYW. HEB DYM. DWYA DIGON—i.e., Without God, without everything, God and enough—surrounds the arms. A similar coat-of-arms is quartered, and the motto used, by Williams of Penryhn. On the left side of the last-named shield is one bearing a chevron between three roses, and on the right hand a shield, with a chevron between three birds. The initials W. E. P., and date 1595, are placed by the side of the motto. Upon excavating the ground in forming Francis Street, interments, apparently Romanised British or Saxon, were found, having appearances of cremation; fragments of urns, of black, grey, and light red ware, were discovered; a large, low, broad-shaped urn, of coarse red ware, contained remains of the funeral rites. It appears that from the corner of Craven Street to Lower Priory Street these and later interments were continued; of the latter, some bodies had been deposited in the rude style of a cist formed of stones on the side of a road, which apparently ran from the castle towards Semi-long (a by-road at the back of the Catholic church), into the Kingsthorpe Road to Leicester. This spot appears to have been the necropolis of the early inhabitants. Stone coffins have been found in the Priory Cemetery, which appears to have extended from the priory buildings at the north end of Francis Street to the corner of Harding Terrace and Priory Street. In one of the coffins, which appears to have been that of a lady, a small wove necklace appeared, the pendant of which was not found. There are some peculiarities in these coffins as to form: the lid of one of them is flat, with a bevelled ridge of about two inches and a half in width running down the middle, containing an inscription in Roman letters—HIC JACET DAVID DE ARMENTIER.

This David Armentier confirmed a benefaction to this priory of two-thirds of the tithes of Stowe and Kislingbury, which had been previously granted to the Convent of St Project of Vermandois, in Normandy, by Henry, his father. He lived about the latter end of the twelfth century. Many, probably, were buried here who fell in the various attacks upon the town and castle, as a great number of bodies were found placed upon each other. The second Simon de St Liz was interred here, and many persons of rank at various times. Among the encaustic tiles found, were those bearing the Wake knot, and others impressed with the shears, allusive to the staplers. Some very curious specimens of early pottery have been found on this side; among them part of a mediæval jug, of a bluish grey white, very highly finished in the execution, and depicted apparently with the parable of Dives and Lazarus. Human feet, and dogs licking them, seem to be represented; and considering that Henry III. had the same design painted and introduced in St George's Chapel, in the castle, the subject was, perhaps, a favourite one. In the present brick-field, which had been the site of the Vivarium, parts of the vertebræ and paddles of an ichthyosaurus have been discovered in the blue Lias.

The site of a cemetery has also been discovered in Princes Street, in which the bodies had been buried in stone cists. A few encaustic tiles were found at the end towards Newland, and encaustic tiles and foundations of buildings were found in the same street near Grey Friars Street; at the bottom of Albert Street, in Princes Street, also were found stone coffins and other evidences of interments. Whether these foundations were those of St Michael's Church is uncertain. From the space occupied it is possible that two establishments may have existed in this locality.

CRYPTS.—Besides the portion of the ancient crypt beneath the chancel of All Saints' Church, there is a portion of another crypt a little to the south of it, under the residence of H. B. Whitworth, Esq., George Row, and which is supposed to have had a passage, now stopped up, to the former.

At the south-west end of College Street groined arches were found in some cellars. It has been supposed that this was the site of All Saints' College, from which this lane, recently (as in many other instances) promoted to the rank of a street, derived its appellation. And in the drapery beneath the house of Mr Norman was another crypt with groined arches of Decorated architecture. There was also a corbel, consisting of a face with the tongue lolling out, which is now in the museum; and an ambre locker, which no doubt formed a part of the usual arrangement of a chapel to some religious foundation; and in front of the Wheat-Sheaf Inn, Gold Street (now occupied as private houses), was a small corbel head, probably of the time of Henry VII., or earlier, which is now in the Maidstone Museum.

We find no trace of Northampton in the early British history; the Romans have left no monuments. Whether the place was planted by Saxon families, or seized by their warriors from the original Britons, when princes, Druids, bards, and people were driven to the west, is unknown, but it was a town long before history shows it to us as the camp of hostile Danish troopers. In the excitement, perils, and vicissitudes of war it struggled for two centuries; it was totally burnt down by Sweyn; a great part of its inhabitants were once carried away captive; and William the Conqueror divided its lands and houses between himself and his followers. Armed without by embattled walls, bastion towers, and a large baronial fortress, and within by an extensive Norman priory. At the opening of its history we find the disciple of Odin and the Saxon Christian in Northampton. The saints and the Saxons subjugated the war gods; and Leland on "Avon's bridge saw ten churches: numerous priests and friars then passed and repassed each other in the streets." But the Reformation banished the friars; the Reformers seized the houses and property, and the Protestant clergy and nobles were installed into the Church livings. Puritanism triumphed for a short time with the Independents; but now we live in happier times, when the Independents and the Quakers, the Catholics and the Unitarians, the Baptists and the Methodists, enjoy nearly equal rights with the Established Church.

"Let us imagine," says the Rev. H. Rose, in an admirable paper read to the Architectural Society, "a traveller about the middle of the fifteenth century approaching Northampton by the Upton Road, and at the brow of the hill where it would first burst upon his view, in all its length and breadth, what would he behold? The castle with its large and lofty keep and spacious area, surrounded by outer walls and towers, bidding defiance to the strongest enemy ; the Abbeys of St James and Delapre, and near the latter the beautiful memorial cross of Queen Eleanor ; suburban Northampton, with its churches and hospitals, stretching to the north, south, and west—the embattled walls of the town itself, with their gates and towers, enclosing as much space as that occupied by the present town ; the Priory of St Andrew to the left of the castle, and bordering on the river ; the ten churches, the four houses of friars, the hospitals, and the college, with their various towers, spires, and pinnacles, interspersed with gardens, orchards, and dwellings of the inhabitants. And as he journeyed on, nearing Northampton in all its medieval perfection, what sounds would be wafted by the breeze upon his listening ear ? The flutter of banners and the clang of arms, mingled with the deep and solemn tones of many a church and convent bell ; and when we recollect that every town in England presented, at that time, a picture resembling this in every respect according to its size, one reflection is forced upon the mind, that war and religion, however inconsistently, formed almost the sole occupation of our medieval forefathers. Even commerce had more or less reference to one or other of these two opposite employments, for the workers in all sorts of metals had little else to do than to fabricate all kinds of arms and armour. The druggist or grocer would deal largely in spices and wax for incense and lights in sacred edifices ; the chief occupation of masons, stone-cutters, and carpenters was church and castle building ; and the vitrists were engaged to fill both with painted glass." We shall close this sketch of its early history with the following extract from William Farr, Esq.'s, very interesting notice of Northampton, a work to which we are indebted for much useful information :—

" Every one must be struck with the small place an English county town has in history compared with the city states of Italy and Greece ; yet the population of Florence, Venice, Genoa, and once of Rome itself, of Sparta, Corinth, Athens, and Thebes, either did not equal, or scarcely exceed that of some English cities and counties. The history of England itself is, however, in truth the history of its towns and counties, of which the aggregate is the kingdom."

Northampton took its part in the struggle between the Saxons and the Danes ; in the conflict between the Montforts and Henry ; in the Wars of the Roses. It was the headquarters of the Parliamentary army, and had doubtless men at Naseby ; it sent its quota of money and men to Crecy, Agincourt, Blenheim, Trafalgar, Waterloo ; in peace and war it shared with all others in the achievements and glory of the kingdom. The councils and the parliaments, the great political decisions and events, are dwelt on by the local historians, who have also recorded not only important acts, but the mere presence of kings or great men in such a way as to connect the local with the general life and history of the country. In this course we have followed them. The deeds of the day, the thoughts, the passions of the hour, attach themselves to localities, and live in everlasting remembrance. The home becomes the shrine of genius. The presence of a flourishing place that has records of eight centuries revives the past events of its history ; the river, the streets, the sites of old churches, the country, involuntary recall the crowd of great or royal characters that have passed that way : Sweyn, Harold, and Tostig ; Henry I., Henry II., and Becket ; Richard the Lion-hearted, John, and the great barons ; the Montforts, Prince Edward and his hundred Crusaders ; the Black Prince and Richard the Assassin ; Henry VIII., Elizabeth, and Burleigh ; Charles I., Fairfax, and Cromwell ; and in the latter days Victoria. Sweyn with his predatory band, the first of the long procession of warriors, statesmen, and princes, burnt the town to the ground ; Victoria, the Queen of the mighty empire "on which the sun never sets," gave her name to a dispensary for the relief of the sick and suffering. The two acts, the two persons—the relentless chief and the beneficent queen—characterise the epochs.

MANUFACTURES.—Northampton stands and has long stood unrivalled for the manufacture of one of the most useful articles—namely, boots and shoes. Worcester is famed for the manufacture of gloves ; Leicester, stockings ;

Nottingham, lace; Coventry, ribbons; Kidderminster, carpets; Sheffield, knives: boots and shoes are the staple of this town, but a considerable business is done in leather and currying, and since the introduction of machinery the shoe trade has rapidly increased. It is an old saying, that "you know when you are within a mile of Northampton by the noise of the cobblers' lapstones." The army, the colonies, and the principal markets of England, Ireland, and Scotland, are supplied with shoes from Northampton. Immense contracts have been made by the manufacturers, who are the largest in the world; and the demand during the late Continental and American wars has given an impetus to the trade hitherto unexampled, and is perhaps a probable cause of the rapid progress of the population.

"The craft," says a local writer, "claims as venerable an antiquity as any of its compeers; and its articles have changed their contour as much as other parts of the human costume. Robert, the eldest son of the Conqueror, acquired the surname of 'Short Boots,' no doubt from adopting a style new to the Normans. Sharp-pointed long-piked shoes became the rage under the Plantagenets, till an enactment of Edward IV. restrained their enormous longitude to two inches beyond the toes, exempting, however, the nobles, to some of whom doubtless the joke against the Roman patricians might apply—of carrying their nobility in the feet. What was lost in length was gained in breadth, till a proclamation of Mary restricted the toe expansion to half a foot. Denied extravagance in length and breadth, it then appeared in high soles and heels, increasing the height of the wearers, to which Hamlet's exclamation in Shakespeare has reference—'Your ladyship is nearer heaven than when I saw you last by the altitude of a chopine,' the name of the monstrosity. Through the Stuart age boots with immense pliant folding tops became the glory of the men, till Dutch William introduced the large jack-boot and buckled shoe; the ladies rejoicing to the time of George III. in high red wooden heels, a fashion revived for a night in the present Queen's grand bal costume. After a stout battle from the buckles—the buckle-makers petitioning the Prince of Wales to abandon his newly-adopted strings—the old Saxon habit of tied shoes was restored, though with somewhat less glory than when in James the First's time there were those who " 'Wore a farm in shoe-strings edged with gold,

And spangled garters worth a copyhold.'"

The craftsmen have occasionally cut a figure in history, apart from the martyrology in which their patron Crispin appears, as the "souters" or shoemakers of Selkirk on the fatal field of Flodden, whose bravery their trade song commemorates:—

" Up wi' the Souters of Selkirk,
And down wi' the Earl of Home!
And up wi' a' the braw lads
That sew the single-soled shoon!"

When the shoe trade specially took up its abode in Northampton does not appear, though it seems not to have been of long standing. An entry on the minute-books of the corporation for the year 1550 refers to the shoemaker obtaining the franchise and enjoying the liberties of the borough as a local trader, by which it was ordered that every shoemaker desiring to set up shop in the town, not having been an apprentice in the same, should pay at his setting-up thirty shillings, or 13s. 4d. to the mayor for the time being, 13s. 4d. to the chamberlain, and 3s. 4d. to the fraternity. In former times, when commercial prescription was rigorous and universal, the several trades of the town forming companies had their place of meeting in a room over the old conduit, south of All Saints', to maintain their interests—to guard against unauthorised intrusion. It may not be deemed uninteresting here to add that the cost of a pair of boots for the use of King John in 1213, was ninepence; of a pair of shoes for the leader of Henry III.'s greyhounds, fourpence; of the winter shoes of William de Blatherwyk, fox-hunter to Edward I., and those of his two assistants, seven shillings. Northampton was famous in the days of "leather bottles" for the manufacture of those obsolete articles, and no less celebrated, until lately, for its manufacture of lace; but the cheapness with which lace is now made by machinery has deprived the industrious poor of a due remuneration for their labour, and hence the decline of that branch of our local trade.

Northampton was also connected with the first invention of the cotton-spinning machine, thirty years before it was rediscovered by Arkwright. The inventor, John Wyatt, after an attempt at Birmingham in 1741, which was unsuccessful for want of means, removed to Northampton, and commenced upon a larger scale, having secured the services of a moneyed partner. This was no less a person than Edward Cave, the original Sylvanus Urban of the Gentleman's Magazine, its founder and proprietor. Cave seems to have kept his connection with bobbins and spindles a profound secret, as it never transpired till the present century; and Dr Johnson, who was then on his staff, used to say that he never looked out of his window but with an eye to his journal. The works were erected on the Nene, and employed fifty persons and two hundred and fifty spindles; but the concern was not prosperous, and it was never known what had become of the machinery. The premises are now used as a corn-mill, but still known by the appellation of the Cotton Mills. Arkwright's invention, a machine identical in principle with Wyatt's, though not in detail, was patented in 1769, and was the means by which he amassed a princely fortune, obtained a knighthood, and built Willersley Castle.

NORTHAMPTON is a flourishing market town, the capital of the county to which it gives name; it is a borough both corporate and parliamentary, an assize town, and the site of the county institutions. It confers the title of Earl and Marquis on the family of Compton; and it is the place of reunion of the gentry, freeholders, and farmers of the district, as well as the mart at which the agricultural produce of the county is exchanged for furniture, books, clothing, stationery, implements of husbandry, and the various articles of foreign commerce and domestic manufacture. The town, which is rapidly increasing both in size and importance, may be said to be divided into four nearly equal parts by two regular streets, each nearly a mile in length, crossing each other at right angles, and running east and west, and north and south, and having numerous streets diverging from them. The houses are in general well built, chiefly of stone, but the more recently-constructed streets are of brick, with stone or fancy brick dressings. In the principal streets are many good and well-furnished shops. The private residences, villas, terraces, squares, &c., are numerous and commodious; and the public buildings, which will be fully described at subsequent pages, have a very imposing effect. The town is abundantly supplied with water and gaslight, and the streets are well paved.

The market square, one of the finest in the kingdom, occupies the centre of the town, and has an area of about 10,000 square yards. The old market-cross, erected in 1535, stood in the centre previous to the great fire; but this is now substituted by a fine fountain of cast iron of most elaborate design, surmounted by a magnificent lamp. It was erected in 1863, and given to the town by Samuel Isaac, Esq. of London, who for some years carried on an extensive shoe-manufacturing business here. He also established an artisans' volunteer corps in the town, of which he was commanding officer. There is also a handsome drinking-fountain in Regent Square, erected in 1860 by the inhabitants as a tribute of respect to the Rev. Thomas Hutton, M.A., rector of Stelton, in Hunts, and late chaplain to the county gaol.

The limits of the municipal borough, as defined by the Boundary Act of 1835, remain unaltered; but those of the parliamentary borough have been extended by the Act of 1868, and now include those parts of the parishes of Dallington, Duston, Hardingstone, and Kingsthorpe, which border on and form suburbs to the town (see page 2). The population of the municipal borough in 1801 was 7020; in 1831, 15,351; in 1841, 21,242; in 1851, 26,658; in 1861, 32,813; and in 1871, 41,168. It will thus be seen that the town has increased in the number of its inhabitants nearly sixfold during the last seventy years, a good criterion of its growing prosperity. The parliamentary borough at the last census contained 45,080 inhabitants (see table at a subsequent page).

Northampton is 66 miles N.W. by N. from London by the Leicester road, and 67½ by the London and North-Western Railway, 42 S.S.W. from Peterborough, 21½ from Bedford, 24½ from Banbury, 45 from Leicester, 54 from Birmingham, 81½ from Worcester, 122 from Manchester, 52 from Oxford, 24 from Stamford, 24 from Rugby, 99 from Crewe, 20 from Buckingham, 131 from Gloucester, 124 from Ipswich, 76 from Derby, 47 from Huntingdon, 74 from Nottingham, 48 from Cambridge, 90 from Lincoln, 143 from Leeds, 147 from Bradford, 105 from Sheffield, 128 from Norwich, 166 from Hull, 155 from York, 320 from Glasgow, and 330 from Edinburgh.

CHURCHES.—Northampton formerly possessed within its walls seven parish churches: All Saints', St Giles's, St Gregory's, St Mary's, St Michael's, St Peter's, and St Sepulchre's. There was also within the town St Katharine's, which Bridges calls a chapel of ease to All Saints', and St Edmund's, and St Bartholomew's without the walls. Of these ten churches four only remain—All Saints', St Giles's, St Peter's, and St Sepulchre's; but there are also in the town at present the churches of St Andrew, St Katharine, St Edmund, St James, St Michael, and All Angels, the latter a chapel of ease to St Edmund's. The ancient parish of St Bartholomew, the church of which stood just without the north gate, is united to that of St Sepulchre. The churchyard, now a small field, is called Lawless Close, which, according to Bridges, is a corruption from Lawrence, by which name it appears to have been known in later times. Leland says that he "saw the ruins of a large chapelle without the north gate." The old Church of St Edmund appears to have been standing in the time of Henry the Eighth, immediately without the eastern gate of the town, between the roads leading to Kettering and Wellingborough; and St Gregory's stood near St Peter's Church, the site and buildings of which were granted in 1577 for a grammar-school, with the vicarage-house for the use of the master. In St Mary's Street stood the Church of St Mary, which was united to the Vicarage of All Saints in 1589. St Michael's was situated in St Michael's Lane, now called Wood Street, and the parish is annexed to St Sepulchre's. St Katharine's Chapel was in the parish of All Saints, in the cemetery belonging to which it was customary to inter the bodies of those who died of the plague, and on the site of which now stands the modern church dedicated to the same saint.

The Church of All Saints, situated nearly in the centre of the town, having been consumed by fire in 1675, was rebuilt soon afterwards, and reopened by the Bishop of Peterborough on the 5th of September 1680. Through this the exterior presents a strange mixture of architectural styles, retaining still the old decorated Gothic embattled tower (which escaped destruction at the time of the fire), with a modern Italian body, and an Ionic portico forming the façade of the west front; yet, taking each portion separately, we might admire it. It consists of nave and chancel, with north and south aisles. The length of the nave is 73½ feet, and the breadth 74 feet. The chancel is 34½ feet in length, and 24 in breadth, and is divided from the nave by a richly-carved screen of Norway oak. The portico is a noble piece of work, and extends the whole width of the church; it is supported by ten lofty pillars and two pilasters of the Ionic order, surmounted by a cornice with balustrades, in the centre of which is placed a statue of Charles II. in Roman costume. An inscription commemorates his gift of 1000 tons of timber out of Whittlebury forest towards the rebuilding of this church, and the remission of seven years' chimney-money. The interior presents a bold and elegant appearance; the roof is supported by four majestic Ionic columns, with highly-enriched capitals, having respectively the figures of a man, a lion, an ox, and an eagle, representing the four Evangelists, standing at the angles of four flat squares, between each of which is a segmental arch, and from these arches rises a fine expansive dome. The ceiling is highly enriched with wreaths of flowers, and various evangelical emblems are introduced into the panels of the dome and the capitals of the pillars. The walls of the chancel are lined with carved oak, and on each side of the east window are paintings of Moses and Aaron, said to be by Sir Godfrey Kneller.

Beneath the chancel is part of the original crypt, which appears to be coeval with the tower, the arches of which are groined, and the capitals plainly moulded. The pulpit is of carved Norway oak, and the church possesses one of the finest organs in the kingdom. Since its first erection in 1700, thirty-five years after the rebuilding of the church, it has received many important improvements and additions at considerable expense, and a new interior was added to it by Mr Blythe at a cost of £500. It was reconstructed in 1846 by Mr Hill, who added a new swell, nave, and pedal organs, &c., at a cost of £560; subsequent improvements cost £200; and it has recently undergone a thorough restoration, embracing all the modern improvements and additions of Continental builders, at an expense of £150. These, and various other items not included in the above, from its first erection, a period of 172 years, are estimated at nearly £2000. This magnificent instrument contains 3222 pipes, with four manuals, 6 distinct organs, 52 stops, 15 reed stops, and 20 ranks of mixtures. "It possesses power, variety and quality," and is looked upon by the inhabitants as the musical lion of Northampton. There is a peal of eight bells in the tower, an illuminated clock, and a set of chimes; the latter were presented by the corporation in 1809. There are on the walls of the interior monuments commemorative of Dr Conant, the vicar of this parish at the time of the fire; Sir James Stonhouse, Bart., M.D., the projector and physician of the Old County Hospital, established in 1743; Mrs Dorothy Beckett and Mrs Ann Sargeant, who jointly founded and endowed a school for clothing and teaching thirty-five poor girls of this parish; and also one in very elegant Latin of Isabella Haldage, widow of General Stewart, who commanded the left wing of the Pretender's army at the battle of Culloden; John Bales, a native of this town, who, it is stated on a mural slab on the outer west wall of the church, was above 126 years old when he died in 1706; and Catherine, his daughter, who died in this town at the advanced age of 102 years; and another, recording the deaths which occurred at the fire at the George Hotel about a century ago. The church was restored in 1866 at a cost of £4800. The living is a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £22; gross income, £145. It originally belonged to the Priory of St Andrew, but passed at the Reformation to the Crown. It subsequently came into the hands of the resident members of the corporation, and was disposed of to a private patron, in accordance with the provisions of the Municipal Reform Act. Present patron, Lord Overstone; and the Rev. Sydney Gedge, M.A., is the vicar.

St Giles's Church occupies a site immediately within the old wall of the town on the eastern side (Abington street), and is a large cruciform structure with a square embattled tower rising from the intersection of the nave and chancel, and containing a peal of eight bells. It consists of a nave, two north aisles, one south aisle, two transepts, and chancel with chantry chapels. The length of the church and chancel is 140 feet, the breadth of nave and aisles is 57½ feet, and the length of the cross aisle is 64 feet. The structure comprises various styles of architecture. The Early English, of very good composition, is displayed in the chancel; the east window is of the Decorated style; and several of the other windows are of Perpendicular character. There is a fine Norman west door, and a richly-panelled octagonal font. The chapel on the south is entered from the chancel by a fine lofty arch, and gives a picturesque view of an ancient alabaster altar monument, deprived of its inscription, but supposed to belong to one of the Gobion family, who obtained from King John the possession of a manor without the east gate. A lectern, to which are chained two books, is placed in this chapel, and over the monument is a piscina trefoil headed with credence-shelf, and further to the right is the confessional or offertory arch. This chapel is divided from the south aisle by a screen of good early Perpendicular work, and on the south side of the chancel is a semicircular-headed priest's door. The following description of this church is from a survey made by G. G. Scott, Esq.,

R.A., now Sir Gilbert Scott: "The original structure (so far as can be judged from existing remains) appears to have been a cross church, erected about the beginning of the twelfth century, and there were originally no aisles. The extreme length of the church appears to have remained unaltered, as the western doorway still exists, and there are remains at the east end which seem to be of the original date, though, from their great peculiarity, it is difficult to form any certain idea of their intention. It would appear that, at a very early date, the Norman tower gave way; and that it was in a great measure taken down and rebuilt, leaving, however, the stair, turret, and piers at the north-east angle, the whole of the eastern or chancel arch, and a portion of the southern arch, and of one of its piers. Alterations were probably made during the latter part of the thirteenth century; and it would appear, that at the same time the chancel was in a great measure rebuilt, being increased in width towards the north, and greatly increased in height. The single lancet window on the south side, and another, of which traces are just visible, in the north, are remnants of this age; and the height is indicated by a gable line cut in the remaining Norman work on the east side of the tower. There remain on this side of the tower indications of four different roofs. First, the Norman, which shows the original chancel to have been of very humble elevation. Second, the Early English roof, which is of great height. Third, the succeeding roof (probably of the fourteenth century), of lower pitch, but considerably higher than that now existing. Fourth, the nearly flat roof, which was probably put on during the seventeenth century. The fall of the tower in 1613 seems to have occasioned considerable changes throughout the church. The whole of the nave, aisles, and chancel appear to have been re-roofed, clerestory erected, and the tower rebuilt (with slight exceptions) from the roof upwards; indeed the church must have assumed the present general aspect subsequently to that event." The church was again restored and enlarged in 1855, when the east and west arches of the tower were opened, and the church extended two bays to the west, and a north aisle added to it; the tower was partly re-roofed, the windows and porches renewed, and the whole of the interior furnished with open oak seats. The total cost of the restorations was £5000, towards which the parishioners contributed £3500, and the Incorporated Society £150. There was formerly a chapel dedicated to St Peter, and a fraternity or Guild of St Clement, within this church. The living is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £7, 19s., and endowed with a parliamentary grant of £200; the gross income is £111; the trustees of the Rev. C. Simeon are the patrons; Rev. W. H. F. Robson, A.K.C., is the vicar.

St Peter's Church is situated in Marefair, near the western extremity of the town, and being contiguous to the site of the ancient castle, it is supposed to have been erected about the same period by one of the Norman lords. No description can do justice to this beautiful monument of antique architecture. It consists of a nave and side aisles of equal length, having seven columns on each side, three of which are composed of four semi-columns; a chancel, and massive square tower. It is 90 feet in length, including the chancel, and 34 feet in breadth. The interior of this ancient edifice presents some interesting relics of Norman character; the details are exquisitely wrought, and having been cleared from the plaster and whitewash which concealed their beauty, exhibit some of the finest models in that style of architecture. "All the capitals are charged," says one of the excellent guide-books to Northampton, "with sculpture of scroll-work, heads, animals, &c. On each side of the nave are eight semicircular arches, with indented chevron mouldings on the face and soffits. In the clerestory is a series of six small windows, with semicircular heads on each side. The arch dividing the tower from the nave consists of three receding arches, each charged both on elevation and soffit with chevron mouldings. On each side of the archway are three pilaster columns, some of which are ornamented with spiral and lozenge mouldings. In the south aisle is a recessed sepulchral arch resting on short columns with moulded caps and bases. The font, it will be observed, is very similar in design to Queen's Cross. There is to the left of the present door on the north side which leads to the chancel, a circular-headed door stopped up, which opened upon an entrance to a vault or crypt, 18 feet long, 9 feet wide, and 9 feet high, extending a considerable distance under the church and churchyard northward. This probably may have been the sacristy. On the north side of the crypt (whose architectural features are similar to those of the church) is a doorway which is said to be the entrance to a subterranean passage to the castle; and on the north side of the sanctuary is a handsome credence-table, supported by a Norman pillar with polished granite shaft. The exterior of the church is equally interesting. At the south-west and north-west angles of the tower are buttresses of peculiar form, each consisting of three semi-columns, gradually diminishing at every storey. On the north and south sides of the same are two series of arcades; and at the west end, one range corresponding with a blank arch, having three rows of flat stones, charged with varied tracery in panels. At the south side of the church is an ancient doorway with a semicircular arch; and in the clerestory is a continued range of arcades. Over these are corbel-tables, in which are grotesque heads, figures, &c. There is a vacancy for one corbel on the north side, which no doubt contained the corbel engraved by Carter in Bray's Tour." St Peter's is probably one of our best samples of enriched Norman architecture, and may be ranked among the most interesting antique ecclesiastical edifices in the kingdom. This church had the ancient privilege of sanctuary attached to it, which bears out the supposition that it rose under the auspices of some powerful party. At the west end of the north aisle is a monument bearing date 1742, to the memory of John Smith of London, the founder of mezzotinto engraving, and contemporary of Sir Godfrey Kneller, after whom he engraved many portraits; and in the churchyard lie the remains of another "Smith," the father of English geology. This interesting church was thoroughly restored in 1850-52 at a cost of £2060, when the free sittings were increased from 116 to 347, and the chancel and aisles extended eastwards. The restoration was effected under the auspices of the Architectural Society of Northampton, and under the superintendence of Sir George Gilbert Scott. The east wall, which was much dilapidated, and stood where the altar rails now stand, was pulled down, and the chancel thrown out about 15 feet upon the old foundations, which were discovered during the excavation, when several pieces of the old masonry and ornamental work were also disclosed and replaced; the aisles were also lengthened, and the partition wall between the tower and nave removed; a door which had been opened on the west side of the tower was closed, the west window reopened, and the unsightly pews with which the edifice was filled were removed, and the present handsome open oak seats erected. The whole area of the church was laid with concrete, and the old flat roof was taken down, and the present oak roof, extending the whole length of the building, substituted. Since the restorations were effected, a new altar table and rails have been added by the rector, and an open oak screen placed on each side of the chancel, separating it from the aisles. There are seven windows at the east end, and two quatrefoils, all filled with stained glass.

The living, which is a rectory, was given to the Priory of St Andrew by Simon de St Liz, and confirmed to it, with the perpetual curacy of Upton, by Hugh Wells, Bishop of Lincoln. In the reign of Henry III. the right of patronage was recovered of the convent by the king, and continued for some time in the hands of the Crown. The advowson was afterwards given by Edward III., in the third year of his reign (1326), to the master and brethren of St Catherine's Hospital, London, with whom it has remained since. It was rated at £34, 2s. 11d., and its gross value is £400. Rev. S. J. W. Sanders, M.A., F.G.S., LL.M., curate in charge.

The Church of St Sepulchre.—This ancient structure, situated on the north side of the town, near the top of Sheep street, is a remarkable specimen of our ancient ecclesiastical architecture, and one of the four round churches still remaining in England. It was built probably about the close of the eleventh or the very beginning of the twelfth century by Simon de St Liz, Earl of Northampton, and is, as its name indicates, dedicated in honour of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem. The original portion of the edifice is of a circular form, to which have been added at different intervals a square east end or chancel, with north and south aisles, the entrance to which from the body or "round" is by an ascent of five steps. It consisted of the round, with aisles and clerestory; aisles with two series of low, narrow lights, and supported by wide, shallow buttresses; a clerestory, also round, and lighted by four or eight windows, not improbably set in an arcade, as at St Peter's, and surmounted by a corbel-table and parapet, the roof being conical and of high pitch; west porch, or rather deep doorway, of many orders, with a gabled top; south door, without a porch; and a chancel without aisles, terminating in an apse at the east end. In all round churches the west door is the principal one, and so it evidently was here; and that it was furnished with some considerable decorations appears probable from an attached Norman shaft in the west end; and from some grotesque carving set upon it, was probably the tympanum of an ancient door, and may have formed some part of the arrangement of the western entrance. There are evidences of a Norman chancel, but none to indicate that aisles were attached to the round, or that they formed any part of the original plan.

The present church consists of a Norman round (the original part), with chancel and aisles, partly semi-Norman and partly Decorated; in the centre of the round is a cupola, supported by eight cylindrical pillars of considerable height, disposed in a circle, and from which eight plain pointed arches spring. The pillars have heavy capitals, varying in form, the four on the west being round, the two eastern ones having a square abacus, and the other two also rectangular and more complicated in plan, but all in perfect agreement with the earliest Norman date. The present octagon of pointed arches, resting on piers, is obviously a substitute (of about the fourteenth century) for an original clerestory, and the interior of the chancel probably contained a richly-moulded arch. Over the columns the wall assumes an octangular shape, and in this respect it differs from the other round churches in this country, and therefore, like St Peter's, it may be considered unique.

The difference between the two series of piers and arches, when viewed from the chancel, is striking: that to the north is of two pointed arches of two plain chamfered orders, resting on a pillar, and two responds; a circle with four attached clusters of three bowtells each, and a moulded capital; the responds rectangular, of two orders in plan, and with semi-Norman foliated capitals. These arches are surmounted by a hood of a very early section—namely, a half round, a little pointed and running up almost into the old Norman corbel-table, the arches being cut out of the walls and underbuilt as they now appear. The hood occurs again in other parts of the church, and will be found at the junction of the north aisle with the round, showing that the aisle then added had the same width that it now has. The same string occurs over the door, which cut into the window at the north side; and a north door to the round, with a north aisle to the chancel, were also added. These changes were made probably about A.D. 1180 or 1190, during the transition era from the Norman to the Pointed style, when the northern wall of the chancel was cut through to form an arcade for the addition of the north aisle, which was then added. The east window of this aisle is a very plain lancet triplet, with the centre light higher than the others. At the same time with the erection of the north aisle, the chancel was also rebuilt; for though the present arch is perpendicular, the bases of the jambs rest on semi-Norman bases older than themselves, but more recent than the round—probably, too, the whole chancel was then remodelled.

The next change which the church underwent was probably an addition to the chancel of a south aisle; the present one is of recent construction, but a string carried round it, and also the moulding of the arches, prove that old materials of the Decorated order were used in it. These changes were effected about the year 1320, and shortly after the north aisle was nearly rebuilt, and the present buttresses and windows added. Thus far the changes were perhaps judicious enough, but from rashness, or a want of caution in removing the windows, the masonry became dislocated, and the character of the round was destroyed. To save the building which was thus endangered, the two great buttresses at the north-west were built.

This interesting old church has lately undergone a thorough restoration at a cost of £10,066, which includes donations specially given for the ornamental portion of the work; and a further sum of £600 is about to be expended in adding a new roof to the ambulatory. These restorations have been most elaborately carried out, under the auspices of the Architectural Society and the superintendence of Sir Gilbert Scott, the architect. The outer north aisle, or lady chapel, was added on the original foundation, which was discovered during the progress of the restoration, and the apse of the chancel was also extended to its ancient foundation. A magnificent font in the round was erected in 1871, by subscription, to the memory of the late Rev. Thomas James, M.A., vicar of Theddingworth. Amongst the special subscriptions to this great outlay may be noticed £1000 as the proceeds of a bazaar under the patronage of the ladies of the county and town of Northampton, £491 from a concert at which Madame Goldschmidt (Jenny Lind) gratuitously sang, and an anonymous donation of £400.

At the west end stands the fine broad embattled tower, containing an illuminated clock and a peal of six bells, and surmounted by a pyramidal spire of eight sides. The arrangement of the tower and spire, and the boldly projecting diagonal buttresses at the corners, are admirably adapted to carry the eye up to the spire, and to bring down the line with great effect to the ground. And the same unity of effect is maintained more perfectly by the rather uncommon junction of the tower and spire, than by the ordinary method with angular squinches. The height of the tower and spire (which were built about the last quarter of the fourteenth century) is 116 feet. The length of the church and chancel is $97\frac{1}{2}$ feet; the breadth of the chancel and aisles 77 feet; and the compass of the circle of the eight pillars of the round, measured outwards, $112\frac{1}{2}$ feet. The west door is of several recessed orders, and its mouldings and those of the belfry windows are in the Decorated character. The present porch to the round is on the south, but a former doorway on the north, for many years blocked up, has been replaced.

Though St Sepulchre's cannot be said to rival in architectural beauty either its sister St Peter's or its namesake at Cambridge, yet it is distinguished on account of its history, its antiquarian interest, and its undoubted origin and peculiar form—an imitation of the circular shrine erected over the Tomb and Resurrection of Christ. Of the few ecclesiastical structures which owe their existence to the crusading spirit of the men by whom they were founded, three have perished—namely, Temple Bruern and Aislaby in Lincolnshire, and the Old Temple Church in Holborn, London. Four yet remain: of these the Church of Little Maplestead in Essex (the most perfect of all the crusadic churches in England), and the New Temple Church in London, owe their foundation to the Knights of St John of Jerusalem (or Hospitallers) and the Knights Templars respectively, two great religious orders of chivalry, the wealthiest and most powerful in Europe, bound by the most solemn vow to rescue the Holy Sepulchre from the hands of the infidel and protect the pilgrim on his way to it. Of the other two round churches, St Sepulchre's at Cambridge and the Church of St Sepulchre in this town, the former claims priority, having been consecrated in 1101; but the latter, though the exact date is not recorded, followed immediately after, and its erection is justly attributed to Simon de St Liz, the first Norman Earl of Northampton.

These churches owe their peculiar form and arrangement to the desire on the part of the founders to embody their recollection of the sights they had witnessed in Palestine, and to plant upon the soil of Britain images of the far-famed shrine of Jerusalem, to which special sanctity and virtue were attached, and where the Adorable Sacrifice, and the prayers of friends and relatives might be daily offered for the safe return of pilgrims, and the success of the religious chivalry of Christendom against the Saracen masters of the Holy Land. These were the motives which at that period convulsed Europe to its centre, and awakened in England that spirit of enthusiasm which towards the close of the eleventh century was still further roused by the voice of Peter the Hermit into that military and religious frenzy which resulted in the Crusades. Animated by the popular feeling, the valiant St Liz became a crusader, took the cross, and went to the Holy Land. It was on his return from this crusading expedition, about the close of the reign of William II. or the beginning of that of Henry I., that he is supposed to have built the original or circular portion of the Church of St Sepulchre, in honour of the round Church of the Resurrection in Jerusalem, in which he had devoutly worshipped. Simon, whose zeal for the faith seems to have increased with his years, again took the cross and went to the Holy Land, where he remained for several years ; but the gallant crusader was not fortunate enough to return a second time, having died in 1115, on his homeward way, at the Abbey of Our Lady of Charity, which he had himself founded, on the banks of the Loire, and was there buried.

Some antiquarians attribute the foundation of St Sepulchre's Church to the Knights Templars ; but this opinion must be erroneous, for the order of Templars did not exist prior to the year 1118, nor did they obtain possessions in England until A.D. 1134. In advocating the restoration of this interesting church, the Rev. G. A. Poole, M.A., vicar of Welford, an eminent archæologist, says : " To Simon de St Liz, noble by birth and title, great in power and wealth, the crusader and the devotee, the builder of castles, the founder and benefactor of churches, we may with great probability attribute the first erection of St Sepulchre's, and this presumption agrees with the fact that it belonged to the Convent of St Andrew, which was largely endowed and rebuilt by him. At all events the character of the Norman portion of the fabric agrees with his time, and we may search in vain for another person who had more of the power and of the will to erect such a church, and with the circumstances of whose life its foundation would better agree." The late Rev. Thomas James, M.A., in an " Essay on Round Churches," writes : " In the two churches of Cambridge and Northampton can be traced no connection with either the order of Templars or Hospitallers, but they spring in all likelihood from the unaided bounty of individual benefactors : that at Cambridge from some unknown pilgrim or crusader, whose name has perished, though his good work remains ; and that of our own town, from indirect but very convincing evidence, may surely be attributed to the first great name in Northampton annals, Simon de St Liz, the first Norman earl of the county, the founder of the castle and of St Andrew's Priory, twice a pilgrim to the Holy Land, and whose name has become so identified with Northampton as to have gained a settlement in the racing card of the spring meeting."

Henry I., who commenced his reign in A.D. 1100, gave this church, with four acres of land, to the Priory of St Andrew ; and the gift was confirmed by Richard Archbishop of Canterbury, and Hugh Wells, Bishop of Lincoln, in whose time the vicarage was ordained. After the dissolution of the religious houses, the patronage continued in the Crown, but about the year 1640 it was possessed by Sir John Lamb. It now belongs to the Rev. William Butlin, M.A., the present vicar, who purchased it of the trustees of T. Butcher, Esq. The living, which is a discharged vicarage rated in the king's books at £6, 1s., was endowed with £200 royal bounty and £1000 parliamentary grant. In 1860 the present vicar sold some garden-land in St Giles's parish belonging to the church for about £5750, which was vested in Queen Anne's Bounty ; and in 1865 he gave £900 as an endowment, which was met by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners with a like sum. The living is now worth about £300 per annum.

Amongst the monuments in this church is one to the late Dr Kerr and his wife, and another to George Coles. In 1844 the vicar commenced a suit in Chancery for the recovery of the tithes of the parish. The question at issue is, whether the plaintiff, as vicar, is entitled to a customary payment of sixpence in the pound on all the houses and lands within the parish. At the July assizes of Northampton in 1846 the vicar obtained a verdict, which was not, however, acted upon, and it was afterwards set aside by the Lord Chancellor in consequence of some irregularity at the commencement of the proceedings; a new trial was directed, but the case still remains in an unsettled state.

St Katharine's Church.—This edifice was erected by subscription in 1838, near the site of an ancient chapel of ease of the same dedication. It stands off the Horse-Market, and is in the modern Gothic style; it consists of an open space or body, with a small chancel, is galleried on three sides, and has a low-pitched ceiling, and on the west end is a campanile. It was restored in 1870. The pews are commodious, and the embellishments throughout are in good taste and in character with the building, which is of stone. The windows are of cast iron in the Decorated character, and there is accommodation for about 1200 hearers. The living is a vicarage in the patronage of the trustees of Miss Hyndman's Charity, and the Rev. Robert Collins King is the incumbent. The value of the benefice is about £200 a year.

St Andrew's Church, situated at the west end of Regent street, in St Andrew's square, partly on the site of the ancient Priory of St Andrew, was erected in 1841, by public subscription, and is an interesting architectural composition in the Early English style from the pencil of Mr E. F. Law, architect of this town. It consists of a nave, north and south aisles, and a small break of about 12 feet at the east, suiting the purposes of a chancel. The lancet window at the east end is noble and effective; the other windows are very elaborate, having moulded arches and pillars coupled to the jambs; and the tower, very graceful in its proportions, after rising to the height of 96 feet, terminates with four pinnacles, which, in conjunction with those terminating the east end, contribute to the whole an imposing effect. The pinnacles on the east end having fallen to decay were taken down, and have not yet been restored. The roof is open, showing the whole of the timbers and boarding, which are of grained oak; and an arcade is formed round the chancel, on the east panels of which are emblazoned, in Old English characters, with illuminated capitals, the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, and the Creed, executed gratuitously by the architect. The church will seat 800 persons on the ground-plan, and 400 in the galleries. The building is of a dark-coloured cut stone, and the cost of the erection, including the purchase of site, &c., amounted to nearly £7000. It was consecrated on November 30, 1842, by the bishop of the diocese. The organ, which is considered an excellent instrument, was built by Mr Barker of this town, who was also the builder of the superior organs at St Katharine's Church and All Saints' School. The living is a vicarage of the annual value of £300, in the patronage of the trustees of Miss Hyndman's Bounty, and incumbency of the Rev. Thomas Storer, B.A.

St Edmund's Church, on the Wellingborough road, near to the place where stood the ancient Church of St Edmund, "without the eastern gate of the town," was erected in 1850, and consecrated by the Bishop of Peterborough in 1852. The building will seat 1000 hearers, and the sittings are all free. The cost of the erection was £4000, raised by subscription aided by grants from the Church Building, Diocesan, and Incorporated Societies. The structure is cruciform, in the Early English style, and consists of nave, chancel, south aisle, north and south transepts, with porch, and a square tower, in which is one bell. The living is a vicarage in the gift of the Crown and the bishop of the diocese alternately; its value is about £300 per annum, and the Rev. Nathaniel T. Hughes, M.A., is the present vicar. The chancel window, of five lights, is filled with stained glass at a cost of £140. In the centre is a full-sized figure of Our Redeemer, and on each side are also full-sized figures of nine of the apostles. In the south transept there are three windows also filled with stained glass in 1872, at the expense of Mr Wm. Mills of this town, to the memory of his parents. The subjects are the "Agony in Gethsemane," the "Betrayal of Our Lord," "Christ bearing His Cross," and the "Crucifixion." The church was relighted in beautiful design by Messrs Breedon & Co. of Birmingham in 1873, at a cost of £170.

St James's Church, St James's end (a new district parish recently formed out of parts of Duston and Dallington parishes), is a neat structure of red brick, ornamented with bands of black brick and stone dressings, erected in 1868 at a cost of upwards of £3000. It is in the Early English, and consists of nave, with clerestory, chancel, south aisle, and south chapel. The clerestory, consisting of twelve windows on each side, has an open pitched roof, and a bell-turret at the north-west corner, in which is one bell. The south aisle is separated from the nave by four circular arches supported by columns of polished granite; the seats are open, and of stained deal; the font is of Caen stone, and supported on eight upright shafts; and the pulpit is placed on a base of Ketton stone, composed of Belgian, rouge royal, and Greek marble shafts. The living is a vicarage worth £300 per annum, in the gift of the bishop of the diocese and incumbency of the Rev. Lewis Clayton, M.A.

St Michael and All Angels, situated in the Lower mounts, is a chapel of ease to St Edmund's, but intended ultimately for a district church; is entirely constructed of iron, and will accommodate 350 persons. It was built in 1872 at a cost of £530, exclusive of the site, and is at present under the pastoral care of two missionary clergymen—the Revs. H. G. Parrish, B.A., and Augustus C. Ramsay, B.A.

THE CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL.—For nearly twenty years the Collegiate Chapel of St Felix served the purposes of the Catholic mission of this town. The foundation-stone of this exquisite little Gothic edifice (built from the design of the elder Pugin) was laid in 1844 by the late Father Ignatius of the order of the Passion (the Hon. and Rev. George Spencer). The interior consisted of nave, chancel, and organ-loft, with high-pitched polished oaken roof. A neat open-work screen, surmounted by the rood and figures of the Blessed Virgin and St John the Evangelist, divided the nave from the sanctuary. In 1863 this building, having become inadequate to the needs of the greatly-enlarged congregation, and to the proper celebration of episcopal solemnities, was enlarged to three times its former dimensions by the addition at the west end of the greater portion of that which is destined ultimately to be a complete cathedral. The design of this new edifice (dedicated to the patron saints of the diocese, Our Lady Immaculate and St Thomas of Canterbury) is by A. W. N. Pugin, Esq., eldest son of the architect of the chapel, and consists of nave and aisles, with sanctuary, having an apsidal termination. The nave, which is of unusual width and height, is supported by clusters of pillars, of which the shafts are of granite, and the pedestals, capitals, and arches of stone. The roof is unique, being carried half way up in stone panels, formed from the intersection of the rafters, from which springs a higher stage, filled with rafters which interlace each other in a very complex and intricate fashion. The clerestory is composed of arcades of windows of much greater height than is generally met with. The aisles are of a peculiarly elegant construction, being formed of a series of perfect Gothic arches, placed transversely to the arches of the nave, by the pillars of which they are on one side supported. The chapel terminating the south aisle is called the Chapel of the Blessed Sacrament, and is extremely beautiful. Upon the altar, which is built of Caen stone, richly carved, and supported upon marble pillars, are figures representing a pope and an emperor, illustrative of the spiritual and temporal power. The reredos is of white carved stone, having in the centre a richly-decorated Gothic arch, enclosing a brass tabernacle of excellent workmanship, around which are sculptured angels waving thuribles. The chapel on the north aisle is dedicated to the Japanese martyrs canonised in 1862, some of whose relics repose over the altar, beneath which is a figure of the "Dead Christ." The high altar, which is approached from the nave by five steps, is of stone, with super-altar of Carrara marble. The front—elaborately and tastefully gilded—is wrought in three open panels, in which is chiselled the "Agnus Dei." The reredos, painted in red and gold, and covered with seraphim with out-stretched wings, is surmounted by a cornice formed of interlacing Gothic arches, from the centre of which springs a canopy covering the throne of exposition. There is a flight of stone steps behind the high altar. To the left is the bishop's throne; and on each side are the stalls of the canons. On either side of the altar is a large panel-painting by Hess, painter and decorator of the Chapel Royal of the King of Bavaria; one representing the Resurrection of Our Blessed Lord, and the other the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin. Opposite the bishop's throne is a large crucifix, of immense value, carved in veined ivory by an eminent Spanish artist. The five stained windows in the sanctuary are very large, and were executed by Hardman of Birmingham. That over the high altar represents the saints pleading to God for the restoration to the faith of the old Catholic churches of Northampton, which are represented below (amongst them being the churches of the Holy Sepulchre, of St Peter, &c.) Another, erected to the memory of the late bishop, Dr Wareing, by the clergy of the diocese, displays that prelate in his episcopal vestments, kneeling at the feet of St Felix, and offering to him the chapel called after his name. There are several other stained windows of various degrees of merit, but notable amongst them is one of three lights at the west end, filled with figures of the Virgin Mother, St Thomas of Canterbury, and St Felix, which rest upon a golden ground of peculiar richness; and another of two lights, in the baptistery, representing the Nativity, and Adoration of the Kings, in which the characteristic beauty of the ancient stained glass is happily caught. At the entrance to the cathedral is the baptistery, separated from the rest of the building by an open-work stone screen. The statues generally are of inferior merit, if we except those of the Blessed Virgin and St Thomas, which stand on either side of the entrance to the sanctuary, and are very good, that of the Virgin being especially so. The Stations of the Cross, finely painted upon panel, hang round the walls of the church. The coup-d'œil from the organ-loft at the end of the church is really admirable. The warm tint thrown athwart the sanctuary by the stained glass, the bold and lofty nave, with its long arcade of arches and clusters of columns, the graceful aisles, the side chapels, with their richly-decorated altars, the bright banners, pictures, statues, and the rest, combine to produce an effect which not to admire one must be very apathetic indeed.

This cathedral was solemnly opened on April 28, 1864, in the presence of his eminence the late Cardinal Wiseman, seven bishops, and upwards of seventy clergy, secular and regular (the latter being represented by Dominicans, Capuchins, Passionists, and members of the Society of Jesus), and of a considerable number of lay Catholics from various parts of the kingdom. Under the hierarchy established by Cardinal Wiseman, England was divided into thirteen sees. The late Dr Wareing, formerly Bishop of Ariopolis, and Vicar-Apostolic of the Eastern District, was the first Bishop of Northampton, but resigned his see in February 1858, and was succeeded by the present bishop, the Right Rev. Francis Kerril Amherst, who was born in London, March 21, 1819; consecrated at Oscott by his eminence Cardinal Wiseman, July 4, 1858; appointed Assistant at the Pontifical Throne, June 8, 1862; and present at the Vatican Council, 1870.

Adjoining the cathedral is the sacristy, a good specimen of the Early English style, used in the first days of the mission as a chapel. In a niche on the exterior is a very elegant statue of St Felix, in his pontifical robes, with crosier, and hands outstretched in benediction. Also close by is the residence of the bishop; of the Vicar-General of the Diocese, the Very Rev. Canon Oléron, D.D.; and of the pastor of the mission, the Very Rev. Canon Scott, D.D. The episcopal grounds are extensive, and planted with unexceptionable taste.

THE CONVENT.—The new Convent of "Notre Dame" is an exceedingly spacious and imposing building in Abington street. About twenty years since a few religious from Belgium established themselves in Northampton, and for some years rented a little house in Sheep Street, where they held Sunday and day schools. Having purchased eligible and extensive grounds in Abington Street, the sisters removed thither, and in 1871 the present magnificent structure was reared at a cost of about £6000. Mr W. Hull is the architect. The religious are sisters of the order of "Notre Dame," founded in the present century for the religious education of the middle classes. The chief convent and novitiate of the order is at Namur, in Belgium, whence have gone forth religious who have founded large and flourishing schools in all parts of the world. At Liverpool they are engaged, under Government, in the management of large normal schools for the education of female teachers in Catholic poor schools, and their system has received the highest approbation from her Majesty's inspectors. The convent at Northampton accommodates, besides a numerous company of religious, about seventy young ladies, boarders, under education. Attached to this institution is a middle-class day-school, and at the back of the convent grounds, on the Mounts, there is also a poor school for the accommodation of infants and children to the number of 300. The present superioress is Sœur Hélène de la Croix (Mademoiselle Jacobs), who succeeded Sœur Clérie in 1862. The exterior of this edifice is in the Gothic style. The façade to the street (which is 117 feet in length) consists of centre block and two side wings, flanked by two towers terminating in angled turrets, upon the apices of which are gilt crosses. The porch is supported upon granite columns, with ornate stone capitals, and forms a triangle-shaped arch, bordered with elaborate crockets and finial. Over the centre window are carved the emblems of the Passion. Severe simplicity is the distinguishing characteristic, the only ornaments being statues of the Blessed Virgin and St Joseph, which stand upon pedestals in the centre block, and are covered with crocketed canopies of most elaborate workmanship. The devotional beauty and expression of the statues are beyond praise. The interior is light and cheerful. A large entrance-hall (the walls of which form arcades of arches) leads to the foot of a massive and handsome stone staircase, reaching to the top of the building, and lighted with stained windows. The dormitories, bath-rooms, lavatories, refectories, studies, music and reception rooms, are all constructed with evident attention to every possible requisite of modern education. Detached from the building is the temporary chapel, destined ere long to give place to a handsome church. The interior is small, but well arranged, and very devotional. Over the convent is a bell-turret, from which three times a day is rung the "Angelus." There is a fine quadrangle at the back, from which you ascend by a terrace of twenty steps into the gardens, on one side of which are the poor schools, erected in 1872, and dedicated to "Our Lady of the Sacred Heart." The building is in red brick, with white dressings, and contains large and lofty schools, class-rooms, &c. Over the porch is a statue of the Blessed Virgin and Child. The chaplain to the convent is the Very Rev. Canon Oléron, D.D.

The Catholic Church in England has been subjected to as many and as great trials and vicissitudes as in any other country. It has been twice swept away, and it has been twice restored. From the death of Dr Thomas Watson of Lincoln, who died in prison in 1584, and who was the last Catholic bishop consecrated in England, after the subversion of the ancient faith in the sixteenth century, when England became a foreign mission under the Holy See, and when the Catholic religion was once more all but swept away, it was for more than two generations without churches or bishops; a handful of priests ministered to a remnant of Catholics, whose number at the end of the last century was supposed to amount to no more than 30,000. In the early part of the seventeenth century the secular clergy were placed under the jurisdiction of an arch-priest, the Rev. George Blackwell, at whose death in 1623, Dr William Bishop, consecrated Bishop of Chalcedon by Gregory XV., was deputed to the government of the English and Scotch Catholics, with the title of Vicar Apostolic. At his death in 1625 the same title and jurisdiction were conferred on Dr Richard Smith, president of the English College at Rome, and who died in 1655. From this period until the year 1685 the Roman Chapter exercised episcopal authority, when, on the accession of James II. to the throne, it appeared a more favourable time had arrived for the Catholic religion, and Innocent XI., profiting by the circumstance, deputed Dr Leburn, Bishop of Adrumentum, as Vicar Apostolic of all the kingdom of England ; and three years afterwards joined with him three other vicars apostolic, bishops in partibus, dividing at the same time England into four districts—London, Western, Midland, and Northern, assigning one district to each vicar apostolic. This arrangement continued until the pontificate of Gregory XVI., who in 1840 found it necessary, from the rapid spread of Catholicity, to subdivide England into eight districts—namely, London, Eastern, Western, Central, Lancashire, Yorkshire, Wales, and Northern.

But in 1850 Pius IX. abrogated and annulled all previous arrangements, and restored to England her ancient ecclesiastical constitution, substituting for vicars apostolic appointed by himself and removable at his pleasure, an ordinary hierarchy, consisting of one archbishop, or metropolitan, and twelve bishops his suffragans, who take their titles from sees in this country, and are elected by chapters of the respective dioceses. The ecclesiastical province, therefore, comprises the Archdiocese of Westminster, and the Dioceses of Beverley, Birmingham, Clifton, Hexham and Newcastle, Liverpool, Newport, Northampton, Nottingham, Plymouth, Salford, Shrewsbury, and Southwark.

CHAPELS.—The places of worship unconnected with the Established Church of England are numerous in Northampton, and some of them are large, commodious, and handsome edifices.

Independent Chapel, Castle hill.—This edifice was erected in the year 1695, and is a large plain building, but one to which a considerable degree of celebrity is attached, in consequence of its having been the scene of the ministerial labours of Dr Doddridge, who officiated here, and superintended an academy for twenty-one years. The chapel remains externally in much the same state as when Doddridge occupied it, and the house in which the academy was held is in Sheep Street, nearly opposite the Ram Inn. In the chapel is a handsome monumental tablet to his memory, with an epitaph written by Gilbert West, Esq., LL.D. Rev. Thomas Arnold is the present minister. The chapel was considerably enlarged in 1865 at an expense of £3000, including the cost of the Sunday school adjoining, which is attended by over 500. There are also two other schools in connection with this attended by 300. A few incidents of the life of Dr Doddridge in immediate connection with the town, by a local writer, may not be considered uninteresting. Doddridge's career in Northampton was far from being an untroubled one ; his occasional preaching in a "certain barn at Kingsthorpe," where some of his hearers resided, produced an angry attack for intruding into a domain the supervision of which was exclusively claimed by another. His keeping an academy was the subject of a prosecution in the Ecclesiastical Court, which was arrested by the Courts at Westminster, and finally dropped in accordance with the expressed wish of George II. His students were sometimes interrupted in the neighbouring villages in the task of instructing the villagers, and threatened with violence.

Doddridge was not only a divine, and the "author of many excellent writings," but he was also a politician. The same writer says that during the stormy parliamentary elections of 1733, he as a Whig experienced the ill-will of his Tory neighbours, a party then disaffected towards the reigning family, and friendly to the cause of the Pretender. An attack was made upon his house by the mob of the Jacobite candidate during the canvass, a proceeding which the mayor was anxious to screen from judicial investigation, the corporation of that day being largely infected with Jacobitism. At the eleventh hour they secured the return of their candidate against a Hanoverian, by the creation of 171 honorary freemen, among whom were fifty-one of the county clergy. When the time of trial came in 1745, by the Pretender landing in Scotland, Doddridge was one of those who met the Earl of Halifax at the George, to whom he had previously written upon the subject, to concert measures of resistance. This was on Wednesday, September 25, the first day of the races, before the news of the disastrous defeat of the royal forces at Preston-pans had reached the town. A letter in the Gentleman's Magazine, under the signature of P. D., is evidently his, and gives an account of the meeting. It was resolved to raise a regiment of volunteers, and five hundred were enlisted within a week. The postscript states: "Northampton, Oct. 9.—This day the newly-enlisted men were sworn, and immediately drew up with great dexterity and sang the memorable song, 'To arms, Britons, strike home!' the Earl of Halifax and many gentlemen of the county joining in the chorus." One of Doddridge's students, a son of Lord Killaran, held a commission. A few days afterwards, a letter from Scotland announced the death of Colonel Gardiner at Prestonpans, whose son, Mr David Gardiner, was then in the academy. Gardiner, with whom he became acquainted in 1739, had been quartered at Northampton in 1742 with Lord Cadogan's regiment of dragoons, and was there for the last time in 1743, with his wife Lady Frances, on a visit to the writer of his life. Doddridge in London had the opportunity of witnessing the last act of the rebellion, having one of the best places near the scaffold offered him on which the Lords Kilmarnock and Balmerino suffered; but he refused to be a spectator of the dismal tragedy. Close application occasioned a consumption of the lungs, to mitigate or cure which he was advised to visit Lisbon, where he died in 1751, and his remains were interred in the burying-ground of the British factory in that city.

The Independent Chapel, King street, is also a plain commodious edifice, erected in 1776, in which are several small but handsome monumental memorials, amongst which is one to the Rev. Benjamin Lloyd Edwards, upwards of forty-two years pastor of this congregation, who died in 1831, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. Sunday schools are attached to the chapel. The Rev. Arthur Vaughan is the minister.

Independent Chapel, Commercial street.—This neat comfortable chapel was erected in 1829, at the sole expense of Thomas Wilson, Esq., of Highbury place, London. The Rev. E. T. Prust and the Rev. W. H. Stent are the ministers.

Independent Chapel, Victoria road, is a small iron structure, erected in 1869; is in connection with Commercial street Chapel.

Independent Chapel, St James's end, a small building erected in 1862, is connected with the Doddridge Chapel.

The Baptist Chapel in College street occupies the site of the former chapel, which had become inadequate to the wants of its increasing congregation. The old Meeting-House, built in 1714, was first enlarged in 1760, at a cost of about £300; it was again enlarged in 1774, at an expense of £1250; and in 1830 new schoolrooms were erected, which cost, including purchase of messuages, &c., £1446. The last services were held in it on July 6th, 1862. The first stone of the present noble and graceful structure was laid on the 9th of December 1862 by the Rev. J. T. Brown, the present minister, who also opened it, November 26th, 1863. Its principal front consists of a façade of Bath stone, presenting a large projecting pediment supported by six columns and pilasters with carved enrichments; and the flank walls, extending to the angles of the building, have pilasters, cornices, &c., corresponding with the architectural style of the centre, which is in the Corinthian order. Between the columns are fine circular-headed windows, with richly-moulded imposts, caps, &c.; the whole standing upon a surbase of bold proportions, with a rock face plinth of Derby gritstone. The internal area of the building is seventy-five feet by fifty-four feet, with galleries extending over a spacious vestibule; and its ample dimensions are capable of accommodating 1100 persons. It is admirably furnished with the means of ingress and egress, there being six outlets to the ground-floor and four to the galleries.

In the surbase supporting the columns are three entrance doors opening into the vestibule, from which the doors open into the chapel, and having on either side a flight of stairs leading to the galleries. There are also on the opposite end two other stone staircases leading to the galleries. In the rear of the chapel are the minister's and baptismal vestries, and over them a committee-room and several classrooms, communicating with the gallery of the chapel, and the large room for general meetings over the schools at the rear of the chapel, consisting of an infant schoolroom, a Sunday schoolroom, over which is a large room for general meetings, capable of seating 500 persons, and communicating with the gallery and classrooms just described. These rooms, as well as the chapel, are furnished with apparatuses by means of which they are supplied with warmth in winter and ventilation in summer. The baptistery in front of the pulpit and under the dais is lined with buff tiles; the pulpit is both novel in treatment and very effective, and the open seats consist of plain deal and polished oak.

The Baptist Chapel, Grey Friars' street, was erected in 1839 at a cost of about £1700, including the site, &c. It is a large brick building, with schoolrooms beneath; the front has a bold pediment supported by pilasters; and the roof, which is 45 feet in span, is constructed of wood and iron, so as to form an elliptical ceiling; and is capable of accommodating 600 persons on the ground-floor. The Rev. Thomas Henry Holyoak is the minister.

The Calvinistic Baptist Chapel, Abington street, is a white brick building, erected in 1860 at a cost of £1500. The Rev. Thomas Shelton is the present minister.

The Baptist Chapel, Grafton street, is a plain brick building erected in 1868; it has a Sunday school attached.

The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, Gold street, erected in 1815 at a cost of £5000; and in 1873 there were added to it new vestries and classrooms at a further cost of £680. The edifice is very appropriately fitted up, and affords sitting space for 900 worshippers.

The Wesleyan Centenary Chapel, Grafton street, erected in 1839 at a cost, including the purchase of the site and additions, of about £2000, is a plain brick building, with a Grecian Doric-porched entrance, and will seat nearly 500 persons. The west end is used as a Sunday school; there is also a Sunday school in connection with this chapel in Scarletwell street, built in 1860, which is used as a place of worship on Sunday evenings.

The Wesleyan Reform Chapel, Wellingborough road, erected in 1852, and rebuilt in 1873 at a cost of about £800. It is of brick, with stone facings, and will seat about 350 persons.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel, Horse-Market, is a plain brick building, erected in 1840, and rebuilt in 1872, at a cost of about £1600; it will seat between 500 and 600. There is also a Sunday school attached.

The Unitarian Chapel, in King street, is a small plain edifice, enlarged and repaired in 1869, when a new Sunday school was added to it at a cost of £1000. The Rev. Iden Payne is the pastor.

The Friends' Meeting-House, in Wellington street, is a commodious building.

Union Chapel.—In order to meet the religious requirements of the rapidly-increasing population, a new chapel under the above designation, with a Sunday school annexed, is about to be erected under the auspices of some of the leading Nonconformists of the town. The committee have purchased an eligible site on the Kettering road at an expense of £600.

Another body of Dissenters, called "The New Jerusalem Church," first formed a congregation in this town about the year 1863, and at present meet to worship in the Corn Exchange Buildings.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS—Free Grammar-School.—This institution was founded by Thomas Chipsey, grocer, of Northampton, who, by deed the 1st of June 1552 (33d Henry VIII.), devised lands at Holcot and other places in trust to Lawrence Manley, Lawrence Washington, and eighteen others, for the payment of a schoolmaster, who should teach grammar free; also a moiety of £10, to be paid to the boys singing in All Saints' Church, the residue of profits to be expended in keeping the market-place (then newly paved) in repair. This endowment was augmented by Mr Ralph Freeman, citizen of London, about the year 1634; and Paul Wentworth, Esq., by indenture dated 26th January 1677, charged his estate in Ullingstow Lovell, in Buckinghamshire, with an annual payment of £20, to support an usher to this school. The founder not having provided a schoolhouse Cardinal Pole in 1557 granted the use of the decayed Church of St Gregory for that purpose. In 1840 this ancient schoolroom was in such a ruinous state that it was necessary to take it down ; when, by the exertions of the head master in obtaining donations, the school was rebuilt, and but few remains of the ancient fabric now exist. The new school, built in 1870 at a cost of £3000, is a good brick building with stone dressings, to which a large playground is attached : it is situated in Abington square. It consists of a central hall, from which five classrooms open, each room affording accommodation for forty boys. The school is conducted on a new scheme, which provides for head and second masters, both of whom must be graduates ; and it further directs the appointment of additional masters as the revenues of the school increase. There are now no free boys, each pupil from the town paying £4 per annum. The principal subjects of instruction are English, French, Latin, Greek, German, mathematics, and several branches of engineering, drawing, physical science, &c. The head master is the Rev. S. J. W. Sanders, M.A., F.G.S., LL.M. Among the eminent men who have been educated here may be mentioned Dr Thomas Cartwright, Bishop of Chester, and the Rev. James Hervey, author of the "Meditations." Dr Crewe, Bishop of Durham, gave valuable books from his own collection towards the formation of a library.

The Government School of Art, which occupies rooms in the Grammar-School, was established in 1871 for the instruction of artisans generally in drawing and designing, with the view to enable them to compete successfully with foreign workmen. Day classes are held on Wednesdays and Saturdays from twelve o'clock to half-past three P.M.—the fees are one guinea per quarter ; and the evening classes are held on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays—fee five shillings per quarter. Mr Stephen Thomas, head master ; John Buswell Hensman, Esq., hon. secretary.

Dryden and Herbert's Free Charity or Orange or Blue Coat School, Bridge street, was founded and endowed in 1710 by John Dryden, Esq. of Chesterton, with the premises known as the George Inn, which the trustees were empowered by an Act of Parliament to sell, and invest the money in the funds ; and further endowed by Zachariah Herbert in 1734, with lands in the parish of Burton Latimer, for clothing, educating, and apprenticing twenty boys of the town of Northampton. The present trustees are—Rev. Sir Henry John Gunning, the Right Hon. Lord Henley, M.P., Henry Nethercote, Esq., Earl Spencer, K.G., Captain Stopford, W. Thornton, Esq., the mayor, and vicar of All Saints' for the time being. Mr Wm. Tomalin is clerk to the charity. There are eighteen boys on the foundation at present.

Blue-Coat School.—James Earl of Northampton, and several other gentlemen of the county, founded this charity, and endowed it with £1000, which was laid out by the corporation in the purchase of an estate in the parish of Bugbrooke, the rents of which are applied to educate and clothe twenty-five boys of poor freemen, providing also clothing for twenty freemen of advanced age, and ten shillings each in money. Mr Gabriel Newton of Leicester, in 1760, founded a Green-Coat School, and endowed it with a rent charge of £26 per annum, to provide clothing and education for twenty-five poor boys. These charities, which are now amalgamated, being insufficient for their several purposes, have been augmented by the corporation, and are now under the management of the "Church Charities Trustees." The present value of the endowment is about £177 a year. The schoolhouse, built in 1811 at a cost of about £1800, is a good substantial brick building, in niches in the front of which are two figures of Blue-Coat boys. There are twenty-five boys on the foundation at present.

Beckett and Sargeant's (blue) Girls' School, Kingswell street.—This school was founded by Mrs Ann Sargeant and Mrs Dorothy Beckett, who by indentures dated 20th September 1735, endowed it with certain messuages, lands, and hereditaments in Northampton, and in Eakley, in the parish of Stoke Goldington, Buckinghamshire, to trustees (of whom the vicar of All Saints' for the time being is to be one), for the purpose of clothing 30 girls of the parish of All Saints, annually, in blue cloth gowns, &c. ; for paying a schoolmistress to teach them, and finding books, &c., for the use of the school. The vicar of All Saints' was also to receive one pound for preaching an annual sermon on the 30th of November. The annual rental is £250. There is also belonging to this charity £4, 11s. 8d. per annum as interest upon £200, given by the executors of the late John Allen out of £1000 bequeathed by him for charitable purposes. The school-house was rebuilt in 1813, and restored in 1863 at a cost of £660. There are 35 girls at present (1873) on the foundation.

All Saints' Parochial Schools, in Horseshoe street, were erected in 1839 at a cost of about £1160, exclusive of the site, raised by subscription, aided by a grant from the Committee of Council on Education. They consist of three rooms, each 60 by 40 feet, having a class-room attached to each school. The north front, which is in the late Tudor style, with Elizabethan gables, surmounted by pinnacles, presents a very classic appearance, and the roof is surmounted by a bell-turret. The schools are well supplied with books, maps, &c. The average number of boys in attendance is 300, girls 160, and infants 120. There is an organ in the schools which cost £129. Divine service is performed here every Sunday. These schools are supported by subscription, government grants, and the pence of the children.

British Schools, Campbell square.—These handsome schools were erected in 1845, in the Elizabethan style, with ornamental chimney-shafts; the dressings of the doors, windows, gables, and coping are of Bath stone, and form a pleasing contrast to the red bricks of which the building is composed. The school consists of three large rooms, which will accommodate 1000 children. The master's apartments occupy the centre. The average number in attendance is 580, and in addition to the usual branches taught in these schools, the children receive lessons in history, geography, &c.

St Sepulchre's Parochial Schools, Leicester road, were built in 1845 at a cost of £1600, including the purchase of site, which sum was raised by subscription, aided by grants from the National Society and the Committee of Council. The building is in the shape of a T, with a class-room at the north-west angle, in the late Tudor or debased Gothic style, with buttresses at the angles and between each window. At the east end is a large Perpendicular window, and the apex of the gable is surmounted by a Tudor cross. The two large rooms are 56 by 27 feet each, and may be thrown into one by a sliding partition, and the roof is open and high pitched, showing all the timbers. Mr E. F. Law was the architect. The average number in attendance is about 300.

St Katharine's Schools (boys, girls, and infants), King street, form a substantial stone building constructed for 500 children. They are in the Elizabethan style pointed with dressed stone, at the cost of £1350 inclusive of the boys' school, which was added in 1872 at a cost of £600.

St Andrew's Schools (boys, girls, and infants), with master's residence attached, are situated in St Andrew's street, and were built in 1858 at a cost of £1200. The infant school and master's house were added in 1871 at a further cost of £600. They are substantial buildings, capable of accommodating 500, and the average attendance is about 250.

St Edmund's Schools (boys, girls, and infants), Church street, are of brick, erected in 1858, enlarged in 1866, 1869, and 1871, at a cost of about £200. They will accommodate 550, and the average attendance is 300.

St Giles's Schools (boys, girls, and infants), St Giles's terrace, are handsome brick buildings, with stone dressings, erected in 1861 at a cost of £3000. They will accommodate 400, and are attended by an average of 360.

St Giles's Mission School, Dychurch lane, was built in 1869 at a cost of £700 including the site, will hold 200, and is attended by an average of 120.

St Peter's School (mixed), situated in Elephant lane, is a good building of stone, erected in 1855 at a cost of £600; it will accommodate 160, and is attended by an average of 130.

St James's School, St James's end, was built of brick in 1866, and enlarged in 1871 to accommodate 300.

The Kingsthorpe Church School, Semilong, was built in 1871 for 150 children—is a pointed building of brick.

Catholic School, Woolmonger street, is a very plain building of brick, which will accommodate 120.

The Wesleyan Day and Sunday Schools, in Katharine street, have an average attendance of 120.

Public Elementary Schools.—Under the provisions of the "Elementary Education Act, 1870," a School Board was established for the borough of Northampton; and, in accordance with these provisions, two schools are now (August 1873) in progress of erection, one in Spring lane, and the other in Vernon terrace; the former, including the purchase of the site, at a cost of about £6000, will accommodate 650 pupils—viz., 200 boys, 200 girls, and 250 infants; and the latter is to cost about £5000, and will accommodate 500—viz., 150 boys, 150 girls, and 200 infants. The Board consists of eleven members, as follow: Mr Edmund Francis Law (chairman), Mr Pickering Phipps Perry (vice-chairman), and Messrs William Adkins, James Butterfield, Joseph Gurney, Charles Lees, Samuel Mason, Francis Mulliner, Pickering Phipps, Edward Rush, and Thomas Wright. Clerk and Solicitor to the Board—Mr John Buswell Hensman. Treasurers—The Northamptonshire Banking Company. Offices—6 St Giles' street.

Amongst the private educational establishments in the town, the following are worthy of special notice, namely—Abington House School, Abington street, of which Messrs Kingston and Phillips are the principals; Clevedon College, Abington street, Mr Edward Rush, B.A., principal; and The Trade School, Waterloo, of which Mr C. Lees, F.C.S., is the principal. An efficient staff of assistant masters is attached to each of these schools.

HOSPITALS AND ALMSHOUSE.—St John's Hospital, Bridge street.—When this ancient hospital was founded has never been precisely ascertained. By an inquisition taken in the first year of Edward III. (1327), it was said to have been founded 189 years prior to that time, by Walter, Archdeacon of Northampton, for the reception and maintenance of the infirm poor. "This hospitale," says Leland, "standith within the waule of the toune, a little above the south gate," and he supposes it to have been founded by William St Clere, Archdeacon of Northampton, who died in 1168. It offered an asylum to seven aged females, who are allowed each 5s. weekly, and firing. The institute was long considered as an ecclesiastical sinecure. The building, which contained originally some very elegant architectural details, consists of a large hall, with apartments for the poor lodgers, and a chapel. In the front is a circular window, under which are the remains of a niche; the low doorway, which had pillars on each side, with good moulded capitals, is under a recessed arch supported by a column on each side with moulded capitals. On the landing of the staircase, which leads to two large rooms, occupying the whole of the upper storey, is a window filled with stained glass, very much displaced; amongst the fragments will be found a full-length figure of a bishop, mitred and bearing the crosier, and another figure in the attitude of prayer. The arms of Grey, Hastings, and Valence appear, but are much misplaced as to their quarterings. These fragments have apparently been removed from the chapel and placed here. The chapel is a plain hall, at the east end of which is a Decorated window of three lights, and at the west end a Perpendicular window, with a richly-panelled door beneath. Near the communion-table lie buried Dr George Wake, second son of Sir Baldwin Wake, who died master in 1682, and John Skelton, Archdeacon of Bedford, who died master in 1704. The whole of these premises was sold in 1872 for nearly £13,000 to the Midland Railway Company, which sum is invested in the three-per-cent. bank annuities. There is a small cemetery in the chapel-ground, and a small postern doorway, a remnant of the ancient walls of the town, is still to be found in the garden wall towards the meadows, the architectural character of which fully agrees with the early date given to the walls. Its style is that of a trefoil-headed arch, and from its size it must have merely been an opening for the despatch of private messengers, or to allow the master of this hospital an exit towards the fields. This charity has formed the subject in a suit of Chancery for the last thirty years, but a new scheme is now being prepared by the Attorney-General for its administration; it is to be hereafter placed in the hands of trustees. The income derived from the property belonging to this hospital was for many years very small, consequent upon the granting of long leases at mere nominal rents by former masters of the hospital. As the leases run out, however, the income rapidly increases. In 1862 the income was £350, but in 1873 it amounted to £986, including £390 arising from the sale of the hospital. Bridges tells us that "this house had rents and possessions at Slipton, Stoke near Oundle, Rushden, Wellingborough, Whiston, Harrowden, Walgrave, Hannington Parva, Oldthorpe, Wotton, Courteenhall, Hartwell, Abyngton, Thorpe, Kislingbury, Gayton, Tiffield, Blisworth, Holcott, Milton, Piddington, Northampton, Thynden, Queynton, Lawnden, and Wendover in Buckinghamshire; with a pension in the churches of Helmeden and Slipton, and part of the tithes of Podington." The Bishop of Lincoln is visitor, by whom the master is appointed. The hospital is governed by a master and a co-brother, or chaplain; the co-brethren and inmates are appointed by the master. The present master is the Rev. Nathaniel Thomas Hughes, M.A., vicar of St Edmund's, and the Rev. Robert B. Woodward, M.A. is the only co-brother at present; Mr Wm. Hull, secretary. Some of those who were killed at the battle of Northampton, in the reign of Henry VI., were buried in this hospital, and several skeletons were found in digging foundations for the houses adjoining, near the street, some years since, which were supposed to have been a portion of their remains.

St Thomas's Hospital, St Giles' street, was built in 1834 at a cost of about £1300, and is a substantial erection devoid of architectural ornament, save a little Gothic tracery at the head of the windows, and a castellated parapet, whither the inmates were removed from the ancient structure previously occupied by them in Bridge Street, and which is now used as a carpenter's workshop. This hospital was founded in 1450 by the citizens and burgesses, in honour of the celebrated St Thomas à Becket, and endowed as an almshouse for twelve poor people, with an allowance of 1s. 11d. per week, clothing, firing, and washing; an additional revenue was granted by Sir John Langham in 1654, for six more, with an appointment of 1s. 8d. per week; and Richard Massingberd afterwards added another almswoman. The rents have since improved so much that the number has been still further increased, and considerable additions made to their allowance, though there are only fourteen inmates at present, who receive each 4s. per week, besides fuel and 25s. a year for clothing, and forty-five out-pensioners, £8 per annum each. For many years prior to 1873, twenty in and fifty out-pensioners were maintained upon this establishment; but since that period the charity has been very much abridged in its usefulness, in consequence of a Chancery suit instituted for the recovery of some of the charity property alleged to have been alienated many years since, and which proceedings have saddled the charity with a large amount of costs, to provide for which it became necessary for the trustees to reduce the expenditure by decreasing the number of pensioners, and which has been done to some extent from time to time as the vacancies occurred. This suit has, however, lately terminated in an exchange advantageous to the interests of the charity, the income of which amounts to about £1300 per annum, and the trustees are making the necessary arrangements for putting the hospital upon its full establishment, by the appointment of as many additional pensioners as the income will provide for. The vicar of St Giles' is the chaplain to the hospital.

Sir John Langham's Almshouse, in Bridge street, was a plain house, bearing date 1682, and afforded accommodation to two poor women, appointed by the representatives of the Langham family, and received 1s. 8d. per week; and about 5s. a year each, for coals and clothing, from Wolfrey's Charity in addition. This house was taken down in 1872 to make way for a road to the new cattle-market.

Northamptonshire Orphanage for Girls, St Giles' street, established in 1868 for the maintenance, clothing, and education of destitute orphan girls, who are admitted by election between the age of eight and twelve. Orphan girls of good character are also admitted on payment of £4 per quarter; they are kept in the orphanage until they arrive at the age of sixteen, and are instructed in all kinds of domestic work. Rev. W. H. F. Robson, chaplain; Captain Thomas Rose, hon. secretary. Mrs Annie Stephenson, matron.

The General Infirmary is perhaps the most important monument raised to benevolence in Northampton. This excellent hospital affords medical and surgical aid to the lame and sick poor, both as in and out-patients, without regard to residence, on the recommendation of a subscriber, but in cases not admitting of delay without any recommendation whatever. It also claims the first place in seniority, having existed here upwards of 128 years. In 1743 a proposal for the erection of a county hospital was made by several benevolent individuals to the sheriff and grand jury during the summer assizes, and on the 20th of September, in the same year, a subscription was opened at a county meeting convened for that purpose, and the result was the purchase of the house in George Row, now the residence of H. B. Whitworth, Esq., for the above-named purpose, in 1747. The accommodation was enlarged in 1750 by an additional building, and the number of in-patients was increased from 40 to 60, and in 1784 the number was still further increased to 70. The prospects of this excellent institution brightened as its real value became known, and in January 1790 the governors resolved to erect a new hospital on an improved plan. The site of the new hospital, which was once part of the lands of the Priory of St Andrew, was soon after purchased for £1000, and the erection of the present beautiful building followed. The estimates for the work amounted to £10,583, exclusive of stone for the foundation, and clay for bricks, found upon the spot, and of the munificent donation of Kingsthorpe stone for facing and building, to the amount of £1000, by Mr Drayton, the proprietor. The building was completed, the former hospital sold, and on the 3d of August 1793 the revised rules and statutes were read. The institution was ordered to be called the General Infirmary of Northampton, and it was opened for the admission of patients on the 12th of October 1793. The whole cost of its completion, including the site, was about £15,000, though nearly all the contractors became bankrupts through loss in the undertaking. The building stands on the eastern side of, but detached from the town, on the brow of a hill which gradually slopes to the south, and consists of a centre and two wings, having three storeys above ground, and one beneath; it is a substantial, well-arranged edifice, and is admirably disposed for the reception and accommodation of the sick. The upper storeys are occupied by the sick-wards, which now afford comfortable accommodation for 138 patients; one side of the house being appropriated to male, and the other to female patients. The medical library consists of upwards of 5000 volumes of most valuable works. On the eastern side of the building convalescent wards were erected in 1849 at a cost of about £3000. The ground-floor, which is used as a committee-room and chapel, contains a splendid collection of anatomical casts bequeathed by Mr Elderton, formerly house-surgeon of the institution, to his executors and residuary legatees, H. Terry, Esq., and the late C. Markham, Esq., and which these gentlemen presented to the institution; and the upper floor contains two wards of fourteen beds. A subterranean passage connects this detached ward with the main building. Additions to the main building were made in 1872 by the extension of the wings to the south, and by building on the north side waiting-rooms for out-patients, and accommodation for pupils and servants. The work has been carried out, in Bath stone, in a most substantial manner, at a cost of about £3500, the sum of £2100 for the extension of the wings having been contributed by gentlemen interested in the institution. In the committee-room hangs a full-length portrait of the late Dr Kerr, painted in 1813 by T. Phillips, R.A., at the instance of the governors, who defrayed the expense by a guinea subscription, as a testimony of respect for his character and long term of efficient service. Provision is also made for the spiritual instruction and comfort of the patients, by means of several legacies left for that purpose, as well as by an annual grant from the funds of the institution to an assistant chaplain, whose appointment was deemed necessary from the great increase in the number of patients. There are three full services weekly in the chapel of the institution, and prayers daily in the wards for such sick persons as are unable to attend service in the chapel on Sundays. It is also provided that the sick of all persuasions may be attended in the manner they desire.

The affairs of the institution are regulated by a grand visitor, president, and* governors. Subscribers of two guineas or more per annum, or benefactors of twenty-five guineas and upwards at one time, being governors; a committee of whom meet weekly to conduct current business, and whose reports are brought before a quarterly general court, the state of the society being annually submitted to a meeting of all contributors. The establishment is supported by the interest arising from numerous legacies, and by annual subscriptions payable in advance; and it must afford much gratification to the benevolent and humane to contemplate the extensive benefit that has been afforded by this infirmary. Persons desirous of relieving the sufferings of the sick poor here find a safe channel for their contributions, says the committee, and may feel assured that the patients sent to this house will receive the benefit of such medical and surgical skill as even the rich in many situations are unable to obtain; at the same time the greatest care is taken in the appointment of kind and efficient nurses, and the diet, &c., is such as the medical attendants deem suited to the wants of each particular case. The admirable rules state that all sick and lame poor are entitled to admission into this infirmary. That no persons disordered in their senses, or suspected to have the smallpox, measles, itch, or any other infectious distemper—or any who are apprehended to be in a consumption or incurable—be admitted into this infirmary as in-patients; but that all may be admitted and assisted with advice, medicines, &c., as out-patients. That subscribers of one guinea per annum be entitled to recommend three out-patients within the year; that subscribers of a larger sum, for every guinea and a half which they may subscribe, have a right to recommend one in-patient and two out-patients within the year; that donors of fifteen guineas at any one time have the same privileges as subscribers of one guinea and a half per annum; and donors of thirty guineas the same as subscribers of three guineas; and that subscribers and donors of larger sums be privileged according to the same proportion; that benefit societies be entitled to the same privileges as individual subscribers; and that boards of guardians may recommend one in-patient and two out-patients for every three guineas subscribed. Since the opening of the institution in 1744, 68,515 persons have been admitted without recommendation, upon sudden accidents, or cases admitting of no delay. Of these there have been no less than 2252 during the year 1871—namely, 249 in-patients, and 2003 out-patients. The number of in-patients admitted in the year 1872 was 1263, and of out-patients 5621; the daily average number of in-patients during the last year was 108, and the amount of annual subscriptions for the past year was £2835. The income of the year was £6561, and the expenditure amounted to £5409.

The officers of the institution are as follow: Grand Visitor, His Excellency the Earl Spencer, K.G.; President, ———; Trustees, the Duke of Grafton, Earl of Westmoreland, Lord Lilford, Rev. Lord Alwyne Compton, Sir Rainald Knightley, Bart., M.P., Sir C. E. Isham, Bart., Major Cartwright, M.P., Col. Loyd Lindsay, M.P., J. B. Robinson, Esq., Edward Thornton, Esq., and H. B. Whitworth, Esq. The physicians are D. J. F. Francis, M.D., and John Henry Webster, M.D.; surgeons, James Mash and George Ashdown; house-surgeon, Charles Lewis; chaplains, the Rev. William Butlin, Rev. W. H. F. Robson; matron, Miss Pell; dispenser, Mr H. J. Davies; and Mr S. P. Bennett, secretary.

General Lunatic Hospital and Asylum.—This magnificent edifice was erected in 1836-37, and opened for the reception of patients on the 1st of August 1838, and has since been much enlarged. The total cost of the building, including the purchase of sixty-four acres of land for the site, amounted to upwards of £80,000, raised by legacies, donations, &c., and by which means it is still supported. Of this sum, the second Earl Spencer, as colonel of the disbanded Northamptonshire yeomanry, transferred to the trustees the splendid donation of £7000. This invaluable institution occupies an elevated situation on the Billing Road about a mile east of the town, and commands a varied and interesting prospect, embracing the park and woods of Delapre, the picturesque vale through which flows the silvery Nene, Queen Eleanor's Cross, and Hunsbury Hill. The building is faced with Bath stone, and its decorations are tastefully executed. The interior is so arranged as to afford the greatest possible amount of comfort to the inmates, the rooms being furnished on the model of ordinary rooms, with fireplaces and other requisites. The system of non-restraint, which is strictly observed in the management of this establishment, has produced satisfactory results, and is found to be much superior to the old system of restraint.

This healthy and agreeable situation, with its large and diversified grounds, affords to the patients a variety of occupations of an attractive and pleasing description, as well as inducements to the study and exercise of mental and bodily recreation and amusement. We therefore feel assured that the humane and enlightened visitors to this noble institution will be gratified in contemplating the happy adaptation of its various arrangements to alleviate the sufferings of the afflicted.

The constitution of the house is vested in a committee of management, composed of eighteen noblemen and gentlemen, who meet once a month at the asylum: they are elected annually by those who have been benefactors to the house to the extent of £20, this being the qualification for the direction.

This hospital or asylum is mainly a self-supporting institution; but there are many patients who, having fallen in their estate, are received at very small payments, and who participate in the society, the comforts, and the advantages of their more fortunate brethren. This is perhaps the most legitimate stream in which charity can deduce itself, and the benefits thus diffused rescue many from the mortifying trials that might otherwise be their portion. We are glad to hear that it is contemplated by the managers of this excellent institution to greatly extend its advantages, and to receive a much greater number of private patients at small payments.

John Clare, the poet, a native of Helpstone, near Peterborough, was an inmate of this asylum, and died here on the 20th May 1864, aged seventy-one years.

A neat chapel, which stands within the grounds, was erected in 1863 at a cost of £4500, where divine service is performed on week-days.

President of the institution, the Duke of Grafton; vice-chairman and chairman of committee, the Rev. Lord A. Compton; and the resident officers are the medical superintendent, Joseph Bayley, M.R.C.S.; chaplain, Rev. Robt. B. Woodward, M.A.; house surgeon, J. H. Bell, M.D.; secretary and steward, Mr John Godfrey; treasurers, Messrs Boëme and Page; matron, Mrs Grant.

Royal Victoria Dispensary.—This useful institution, situate in Albion place, was founded in 1844 to commemorate the Queen's progress through Northampton to Burleigh House. This handsome building consists of a semicircular bay-like projection in the centre, having Doric pilasters between the windows, and a bold projecting cornice; presenting much the appearance of a little temple itself, it is, upon the whole, very effective. The offices at the two extremities of the building are connected by corridors open to a tastefully laid-out garden in front. The corridors are supported each on four fluted Doric columns.

The institution was opened in August 1845 at a cost of about £1300, raised by the voluntary subscriptions of the gentry and tradesmen of the town; and its "object is to enable the working classes to insure for themselves and their families efficient medical advice and medicine during illness, by their own small periodical payments, with the assistance of contributions from the more opulent."

The funds of the institution, according to the rules, are derived from two sources: the subscriptions and donations of the honorary members, and the payments of the free members. All donors of five pounds or upwards at one time, shall be governors for life; and annual subscribers of ten shillings are governors during the continuance of their subscription. These funds are kept in two distinct accounts: the "honorary fund," derived from the subscriptions and donations of honorary members, bears the general expenses of the institution; the "free members' fund," consisting of the payments of the free members, is applied to defraying the cost of drugs, &c. The free members consist of working persons and servants, their wives and children, not receiving parish relief, and being unable to pay for medical advice in the usual manner. The free members above fourteen years of age pay one penny a week each, under fourteen years, a half-penny; but twopence a week is considered sufficient for a man, his wife, and all his children under fourteen years of age. Servants are required to pay five shillings a year, all payable in advance. All these members are entitled to medical relief and assistance, if necessary, at their own homes, and have the privilege of being attended by any one of the medical officers of the institution whom they may prefer; their wives may obtain the attendance of any one of the medical officers during confinement for the small sum of five shillings, and their children are vaccinated without any additional charge. The number of cases attended in the year 1872 was 59,205; of which number 14,600 were attended at the homes of the patients, 10,950 at the medical officers' houses, and 2473 at the dispensary. The number of prescriptions made up in the same year was 63,531; and of dental operations, 1042—viz., permanent teeth extracted, 514; temporary teeth extracted, 528. The amount contributed for the same year by the free members was £2114, 18s. 1d., being the largest sum ever received, and is upwards of 10 per cent. more than the amount paid in 1871.

The general management of the institution, and the superintendence and arrangement of its financial affairs, are intrusted to a committee consisting of eighteen gentlemen, and its property is vested in trustees appointed at a general meeting. President, His Excellency the Earl Spencer, K.G.; vice-presidents, Rev. E. S. Gedge, Rev. E. T. Prust, and H. B. Whitworth, Esq.; and the medical officers in ordinary are Drs Barr, W. Moxon, and C. J. Evans; treasurers, Messrs Boème and Page; honorary secretary, John C. Becke; dispenser, G. C. Osborne; collector, J. D. Page; honorary consulting physician, Dr Faircloth; surgeon-dentist, Mr B. Wilkins; auditors, Mr W. J. Pierce and Mr T. L. Cordeux; trustees, W. B. Gates, H. P. Markham, and W. Williams, Esqs.

The Northampton Union Workhouse, situated a short distance from the town, is a large and commodious building, erected in 1837 at a cost of £7000, to which has been subsequently added a detached hospital at an additional expense of about £1000; an infirmary for men was added in 1869, and a new school built in 1872. The building is capable of accommodating 500 inmates, and is generally full during the winter season. The average weekly expense of each pauper, for maintenance and clothing, is four shillings. The union comprehends eighteen parishes, embracing an area of thirty-one square miles. The parishes, exclusive of the five of which the town is composed, are Abington, Billing Great, Billing Little, Bugbrooke, Dallington, Duston, Harpole, Heyford Nether, Heyford Upper, Kingsthorpe, Kislingbury, Upton, and Weston Favell. The affairs of the union are conducted by a board of thirty-five guardians, to whom Mr A. B. Markham is chairman; Mr E. W. Tuffley, vice-chairman; and Mr William Tomalin, clerk. The other officers are Mr and Mrs Brannan, master and matron; Mr G. F. Cotton, medical officer for St Giles and St Sepulchre's district; Mr J. M. Bryan, for All Saints' district; Mr Wm. Percival, for St Andrew's district; and Mr W. H. Walker, for Bugbrooke; Messrs J. W. Parker, Robert Hensher, and J. Lillingbeck are the relieving officers, the latter for Bugbrooke. The Rev. N. T. Hughes, M.A., is chaplain; and John and Mrs Christina Reach are master and mistress of the school. The guardians meet in the board-room every Tuesday at 10 A.M.

The Savings-Bank, in St Giles' square, is a provident institution, which affords a beneficial investment for the savings of the humbler classes; and though the annual rate of interest allowed to depositors is only 3 per cent., it is still one of the safest and most profitable depositories for the small savings of the poor. It was first established in Northampton in June 1816, with branches at Daventry, Towcester, and Wellingborough. The amount of its deposits on the 20th of November 1872 was £219,898, 19s. 10d., belonging to 6710 individuals, 183 charitable societies, and 100 friendly societies. The sums received within the past year amounted to £30,879, 1s. 11d., whilst that paid to depositors, including interest, was £35,695, 2s. The expenditure during the same year was £533; salaries, printing, and stationery, £54, 6s. 6d; branch banks' books and sundries, £44, 11s. 4d.; and assurance rates and taxes, £36, 18s. 7d.; making a total of £668, 16s. 5d. Balance on the general account invested with the commissioners for the reduction of the National Debt, including interest, £219,300, 15s. 8d; do. on account of separate surplus fund invested with the commissioners, £3300; do. in the hands of the treasurer, £1149, 4s. 7d. The affairs of the bank are managed by a superintending committee of twelve of the clergy and gentry, exclusive of the patrons. The patrons (who also act as presidents) are the Duke of Grafton, the Marquis of Northampton, and His Excellency the Earl of Spencer, K.G. There are fourteen trustees, who are also included in the list of managers. The managers number about 180 of the leading clergy and gentry of the county, who act in rotation. The bank is open every Monday and Friday evening from 7 to 8 o'clock, Wednesday from 12 to 1.30 P.M., and on Saturday from 12 till 2.30 P.M. Mr Benjamin Vialls is the actuary. There is a clear surplus of £3851, os. 5d. above all claims upon the bank, besides the bank premises.

NEWSPAPERS, LITERARY INSTITUTIONS, &c.—Three weekly newspapers, the Mercury, the Herald, and the Albion. The two former are published every Saturday morning, and the latter every Friday morning. The Northampton Mercury was established as early as the 2d of May 1720, and the proprietorship has continued in the same family, descending to the present Mrs Ann Mary Dicey, of 50 Onslow Square, Brompton, London. It advocates Whig or Liberal principles, and has an extensive circulation. The Northampton Herald commenced on the 12th of November 1831, on Conservative principles, and has also an extensive circulation. Mr James Butterfield is the proprietor. The Northampton Albion issued its first number on the 27th June 1873. Mr Thomas Arlidge is the proprietor and publisher.

Mechanics' Institutes.—Incalculable are the advantages which must inevitably flow from these truly excellent institutions. By means of these the arcana of learning are thrown open to all classes of the community; and we are happy to find that this great blessing seems duly appreciated by the inhabitants of Northampton. The Mechanics' Institute, situated in the Corn Exchange buildings, where it occupies commodious premises, which supply the necessary rooms for a library, museum, reading classes, and lectures, was established in 1833, and has for its primary object the dissemination of scientific, mechanical, and other useful knowledge among the operative classes. This institution is in a more flourishing state than most establishments of the kind in the kingdom, and is liberally supported by the literary gentlemen of the town and neighbourhood. It comprises about 500 members. The library contains about 1300 volumes, for which the members are indebted to the munificence of John Litchfield, Esq., who at different times has contributed nearly the whole of them, together with a considerable supply of apparatus in the several departments of mechanics, electricity, pneumatics, and meteorology, and several valuable curiosities for a museum. Earl Spencer, K.G., in 1853, gave the institute 300 volumes in the French language. The library and reading-room are open daily; lectures on scientific and other subjects are delivered during the winter season; as also mutual improvement classes in music and the languages. Rev. Iden Payne, secretary; Mr Thomas Wright, treasurer; and Mr Joseph Rowlatt, librarian. The amount of subscriptions to this invaluable institution is 1s., 1s. 6d., and 2s. 6d. per quarter, and a ticket admitting a family, 21s. per annum.

"It may not be uninteresting to state," says a local writer, "that somewhat more than a century ago a philosophical society existed at Northampton. It originated at a small meeting, held September 17, 1743, by Messrs S. Paxton, G. Paxton, — Poole, B. Goodman, and — Woolley, who resolved to assemble statedly once a week for improving each other in natural knowledge. The association was soon afterwards joined by Sir Thos. Samwell, Bart., who became the president, Dr Doddridge, John Ferguson, Esq., and Jos. Jekys, Esq., upon which the parties proceeded to a course of philosophical lectures, illustrated by experiments. A report published in the Gentleman's Magazine states: 'Mr Poole, in one of its first meetings, after it had grown to any considerable number, entertained the society with some remarks which he made on the comet that appeared in 1743. He has also kept a register of the state of the barometer and of the weather, in order to compute as exactly as possible the quantity of rain which falls here, and to illustrate, by comparing the observations of succeeding months and years, how the changes of the barometer correspond to those of the weather. Dr Doddridge also exhibited two papers—the one on the doctrine of pendulums, the other on the laws of the communication of motion as well in elastic as non-elastic bodies, in which the most material propositions in relation to both were set in so plain and easy a light that he was requested to transcribe them and lay them among the papers belonging to the society.'"

Religious and Useful Knowledge Society.—This is another interesting institution, formed in 1839, its object, as its title implies, being the diffusion of religious and useful knowledge. Its depot in Gold street contains a library of about 5000 volumes, a reading-room, which is supplied with periodicals, and a small museum. The society consists of about 900 members, who pay, some, 4s., others, 2s. 6d., and a third class (mechanics), 1s. per quarter. The lectures of the society are delivered monthly during the winter season. The Lord Bishop of Peterborough is the president of this society; the Archdeacon of Northampton, vice-president; Edward Montague Brown, Esq., secretary; Pickering Phipps, Esq., treasurer; Mr C. Wright, librarian.

Architectural Society of the Archdeaconry of Northampton.—This society was formed in 1844, in consequence of the general revival of taste for ecclesiastical architecture; and as "it will be generally admitted that no district has richer treasures in ecclesiastical architecture than the archdeaconry of Northampton, no district, therefore, would better repay the labours of those who are desirous of preserving what yet remains from further decay, as well as from injudicious repair." The objects, then, of the society, "are to promote the study of ecclesiastical architecture, antiquities, and design, and the restoration of mutilated architectural remains within the archdeaconry, and to furnish suggestions, so far as may be within its province, for improving the character of ecclesiastical edifices hereafter to be erected." The members pay each 10s. a year, or £10 for life. The meetings of the society are held on the second Monday in February, and every alternate Monday, at twelve o'clock, in the society's room, Gold Street, or in one of the other towns in the archdeaconry, when papers on subjects of an ecclesiastical character are read. The Bishop of Peterborough is patron of the society; the presidents are the Marquis of Exeter, K.G., the Marquis of Northampton, and the Archdeacon of Northampton. There are twenty-one vice-presidents, among whom are the Earl Fitzwilliam, the Earl Spencer, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, the Very Rev. the Dean of Peterborough, the Venerable H. K. Bonney, D.D., Archdeacon of Bedford; the Venerable Archdeacon T. K. Bonney, M.A., Archdeacon of Leicester; the Rev. Canon Argles, and Sir Rainald Knightly, Bart., M.P., &c. &c. The committee, and committee of editors, are also numerous. Architectural notices of the churches in the archdeaconry of Northampton are published under the superintendence of this society. The depot of the society at Northampton is in Gold street.

The other societies in the town are—the Northamptonshire Society for the Protection of British Agriculture and Native Industry, established in 1844; the Northamptonshire Agricultural Book Club, who meet at the George Hotel monthly; the Mutual Benefit Building and Investment Society; the Northamptonshire Branch of the Edgbaston Society (which supports five poor deaf-and-dumb children at the asylum near Birmingham at an expense of £100 a year), which holds its meetings at the rooms of the Religious and Useful Knowledge Society. Besides the Sunday schools connected with the churches and chapels here, are several other institutions for the promulgation of Christian knowledge, amongst which are—the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts; the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge; the Church Pastoral Aid Society; Wesleyan Missionary Societies; Artisan Society; the Ladies' Female Society; and the Dorcas Society. The Tract Society's depository, and the Bible Society's depot are at Mrs Hannen's, Sheep street. In addition to the above is a society called the Northampton Ladies' Association for the Reformation of Female Prisoners, the objects of which are twofold—first, "to promote the reformation of female prisoners during the period of their imprisonment in gaol; and secondly, to provide a temporary refuge, on their discharge, to such as appear to be sincerely penitent, and desirous of returning to the paths of virtue and religion."

Northampton Town and County Benefit Building and Freehold Land Society was formed in 1848, the building department being added in 1857, formed for the purpose, says the circular of the company, of enabling "every mechanic or working man, by small weekly contributions, to purchase a piece of land, on which he may erect a cottage, cultivate a garden, &c. &c., either occupy it himself or let it to others, so that he may possess a 'stake in the country, and a voice in the election of members of Parliament.' The principal object of such a society is, that by the purchase of land in large quantities, it is able to supply each member with a small allotment at a cost considerably less than he would have to pay in the retail land market; thus for the payment of 1s. 6d. per week it is calculated that in five years, and in some cases much less than that period, every member will be in the full possession of a plot of 'freehold land' worth at least 45s. per annum. The society also lend money for the building or purchasing of houses." Joseph Gurney, secretary.

There are also in the town the Starr Bowkett Building Societies, Nos. 141 and 144; the former was established in November 1871, and the latter in May 1872. T. C. Manton, secretary.

There are many Loan Societies in the town, which will be found in the Trades' Directory.

The Working Men's Club, St Giles' street, established in 1865, and to which a library of about 700 volumes is annexed, possesses all the advantages of similar institutions. There are at present about 300 members, who pay 2s. each per quarter. The object of this institution is to promote the welfare and add to the comforts of working men, by providing reading and smoking rooms, where refreshments may be obtained, and which will be supplied with newspapers, periodicals, and the free use of a circulating library; by establishing mutual improvement and other classes, by occasional lectures, readings, and various entertainments, with gymnasium, bowling-alleys, and other means of recreation. Major G. J. Whyte-Melville, president; Rev. W. H. F. Robson, vice-president; Mr F. Mulliner, treasurer; and Mr George Hancock, secretary and manager.

Amongst the Provident Institutions of Northampton are the Freemasons, who hold their "Pomfret Lodge," the oldest and most numerous lodge in the "province," at the George Hotel on the first Thursday of every month, and of which M. W. Flewitt is worshipful master; a provincial grand lodge, which was formed for the counties of Northampton and Huntingdon on the 10th of May 1842. His Grace the Duke of Manchester is the provincial grandmaster presiding.

The Odd Fellows, Manchester Unity, and the Nottingham Order of Odd Fellows hold their meetings at various inns in the town; and besides these there are societies of Foresters, Free Brothers, &c.

In connection with these institutions is the Friendly Societies' Medical Institute, St Giles' Street, established in the present year, 1873, and which affords medical advantages to the wives and families of the members at a moderate scale of charges per annum. Mr W. B. Trasler, president; Mr F. Chapman, treasurer; and Mr G. Knight, secretary. Medical officer, Mr John Turner.

The Town Hall.—This beautiful building, in the Gothic style, from designs by Mr E. W. Godwin of Bristol, is situate in St Giles' square; and since it has been finished, owing to the completion of the new station in St John Street, a wide street, named Guildhall Road, has been opened in front of it, which gives it a very commanding appearance to all who come into the town by the Northampton and Bedford Railway. The foundation of this new building was laid on the 22d of October 1861 by the then mayor, Pickering Phipps, Esq.; and the hall was opened in May 1864 by Mark Dorman, Esq., then mayor. The exterior of the building is very fine, the ornamentation being most elaborate. In the lower part of the front some fine carvings are fixed, illustrating the various branches of the staple trade of early days; and they are very interesting, being a strange contrast to the mode adopted now in manufacturing boots and shoes. Along the front are placed eight statues, which were executed by Mr Boulton of Worcester. They represent St George, with a capital representing Una. Richard I.; capital, Minstrel Blundell. Henry III.; capital, foliage. Edward I.; capital, St George and the Dragon. Queen Victoria; capital, a lion. Henry VII.; foliage as the capital. Edward IV.; capital, the head of his queen. St Michael; capital, cross and foliage. Under the statues, on the arches of the four lower windows, are groups illustrative of important events in the history of the town. The first group represents the marriage of Waltheof, Earl of Northampton, with Judith, niece of William the Conqueror; the second represents Henry the Second granting the first charter to Northampton; the third is the granting the charter of the incorporation by Henry VI.; and the fourth, Edward I. pointing out the spot where his queen was to be buried. The tower windows are decorated with foliage, and under the arch of the lower of the two are representatives of nondescript animals. Between the windows a clock is placed, which is a great boon to the inhabitants, the hour being struck upon a large bell. Along the whole of the front of the buildings there are seven central windows, which are geometrical traceries of the oldest character, and extremely handsome; the capitals of the pillars supporting the arches are richly decorated with foliage-sculptured figures illustrative of Æsop's fables. The entrance to the hall is by a vestibule, which is extremely handsome, the pillars and other parts being profusely and richly decorated. On the pillars are sculptured Justice, Mercy, various processes in the building trade, Liberality, St Crispin. There are also some very fine sculptured groups representing Henry the Third's first parliament, Edward the Second's first parliament, Richard the Third's last parliament, Edward the Third's parliament. These groups are very interesting, as all the parliaments represented were held in Northampton. The sculpture in the arches on each side of the grand doorway represent the Danish invasion in the ninth century, and also the Danish invasion in the nineteenth by the Princess Alexandra; grape-gathering in October, a farmyard, a volunteer of 1796, and a volunteer of the present day, are also represented. The interior of the large hall is eighty-one feet by thirty-seven feet, and the walls are beautifully decorated with ornamental oil-painting in the eleventh-century style. At the extreme end there is a gallery in which is placed a large organ. All round the hall are hung shields, on which the coats-of-arms are painted of persons who have been and still are connected with the town and county. There is a spacious sessions court; and on the upper floor is situated a museum, in which is an elegant marble statue, executed by Chantrey, of the Right Hon. Spencer Percival, many years member for this borough, and who was assassinated in the lobby of the House of Commons 11th May 1812. It was removed here in 1866 from All Saints' Church. On the upper floor there is also a reading-room, council chamber, and other official offices. The hall is both in the interior and exterior a fine building, and it is a credit to the town.

The County Hall, on the Wood hill, is a spacious and elegant structure in the Grecian style, which reflects much credit upon its amateur designer, Sir Roger Norwich. It contains courts for the assizes and quarter sessions, and a suite of rooms well adapted for transacting the general business of the county. In the hall, the ceiling of which is richly decorated and ornamented, are portraits of King William III. and Queen Mary, Queen Anne, George I., and George II. This edifice is deservedly admired as a handsome specimen of the Corinthian order. The record-rooms, clerk of the peace and county treasurer's offices, recent erections, adjoin.

Borough Gaol and House of Correction.—This is a large, substantial, and imposing building, and perfectly characteristic, situated upon one of the highest points of the town—the Mounts. It was erected in 1845 from designs by Mr W. Hull, architect, and is constructed to receive 100 prisoners. The front is composed of a massive entrance arch and portcullis, surmounted with the royal arms carved in Bath stone, and the centre of the building is crowned by a lofty ventilating tower, in the Italian style. It contains ninety-four male and sixteen female cells, twenty airing-yards for male, and six airing-yards for female prisoners, with reception and punishment cells. It stands upon two acres of ground, within a boundary wall eighteen feet high; is entirely built of brick, and dressed with stone from the Duke of Devonshire's quarries at Cromford; and the cost of erection was £17,000. The site was given by the corporation. It is a model prison, the plan being of the same character as that at Pentonville; the cells are thirteen feet long, seven feet wide, and ten feet high, lighted with gas, and otherwise fitted up with all conveniences. Prisoners, after trial, are usually employed in the various trades of which they are members, whilst others are taught shoemaking, tailoring, &c.; and those for short periods are employed upon self-labour machines, which are worked by each prisoner in his cell. The female prisoners are employed, after conviction, in knitting, mending, and washing the prison linen; and silence is strictly enforced. The present staff of the prison consists of a governor; a chaplain, who is bound to devote one half of every day to the duties of the gaol; a trades' instructor; a schoolmaster; four wardens; and a night watchman. Divine service is performed in the chapel twice on Sundays, and there are prayers every morning. Mr George Arkesden is governor; Mrs Elizabeth Arkesden, matron; Rev. W. H. F. Robson, chaplain; and Mr Henry Terry, jun., surgeon.

The County Gaol, situated in St Giles' square, was rebuilt at an expense of £25,000, under the superintendence of Mr J. Milne, then the county architect. It was opened in July 1846, and will accommodate 150 prisoners. It is a spacious structure, with a bold, massive, and handsome front, and was built with the view of carrying into effect arrangements similar to those of the Pentonville model prison. The former prison, on the same site, was completed in 1796. The spot was before occupied by a large house built by Sir William Haselwood, and sold by him to the county magistrates. Previous to 1675, the remains of the castle served for a county prison and courts of justice. The building is composed of two wings, which form a right angle with each other, their point of junction affording a means by which the whole can be seen; the cells are thirteen feet one inch in length, six feet eleven inches in width, and nine feet eight inches in height from the floor to the crown of the arch; a water-closet and metal basin, supplied from a reservoir of water at the control of the prisoner, are in every cell; and there are twenty exercising-yards for the male prisoners arranged upon the radiating plan. The tread-wheel is used here, as well as the self-labour machines. The prisoners upon the tread-wheel are separated from each other by wooden partitions, each prisoner being on the wheel twenty minutes, and off the wheel resting five minutes. Silence is strictly enforced all through the prison. As various opinions have been entertained respecting the silent and separate system introduced of late years into our prisons, we here quote the opinion of the rev. chaplain of this gaol from his report to the justices assembled at the general quarter sessions in October 1847. "Now," says he, "that the separate system of imprisonment has been tried in this jail upwards of sixteen months, the inquiry may arise, whether further experience has in any degree modified the favourable opinion of it expressed in my last report. From what I have seen of its operation during the past year, the conviction is still more deeply impressed upon my mind that the separate system is calculated to produce the most beneficial results. If indeed it did no more than put a stop to the contamination of the old prisons—the propagation of vice—the instruction in crime—which were continually carried on under the old system, this alone would be an incalculable gain to society. Formerly, notwithstanding every endeavour to improve the character of the prisoners, jails were found to be establishments in which the younger and less practised among them were educated by the more experienced in the most clever and successful ways of committing crime; but the separate system not only stops at the fountain-head these streams of evil, by preventing the mutual intercourse of the inmates of the jail, but it exercises also an important influence for good over the mind and character of the prisoner who is placed under it. Instead of finding himself surrounded by companions who boast of their skill in crime, and in whose presence he feels in some sense obliged to maintain his credit for consistency in resisting good counsel and professing to despise punishment, he is separated from all evil associations, and left quietly to reflect upon the condition to which his crimes have brought him; he has time to consider the folly of those reasonings by which he used to encourage himself in his former ways; he attends daily at the service in the chapel, and hears the Word of God explained and enforced; he is visited in his cell by those who desire to direct his mind and judgment aright; the Bible, the Prayer-book, and other works of religious tendency are the companions of his leisure hours; and in many cases the result is, through the divine blessing, a reformation of character, and the prisoner returns to his home determined, by God's help, to lead a new life in time to come."

The chaplain performs service every morning in the chapel, giving an exposition of Scripture and reading prayers. There is a fair collection of books in the library, to which he allows all prisoners awaiting trial access; but when tried, he makes a distinction between those whose sentences are short and those whose sentences are for lengthened periods, by allowing the library books to be distributed to the latter, who have ample time to receive general instruction as well as the acquirement of scriptural knowledge; but denying to the former the use of any but religious books, with a view to their being, as it were, compelled to instruct themselves in scriptural truths. To all who are so ignorant as to require it, reading is taught; writing only to those who are well conducted; and to a few the rudiments of arithmetic are imparted. The routine of the prison duties, which we here insert, may not be considered uninteresting. Six o'clock A.M.—bell rings for prisoners to rise, dress, and sling their hammocks. Six o'clock to eight o'clock—cleans cells and corridors, &c. Eight o'clock—breakfast; officers to breakfast. Half-past eight o'clock—prisoners picking oakum; warder to breakfast. Five minutes to nine o'clock—officers muster to be inspected by the governor. Nine o'clock—chapel. Ten o'clock—return from chapel. Ten o'clock—bell for labour and exercise; twenty prisoners to tread-wheel and twenty to exercise. Eleven o'clock—return from tread-wheel and exercise to cell labour (picking oakum). Twelve o'clock—prisoners dine; officers dine, one remains on duty. One o'clock—officers return from dinner and collect the prisoners' tins; prisoners to cell labour. Two o'clock—some to tread-wheel and some to exercise, remainder at cell labour. Three o'clock—school. Four o'clock—cell labour. Six o'clock—supper. Prisoners allowed to read until half-past seven, when the bell rings for the hammock straps to be given out and hammocks to be slung. Quarter to eight o'clock—to prepare for bed. Eight o'clock—bed. Mr Benjamin Rust is governor, and has fourteen subordinate officers under him; the Rev. John Dreaper, M.A., is chaplain; and Dr Barr, surgeon.

The Borough Police Station (the old Borough Gaol) is situate in Fish street; there are four day and eight night cells for prisoners. The Borough Constabulary Force, which is excellent and efficient, consists of a chief-constable (Mr Henry Keenan), two inspectors, six sergeants, and thirty-five officers.

The County Constabulary Station is situate in Angel street. Headquarters and office in St Giles' square. The force stationed here consists of the chief-constable (Mr Henry L. Bayly), one clerk, two inspectors, one sergeant, two constables, and four reserve men.

Barracks.—The inhabitants of Northampton having petitioned Government in 1793 that barracks might be erected in the town, orders were given for building them with all convenient despatch, and the present range of compact stone barracks, situated near the northern extremity of the town, was finished in 1797, for the accommodation of 144 soldiers, 10 officers, and 124 horses. The situation is pleasant, the air pure, and the water excellent.

The Militia Stores, in Great Russell street, are of brick with Bath stone dressings, erected in 1859, at a cost of £7000, for the accommodation of twenty-one staff sergeants, whose dwellings are at the rear of the building, together with an hospital for twelve patients. Thomas Rose, late captain of the 15th Foot, is the adjutant.

The Northampton 4th and 5th Rifle Volunteer Corps were first embodied in 1860 and 1861 respectively, but were amalgamated on the 3d of January 1873 as the Northampton 3d Rifle Volunteers. The corps at present numbers 400 men of all ranks. William G. Hollis, captain commandant; George N. Wetton, Henry Cooper, George Turner, Joseph Muscott, captains; Richard Phipps, William Jackson, lieutenants; E. J. Rice, J. J. Houghton, ensigns; John Vince, sergeant-instructor.

The Northamptonshire Union Bank, in the Drapery, erected in 1841, is a much-admired building. It presents a very handsome front, with a lofty lower storey, surmounted by Grecian Corinthian columns, supporting an entablature and pediment of the same character. In the tympanum of the pediment is sculptured, in bold relief, the phoenix, which is the crest of the company. Mr E. F. Law was the architect.

Northamptonshire Banking Company, adjoining the Corn Exchange Buildings, in the Parade, is a substantial stone building erected in 1850.

The Gas Works, situated at the end of Augustine street, were erected pursuant to an Act of Parliament passed in 1823. The capital of the company is £64,000, raised in shares of £20 each. There are three large gasholders, two of 100 and one of 80 feet in diameter, capable of containing upwards of three quarters of a million cubic feet, also 170 retorts, and about 500 public lamps. The annual consumption of gas is 100,000,000 cubic feet, which sell at 4s. per 1000. Mr John Eunson, jun., is manager and engineer.

The Corn Exchange Buildings, in the Italian style, situated on the Parade, were erected in 1850 at a cost of upwards of £15,000, raised in shares of £20 each, and are occupied as shops and offices, and by the Mechanics' Institution. The corn-market, which is numerously attended, is now held in the hall, a noble and commodious building, 140 feet long, 65 feet wide, and 60 feet in height. Arthur B. Markham, Esq., is the secretary.

The Station of the Northampton and Peterborough Branch of the London and North-Western Railway is situate at Cotton end, in the parish of Hardingstone, immediately without the south bridge. This branch railway was opened on the 2d June 1845. The Castle Station, bottom of Maresfair, on the Market Harborough branch, was opened in 1859.

Midland Railway Station, St John's street, opened in 1872. This line was first opened in 1866, with a station at Cotton end, which is now used as a goods station.

Water Works.—The town was formerly supplied with water by means of an engine from the corner of the Cow meadow, opposite Thomas à Becket's Well. With reference to these works we find the following paragraph in the Northampton Mercury of December 7th, 1722: "This town having ever laboured under the misfortune of a scarcity of water (as the great conflagration about forty-six years ago, when the town was almost burnt to ashes, can too well testify), William Wykes, Esq., one of our late candidates (to verify his great veneration for us), undertook to supply us with that useful element from a place about half a mile distant from hence, which was thought impossible by many; but after the expense of some thousand pounds, and about nine months' time, it was happily effected by the force of an engine; and this day the pipes began to run, to the general satisfaction of the town; who thereupon immediately caused all the bells to ring, to show their joy and thankfulness, and to sound the praise of that worthy gentleman, for this his glorious and ever-memorable benefaction to the town, which has so dearly paid for the want of it." The old octangular conduit, built in 1478, of Gothic architecture, stood at the corner of All Saints' Churchyard and the Drapery, and, which it is to be regretted, was removed a few years since at the time of enclosing the churchyard with iron palisades. The present Water Company was formed in 1837, with a capital of £40,000, raised in shares of £10 each, which are now paying 10 per cent. interest. The reservoir, which is large, and to which several springs contribute, is at the east end of the town, near the Billing road, where there is also a steam-engine, by means of which the water is forced up to another large basin on the Mounts, the highest point of the town, and from thence conveyed through pipes to every part of the town. The water is excellent for all purposes. In order to meet the demand, which the supply was not equal to, the company lately sank an Artesian well to the depth of 130 feet, and then bored 27 feet deeper, when, in a layer of stone beneath a bed of clay, a very fine spring of water was discovered, which immediately rose in the shaft, at an average rate of an inch a minute, or by measure twenty gallons a minute, till it attained an altitude of 73 feet, at which it stands in the well, and yielding a body of water of 17,520 gallons. There have lately been erected two large reservoirs in the highest part of the town, which gives a pressure equal to 77 feet above the level of the Market Square. The company is governed by a board of six directors.

Wells.—At the east end of the town is a beautiful spring of translucent water, known as St Thomas à Becket's Well, rebuilt by the corporation in 1843 in the Early English style. A little below this once existed a medicinal spring, called Vigo, to commemorate the capture of the city of that name in 1719; but the supply of this water being lost, the fountain was removed to make the road more convenient. The Scarlet Well, at the north-west end of the town, is another fine spring of excellent water, over which a neat brick building was erected for its defence in 1837 by the late Mrs Kerr, widow of the late Dr Kerr. This spring has been celebrated at one time for its peculiar virtues. Morton says, "It is now distinguished for its ancient fame. Hither, according to the tradition of the town, the Londoners sent their clothes to be dyed scarlet, wherein this spring excelled, as they say, all others in the kingdom; but upon the discovery of the scarlet grain it became neglected, and has been so ever since."

The General Cemetery, opened July 18, 1847, is situated on the Billing road opposite the Lunatic Asylum, the grounds of which extend over a space of nine acres, and are laid out with great taste from designs by Mr Marnock of the Regent's Park Botanical Gardens, and divided according to the plan into 16,575 graves. On the east side of the grounds is a neat chapel in the Norman style, with catacombs for the dead beneath, and at the entrance a handsome lodge in the Elizabethan style, not yet finished. At the south-east corner a large public monument was erected in 1848 by the company, and which is 50 feet high; the base, which is octagonal, will be surrounded by tablets for the reception of inscriptions belonging to parties buried in the vicinity, and surmounted by a handsome structure in the Decorative style. The total number of interments up to 31st December 1871 was 8722. The total cost of the cemetery, including the ground, building, planting, &c., was £5250, which sum was raised by one thousand shares of five pounds each. By the deed of settlement of this company, burials are allowed to take place with such funeral service as the friends of the deceased prefer. The Rev. Joseph Brown is secretary, registrar, and chaplain ; Messrs Becke & Green, solicitors ; and Mr John Kightley, treasurer.

The Post Office, Abington street, is a substantial brick building with stone dressings, erected in 1872 at a cost of £5000.

COURTS OF LAW.—The Assizes are held in the County Hall about the latter end of February and the beginning of July, at which two of her Majesty's judges preside. When there are three assizes in the year, the third is held in the middle of December.

Quarter Sessions for the county are also held in the County Hall, generally the first week in January, 24th June, and 11th October. The Right Hon. George Ward Hunt, M.P., is chairman ; and H. M. Stockdale, Esq., vice-chairman.

The General Quarter Sessions for the borough are held in the Town Hall four times a year, and a special sessions in the same place just prior to the Spring Assizes, at which the recorder, J. Hibberd Brewer, Esq., presides.

The Borough Court of Pleas, or Court of Record, for the recovery of debts, and determining pleas to any amount. Cases are also tried at the Borough Quarter Sessions before the recorder.

Petty Sessions are held on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays in the Town Hall, at which two or more of the borough magistrates preside.

The County Court, for the recovery of debts under £50, is held once a month at the County Hall, and at all the principal towns in the county. John Becke, Esq., is treasurer to the circuits of this court, which embrace twenty-three towns.

The following are the parishes and hamlets comprised within the districts of the court :—

Abington, Althorpe, Billing Great, Billing Little, Boughton, Brafield-on-the-Green, Brington Great, Brington Little, Brixworth, Bugbrooke, Castle Ashby, Chapel Brampton, Church Brampton, Coaton, Cogenhoe, Cold Ashby, Collingtree, Cottesbrooke, Cotton End and Far Cotton, Courteenhall, Creaton Great, Creaton Little, Dallington, Denton, Draughton, Duston, East Haddon, Faxon, Gailsborough, Hackleton, Hanging Houghton, Hannington, Hardingstone, Harlestone, Harpole, Heyford Nether, Heyford Upper, Holcot, Holdenby, Horton, Houghton Great, Houghton Little, Kingsthorpe, Kislingbury, Lamport, Maidwell, Milton or Middleton Malzor, Moulton, Moulton Park, Northampton, Old or Wold, Piddington, Pitsford, Preston Deanery, Quinton, Ravensthorpe, Roade, Rothersthorpe, St James' End, Scaldwell, Spratton, Teeton, Thornby, Upton, Walgrave, Weston Favell, Whiston, Wootton, and Yardley Hastings.

CORPORATION, &C.—Northampton, as we have seen at a previous page, received a charter of incorporation from Henry II., which was confirmed in succeeding reigns, and modified and enlarged in the 36th of George III.

Under this Act the borough was governed until 1835, when a bill received the sanction of the Legislature for the "Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales ;" and by the provisions of this Act the old corporation of the borough was dissolved, and a new body established, which was vested in a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors. Under the authority of this Municipal Act, the borough was divided into three wards, called the east, south, and west wards, the burgesses of each ward electing six councillors, who retain their office for three years, but are eligible to be re-elected. A third of the council retire from office annually, and the vacancies are supplied by annual elections. The aldermen were formerly chosen out of the wealthier classes of citizens, and were ex officio justices of the peace. They are now appointed by the councillors, and during their appointment, which is six years, they are members of the council, possessing no power or authority above the councillors. The mayor is elected annually by the council, aldermen and councillors only being eligible. The justices of the peace now act under a commission from the Crown, and are a distinct body from the aldermen. The burgesses are inhabitant householders within the borough, or within seven miles of it, who have occupied premises rated to the relief of the poor during the year preceding the last day of August, and the whole of each of the two preceding years. The qualification of the councillors consists in the clear possession of property to the amount of £500, or being rated to the relief of the poor upon the annual value of £15; and the qualification of the aldermen is the same as that of the councillors. The arms of the town are gules on a mount vert, a tower triple towered, supported by two lions rampant, quadrant, or. The following is a list of the present corporation, borough magistrates, &c., for 1873 :—

Mayor—WILLIAM JONES, Esq.

Aldermen.	Councillors.	Borough Magistrates.
John Errington.	Joseph Gurney.	The Mayor and ex-Mayor.
Henry Smith.	Henry Marshall.	George Buxton.
John Macquire.	William Jones.	William Hensman.
J. M. Vernon.	Pickering Phipps.	William Hollis.
M. P. Manfield.	Edward Tuffley.	E. F. Law.
Wm. Collier.	William Dennis.	John Phipps.
	William Jeffery.	William Adkins.
	Richard Turner.	William Williams.
	James Wetherell.	Mark Dorman.
	Mark Dorman.	James Barry.
	James B. Norman.	Thomas Shepard.
	William J. Peirce.	J. B. Norman.
	John Watkin.	Charles Wickens, Clerk.

Borough Fund Account.—The funds of the corporation for the year ending 31st August 1872 amounted to £11,236, 7s. 1d. (exclusive of a balance due from the treasurer of £1979, 18s. 4d.), derived from rents, tolls, rates, &c. The borough rates of the parish of All Saints were £2638, 17s. 3d.; of the parish of St Giles, £1789, 3s. 4d.; St Sepulchre, £1803, 8s. 4d.; St Peter, £245, 14s. 8d.; St Andrew, £921, 14s. 9d.; making a total for the borough of £7398, 18s. 4d., less one rate at one penny in the pound (£389, 8s. 4d.) transferred to the museum account. The expenditure for the same year was £12,382, 14s. 9½d.; the principal items being the salaries, pensions, and allowances to municipal officers, £680, 10s. (including the mayor's salary for one year, £105, 5s; and the town clerk's salary, £250); the salaries, &c., of the police and constables, £3329, 7s. 3d.; the administration of justice, prosecutions, &c., £734, 17s. 10d.; the Borough Jail—salaries of officers, &c. (including that of the governor, £200; matron, £40; chaplain, £105; surgeon, £72; subsistence of prisoners, £605, 4s. 7d.; and work and repairs, £171, 13s. 6d.), £2289, 0s. 9½d. The expenses of the municipal election, £147, 10s. 9d.; Lunatic Asylum, £386, 10s. 3d.; School Board, £300; sanitary expenses, ordinary, £115, 1s. 11d.; do., extraordinary, £2040, 14s. 7d.; Gas Act, £118, 1s. 7d.; legal expenses, £101, 13s. 8d.; corporation buildings and estates, £830, 8s. 11d., &c.

The following are the names of the Mayors of Northampton under the new municipal regime :—

Charles Freeman,	1836	William Dennis,	1855
George Peach,	1837	Christopher Markham,	1856
do.	1838	William Thomas Higgins,	1857
Thomas Hagger,	1839	William Hensman,	1858
Thomas Sharp,	1840	William Roberts,	1859
William Williams,	1841	Edmund Francis Law,	1860
William Turner,	1842	Pickering Phipps,	1861
Edward Harrison Barwell,	1843	Henry Philip Markham,	1862
do.	1844	John Phipps,	1863
do.	1845	Mark Dorman,	1864
John Groom,	1846	Thomas Osborn,	1865
Thomas Sharp,	1847	James Barry,	1866
Joseph Wykes,	1848	Pickering Phipps,	1867
do.	1849	Jas. Berridge Norman,	1868
Francis Parker,	1850	Jno. Middleton Vernon,	1869
do.	1851	William Adkins,	1870
Thomas Hagger,	1852	Pickering Phipps Perry,	1871
Philadelphus Jeyes,	1853	Henry Marshall,	1872
William Williams,	1854	William Jones,	1873

The earliest entry is in 1421, in the reign of Henry V., when Richard Wemys was elected mayor. But one of the most interesting records is that of Lawrence Washington, Mayor of Northampton in 1533, and again in 1546, in the reign of Henry VIII. Two of Mr Washington's grandsons emigrated to Virginia about the year 1557, and became planters at Bridges' Creek in that province. The grandson of the younger married twice, and by the second wife had six children, the eldest of whom, born in 1732, was the celebrated George Washington, "the father of his country," and the first President of the United States of America. Most of his biographers, however, refer his ancestry to the north of England, but the town of Northampton very justly claims this distinction; and it is somewhat remarkable that Franklin, another distinguished name in American history, was born at Ecton, within six miles of this town.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT.—Northampton, as has been shown at page 103, has sent two representatives to Parliament since the 26th of Edward I. (1298). There have been several strong contests at parliamentary elections in Northampton, and a good deal of party spirit manifested; but, happily, this feeling is not so virulent at present; nor does it appear at all, when anything of a national, patriotic, or charitable object is brought forward: all petty quarrels are then forgotten, and the only emulation manifested is, who shall most conduce to the improvement of the public weal, the encouragement of charitable institutions, or be foremost in complying with the call for their benevolence. The present members of Parliament for the borough are Charles Gilpin, Esq., elected in 1857, and Lord Henley, in 1859. The mayor is the returning officer.

RECREATIVE AMUSEMENTS, &c.—The Victoria Promenade, or, as it was originally called, Vigo Paradise Walk or the New Walk, was made by the corporation in 1783. It was formerly ornamented with large poplars, which being considered dangerous, were cut down some years since, when the walk was extended further towards the river and along the verge of the site of the old town wall as far as Cow lane, and planted with young lime-trees at equal distances, which will form in time a noble sheltering avenue. This beautiful promenade, so advantageously situated, commanding the most picturesque views of the woods of Delapre, and the valley of the Nene, and partly surrounding the pasture called the Cow Meadow, is certainly a valuable acquisition to the inhabitants.

The promenade is now, however, interrupted by the new railway which crosses it, and the Cow Meadow is partly taken up by the New Cattle Market, which occupies a great portion of it.

The Race-Course, which is another source of recreation and amusement, extends over an area of 117 acres, on the north outskirts of the town, and is a part of the freemen's common. The Pytchley Hunt Races are held annually, about the 25th of March, at the close of the hunting season, and are now generally well attended: the course is ornamented with a handsome grand stand, and this great national sport has within the last thirty years been resuscitated from a lingering death to the front rank of provincial meetings. The Assemblies, which take place at this season, are held at the George Hotel, where there is a fine assembly-room, and the county assemblies during the winter are also held at the same place.

The Theatre, situated at the end of Gold street, in Marefair, is a plain building, erected in 1806; it is opened during the races, and occasionally at other seasons of the year. Robert Higgitt is the present lessee.

The Northampton County Cricket Club play on their ground on the race-course in front of the Grand Stand. His Excellency the Earl Spencer, president; H. O. Nethercote, Esq., and W. G. Hollis, Esq., vice-presidents. There are several cricket clubs in the town. All play and practise on the race-course, where as many as twenty to fifty wickets may be seen pitched at the same time, especially on Saturdays, when the clubs and players belonging to the various establishments turn out and literally cover the course—the juveniles and schools being well represented.

There are excellent Billiard-rooms at the George, Peacock, Angel, and Sultan hotels, which, with the subscription libraries at Messrs Abel & Son's, and Dorman's, the libraries and reading-rooms of the Mechanics' and other institutions, and the healthy and recreative enjoyment of several pleasant and picturesque walks in the vicinity, form an ample source of amusement to the inhabitants.

L

MARKETS AND FAIRS.—The Market Days are Wednesday and Saturday, the former for fruit and vegetables and fat stock, and the latter for corn, cattle, sheep, pigs, and all sorts of provisions. The provision market is held in the Market Square, and the Saturday market is very numerously attended.

THE NEW CATTLE MARKET.—This splendid market, situated in the Cow Meadow, on the south side of the town, was opened 17th July 1873, by the Right Hon. George Ward Hunt, M.P., president of the Northamptonshire Chamber of Agriculture, attended by the mayor and corporation in their robes of office, the borough and county members, and an immense concourse of spectators, including many of the nobility and gentry of the county.

The following is an abridgment from the Northampton Mercury, of 19th July 1873 :— The market occupies an area of five acres, three acres of which are only fitted up at present—the other two acres are enclosed, but remain as an open space for future extension of pens, &c; there are three approaches to it from different parts of the town. The principal entrance, which is on the north side, has two handsome lodges in front, one for offices, and the other a residence for the market attendant. Between these are two sliding gateways, each 20 feet wide, divided in the centre by a large pier, which is surmounted by a handsome gas standard. Inside to the right, on the west side, are the covered pig market and large beast shed; and behind these, close to the boundary wall, are the horse stand and horse run. The extreme left side, to the east, is wholly occupied with sheds for beasts. In the open area are the pens for beasts and sheep. The main road from the principal entrance on the north side, cuts right through the centre of the market to the southern extremity, and is 304 feet long by 25 feet wide. Running parallel with this are other roads of exactly the same length and width on the east and west, outside the pens, and bounded by the beast sheds and pig market. Crossing the main road, and terminating east and west, are also three roads, one in the centre, and one at the entrance and end of the market, north and south, 192 feet long and 25 feet wide. It will thus be seen that the most ready access may be obtained from all parts of the market. Between the pens there are also intersecting spaces or avenues for communication. All the roads have been made in the most durable manner. On a nine-inch covering of local stone, courses of stone and slag were laid; then a course of Hartshill granite, and finally of gravel. The ground-work of the pens is formed of blue brick, bedded in mortar, and grouted in Portland cement. In the sheep pens they are laid flat, as they are in the pig market, but in the beast pens they are laid on the edges, of a herring-bone pattern. The iron-work of the sheep pens is bedded in York stone. They are two feet eight inches high, of two different sizes, two-thirds of the entire number being ten feet by nine inches, and the remainder eighteen feet by ten inches. They occupy a total space of 128 feet by 90 feet, are divided into 244 pens, and afford accommodation for 5280 sheep.

The iron-work of the beast pens is of a much stouter description. The main pillars are 4 feet 8 inches high, and the pens 24 feet by 18 feet square, and 18 feet by 12 feet. They occupy a total space of 144 feet by 76 feet, are divided into 72 pens, and will afford space for 1296 head of cattle. The pig market is 208 feet by 30 feet, and is divided into 40 pens of similar construction to those for sheep, and will hold 500 pigs. There are a number of sheds for beasts and horses on the east and west sides, averaging 35 feet by 12 feet respectively. The beast sheds will accommodate about 150 animals, and the horse-sheds between 60 and 70. Loose horse-boxes are also provided at each corner of the market. The horse run on the east side, behind the pig market, is 382 feet by 62 feet. This has been formed with the greatest care, and is said to be one of the best features in the market: it was pitched first of all with local stone, nine inches thick ; then followed three inches of broken stone, a quantity of slag, and topped with three inches of sharp gravel. The horse tie, 304 feet long, is fixed in the west boundary wall ; the standing place between it and the run is 12 feet wide, and is pitched with four-inch granite cubes.

In the centre of the market is the large fountain constructed of Mansfield stone, with red granite polished columns. It stands nine feet high, and will throw a jet to an altitude of 15 to 20 feet. Six of Macfarlane's self-acting drinking troughs, from 25 to 30 feet long, are also placed at different points of the market. Gas is laid in, and posts for lamps are fixed both in the open and covered markets. Besides the principal entrance at the north, there are also entrances from the east and west. The latter communicates with the new road which has been formed from Bridge Street, and as this is one of the chief entrances, a toll collector's office has been erected at the gates. The north-east shed is to be fitted up as a refreshment room, for the exclusive use of those attending the market, and will be closed after market hours. The market was erected pursuant to an Act of Parliament which received the royal assent on the 20th June 1870, and which gave the corporation borrowing powers to the amount of £40,000. The market, it was thought, would not cost half that sum, but the original estimate has been greatly exceeded. Mr E. F. Law was the architect, and Mr R. Dunkley, of Blisworth, the contractor. Mr Dunkley's estimate for the construction of the market was £13,888, including £2444 for new roads, iron fences, &c., and the whole estimated cost, exclusive of the site, is about £25,000.

The fairs are on the second Tuesday in January, February 20th, third Monday in March, April 5th, May 4th, June 19th, August 5th and 26th, September 19th, first Thursday in November, 28th of the same month, and December 19th. That of the 19th of September is usually called the cheese fair. A wool fair is held the latter part of June or beginning of July. The market gardens in the vicinity of the town are very extensive, and famed for the production of excellent asparagus and brocoli, and supply some of the principal markets in the kingdom with the former article.

Bills of Mortality.—An ancient custom prevailed here until 1871 of presenting annually to the mayor, "and the rest of the worthy inhabitants of the town of Northampton," a printed bill of mortality of the town, to which the register of births had been prefixed. The bill closes with an admonitory piece of poetry, set in skulls, bones, and hour-glasses, to which Moore, Wordsworth, and other eminent poets have each contributed in their time, and is addressed to the inhabitants who have not quitted "the Nen's barge-laden wave." Cowper graphically describes his first interview with the clerk of All Saints, who usually published the annual "bill," in a letter addressed to his friend Lady Hesketh. "On Monday last," writes Cowper, "Sam brought me word that there was a man in the kitchen who desired to speak with me. I ordered him in. A plain, decent, elderly figure made his appearance, and being desired to sit, spoke as follows :—'Sir, I am clerk of the parish of All Saints, in Northampton, brother of Mr Cox, the upholsterer. It is customary for the person in my office to annex to a bill of mortality, which he publishes at Christmas, a copy of verses. You would do me a great favour, sir, if you would furnish me with one.' To this I replied, 'Mr Cox, you have several men of genius in your town, why have you not applied to some of them? There is a namesake of yours in particular, Cox, the statuary, who every body knows is a first-rate maker of verses. He surely is the man of all the world for your purpose.' 'Alas! sir, I have heretofore borrowed help from him, but he is a gentleman of so much reading, that the people of our town cannot understand him.'" Seven successive years, from 1787 to 1793, Cowper good-naturedly placed his muse at the service of John Cox, and his successor in office, who came with a "commendatory letter from Joe Rye," thus referring to his first contribution :—"It is pretty well known (the clerk took care it should be so), both at Northampton and in this county, who wrote the mortuary verses. All that I know of their success is, that he sent a bundle of them to Maurice Smith, of Olney, who sold them for threepence a piece,—a high price for a memento mori, a commodity not generally in great request."

WORTHIES.—Amongst the eminent men who occupy niches in the Northampton Temple of Fame, or were famed for their piety, literary attainments, or proficiency in the arts and sciences, and who were born and flourished here, we find the following :—

Richard and Adam of Northampton, natives of this town, were both advanced to the episcopal see of Ferns, in Ireland ; the first in 1282, and the second in 1322.

John of Northampton, or, according to his Latin name, Joannes Avonius, a Carmelite friar, and author of a work entitled, "The Philosopher's Ring," a sort of perpetual almanac, which was esteemed a masterpiece of that age, was a native of Northampton, and lived about the year 1340.

William Beaufu, a Carmelite friar, wrote a "Lecture of Lentinus," &c., and translated several works from French to Latin. He died in this his native town, and was buried in his monastery in 1390.

Samuel Parker, the son of a shopkeeper at Northampton, who, after practising as a Puritanical minister for eleven years at Lydde in Kent, became an Anabaptist, and zealously inculcated the tenets of that sect ; like a true enthusiast, he also published several pamphlets to promulgate his sentiments and doctrines. The Quakers having attracted his attention, and presenting to his imagination some novelty, he next adopted their creed, and advocated their cause. After the restoration of King Charles the Second, he held a conventicle in London, for which he was imprisoned in Newgate, but obtaining his release, retired to Hackney, where he died of the plague, in October 1665.

Dr Samuel Parker, Bishop of Oxford, was born in 1640, and received the first rudiments of his education in this town. In the early part of his life he espoused the cause of the Puritans, but soon deserted them, and zealously advocated the Church of England doctrines. In 1665, he published a work called "Textamina," and was also the author of "A History of his Own Times," which was printed in Latin and English. He was made a privy councillor, and advanced to the Bishopric of Oxford, by King James II., and died in 1687.

William Shipley, a native of Northampton, was projector of the Society of Arts and Manufactures ; and Fletcher, the celebrated dramatist, was a native of the town.

Dr Thomas Cartwright, Bishop of Chester, was also a native of Northampton, and, as has been already shown, was educated at the Grammar School here. He gradually advanced himself in the Church, and was progressively appointed Vicar of Waltham-Stow, in Essex ; Domestic Chaplain to Henry Duke of Gloucester ; Doctor of Divinity ; Prebendary of Twyford, in the Cathedral of St Paul's, London ; Minister of St Thomas Apostle, London ; Dean of Ripon ; and next, Bishop of Chester. King James the Second afterwards made him one of the ecclesiastical commissioners, and on the death of Seth Ward, Bishop of Salisbury, appointed him Titular Bishop of that see ; following his royal master to Ireland, he died there in 1689, and was buried in Christ Church, Dublin. Several of his sermons, and a speech spoken at Magdalen College, Oxford, are in print.

Robert Brown, the founder of the Brownists, was a native of this town ; according to Collier, he was the son of Anthony Brown of Tolthorpe, in Rutlandshire, a member of an ancient family, and was nearly allied to the Lord Treasurer, Cecil. After having studied divinity in the University of Cambridge, he became a schoolmaster in Southwark. He was, however, destined to act a more prominent character on the stage of life, and instead of teaching youth the rudiments of language, he undertook to instruct adults in what he deemed the true principles of religion. He therefore determined to preach and practise a new system ; and accordingly, about the year 1580, "he began to inveigh with intemperate vehemence and ardour against the discipline and ceremonies of the Church of England." In 1582, he published "A Treatise on the Reformation," "A Treatise upon the 23d Chapter of Matthew," and "A Book which Showeth the Life and Manners of all True Christians." He was much persecuted by the established prelates, and wandered up and down the country ; he was committed to more than thirty prisons, in some of which "he could not see his hand at noonday;" and enduring great hardships, went at length to live at Northampton. Here he was industriously labouring to establish his sect, when he was cited to appear before the Bishop of Peterborough. Having refused to obey the citation, he was excommunicated. This last stroke produced such an effect upon his mind that he was induced about 1590, at the instance probably of his noble kinsman, to accept the rectory of Achurch, in this county. "His parsonage," says Fuller, "he freely possessed, allowing a sufficient salary for one to discharge the cure; and though against them in his judgment, was contented, and perchance pleased, to take the title of his own parish." Thus was he the founder of a religious sect, and the first apostate from its ranks. He lived, according to Fuller, to the age of eighty, and died the first rate-martyr; for having opposed the payment of some parish rate, he was arrested and conveyed to Northampton gaol, in a bed in a cart, where he soon sickened, and died in 1630.

Rev. James Hervey, author of the "Meditations amongst the Tombs," was educated at the Grammar School at Northampton.

George Baker, Esq., the learned antiquarian, who died on the 12th October 1851, published in 1822, but it is much to be regretted only in part, "The History and Antiquities of the County of Northampton," a work of great merit.

Miss Ann Elizabeth Baker, sister of the above, who died in 1861, was the authoress of "Words and Phrases of Northamptonshire," and assisted her brother considerably in his history of the county.

CHARITIES.—The amount of bequests belonging to the poor, &c., of Northampton, and the hundred in which it is situated, is specified at a subsequent page.

PRODUCTION OF IRON.—(See also Geology p. 9).—The returns made to the Mining Record Office show that in the year 1871, 21,948 tons of iron ore were produced in Cornwall; 14,125 tons in Devonshire; 32,884 tons in Somersetshire; 207,599 tons in Gloucestershire; 159,894 tons in Wiltshire; 28,330 tons in Oxfordshire; 779,314 tons in Northamptonshire; 290,673 tons in Lincolnshire; 415,972 tons in Shropshire; 34,075 tons in Warwickshire; 1,513,080 tons in North Staffordshire; 705,665 tons in South Staffordshire; 493,973 tons in Derbyshire; 931,048 tons in Lancashire; 1,302,704 tons in Cumberland; 4,581,901 tons in the North Riding of Yorkshire, and 407,997 tons in the West Riding; 285,296 tons in Northumberland and Durham; 51,887 tons in North Wales; 969,714 tons in South Wales and Monmouthshire; 75 tons in the Isle of Man; 3,000,000 tons in Scotland; 107,734 tons in Ireland. The total iron ore production of the United Kingdom, of which returns were received, amounted, therefore, to 16,334,874 tons, of the value of £7,670,572. To this quantity may be added 200,000 tons of burnt ore from cupreous pyrites, and 324,175 tons of iron ore imported, bringing the total quantity smelted up to 16,859,064 tons. There were 673 furnaces in blast—namely, 429 in England, 117 in Wales, 127 in Scotland. There were 6,627,179 tons of pig iron produced in Great Britain in 1871—4,379,370 tons in England, 1,086,800 tons in Wales, 1,160,000 tons in Scotland. This total, estimated at the mean average price at the place of production, would have a value of £16,667,947. There were 34,165 tons of pig iron made in Northumberland, 759,244 tons in Durham, 1,029,885 tons in the North Riding of Yorkshire, and 114,549 tons in the West Riding; 270,485 tons in Derbyshire, 520,359 tons in Lancashire, 336,569 tons in Cumberland, 129,467 tons in Shropshire, 268,300 tons in North Staffordshire, 725,716 tons in South Staffordshire, 60,512 tons in Northamptonshire, 30,122 tons in Lincolnshire, 99,997 tons in Gloucestershire, Wiltshire, and Somersetshire; 510,087 tons in Glamorganshire, 470,982 tons in Monmouthshire, 41,893 tons in Denbighshire, 30,086 tons in Brecknockshire, 34,761 tons by anthracite furnaces in South Wales. The list of mills and forges at work in Great Britain in 1871 includes 267 works, and shows 6841 puddling furnaces and 866 rolling mills. There were 19 works in Great Britain having Bessemer converters in 1871; the number of converters at these works varied from 2 to 18, and the capacity of the converters from 3 to 10 tons. It is estimated that there were 2,393,293 boxes of tin, terne, and black plates made in the United Kingdom in 1871.

NORTHAMPTON DIRECTORY.

POST, MONEY-ORDER, & TELEGRAPH OFFICE, & SAVINGS BANK—

14 Abington Street. Mr EDWIN RIGHTON CARTER, Postmaster.

There are three town deliveries, — namely, 7 A.M., 10.30 A.M., and 5.45 P.M. The wall letter-boxes and receiving-houses are cleared as follow :— The receiving-houses in Regent Square and Marefair at 12 noon and 7 P.M. on week days only, and the letter-boxes, which are in Abington Square, Billing Road, Bridge Street, Drapery, Kingsthorpe Road, London and North-Western Railway Station, St James' End, Waterloo, and Wellingborough Road, are cleared at 8.30 A.M., 12 noon, and 7 and 9.30 P.M., and on Sunday at 7 P.M. The savings bank, money-order, and insurance business, is transacted daily from 9 A.M. to 6 P.M., except on Saturdays, when orders, &c., may be obtained until 8 P.M. The telegraph office is open from 7 A.M. to 10 P.M. on week days, and from 7 A.M. to 10 P.M. on Sundays. The London mails are despatched at 7.10 A.M., 9.40 A.M., 12.15 P.M., 1.25 P.M., 10 P.M. (night mail). To the North of England, Ireland, Scotland, and Birmingham (day mail), 7.10 A.M. Liverpool and Manchester, North of England, Ireland, and Scotland (night mail) 7.50 P.M. To Coventry, Towcester, Daventry, Leamington, Weedon, &c., 7.10 A.M. Birmingham, Rugby, West of England, and South Wales (night mail), 9 P.M. Bedford, Bletchley, Newport Pagnel, and Stony Stratford, 10 P.M. Thrapston, Wellingborough, Kettering, and Leicester, 8.30 A.M., 4 P.M., 6.45 P.M., 11.35 A.M. Derby, Leicester, Kettering, Market Harborough, Stamford, 7.50 P.M. On Sundays to and from all parts at 10 A.M. The office closes at 10 P.M.

The following ALPHABETICAL arrangement, being a new feature in the Directory of Northampton, will, it is hoped, be of great importance, embracing as it does the names and addresses of all the principal inhabitants, including clerks, journeymen, &c. This arrangement is given in the order of surnames. The firms to which partners belong are given in parenthesis, with the residence of each partner. This will be followed by another arrangement classified under the Heads of Trades and Professions.

The CONTRACTIONS used are such as are readily understood. Those most frequently used are the usual abbreviations for Christian names, the others are pl. for place ; ct. for court ; st. for street ; sq. for square ; ln. for lane ; h. or hs. for house ; rd. for road ; gt. for gate ; bdg. for bridge ; bldgs. for buildings, &c.

ABBEY WILLIAM, shoemaker, 3 College street
Abbott Charles, j. Semilong
Abbott Edwin, clicker, 4 William street
Abbott Jph. Mead, corn, &c. dlr. 13 College st.
Abel & Sons, booksellers, stationers, and piano-forte warehouse, 9 Parade
Abel Mrs Elizabeth 17 Langham place
Abel Isaac, shoemaker, 38 Wellingborough rd.
Abel Philip (Abel & Sons), 9 Parade
Abell Edw. relieving-officer for Sts Giles', Andrew's, and Sepulchre's, 8 Pytchley street
Abington House School (Kingston & Phillips, principals), Abington street

Abraham Phil. fried-fish dealer, 7 Horse mkt.
Abraham Rt. & Son (Esau), pwkr. Kettering rd.
Abraham Isaac, pork butcher, Crane street
Abraham James, pawnbroker and grindery dealer, 61 Grafton street
Abram Robert, j. cutter, 15 Grafton street
Acklam James Leighton, collector of inland revenues, h. St Martin's villa, Billing road
Acton Robert, marine store dealer, 4 Broad st.
Adams Fred. shopkeeper, 43 Lawrence st.
Adams Hy. shopkeeper, 128 Scarletwell st.
Adams James, shoe manufacturer, leather seller and grindery dealer, 22 Mayorhold

Adams James, carpenter, &c. 36 Palmerston rd.
 Adams John, shopkeeper, 10 Upper mounts
 Adams Mrs Sarah, laundress, 26 Inkerman ter.
 Adams Thomas, baker, &c. 39 Mount street
 Adamson Francis Charlton, draper's asst. 21 Victoria road
 Addington Jesse, pork butcher, 9 Abington sq.
 Adkins William, Esq. J. P. Springfield
 Admitt Charles, foreman tailor, 39 College st.
 Admitt Erskine, shopkeeper, 42 Marefair
 Admitt Samuel, greengrocer, 45 Bath street
 Adson Edmund, shopkpr. 23 Wellington st.
 Adson Mrs Mary, 13 Sawpit lane
 Ager Mrs Emma, 27 Freehold street
 Ager Mrs Sarah, 20 St Edmund's street
 Ager Thomas, shopkeeper, 3 Fish street
 Ager Thomas, j. currier, 17 Vernon terrace
 Ager William Clerke, clicker, 9 Freehold st.
 Agutter Edw. pork butcher, 62 Horse market
 Ainge James, shoe manuf. 62 Lower mounts
 Ains Frederick James, clerk, 27 Victoria rd.
 Albion Henry, toy dealer, 35 Scarletwell st.
 Alden Joseph, clicker, 12 Broad street
 Alderman Edw. shoemaker, 40 Bearward st.
 Alderman Frederick, beerhouse, 26 The Green
 Alderman Samuel, clerk, 21 Vernon terrace
 Alderman Wm. boot, &c. mkr. 76 Bridge st.
 Aldridge Arthur, j. shoemkr. 58 Kettering rd.
 Aldridge Hy. vict. Prince of Wales, 7 Augustn. st.
 Allard Fred. vict. White Lion, Kingsthorpe rd.
 Allard James, fishmonger, 6 Crispin street
 Allchin Wm. & Son, engineers, millwrt. boiler makers, iron and brass foundry, Globe works
 Allchin Hy. engineer's assist. 25 Pytchley st.
 Allchin William (& Son), h. 27A Newland
 Allchin Wm. Loader (& Son), h 10 Albion cres.
 Allen Charles, costermonger, 5 Fish street
 Allen Mrs Elizabeth, St James' end
 Allen Francis, machine closer, 22 Albert st.
 Allen Fred. warehouseman, 2 Kettering rd. §
 Allen George, jun. clicker, 37 Denmark road
 Allen George, milliner, &c. 54 Abington st.
 Allen Hy. hairdr. and newsagt. 47 Bearward st.
 Allen John, shoe manufacr. 16 St Andrew's st.
 Allen Jph. marine store dealer, 15 Silver st.
 Allen Joseph, manager, 42 Newland
 Allen Philip, brewer (Coales & Allen), house, Hardingstone
 Allen Robert, bricklayer, 3 Upper Priory st.
 Allen Miss Sophia, 36 Deal street
 Allen Thomas, plumber and gasfitter, &c. 47 St Giles' street
 Allibone Thomas, j. joiner, 22 Park street
 Allibone Wm. shopkeeper, 33 Melbourne st.
 Alliston Alfred, j. shoemaker, 69 Bailiff street
 Alliston Arthur, machine closer, 2 Lorne rd.
 Alliston Edgar, j. shoemaker, 29 Lawrence st.
 Allwright Jesse, draper, &c. 21 Gold street
 Allum William, carpenter, St James' end
 Alsop Edward, j. painter, 39 Kerr street
 Alsop Frederick, clicker, 8 Victoria street
 Alsop Geo. plumber and beerh. 2 Bellbarn st.
 Alsop Ths. plumber, painter, &c. 40 Silver st.
 Ambidge George, butcher, 67 Grafton street
 Ambidge Jph. Benedict, btchr. 63 Primrose hill
 Amerson Wm. shopkpr. and beerh. 39 Marefair
 Amherst Right Rev. Francis Kerril, D.D. Lord Bishop of Northampton, Bishop's house, Leicester road
 Ancell, Edw. j. carpenter, 21 Palmerston road
 Anderson Henry Thomas, teacher of drawing, 14 St George's terrace

Anderton James, leather dresser, and cow-keeper, 2 St James street
 Andrew Wm. shopkeeper, 43 Wellington st.
 Andrews Alfred, shoe mf. 91 Wellingboro' rd.
 Andrews Alpheus, prof. music, 80 Abington st
 Andrews Miss Harriet, school, 80 Abington st
 Andrews John William, shoe manufacturer (Spencer & Andrews), 5 St Peter's gardens
 Andrews Robert, clothes dealer, 24 Bath st.
 Ansell Jas. vict. Bird in Hand, 4 Regent sq.
 Aplin Colonel John Guise Rogers, 1 Albion pl.
 Arch Thos. shopkeeper, 140 Kettering road
 Archer Henry, greengrocer, 56 Abington st.
 Archer Mrs Mary, rent collector, 51 Bull lane
 Archer Wm. painter, 50 Wellingborough road
 Arias Thomas, grocer's assist. 40 Lorne road
 Arkesden George, governor of Borough gaol
 Arlidge Alfred, clicker, 16 Freehold street
 Arlidge Thomas, printer, proprietor, and publisher of Northampton Albion, 5 St Giles' st.
 Armitth Arthur, chemist, 37 Abington street
 Armitth Henry, secretary to water works; house, 14 Vernon terrace
 Armstrong Mrs Eliza, 8 Leicester terrace
 Arnold Edw. com. traveller, 24 Denmark road
 Arnold Rev. Thos. (Baptist), 21 Primrose hill
 Arnaby Frank, clicker, 12 Freehold street
 Ash Mrs Matilda, fishmonger, 2 Regent square
 Ashby Mrs Ann, shopkeeper, 43 Lorne road
 Ashby Edward, riveter, 11 Stockley street
 Ashby Fred. shopkpr. 155 Wellingborough rd.
 Ashby George, j. currier, 5 Albert street
 Ashby Isaac, j. shoemaker, 28 Augustine st.
 Ashby Joseph, Peasnall, butcher, 18 Newland
 Ashby Samuel, leather agent, 7 Leicester ter.
 Ashdown & Cogan, surgeons, 50 Sheep street
 Ashdown George (A. & C.), 50 Sheep street
 Ashdowne Mrs Emma Harriet, 23 York parade
 Ashford Evan Chas. chemist, 24 Gold street and 32 Horse market.
 Ashmead Mr George, 40 Lawrence street
 Ashton David, shoemaker and shopkeeper, 46 Woolmonger street
 Ashton Fred. butcher, 20 Horseshoe street
 Ashton Geo. Coles, musician, 35 Park street
 Ashton Mrs Margt. lodgings, 30 Greyfriars' st.
 Askew Thomas, butcher, 5 Gold street; house, 2 St Katharine's terrace
 Aspinall Mrs Eliz. lodgings, 21 Pytchley st.
 Atkins Benjamin, 35 Newland
 Atkins George, clerk, 9 Albion place
 Atkins Henry John, carver and gilder, picture frame maker, printseller, and artists' colourman, 26 Abington street
 Atkins William Thomas, commercial traveller, 21 Denmark road
 Atkinson George, beerhouse, 29 Grafton st.
 Atkinson Wm. designer, 8 Albion place
 Attack Jacob, hosier and haberd. 10 Sheep st.
 Attack Mrs Sarah, dressmr, 12 Greyfriars' st.
 Auckland Thomas, ins. agent, 49 Denmark rd.
 Auld Mrs Mary Ann, 16 Kerr street
 Austin Jno. coal dealer, 116 Wellingboro' rd.
 Austin Jno. Ths. draper's assist. 2 St George's st.
 Austin John, j. carpenter, 12 Harold street
 Austin Miss Clara, school, 64 Abington street
 Austin Robert, dyer, 5 Black Lion hill
 Ayre Henry Mills, chemist and druggist, 43 Gold street

BACCHUS EDMUND, pork butcher, 80 Bridge st.
 Baden and Westall, school, 2 Spencer parade

NORTHAMPTON DIRECTORY.

Elizabeth (Baden and Westall),
 parade
 Mail Mrs Susan, milliner, 44 Marefair
 Bailey Chas. vict. Red Lion, 20 Horse market
 Bailey Rev. George (Baptist), 35 Greyfriars' st.
 Bailey Henry, j. painter, 3 King street
 Bailey Joseph, bootmaker, 54 Marefair
 Bailey Samuel, j. leather cutter, 14 King st.
 Baker Charles, painter, 5 Park street
 Baker George, riveter, 27 Lawrence street
 Baker Hy. beerh. and shopkr. 71 Horse mkt.
 Baker Thomas, tailor, Crane street
 Baker William, shopkeeper and beerhouse, 14
 Regent street
 Baldwin George, coal merchant, Midland station, and beerhouse, 175 Bridge street
 Baldwin Thomas, timber merchant, 197 Bridge street; h. 24 St James' street
 Baile John, beerhouse, 49 Horse market
 Ball Chas. Thos. leather and grindery dealer and boot upper manufacturer, 7 Bearward st.
 Ball Mrs Eliza, 69 Newland
 Ball Mr Joseph, 52 Waterloo
 Ball Thomas, agricultural implement maker,
Wellington Works, 4 Wellington place.
 Ball Wm. shopkeeper, 32 Scarletwell street
 Ball William, machine closer, 29 York street
 Ball William, beerhouse, Bailiff street
 Ballentine Thomas, manager, 93 Bailiff st.
 Bamford Dan. j. shoemkr. 120 Up. Thrift st.
 Bamford Wm. greengrocer, 70 Woolmonger st.
 Banks John, plasterer, &c. 40 Abington street
 Banks Joseph, 20 St George's place
 Banks Wm. joiner and builder, 12 Welling-
 borough road
 Bannister Joseph, dyer, 149 Bridge street
 Barber & Sons, house and estate agents, 45
 College street
 Barber John (Barber & Sons), h. 19 Freehold st.
 Barber Samuel (Barber & Sons), 45 College st.
 Barber Thomas, shopkeeper, 69 Lorne road
 Barber Wm. shopkeeper, 108 Kettering road
 Barford Valentine Thomas, ironmonger, 1
 Market sq.; h. 30 Albion ter. Waterloo
 Barker Mrs Ann, shopk. & beerh. 23 Sawpit ln.
 Barker Mrs Charlotte, 9 Wood street
 Barker Edward, greengrocer, 128 Bridge st.
 Barker George, fishmonger, 43 Hope's place
 Barker James, draper and grocer, 143 Wellingborough rd. and drpr. &c. 12 Abington ter.
 Barker John, baker, &c. 32 Leicester street
 Barker John, greengrocer, 13 Regent square
 Barker Jph. vict. Recruiting Serjeant, 31 St
 Giles' street
 Barker Samuel, letter carrier, 19 Pytchley st.
 Barker Mr William, 8 William street
 Barker Wm. organ builder, 50 Horse market
 Barkway Edward, jobbing gardener, 82 Upper Thrift street
 Barnard James, tailor, woollen draper, hosier and hatter, 19 Gold street; house, Beaumont villa, Billing road
 Barnard Philip Puttrell, tailor, hatter, and hosier, 7 Drapery
 Barnard Steph. j. last maker, 19 Inkerman ter.
 Barnard William, j. 24 Commercial street
 Barnard William, water-rate col. h. Alfred st.
 Barnes & Peckover, leather sellers, 6 Newland
 Barnes Joseph & Son (Samuel), marine store dealers, 5 Kingswell street
 Barnes Charles, bank porter, 25 Inkerman ter.
 Barnes Chas. station-master, Midland station

Barnes Geo. vict. Black Lion, 19 St Giles' st.
 Barnes John, hairdresser, 8 Wellington pl.
 Barnes Thos. (Barnes & Peckover); house,
 41 College street
 Barnes Mr Thomas, 9 Primrose hill
 Barnes Wm. Jph. compositor, 52 Denmark rd.
 Barnett Thornton, com. trav. 55 Denmark rd.
 Barnsley William, file cutter, 43 Cow lane
 Barr & Spurgin, surgeons, 45 Abington street
 Barr Wm. Alex. M.D. (Barr & Spurgin), 45
 Abington street
 Barratt Wm. Edwd. confectioner, 39 Gold st.
 Barratt Wm. j. shoemaker, 88 Up. Thrift st.
 Barrett Mrs Elizabeth, school, 67 Vernon st.
 Barrett Mrs Sarah, dressmkr. 60 Horse mkt.
 Barrit William, butcher, 1 St Giles' street
 Barritt Michl. machn. closer, 62 Wellingboro' rd.
 Barron Mr James, 29 Greyfriars' street
 Barron Mrs Rebecca, shopkeeper, 3 Maple st.
 Barry James, J.P. chemist & drugg. 2 Parade
 Barton Benjamin, j. shoemaker, Victoria road
 Barton Wm. & Robt. shoe mfrs. 12 Quart Pot ln.
 Barton Robert (W. & R.), h. 8 Hester street
 Barton Wm. (W. & R.), house, Billing road
 Bartram, Mr Robert, 1 Adelaide terrace
 Barwell Jas. furniture, &c. dealer, 21 College st.
 Baseley Charles, rate col., 44 Grt. Russell st.
 Baseley George, 'bus driver, 6 Robert street
 Baseley John, butcher, 36 Horse market
 Baseley Wm. gunmkr. 11 Wellingborough rd.
 Bass George & Son (Geo. jun.), watchmakers and opticians, 59 Sheep street
 Bass George, shoe manufacturer, 3 Albert street; house, 12 Princess street
 Bass John, coal dealer, 87 Scarletwell street
 Bass John, j. shoemaker, 59 Lorne road
 Bassett Absalom, engineer and boilermaker,
 18 Kingswell street
 Bassford Benjamin, shopkeeper and beer-house, 40 Compton street
 Bastick Samuel, manager, 5 Market square
 Bastick Wm. Hy. hatter, 5 Market sq. & Le'ster
 Bateman Mrs Mary, 25 Lawrence street
 Bates James, newsagent, &c. 3 Bridge street
 Bates John, fish dealer, 7 Horsehoe street
 Bates John, news vendor, 16 Drapery
 Bates Mrs Mary, greengr. 157 Wellingboro' rd.
 Bates Samuel, butcher, 28 Raglan street
 Baxter Mrs Sarah, basketmaker, 42 Bridge st.
 Baxter Wm. basketmaker, 23 College street
 Bayes George, riveter, 56 Kettering road
 Bayes Richd. chimney sweep, 19 Silver street
 Bayley John, clerk, 2 Victoria road
 Bayley John, clerk, 31 Alexandra road
 Bayley Joseph, M.R.C.S. medical superintendent of lunatic asylum, Billing road
 Bayliss Mrs Hannah, lodgings, 14 Harrison rd.
 Bayly Henry Lambert, chief constable of county police, St Giles' square
 Bayner George, baker, &c. 27 Bouverie street
 Bazeley Mrs Charlotte, dressm. 8 Greyfriars' st.
 Bazeley Geo. wheelwrt. & blacksth. Mayorhold
 Bazeley Uriah, brewery clerk, 12 Albion cres.
 Beal Thomas, shoe closer, 39 Lawrence street
 Beal William, groom, 11 York terrace
 Beardmore William, joiner and builder, 18
 Albert street; house, 27 Wood street
 Beasley John, steward to Earl Spencer, 12
 St Giles' street; ho. Chapel Brampton
 Beasley Joseph, clicker, 83 Bailiff street
 Beasley Thomas, saddler, 4 George row
 Beattie George, policeman, 31 Lawrence street

- Beck Thos. grocer, &c. 60 Great Russell st.
 Becke & Green, solicitors, 20 Market square
 Becke Charles Cecil, solicitor and borough coroner, 20 Market sq.; house, Billing road
 Becke John (Becke & Green), house, The Cedars, Billing road
 Beckwith George, coal dealer, 60 Grafton st.
 Bedford Isaac, town missionary, 4 Vernon ter.
 Beeby James, j. shoemaker, 7 Lawrence st.
 Beeby Thomas, shoemaker, 39 Kettering road
 Beeby Thos. Law. j. shoemkr. 39 Bird's piece
 Beeby William Geo. timber merchant (Ward & Beeby), Cotton end
 Beesley John, shopkr. 58 Wellingborough road
 Beeton Mr James, 66 St George's street
 Begley Matthias, chimneysweep, 20 Regent sq.
 Bell Mrs Ann, 26 Wellington place
 Bell Edward, shopkeeper, 11 College street
 Bell John H. house surgeon, lunatic asylum,
 Billing road
 Bell Wm. Henry, com. trav. 4 Alexandra rd.
 Bellamy Isaac, warehouseman, 9 Woodford st.
 Belchambers Jos. shoemaker, St James' end Belton George, monumental, marble, and stone mason, 173 Bridge street
 Belton Henson, warehouseman, Victoria road
 Belton Jas. Fairchild, beerhouse, 171 Bridge st.
 Belton John, hairdresser, 10 Abington street
 Benford Benj. clothes dealer, 77 Horse market
 Benford James, 21 St George's place
 Bennett Mrs Elizabeth, beer retailer, 44
 Wellingborough road
 Bennett Geo. j. stonemason, 16 Palmerston rd.
 Bennett James, baker, shopkeeper, and beer-house, 52 Bath street
 Bennett Samuel Pratt, stock and share broker,
 Exchange buildings; h. 1 St George's st.
 Benson Henry, blocker, 22 Vernon terrace
 Bentley Thomas, collector in dispensary, 29
 Pytchley street
 Berridge James, tobacconist, 98 Bridge street
 Berridge William, leather and grindery dealer,
 47 Crispin street
 Berrill & Thornton, hairdressers, 6 Mercer's row
 Berrill Alfred Edward, clothier, hosier, &c.
 10 Abington terrace
 Berrill Mr Edward, 28 York street
 Berrill Frederick, grainer and writer, 30
 Lower mounts
 Berrill Mrs Mary (Berrill & Thornton), house,
 20 St Mary's street
 Berry & Co. homoeopathic chemists, 4 Parade
 Berry Daniel Arthur, machine closer, Stockley street; house, Vernon terrace
 Berry John, shopkeeper, 78 Vernon street
 Berry John Alfred, boot upper manufacturer,
 Stockley street
 Berry John Parton (Berry & Co.), veterinary surgeon, 4 Parade; house, Hardingstone
 Betson Samuel, clicker, 58 Lawrence street
 Betts Joseph, & Son, shoe manuf. 25 Drapery
 Betts Everard R. (& Son), h. 10 Vernon ter.
 Betts Thomas & William, leather and grindery sellers, 16 St Mary's street
 Betts Charles, 12 Kerr street
 Betts James, leather seller and grindery dealer,
 15 Bradshaw street
 Betts Thomas (T. & W.) house, 43 Sheep st.
 Betts Mr Thomas, 18 Cyril street
 Betts Wm. vict. William IV. 2 Commercial st.
 Betts Wm. (T. & W.) house, 2 Wellington pl.
 Bewis John, shopkeeper, 7 Kingswell street
 Bew Thos. umbrella maker, 8 Market square
 Bex George, j. carpenter, 65 Bailiff street
 Bex Wm. builder, undertaker, wood and stone turner, venetian blind, and bat maker, North-end Steam Works, Bailiff street
 Biddles Jacob, coal and coke merchant (West, Biddles & Co.) house, Market Harboro'
 Biddles Robert (West, B. & Co.) h. Kettering
 Biden John, printer, bookslr. &c. 41 St Giles' st.
 Biggs Edwin John, clerk, 19 Pytchley street
 Biggs Miss Selina, dressmaker, 30 York street
 Billing Geo. chimney sweep, 51 Wellingbro' rd.
 Billingham Geo. furniture brok., 17 Horse mkt.
 Billingham Wm. old book seller, 52 Marefair
 Billingham Wm., jun., stationer and toy dealer, 26 Marefair, and 13 Bridge street
 Bilson John, engine driver, 25 Vernon terrace
 Bingham Robt. hairdr. & tobacnst., 28 Sheep st.
 Bingley John, chemist, 3 Wood hill, & chemical laboratory and soda water mnfr. 93 Bailiff st.
 Birch Henry, boot closer, Lady's lane
 Birch Charles, currier, &c. 69 Edith street
 Birch Mrs Mary, clothes dr. 26 Upper mounts
 Birch Thomas, clicker, 73 Bailiff street
 Bird Richd. j. coach builder, 59 St Giles' st.
 Birdsall & Son, bookbinders, and account book manufacturers, 44 Wood street
 Birdsall Anthony (B. & Son), ho. 13 York par.
 Birdsall Mrs Sarah, 70 Waterloo
 Birdsall Wm. hatter and tobacconist, 4 Bdge st.
 Bishop Henry, brush manufctr. 4 Market sq.
 Black Wm. jun. wood turner, 15 Albert st.
 Blackwell Misses Jane and Fannie, milliners,
 7 Marefair
 Blackwell John, hosier, &c. 9 Drapery; h.,
 Walton Ville, Billing road
 Blackwell Wm. joiner, &c. 41 Scarletwell st.
 Blake Benj. locomotive engineer, Nene villa Blakey E. & Sons, shoe mfs. machinists, and leather merchants, Palmerston rd. and Leeds and Keighley (John Rowe Marks, manager)
 Blamire Wm. victualler, Bell Inn, 18 Bridge st.
 Bland Elias, beerhouse, 7 Weston street
 Bland Henry, beerhouse, 18 Grafton street
 Bland Rbt. Edmondson, hairdrsr. 127 Bridge st.
 Bland Thomas, shoemaker, 40 Bird's piece
 Blane William, bank clerk, 10 St George's pl.
 Blank Geo. Fred. pork butcher, 17 Sheep st.
 Blasdale Jas. engineer, water works, Billing rd.
 Blasdale Richd. mechanic, 26 Commercial st.
 Blaxley Sam. Partridge, shoe mfr. 30 Louies rd.
 Blaxley Wm. machine closer, 15 Vernon ter.
 Blencowe Mrs Eliza, Denmark road
 Blewitt William & Co. seed crushers, Bridge street; house, Pinner, near London
 Bligh Jph. currier and leather seller, 31 Bath st.
 Bliss Wm. cattle dr. & cow keeper, 9 Newland
 Blundel Luke, riveter, 21 Alexandra road
 Blundell Ibbs Nutter, clicker, 4 Black Lion hill
 Blunsom Miss Sarah, Victoria pl. Billing road
 Blunsom Wm. & Co. drapers, tailors, hatters, hosiers, &c. 6 Abington street
 Blunt Mrs Ann, 57 Alexandra road
 Blunt Delense, watchmaker, 14 Bridge street
 Blunt J. H. & Son (Wm. Henry), Electric medical practitioners, 28 Drapery
 Blunt John Charles, clerk, 35 Denmark road
 Blunt Wm. jobbing gardener, 11 Woodford st.
 Bodily Thos. j. shoemaker, 71 Denmark road
 Bodily William, servant, 19 Alexandra road
 Boddington George, shoe mfr. Wellington st.
 Boddington Jno. grindery dr. 126 Kettering rd.

- Boddington Joseph, shopkeeper, 69 Vernon st.
 Boddington Joseph, riveter, 28 Bath street
 Boddington Thos. j. shoemr. 113 Up. Thrift st.
 Boeme Alex. Ecklemans, bank clk. 69 York st.
 Boeme Martin Alex. manager, Union bank,
 41 Drapery
 Bolton Chas. trunk maker and cab proprietor,
 27 Bearward street
 Bond John, greengrocer, 146 Bridge street
 Bond Rev. Robert (Wesleyan), 38 Newland
 Bond Robert, horse dealer and breaker, 32
 Lower mounts
 Bond Wm. furniture broker, 27 Mayorhold
 Bonfield Richard, clicker, 24 Lawrence street
 Bonham Mrs Elizabeth, 6 Augustine street
 Bonham George, cab proprietor, 10 Broad st.
 Bonham Mr Henry, 50 Bearward street
 Bonham Hy. shopk. & beerh. 33 Augustine st.
 Bonham Hy. cab propr. coal dlr. &c. 38 Bull ln.
 Bonham Isaac, boot & shoemkr. 33 St Giles' st.
 Bonham Mrs Mary, coal dealer, St James' st.
 Bonham Thomas, joiner and builder and shopkeeper, 15 Cyril st.
 Borton Jph. currier & leather selr. 67 Horse mkt.
 Borton Mr William, 9 Leicester terrace
 Bostock Frederick, shoe manufacturer, Victoria street; house, 47 Sheep st.
 Bostock Mrs Mary Elizabeth, 20 Vernon ter.
 Bosworth Jesse, shopkeeper, 47 Newland
 Bosworth William, carver, gilder, and picture frame maker, 17 Kingswell street
 Botfish Mr Joseph, 13 Lawrence street
 Bott Edward, mechanic, 15 King street
 Botterill Chas. shopkpr. 35 Lower Harding st.
 Bottrell Edward, greengrocer, 3 Tanner st.
 Bowden Misses Mildred, Jane, and Elizabeth, school, 30 Alexandra road
 Bowman Frederick William, captain of militia,
 20 Primrose hill
 Bowes Walter, j. currier, 4 Robert street
 Bowring Mrs Louisa, beerhs. 26 Wellington st.
 Boyes Wm. last & boot tree mkr. 11 Silver st.
 Boys William, j. plumber, 41 Denmark road
 Boyson Mr James, Belmont House, Billing rd.
 Boyson James, junior, shoe manufacturer, 41
 Alfred street; house, 12 Alfred street
 Bradbury Thos. j. millwright, 4 Western ter.
 Bradford Chas. Watkin, shoe mfr. 23 King st.
 Bradford John, tinner, &c. 3 Mount street
 Bradford Thos. cartman, 35 Commercial st.
 Brady Charles, j. 45 Bull lane
 Brady Henry, j. shoemaker, 15½ Park street
 Brady Mrs Martha, school, 21 Langham place
 Brain Mr William, 14 Alexandra road
 Brain Wm. baker, shopkeeper and beerhouse,
 Kingsthorpe road
 Braines Thomas, riveter, 57 St Edmund's st.
 Braines William, fruiterer, 7½ Marefair
 Brake Matthew Bowles, veterinary surgeon,
 12 Kingswell street
 Bramley William Thomas, closed upper and shoe manufacturer, 10 Abington square
 Brannan Michael, master of workhouse,
 Wellingborough road
 Branson George, builder and beerhouse, 36
 St Mary's street.
 Brentnall Mr John, 20 Wood street
 Brice & Sons, drapers and mercers, 43 Drapery.
 Brice John (Brice & Son), h. 4 Langham place
 Brice Mr Robert, 8 Langham place
 Brice Robert Dadford (Brice & Son), house,
 3 Langham place
 Brice Wm. cart proprietor, 45 Woolmonger st.
 Brickett Jno. machine closer, 20 St Andrew st.
 Brickwood Edw. earthenwre. dlr. 19 Market st.
 Bridgewater Edwin, victualler, Plumbers'
Arms, 16 Sheep street
 Bridgewater Mr John, 34 Victoria street
 Bridle William, mechanic, 38 Victoria road
 Brightwell Wm. shoemaker, 29 Adelaide st.
 Brinkler Thomas, beerhouse, 101 Bridge st.
 Britten James, j. carpenter, 12 Harrison road
 Britten Mrs Julia Forrester, Springfield
 Britten Samuel, clicker, 44 Kerr street
 Brockett Brothers, shoe manufa. 4 Victoria rd.
 Brockett Caleb (Brothers), 4 Victoria road
 Brockett Joseph (Brothers), h. 35 Louise road
 Brodie Mrs Sarah, 6 Royal terrace
 Broddis Wm. j. shoemaker, Lorne road
 Bromwell Mrs Eliz. milkselr. 42 Kettering rd.
 Brooks & Hughes, tobacco-pipe makers, 18
 Horseshoe street
 Brooks Geo. sewing-machn. agt. 27 Sheep st.
 Brooks Mrs Mary, lodgings, 23 Greyfriars' st.
 Brooks Thos. machine closer, 12 Augustine st.
 Brooks Thos. (B. & Hughes), h. 10 Gregory st.
 Brooks William, shopkeeper, 23 Green lane
 Brown & Thomas, booksellers, printers, dissinkers, &c. 18 Gold street
 Brown Cave, eating-house, 26 Bridge street
 Brown Edwin Elliott, clerk, 91 Up. Thrift st.
 Brown Mrs Elizabeth, 85 Newland
 Brown Mrs Emma, 39 Louise road
 Brown George, butcher and beer retailer, 212
 Wellingborough road
 Brown Henry (Brown & Thomas), 18 Gold st.
 Brown James, j. shoemaker, 29 Vernon terrace
 Brown John, shopkeeper, 10 Spring lane
 Brown John, butcher, shopkeeper and beer retailer, 17 Bailiff street
 Brown Rev. John Turland (Baptist), The Elms, Semilong
 Brown Rev. Joseph, chaplain and registrar of cemetery, Cemetery lodge
 Brown Jph. baker and shopkpr. 30 Grafton st.
 Brown Joseph, foreman builder, 14 Cyril st.
 Brown Josiah, j. painter, 17 Castle street
 Brown Walter, shopkeeper and coal dealer,
 32 Newtown road
 Browne, Edward Montague, solicitor, 2 St
 Giles' square; house, Lyveden terrace
 Brownbill Henry, sewing-machine agent, 43
 St Giles' street
 Brownless Geo., brush manuf. 52 Bridge st.
 Bryan Charles, house & estate agt. 10 Wood st.
 Bryan Mrs Jane Elizabeth, 45 Newland
 Bryan Jno. Morgan, M.D. surgeon, 36 Marefair
 Bryant Albert, news agent, 9 Bull lane
 Bryant Joshua, news agent, 84 Bridge street
 Buckingham Geo. shopkeeper, 2 Up. Cross st.
 Buckler David, baker and butcher, 2 Phoenix st.
 Bull Mrs Anne, 44 Lorne road
 Bull Mrs Caroline, victualler, Saracen's Head,
 1 Lawrence street
 Bull George Charles, reporter for the Herald,
 12 Alexandra road
 Bull Thomas, machine closer, 60 Kettering rd.
 Bull William, greengr. 105 Wellingboro' road
 Bullen Joseph Keed, com. trav. 7 Princess st.
 Bullock John, machine closer, 17 Sawpit lane
 Bullock Thos. machine closer, 18 Regent st.
 Bumpus Mrs Maria, governess, 9 Princess st.
 Bumpus Miss Jemima, 17 Freehold street
 Bunting Hy. John, manager, 13 Horse mark et

Bunting William, wool stapler, 8 Royal ter.
 Burch Mrs Mary, clothes dr. 26 Upper mounts]
 Burgeon Ths. collector at Castle railway station
 Burgess Jph. sheriff's messenger, 23 Comrel. st.
 Burnett George, clerk, 11 Thenford street
 Burnett William, chimney sweep, 2 Broad st.
 Burnham Mrs Caroline, 3 Victoria terrace
 Burns William, machine closer, 7 Lady's lane
 Burrell Geo. Thos. beerhouse, 22 Primrose hill
 Burrows Jno. baker & shopkr. 30 Gt. Russell st.
 Burnsill William, police sergeant, 24 Park st.
 Burt John Samuel, beer retailer, 97 Bridge st.
 Burton Charles, chimney sweep, 33 Gregory st.
 Burton Edmund Charles, stamp distributor for the counties of Northampton and Rutland, 19 Market square; house, Daventry
 Burton Robert, clerk, 36 Kerr street
 Burton Thos. tailor and outfitter, 46 Gold st.
 Burvenich Constant, professor of languages,
 21 York parade
 Busby Benjamin, baker and shopkeeper, 78
 Wellingborough road
 Busby John, shoemaker, 78 Harrold street
 Bush Mrs Abigail, 55 Palmerston road
 Bushell William, beer retailer, 38 Albert st.
 Buswell Mrs Elizabeth, 40 Denmark road
 Buzzard Frank, M.D. surgeon, 43 Abington st.
 Butcher Mrs Anne, 20 Abington street
 Butcher Charles, j. shoemaker, 30 Kerr street
 Butcher Gemariah riveter, 78 Cyril street
 Butcher Henry, clicker, 14 Freehold street
 Butcher Mr Robert, 20 Freehold street
 Butler George, butcher, 14 Commercial street
 Butler Geo. O'Connor, beerho., 31 Crispin st.
 Butler James, butcher, 21 Mayorhold
 Butler Richard, porter, 11 Black Lion hill
 Butlin George, butcher, St James' end
 Butlin George, clerk, 11 Western terrace
 Butlin Mrs Hanh. shopkr. & beerho. 26 Chalk ln.
 Butlin, Rev. William, M.A. vicar of St Sepulchre's, 63 Sheep street
 Butlin, William, servant, 43 Alexandra road
 Butterfield Henry, manager, Herald office, 24
 Market square
 Butterfield James, printer, proprietor, and publisher of Northampton Herald, 24 Market square; h. 12 Langham place
 Buxton George, Esq. J.P. 56 Sheep street

CALDWELL Mrs SUSAN, 3 Kettering road
 Camp John, upholstr. cabt. mkr. paper hangr. & house decotr. carpet warehs. & furnshg. ironmonger, &c. 38 Gold street
 Campion Samuel Smith, reporter for Herald,
 Abington street
 Capel Wm. shopkr. 15 Wellingborough road
 Capell Mrs Ann, lodgings, 4 Seymour place
 Caplin Frederick, com. traveller, 27 Cyril st.
 Cardwell Albert, lace manufactr, 27 Newland
 Cardwell Mrs Martha, 69 Abington street
 Carruthers Mrs Mary Ann, 1 Lyveden terrace
 Carter Edn. Righton, postmaster, 2 Adelaide ter.
 Carter Frank Gilbert, grocer (Warren & Carter),
 1 Wellington place
 Carter George William, master of county gaol school, York street
 Carter Mr Henry George, 82 Kettering road
 Carter Hy. George, junr. pianoforte maker,
 80 Kettering road
 Carter Wm. machine closer, 52 Lawrence st.
 Cartridge Ben. grindery dealer, 45 Hope's pl.
 Casey Wm. pleasure-boat propr. 181 Bridge st.

Casteldine Joseph, coal dr. 52 Scarletwell st.
 Caswell Richard, j. tailor, 14 Horse market
 Caswell Mrs Sarah, shopkr 15 Augustine st.
 Catling Charles, beer retailer, Market street
 Caulcutt Mrs Eliz. lodgings, 9 Alexandra road
 Cave George & Co. coal merchants, Cotton end; h. Hac kleton hill
 Cave Benj. rent collector, 49 Alexandra road
 Cave Boyce William, clerk, 4 Victoria street
 Cave Charles, j. shoemaker, 5 Wellingbro' road
 Cave Mrs Charlotte, shopkr. 68 St George's st.
 Cave Elijah, chair bottomer, 5 Bellbarn street
 Cave Mrs Eliz. dressmaker, 11 Alexandra road
 Cave John Leach, builder and paperhanger,
 1 Foundry street
 Cave Thomas, j. bricklayer, 4 Harrison road
 Cavit John, cabinetmaker and upholsterer, 88 and 40 Bridge street; h. 5 Spence's parade
 Cecil Mrs Elizabeth, 90 Abington street
 Cemetery (General), Billing road, Rev. Joseph Brown, chaplain and registrar; Joshua Percival, superintendent
 Chamber of Commerce, Corn Exchange buildings, Thomas Cavit Manton, secretary
 Chamberlain Mrs Eleanor, 25 Albert street
 Chambers & Manning, soda-water manufacturers, 21 King street
 Chambers Christr. George, clerk, 21 Lorne rd.
 Chambers Miss Matilda, dressmaker, 10 King st.
 Chambers Thomas, ginger beer manufacturer and victualler, Fish Inn, 1 Riding
 Chambers Wm. (C. & Manning), h. 4 Cyril st.
 Chance John, riveter, 39 Bearward street
 Chaplin Geo. gardnr. & greengr. 12 Comml. st.
 Chaplin Wm. j. carpenter, 18 Inkerman ter.
 Chandler Hy. oil & colourman and pickle fish
 dr. & grocer, 2 & 4 Mercer's row; h. London
 Chandler Hy. Peter, shoe mgr. 8 St Giles' ter.
 Chapman, Arthur, clicker, 71 Lorne road
 Chapman, Frederick, shopkeeper, 27 Bull lane, and beerhouse, Kingswell street
 Chapman Mrs —, school, 7 Royal terrace
 Chapman George, shopkeeper, 58 Vernon st.
 Chapman John Vyce, stationer, 4 Abington square, and 162 Wellingborough road
 Chapman Samuel, baker, 28 Wellington place
 Chapman Thos. j. maltster, 17 Lawrence st.
 Chapman Thomas, shoe manufacturer (Kent
 & Co.), h. 36 Bath street
 Chapman Wm. Louis, cage maker and bird dealer, 11 Marefair
 Charlton Daniel, j. painter, 10 William street
 Chater Joseph, riveter, 27 Pytchley street
 Checkley Christopher, auctioneer and high bailiff for borough, 11 Regent square
 Checkley Mrs Mary, butcher, 59 Horse market.
 Checkley George Nelson, cab proprietor and tobacconist, 16 Dergate
 Cherry John, j. carpenter, 41 Kerr street
 Cheahire Jas. bonnet blocker, 44 Lawrence st.
 Chester Corns. shoe manuf. 17 St George's st.
 Chester Thomas, hairdresser, 82 Bridge street
 Chesterton Rd. working jeweller, 9 Lady's ln.
 Chevassut Frederick George, master, St James' school, 7 Ambush street
 Chick James & Sons (James, jun. & William), tobacco pipe manufacturers, Foundry street
 Childs Mrs Mary, 6 Inkerman terrace
 Christy Jas. (sec co-operative stores, Marefair)
 Chubb Wm. tobacconist and beerh. 71 Bridge st.
 Church Alfred & W. m. shoe mfrs. 30 Maple st.
 Church Dd. Berlin wool & fancy rep. 11 Princess st.

- Church Thomas, machine closer, 27 Maple st.
Church Wm. machine closer, 11 Regent st.
Clark George, j. machinist, 32 Denmark road
Clark George, builder, 23 St Giles' street
Clark Francis, clerk, 80 Waterloo
Clark James, cowkeeper, 30 Newtown road
Clark Marcht. pork btchr. 120 Wellingboro' rd.
Clark Rt. baker and shopkr. 30 Gt. Russell st.
Clark Mr Thomas, 42 Cyril street
Clark Thos. baker and beerh. Upper mounts
Clark William, shopkeeper, 29 Compton st.
Clarke Samuel Baylis (C. & Son), plasterers, slaters, &c., Derngate
Clarke Wm. & Sons, boot and shoe manufacturers, Black Lion hill
Clarke Alfred, shopkeeper, 17 Brunswick st.
Clarke Mrs Anne, 66 West street
Clarke Edwd. Harry (C. & Son), h. 1 Vernon ter.
Clarke Elias, clicker, 57 Denmark road
Clarke Francis, fishmonger's assist. 51 Lorne rd.
Clarke George, mechanic, 16 Pythchley street
Clarke Henry, boot closer, 17 Park street
Clarke Henry, clicker, 19 Lorne road
Clarke John, fitter, 27 Castle street
Clarke Jno. j. upholsterer, 37 Alexandra rd.
Clarke Jno. fishmonger, &c. 2 George row
Clarke John Wesley, greengrocer, 41 Lorne road; house, Kingthorpe
Clarke Joseph Porter, clicker, 16 King street
Clarke Josiah, shoemaker, 22 Gt. Russell st.
Clarke Josiah, machine closer, 25 St Mary's st.
Clarke Miss Kate Eliz. teacher of music, 1 Vernon terrace
Clarke Mrs Mary Ann, milliner, 8 Abington ter.
Clarke Richard, shoe manager, 18 Raglan st.
Clarke Rt. (& Sons), house, 12 Black Lion hill
Clarke Saml. Baylis (C. & Son), h. 1 Vernon ter.
Clarke Stephen, shoe agent, 7 Charles street
Clarke William, com. traveller, 45 Lorne rd.
Clarke Wm. saddler, 23 Gold st. & 111 Bridge st
Clarke Wm. Jackman, j. brewer, 63 Denmark rd.
Clarke Wm. Richard, chemist, 3 Sheep street,
Clay James, confectioner, 181 Bridge street
Clay Mr Joseph, 41 Wood street
Clayson Cooper, j. painter, 6 William street
Clayson Hy. j. shoemkr. 106 Wellingboro' rd.
Clayson Jas. vict. Race Horse, 6 Abington sq.
Clayton Rev. Lewis, M.A., incumbent of St James', 7 Western terrace
Clayton Philip (Harrison & C.), 31 Comrcial. st.
Cleaver Richard, plumber, &c. 14 Wood st.
Clegg Chas. hardware dealer, &c. 25 Silver st.
Clements Thomas, shopkeeper, 23 Bellbarn st.
Clements William, tailor, 3 Inkerman terrace
Clevedon College (Edward Rush, B.A. principal), Abington street
Clifton Arthur Crowen, surgn. 65 Abington st.
Clifton George Herbert, M.D. medical officer at Barracks
Clifton James, coal dealer, 1 Navigation row
Clifton Jno. James, coal dealer, 29 Augustine st.
Clifton Samuel, 6 Victoria terrace
Clifton Mrs Sarah Ann, hosier, &c. 30 Wellingborough road
Coales & Allen, brewers and spirit merchants, Lion Brewery
Coales Thos. (C. & Allen), h. Great Houghton
Cockerill Alfred, fruiterer, seedsman, and florist, 18 Drapery; h. Wellingborough rd.
Cockerill Benjamin, shopkeeper, St John's st.
Cockerill Wm. pork butcher, 56 Wellingboro' rd.
Coe Charles, beerhouse, 51 Hope's place
Cogan Lee Fyson, surgeon (Ashdown & Cogan), house, 4 Royal terrace
Coldwell Fracs. shopkr. & beerh. 3 Newtown rd.
Cole Benj. Wm. shopkr. & beerh. 138 Bridge st.
Cole Thomas, solicitor's clerk, 25 Horse mkt.
Coleman Wm. engineer, machinist, & implement maker, St John st. and Chapel Bampton
Coles Alf. vict. Coach & Horses, 3 George row
Coles Alfred, j. coach builder, 15 Alexandra rd.
Coles Edward, baker, &c. 49 Primrose hill
Coles Mr Henry, 57 York street
Coles Jonathan, shopkeeper and beerhouse, 147 Wellingborough road
Coles Thos. machine clsr. 137 Wellingboro' rd.
Coles William, greengrocer, 27 Silver street
Colledge Henry, butcher, 39 Abington street
Colledge Mr Joseph, 9 Royal terrace
Colledge William, butcher, 8 Regent street
Collier John, vict. Melbourne Tavern and Gardens, St James' end
Collier Simon, shoe manufactr. 2 Craven st.
Collier Mr William, 19 Primrose hill
Collier Mr William, 19 Vernon terrace
Collier William Thomas, currier and leather seller, 7 Kerr street; house, Kingthorpe
Collins Chas. & Walter, boat builders and proprietors, 180 Bridge st. and Wellingborough
Collins & Whatcott, shoe mfrs. Albert street
Collins Mrs Ann, 24 St Edmund's street
Collins Edward, greengrocer, 25 Gas street
Collins Mrs Eliza, furntr. bkr. 12 Bearward st.
Collins John (Collins & Whatcott), 32 Kerr st.
Collins Thomas, trunk and packing case manufacturer, undertaker, &c. Inkerman terrace; house, 28 Wood street
Collins Walter, butcher and beer retailer, 61 Palmerston road
Collins William, Esq. Monk's Park
Collins William, greengrocer, 19 Grafton st.
Colson Wm. porkman & bacon factor, 32 Gold st.
Comber John, butcher, 1 Ash street
Comfield Mr William, 65 Newland
Compton Mr Samuel, 132 Kettering road
Constable Mrs Harriet, 9 Western terrace
Convent (Sisters of Notre Dame), Odile Jacobs, superioress, Abington street
Cooch Geo. carpenter, &c. 16 Wellington pl.
Cooch Samuel, j. shoemaker, 18 Fish street
Cook William, baker and confectioner, and hay and straw dealer, 39 Bridge street
Cooke Charles, shopr. & beerh. 1 Alexandra rd.
Cooke Edward, manager, 23 Denmark road
Cooke Edward, compositor, 44 Denmark road
Cooke George Fox, basket maker, 50 Gold st.
Cooke Saml. builder, painter, &c. 56 Marefair
Cookson, Thomas Chorley, M.A. second master of Grammar School, Norfolk villa, Billing rd.
Cooley William Shuttlewood, hatter, hosier, and outfitter, 19 Drapery
Cooper Misses Fanny & Sarah, milnrs. 60 Gold st.
Cooper Arthur, cab proprietor, 5 Cow lane
Cooper Mrs Hannah, 56 Waterloo
Cooper Benjamin, beerhouse, 3 Castle street
Cooper Edward Rand, hosier & haberdasher, 34A Gold street
Cooper Geo. glass & china dealer, 2 Bridge st.
Cooper John Fowler, clicker, 67 Lorne road
Cooper Joseph, farmer, at Irchester; house, Albion terrace
Cooper Miss Sarah, dressmaker, 17 Gas street
Cooper Thomas, earthenware dealer and machine closer, 12 Thomas street

Cooper Thos. Alfred, cab proprietor, 30 Wood st.
 Cooper Walter Rylands, j. shoemr. 23 Alfred st.
 Cooper William, clothes dealer, 54 Bridge street
 Cooper Wm. Chas. Fullard, fishmonger and earthenware dealer, 5 St James' street
 Co-operative Northampton West End Industrial Society (Limited), grocers, provision and sundry dealers, 43 Marefair; Ephraim Spires, manager; Jas. Christy, secretary
 Co-operative Society (Phoenix), grocers, &c. 11 St Andrew's square, and 164 Wellingborough road; George Knight, secretary
 Co-operative Northampton Equitable Society shopkeepers, 49 Grafton st. and Oak st.; John Ashby and Job Dickins, managers
 Coote William, tobacconist, 51 Drapery
 Copeland Alexander, trav. draper, 83 Newland
 Copeland John, trav. draper, 24 Greyfriars' st.
 Corby Charles, vict. Eagle Tavern, 9 Bridge st.
 Corby Charles, j. 39 Semilong
 Corby John, greengrocer, 17 Mayorhold
 Corby John, newsagent, 20 Mayorhold
 Corby Samuel, j. shoemaker, 6 Edith street
 Corby Samuel, plumber, painter, &c. 1 Kerr st.
 Corby Thos. shopkr. & beerh. 78 Kettering rd.
 Cordeux & Sons, printers, Swan yard, Drapery
 Cordeux Francis (Cordeux & Sons), Drapery
 Cordeux Mr Thomas Lindsay, Chain walk
 Cory Henry, j. tailor, 29 Wellingborough rd.
 Cory Samuel, tailor, 46 Marefair
 Cosford Mrs Ann, 6 Victoria street
 Cosford Edward, fitter, 11 Charles street
 Cosford Geo. shoe manufacturer, 19 Maple st.
 Cosford Robert, joiner and builder, contractor, mineral merchant, plumber, glazier, and painter, 112 Abington street
 Cosford Thos. joiner & builder, contractor, plumber, glazier, & painter, 4 Lady's lane
 Cosford Thos. shopkeeper, 28 St Peter's st.
 Cotechin Mrs Martha, laundress, 41 Marefair
 Cottingham Wm. shopkeeper, 28 Lorne road
 Cottingham Wm. jun. confectioner, 12 Sheep street and 2 Gold street
 Cotton George, surgeon, 47 Abington street
 Coughlan Thos. coal dealer, shopkeeper, and beerhouse, 25 Grafton street
 Coulson Joseph, fruiterer, 12 Silver street
 Coulson Wm. shoemaker, 23 Sawpit lane
 Coulson Wm. jun. shoe manufacr. Sawpit lane
 Coulton Mrs Grace, clothes dlr. 3 St Giles' st.
 Course Josiah, j. upholsterer, Victoria road
 Cove John, shoe mfr, Chalk ln; h. 7 Langham pl.
 Covington Geo. Samuel, tailor, &c. 23 Sheep st.
 Covington Fred. tailor, &c. 61 Wellingboro' rd.
 Cowgrave Samuel, riveter, 22 Freehold street
 Cox & Sons, watchmakers, jewellers, and opticians, 1 Mercer's row
 Cox Mrs Anna Maria, 8 Western terrace
 Cox Chas. Humphrey (C. & Sons), h. Moulton
 Cox Henry (Cox & Sons), h. 2 Mercer's row
 Cox Chas. Humphrey, jun. (Cox & Sons), 1 Mercer's row
 Cox George, finisher, 34 Park street
 Cox Frederick, hairdresser, St James' end
 Cox Hy. Saml. baker & groc. 6 Palmerston rd.
 Cox Richard, solicitor's clerk, 8 Alfred street
 Cox Wm. photographer, 13 Bridge street
 Crabtree Chas. travelling draper, 24 Cyril st.
 Craddock Edward Chapman, vict. Knightley Arms, 9 Commercial street
 Craddock George, beerhouse, 3 The Green
 Craddock Geo. bootcloser, 28 Bearward st.

Craddock Wm. & Son, tailors, &c. 47 Gold street
 Crane Wm., saddler, 44 Bridge street
 Crane William, riveter, 7 Upper mounts
 Crewe Mrs Jane, 17 Alexandra road
 Crewe Robert, clicker, 16 Inkerman terrace
 Cretney Robt. S. military, clerical, fashionable tailor, robe, & habit maker, 25 Greyfriars' st.
 Crick Alfred Wm. cooper and vict. Queen's Head, 14 Gold street
 Crick Mr Wm. 16 Langham place
 Crisp George, clicker, 59 Lawrence street
 Critchett Henry, beerhouse, 46 Grafton st.
 Cross James, builder, 28 Louise road
 Cross Jonas, vict. Half Moon, 163 Bridge st.
 Cross Thomas, j. plumber. &c. Albion cottage
 Crowder Hy. assistant farmer, St James' end
 Crutchley Mrs My. Ann, mach. closr. 28 Bailiff st.
 Curl Jno. & Son, fishmgs. & fruits. 41 Horse mkt
 Curl John, jun. (C. & Son), beerhs. 31 Horse mkt
 Currall Jph. tailor and draper, 18 Abington st.
 Curtis James, riveter, 46 Lorne road
 Curtis Thomas, shopkeeper, 18 Adelaide st.
 Curtis Thos. hardware dealer, 185 Bridge st.
 Curtis William, shopkeeper, 8 Moat street
 Curtis William, draper, 6 Abington terrace
 Cutler Henry, shopkeeper, 5 Woodford st.
 Cutts John, shoe foreman, 16 Harrold street
 Cutts William, cab-driver, 3 William street

 DADFORD THOMAS, chemist, and soda-water manufacturer, 33 Gold street
 Dale Jno. beerhouse and coal dealer, 25 Gas st.
 Dalingwater Mr William, 5 Victoria street
 Dando Mrs Rebecca, staymaker, 16 Market square; house, 21 Albion place
 Daniel Abraham, j. paperhanger, 21 Alfred st.
 Daniels Mrs Elizabeth, 5 Western terrace
 Danolds Mrs Rebecca, 23 Victoria road
 Darby Fred. corn and flour dealer, 44 Sheep st.
 Darley Wm. pork butcher, 27 Horse market
 Darlow John, tailor, 55 Wellingborough road
 Darnell Joseph, accountant, 48 Abington st.; house, 7 Abington terrace
 Darnell Wm. shopkeeper, 13 The Green
 Dartnell Geo. coal dealer, 5 Upper Priory st.
 Davies & Sons, coachbuilders, 17 Abington st.
 Davies Mrs Ann, house, 4 Primrose hill
 Davies Thos. (Davies & Sons), h. 48 Wood st.
 Davies Thomas, upholsterer, 89 Upper Thrift st.
 Davis & Irons, last makers, Sawpit lane
 Davis Chas. (Davis & Irons), h. 7 Bath sq.
 Davis Miss Emma, clothes dlr. 27 Wellingbro' rd
 Davis John Wigston, baker & shopkr. Bailiff st.
 Davis Jph. hardw. dlr. (Gonaki & D.), 24 Sheep st
 Davis Thos. police sergeant, 26 Mount street
 Davis Mr Welling, 45 Marefair
 Davison Miss Priscilla, smlw. dlr. 88 Abington st.
 Dawkins Thos. policeman, 16 Pytchley st.
 Dawson Joseph (& Sons), shoe manufacturers, 10 Park street, and London
 Dawson Geo. machine closer, Woolmonger st.
 Dawson John, boot blocker, 27 Sawpit lane
 Dawson Thos. j. paperhanger, 15 Lorne rd.
 Day John, teacher of prison school, 61 Lawrence street
 Day John, j. carpenter, 8 Harrold street
 Daykir Samuel, com. traveller, 20 Cyril street
 Dazeley Geo. j. tailor, 23 Maple street
 Dean Edward, colliery agent, 14 Langham pl.
 Dean William, beerhouse, 14 Deal street
 Deeley George, coal and coke merchant, and private and commercial hotel, 108 Bridge st.

Delworth Wm. drill sergt. to co. police, Angel st.
 Dennis William, solicitor, 38 Sheep street
 Dennis Rev. Wm. Benj. (Wesleyan), 32 Waterloo
 Denton Geo. furniture bkr. 42 Horse market
 Denton Levi, carpenter, 52 Horse market
 Derby Robert, & Sons, shoe mfrs. Pike lane
 Derby Arthur, currier, 26½ Kingswell street
 Derby Chas. (Rt. & Sons), house, 22 Marriot st.
 Derby Joseph, clicker, 43 Wood street
 Derby Peter, insurance agent, 12 Albion place
 Derby Rbt. (Robert & Sons), house, 34 Marefair
 Derby Wm. Rt. warehouseman, 6 Elysium ter.
 Derby Wm. Rt. (R. & Sons), h. 6 Elysium ter.
 Derham Bros. shoe mfrs. Marefair and Bristol
 Devonshire John, house and land agent, 139
 Bridge street; house, 26 Horse market
 Desborough Enoch, beerho. 150 Kettering rd.
 De Wilde Mrs Louisa, 43 York street
 Dicey Mrs Anne Mary, printer, proprietor, and a publisher of Northampton Mercury, 11
 Parade; house, London
 Dickens Fred. j. tailor, 100 Upper Thrift st.
 Dickins Alex. Chs. tinplate wrkr. 13 Kingswell st.
 Dickins Dnl. Dd. shopk. & beerho. 5 Sawpit la.
 Dickins Wm. btchr, 32 Marefair and Harpole
 Dickins William, fireman, 39 Victoria road
 Dickinson Jno. shopkr. & beerho. 59 Bouverie st Dimpleby John, & Co. outfitters, 1 Gold street;
 house, 18 Wood street
 Disbury Geo. vict. Warwick Arms, 55 Bridge st.
 Disher Henry, clicker, 2 Mount street
 Dispensary, Royal Victoria, Albion place
 Dispensary (Homœopathic), Abington street
 Dix John, j. brewer, 21 Broad street
 Dodgson Josiah (Northampton Coal, Iron, and Wagon Company), house, 55 Sheep street
 Dodman Jno. carpr. & furn. bro. 72 Wellingbro'rd.
 Dorman Charles, j. carpenter, Alfred street
 Dorman Mark, J.P. printer, bookseller, stationer, newspaper agent, library & reading room, photo. gall. and general emporium for glass, china, &c., and wine spirit, ale & porter merchant, 27 Drapery; h. Melbourne crescent
 Dorr Henry, shoe manufr., 54 Vernon street
 Dorr John, machine closer, 16 Lawrence street
 Dorrell Alfred, dancing master, 32 Newland
 Douce Joseph, clerk, 45 Louise road
 Douglas Mrs Ann, 107 Lower Thrift street
 Douglas Jn. foreman shoemkr. 8 Alexandr rd.
 Douglas Mr John, 18 Albion crescent
 Douglas Mrs Mary Ann, beerho. 1 Augustine st.
 Douglas Mr Neal, 92 Upper Thrift street
 Douglas Thos. solicitor's clerk, 10 Royal ter.
 Douglas Wm. shopkeeper, 87 Wellingboro' rd.
 Dove William, boot closer, 25 Sawpit lane
 Dove Mr William, 11 Primrose hill
 Dowdy Thomas, baker, 12 Wood street
 Downes Charles, baker, 22 Market street
 Downing Edwd. brazier & turner, 67 Bridge st.
 Downs Cyrus, carpr. & furn. bkr. 9 Wellington pl.
 Downs Emanuel, tinner, 37½ Horse market
 Dowsett Edward, machine closer, 37 Lorne rd.
 Drage Alfred, baker, &c. 51 Scarletwell st.
 Drage Binyoun, coal manager, 37 Sheep street
 Drage John, pawnbroker, 49 Scarletwell st.
 Drage Jno. Morgan, porkbtchr. 27 Grafton st.
 Drage Joseph, vict. Stag's Head, 7 Abington st.
 Drakeford Israel, comman. agent, warehouseman, leather seller, & shipping agent, 39 Sheep st.
 Draper Elijah, master of St Giles' school, 2
 Primrose hill
 Draper John, currier, 4 Mount street

Dreaper Rev. John, B.A. chaplain of county gaol, 3 Lyveden terrace
 Drinkwater Thos. j. shoemaker, 5 Pytchley st.
 Driver John, j. shoemaker, 33 Park street
 Duckenfield Edward, saw mfr. and mechanics', engineers', & amateurs' tool dlr. 31 Gold st.
 Duckett Richard, dyer, 44 Abington street
 Dudley Jas. master of St Katharine's school, house, 4 Horse market
 Duke Mrs Eliza, 6 Kerr street
 Dumayne Charles, j. shoemaker, 64, Cyril st.
 Duncley Joseph, j. carpenter, 2 Western ter.
 Dunham Alfred, cashier of gas works, 13 St
 George's terrace
 Dunham Hy. carpenter and shopkr, 21 Gas st.
 Dunham Robert, joiner and builder, 104 Wellingtonborough road
 Dunkley Mrs Ann Alice, school, 77 St Giles' st
 Dunkley Charles, butcher, 34 Abington street
 Dunkley Charles, draper's assistant, 8 Cyril st.
 Dunkley Edwd. Thos. beerho. 19 Wellington pl.
 Dunkley Fredk. j. carpenter, 78 Up. Thrift st.
 Dunkley George, grocer & tea dlr. 36 Sheep st.
 Dunkley Henry, grocer, 2 Wood hill
 Dunkley Mrs Maria, 59 York street
 Dunkley Miss Marianne, school, 4 Marriott st.
 Dunkley Mrs Mary, 4 Marriott street
 Dunkley Miss Sophia, 41 Sheep street
 Dunkley Thos. shop. & beerho. 60 Scarletwell st.
 Dunkley William, tailor, 15 Adelaide street Dunmore Edwd. shoe manufr. grindery and leather seller, sewing machine agent, and shopkeeper, 33 St Mary's street
 Dunmore William, beerhouse, 46 Kerr street
 Dunn Chas. Fredk. draper's asst. 3 Thenford st.
 Dunn Saml. j. cabinetmaker, 19 St Mary's st.
 Dunster William, cutter, St Edmund street
 Durham Mr Edward, St Andrew's villa
 Durham Frank, M.A. boarding school, St
 Andrew's villa
 Dyer Caleb, & Co. pawnbrokers, silversmiths, tailors and outfitters, 36 Bridge street
 Dyer Silas, grocer and provision dealer, 39
 St Giles' street
 Dyer Thos. currier and leather seller, Mount street; house, 14 Wellington street
 Dykes Robert, auctioneer, glass, china, and furniture dealer, 148 Wellingtonborough road
 Dyson Cornelius, baker & confec. 49 Bridge st.
 Dyson James, shoe manufr. 10 Pytchley st.

EADON ALFRED shoe mangr. 12 St George's ter.
 Eales William, j. shoemaker, 3 Harrold street
 Ealey Thomas, j. shoemaker, 33 Vernon ter.
 Earl Wm. grocr. (Hensman & E.) 8 Abington st
 Early Hy. baker and shopkeeper, 4 The Green
 East John, j. carpenter, 13 Woodford street
 Eaton Mrs Charlotte, greengr. 17 Wellington pl.
 Eaton Wm. baker, 17 Wellington place
 Eayrs Mrs Sarah, 41 Louise road
 Edens Joel, boot manuf., 41 St Mary's street
 Edgar Thomas, j. upholsterer, 48 Denmark rd.
 Edlow Samuel, lastmaker, 12 Horseshoe st.
 Edmonds Mrs Sarah, 21 Wellington place
 Edmunds William, furniture broker and victualler, White Horse, 64 Sheep street
 Edwards Chas. machine closer, 6 Lawrence st.
 Edwards George, shoe and upper manufacturer and pawnbroker, York street and 46 Newland; house, 110 Abington street
 Edwards Geo. machine clr. 10 Wellington pl.
 Edwards John, coml. traveller, 15 Albion pl.

Edwards Mrs Mary, laundress, 8 Lawrence st.
 Edwards Rd. j. shoemaker, Up. Newland ter.
 Edwards Wm. j. gardener, 7 South street
 Egg Charles, 24 St George's terrace
 Eldridge Charles, grocer, &c. 23 Marefair
 Eldridge Wm. clothier and hatter, 16 Gold st.
 Ellard Jas. shoe mfr. 9 Bath st.; h. Billing rd.
 Ellard John, shoe manager, 15 Marriott street
 Ellen Charles, master of St Edmund's School,
 135 Wellingborough road
 Elley, Gibson, & Woolley, shoe mnfrs. 70 Newland, Kettering & Stafford (W. Smith, mgr.)
 Elliot John, machine closer, 22 Lorne road
 Elliot Mrs Phoebe, shopkpr. 13 Horseshoe st.
 Elliott Edward, clicker, 8 Lorne road
 Elliott James Henry, clicker, 34 Albert street
 Ellis George, com. traveller, 5 Vernon terrace
 Elson Wm. furniture broker, 57 Grafton st.
 Emerton Henry, hosier and glover, 24
 Drapery; house, 23 Albion place
 Emerton Rd. hosier and glover, 9 Market sq.
 Emery Rowland, confectioner, 26 Drapery
 Emery William, builder, 62 Marefair
 England James, clicker, 61 Lorne road
 England Major, boot maker, 64 Newland
 England Septimus, shopkeeper, St James' end
 Errington John, grocer and provision dealer,
 43 Bridge street and Yardley Hastings
 Errington John Jerome, shoe manufacturer
 (Rice & Errington); house, 43 Bridge street
 Esery Robert, tailor and draper, 15 Fish st.
 Eunson John, jun., engineer and manager of gasworks; house, 20 St Giles' street
 Evans William & Eli, shoe manufacturers,
 Denmark road; house, Billing road
 Evans Charles, clicker, 5 Charles street
 Evans Chas. Jewel, surgeon, 82 Abington st.
 Evans Joseph, machine closer, 2 Oakley street
 Evans Thos. Brown, clicker, 59 Denmark rd.
 Evans William, clicker, 12 Lorne road
 Evans Wm. Freeman, eating-house, Cotton end
 Everitt Ths. goods agt. (L. & N.W.) 36 Cyril st.
 Eves Wm. hardware, gls. & china dl. 25b Bridge
 street
 Eyers John, insurance agent, 90 Bailiff st.
 Eyers William, currier and leather seller, 34
 St Mary's street; house, 26 Lawrence street

FAIRCLOTH JOHN MARLBOROUGH COWELL, Esq.
 M.D. paper mfr. (Wise & Co.) h. 3 Willingtn. pl.
 Fairey James, riveter, 15 Victoria road
 Farey George, blacksmith, 36 Kingswell street
 Farmer Harry, coal mer. Cotnend. h. Harding ter
 Farndon Thomas, shopkeeper, 1 Lorne road
 Farndon Wm. baker, 72 Bailiff street
 Farr Augustus, surveyor of taxes, 16 St Geo. pl.
 Fathers Thomas, tripe dresser, 39 Bellbarn st.
 Faulkner Ezekiel, hairdresser and fishing-tackle maker, 10 Marefair
 Faulkner John, clicker, 2 Seymour place
 Faulkner John Joseph, solicitor, 18 Market square; house, Kingsthorpe
 Faulkner Sl. trv. tea dlr. & shopk. 12 Exeter rd
 Faulkner Thomas, confectioner, 14 Regent sq.
 Faulkner Wm., j. brewer, 114 Upper Thrift st.
 Faulkner Wm. shoe mfr. (Mead & F.) h. 6 Albion cr
 Fauson Wm. furniture brkr. 10 Inkerman ter.
 Fawcett William, coal dealer, 89 Bath street
 Fear John, j. shoe fitter, 15 Freeschool street
 Feary Miss Mary, shopkeeper, 75 Bird's piece
 Felce Reuben, clicker, 8 The Green
 Ferneyhough Thos. j. bookbndr. 27 Albert st.

Field Mrs Caroline, lodgings, 40 Kingswell st.
 Field Thomas Waller, ironmonger's assistant,
 14 Palmerston road
 Field Wm. shopkeeper, 3 Abington terrace
 Fielding Mrs Phoebe, 18 St James' street
 Finch Geo. j. cabinetmaker, 36 Denmark rd.
 Finlayson Benjamin, j. tailor, 9 Victoria st.
 Fisher John, machine closer, 21 Maple street
 Fisher Mrs Sophia Wootton, 10 Elysium ter.
 Fisher Thomas, mechanic, 54 Horse market
 Fitch Zacariah, clicker, 78 Lower Thrift street
 Fitzhugh John, butcher & grazier, 33 Bridge st.
 Fitzhugh John, j. plasterer, 26 Greyfriars' st.
 Fitzhugh John, j. bricklayer, 4 Inkerman ter.
 Fitzpatrick James, surgeon, 1 Wood street
 Fitzpatrick Thomas, surgeon, 53 Sheep street
 Flavell Thomas, shoemaker, 25 Regent square
 Flawn Miss Eliza, machine closer, 9 Lorne rd.
 Fleckney Wm. blksn. Angel st. h. 59 Kingswel st
 Flecher Mrs Emma, lodgings, 28 Newland
 Fletcher Jas. Hy. manager, 60 Denmark rd.
 Flewitt Motteram Wm. surgeon, 27 Gold st.
 Flint Edward, clerk, 16 Allison crescent
 Flint Thos. j. saddler, 29 Spring gardens
 Flint Chas. warehouseman, 9 Denmark road
 Flower Mrs Eliza Ann, 6 Princess street
 Floyd Wm. shoemkr. 52 Wellingborough rd.
 Foddy Joseph, lace manufacturer (Kightley & Foddy), house, 63 Abington street
 Ford Ebenezer, newsagt. 133 Wellingboro' rd.
 Ford Jno., tailor and draper, 19 Marefair Forth Wm. victlr. Peacock & Midland and Comrcl. and Family Hotel, 28 Market sq.
 Foster Mr John, 89 Kettering road
 Foster Wm. soda water, &c. manufacturer,
 44 Deal street; house, 17 Maple street
 Foster George, shopkeeper, 7 Freehold street
 Foster Chas. j. carpenter, 122 Up. Thrift st.
 Foster Jno. machine upr. closer, 32 Louise rd.
 Foulsham William, wholesale and retail tobacconist, 36 Drapery
 Fountain Barnard, j. currier, 6 Seymour place
 Fountain Miss Ann, dressmaker, 28 Regent st.
 Fountain John, greengrocer, 12 Wood street
 Fountain Jacob, draper, 5 Drapery
 Fowkes Mrs Elizabeth, 7 Elysium terrace
 Fowkes John Wm. clerk, 23 St George's ter.
 Fowler Charles, clerk, 89 Bridge street
 Fowler John Charles, j. currier, 56 Bailiff st.
 Fox Mr Benjamin, 3 Victoria street
 Fox Charles William, butcher, market; house,
 14 Albion place
 Fox Geo. gls. & china dlr. & fur. bkr. 48 Marefair
 Fox Mrs Harriet, 4 Mayorhold
 Fox Hy., furniture broker, 72 Bridge street
 Fox James, greengrocer, 83 Horse market
 Fox Mr Thomas, 55 Lorne road
 Fox William, clerk, 36 Lower mounts
 Fox William, butcher, 85 Bridge street
 Fox William, jun. butcher, 37 Marefair
 Fox Wm. Wrighton, foreman, 1 St Peter's grdns
 Frampton Chas. clothes, &c. dlr. 41 Grafton st.
 Francis & Gammage, boot upper manufacturers, 64A Abington street
 Francis Bryan, btchr. 4 Drapery; h. 30 Sheep st.
 Francis Dayrell Joseph Thackwell, physician,
 32 Bridge street
 Francis Frederick, butcher, 73 Wellingborough road, and Abington square
 Francis John (Francis & G.), house, 41 Kerr st.
 Francis Joseph, butcher, 52 Hope's place
 Franklin Mr Frdk. Burleigh House, Billing rd.

- Franklin John Campbell, dining rooms, confectioner and victu. Franklin's Restaurant, Guildhall road
- Franklin John Thomas, clerk, 56 Denmark rd.
- Franklin Wm. clerk, 51 Palmerston road
- Franks & Tebbutt, shoe mnufters, 3 Broad st.
- Franks Thos. (Franks & T.), 79 Wellingboro' rd.
- Freear Hy. butcher, Spring Ln; h. 3 Abington pl
- Freear Thomas, baker, 2 Wellingborough rd.
- Freear Wm., confectioner, 4 Marefair
- Freeman & James, curriers & leatherslrs. Oak st.
- Freeman Chas., j. painter, 12 Victoria street
- Freeman George, shopman, 9 Fish street
- Freeman Henry, j. shoemaker, 1 William st.
- Freeman James, greengrocer, 5 College street
- Freeman Mr John, 24 Newland
- Freeman John, hairdresser, 30 St Giles' street
- Freeman Rd. baker & beerho. 19 Bradshaw st.
- Freeman Thos. (F. & James); ho. 84 Louise rd.
- French Thos. stonemason, 7 Albert street
- Frisby, Dyke, & Co. drapers, 21 Market square, and Liverpool and Newcastle-on-Tyne
- Frisby Rd. shopkeeper & beerho. 49 Broad st.
- Frisby Rt. Wm. compositor, 62 Abington st.
- Frisby Samuel, parcels agent to Midland Railway Co. omnibus, cab, and livery stable propr. Peacock Hotel yard; h. 81 Newland
- Frith George, moulder, 178 Bridge street
- Frith John, j. lastmaker, 47 Lorne road
- Frost Dan. currier & leather slr. 10 Horse mkt.
- Frost John, police, 115 Lower Thrift street
- Frost Jas. boot and shoe maker, 59 Gold st.
- Frost John, j. leather cutter, 31 Newland
- Frost Jonathan, coal merchant, 23 Grafton st.
- Frost Jph. j. currier, 57 Wellingborough rd.
- Frost Joseph, 25 Vernon street
- Frost Mrs Martha, 3 Albion place
- Frost Noah Pratt, shoemaker, 91 Horse mkt.
- Frost Richard, greengrocer, 20 Green lane
- Frost Thos. vict. Hare & Hounds, 1 Lady's lane
- Frost Thomas, porter, 40 Lorne road
- Fudger Fredk. kid leather dyer and dresser, 62 Lower mounts
- Fudger George, kid leather dyer and dresser, and baker, and shopkeeper, St James' end
- Fuller Robert, j. shoemaker, 12 Denmark rd.
- Furniss Miss Helen, school, 65 Lawrence st.
- Furniss Jabez, shoe manufacturer, Mayorhold; house, 12 Western terrace.
- Furniss Thomas, clicker, 4 Thomas street
- Furniss Wm. j. carpenter, 37 Lawrence st.
- GADSBY EDWARD, sewing machine maker, 24 Bearward street
- Gadsby Frederick, coml. trav. 13 Park street
- Gale Rev. William, B.A. 50 Wood street
- Gamble George, j. shoemaker, 12 Abington sq.
- Gamble John, j. coachbuilder, 9 Horse mkt.
- Gammage Chas. house, &c. agt. 76 Abington st.
- Gammage Thomas, boot upper manufacturer (Francis & Gammage), house, 1 York ter.
- Gander Benj. scrip. reader, 66 Wellingboro' rd.
- Gardner Charles, shoe manufacturer and beer retailer, 66 Wellingborough road
- Gardner Chas. j. tailor, 13 Wellington place
- Gardner George, shoemaker, 33 Green street
- Gardner Hy. Jas. hairdrrs. 25 Wellington pl.
- Gardner Robert, shoemaker, 4 Victoria street
- Gardner Mrs Sarah, beerhouse, Cotton end
- Gardner Thomas, bricklayer, 19 Gas street
- Gardner Wm. inspector of nuisance, 19 Kerr st.
- Gardner Wm. foreman shoemaker, Lorne rd.
- Garland Mrs Elis. shopkeeper, 86 Bath street
- Garlick Carrington, shopkeeper, 24 Victoria st.
- Garment Jthn. Wm. post-offices clk. 44 Cyril st.
- Garner James, poultry & game dlr. Swan yard
- Garner Miss Sarah, 10 Alexandra road
- Garnett & King, curriers, &c. Spring lane
- Garnett Jas. Fras. (G. & K.), h. 9 Elysium ter.
- Garratt Messrs Geo. & Thos. 73 Denmark rd.
- Garratt Saml. shopk. & beerho. 2 Portland st.
- Garratt William, shopkeeper, 46 Denmark rd.
- Garratt William, shoe mfr. 23 Broad street
- Garratt Wm. veterinary surgeon, 35 Sheep st
- Garrett Geo. lodgings & waiter, 13 Princess st.
- Garrod James, greengrocer, 13 Newland
- Garvey John, shopk. & beerho. 33 Up. Priory st.
- Gas Works*, Mill lane; John Eunson, junior, engineer and manager.
- Gascoigne Mrs Ann. vict. Admiral Rodney, 48 Drapery
- Gascoigne Stephen, coal dlr. 12 St Peter's st.
- Gates Wm. Brooks, solicitor, district registrar of Court of Probate, 6 Dergate; h. 69 St Giles' st.
- Gawthorn Hy. boot maker, 59 Bridge street
- Gawthorn Stephen Edwd. shopk. 2 Pytchley st.
- Gawthorn Mrs, Wellingboro' road
- Gedge Rev. Hugh Somerville, B.A. curate of All-Saints, 72 Waterloo
- Gedge Rev. Sydney, M.A. vicar of All-Saints, 44 Waterloo
- Gee Miss Catherine, shopkeeper, 187 Bridge st.
- Gent Alpha, carpenter, &c. 11 Inkerman ter.
- Gent George, shoemaker, 12 Market square
- Gent Thos. grocer and tea dealer, 5 George row
- George Mr Charles Henry, 73 Palmerston road
- Geyton Albert, shopkeeper, 3 Black Lion hill
- Gibbins Francis, warehouseman, 12 Albert st.
- Gibbins Thos. j. shoemaker, 74 Upper Thrift st.
- Gibbins Wm. boot, &c. maker, 66 Bridge st.
- Gibbons John, j. shoemaker, 38 Lorne road
- Gibbs Charles, machine closer, Ash street
- Gibbs Mr John, 61 Abington street
- Gibbs John, boot maker, 41 Bridge street
- Gibbs Jph. shoe manufacturer, 96 Cyril st.
- Gibbs Mr Richard, 23 Silver street
- Gibbs William, shopkeeper, 37 Cyril street
- Gibbs William, j. currier, 3 Western terrace
- Gibbs Wm., j. shoemaker, 34 Palmerston road
- Gibbs William Barnwell, 56 Lawrence street
- Gibson Christopher, com. travlr. 4 Adelaide ter.
- Gibson Rev. William Louis, B.A. curate of St Andrew's, 44 Sheep street
- Gilbert Edwin, beerhouse, Maple street
- Gilbert Jno. Jas. confectioner, 1 Abington ter.
- Gilbert John Loughton, confs' asst. 49 Cyril st.
- Gilbert Jph. boot upper mfr. 41 Bearward st.
- Giles Mrs Eliz. clothes dealer, 9 College st.
- Gilkes Jph. baker & shopkeeper, St James' end
- Gill Hubert, gdnr. & seedsman, 28 Cleveland rd.
- Gillham James, manager, 4 Leicester terrace
- Gilling Charles Faulkner, butcher, Cotton end and Far Cotton
- Gilling Mrs Sarah, 41 Louise road
- Gillson Wm. Hy. beerho. 44 Up. Harding st.
- Gillitt Mr Charles, 23 Vernon terrace
- Glover Wm. shoemaker, 88 Upper Thrift st.
- Goddard Hy. Heygate, dentist, 42 Waterloo
- Godden Phil. machine closer, 23 St George's st.
- Godfrey Mrs Emily, 4 Lyveden ter. Billing rd.
- Godfrey John, carpenter, 16 Abington street
- Godfrey Mr John Archibald, 3 Royal terrace
- Godfrey Miss My. dressmaker, 60 Abington st.

- Godfrey Wm. joiner and builder, 38 Wood st.
 Goff George, machine closer, 19 Freeschool st.
 Goff William, porter, 58 Lower mounts
 Going Ths. machine closer. Bristol; h. 30 Bath st.
 Gonski & Davis, hardware, toy, &c. dealers, 24 Sheep street
 Gonski Adolph (Gonski & Davis), 24 Sheep st.
 Good George, clerk, 4 Pytchley street
 Goodacre Rev. Fred. Wm. M.A. curate of St Sepulchre's, 28 Newland
 Goode Benj. baker & beerho. 50 Lawrence st.
 Goode George, clerk, 31 Regent square
 Goode Mrs Harriet, 13 Grafton street
 Goode Jah. temperance house, 6 Commercial st.
 Goode Thomas, j. tailor, 41 Lawrence street
 Goodger Henry, shoe manager, 34 Lawrence st.
 Gooderidge Rev. Wm. (Wealn.) 24 Langham pl.
 Goodman Frederick, leather & grindery dealer, 30 Abington street
 Goodman Mr George, 6 St Giles' terrace
 Goodman Henry, tailor, 2 Quart Pot lane
 Goodman John, clerk, 6 Alexandra road
 Goodman Jno. baker & shopkr. 5 Augustine st.
 Goodman John, shopkr. & beerho. 3 Adelaide st.
 Goodman Thos. j. shoemaker, 68 Kettering rd.
 Gordon Joseph, j. tailor, 6 Albert Street
 Gordon William, clicker, 25 Victoria road
 Gorton Robert, clicker, 27 Vernon terrace
 Goss Jno, shoe manufacturer, 24 Augustine st.
 Gotch Miss Ann, shopkr. & beerho. 2 Green st.
 Gotch Mrs Sarah, laundress, 10 Freehold st.
 Gourlay & Muscott, tailors & drapers, 4 Gold st.
 Goulding John, levant dresser, skin dealer, &c. Crane street
 Goy Hy. plumber, painter, &c. 9 King street
Grammar School, Abington square, Rev. S. J. W. Sanders, M.A. F.G.S. LL.M. head master; T. C. Cookson, M.A. second master,
 Grand Junction Canal Co. general carriers, 136 Bridge street; James Hughes, agent
 Grant George, draper, 20 Bridge street
 Grant Mr James, 14 Lawrence street
 Gray & Hodges, whols. grocers, 58 Abington st.
 Gray Chas. shoe manager, 36 Woolmonger st.
 Gray Parker, grocer and provision dealer, 3 Parade; and wine, spirit, ale, and porter merchant, 17 Drapery.
 Gray Miss Rebecca, milliner, 29 Bearward st.
 Gray Mr William, 12 Vernon terrace
 Gray Mr William, 1 Royal terrace
 Gray Wm. jn. (Gray & Hodges), 58 Abington st.
 Greaves John, shoe manufacturer, 4 Kettering road, and London and Norwich
 Greaves Jonathan, currier (T. P. Stroulger & Co.), h. 4 Abington terrace
 Green Brothers, provision dealers, 1 Bridge st.
 Green & Son, saddlers and harness makers, 9 Gold street
 Green Ed. & H. joiners & bldrs. Palmerston rd.
 Green Abm. currier & leather slr. 13 Lady's ln.
 Green Mrs Agnes, travg. draper, 26 Newland
 Green Charles, currier and levant dresser, Maple street; h. 13 Wellington place
 Green Edward (Ed. & Hy.), 30 St Edmund st.
 Green Frederick, clicker, 4 Freeschool street
 Green Fred. Walter, grocer and provision dlr. (Green Brothers), 17 & 19 Leicester street
 Green George, beerhouse, 14 Freeschool street
 Green Henry, painter, &c. 27 Upper mounts
 Green John Townley (& Son), h. 14 Castilian st.
 Green Hy. (Ed. & Hy.), h. 17 Palmerston road.
 Green Joseph, shopkeeper, 67 Bailiff street
 Green Mr Joseph Cogblan, 17 Princess street
 Green Rd. county court bailiff, 67 Kettering rd.
 Green Mrs Rosannah, butcher, 34 Up. mounts
 Green Stephen, brick manuf. 2 Upper mounts
 Green Thos. solicitor (Becke & G.), h. Norfolk villa, Billing road
 Green Mr Thomas, 21 St George's terrace
 Green Wm. tinman & ironmng. 29 Abington st.
 Green Wm. George, brazier, iron, and tinplate worker, &c. 81 Horse market
 Greenough Mrs Catherine, baker, 91 Bridge st.
 Greenough Geo. j. fitter at gas wks. 40 Cyril st.
 Greenough Geo. butcher & shopkr. 35 Victoria rd.
 Greenough Hy. draper, &c. 20 Gold street
 Greenough Rand Edward, coal, coke, slate, & salt merchant, corn dealer, & miller, 112 Bridge st.
 Gregg Mrs Charlotte, clothes dlr. 18 King st.
 Greville Mrs Mary Agnes, Castilian street
 Griffin George, machine closer, 13 Thomas st.
 Griffin James, j. tailor, 47 Bailiff street
 Griffin Robert, cattle dealer, 8 Freehold st.
 Griffiths Mrs Sarah; shopkeeper, Angel street
 Grocock Mrs Catherine, 2 Vernon terrace
 Grocock Mrs Martha, shopkr. 39 Adelaide st.
 Grocock Thomas, j. joiner, 65 Lorne road
 Groom Mrs Ann, 13 Albion place
 Gross Henry, shoe manufacturer, St Andrew's street; h. 28 Horse market.
 Gross John, greengrocer, 80 Wellingboro' rd.
 Gross Joseph, j. greengrocer, 7 Derrigate
 Gross Joseph, j. greengrocer, 19 Castle street
 Grove James, coal dealer, 21 Freeschool st.
 Grove George, j. shoemaker, 9 William street
 Groves Thos. Beverley, j. painter, 11 Albert st.
 Gubbins Mrs Eliza, 14 Robert street
 Gudgeon Mrs Ann, vict. Old Duke of Clarence, 11 Mercer's row
 Guest Henry, j. carpenter, 22 Pytchley street
 Guest Jph. goods manager & dist. superintendent (L. & N.W.R.), Cotton end
 Guignard Joseph Jules, vict. Fleece Commercial Inn, 115 Bridge street
 Gulliver Mrs Ann, 6 Leicester terrace
 Gulliver Geo. beer retr. Vigo crea. Bedford rd.
 Gulliver Mrs Sarah, 17 Victoria street
 Gunn Miss Emma, straw-bon. mkr. 99 Bailiff st.
 Gurney Alfred, com. trav. 26 Alexandra rd.
 Gurney Mr Joseph, 1 Freehold street
 Gutteridge Ja. Wright, basket. mr. 42 St Giles' st.
 Gutteridge Wm. solicitor's clerk, 51 Denmark rd.
 HADDON GEO. Hy. watchmaker, 48 St Giles' st.
 Haddon John, upholsterer and clerk of St Giles', 48 St Giles' street
 Hadland Mrs Sarah J. milliner, 10 Regent sq.
 Hall Charles, plumber, &c. 51 Abington st.
 Hall David, confectioner, 12 Abington st.
 Hall John, milk dealer, 16 Pine street
 Hall Sidney, & Co. grocers & tea dlrs. 6 Gold st.
 Hall Sidney Kirk (& Co.), h. 37 College street
 Hall Samuel, brewery cashier, 42 York street
 Hall Thos. j. shoemaker, 14 St Andrew's st.
 Hall Thomas Douglas, shawl and mantle warehouse, 12 Parade
 Hall Mr William Barker, Alfred street
 Hall William, shopkr. & beerho. St James' end
 Hallam William, baker, &c. 39 Horse market
 Hallam Wm. confectioner, &c. 11 Lady's lane
 Hambleton Geo. herbalist, 175 Bridge street
 Hambridge Geo. Hy. butcher, 151 Bridge st.
 Hamlet James, vict. Black Boy, 4 Wood hill
 Hamp Geo. machine closer, 23 St Mary's st.

Hancock George, secretary and librarian to Working Men's Club, St Giles' street.
 Hancock Geo. Wm. machine closer, 46 Bailiff st.
 Hancock Joseph, shoe manufacturer, 1A Kerr street; h. 16 Lady's lane
 Hancock Thomas, beerhouse, 49 St Mary's st.
 Hand William, compositor, 1 Victoria road
 Handscomb Alf. Price, draper's asst. 39 Vic. rd.
 Hanger William, j. shoemaker, 1 Seymour pl.
 Hannell Thomas, shopkeeper, 113 Bridge st.
 Hannen Robert, inspector of gas meters, 17 Freeschool street
 Hannen Mrs Sarah Ann, bookseller, stationer, fancy repository, 6 Sheep street
 Hansell Henry Rous, clerk, 12 Robert street
 Hansell Thomas, clerk, 10 Robert street
 Hanson & Son, wine and spirit merchants, Abington street
 Hanson Jos. (Hanson & Son), h. 1 Woodhill
 Hanson Charles, upper mfr. 46 Horse market
 Hanson Miss Eliza, 31 Marefair
 Hanson Thos. Fascutt (& Son); h. 1 Woodhill
 Harday Hy. & Co. shoe mfrs. 19 Regent st.
 Harday Hy. (Harday & Co.); h. 5 Langham pl.
 Harding Mr John, 2 Princess street
 Harding Joseph, furniture dlr. 21 Horse mkt.
 Hardwick E. baker & shopk. 170 Wellingbro' rd.
 Hardwick Henry, closed upper manufacturer and shoemaker, 58 Wellingborough road
 Hardwick Mr John, 14 Royal terrace
 Hardwick Mrs Mary Ann, 27 Langham place
 Hardwick William, j. carpenter, Harrison rd.
 Hardwick William Edward, currier and leather seller, Tanner street; h. 4 St Peter's gardens
 Hardy Mrs Caroline, 22 Cyril street
 Hardy John Strover, tobacconist, 14 Sheep street and 21 Abington street
 Hargrave W. J. Hall, butcher, 164 Wellingbro' rd.
 Harker William, vict. Rose and Punch Bowl, 18 Marefair
 Harris Alf. Geo. baker & shopkr. St James' end
 Harris Mrs Ann, Alfred street
 Harris Mrs Catherine, 7 Grafton street
 Harris Charles, beerhouse, 26 Bailiff street
 Harris Charles, milliner, 57 Bearward street
 Harris Charles, j. stone cutter, 3 Thomas st.
 Harris Edwin, vict. Burghley Arms, 33 Bearward street
 Harris George, hairdresser, 134 Bridge street
 Harris Mr George, 7 Semilong terrace
 Harris Hy. shoe mfr. Marefair; h. 33 Semilong
 Harris Joseph, grocer, 67 Wellingborough rd.
 Harris Miss Mary, 20 Kerr street
 Harris Richard, bookseller, printer, &c. 6 Bridge street; h. 16 York parade
 Harris Samuel, saddler, 29 St Giles' street
 Harris Mrs Sophia, lodgings, 15 Thenford st.
 Harris Thos. vict. King's Head, 15 Mayorhold
 Harris William, shopkeeper & beerhouse, 55 Lower Harding street
 Harris William, finisher, 40 Palmerston road
 Harrison & Clayton, ironfounders and engineers, Grand Junction Works, Cotton end
 Harrison Benjamin Fletcher, mechanical engineer, Cotton end
 Harrison Joseph, beerhouse, 47 Hope's place
 Harrison Vincent, beerhouse, 25 Marefair
 Harriss John, hay & straw dealer, 5 Harrold st.
 Hart Chas. shoe mfr. Church ln. h. 79 Newland
 Hart Joseph, carpenter, 67 Newland
 Hartwell Chas. j. shoemaker, 21 Freehold st.
 Hartwell John, j. shoemaker, 18 St Edmund st.

Hartwell Wm. shoe manufactr. 35 Regent st.
 Harvey Ebenezer, corn and seed merchant, 15 Sheep street and 68 Wellingborough road
 Harvey John, j. currier, 85 Bailiff street
 Hasdell & Marlow, shoe mfrs. Victoria road
 Hasdell Wm. shopkeeper, 42 Maple street
 Hasdell Wm. Mortimer (H. & M.), house, 7 Victoria road
 Hasler Jno. shopkr. & beerho. 15 Riding
 Hatton Miss Mary, ldgs. 6 St Katharine's ter.
 Hawgood Obediah. greenr. 17 Kettering rd.
 Hawgood Job Gardner, clerk, 3 Woodford st.
 Hawkes Joseph, greengrocer, 51 Grafton st.
 Hawthorn Thos. tailor, 7 Park street
 Hawthorne Fred. j. shoemaker, 15 Woodford st.
 Haynes Ed. shoe manufacturer, 76 Newland
 Haynes Geo. corn miller, St Andrew's mill, St George's st. & bkr. & shopk. 80 Kettering rd.
 Haynes William, shoe mfr. 21 St George's st.
 Hayward Geo. Abraham, shopkr. 42 Exeter rd.
 Hayward Francis Hawksworth, land agent and survr. 50A Drapery; h. 17 Princess st.
 Heap Geo. carpenter & builder, 18 St James' st.
 Heap George, j. carpenter, 3 Horseshoe street
 Hefford George, baker, 46 Wellington street
 Heggs Thos. currier, (Robinson & H.) h. Elm st.
 Heel John, finisher, 72 Lower Thrift street
 Heel George, finisher, 86 Lower Thrift street
 Hemmings Edwin Jesse, clicker, 2 Robert st.
 Hemmings Thos. confectioner, 28 Abington street, and 7 George row
 Henley Jas. greengrocer, 47 Horse market
 Henman Edward, beerhouse, 25 Mayorhold
 Henshaw Charles, beerhouse, Weston street
 Henshaw Mrs Sarah, poulterer. 7 Breadshaw st.
 Hensman & Earl, tea dealers and grocers, 8 Abington street
 Hensman J. & J. B. solicitors, 6 St Giles' st.
 Hensman Henry Peach, solicitor, 6 St Giles' street; house, Springhill
 Hensman John (J. & J. B.), h. Springhill
 Hensman John Buswell (J. & J. B.), house, 52 Sheep street
 Hensman Wm. J.P. (H. & Earl), h. Winwick
 Henson Chas. leather seller, shopkeeper and beerhouse, 55 Horse market
 Henson Thomas, clerk, 4 Albion crescent
 Herbert Chas. machine closer, 28 Cleveland rd.
 Heritage Wm. shopkeeper, 58 Bouverie st.
 Hern Thos. j. wheelwright, 21 Commercial st.
 Hesleden Bryan, bank clerk, 34 Waterloo
 Hewett James, milliner, draper and men's mercer, 47 Bridge st.
 Hewitt Chas. carpenter, 60 Marefair
 Hewitt Edward, plumber, 34 Bearward st.
 Hewitt Eli, tinner & brazier, Maple street
 Hewitt Robert, solicitor, 32 Abington st.
 Hewitt Wm. Litchfield, bank clerk, 74 Waterloo
 Hewlett James, shoemaker, Church lane
 Hewlett John, j. carpenter, 75 Bailiff street
 Heycock Mrs Hannah, shopkr. 8 Spring lane
 Heydon Mrs Ann, shopkeeper, butcher and beerhouse, 45 Brunswick street
 Heygate Mrs Eliza, 12 Castilian street
 Hiam Charles, dentist, 10 Newland
 Hibbard Ebenezer Ths. trv. draper, 33 Albert st.
 Hibbitt Wm. Albert, sugar boiler, Church st.
 Hickman Alfred, clerk, 68 Cyril street
 Hickman Geo. machine clsr. 76 Wellingbro' rd.
 Hickman John, shopkeeper, 11 Melbourne st.
 Hickman Robt. j. bricklayer, 94 Up. Thrift st.
 Hicks Miss Elizabeth, dressmkr. 2 Bedford pl.

- Hicks Mrs Ellen, 29 Wood street
Hicks Wm. Sladdin, shopkr. 17 Quart Pot ln.
Hickson Wm. & Sons, shoe manufacturers, 36 Woolmonger, and London
Higgins John & Geo. drapers, silk mercers, hosiers, machine agents, &c. 7 Parade
Higgins Chas. Talbot, j. carpenter, 17 Louise rd.
Higgins Mrs Elizabeth, 2 Campbell square
Higgins Mrs Elizabeth, 106 Abington street
Higgins Hy. coal, coke, & corn mercht. maltster & wharfinger, Weston st.; h. 3 Victoria pl. Billing road
Higgins John Knight, vict. George Hotel, George row
Higgins Mrs Sarah, lodgings, 17 Victoria rd.
Higgitt Robt. vict. Alhambra Music Hall, 63 Gold street
Hill Wm. & Co. timber and slate merchants, Cotton end; house, 6 Albion place
Hill Alex. Fraser, coml. traveller, 22 Albion pl.
Hill Hy. Augus. corn mer. &c. 25 Langham pl.
Hill John, foreman shoemaker, 42 Kerr st.
Hill Rowland, ironmonger, 7 Bridge street; h. 11 Albion place
Hill Thos. shopkeeper, 31st square, Nelson st.
Hill Walter, insurance agent, 16 Maple street
Hill William, j. shoemaker, 44 Hope's place
Hillier Frederick, coal merchant, 33 Wood st.
Hillson Ephraim, bath proprietor, 29 Deal st.
Hillyard Benjamin, beerhouse, St James' end
Hillyer George, coal merchant, 28 Bouverie st.
Hilyard Lemuel, newsagent, 43 Grafton st.
Hines John, baker & shopkeeper, 17 Kerr st.
Hinton Daniel, currier, &c. Vernon street; h. 38 Waterloo
Hinton Miss Euphemia, school, 38 Waterloo
Hiron Henry, upholsterer, 18 Bailiff street
Hitchcox Jno. iron scrap dlr. 31 Woolmonger st.
Hitchcox Robt. milkman, 37 Woolmonger st.
Hoare Jno. milliner, &c. 48 Wellingboro' rd.
Hoare Joseph, sawyer, 48 Bailiff street
Hobbs Henry, railway guard, 2 Thomas street
Hobbs Wm. vict. Bantam Cock, 1 Abington sq.
Hobbs William, clicker, 7 Seymour place
Hobkirk Mrs Jane, 5 Leicester terrace
Hockley Wm. Rt. leather seller, 54 Gold st.
Hodde William, clicker, 57 Lawrence street
Hodges Hy. grindery dlr. 152 Wellingboro' rd.
Hodges Wm. Edwd. greengr. 126 Wellingboro' rd.
Hodges Harry, grocer (Gray & H.), h. 46 York st.
Hoere Lester Harry, baker & confr. 25 Gold st.
Hoerie Chas. pork butcher, 77 Wellingbro' rd.
Hoerie Geo. pork butcher, 92 Bridge street
Holding Hy. & Son (Matthew), builders, 50 Abington street
Holding Joshua, vict. Two Brewers, 25 Abington street
Holding Wm. boot maker, 165 Bridge street
Holdsworth John, painter, &c. 41 Waterloo
Holland Rev. Burdwood (Baptist), 15 Freehold street
Holland Wm. brewer's trav. 14 Bull. Head ln.
Hollands Jabez, machine closer, 21 Park st.
Hollands John, beerhouse, 10 St Edmund's st.
Holliday William, j. shoemaker, 2 William st.
Hollis & Son, shoe manufacturers, Silver st.
Hollis Miss Eliza, 28 Albion terrace
Hollis Fred. hatter, hosier, &c., 1 Parade
Hollis Wm. J.P. (H. & Son), h. Brunswick pl.
Hollis William Griffiths (& Son), h. 1 Sheep st.
Holloway John, shopkeeper, & beer hs. Cow ln.
Holloway John, greengr. 154 Kettering rd.
Hollowell Mrs Ann, cowkeeper, 3 Lawrence st.
Hollowell Wm. & Son (Wm. Cromwell), scrap leather dealers, 3 Market street
Holmes, Wm., & Son (Jno. Stanley), spring cart makers, 27 St George's street
Holmes George, j. currier, 21 Inkerman ter.
Holmes Hy. vict. Royal Hotel, 25 Gold st.
Holmes Jno. brassfoundr. 42 Kingswell street
Holt Henry, watchmaker, 16 Bailiff street
Holt John, shopkeeper, Cotton end
Holt William, j. shoemaker, 9 Harrold street
Holton Saul, j. tailor, 11 Wellington place
Holyoak Brothers (Chamberlain & David), grocers, 22 Market square
Holyoak Rev. Thos. Hy. (Baptist), 40 York st.
Homan Ebenezer, & Co. shoe manufacturers, 54 St Giles' street, and London
Homan Thos. vict. Green Dragon, 54 Bearward street
Homœopathic Dispensary, Abington st.; A.C. Clifton, surgeon
Hooton Thos. baker and beer retailer, Cow ln.
Horlock Phineas, cab proprietor, 11 Broad st.
Horn Mrs Dinah, 18 Augustine street
Hornby Thomas, clicker, 28 Victoria street
Hornaby Henry, butcher, 4 Denmark road; house, 14 Harrison road
Hornsey Henry, boot blocker, 7 Thenford st.
Hornsey William, shopkeeper, 10 Nelson st.
Horsley William, whitesmith and bellhanger, St Giles' street; house, 4 Adelaide place
Hough Wm. shopkeeper and beerhs. 54 Bath st.
Houghton Mrs Ellen, 47 York street
Houghton James, maltster and hop merchant, 19 Horse market
Houghton John, beerhouse, and secretary to the Beer Retail Association, 43 Horse market
Houghton Mrs Naomi, 54 Sheep street
Houghton Nathan, machine closer, 83 Wellingborough road
Houghton Samuel, baker and corn dealer, 28 Pytchley street
Howard Edwin, vict. Wagon & Horses 34 Bdg. st.
Howard Frederick, shopman, 11 Harrold st.
Howard John, beerhouse, St John's terrace
Howard Richard, j. brewer, 16 Fish street
Howard Robert, j. shoemaker, 5 Lawrence st.
Howard Thos. machine closer, 48 Lawrence st.
Howard Thos. j. shoemaker, 38 Palmerston rd.
Howard Thos. shopkr. & beerh. 47 Newtown rd.
Howe, Major, & Co. shoe manufacturers, 12 Bull lane; house, 12 Regent square
Howe Alfred, boot and shoe manufacturer, 10 Bull lane; house, 6 St George's street
Howell Mrs Sarah, 31 York street
Howes Alfred, clicker, 19 Louise road
Howes Mr Charles, 36 Waterloo
Howes John, butcher, 5 The Green
Howes John Baron, Esq. 9 Spencer parade
Howes Jph. shopkr. & beerh. 1 L. Langham st.
Howes Mrs Mary Ann, 80 Newland
Howes Richard, solicitor, 14 Abington street and Towcester; house, 9 Spencer parade
Howes Stephen, hallkeeper, Town hall
Howes William, shopkeeper, 22 Marefair
Hoxley Rev. John (Independ.), 18 Langham pl.
Hughes Christopr. solicitor, clerk of the peace for borough, 23 Newland; h. 80 Waterloo
Hughes Fras. pipemaker (Brooks & Hughes); house, 18 Horseshoe street
Hughes Frederick, j. carpenter, 101 Upper Thrift

Hughes James, agent to Grand Junction Canal Company, 136 Bridge street
 Hughes Rev. Nathaniel Thomas, M.A., vicar of St Edmund's, St Martin's villa, Billing rd.
 Hughes Mrs Sarah, shopkeeper, St Giles' ter.
 Hughes Wm. shopkr. & beer ret. 32 Vernon st.
 Hull Mrs Ann, draper, 22 Abington street
 Hull Chas. Lovell, builder & surv. 71 Waterloo
 Hull Mrs Elizabeth, 36 Albert street
 Hull John, riveter, 59 Newland
 Hull Miss Jemima Adin, school, Castilian st.
 Hull Saml, clerk to boro' treasurer, 41 York at Hull Thos. inspector of gas meters, 23 Gas st.
 Hull Wm. architect & surveyor, 12 St Giles' st
 Humphrey James, j. plumber, Upper mounts
 Humphreys Mrs Sophia, 30 Newland
 Humphreys Ths. music slr. & statr. 68 Bridge st.
 Hunt George, watchmaker, 63 Bridge street
 Hunt John Fredk. j. bookbinder, 17 Wood st.
 Hunter William, riveter, 28 Freehold street
 Hurry Jph. Johnson, shopkeeper, 17 Lady's ln.
 Hutchings Wm. beerhouse, 1 Black Lion ter.
 Hyde Henry Augustus, shoe manufacturer (Turner Brothers, Hyde, & Co.), h. London
 Hyde William, shopkeeper, 58 Regent street

ILIFFE MRS HARRIET, 10 Kerr street
 Ingman Jno. cooper & carpnt. 36 Bearward st.
 Ingram Edward, shopkeeper, 143 Bridge st.
 Ingram William, eating-house, 27 Market sq.
 Inskip Jas. painter, plmbr. &c. 22 Augustine st.
 Inwood Edwin, clicker, 82 Cyril street
 Ireson Daniel, builder, contractor, plumber & house decorator, Waterloo
 Ireson Miss Emma, school, 12 Victoria terrace
 Ireson Josiah, builder and brick mfr. contrctr. 36 Bath street; house, 30 Regent sq.
 Ireson Mrs Mary, 29 Regent square
 Irons Elijah, shoe manufacturer, Bird's piece
 Irons Wm. lastmr. (Davis & Irons), h. 7 Bath sq.
 Ives William, machine closer, 1 Ethel street
 Izzett John, travelling draper, 3 Campbell sq.

JACKLIN JOHN CHEETHAM, cashier, 120 Lower Thrift street
 Jackson Alfred, master of All Saints' school, Denmark road
 Jackson Chas. shopkr. & beerh. 53 Wellingbro' rd.
 Jackson Henry, sergeant paymaster, 40 Kerr at Jackson John, furniture broker, 26 Grafton st
 Jackson Miss Mary, 13 Thenford street
 Jackson Wm. beerhouse, 69 Woolmonger st.
 Jackson William Chas. tailor, St James' end
 Jacob James, j. joiner, 16 Denmark road
 James Eli, butcher, 123 Bridge street
 James George, j. wheelwright, 47 Bath street
 James Samuel, ironmonger, 6 Lady's lane
 James Thomas, currier, &c. (Freeman & James), house, 5 Louise road
 Jardine John, trav. draper, 7 Black Lion hill
 Jarman Amos, butcher, coal dealer, and beer-house, 51 Castle street
 Jecks Mr Charles, 26 Langham place
 Jeffery Alfred John, solicitor, 1 Market square; house, 71 St Giles' street
 Jeffery Edwd. curator, museum, 47 Victoria rd.
 Jeffery James, vict. Bear Inn, 11 Sheep street
 Jeffery John, j. shoemaker, 9 Lawrence street
 Jeffery John, solicitor, 1 Newland; house, 7 Spencer parade
 Jeffery Mrs Sarah, 32 Albion terrace
 Jeffery Wm. brewer (Ratliffe & J.), h. 5 Bath st.

Jeffery Wm. beerhouse, 89 Wellingborough rd.
 Jeffs Thomas, victualler, Princess Royal, 172 Wellingborough road
 Jeffs William, boot and shoe maker, 14 Parade
 Jelley Sam. Cosford, coml. trav. 14 Augustine st.
 Jelley William, tobaccoist, 56 Bridge street
 Jelley William, com. trav. 4 Augustine street
 Jellerman Wm. Fred. rope mfr. 3 Kingswell st.
 Jenkinson John, greengrocer, 14 Bouverie st.
 Jewers Fredk. j. shoemaker, 11 Lawrence st.
 Jeyes Philadelphus, chemist & wholesale druggist, 6 Drapery; ho. Holly Lodge, Moulton
 Johnson & Wright, ironmongers, hop, seed, oil and colour merchants, 3 Gold street
 Johnson Benjamin, finisher, 30 Lorne road
 Johnson Benj. Saml. j. plumber, 37 Alfred st.
 Johnson Charles, butcher, 1 King street
 Johnson Charles Thos. (J. & Wright), 3 Gold st.
 Johnson George, finisher, 36 Bailiff street
 Johnson Mr Eli, 45 Victoria road
 Johnson Eli, greengrocer, 102 Bridge street
 Johnson John, com. trav. 11 Denmark road
 Johnson Mr John, 6 Cyril street
 Johnson John, milkman, 48 Vernon street
 Johnson John Thos. j. upholsterer, 5 Seymour pl.
 Johnson Rd. Steph. confr. & tobact. 7 St Giles' st.
 Johnson Thos. brick mfr. 27 Scarletwell street
 Johnson William, tailor and draper, 8 Parade
 Johnson Wm. j. shoemaker, 74 Newland
 Johnson Wm. bricklyr. & paperhr. 31 Sheep st.
 Johnson, Wm., j. shoemaker, 11 Augustine st.
 Jolliffe & Son, watchmrs. & jewllrs. 34 Drapery
 Jones Charles, warehouseman, 33 Lawrence st.
 Jones Charles, railway porter, Victoria road
 Jones Edward, boot maker, 13 Marefair
 Jones Mrs Elizabeth, 5 Lorne road
 Jones Mrs Elizabeth, 44 King street
 Jones Mrs Emma, clothes dlr. 124 Wellingbro' rd.
 Jones George, plumber, 13 Victoria street
 Jones George, beerhouse, 14 Gas street
 Jones Mr George, 32 Bearward street
 Jones James, finisher, 44 Palmerston road
 Jones John, butcher, 166 Wellingborough rd.
 Jones Jno. master, corporn. school, 60 Bridge st.
 Jones Miss Matilda, 2 Lyvenden terrace
 Jones Robert, clerk, 43 St Mary's street
 Jones Septimus, j. currier, 26 Lorne road
 Jones Mr Spencer, 9 Semilong terrace
 Jones Thomas, clerk, 50 York street
 Jones Thomas, boot closer, 78 Newland
 Jones William, shoe manufacturer, Newland; house, Sydney House, Billing road
 Jones Wm. shoe mfr., 74 Wellingborough rd.
 Jones Wm. j. cabinetmaker, 60 Lawrence st.
 Jones Wm. clothier and outfitter, 29 Gold-st.
 Joyce Frederick, baker, 8 Charles street
 Juggins John, machine closer, 20 Lorne road
 Juggins Jph. machine closer, 32 Victoria st.

KADDY JOHN, inland revenue clerk, 6 Wellingington place
 Katters Jas. photographer & tobact. 7 Gold st.
 Keeble John, j. carver, 2 St Peter's gardens
 Keenan Henry, chief constable, Fish street
 Kemp William, shopkeeper, 8 Upper mounts
 Kempson Augustus, manager of Northamptonshire bank, 6 Parade
 Kemahed Joseph, & Sons, musicsellers and newsagents, 19 Bridge street
 Kendall Chas. Edwin, bootmaker, 50 Drapery
 Kendall Edwin Joseph, shoe manufacturer, 3 Market street; house, Billing road

Kenning George, baker & confctr. 1 Regent sq.
 Kent & Chapman, shoe manufra. 7 Castle st.
 Kent James (K. & Chapman) h. 13 St George's pl.
 Kent Wm. furniture broker, 12 Horse market
 Kent William, baker, 63 Marefair
 Kent Wm. jun. leather and grindery dealer,
 85 Horse market
 Kerridge Bros. shoe manufacturers, leather and grindery dealers, 70 Horse market
 Kerridge Daniel (Bros.) house, 1 Portland st.
 Kerridge George (Brothers) 70 Horse market
 Kettle Joseph, porter, 24 Freehold street
 Kew Mr William, 9 Castilian street
 Keynes Wm. shoemaker, 11 Freeschool st.
 Kightley & Foddy, lace mfra. 63 Abington st.
 Kightley & Son, wheelwrights, Leicester street
 Kightley Charles, beer retailer, 9 Leicester st.
 Kightley Daniel (K. & Son), h. 44 Leicester st.
 Kightley Edward (K. & Son), h. 44 Leicester st.
 Kightley Jno. machine clo. 70 Wellingboro' rd.
 Kightley John (K. & Foddy), h. 63 Abington
 street
 Kightley Jph. joiner and builder, St Giles' ter.
 Kilborn Alfred, grocer, 169 Bridge street
 Kilborn Mrs Catherine, lodgings, 10 Victoria st.
 Kilburn Robert John, clothes and marine store dealer, 61 Broad street
 Kilby Joseph, mechanic, 41 Cow lane
 Kilpin Mrs Rebecca, 7 St Giles' terrace
 Kilsby Mrs Elizabeth, 128 Upper Thrift street
 King Alfred, higgler, 39 Cyril street
 King Chas. Dawson, accountant, 38 Newland
 King Mrs Jane, shopkeeper, 1 Bristol street
 King Jas. confectnr. 70 Abington st. & 1 Fish st.
 King Jno. currier (Garnett & K.) h. 94 Louise rd
 King Richard, jobbing gardener, 41 Semilong
 King Rev. Robert Collins, M.A. vicar of St
 Katharine's, Chain walk
 King Thomas, boot and shoe tool maker, 41
 Scarletwell street ; house, 13 Weston place
 King William, j. tailor, 31 Albert street
 Kingston John, foreman of water works, 87
 Newland
 Kingston Stephen, finisher, 34 Bailiff street
 Kingston William, (Abington House School) house, 104 Abington street
 Kinlay David, j. coach paintr. 34 St James' st.
 Kirby Mrs Ann, dressmaker, 20 Wellington pl.
 Kirby Frederick, clerk, 30 Denmark road
 Kirby Mrs Rebecca, 10 Alexandra road
 Kirby Robert, machine closer, 56 Cyril street
 Kirby Mrs Sarah, 14 Maple street
 Kirby William, warehouseman, 43 Kerr street
 Kirby William, shopkeeper, 53 St Mary's st.
 Kirton John, grocer, &c. 62 Bridge street
 Klits Mrs Sarah, musiceller, 7 Mercer's row
 Knibb Jph. boot & shoemaker, 9 Abington ter.
 Knight Alfred, pork butcher, 17 Crispin st.
 Knight Jas. & Son (Alf.), watchmks. 9 Marefair
 Knight John Austin, foreman engineer, 25
 St John's street
 Knight John, beerhouse, 17 Cyril street
 Knight Jph. riveter, 102 Wellingborough rd.
 Knight Samuel, butcher, 5 Horse market
 Knight Thos. bricklayer, 84 Lower Thrift st.
 Knight Thomas, clerk, 14 Albert street
 Knight Thos. shopkeeper, 226 Wellingboro' rd.
 Knight Thomas jun. shopkeeper, 1 Ash st.
 Knight Wm. Charles, riveter, 11 Vernon ter.
 Knighton Mrs Eliza, 12 Royal terrace
 Knights Ling, beerhouse, 64 Primrose hill
 Konow Charles, vict. Crosseys, 25 Sheep st.

LABRAM JONATHAN, builder, 27 Grafton street
 Labrum Wm. cowkpr. & beerho. 23 Francis st.
 Lack William, moulder, 15 Gas street
 Laing Mrs Susan, 10 Victoria terrace
 Laird Thomas, machine closer, 9 Charles st.
 Lalor William Turner, chief clerk to county police ; house, 25 Wood street
 Lamb Mrs Marie, 59 Abington street
 Lambert Ed. Hewitt, j. currier, 35 Wood st.
 Lamburne Charles, beerhouse, 14 College st.
 Lancaster Jas. vict. Boot Inn, 12 College st.
 Landen John, inland rev. officer, 6 Freehold st.
 Lane James, j. finisher, 32 Albert street
 Lane Wm. machine closer, 72 Wellingboro' rd.
 Langdell Geo. Alfred, shopkeeper, 43 Riding
 Langore John, j. currier, 8 Freeschool street
 Langley Fred. Wm. tailor & draper, 11 Marefair
 Langton Mrs Mary, seamstress, 20 Park street
 Latchmore Fredk. confectioner, 16 Bridge st.
 Latimer Wm. machine closer, 27 Green st.
 Latterway David. j. shoemkr. 69 Kettering rd.
 Laundon Geo. gardener, &c. 110 Wellingboro' rd.
 Law E. F. & Sons, architects and surveyors,
 29 Abington street
 Law W. Wilby & Son, photogrhrs. 12 Bridge st.
 Law Wm. Wilby, & Sons (Wilby & Sidney), engravers and lithographers, 49 Gold street
 Law Alex. shopkr. & beerho. 26 Up. Priory st.
 Law Alf. printer & bookalr. 11A Abington st.
 Law Benj. gardener and beerhouse, 2 Regent st.
 Law Charles (Wm. Wilby, Law, & Son), house, 117 Upper Thrift street
 Law David, greengrocer, 51 Upper mounts
 Law Edward, clicker, 7 Alexandra road
 Law Edmd. (E. F. Law & Sons), h. 27 Langham pl
 Law Edmund Francis, J.P. (E. F. Law & Sons)
 house, 84 Wood street
 Law Frank, ironmonger, 2 Abington street
 Law Mrs Harriet, greengrocer, 33 Bath street
 Law Hy. milliner & straw hat mkr. 36A Gold st.
 Law Henry, greengrocer, 58 Horse market
 Law James, machine closer, 62 Louise road
 Law John, farmer, and vict. Crispin Arms,
 53 Scarletwell street
 Law John, butcher, 37 Castle street
 Law John, j. machinist, 23 Alexandra road
 Law Peter John, shoe foreman, 6 Vernon ter.
 Law Wm. coml. traveller, 9 Langham place
 Law William, auctioneer, 33 Abington street ; house, 17 York parade
 Law William, butcher, 10 Mercer's row
 Law William, clicker, Semilong
 Law William Henry, butcher, 35 Bath street
 Law William Thomas (E. F. Law & Sons)
 house, 29 Abington street
 Lawman George, confectioner, 3 Bearward st.
 Lawman Thomas, turner, &c., 25 Newland
 Lawrence Jph. cook, confectioner, and dlr. in British wines, 35 St Giles' st. & 5 Bridge st.
 Lawrence Wm. tailor and draper, 7 Wood hill Lawrence William, butcher, shopkeeper, and beer retailer, 40 West street
 Lawson Rev. Frederick Pike, M.A. diocesan inspector of schools for Northamptonshire,
 Castle cottage
 Lawton Chas. com. traveller, 31 Freehold st.
 Lawton Leonard, shopkeeper, 32 Deal street
 Lay John, tailor, hatter and bootmaker, 13
 Market square
 Lay William, vict. Quart Pot, Quart Pot lane
 Lea Charles, printer and stationer, 41 Gold st.
 Lea Chas. Samuel, j. shoemkr. 46 Primrose hill

Lea Henry Charles, tobacconist, 2 Abington ter.
 Leach Daniel, j. cooper, 13 Greyfriars' street
 Leach William, j. shoemaker, 66 Vernon street
 Leadbeater Mr John, 33 Pytchley street
 Leadbeater Samuel, marine store dealer, 46
 Wellingborough road
 Lee George, machine closer, 38 Freehold street
 Lee Jeremiah, shopkr. & beerho. 6 Victoria rd.
 Lees Charles, F.C.S. principal of Trade school, Waterloo
 Lees Thomas, hat manufacturer, 30 Drapery
 Leeson Mr Thomas, 13 Gas street
 Legg Rt. Lovell, inland rev. clk. 42 Denmark rd.
 Leigh George, shoemaker, 52 Abington street, and shoe manufacturer, Dychurch lane
 Leigh Miss Mary, school, Ellesmere house,
 Billing road
 Lenton Mrs Elizabeth, 39 Denmark road
 Lenton Mrs Eliz. shopkeeper, 65 Grafton st.
 Lenton Isaac, j. boot closer, 8 St Peter's st.
 Lepper John (Northampton Coal, Iron, and Wagon Co.) h. 6 Western terrace
 Lester Ambrose, tobact. & beerh. 26 Market sq.
 Letherland William, reporter for Mercury, 16
 Alfred street
 Letts Daniel, pork butcher and beerhouse, 65
 Wellingborough road
 Letts George, chimney sweep, violin string manufacturer, and shopkeeper, 16 Mayorhold
 Letts Geo. Knight, whitesmith, 44 Silver street
 Letts John, j. shoemaker, 98 Lower Thrift st.
 Letts Joseph, blacksmith, 33 Broad street; h.
 1 Sawpit lane
 Levi Wm. beerhouse, 52 Broad street
 Lewin Edward, greengrocer, 2 Woodford street
 Lewin Enos, greengrocer, 70 Bailiff street
 Lewin Rd. shoe mfr. 16 Queen st; h. 4 Russell st.
 Lewis & Smith, leather factors & curriers, 19
 Newland
 Lewis Chas. house surgeon, General Infirmary
 Lewis Chas. Aby. cabt. mkr. paint. 6 Woodhill
 Lewis Ebenex. j. shoemaker, 3 Stockley street
 Lightfoot Wm. grocer, tea, & provision dealer,
 5 Regent square
 Lightwood John, riveter, 32 Lawrence street
 Lightwood Wm. shoemaker, 66 Lower mounts
 Lilleman Mr David Charles, 80 Cyril street
 Lillyman Wm. brush manufacturer, 11 Gold st.
 Linaker Mr William, St James' end
 Lines Alfred, sawyer, 81 Palmerston road
 Lines Henry, chimney sweep, 57 Silver street
 Lines Henry, coal dealer, 8 St James' square
 Lines John, chimney sweep, Dychurch lane
 Ling Arthur, ironmgr.'s asst. 25 Alexandra rd.
 Ling Charles, j. carpenter, 92 Cyril street
 Linnell & Glover, dyers, 28 Horse mkt. & London
 Linnell George, shopkeeper, 16 Grafton street
 Linnell Geo. Lionel, vict. WoolPack, 24 Bridge st.
 Linnell Robert, shopkeeper, 38 Alfred street
 Linnell Miss Sarah, 8 Kerr street
 Linnell Thos. shopkeeper, 200 Wellingboro' rd.
 Linwood Wm. rent collector, 33 Kerr street
 Litchfield George, shopkeeper and beer retailer, 1 Denmark road
 Litchfield James, tailor, 142 Bridge street
 Litchfield John, j. watchmkr. 50 Denmark rd.
 Litchfield Thomas, groom, 32 Inkerman ter.
 Lloyd Edward, shopkeeper, 110 Kettering rd.
 London and North-Western Railway Company's station, Cotton end
 London and N. W. R. parcel office (Chaplin & Horne), Thos. Shaw, agent, 23 Bridge st.

Longland Albert, fireman, 18 Kerr street
 Longland Geo. carpenter &c. 7 Regent square
 Longland John, beerhouse, 29 Silver street
 Longworth Geo. boot closer, 38 Lawrence st.
 Longworth Harry, clicker, 36 Victoria road
 Lord Geo. shopkeeper, 71 Scarletwell street
 Louis Mrs Katherine, 18 Alfred street
 Love Wm. tailor, 40 Bearward street
 Lovell Mr Ebenezer, 77 Bailiff street
 Lovell Joseph, trunk & case mkr. 5 Bearward st.
 Lovell Mrs Mary Ann, machine clsr. 20 Bailiff st.
 Low George, currier and leather merchant,
 Pike lane; house, 18 St Mary's street
 Lowe Mrs Anna, beerhouse, 17 Green lane
 Lowe George, horse and carriage proprietor, tobacconist and news agent, 12 Marefair
 Lowe John, shoe manufacturer, 40 Victoria st.
 Lowe John, hairdresser, 79 Horse market
 Lowe Thos. j. carpenter, 9 Park street
 Lowe William, 2 Leicester terrace
 Lawson James, j. shoemaker, 2 Alexandra rd.
 Luck Mrs Mary Jane, dressmaker, 5 Upr. mount-Luck John, house agent, 49 York street
 Lumb Linley Hurst, tinplate wrkr. St James' end
 Lumley Major Jas. Rutherford, 20 Alfred st.
 Lunt Rev. James, B.A., curate of St Katharine's, Chain walk
 Lunt John, whitesmith and shoe machinist,
 45 Mount street and 11 Newland
 Lutt Misses Mary, Eliz., and Rhoda, dressmakers, 61 Marefair
 Lyman John, hairdresser, Upper mounts
 Lynch John, paving contra. 69 Palmerston rd.
 Lyster Abraham, temperance hotel, 2 King st.

MACKINLAY MRS ELLEN, shopkr. 30 King st.
 Mackness Jesse, carpenter, 6 Queen street;
 house, 40 Kingswell street
 Mackness Mrs Mary, 44 Woolmonger street
 Macquire & Walker, auctioneers. 11 share-brokers, 10 St Giles' street
 Macquire Frank, clicker, 5 Mount street
 Macquire Frederick, clicker, 10 Western ter.
 Macquire John (Macquire & Walker), house
 Melbourne crescent
 Macquire Wm. machine closer, 17 Grafton pl.
 Macready Geo. last maker, 21 Kingswell st.
 M'Adams Geo. j. shoemaker, 18 Lawrence st.
 M'Carthy Bartholomw. greengr. 23 Up. Mounts
 M'Allister Henry, shopkeeper, 59 Silver st.
 M'Crindle Alexander, clerk, 5 Marriott street
 M'Donald Peter, shoe manager, 20 Pytchley st.
 M'Dougall Wm. Murray, travelling draper,
 20 Greyfriars' street
 M'George John G. trav. draper, 14 Princess st.
 M'Girr Rob. trav. dpr. & hos. 15 Wellington pl.
 M'Kinnell Wm. chem. and drug. 1 St Giles' sq.
 M'Knaught, Mrs Frances Sarah, machine closer,
 78 Bailiff street
 M'Korkell Charles, professor of music and organist of All Saints', Melbourne crescent
 M'Korkell Miss Emma, teacher of music, 14
 York parade
 M'Lachlan Charles, trav. draper, 83 Newland
 M'Lean John, travelling draper, 14 Kerr st.
 M'Main Mrs Bridget, laundress, 7 Lorne rd.
 M'Munay Geo. clerk, 7 Woodford street
 Maddock David, j. currier, 14 Pytchley street
 Maddock Geo. j. currier, 18 Pytchley street
 Main Rob. build. &c. Pike ln.; ho. 27 Marefair
 Major Miss Eliz. shopkeeper, 155 Bridge st.
 Major Ths. Lovell, machine closer, 61 Sheep st.

- Major William, vict. Northampton Arms, 10 Silver street
 Major Wm. shopkeeper, 14 Tanner street
 Major Wm. j. shoemaker, 21 Kerr street
 Malin Jas. shopkpr. & beer retr. 36 Cleveland rd.
 Malin Richard, cart owner, Thomas street
 Malin Thos., beerhouse, Newland
 Malins John, j. papermaker, Ethel street
 Mallard Mrs Eliza, laundrs. 102 Up. Thrift st.
 Malmesbury Wm. j. shoemaker, 5 Kettering rd.
 Malpas Henry, coal dlr. & greengrocer. 42 Riding
 Manfield Moses Philip, shoe manufacturer, Campbell square, & London, Paris, Hamburg, & Glasgow; house, 2 Royal ter.
 Mangion Wm. medicated bath proprietor, 88 Abington street
 Mann Mrs Sarah, 14 St George's place
 Manning John & Thomas Walton, saddlers, 8 Wood hill
 Manning Mrs Ann, 13 Pine street
 Manning Mrs Caro. lodgings, 15 Bearward st.
 Manning Mr James, 54 York street
 Manning John, greengrocer, 49 Bearward st.
 Manning John, draper (Norman, Shepherd, & Manning), house, 18 Albion place
 Manning John, soda-water manufacturer (Chambers & Manning), h. 21 King st.
 Manning Jph. buter. Dunn ln.; ho. 20 Derngate
 Manning Miss Mariam, dressmr. 3 St Giles' ter.
 Manning Wm. smallware dlr. 76 Kettering rd.
 Manton George, riveter, 26 Albert street
 Manton Mrs Mary, 4 Kerr street
 Manton Richard, clicker, Harrison road
 Manton Thos. Cavit, accountant & auditor, exchange, Parade; house, Billing road
 Margetts John, grocer, &c., 4 Wood hill
 Markey James, coal dealer, 27 Bellbarn street
 Markham A. & H. solicitors, Guildhall road,
 Markham Arthur Bayley (A. & H.), house, 71 Abington street
 Markham Henry Philip (A. & H.), house, Sedgebrook, Pitsford
 Markham, Mrs Isabella, shopr. 19 Mount grdns.
 Markham Ths. j. coach painter, 18 Pytchley st.
 Marklew Edward, railway clerk, 43 Cyril st.
 Marks Fred. cabinetmaker, 18 Victoria st.
 Marks John Rowe, shoe manager, Ethel street
 Marlow Mrs Ann, shopkeeper, 34 Bird's piece
 Marlow John, wheelwrt. Wellingborough rd.
 Marlow John, shoe manufacturer (Hasdell & Marlow), house, 5 Victoria road
 Marlow John, machine closer, 50 Louise rd.
 Marnable Wm. beer retailer, 10 Kettering rd.
 Marriott Mrs Caroline, 3 Louise road
 Marriott Edwin, Belmont villa, Billing road
 Marriott Mrs Eliz. shopkeeper, 55 Bull lane
 Marriott Geo. bkr. & shopkr. 46 Up. Harding st.
 Marriott Geo. shoe manufr. 7 Bull Head lane
 Marriott Henry, upholsterer, 25 King street
 Marriott Jas. baker and milk dlr. 9 Raglan st.
 Marriott Mr John, 8 Denmark road
 Marriott Jona. grindery dler. 36 Up. Mounts
 Marriott Thomas, j. tailor, 29 Lorne road
 Marriott Wm. watchmaker, 9 Abington st.
 Marsh James, surgeon, 4 St Giles' square
 Marsh John, gunmaker, 50A Drapery; house, 17 Primrose hill
 Marshall Henry, shoe manufacturer, 3 Free-school street; house, Kingsthorpe road
 Marshall John, greengrocer, 2 Wilberforce st.
 Marshall John, j. tailor, 43 Waterloo
 Marshall Robert, shopkeeper, 38 Leicester st.
 Marshall Mrs Sarah, laundress, Cow lane
 Marshall William, shoe mfr. 3 St George's st.
 Marshman Wm. Fred. watchmaker, 84 Wellingborough road
 Martin Mr Henry, 2 Victoria terrace
 Martin Hy. joiner & builder, 39 Victoria road
 Martin Humpy. shopkr. 36 Wellingborough rd.
 Martin Jas. clothes dealer, 38 Bearward st.
 Martin John, shopkeeper, 46 Market street
 Martin Wm. hosier, &c. 80 Bailiff street
 Mason & Son, bootmakers, 7 Sheep street
 Mason Mrs Frns. (Mason & Son), ho. 45 York st.
 Mason Geo. carpenter & bldr. 32 St James' st.
 Mason John (Mason & Son), 7 Sheep street
 Mason John, shopkr. & beerho. 27 Melbourne st.
 Mason John, fishmr. Market; ho. Mount st.
 Mason Mrs Rebecca, 27 St James' street
 Mason Robert, shoe finisher, 8 Woodford st.
 Mason Samuel, bootcloser and upper manufacturer, Wood st.; ho. Weston Favell
 Mason William, j. shoemaker, 39 Alfred st.
 Masters Hy. Jph. chemist's asst. 8 Albion cr.
 Masters Samuel, builder, 16 St George's st.
 Matthews F. chapel-keeper, 24 Horse market
 Matthews Geo. smil-wre. dlr. 81 Wellingbro' rd.
 Matthews Hy. shoe manufr. 62 St Edmund's st.
 Matthews John, butcher, 3 Lady's lane
 Matthews William, plumber, painter, &c. 25 Commercial street
 Mawby Hail Marrit. insur. agent 10 Castilian street
 Mawbey John Edward, school, Kingswell st.; h. 7 Portland street
 Maxwell George Neal, chemist, dentist, and wholesale druggist, 21 Drapery
 May Wm. J. j. shoemaker, 15 Palmerston rd.
 Mayger Mr John, 1 Wellingborough road
 Mayger William David, chemist, branch post-office, 6 Regent square
 Mayor Mrs Elizabeth, grocer, 65 Horsemarket
 Mays Jerh. grindery dealr. 74 Kettering rd.
 Mays John, grindery dlr. 153 Wellingbro' rd.
 Mays Miss Sarah, school, 11 Bristol street
 Mead & Faulkner, boot and shoe manufacturers, Inkerman terrace
 Mead David, machine closer, 54 Cyril street
 Mead George, clerk and sexton of St Edmund's, 20 Palmerston road
 Mead Geo. jun. mach. closer. 22 Palmerston rd.
 Mead Joseph, machine closer, Upper mounts
 Mead Jph. j. shoemkr. 118 Upper Thrift st.
 Mead Thos. (Mead & Faulkner), h. 52 York st.
 Mead William, baker, &c. 1 Kettering road
 Mead W. j. shoemaker, 78 Upper Thrift st.
 Meads Geo. size maker & coal dlr. 74 Cow ln.
 Meadows Joseph Daniel, hatter and clothier, 6 Horse market
Mechanics' Institute, Exchange buildings, Parade; Rev. Iden Payne, secretary
 Mee & Sands, milliners, &c., 10 Bridge street
 Mee Miss Sarah (Mee & Sands), h. 8 Bridge st.
 Mellows Mrs Mary, beerhouse, 30 Mayorhold
 Melsheim Emile, foreign leather selr. & French front mfr. 5 St Peter's st.; ho. 55 York st.
 Merrick Thomas James, chemist and veterinary surgeon, 33 Drapery
 Merrill Normanton, iron and brassfounder, Bridge street; ho. St James' end
 Michel George Leopold, foreign leather merchant, 37 Newland
 Midland Railway Station, St John st.; Charles Barnes, station-master

- Midland Parcel Office, 29 Market sq. ; Samuel Friaby, agent
 Middleton Tom, baker, &c. 75 Woolmonger st.
 Miles Sam. foreman shoemaker, 39 Regent st.
 Millard George, coal dealer, 11 Pike lane
 Millard Mrs Hannah, bookseller & stationer, Berlin wool, &c. repository, and register office for servants, 2 Exchange bldg., Parade
 Miller Chas. builder and plastr. 114 Grafton st.
 Miller George, railway clerk, 73 Waterloo
 Miller James, commercial trav. 1 Campbell sq.
 Miller John, rate col. & beerho. 141 Bridge st.
 Miller John, coal, salt, & whiting merchant, 29 Fetter street
 Milley Thomas, toy dealer, 64½ Abington st.
 Mills Wm. & Son, tailors, outfitters, & hatters, 15, 17, and 35 Bridge street
 Mills Miss Caroline Jane, teacher of Beckett and Sargeant's school, Kingswell street
 Mills James, tailor and outfitter, 53 Bridge st.
 Mills John Major, carpenter, builder, and undertaker, 1 Angel street
 Mills Miss Mary, 4 Harrold street
 Mills Robert William, lace manufacturer, 1 Market square; ho. Cogenhoe
 Mills Thos. shoe manufacturer, St John's st.
 Mills William (Mills & Son), h. 57 Sheep st.
 Milne Alexander, architect and surveyor, 2 Gold street; h. 4 St George's street
 Mineards Jph. machine closer, 17 Bearward st.
 Mitchell Alex. com. traveller, 23 Pytchley st.
 Mitton William, legging, boot case, and shoemaker, 44 Drapery; h. 4 Princess street
 Mobbs & Smith, grocers & tea dls. 7 St Giles' sq.
 Mobbs Snow & Wood, ironmrgs. &c. 13 Parade
 Mobbs Mrs Ann, Alfred street
 Mobbs Henry (Mobbs, Snow, & Wood), iron and brassfounder, & agricult. implement maker, Loin Foundry, & coal & coke mert., & bone boiler, Shipley Wharf, Bridge st.; h. Billing road
 Mobbs Mrs Helen Maria, 5 Victoria terrace
 Mobbs Henry Cornfield, plumber & glazier, 26 St Giles' st.
 Mobbs John, cabtmkr. &c. 76 Lower Thrift st.
 Mobbs Septimus Charles, clerk, Church st.
 Mobbs Wm. (Mobbs & Smith), h. 5 Alfred st.
 Mold James, wheelwrt. timber mcr. and saw-mills, Commercial. st.; h. 33 Marefair
 Mold Mrs Mary Ann, tobacconist, 5 Lady's ln.
 Monk John & Thos. saddlers, 126 Bridge st.
 Monk Mrs Sarah, 3 Bedford place
 Montgomery Mrs Frances, 53 York street
 Moore Alfred, shoe manfr., 77 Wellingboro' rd.
 Moore Benjamin, shopkeeper, 1 Castle hill
 Moore George, shopman, 86 Kettering road
 Moore James, gilder & picture dlr. 35 Marefair
 Moore Joseph Hy. grindery and leather seller, 62 Gold street and 63 Wellingborough road
 Moore Luke Wm. j. shoemaker, 63 Lawrence st.
 Moore Mrs Mary Ann, 16 Cyril street
 Moore Nicholas, eating-house, 7 Market sq.
 Morgan George, agent for Pickford & Co. carriers, Cotton end
 Morgan Mrs Han. shopkr. & beerh. 148 Bridge st.
 Morgan Mrs Hannah, lodgings, 48 Horse mkt.
 Morgan Henry, machine closer, 30 Bailiff st.
 Morgan William, coal merchant, Midland Railway Depot; h. 56 St Giles' street
 Moring William and George, curriers and leather dressers, Bull Head lane
 Moring Jno. gar'ner, fruit. & florist, 60 Sheep st.
 Moring John William, gardener, fruiterer, and florist, 65 Adelaide street
 Moring Vincent, gardener, fruiterer, and florist, 34 St George's street
 Moring Wm. beerhouse, 50 Hope's place
 Morley William, bootmaker, 103 Bridge st.
 Morris Mrs Ann, 100 Abington street
 Morris Mrs Alice, milliner, 55 Grafton street
 Morris Eli, foreman shoemaker, 19 Wood st.
 Morris George, shopkeeper, 35 Kettering rd.
 Morris John, machine closer, 16 Victoria rd.
 Morris Jno. Bowker, shoe mangr. 6 Adelaide ter.
 Morris John, j. bricklayer, 10 Thomas street
 Morris John, compositor, 41 Exeter road
 Morton Mrs My. furniture broker, 34 Sheep st.
 Morton William, clerk, 7 Vernon terrace
 Moss Hy. carver, gilder, & statnr. 50 Marefair
 Moss Joel, clothes dealer, 25 and 29 Bridge st.
 Moss Mrs Charlotte, 7 Elysium terrace
 Molt Thos. James, carpenter, 24 St Peter's st.
 Moulding Ths. Jas. foreman currier, 45 Wood st.
 Moxon William, surgeon, 51 Sheep street
 Muddeman Tom Smith, auctionr. 22 Newland
 Muggleston John Thos. vict. Dolphin, 15 Gold street
 Mulliner Hy. coachbuilder, 83 Bridge street, and Leamington
 Mullinger Chs. machine clsr. 59 Wellingbro' rd.
 Mullis Thos. pork butcher, 88 Sheep st. and 18 Wellington pl.; h. 55 Sheep st.
 Mullis Wm. baker & shopkeeper, 47 Hope's pl.
 Mumford Wm. grocer, provision dealer, and tobacconist, 32 Drapery
 Munday Daniel, pensioner, 12 Alfred street
 Munday Wm. shopkeeper and beerhouse, 39 Little Cross street
 Mundin John, shopkr. & beerho. 29 Up. mounts
 Munn Samuel, barman, 38 Kingswell street
 Munns Miss Charlotte, teacher, of All Saints' infant school, 50 Cleveland road
 Munns Edward, hairdresser, 7 College street
 Munns John, shoe manager, 50 Cleveland rd.
 Munns William, riveter, 29 Alfred street
 Munns Wm. Thomas, tobacconist, 3 Derngate
 Munton Edward, foreman, Church street
 Murrin Henry, machine closer, 8 Victoria road
 Murray Ben. machine closer, 31 St Mary's st.
 Muscott Bros. shoe manufacturers, Sawpit ln.
 Muscott Edmund (Bros.), h. 8 St George's st.
 Muscott Fred. tailor (Gourlay & M.), h. 4 Gold st.
 Muscott Joseph (Bros.), h. Gold street
 Mustill Jas. cabt. shop manager, 81 Waterloo
- NEAD RICHARD, shoemaker, 25 Regent street
 Neagle Morris, shopkeeper, 31 Lorne road
 Neal John, shopkeeper; 30 Palmerston road
 Neal John Henry, shoe manufacturer (Henry Harday & Co.), h. 2 Langham place
 Neepe Wm. tanner, &c. (Wetherell & Neepe), h. Dallington
 Negus Sam. chemist and druggist, 55 Gold st.
 Negus William, beerhouse, St Peter's street
 Neighbour Joseph, j. millwright, 49 Newland
 Neil John, foreman, 36 Wood street
 Neudegg Charles, cabinetmaker, 21 Gas st.
 Neville Jno. machine closer, 30 Palmerston rd.
 Neville Mrs Zillah, milliner, 29 Sheep street
 Newell Mr David, 18 Gas street
 Newitt Mr James, 17 Thenford street
 Newitt John, beerhouse, 56 Adelaide street
 Newton Alfred, commercial trav. 15 Marefair
 Newton George, shopkeeper, 15 Union street

Newton Geo. Freeman, currier & leather seller, 5 Free-school st.; h. Bellevue, Billing rd.
 Newton Samuel, hall keeper, Corn Exchange
 Newton Wm. shoe manufacturer, Upper Thrift street; h. 19 Palmerston road
 Newton John, clicker, 6 Lorne road
 Nichols Ebenezer, clerk, 14 Bailiff street
 Nichols Geo. cook & confectioner, 40 Drapery
 Nichols John Knighton, shoe manufacturer, Groom's Yard, Abington st.; h. Raunds
 Nichols Miss Lucy, Victoria villa, Billing rd.
 Nicholson Jas. colliery agent, 20 Langham pl.
 Nicholson Ths. leather lace manufr. 5 Regent st.
 Noble Jph. irongr. at Kettering, 62 Waterloo
 Noble Mr Thomas, 1 Billing road
 Noble Wm. assistant auctioneer, 54 Waterloo
 Nock Mr Edwin, 16 Albion street
 Norman, Shepherd, & Manning, mercers and drapers, 11 Drapery
 Norman Charles, vict. Ram, 19 Sheep street
 Norman Daniel, machine closer, Exeter road
 Norman David, j. shoemaker, 26 Freehold st.
 Norman Geo. mangr. brick wks. h. 17 Albion pl.
 Norman James Berridge, J.P. (Norman, Shepherd, & Manning); h. Melbourne crescent
 Norman John Smith, maltster, coal merchant, & vict. Crown and Anchor, 180 Bridge st.
 Norman Mrs My. dressmaker, 18 Greyfriars' st.
 Norman Robt. coal manager, 13 Primrose hill
 Norris William, bricklayer, 11 Gas street
 Northampton Coal, Iron, and Wagon Company (limited); Lepper & Dodgson, managing directors, 5 Sheep street
Northampton Advertiser, Stanton & Son, 24 Abington street
Northampton Albion, T. Arlidge, 5 St Giles' st.
Northampton Herald, James Butterfield, 24 Market square
Northampton Mercury, Mrs Anne Mary Dicey, 11 Parade
 Northampton Savings Bank, 8 St Giles' sq.; Benjamin Vialla, actuary
 Northampton Town and County Benefit Building and Freehold Land Society, 1 Freehold street; Joseph Gurney, secretary
 Northampton Water Work Co. (Hy. Armit, secretary), 87 Newland
 Northampton Young Men's Christian Association, 14 Kingswell street
 Northamptonshire Banking Co. 6 Parade; Augustus Kempson, manager
 Northamptonshire Brick and Tile Company (limited), Cotton end; G. Norman, manager
 Northamptonshire Female Servants' Training Institution, Orphanage, St Giles' st.; Mrs Jane Ann York, matron
 Northamptonshire Servants' Registration Society (Mrs A. Wright), 51 Gold street
 Northamptonshire Reformatory for Girls, 57 St Giles' street
 Northamptonshire Union Bank, 41 Drapery; Martin A. Boeme, and A. Page, managers Northeast Mrs Ann Eliza, 4 Park street
 Norton Edward, stationer and printer, 17 St Giles' street
 Norton Mrs Elizabeth, lodgings, 120 Bridge st.
 Norton John, j. boot closer, 6 St Peter's st.
 Norton Walter, shop manager, 2 Marefair
 Norton Mr William, 6 Alfred street
 Notcutt John Talbot, printer, bookseller, music seller, &c. 31 Drapery
 Nott Wm. furniture bro. & beer rtlr. 2 Park st.

Num Edward, j. shoemaker, 27 Regent street
 Nutt Thos. j. shoemaker, 50 Upper mounts ;

OAKLEY JAMES, j. 19 Greyfriars' street
 Oakley John, j. tailor, 10 Black Lion hill
 Oakley Thos. j. shoemaker, 8 Grafton street
 Oddy Jph. shpk. & beerho. 81 Woolmonger st.
 Odell John Gregory, auctioneer, Castilian st.
 Odell Mrs Susannah Wallis. Castilian street
 Ogden Jph. shopkpr. 155 Wellingborough rd.
 Old Henry, j. watchmaker, 22 King street
 Oleron Very Rev. Canon Mark, D.D. (Catholic), Bishop's house
 Olive Eustace Hy. surgeon, 20 Sheep street
 Oliver Geo. plumber & painter, 31 Mayorhold
 Oliver James, shopkeeper, 33 Bailiff street
 Oliver Richard, commercl. trav. 7 Victoria ter.
 Olney Fred. cement mert. &c. 61 St Giles' st.
 Oppenheim Henry Martin, leather merchant, Wood street & London; h. 1 Castilian st.
 Ormond Charles, comunian. agt. 13 Freehold st.
 Orbell Philip, j. shoemaker, 63 Lorne road
 Orphanage for Girls, St Giles' street; Mrs Annie Stephenson, matron
 Orton Jno. cab proprietor and confectioner, 2 Black Lion terrace
 Osborn Mrs Ann, lodgings, 10 Seymour place
 Osborn Arthur, butcher and beerhouse, 186 Wellingborough road
 Osborn Miss Frances, 68 Waterloo
 Osborn Thos. tea dlr. and grocer, 22 Drapery
 Osborn Thos. beerhouse, 22 Woolmonger st.
 Osborn Wm. shopkpr. & beerho. 25 Adelaide st.
 Oswin William, saddler, 4 Sheep street
 Curry Miss Mary, school, 7 St Giles' terrace
 Owen George, tailor, 34 St Giles' street
 Owen Owen, draper's assistant, 10 Alfred st.

PACK MR MARTIN, 18 Vernon terrace
 Packer James, clicker, 76 Cyril street
 Packer John, cook, confectioner, and dealer in British wines, 11 Bradshaw street
 Packer William, shopkeeper, 8 Kingswell street
 Padmore Mrs Elizabeth, 16 Augustine street
 Page Alfred, manager of Union Bank, house, Montpelier villas, Billing road
 Page Sergeant-Major Davies, Greyfriars' street
 Page Jno. shopkeeper, 14 Wellingborough rd.
 Page John, gas collector, 2 Albert street
 Page William, brewer's trav. Vigo cottages
 Page Walter, j. upholsterer, 11 William street
 Pain Hy. mangr. Eagle foundry, 2 Harrison rd.
 Palfreman Richard, com. trav. 10 Denmark rd.
 Pallett Alfd. corn and flour factor, 21 Marefair
 Palliser Sir William & Co. shoe manufacts. Ethel st. and Minories, Wm. Ball, manager
 Palmer Mrs Elizabeth, lodgings, 3 Park street
 Palmer Henry, tripe dresser, &c. 109 Bridge st
 Panter George, fish and fruit dealer, Market; house, 14 Bath street
 Panter William, j. shoemaker, 70 Cyril street
 Parish John, machinist, 25 Lorne road
 Parish Mrs Mary, 26 Bath street
 Parke Wm. Bushell, clerk, 26 Denmark road
 Parker Charles, printer, 20 Newland; house, 49 Sheep street
 Parker Frederick, general agent, 49 Sheep st.
 Parker Geo. tripe dresser, 37 Horse market
 Parker Henry, district superintendent for the Prudential, 60 Louise road
 Parker Jas. Thompson, trav. dra. 29 Marefair
 Parker John, beerhouse, 29 Cow lane

- Parker John William, relieving officer for Northampton, 34 Horse market
 Parker Hamilton Wm. draper, 5 Mercer's row
 Parker Wm. Posford, builder, carpenter, &c. 38 Lower Mounts
 Parkins Joseph, compositor, 32 Augustine st.
 Parkinson James, organ builder, 10 Fish st.
 Parrott Jesse, brazier and tinplate worker, 50 Kingswell street
 Parrot Thomas, beer retailer, Cow lane
 Parrish Rev. Hy. Griffin, B. A. curate of St Michael & All Angels, Lyveden ter. Billing rd.
 Parsons Alex. Eames, bank clk. 12 St George's pl.
 Parsons Mrs Frances, greengro. 47 Grafton st.
 Pasmore Philip, shoemaker, 4 Greyfriars' st.
 Patenall Mr Charles, 13 Lorne road
 Patrick Henry Jones, grocer, &c. 63 Newland
 Patterson James, travelling dra. 13 Wood st.
 Pattison John, saddler, 62 Sheep street
 Paxton & Wrighton, shoe and upper manufacturers, Elephant lane
 Paxton Thomas Joseph (Paxton & Wrighton), house, Abington square
 Payne Mrs Ann, 40 Wood street
 Payne Rev. Iden. (Unitarian), 5 Elysium ter.
 Payne Mrs Adelaide, upholsterer and furniture broker, 7 Bull lane
 Payne John, whitesmith, 23 Castle street
 Payne John, clicker, 5 Greyfriars'
 Payne John, j. whitesmith, 57 Woolmonger st.
 Payne Joseph, shoe manager, 14 Abington st.
 Payne Samuel, j. tailor, 28 Kerr street
 Payne Thos. farmer, Braybrook; house 22 Langham place
 Payne Thomas, currier and leather seller, Mayorhold; house, 20 St Mary's street
 Payne Wm. baker and shopkr. 1 Vernon st.
 Payne William, brush manufacturer, 6 Fish st.
 Peach Edward, boot top manufacturer, Cow lane; house, Billing road
 Peach Mrs Elizabeth, 78 Waterloo
 Peach Geo. machine closer, 20 Bull head lane
 Peach James, nurseryman and market gardener, 17 St George's place
 Peach Mr John, Billing road
 Peach Joseph, baker & dairyman, 129 Bridge st.
 Peacock Alfred, machine closer, 9 Robert st.
 Peake John, riveter, 53 Hope's place
 Peaks David Wm. tobacconist, 9 Regent sq.
 Percy Mrs Sarah, 76 Waterloo
 Pearson Charles, machine closer, 7 Robert st.
 Pearson Charles, painter, &c. 23 Wood street
 Pearson Edw. j. carpenter, 42 Palmerston rd.
 Pearson Francis, j. tailor, 85 Upper Thrift st.
 Pearson George, whitesmith, 19 Mount street
 Pearson Mr Stephen, 79 Waterloo
 Pebody James, rate collector, 39 Wood street
 Pebody John, cart owner, 6 Green lane
 Peckover Joseph (Barnes & Peckover), and insurance agent, 50 St Giles' street
 Peet Samuel, j. bookbinder, 22 Union street
 Peirce Geo. cabinetmaker, &c. 35 Kerr st.
 Peirce James, gas rate col. 33 Commercial st.
 Peirce Miss Sarah Ann, 36 Newland
 Peirce Wm. Jno. auctioneer, appraiser, land and estate agent, and sheriff's officer, 5 Derngate; house, 2 Castilian street
 Pell David, shopkeeper, 38 Grafton street
 Pell George, ironmonger, 46 Bridge street
 Pell George, beerhouse, St James' end
 Pell Joseph, j. tailor, 13 Park street
 Pell Mark, shoemaker, 1 Pytchley street
 Pell Miss Martha Sophia, dressmr. 48 Waterloo
 Pell Stephen, shoemaker, 59 Newland
 Pendred Benjamin, rope, twine, &c. manufacturer, 31 Bridge street
 Pendred Thos. tailor, &c. 124 Lower Thrift st.
 Pendred Thos. jun. j. tailor, 83 Palmerston rd.
 Pendred Wm. 64 Great Russell street
 Penn Miss Amelia, machin. clostr. 51 Bird's piece
 Penn Chs. shopr. gardr. & beer ret. 79 Vernon st.
 Penn Ed. j. shoemaker, 94 Lower Thrift st.
 Penn Edward, sexton of St Giles' 22 Wood st.
 Penn Mrs Emma, shopkr. & beer ret. 27 Mount st.
 Penn Fredk. boot and shoemaker, 45 Gold st.
 Penn John, clicker, 15 Kerr street
 Penn Mrs Mary, vict. Rose & Crown, 45 Gold st.
 Penn Richard, j. shoemkr. 12 Bull Head lane
 Percival George, clicker, 64 Kettering road
 Percival George, greengro. 51 Wellington st.
 Percival Harry Langton, greengro. 22 Bailiff st.
 Percival John, market gardener, 9 Albert st.
 Percival Joshua, cemetery superintendent, Cemetery-back lodge
 Percival William, surgeon, 66 Abington st.
 Perkins Samuel Edward, & Co. grocers and tallow chandlers, 36 Gold street
 Perkins Edw. & Son, blacksmiths, 27 St Katharine street, and Cotton end
 Perkins Mrs Caroline, greengr. 2 Abington sq.
 Perkins Edw. (& Son), hos. 27 St Katharine st.
 Perkins Edward, jun. (Edward & Son), house, 6 Quart Pot lane
 Perkins Fredk. greengro. 33 Wellingboro' rd.
 Perkins Fredk. nursery, seedsman & florist, 2 Gold st. & vict. Queen's Arms, 6 Market sq.
 Perkins John Edward & Son, nursery and seedsman, 52 Drapery and Billing road
 Perkins John, grocer, tea dealer, and cheesemonger, 47 Drapery; house, 5 Adelaide ter.
 Perkins Joseph, brewery agent, 1 Bedford pl.
 Perkins Robert, dairyman, 26 Wood street
 Perkins Ths. sewing-machn. mkr. 28 Regent st.
 Perkins Thomas, nursery, seedsman & florist, 42 Drapery; Kingshorpe & Wootton Nurseries; house, 18 Primrose hill
 Perkins William, greengrocer, 5 Abington sq.
 Perrin Henry, whitesmith, 15 Kingswell st.
 Perrin Mrs Charlot. milliner, 45 St Giles' st.
 Perrin James, whitesmith, 45 St Giles' street
 Perrin Michael, beerhouse, 25 Crane street
 Perrin Mr William, 9 Black Lion hill
 Perry Jno. & Son, corn milrs. & merts. Tanner st.
 Perry Francis, j. shoemaker, 40 Freehold st.
 Perry John (Executors of), maltsters, corn factors, coal & coke merts. Bridge st. wharf
 Perry Pickering Phipps (John Perry & Son), a Becket House, 82 Waterloo
 Petchell John, & Son (John, jun.), shoe manufacturers, 22 Castle street
 Pettit John, foreman skinner, 32 St Peter's st.
 Pheasey Rd. beerhouse, 19 Commercial street
 Phillips Brothers, brewers and maltsters, Steam Brewery, and Burton-on-Trent
 Phillips Alfred Charles (Phillips Brothers), house, Milton
 Phillips Charles, sculptor, 8 Wood street
 Phillips Charles, j. shoemaker, 6 Charles st.
 Phillips Rev. James, M.A. (Abington House School), 102 Abington street
 Phillips Mrs Sarah, 37 Wood street
 Phillips Thomas (Phillips Brothers), h. Wootton
 Phillips William George (Phillips Brothers), house, The Elms, Billing road

Philpott Thomas, shopkeeper, 20 Grafton st.
 Philpott William, j. currier, 4 Bull lane
 Phipps Pickering & Richard, brewers, maltsters, hop, wine, and spirit merchants, Northampton Brewery, and Towcester
 Phipps & Son, drapers, furnishing warehousemen, upholsterers, cabinetmakers, & wholesale shoe mercers, 10 Gold street
 Phipps Edw. agricul. implemt. mkr. timber & seed mert. Cotton end; house and auctioneer and farmer, Islip, Thrapston
 Phipps Edward, French polisher, Kingswell st.
 Phipps Jas. Allen, shopkeeper, St James' end
 Phipps Jn. J. P. & Son, h. Earls Barton Grange
 Phipps John, jun. (Phipps & Son), house, Sunnyside, Billing road
 Phipps Pickering, (Pickering & Richard Phipps), house, Collingtree
 Phipps Richard (Pickering & Richard Phipps), house, 6 Spencer parade
 Phipps William, bank cashier, 40 Waterloo
 Phipps William, tobacco dealer, 100 Bridge st.
 Picken Thomas Geo. cowkpr. 63 Kettering rd.
 Pickering Samuel, boot and shoe maker, 14 Drapery; house, 15 York parade
 Pidcock John Hyde, C.E., surveyor to Improvement Commissioners, Town hall; house, Belville house, Billing road
 Pike David, house agent, 6 Vernon street
 Pilgrim Geo. machine repairer, 11 Mayorhold
 Pinkard Robert, currier and leather seller, Duke street, Bailiff street; h. 61 Newland Pinkard Samuel, herbalist, 142 Wellingbro' rd.
 Pinkard Thomas, town crier, 1 Mount street
 Pinex Robert, j. carpenter, 3 Denmark road
 Pittman Miss Ann, day school, 47 College st.
 Pitt Thomas, butcher, 45 Grafton street
 Pittam Edward, machine closer, 17 Grafton st.
 Pittani Thomas, 8 Harrison road
 Pitta George, pork butcher, 20 Marefair
 Pitta Mrs Hannah, 36 Victoria street
 Pitta Mrs Rose, pork butcher, 45 Bridge st.
 Pitta Thos. machine upper closer, 37 Louise rd.
 Pitts William, grocer, 15 St Giles' street
 Platt J. shoe manfr. Woodford st.; h. 43 Vict. rd.
 Plowman Daniel Albert, j. joiner, 71 Bailiff st.
 Plumb Thomas, victualler, Half-Way House, Kingsthorpe road
 Podmore Joseph, j. currier, 4 Albert street
 Pointer James shopkpr. & beerho. 97 Bath st.
 Pointer Thomas, whitesmith, &c. 16 Silver st.
 Pollard Charles, j. shoemaker, 34 Lorne road
 Pollard Edmund, shoe manufacturer, Queen street; house, 30 St James' street
 Pollard Edwin, pork butcher, 6 Wood street
 Pollard Jas. butcher & beerho. St James' end
 Pollard John, j. shoemaker, 18 Castle street
 Pollard Samuel, beerhouse, 7 King street
 Pollard Thomas, machine closer, 17 Alfred st.
 Ponting Mrs Eliz. pork butcher, 18 Mayorhold
 Pool Elijah, joiner & builder, 21 Lawrence st.
 Poole Frederick, joiner and builder, Ash st.
 Poole Joseph Frederick, shoe manuf. Adelaide st. and London; James Gillham, manager
 Poole Wm. carpenter and builder, 7 Broad st.
 Pooler John, managing draper, 55 Abington st.
 Portal William Thomas, wine, spirit, and hop merchant, 8 Gold street; house, Springfield Porteous Alexander, beerhouse, 1 Western ter.
 Porter Mrs Elizabeth, 1 Thenford street
 Porter, John Slater, turner and ironmonger, 58 Bridge street

Porter Joseph, 58 Bridge street
 Porter Joseph Mold, riveter, 18 Lorne road
 Porter William, 2 St Andrew's terrace
 Potter Robt. machine closer, 59 Palmerston rd.
 Povey Mrs My. furniture bror. 4 Commercial st.
 Powell Edmund, j. shoemaker, 60 Newland
 Powell Geo. brush manfr. & ironmgr. 66 Sheep st.
 Powell Isaac, shoe manager, 15 Broad street
 Powell John, toy, &c. dealer, 17 Marefair
 Powell Walter James, j. bank-note mould maker, 16 Vernon terrace
 Powell William, com. trav. 8 Elysium terrace
 Powers Miss Ann, hosier, &c. 14 Wellington pl.
 Poynter, Geo. j. shoemaker, 100 Lower Thrift st.
 Poyser Wm. lookseller's asst. 39 Alexandra rd.
 Pratt Mrs Ann, shopr. & beerho. 71 Melbournest.
 Pratt Charles, clerk, 87 Upper Thrift street
 Pratt Joseph, Blake's machine operator, 172 Wellingborough road
 Pratt Owen Sturgess, joiner & bldr. 13 Kerr st.
 Pratt William, hatter, 79 Woolmonger street
 Pressland & Son, drapers & share bra. 37 Drapery
 Pressland Thomas (& Son), ho. 73 St Giles' st.
 Pressland Thomas (& Son), jun. ho. 39 Drapery
 Preston Alfred, leather seller, 26 Augustine st.
 Price Charles, j. currier, 13 Victoria road
 Price George, shopkeeper, 16 Cow lane
 Price James, draper's asst. 79 Palmerston rd.
 Price John, beerhouse, 38 Abington street
 Prior Charles, boot closer, 57 Lorne road
 Procter Charles William, clerk, Denmark rd.
 Prue John, pork butcher, 27 Abington street
 Prust Rev. Edmund Thornton (Independent), 66 Waterloo
 Pugh Wm. rlwy. col. (L. & N.W.), 92 Louise rd.
 Pulley John, j. shoemaker, 43 Bull lane
 Pullin Mrs Eliza, 3 Elysium terrace
 Purser Thomas, baker, &c. 26 Sawpit lane
 Puttnam Chas. fishmon. & fruiter, 16 Marefair
 Puttnam Mrs My. Ann, poultr. fishmr. 11 Bridgest
 Puttnam Thomas, fishmonger, 28 St Giles' st.

RABBITT JAS. shoe manufr. 31 Greyfriars' st.
 Rabbra George James, j. cooper, 50 Cyril st.
 Race Edward, coal dealer, 98 Bath street
 Rae Mrs Margaret, lodgings, 41 College street
 Rainbow William, joiner, builder, valuer, &c. and cab proprietor, 16 St Edmund's st.
 Ralley John, beerhouse, 171 Bridge street
 Ramsay Rev. Andrew Chrysostom, B.A. curate of St Michael and All Angels, 22 Alfred st.
 Randall & Wickes, shoe manfrs. St Andrew's sq.
 Randall Hy. Edw. (R. & W.), h. 11 St George's pl.
 Randall Hy. Ross, warhman. 28 Greyfriars' st.
 Randall Samuel, j. currier, 13 Bearward street
 Rands George, solicitor, 43 Newland
 Rands Wm. mechanical engineer, 36 York st.
 Rappin Jas. j. shoemaker, 57 Palmerston rd.
 Ratledge Fredk. grindery dlr. 31 Bailiff st.
 Ratledge John, bricklayer, 77 Palmerston rd.
 Ratliffe & Jeffery, brewers, maltsters, and hop factors, Albion Brewery
 Ratliffe Thos. (R. & Jeffery), ho. 4 Albion pl.
 Ratnett James, newsagent, 27 Bridge street
 Rawles Frederick, riveter, 17 Lorne road
 Rawlings Wm. shopkeeper, 55 Primrose hill
 Rea Ts. shoe mfr. 59 Exeter rd.; h. 94 Ketring rd.
 Read Charles, milliner, 1 Derrigate
 Read Thomas, newsagent, 31 Bull lane
 Redhead Jno. j. shoemaker, 90 Up. Thrift st.
 Redshaw Wm. builder, &c. 46 Wood street
 Reedy Matthias, shopkeeper, 21 Greyfriars' st.

Reeve Henry, beerhouse, 'St James' end
 Reeve William James, corn, flour, hay & seed dealer, 1 Horse market, & Birmingham
 Regan Mrs Sarah, lodgings, 47 Alexandra rd.
 Reeves Mr William, 11 Abington square
 Religious and Useful Knowledge Society, Gold street, Charles Wright, librarian
 Remmett Cathn. Elnr. dressmr. 63 Freehold st.
 Renshaw Wm. watchmaker, 48 Gold street
 Revitt Benjamin, builder, 74 Cyril street
 Revitt Eusebius, j. brickla. 17 St George's ter.
 Revitt John, stone mason & sculptor, Church lane; house, 5 Campbell square
 Reynolds Ebuzr. machn. closer 37 Bellbarn st.
 Reynolds George, j. carpenter, 32 York street
 Reynolds Isaiah, greengrocer, 19 Bearward st.
 Reynolds Joseph, shopkeeper, 5 Crispin street
 Reynolds Thomas, machine closer, Oak street
 Reynolds Thomas, carpenter, 33 Alexandra rd.
 Rice & Errington, shoe manfr. Bull head lane
 Rice Wm. & Co. ironfounders, stove, grate, and range manufacturers, Eagle Foundry; house, Brier Hill, Far Cotton
 Rice Mrs Sophia, laundress, 31 Denmark road
 Rice Thomas, j. carpenter, 72 Waterloo
 Rice Wm. Hy. (R. & Errington), h. 55 Lawrence st.
 Rice Wm. j. bricklayer, 20 Lawrence street
 Rich Ambridge, joiner & beer retr. 46 Deal st.
 Richards Albert, shopkeeper, 40 Horsemarket
 Richards Charles, j. tailor, 12 St Mary's street
 Richards Herbert, furniture broker, 51 College street; house, 90 Cyril street
 Richards Wm. Hy. upholsterer, Bird's piece
 Richards Wm. Hornby, clerk, 43 Semilong
 Richardson Alfred, grocer, &c. 14 Newland
 Richardson Jas. Blun. butcher, 30 Lawrence st.
 Richardson T. vict. Spread Eagle, 37 Bridge st.
 Richardson William, clerk, 1 Woodford street
 Rigby Wm. cabinet, Venetian blind, and bat maker, and French polisher, Dychurch lane; and beerhouse, 97 Bridge street
 Rigby Wm. draper's assistant, 16 Victoria st.
 Ringrose John, butcher, 'St James' end
 Ringrose John, porter, 2 Greyfriars' street
 Rippiner Geo. maltster's manager, Derngate
 Risby Mrs Charlotte, 78 Abington street
 Rixon Mrs Mary, brick manuf. 4 Freehold st.
 Robbins Joseph, poulterer, 46 Cow lane
 Robbins Mrs Sar. shopk. & beerho. St John's st.
 Robbins Wm. fishmonger, 40 Scarletwell st.
 Roberts Alfred, butcher, 11 Upper mounts
 Roberts Dan. plum. & pntr. 22 Wellington pl.
 Roberts Mrs Eliza, 7 Albion place
 Roberts George, baker, shopkeeper, and beerhouse, 1 Upper Harding street
 Roberts George, tobacconist, 19 Mayorhold
 Roberts Mrs Harriet, tobacco-pipe manufacturer, 63 Scarletwell street
 Roberts Peter, house agent, shopk. 71 Edith st.
 Roberts Richd. excise officer, 45 Alexandra rd.
 Roberts Robert, tobacconist, 76 Bailiff street
 Roberts Samuel, tailor, 50 Green street
 Roberts Ths. Gulvr. grocer's asst. 14 Albion cres
 Roberts William, whitesmith, &c. 24 Fish st.
 Robertson Jas. j. tailor, 80 Upper Thrift st.
 Robins Mrs Eliz. dressmkr. 68 Woolmonger st.
 Robins John, beerhouse, 2 Gas street
 Robins Wm. wood turner, 63 Woolmonger st.
 Robinson & Hegg, curriers & leather slrs. Elm st
 Robinson Chas. j. basketmaker, 32 Freehold st.
 Robinson Chas. Iveson, j. erpnter. 33 Denmark rd
 Robinson Mrs Emily, lodgs. 22 Greyfriars' st.

Robinson Miss Emily, draper, 'St James' end
 Robinson Francis Charles, registrar of births and deaths for St Giles' district, 24 Wood st.
 Robinson Frederick Anthony, chief clerk at borough treasurer's office, 25 St George's ter.
 Robinson George, j. tailor, 2 Kerr street
 Robinson George, county finance clerk, house, 25 St George's terrace
 Robinson Henry, butcher, 64 Wellington st.
 Robinson Hy. Albert, solr's. clk. 53 Denmark rd
 Robinson John (Robinson & Hegg), house, 4 Campbell square
 Robinson Jonathan, shoe manufacturer, 34 Bath street; house, 22 Sheep street
 Robinson Jph. tailor and draper, 68 Sheep st.
 Robinson Jph. Haigh, watchmkr. 12 Gold st.
 Robinson Thos. shopkeeper, 55 Melbourne st.
 Robinson Thomas, j. currier, 10 Albert street
 Robinson Thomas, inspector of corn returns, house, 8 Primrose hill
 Robinson Wm. boot & shoe manufr. 3 Wood st
 Robinson William, clerk, 5 St Giles' terrace
 Robinson William, tailor, 18 Derngate
 Robinson Wm. Htly. baker & shopk. 5 Mayorhold
 Robson Rev. William Henry Fairfax, A.K.C. vicar of St Giles', 76 St Giles' street
 Roche Charles Bennet, solicitor, 10 St Giles' street; house, Dacentry
 Roddis Mrs Amy, victualler, Black Lion, 1 Black Lion hill
 Roddis Capel Austn. shoe manfr. 104 Bailiff st.
 Roddis John, clicker, 6 Thomas street
 Roddis Robert, butcher, 5 Marefair
 Roddis William, j. shoemaker, 10 Lorne road
 Roe Charles, shopkeeper, 'St James' end
 Roe Geo. shopk. & beerhouse, 24 Ptychley st.
 Roe Miss Mary Ann, 6 Harrison road
 Roe Richard, grindery dealer, 2 Bouverie st.
 Roe William, tripe dresser, 22 Silver street
 Roe Wm. j. cabinetmaker, 22 St James' st.
 Rodbard Benj. Lowless, wine and spirit merchant, 10 Market sq.; ho. 108 Abington st.
 Rohrer Ths. shopkpr. & beerh. 44 Kettering rd
 Rolfe William, baker, St Katherine's terrace
 Roper William, shoemaker, 12 King street
 Rose & Westley, Blake's machine operators, 30 Wellingborough road
 Rose Hy. Darley, beerhouse 16 Newland
 Rose Hezekiah, bricklayer & beerh. 11 Fish st.
 Rose Isaiah (Rose & Westley), h. 9 York ter.
 Rose Capt. Thos. sec. of Orphanage, St Giles' st.
 Ross Wm. hairdress. & newsagt. 35 Bellbarn st
 Roughton Charles, riveter, 23 Inkerman ter.
 Roughton James, riveter, 8 Inkerman terrace
 Roughton Thomas, shoemaker, 51 Newland
 Rowden Mrs Sarah, cutler, 13 Abington st.
 Rowe Andrew, clicker, 24 Lorne road
 Rowlatt Joseph, librarian of Mechanics' Institute; h. 31 Ash street
 Rowledge Samuel, carpenter, Ethel street
 Rowledge Thomas, joiner, Lady's lane; house, 22 St Edmund's street
 Roworth Jph. confr. & shopk. 5 Lr. Harding st.
 Rowthorn Owen, machine clear. 32 St George's st
 Rubbra Charles Henry, clerk, 15 Wood street
 Rudge Charles, compositor, 16 Prince street
 Rush Edward, B.A., Principal of Clevedon College, Abington street
 Rush James, commercial traveller, 26 Kerr st.
 Rush Samuel, milliner and baby linen warehouse, 26 Gold street
 Rush William, solicitor's clerk, 31 Kerr st.

Rushton Japh. bookseller, statnr. bookbinder,
Berlin wool and fancy repository, 35 Gold st.
Russell William, blacksmith, 28 College street
Rymer & Shepard, tanners, curriers, & leather merchants, 7 Wood street
Rymer Mrs Agnes Elizabeth (Rymer & Shepard), house, London
Rymer Wm. Goodworth, clk. 15 St George's ter.
Rymill John, corkcutter, 15 Newland

SABBAGE WILLIAM (& DICKINS) Mrs Ann, victuallers, Green Man, St James' end
Sabbage George Eli, butcher and beerhouse,
12 St Andrew's street

Sabbage James Hooper, victualler, King's Arms,
38 Horse market

Sabbage Mr Joseph, 17 Broad street
Saddington, James, tailor, 26 Victoria street
Saddington Wm. grcr. prov. & coal dlr. 39 Park
street

Sadler Joseph, shopman, 41 Alexandra road
Sale John, coal merchant, 12 Pytchley street
Sale William, higgler, Cotton end

Salmon Thomas, trunk & packing-case maker, furniture broker & undertaker, 88 Bridge st.

Samwell Fred. shopkr. 60 Wellingboro' road
Samwell Hy. milliner, 70 Wellingborough rd.

Samwell Joseph, compositor, 5 Thenford st.

Sandall Mr Robert, 13 Langham place

Sandall Wm. chemist and druggist, 2 Drapery

Sanders & Willson, coachbuilders, 40 Marefair

Sanders Chas. (Sanders & Willson), h. 40 Marefair

Sanders Rev. Samuel John Woodhouse, M.A.

F.G.S. LL.M. head master of grammar school, 3 Spencer parade

Sanders Miss Sarah, 1 Spencer parade

Sanders Wm. bkr. shopkr. & beerh. 87 Bath st.

Sanderson John Wm. blksmith. 18 Horse mrkt.

Sands Thos. milliner (Mee & Sands), house

12 Bridge street

Sanford John, Bracebridge, 43 York street

Sargeant Mrs Eliz. shirtmkr. 9 Greyfriars' st.

Sargeant Jno. pork buchr. & beerh. 18 Regent sq.

Sargeant Robert, butcher, Cow lane

Sargeant Jas. market gardnr. Kingthorpe rd.

Sanders Misses Sarah & Eliz. milliners, 11

Market sq.

Savage Mrs Esther, St James' end

Savery Wm. shoemaker, 27 Great Russell st.

Savory Edward, ink and curriers' size manufacturer, 21 Castle street

Saull William, vict. Swan, 8 Derngate

Saull Samuel, vict.'s asst. 13 Castilian street

Sawbridge Mrs Elizabeth, 9 Victoria terrace

Sawbridge Fred. butcr. & beer rtr. Vernon ter.

Sawbridge Wm. j. carpenter, 9 Greyfriars' st.

Sawbridge Wm. wheelwt. & blks. St John's st.

School of Art (Government), Abington square;

Stephen Thomas, head master

Schwerer Jph & Chas. watchmks. 51 Bridge st.

Scott Very Rev. Canon Christopher, D.D.

(Catholic), Bishop's House, Leicester road

Scott Edward & Samuel, shoe manufacturers,

42 Wellingborough road, and Glasgow

Scott Mrs Elizabeth, 44 York street

Scott Geo. Bent. j. carpenter, 36 Greyfriars' st.

Scott Jas. carpenter & joiner, 22 Horse mrkt.

Scott Mr John, 21 Wood street

Scott Thos. John, clerk, 27 Alexandra road

Scriven & Terry, solicitors, 4 Derngate

Scriven Thomas (Scriven & Terry), house, 8

Spencer parade

Scudamore James, asphalter, 11 Castilian st.

Seaby Mrs Ann, 11 Royal terrace

Seaby Miss Eliza, dressmaker, 11 Wood st.

Seaby Mrs Mary, 27 Kerr street

Seaby Richard, milliner and straw hat maker,

35 Bearward street

Seaby Wm. cab & livery stable proprtr. & vict.

Bull, 16 Regent square

Seal Jeph. soda-water manfr. 49 St James' st.

Seamark Wm. travelling draper, 7 Castilian st.

Sears Geo. & Co. shoe manufrs. 41 Silver st.

Sears James (George & Co.), 41 Silver street

Seaton Wm. j. shoemaker, 18 Denmark road

Sebridge Thomas, shopkr. 118 Great Russell st.

Seckham Samuel Lipscombe (Phillips Brothers), house Hanah Hall, Lichfield

Sellers Daniel, vict. Shakespeare, 3 Marefair

Serjeant Henry, shoe manufr. 22 Regent st.

Sewell Chas. furniture broker, 45 Bearward st.

Sharman Daniel, butcher, 16 Lady's lane

Sharman Mrs Eliz. lodgings, 5 Alexandra rd.

Sharman Frederick, butcher, 53 Bath street

Sharman George, j. carpenter, 40 St Giles' st.

Sharman Jph. machine closer, 3 Victoria rd.

Sharman Lewis, j. shoemaker, 67 Denmark rd.

Sharp John, shoemaker, 90 Wellingboro' rd.

Sharp Mrs Martha, midwife, 18 Wellingboro' rd.

Sharp Robert, j. painter, 50 Bailiff street

Sharp William, beerhouse, 5 Castle hill

Sharpe Miss Eliz. drasmkr. 86 Wellingbro' rd.

Sharpe Thomas, manager, 46 Drapery

Shaw Brothers, shoe manufacturers, 45 Woolmonger street

Shaw Mrs Martha, boot maker, 8 Mercer's row

Shaw Sam. machine closer, 18 St Andrew's st.

Shaw Sam. Benj. (Shaw Bros.) h. 8 Mercer's row

Shaw Thos. vict. Angel & Commercial Hotel

and posting-house, 23 Bridge st. & Blisworth

Shaw Wm. Stariner (Brothers), h. 8 Mercer's row

Shea Patrick, builder, 49 Victoria road

Sheffield John, shopkeeper and beerhouse,

44 St Edmund's street

Shelton Jabez Charles, draper, 57 Gold st.

Shelton Martin, maltster, 46 Waterloo

Shelton Miss My. Ann, milliner, 37 St Giles' st.

Shelton John, j. currier, 12 Froeschool st.

Shelton Rev. Thos. (Baptist), 37 St Giles' st.

Shelton Thos. maltster, Derngate; house and corn merchant, Oundle

Shemeld Brothers, bookbinders, printers, and manufacturing stationers, 8 Sheep street

Shemeld Alfred, j. joiner, 5 Princess street

Shemeld Miss Ann, school, 35 Alexandra rd.

Shemeld Henny (Brothers), h. 43 College st.

Shemeld Joseph (Brothers), h. 12 Lady's lane

Shepard Mr Stephen, 20 York parade

Shepard Thomas, J.P., currier & leather merchant, &c. (Rymer & Shepard), house, St

Edmund's villa, Billing road

Shepherd Wm. Bradshaw, draper (Norman, Shepherd, & Manning), 24 Albion place

Sheppard Charles, clerk, Thomas street

Sheppard Miss Emma, school, 1 Victoria ter.

Sheppard Mrs Harriet, 1 Victoria terrace

Sheppard James Thos., engineer, and boot and shoe machine manufacturer, Guildhall road; house, 22 Alexandra road.

Sheppard Wm. riveter, 10 Charles street

Sheppard Wm. ironmonger, 69 Bridge st.

Sherwell David, shoe manufacturer (Harday

& Co.) house, 45 Horse market

Sherwell Mrs Mary, 31 Wood street

- Sherwin Wm. beerhouse and coal dealer, 30 Green street
- Shipman John & Walter, wine & spirit merchants and victs. White Hart, 12 Drapery
- Shipman John (J. & W.), h. 5 Primrose hill
- Shipman John Joshua, chemist, 22 Bridge st.
- Shipman Mr Luke, Derngate
- Shipman Walter (J. & W.), 12 Drapery
- Shipp John, clicker, 2 Albion crescent
- Shoosmith Wm., solicitor and town clerk, 2A Newland; house, Billing road
- Shrewsbury Fred. hosier & glover, 6 Geo. row
- Shrewsbury Geo. rent collector, 7 Denmark rd.
- Sibley Mr James Thomas, Vigo villa
- Sibley William, shopman, 27 Greyfriars' st.
- Simons Mrs Matilda, 1 Spring gardens
- Simons Samuel, beerhouse, 12 Lawrence st.
- Simmons Chas., manager, 160 Bridge street
- Simpson George, bootmaker, 105 Bridge st.
- Simpson Thos. Harrison, school inspector's assistant, 9 Thenford street
- Simpson William, grocer, tea, and provision dealer, 9 Sheep street
- Singer Manufacturing Sewing Machine Co. 11 Abington street
- Sirett John, clerk, 6 Denmark road
- Skempton Wm. baker, &c. 132 Scarletwell st.
- Skinner Geo. shopk. & beerh. 7 Up. Priory st.
- Slater Edward, 35½ Alexandra road
- Slater Edward George, butcher, Leicester road
- Slater Leonard Warren, beerh. 48 Primrose hill
- Slater William, j. tailor, 6 Greyfriars' street
- Slaymaker Thos. shoe manfr. 27 St Mary's st.
- Smalley Thomas, clerk, 61 Denmark road
- Smart Edward, machine closer, 23 Grafton st.
- Smart Edwin, master of St Sepulchre's school, h. 24 Lawrence place
- Smart John, furniture broker, 25A Bridge st.
- Smart Joseph, j. shoemaker, 34 Kerr street
- Smedley Herbert, clerk, 20 Denmark road
- Smeed Gurney, shoe manufacturer, Newland, h. 3 St Andrew's terrace
- Smith Brothers, upholstrs. cabt. mnfrs. paper hangrs. house decortrs. builders & contrtrs. carvers, gilders, plumrs. & glaziers; & timber, lead, glass, oil, & colr. mercts. 28 Gold st.
- Smith Rd. & Co. drapers, 17 Market square
- Smith Robert, & Co. shoe manfrs. 2 Lady's ln.
- Smith Mrs Ann Elizabeth, 19 Albert street
- Smith Mrs Ann, butcher, 4 Wellingborough rd.
- Smith Charles, machine closer, 30 Victoria st.
- Smith Mr Charles, 17 Castilian street
- Smith Mr Charles, 65 Denmark road
- Smith Chas. dentist's assist. 96 Lr. Thrift st.
- Smith Chas. shoe manufactr. 13 Vernon ter.
- Smith Charles, cooper, Swan yard
- Smith Charles, riveter, 7 Pytchley street
- Smith Charles, blocker, 37 Park street
- Smith Chas. John, plumr. & pntr. 55 Newland
- Smith Cornelius, shoe manufr. 19 Broad st.
- Smith Danl. town misseny. 20 Alexandra rd.
- Smith David Berkin, provision dealer, 23 Bridge street; h. 36 York street
- Smith Edward, shopkeeper and beer retailer, 28 Lawrence street
- Smith Edw. fishm. 28 Wellingborough road
- Smith Edw. umbrella mkr. 47 Wellingboro' rd.
- Smith Miss Elizabeth, dressmaker, 35 York st.
- Smith Francis, machine closer, 42 Bailiff st.
- Smith George, machine closer, 43 Exeter rd.
- Smith George, tailor, j. 13 Wellington st.
- Smith Mr George, 20 Albion place
- Smith George, engineer, land agent, and surveyor, 3 Exchange bldgs.; h. 10 Primrose hill
- Smith Geo. linendraper & hosier, 15 Regnt. sq.
- Smith Geo. carpenter, &c. 28 Alexandra road
- Smith Mrs Han. rgstr. off. for servts. 19 Derng.
- Smith Henry (Smith Bros.), h. 28 Gold st.
- Smith Henry, coachbuilder, Midland Carriage Works, 15 St John's st.
- Smith Hewlett, machine closer, 14 Lorne rd.
- Smith Jas. plumber & pntr. 129 Wellingboro' rd.
- Smith Jas. vict. Town Arms, 1 Gt. Russell st.
- Smith James, railway clerk, 4 Bedford place
- Smith Jas. cart proprietor, 37 Commercial st.
- Smith Jas. farmer, Upton; h. St James' end
- Smith Mr James Bury, 77 Waterloo
- Smith Jas. Edward, leather factor (Lewis & S.), house 1 Adelaide terrace
- Smith John, commercial traveller, Billing rd.
- Smith Jno. shopk. & beerh. 131 Wellingboro' rd.
- Smith John, j. boilermaker, 6 Harold street
- Smith John, j. shoemaker, 41 Bull lane
- Smith John, riveter, Church street
- Smith John, shopkeeper, 78 Broad street
- Smith John Gayleard, mach. clsr. 11 Robert st.
- Smith Joseph, j. painter, 30 Castle street
- Smith Joseph, j. shoemaker, 37 Regent st.
- Smith Josiah, shopkeeper, 15 Kettering road
- Smith Lewis, painter & milliner, 87 Horse mkt.
- Smith Mrs Martha, laundress, 13 Albert st.
- Smith Mrs Mary, 12 Lady's lane
- Smith Mrs Mary, bath proprietor, Cotton end
- Smith Rd. joiner and builder, 3 Princess st.
- Smith Samuel, shopkeeper, 31 Spring gardens
- Smith Thomas, j. carpenter, 9 Kettering rd.
- Smith Thomas, bill poster, 10 Princess st.
- Smith Mr Thomas, 64 Waterloo
- Smith Thos. furniture broker, 47 Lawrence st.
- Smith Thos. umbrella maker, 75 Horse mkt.
- Smith Thomas, fishmonger, 144 Bridge st.
- Smith Wm. grocer (Mobbs & S.), 7 St Giles' st
- Smith William, shoe manager, 7 Newland
- Smith William, fish dealer, Woolmonger st.
- Smith William, clothes dealer, 3 Bradehaw st.
- Smith William, manager, 2 Lady's lane
- Smith William, boot closer, 30 Augustine st.
- Smith William, wood turner, 7 Marefair
- Smith William, shopkeeper, 98 Bailiff street
- Smith Wm. Butler, j. grdnr. 98 Up. Thrift st
- Smith Wm. Easton, shopkr. 89 Horse market
- Smith, Wm. Hy. (Broths.) h. 49 College street
- Snedker John, clicker, 44 Bailiff street
- Snedker Joseph, j. shoemaker, 53 Lorne road
- Snow John, ironmonger (Mobbs, Snow, & Wood), h. 58 York street
- Snowling James, j. maltster, 28 St James' st.
- Soloman Levi, beerhouse, 121 Bridge street
- Sousce James, clerk, Victoria road
- Souster Robert Jonathan, undertaker and joiner, 36 Lawrence street
- Sparrow John, leather agt. 18 Palmerston rd.
- Sparrow Joseph, carpenter, &c. Kettering rd.
- Spatcher Wm. plumr. & paintr. 49 Lawrence st.
- Spawton Thos. Inchley, shopkr. 34 Silver st.
- Spawton Fred. Geo. butcher, 1 Mayorhold
- Speck John, timber foreman, Cotton end
- Spence Benjamin, com. agent, 1 Greyfriars' st.
- Spence Wm. stationer & bookbinder, 17 Newland
- Spencer & Andrews, shoe manfrs. Exeter road
- Spencer Thos. machinist, 134 Scarletwell st.
- Spencer Thomas Robinson (Spencer & Andrews), h. 10 Harold street
- Spencer Wm. boot and shoemr. 13 St Giles' st.

Sperring Jas. currier, Castle st. ; h. 23 King st.
 Spick Wm. Henry, engineer at Asylum, 96
 Upper Thrift street
 Spires Ephraim, manager, West-end Industrial
 Co-operative stores, 43 Marefair.
 Spokes Daniel, grocer's assist. 8 Abington sq.
 Spokes George, linendraper and milliner, 10
 Drapery ; house, 5 Royal terrace
 Spokes Thomas, j. finisher, 32 Park street
 Spoor Jas. & Son, tailors, robe mks. hatters, hosiers, and glovers, Abington st. Wood hill, and 49 Maddox st. Bond st. London
 Spoor James (& Son), h. Abington street
 Spoor James Lockhart (& Son), h. London
 Spriggs Miss Sarah Selina, 21 Grafton street
 Spriggs Thomas, drayman, 26 Park street
 Sprittles William, shoemaker, 140 Bridge st.
 Spurgin Herbert Branwhite, surgeon (Barr & Spurgin), h. 49 Abington street
 Stageman Jonathan, carpenter and furniture broker, 40 Wellingborough road
 Stanford David Josiah, turner, 7A Marefair
 Stanford Geo. Albert, basketmr, 9 Bearward st.
 Stanford Jas. sexton, St Sepulchre's, 21 Regentsq.
 Stanford Mr Josiah, 13 Royal terrace
 Stanford William, plasterer, 23 Lower mounts
 Stanton & Son, printers, stationers, bookbinders, and publishers of Northampton
Advertiser, 24 Abington street
 Stanton Benjamin, shoe manufacturer, 2
 Victoria st. and beerhouse, 30 Horseshoe st.
 Stanton Mrs Charlotte, 27 Abington street
 Stanton Mrs Elizabeth, 64 Marefair
 Stanton John Underwood (Stanton & Son),
 house, 24 Abington street
 Stanton Joseph, j. shoemaker, 6 Grafton st.
 Stanton Mrs Phebe, 11 Victoria terrace
 Stanton Mrs Mary Ann (Stanton & Son),
 house, 24 Abington street
 Stanton Richd. tailor & draper, 23 Abington st.
 Stanton Mrs Susannah, 15 Victoria street
 Stanton Thomas, baker, &c. 16 St Giles' street
 Stapleton John, j. carpenter, 8 Thomas street
 Starmer Mr Ebenezer, Kingsthorpe road
 Starmer Elijah, j. shoemaker, 23 Park street
 Starmer John, clicker, 19 Sawpit lane
 Starmer Thos. shoe manfr. 105 L. Thrift st.
 Starr Bowkett Building Societies (141st and 144th), Exchange bldgs.; T. C. Manton, sec.
 Steel Misses Eliza & Charlotte, toy and fancy dealers, 36 Abington street
 Steele Walter, machine closer, 29 Pytchley st.
 Stevenson Mrs Ann, wine & sprt. merr. 21 Sheep st.
 Stenson & Co. iron manufacturers, Scrap
Forge Works, St James' end, Duston
 Stenson Silas Bradshaw, clerk, 72 Bird's piece
 Stenson Thos. barrack sergeant, Leicester rd.
 Stent Rev. Wm. Herbt. (Indt.), 23 Langham pl.
 Stephens Mr James Thomas, 61 Alexandra rd.
 Stephens Wm. engine driver, 31 St John's st.
 Stephenson Mrs Annie, matron of Girls'
 Orphanage, St Giles' street
 Stevens James, j. papermaker, 25 Alfred st.
 Stevens William, manager, 52 St Giles' street
 Stevens Wm., j. shoemaker, 24 Wellington pl.
 Stevenson Mrs Ann, shopkeeper and beer-house, 56 Great Russell street
 Stevenson Mrs Mry. Ann, shopkr. 9 Lr. Cross st.
 Stevenson Ths. beerh. & coal dlr. 46 Kettering rd.
 Stiff Wm. draper's assist. 88 Kettering rd.
 Stimpson Mr Frederick, 65 Marefair
 Stimpson Mr John, Primrose cot. Chain walk

Stimpson John, j. shoe manufr. 1 Princess st.
 Stimpson Miss Mary Ann, 3 St Katharine's ter.
 Stimpson William Edward, shoe mercer
 (Watkins & Stimpson), h. 44 Horse market
 Stirney Sam. John, watchmaker, 9 St Giles' st.
 Stokes Mrs Eliz. shopkr. 14 Wellingboro' road
 Stokes Henry, machine closer, Sawpit lane
 Stone Thos. & Son (Chas.), shoe mfra. 22 St
 Peter's street
 Storer Rev. Thomas, B.A., vicar of St
 Andrew's, 3 Adelaide terrace
 Storey Stephen, grocer, 59 Grafton street
 Stovin Joseph Bass, homœopathic chemist, 15
 Abington street
 Stradling William, riveter, 46 Lawrence st.
 Stratford Stephen, shopkeeper, 1 Francis st.
 Stratton Thos. j. shoemaker, 92 Kettering rd.
 Stringer Charles, blacksmith, 8 Bull head lane
 Stringer Robert, blacksmith, 6 Angel lane
 Strong Mr William, 19 Albion place
 Stroulger Thomas Polten, & Co. curriers and leather merchants, 38 Victoria street
 Stroulger William (Stroulger & Co.), house,
 5 Abington terrace
 Stubbs James, clerk, 67 Denmark road
 Stubbs Mrs Jane, 75 Waterloo
 Sturges Owen Wallace, j. mason, 74 L. Thrift st.
 Sturgess Leond. j. shoemr. 125 Wellingboro' rd.
 Sturgess Thomas, carpenter and undertaker,
 29 Alexandra road
 Sturman Wm. baker & flour dlr. 48 Bridge st.
 Suter Thomas, j. shoemaker, 12 Wellington pl.
 Sutton Rd. shopkpr. and beerho. 32 Dover st.
 Swain Thos. insp. of detecs. Police sta. Angel st.
 Swallow George Rushforth, corn and flour merch. 30 Market sq. & miller, Kingsthorpe
 Swallow Wm. last manufacturer, 35 Abington street, & vict. Trooper, 2 Market sq.
 Swindall Thos. shopkr. & beerh. 20 St James' st.
 Swindall Wm. Herbert, tobnst. 31 Abington st.
 Sykes Mrs Sarah, coal dealer, 20 Nelson st.
 Sykes William, beerhouse, 1 Victoria street

TAFFINDER, WILSON, & HALL, steam cultivators & agricultural engineers, 29 Broad st.
 Tarry Geo. baker & beerho. 40 Upper mounts
 Tarry Geo. shopkpr. and beerho. 37 York st.
 Tarry Jesse, j. shoemaker, 55 Bull lane
 Tarry John, butcher, 20 Grafton street
 Tarry Joseph, butcher, 2 Great Russell street
 Tarry William, butcher, 6 St Andrew's sq. and victualler, Three Tuns, 23 Market sq.
 Tassell Charles, j. butcher, 94 Cyril street
 Tassell Geo. Thomsn. confr. & baker, 10 Derngt.
 Taylor & Son, printers, booksellers, stationers, and toy dealers, 22 Gold street
 Taylor Henry Samuel, clerk, 11 Horsemarket
 Taylor Mrs Elizabeth, 5 Castilian street
 Taylor Frederick, shopkeeper, 32 St Giles' st.
 Taylor John (Taylor & Son), 22 Gold street
 Taylor Jph. grocer's assistant, 17 Pytchley st.
 Taylor Rd. foreman shoemr. 54 Victoria rd.
 Taylor Walter, j. currier, 5 William street
 Tear Edwin, finisher, 38 Bailiff street
 Tebbutt Abraham, clicker, 21 Sawpit lane
 Tebbutt Alfred, com. trav. 9 Vernon terrace
 Tebbutt Charles, manager, 4 St Andrew's ter.
 Tebbutt Dvd. furniture broker, 39 Grafton st.
 Tebbutt Geo. vict. Plume of Feathers, 9 Bradshaw street
 Tebbutt George Minards, shoe manufacturer,
 Robert street ; house, 3 Primrose hill

Tebbutt Joseph, compositor, 30 Albert street
 Tebbutt Thomas, shoe manuf. 24 King street ; house, 4 Spencer parade
 Tebbutt Wm. (Franks & T., shoe manuf.) h.
 31 Louise road
 Terry Henry, Esq. 32 Market square
 Terry Henry, jun. surgeon, 18 St Giles' street
 Terry William, solicitor and coroner (Scriven & Terry), house, Billing road
 Tew Alfred, shopkpr. and beerho. 13 Nelson st.
 Tew Robt. joiner and bricklry. 4 Woodford st.
 Thomas Joseph, j. painter, 124 Up. Thrift st.
 Thomas Stephen, head master of School of Art, Abington square ; house, 3 Vernon ter.
 Thomas Wm. booker. (Brown & T.), h. Castil. st.
 Thompson Samuel, & Son, hay, straw, corn, and flour dealers, 13 Gold street
 Thompson Geo. hairdr. 10 Wellingborough ro.
 Thompson John, horse brkr. 84 Kettering rd.
 Thompson John, shoe manufacturer, St Giles' terrace ; house, 19 Denmark road
 Thompson Joseph, j. tailor, 54 Wellingboro' rd.
 Thompson Sam. vict. Pheasant, 104 Bridge st.
 Thompson Samuel (T. & Son), & hay, corn, & coal mert. Grand Junction wharf, Cotton end Thompson Samuel Borrowoughs, tanner, Spring lane ; house, 12 Scarletwell street
 Thompson Mrs Sarah, midwife, 29 Bull lane
 Thompson Thos. j. shoemkr. 35 Pytchley st.
 Thompson Thos. Croft (& Son), h. 14 Kingswell
 street
 Thompson Thomas, foreman, 12 Lady's lane
 Thorley Fred. china, &c. dealer, 20 Drapery
 Thornicraft Valentine, cutter, 21 St Mary's st.
 Thornton Edward Dunkley, joiner and builder,
 Grove road, Kettering road
 Thornton William John, hairdresser (Berrill & Thornton), 6 Mercer's row
 Thorp Rev. William, B.D. curate of Hard-ingstone, 152 Bridge st
 Thorpe Henry Alf. assist. auctnr. 29 Kerr st.
 Thorpe Mrs Mary Eliza, school, Castle hall
 Thurnall Mrs Kathn. Winton villa, Billing rd.
 Timmins John, beerhouse, 51 Bearward st.
 Timms Wesley, grocer's assist. 62 Denmark rd.
 Timpson Chas. mkt. gardr. 22 St George's ter.
 Timpson Hy. shoe manuf. Ash st. ; h. 19 St
 George's place
 Timpson Isaac, shoe manager, 22 Alfred street
 Timpson Palmer, machine closer, Ash street
 Timpson Samuel, greengrocer, 91 Bath street
 Tipler George, boot closer, 15 Greyfriars' st.
 Tipler George Perkins, plumber, shopkeeper, and beer retailer, 40 Bailiff street
 Tipler Jas. machine repairer & agt. 2 Edith st.
 Tipler Joseph. machine closer, 34 Wellingbro' rd.
 Tipler Wm. machine closer, 98 Kettering rd.
 Tite William, tailor, 98 Wellingborough road
 Tite William, j. shoemaker, 30 Lorne road
 Todd William, musician, 1 College street
 Tom Rev. Edward Nicholls, M.A. rector of St
 Peter's
 Tomalin James, groom, 67 Abington street
 Tomalin Wm. solicitor, 4 St Giles' st. house 24
 York parade
 Tomes Wm. plumber & painter, 43 Bearward st.
 Tomlinson Francis, whitesmith, Sawpit lane ;
 h. 60 Bailiff street
 Tomlinson George, spring-cart builder and jobbing smith, King street
 Tompkins George, shopkeeper, 65 Cyril street
 Tompkins Thos. machine cloasr. 67 Lawrence st.

Tonks Valentine, master of Catholic school,
 56 Woolnonger street
 Tonsley David, confectioner, 22 Sheep street
 Tonsley Josiah Rechab, victualler, *Lord
 Palmerston*, 25 Market square
 Tonsley Wm. j. shoemr. 4 St Katharine's ter.
 Tooby Thos. Richard, shopkpr. 21 Tanner st.
 Tornberg Gustaf, ship mate, 28 Castle street
 Toseland Mr Michael, 28 Albert street
 Tourle James, jobbing gardener, 7 Cyril street
 Townley James, j. carpenter, 5 Thomas street
 Townley William, beerhouse, 106 Market st.
 Trade School, Waterloo, Charles Lees, F.C.S. principal
 Trasler William Brigstock, machine closer
 54 Bailiff street
 Travell Mrs Elizabeth, 10 Kerr street
 Trench James, shoe manufacturer, Wood st. ; house 7 Adelaide terrace
 Treadwell George, j. bricklayer, 43 Louise rd.
 Treadwell Wm. j. bricklayer, 22 Lawrence st.
 Tresham Edward, brewer, wine, spirit, and hop merchant, 1 St Andrew's terrace
 Tresham Richard Chapman, post-office clerk,
 13 Alexandra road
 Troup Alex. tobacst. beer & wine ret. 29 Drapery
 Trusler Thos. vict. Bull & Butcher, 94 Bridge st.
 Tucker Mr George, 20 St Peter's street
 Tucker Richard, com. trav. 30 Vernon street
 Tucker Wm. Witheridge, painter, 50 Bridge st.
 Tuckley George, furniture bro., 17 Raglan st.
 Tuckley Robert, shoemaker, 8 St John's ter.
 Tuckley Stpn. shopkpr. & beerh. 1 St Edmund st.
 Tuffley Edwd. Wornham, clothier, 49 Drapery
 Turl Mrs Mary, dressmaker, 4 Charles street
 Turner Brothers, Hyde & Co. shoe manufacts.
 Campbell sq. & 66 Aldermanbury, London
 Turner Mr Alfred, St James' end
 Turner Alfred, trav. china dlr. 13 Lorne rd.
 Turner Charles, compositor, 9 Cyril street
 Turner Mrs Elizabeth, 4 Elysium terrace
 Turner George (Turner Bros. Hyde & Co), house, 26 Derrigate
 Turner Mr Henry, 3 Leicester terrace
 Turner James, attend. at asylum, 88 Cyril st.
 Turner John, M.D. resident medical officer for the Friendly Societies' Medical Institute,
 11 St Giles' street
 Turner Lawr. Lovet, butcher, 10 Kingswell st.
 Turner Richard (Turner Bros. Hyde & Co), house, Billing road
 Turner Mr William, 27 Wellington place
 Tweed John, foreman smith, Cotton end
 Twine Thomas, clerk, 13 Cyril street
 Tyler Bros. shoe manufacturers, 46 Drapery, and Leicester and Sunderland
 Tyler Wm. currier and leather seller, 9 Kerr st.
 Tyler William, beerhouse, 153 Bridge street
 Tyrrell John, j. carpenter, 33 Greyfriars' st.
 Tyrrell Joseph, clicker, 51 York street
 Tyrrell Jno. William, clicker, 33 Greyfriars' st.

UNDERWOOD JOHN, coml. trav. 55 Lawrence st.
 Utley William, stone and marble mason, and milliner, 75 Wellingborough road

VALENTINE, Wm. shopkpr. 13 Freeschool st.
 Valentine Wm. jun. coal dlr. 20 The Green
 Varm Wm. machine closer, 16 Market street
 Varty Rev. Jno. (Independent), 15 Castilian st.
 Vaughan Geo. j. shoemaker, 10 The Green
 Vaughan Mr John, 4 Victoria terrace

Vaughan Saml. beerhouse, 61 St George's st.
 Vears James hairdresser, 13 Kettering road
 Verity Charles, j. shoemaker, St James' end
 Vernon James, clothes dealer, 86 Bridge st.
 Vernon John, warehouseman, 16 Denmark rd.
 Vernon John Heygate, draper, &c. 2 Newland
 Vernon John Middleton, wine, spirit, & hop merchant, Exchange buildings, Parade, &
Towcester; h. 9 Spring villa, Billing road
 Vernon Wm. warehouseman, 46 Cyril street
 Vials Benjamin, actuary of Savings bank, 8
 St Giles' square
 Vials Mr George, Billing road
 Vickers George Tomalin, master of Far Cotton school, Kingsthorpe road
 Vickers John, emigration agent, 77 Newland
 Vince John, drill instructor to rifle volunteers, St James' end
 Vogt Alfred, watchmaker, 8 Marefair
 Vorley Henry, shopkeeper, 7 St Andrew's sq.
 Vorley Hy. jun. shopkeeper, 1 Bellbarn st.

WADE WILLIAM, & SONS (John & Henry), fell-mongers and leather dressers, house, 8
 Black Lion hill, Elephant lane
 Wade James, tailor, 13 Castle street
 Wade Robert, boot and shoe manufacturer,
 40 St Peter's street
 Wade Wm. shoe manufr. 10 Augustine st.
 Wadhams John, carpenter and builder, 29
 Broad street; house, 7 Thomas street
 Wadsworth Wm. cab proprtr. 30 Sawpit lane
 Wainwright Robert, currier and beerhouse,
 25 and 27 Castle street
 Waite John, shoe manufr. 90 Lower Thrift st.
 Walden Dan. machine closer, 19 Grafton pl.
 Wadding James, shoe manufacturer, 70 Wel-
 lingtonborough road
 Wadding Thos. boot, &c. mkr. 46 Abington st.
 Walford Arthur, woollen draper (Wilde & Walford), house, Birmingham
 Walker Alf. shoe machine fitter, 4 Lorne rd.
 Walker Arton, gasfitter, 23 Horsemarket
 Walker Mrs Elizabeth, 26 Castle street
 Walker Henry, auctioneer, &c. (Macquire &
 Walker), house, 23 Langham place
 Walker James, clerk, 34 Green lane
 Walker James, shopkeeper, 30 Upper mounts
 Walker John, greengrocer, 24 St Giles' street
 Walker Samuel, clothes dealer, 46 Bearward st.
 Walker Sam. grainer & writer, 19 Victoria st.
 Walker Walter, solicitor, 1 Market square; h.
 4 Castilian street
 Wall Simon, draper, 3 Mercer's row
 Wall Joseph, master of Wesleyan school, St
 Katharine's street
 Wallington Henry, butcher, 16 Gas street
 Wallington Jph. j. shoemr. 100 Wellingboro' rd.
 Wallis Rev. Joseph (Prim Meth.), 33 York st.
 Walter Geo. Hy. pawnbroker, 122 Bridge st.
 Walter Wm. j. carver & gilder, 93 U. Thrift st.
 Walton Edwin Fletcher, clerk, 1 Leicester ter.
 Walton Thos. shopkr. & beerh. 96 Scarletwell st.
 Ward & Beeby, timber, slate, & coal merchants,
 Cotton end
 Ward Chas. leather cutter, 71 Palmerston rd.
 Ward Edw. vict. Robin Hood, St James' end
 Ward Fredk. shoe manufr. 67 Palmerston rd.
 Ward Harry, shoe manufr. 39 St James' st.
 Ward James, greengrocer 124 Bridge street
 Ward John, victualler, Mitre, 8 King street
 Ward Josia. grocr. & talo. chanlr. 73 Bridge st.

Ward Mrs Martha, grocer, 7 Abington street
 Ward Peter, labourer, 9 Stockley street
 Ward Richard, greengrocer, 58 Newland
 Ward Thomas, butcher, 150 Wellingboro' rd.
 Ward Thos. shopkr. & beerh. 59 St Edmund st.
 Ward Thos. Nichols, beerho. 23 G. Russell st.
 Ward Wm. coal dealer, 20 Bath street
 Ward William, shoemaker, 10 Bearward street
 Ward Wm. machine closer, 72 Kettering rd.
 Ward Wm. Hollowell, clicker, 75 Newland
 Warden John, beer retr., 124 Great Russel st.
 Wardle Mr Thomas, 14 Denmark road
 Warner Fred. hairdr. & perfumr. 54 Kettering rd.
 Warner John, tailor, 27 Commercial street
 Warner Mk. musicalr. and beerh. 15 Market sq.
 Warner William, muffin baker, 52 Newland
 Warnes Wm. furniture broker, 27 Mayoralhold
 Warr Mrs Sophia, ironmonger, 3A Market sq.
 Warr Thomas, shopkeeper, 36 Melbourne st.
 Warrell Joseph, j. carpenter, 2 Harrold street
 Warren Brothers, builders, Bailiff street
 Warren & Carter, grocers, tea and provision dealers, 1 Wellington place
 Warren & Sons, shoe manufacturers, 6 Newland
 Warren Arthur, greengrocer, 53 Bailiff st.
 Warren Eli, j. bricklayer, 66 Kettering road
 Warren Frank, designer, 17 Harrison road
 Warren Geo. clothes dealer, 48 Kettering rd.
 Warren Geo. (Bros.) beerho. 69 Lawrence st.
 Warren Horatio, grocer, tea and provision dealer (Warren Carter), 23 Drapery
 Warren Mr Hugh, 5 Wellington place
 Warren James, shoe finisher, 14 Victoria rd.
 Warren Joseph (Bros.), h. 21 Adelaide street
 Warren Jos. shopkeeper, 82 Great Russell st.
 Warren Mrs Mary, furn. brokr., 42 Abington st.
 Warren Ths. (W & Sons), shoemafr.; h. 29 Newld.
 Warren Wm. vict. Bull's Head, 33 Sheep st.
 Warren William, commission agent and clerk in Mercury office, 41 Victoria road
 Warren, William, machine closer, 52 Bailiff st.
 Warrington Peter, warehousmn. 34 Louise rd.
 Warwick John, j. brewer, 47 St James st.
 Warwick Mrs My. dressmr. 88 Wellingboro' rd.
 Wasley Henry, insurance agent, 15 Princess st.
 Waterfield Thomas Bryan, boot upper manufacturer, 58 Wellingborough road
 Watkin Frederick, shopkeeper, 69 Adelaide st.
 Watkin James & Son (Frederick) timber, slate,
 &c. merts. lime burners, brick mfrs. 40 Sheep st
 Watkin John, builder & contr. 15 St George's st.
 Watkins & Stimpson, shoe mercs. 44 Horse mkt.
 Watkins James William (Watkins & Stimpson), h. 27 Maple terrace
 Watts Thomas, & Son, fruiterers, seedsmen, and florists, 56 Gold st. and 110 Bridge st.
 Watts Alf. shopkr. and beerho. Alliston's gardna
 Watts John, shopkeeper, 1 Bristol street
 Watts John, cowkeeper, 65 Compton street
 Watts John, lodgings, 23 Cyril street
 Watts Jph. butcher & cowkr. 36 Augustine st.
 Watts Samuel, foreman, 52 Cyril street
 Watts Thos. j. shoemkr. 115 Upper Thrift st.
 Watts William, j. tailor, 80 Cyril street
 Watts Wm. tailor and draper, 78 St Giles' st.
 Waune William, ironmoulder, 11 Cyril st.
 Webb Charles, shopkeeper, 99 Market street
 Webb George, boot & shoe manufr. 1 Cromwell st
 Webb Mrs Hannah, shopkpr. 19 Bouverie st.
 Webb John, clicker, 41 Mount street
 Webb John, shoemaker, 57 Adelaide street
 Webb Rich. shopkpr. and beerh., 73 Market st.

N

Webb Thos. coal & firewood dr. 8 Scarletwell st.
 Webb William, beerhouse, 73 Scarletwell st.
 Webster Joseph, station master (L. and N. W.)
 h. Station villa, Cotton end
 Webster John Henry, physician, 31 Market sq.
 Weed George, j. shoemaker, 72 Kettering rd.
 Weightman Mr John, Cotton end
 Welch Alex. j. shoemaker, 4 St Edmund's st.
 Welchman Miss Anna Maria, 22 York parade
 Welchman Mr Edward Elers, 24 Gold street
 Wellby & Son (Octavius), watchmks, 6 Newland
 Wellings Mrs Mary, 3 Alexandra road
 Wells Israel, cabinetmaker, 86 Abington st.
 Wells James, coal merchant, Cotton end
 Wells Job Main, j. carpenter, 84 Cyril st.
 Wells John, finisher, 28 Denmark road
 Wells John, ironmonger, 48 Sheep street
 Wells Joseph, j. tailor, 1 Harrold street
 Wells Robert Wallis, coal agent, Cotton end
 Wells Samuel, grocer and provision dealer, 64
 Gold street; h. Victoria place, Billing road Wells William Robert, boot upper manufacturer, Victoria street; h. 9 Heater street West Biddles & Co. coal, lime, and salt merchants, 37 Sheep street
 West Benjamin Freeman, carpenter, 15 Albert street; h. 11 Victoria street
 West Edw. Freeman, j. carpenter, 8 Albert st.
 West Emanuel, blacksmith, 109 Bridge st.
 West John (West Biddles & Co.) house, *Market
 Harbrough*
 West Joseph, cartowner, 45 Kerr street
 West Joseph William, shoe manufacturer, 20
 Victoria street; h. 8 St George's place
 West Robert, baker and shopkpr. St James' end
 West Ths. Burrell, excise officer, 16 St George's ter.
 West William, machine closer, Semilong
 West William John, clerk, 34 Denmark road
 Westall Mrs Annie, school (Baden & Westall),
 2 Spencer parade
 Westley Jph. & Sons, corn and flour dealers,
 3 Abington street, and corn millers and coal merchants, Nun Mills and Blisworth
 Westley Geo. Wm. j. shoemaker, 23 Stockley st.
 Westley Joseph (& Sons), h. Blisworth
 Westley Mrs Martha, lodgings, 28 Albert st.
 Westley Samuel (& Sons), h. 3 Abington st.
 Westley Thomas, machine operator (Rose & Westley), h. 42 Vernon street
 Westley Wm. machine closer, 35 Lorne rd.
 Wetherell & Neepe, tanners, curriers, & leather merchants, 34 Newland & St James' end
 Wetherell James (W. & Neepe), h. Billing rd.
 Wetherell Thos. leather agent, 1 Langham pl.
 Wetton George Norman, agent for County
 (fire) and Provident (life) offices, 8 Drapery Whatcott Ebenezer, shoe manufacturer (Collins & Whatcott), h. 31 Brunswick street
 Wheatroft Geo. clerk, 3 St Peter's gardens
 Wheatley Daniel, baker, 29 Gas street
 Whimble Miss Mary Ann, 5 Albion place
 Whitbread Thomas, carpenter, 35 Alfred st.
 White Mrs Charlotte, 13 Palmerston road
 White Edwin Gent, hairdresser, 24 Marefair
 White Geo. machine closer, 118 Wellingbro' rd.
 White Geo. castrator and farmer, 13 Church ln.
 White John, shopkeeper, 3 Great Russell st.
 White Joseph, shopkeeper, 1 Regent street
 White Joseph, greengrocer, 45 Kettering rd.
 White Thos. groom, 31 Mount street
 White Wm. hairdresser, 176 Bridge street; and confectioner, 61 Gold street

White Wm. greengrocer, 31 Horseshoe st.
 White Wm. j. mason, 11 Maple street
 Whitehead Ebenezer, grocer and provision dealer, 13 Sheep street
 Whitehead Miss Isabella, Alfred street
 Whitehouse Thos. coal mer. and railw. waggon builder, Gas Works wharf; h. 8 South st.
 Whitehouse Mrs Sarah, 33 Alfred street
 Whitelaw Geo. tobacco mfr. and dr. 17 Gold st.
 Whiteman Jno. (W. & Son), h. 10 Langham pl.
 Whitford Robt. grocer, &c. St James' end
 Whiting Daniel, umbrella maker, 17 York ter.
 Whiting George, clerk, 9 St George's place
 Whiting Joseph, cook, 99 Upper Thrift street
 Whitmell Mrs Mary, 39 York street
 Whitmore & Son, watchmrs. & jewels. 42 Gold st.
 Whitmy Jas. auctnr. and surryr. 6 Castilian st.
 Whitney Geo. shoe sizer, 116 Upper Thrift st.
 Whitney Thomas, tobacconist, wine, and beer dealer, 58 Gold street
 Whittle Mrs Eliza, shopk. & beerho. 11 Foundry st
 Whitworth Hy. Billington, borough treasurer and iron manf. (Stenson & Co.), h. 9 Geo. row Whitworth Thomas, shopkeeper and beer retailer, 70 Lower Thrift street
 Wickens Chas. clerk to borough magistrates,
 Town hall; house, 6 Black Lion hill
 Wickes George, j. butcher, 23 Lorne road
 Wickes John, shopkeeper, 123 Great Russell st.
 Wickes John, butcher, 3 Regent square
 Wickes Thos. shoe manufacturer (Randall & Wickes), house, 28 St Andrew's square
 Wickes William, butcher, 35 Bull lane
 Wiggins George, machine closer, 3 Charles st.
 Wiggins George, working cutler and grinder,
 17 Bradshaw street
 Wilcox Mrs Eliz. beer ret. 56 Wellington st.
 Wilford Mrs Ann, 24 Alexandra road
 Wilford George, beer retailer, 1 West street
 Wilford John, hairdr., 168 Wellingborough rd.
 Wilford Thos. shopkeeper, 13 Inkerman ter.
 Wilkins Butler, dentist, 3 St Giles' square
 Wilkins John, beer retailer, 39 Bouverie st.
 Wilkinson Alfd. Geo. asst. surgn. 19 York par.
 Wilkinson Geo. j. currier, 43 Mount street
 Wilde & Walford, woollen drapers, 1 Sheep street, and Birmingham and Walsall
 Wilde John (Wilde & Walford), 1 Sheep st.
 Willeaden Robt. blacksh. & wheelr. St James' end
 Willett Thomas, j. shoemaker, Lorne road
 Williams Fred. Ben. newsagent, 57 Bridge st.
 Williams John Hy. com. trav. 25 York parade
 Williams John, j. tailor, 33 College street
 Williams Japh. closed boot upper manufact. St
 Andrew's sq.; house, Fernwood, Dallington
 Williams Mrs Mary Ann, 11 Freehold street
 Williams Thomas, baker, 2 College street
 Williams Thos. j. shoemaker, 13 York ter.
 Williams Wm. J.P. leather seller, Mount street; house, 98 Abington street
 Williamson Geo. inspector of co. police and of weights and measures, police station, Angel st.
 Willis John, butcher, 70 Bouverie street
 Wills Augustus, machine closer, Upper Newland terrace; house, 68 Newland
 Wills Mrs Clara, 55 Louise road
 Wills Mrs Eliza, 49 Regent street
 Wills Mrs Esther Ann, 34 Freehold street
 Wills John, builder and brick manufacturer,
 Primrose cottage, Kingsthorpe road
 Wills John, butcher, 7 Wellington place
 Wills Miss Mary, shopkeeper, 20 Castle st.

Wills Mrs Sarah, shopkr. 28 Horseshoe street
 Wills Mr Thomas, 71 Newland
 Wills Wm. Hy. confectioner and soda water manufacturer, 63 Horse market
 Willson Wm. coach builder (Sanders & Wilson), & beerhouse, 38 Marefair
 Wilmin Henry, com. trav. 42 Lawrence st.
 Wilson Mrs Ann, laundress, 113 Lr. Thrift st.
 Wilson Henry, butcher, 68 Bailiff street
 Wilson Hy. Jno. man. of coach wks. 58 Marefair
 Wilson John, carriage and harness manufacturer, 34 Gold street; house, 7 Hester st.
 Wilson John, ironmonger, cutler, seedsman, and hop factor, 3 Drapery; h. 2 Albion pl.
 Wilson Jph. vict. Pomfret Arms, Cotton end
 Wilson Maximilian, steam cultivator, &c. (Taf-finder, Wilson & Hall), house 35 Broad st.
 Wilson Mrs Ruth, laundress, 17 Woodford st.
 Wilson Wm. pork butcher, 33 Horse market
 Winch John, statnr. and tobaccst. Leicester rd.
 Winckles James, bricklayer, 1 Exeter road
 Winckles Ed. greengrocer, 26 Newtown rd.
 Winspear Joseph, shopkeeper, 6 St Andrew's st.
 Winter James, supervisor of inland revenue, house 11 Elysium terrace
 Wisdom James, fellmonger, 37 Green street
 Withers Fred. Flood, shopkr. 62 Kettering rd.
 Wittmann Mdle. Thusnelde, ladies' school, 35 College street
 Wood Rev. Francis Henry, B.A. curate of All Saints', 114 Abington street
 Wood George, j. shoemkr. 117 Lower Thrift st.
 Wood Samuel, shoe manufacturer, Stockley street; house, 37 Kerr street
 Wood Mrs Sarah, 14 Albion place
 Wood Thomas Roe, ironmonger (Mobbs Snow & Wood), house, 7 Primrose hill
 Woodcock Mrs Mary Ann, machine closer, Dychurch lane; house, 8 Princess street
 Woodford Chas. shoe manuf. 15 Lawrence st.
 Woodford Jas. milliner, P.O. 6 Marefair
 Woodford Joseph, j. plasterer, 33 Lorne rd.
 Woodford Mrs Jane, lodgings, 8 Augustine st.
 Woodford Joseph, plasterer, 24 Kerr street
 Woodford Noah, grocer and provision dealer and beer retailer, 24 Albert street
 Woodin Wm. Hy. clockmaker, 46 Hope's place
 Wooding George, machine closer, Fitzroy st.
 Wooding Henry, shoe manufacturer, 1 Pytchley street; house, Victoria road
 Wooding Hy. joiner and builder, 10 Albion pl.
 Wooding John, clicker, 32 Lorne road
 Wooding Joseph, j. shoemaker, 79 Bailiff st.
 Wooding Thos. shoe manfr. St George's street
 Woodruff Geo. shopkr. and beerh. 28 Dover st.
 Woodruff Mr William, 8 Vernon terrace
 Woods Jethro, baker and shopkr. Gladstone ter.
 Woods John, shoe manufacturer, 55 Market street; h. 96 Kettering road
 Woods Thomas, j. currier, 39 Lorne road
 Woodward Rev. Robert Boraman, chaplain to Asylum, 56 York street
 Woolard Henry, clicker, 31 Pytchley street
 Woolatt Edwin, 38 Denmark road
 Woolston Mrs Louisa, milliner, 43 Broad st.
 Woore Arthur Mitchell, vict. Sultan, 2 Silver st.
 Wootton Miss Harriet, dressmkr. 8 Victoria ter.
 Wootton Jno. draper's assist. 10 Harrison rd.
 Wootton Thos. sawmill proprietor, Broad st.; h. 39 Bellbarn street
 Working Men's Club, St Giles' street, George Hancock, secretary and librarian

Worley Mrs Catherine Mary, 11 Langham pl.
 Worley Mr Frederick, 8 Castilian street
 Worrell Chas. shopkeeper, 52 Lower mounts
 Worsdale Thos. j. miller, 86 Upper Thrift st.
 Wothall Chas. shopkeeper, 12 Dover street
 Wright Mrs Amelia, register office for servants, 51 Gold street
 Wright Mrs Ann, beerhouse, 35 Wellington st.
 Wright Arth. Bull, shopkr. & beerh. 25 Chapel pl.
 Wright Rev. Chas. M.A. curate of St Sepulchre's, 18 St George's place
 Wright Charles, seedsman and greengrocer, Wellingborough road
 Wright Cha. prtr. co. gaol, h. 7 Palmerston rd.
 Wright Edwin, watchmaker, 46 Sheep street
 Wright Geo. j. shoemaker, 66 Lower mounts
 Wright Geo. coach builder, 33 Broad street; house, 20 Alfred place
 Wright Isaac, 42 Wood street
 Wright James, painter, 2 Victoria street
 Wright Jas. Edwin, manager of stamp office, 19 Market square; h. 18 York parade
 Wright Mrs Jane, 16 Albert street
 Wright John shopkr and beerh. St James' end
 Wright John, greengrocer, 53 Grafton street
 Wright John, shopkeeper, 20 Upper mounts
 Wright John Geo. tobacconist, 11 Bearward st.
 Wright John, whitesmith, bellhanger, and manufacturer of all kinds of shoe machinery, knives, &c. 2 Augustine street
 Wright John, clicker, 21 Cyril street
 Wright Joseph, j. carpenter, 47 Louise road
 Wright Joseph Henry, clicker, 81 Bailiff st.
 Wright Josiah, shopkeeper, 62 Great Russell st.
 Wright Mrs My. Ann, shopkr. 48 Wellington st.
 Wright Rd. wheelwright, 93 Horse market
 Wright Samuel, butcher, 69 Kettering road
 Wright Mrs Sarah, milliner, &c. 2 Victoria st.
 Wright Thos. j. shoemaker, 8 Robert street
 Wright Thos. solicitor's clerk, 4 St Giles' ter.
 Wright Thomas, 12 Primrose hill
 Wright Thos. Lansberry, ironmonger (Johnson & Wright), h. 14 Marefair
 Wright Thomas, coal traveller, 7 Seymour pl.
 Wright Mr William, Victoria road
 Wright William, j. tailor, 45 Lawrence street
 Wright William, j. shoemaker, 2 Freehold st.
 Wright Wm. Walker, btchr. 85 Wellingboro' rd.
 Wright Wilmer, beerhouse, 79 Kettering rd.
 Wrighton Charles, shoe manufacturer (Paxton & Wrighton) h. 21 St George's place
 Wrighton Mrs Jane, 23 Kerr street
 Wringrose John, grocer's assistant, 34 York st.
 Wyatt Miss Eliza, 39 Exeter road
 Wyatt George, j. currier, 55 Mount street
 Wyatt Jph. commercial traveller, 38 York st.
 Wyatt William, St James' end
 YATES JOHN, j. currier, 4 Pytchley street
 York John, machine closer, 8 Edith street
 York John, policeman, 31 Vernon terrace
 York Luke, horse dealer, 39 Marefair
 York Mrs My. vict. Old White Hart, Cotton end
 York Thomas, greengrocer, Cleveland road
 York Ths. Simpson, machine closer. 1 Charles st.
 Youil Brothers, brewers, maltsters, and hop merchants, &c. Victoria Brewery
 Youil Edwin (Youil Brothers), h. Pitsford
 Youil Jas. (Youil Brothers), h. 29 Kettering rd.
 Youl Samuel, clicker, 3 Pytchley street
 Young Ebenr. j. carpenter, 15 Inkerman ter.
 Young William, engine driver, Vigo cottages

CLASSIFICATION

OF

TRADES, PROFESSIONS, &c.

Academies.

(Marked thus * take Boarders).

* Abington House School, Abington street—Kingston and Phillips, principals
All Saints' Infants' School (South quarter), Bridge street, Miss Charlotte Munns
All Saints' Parochial School, Adelaide pl.—Alfred Jackson
 Andrews Miss H. 80 Abington st.
 * Austin Miss C. 64 Abington st.
 Barrett Mrs Eliz. 67 Vernon st.
Becket's and Sargeant's Blue School (girls), Kingswell st.—Miss Caroline Jane Mills
 * Baden & Westall, 2 Spencer par.
 Bowden Misses M. J. and Eliz. 30 Alexandra road
 * Brady Mrs M. 1 Langham pl.
British Schools, Campbell sq.—Alfred Jones, Miss Fanny Staumford, and Miss Matilda Jones
Catholic School, Woolmonger street—Valentine Tonks
 Chapman Mrs, 7 Royal terrace
 * Clevedon College, Abington street—Edward Rush, B.A. principal
 * Convent of Notre Dame School Abington street (with poor school for infants attached)—Odile Jacobs, superioress
Dryden and Herbert's (or Blue Coat) School, Bridge street—John Jones
 Dunkley Mrs Alice, 77 St Giles' st.
 Dunkley Miss M. 4 Marriott st.
 * Durham Frank, M.A. St Andrew's villa
Grammar School, Abington square—Rev. S. J. W. Sanders, M.A., F.G.S., LL.M., head master; T. C. Cookson, M.A., second master
 Hinton Miss Euphemia, 38 Waterloo
 * Hull Miss J. A. Castilian street
 Ireson Miss E. 12 Victoria ter.
 Leigh Miss Mary, Ellesmere ho.
 Mawbey Jno. Edw. Kingswell st
 Mays Miss Sarah, Bristol street

Pitman Miss A. 47 College street
 Onrury Miss Mary, 7 St Giles' ter.
School of Art, Abington sq.—Stephen Thomas, head master
 Shemeld Miss A. 35 Alexandra rd
St Andrew's School (mixed and infants)—John Falkner and Miss Elizabeth Chambers
St Edmund's School, Church st.—Charles Ellen; Mrs Ann Ellen and Miss Mary Davies
St Giles' School, St Giles' ter.—Elijah Draper; Miss Emily Pendred and Mrs Elr. Baseley
St Giles' Mission School Dychurch la.—Miss Emma Frost
St James' School, St James' end—Fredk. George Chevaasot and Miss Ellen Ball
St Peter's School, Elephant lane—Miss Eliza Knibbs
St Sepulchre's School, Leicester road—Henry Smart; Miss Sarah King and Miss Sarah Elizabeth Kirby
St Katharine's School, King street—James Dudley; Miss Harriet Downing and Miss Mary Ann Rae
 Sheppard Miss Emma, 1 Victoria terrace
 * Thorpe Mrs M. E. Castle hall
 * Trade School, Waterloo—Charles Lees, F.C.S. principal Wesleyan School, St Katharine's street, Joseph Wall
 * Wittmann Mdle. 35 College st

Accountants.

Bennett Samuel Pratt, Exchange buildings, Parade
 Darnell Joseph, 48 Abington st.
 King Chas. Dawson, 38 Newland
 Manton Thomas Cavit, Exchange buildings, Parade
 Warren William, 41 Victoria rd.

Account Book Manufacturers.

Birdsall & Son, 44 Wood street
 Rushton Joseph, 35 Gold street
 Shemeld Bros. 8 Sheep street

Agents (Commission).

Atkins Wm. T. (Burton brewery), 27 Denmark road
 Drakeford Israel (and shipping) 39 Sheep street
 Spence Benj. 1 Grey Friars' st.
 Warren William, 41 Victoria rd.

Agents (Land, House, and Estate).

Archer Mrs Mary, 51 Bull lane
 Barber & Sons, 41 College st.
 Baseley Chas. 44 Gt. Russell st.
 Baseley John, 12 St Giles' st.
 Bryan Charles, 10 Wood street
 Cave Benj. 49 Alexandra road
 Devonshire John, 139 Bridge st.
 Gammage Chas. 76 Abington st
 Linwood William, 33 Kerr st.
 Luck John, 49 York street
 Muddeman Tom S. 22 Newland
 Parker Frederic, 49 Sheep street
 Peirce William J. 5 Derngate
 Pike David, 6 Vernon street
 Roberts Peter, 71 Edith street
 Shrewsbury Geo. 7 Denmark rd.
 Warren William, 41 Victoria rd.

Agents, Special.

Pentney John (for Gilbey, wine and spirit), 62 Bridge street
 Perkins S. E. & Co. (for European and Colonial Wine and Spirit) 36 Gold street
 Perkins Joseph (brewery) 1 Bedford place
 Simpson Wm. (for Gilbey, wine and spirit), 9 sheep street
 Vickers John, 77 Newland

Agricultural Implement-Makers.

Ball Thos. 1 Wellington Works, 4 Wellington place
 Coleman Wm. St John's street and Chapel Brampton
 Mobbs Henry, Lion Foundry
 Phipps Edward, Cotton end

Ale and Porter Mera.

Dorman Mark, 27 Drapery
 Gray Parker, 17 Drapery

Animal Preserver.

Munson Wm. 64 Bridge street

Architects.

Hull Wm., 12 St Giles' street
Law & Sons, 29 Abington street
Milne Alexander, 2 Gold street

Artists.

Atkins Hy. John (colourman),
26 Abington street
Cox William, 13 Bridge street

Asphalter.

Scudamore Jas. 11 Castilian st.

Attorneys.

Becke & Green, 20 Market sq.
Becke Chas. Cecil, 20 Market sq.
Browne Ed. Mont. 2 St Giles' sq.
Dennis William, 38 Sheep street
Faulkner John Jph. 18 Market sq.
Gates William B. 6 Derngate
Hensman J. & J. B. 6 St Giles' st.
Hensman Hy. P. 6 St Giles' st.
Hewitt Robert, 32 Abington st.
Howes Rd. 14 Abington street, and Towcester
Hughes Chrstr. 23 Newland
Jeffery Alf. John, 1 Market sq.
Jeffery John, 1 Newland
Markham A. & H. Guildhall rd.
Rands Geo. 41 Newland
Roche Chas. B. 10 St Giles' st. and Davertry
Scriven & Terry, 4 Derngate
Shoomith Wm. 2A Newland
Tomalin Wm. 4 St Giles' street
Walker Walter, 1 Market sq.

Auctioneers.

(Marked thus* are also Appraisers).

Checkley Chrstr. 11 Regent sq.
Dykes Rt. 148 Wellingboro' rd.
*Law Wm. 33 Abington street
*Macquire & Walker, 108 St Giles' st
*Muddeman Tom S. 22 Newland
*Peirce Wm. J. 5 Derngate
O'dell John Gregy. Castilian st.
Whitny James, 6 Castilian st.

Bakers.

Adams Thomas, 39 Mount st.
Barker John, 32 Leicester st.
Bayner Geo. 27 Bouverie street
Bennett James, 52 Bath street
Brain Wm. Kingsthorpe road
Brown Joseph, 30 Grafton st.
Buckler David, 2 Phoenix st.
Burrows John, 17 Lady's lane
Busby Benj. 78 Wellingboro' rd.
Chapman Sam. 28 Wellington pl.
Clark Robt. 30 Great Russell st.
Clark Thomas, Upper Mounts
Coles Edwd. 49 Primrose hill
Cook Wm. 39 Bridge street
Cox Hy. Sam. 63 Palmerston rd.
Davis John Wigston, Bailiff st.
Dowdy Thomas, 12 Wood st.

Downes Charles, 22 Market st.
Dyson Cornelius, 49 Bridge st.
Early Henry, 4 The Green
Eaton Wm. 17 Wellington pl.
Farndon William, 72 Bailiff st.
Freear Thos. 2 Wellingboro' rd.
Freear William, 4 Marefair
Freeman Richd. 19 Bradshaw st.
Fredger George, St James' end
Gilkes, Joseph, St James' end
Goode Benj. 50 Laurence st.
Goodman, John, 5 Augustine st.
Greenough Mrs C. 91 Bridge st.
Hallam Wm. 39 Horsemarket
Hardwick Eben. 170 Welling-
borough road
Harris Alf. Geo. St James' end
Haynes Geo. 80 Kettering road
Hefford Geo. 46 Wellington st.
Hemmings Thos. 28 Abington street and 7 George row
Hines John, 17 Kerr street
Hooton Thomas, Cow lane
Houghton Sam. 28 Pytchley st.
Kent Wm. 68 Marefair
Kenning Geo. 1 Regent square
Marriott Geo. 46 Up. Harding st
Marriott James, 9 Raglan st.
Mead Wm. 1 Kettering road
Middleton Tom, 75 Woolmonger
Mitton Wm. 80 Lower Thrift st.
Mullis Wm. 47 Hope's place
Payne Wm. 1 Vernon street
Peach Joseph, 129 Bridge st.
Purser Thos. 26 Sawpit lane
Robinson Wm. H. 5 Mayorhold
Rolfé Wm. St Katherine's st.
Sanders Wm. 87 Bath street
Skempton Wm. 132 Scarletwell st
Stanton Thomas, 16 St Giles' st.
Sturman Wm. 48 Bridge street
Tarry Geo. 4 Upper Mounts
Tassell Geo. N. 10 Derngate
Warner W. (muffin) 52 Newland
West Robert, St James' end
Wheatley John, 29 Gas street
Williams Thos. 2 College street
Woods Jethro, Gladstone ter.

Bankers.

Northamptonshire Banking Co.
6 Parade (draw on London and Westminster Bank, London), Augustus Kempson, manager
Northamptonshire Union Bank,
41 Drapery (draw on Williams, Deacon & Co., London),
Martin Alexr. Boeme and
Alfred Page, managers
Savings' Bank, 8 St Giles' sq. open on Monday and Friday from 7 to 8 in the evening; Wednesday from 12 to 1.30; and on Saturday from 12 till 2.30,
Benjamin Vialls, actuary

Basket-Makers.

Baxter Mrs Sarah, 42 Bridge st.
Baxter Wm. 23 College street
Cooke Geo. Fox, 50 Gold st.

Gutteridge Jas. W. 42 St Giles' st
Stanford Geo. Alb. 9 Bearward st

Bat (Cricket) Makers.

Bex William, Northend Steam
Works, Bailiff street
Rigby Wm. Dychurch lane

Bath Proprietors.

Hillson Ephraim, 29 Deal street
Mangion Wm. (medicated, &c.),
88 Abington street
Smith Mrs Mary, Cotton end

Berlin Wool and Fancy Repositories.

Church David, 11 Princess st.
Millard Mrs Hannah, Exchange
Buildings, Parade
Pike Miss Susanh. 61 Marefair
Rushton Joseph, 37 Gold st.
Shemeld Brothers, 8 Sheep street

Bill Posters.

Pinkard Thos. (and town crier),
1 Mount street
Smith Thomas, 10 Princess st.

Bird Fancier.

Chapman Wm. L. (and cage maker), 11 Marefair

Blacksmiths.

Bazeley George, Mayorhold
Farey George, 36 Kingswell st.
Fleckney Wm. Angel street
Harpin Geo. St James' end
Letts Joseph, 33 Broad street
Perkins Edward, & Son, 27 St
Katharine's st. and Cotton end
Russell Wm. 28 College street
Sanderson John Wm. Horsemkt.
Sawbridge Wm. St. John's st.
Stringer Chas. 8 Bull's head lane
Stringer Robert, Angel street
Tomlinson George, King street
West Emanuel, 109 Bridge st.
Willeaden Robt. St. James' end

Boat Builders.

Casey Wm. (prop.) 181 Bridge st Collins Charles & Walter (and proprietors), 180 Bridge st. and Wellingborough

Boiler Makers.

Allchin Wm. & Son, Globe Works
Bassett Absolm. 18 Kingswell st.

Bone Boiler.

Mobbs Hy. Shipley Wharf, 132
Bridge street

Bookbinders.

Birdsall & Son, 44 Wood street
Rushton Joseph, 35 Gold street
Shemeld Bros. 8 Sheep street
Spence Wm. 17 Newland

Booksellers.

Abel & Sons, 9 Parade
 Biden John, 41 St. Giles' st.
 Billingham Wm. (old) 52 Marefair
 Brown & Thomas, 18 Gold st.
 Bryant Joshua, 84 Bridge st.
 Dorman Mark, 27 Drapery
 Hannen Mrs Sa. Ann, 8 Sheep st
 Harris Richard, 6 Bridge street
 Law Alfred, 11A Abington st.
 Millard Mrs Hannah, Exchange
 buildings, Parade
 Notcutt John T. 31 Drapery
 Rushton Joseph, 35 Gold street
 Shemeld Bros. 8 Sheep street
 Stanton & Son, 24 Abington st.
 Taylor & Son (and old) 22 Gold st.
 Winch John, Leicester road

Boot (Machine) Closers.

Allen Francis, 22 Albert street
 Alliston Arthur, 2 Lorne road
 Ball William, 29 York street
 Barritt Michl, 62 Wellingbro' rd.
 Berry Daniel Arthur, Stockley st.
 Blaxley Wm. 15 Vernon ter.
 Brickete John, 20 St Andrew st.
 Brooks Thomas, 12 Augustine st.
 Bull Thomas, 60 Kettering rd.
 Bullock John, 17 Sawpit lane
 Bullock Thos. 18 Regent street
 Burns Wm. 17 Lady's lane
 Carter Wm. 52 Lawrence st.
 Church Thos. 27 Maple street
 Church Wm. 11 Regent street
 Clarke Josiah, 25 St Mary's st.
 Coles Thos. 127 Wellingboro' rd.
 Cooper Thos. Thomas street
 Cosford Geo. 19 Maple street
 Crutchley Mrs M.A. 28 Bailiff st.
 Don John, 16 Lawrence street
 Dowsett Edward, 37 Lorne rd.
 Edwards Chas. 6 Lawrence st.
 Edwards Geo. 10 Wellington pl.
 Elliott John, 22 Lorne road
 Evans Joseph, 2 Oakley street
 Fisher John, 21 Maple street
 Flawn Miss Eliza, 9 Lorne rd.
 Foster John, 32 Louise road
 Gibbs Charles, Ash street
 Godden Philip, 23 St George's st.
 Goff George, 19 Free School st.
 Going Thomas, Bristol street
 Griffin George, 13 Thomas st.
 Hamp George, 23 St Mary's st.
 Hancock Geo. Wm. 46 Bailiff st.
 Herbert Chas. 26 Cleveland rd.
 Hickman Geo. 76 Wellingbro' rd.
 Hollands Jabez, 21 Park street
 Howard Thos. 48 Lawrence st.
 Ives William, 1 Ethel street
 Jones Thomas, 28 Newland
 Juggins John, 20 Lorne road
 Juggins Joseph, 32 Victoria st.
 Knightley John, 70 Welling-
 borough road
 Kirby Robt. 56 Cyril street
 Laird Thos. 9 Charles street
 Lane Wm. 72 Wellingboro' rd.
 Latimer Wm. 27 Green street
 Law James, 62 Louise road
 Lee Geo. 38 Freehold street

Longworth Geo. 38 Lawrence st.
 Lovell Mrs Mary A. 20 Bailiff st.
 Macguire Wm. 17 Grafton st.
 Major Thos. Lorell, 61 Sheep st.
 Marlow John, 50 Louise road
 Mead David, 54 Cyril street
 Mead Geo. jun. 22 Palmerston rd.
 Mead Joseph, Upper Mounts
 Mineards Josiah, 17 Bearward st.
 Morgan Henry, 30 Bailiff street
 Morris John, 16 Victoria road
 Mullinger Ch. 59 Wellingbro' rd
 Murdin Henry, 8 Victoria road
 Neville John, 30 Palmerston rd.
 Norman Daniel, Exeter road
 Peach Geo. 20 Bull Head lane
 Peacock Alfred, 9 Robert street
 Pearson Chas. 7 Robert street
 Penn Miss Amelia, 31 Bird's-piece
 Pittam Edward, 17 Grafton st.
 Pitts Thos. 37 Louise road
 Pollard Thomas, 17 Alfred st.
 Potter Robt. 59 Palmerston rd.
 Pratt Joseph (sole), 172 Wellingborough road
 Reynolds Ebenr. 37 Bellbarn st.
 Reynolds Thomas, Oak street
 Rose and Westley (sole), 30
 Wellingborough road
 Rowthorn Own. 32 St George's st
 Sharman Joseph, 3 Victoria rd.
 Shaw Sam. 18 St Andrew's st.
 Smart Edward, 23 Grafton st.
 Smith Chas. 30 Victoria street
 Smith Francis, 42 Bailiff street
 Smith George, 43 Exeter road
 Smith Hewlett, 14 Lorne road
 Smith John Gayl. 11 Robert st.
 Steele Walter, 29 Pytchley st.
 Stokes Henry, Sawpit lane
 Simpson Palmer, Ash street
 Tipler Geo. 15 Grey Friar's st.
 Tipler Joseph, 34 Wellingbro' rd.
 Tipler Wm. 78 Kettering road
 Tompkins Thos. 67 Lawrence st.
 Trasler Wm. Brig. 54 Bailiff st.
 Walden Daniel, 19 Grafton pl.
 Ward Wm. 72 Kettering road
 Warren Wm. 52 Bailiff street
 West William, Semilong
 Westley Wm. 35 Lorne road
 White Geo. 118 Wellingboro' rd.
 Wiggins George, 3 Charles st.
 Wills Augustus, Upper Newland
 Woodcock Mrs My. A. Dychroh In Wooding George, Fitzroy street
 York John, 8 Edith street
 York Thos. Simpson, 1 Charles st.

Boot and Shoe Top and Upper Manufacturers.

Ball Chas. Thos. 7 Bearward st.
 Berry John Alfred, Stockley st.
 Bramley Wm. Tha. 10 Abington sq.
 Edwards George, York street
 Evers John, 43 Lawrence street
 Francis and Gammage, 64A
 Abington street
 Gilbert Jos. 41 Bearward street
 Hardwick Henry, 38 Welling-
 borough road
 Henson Chas. 46 Horse market

Mason Samuel, Wood street
 Melsheim Emile (French fronts),
 5 St Peter's street
 Mitton Wm. (legging) 44 Drapery
 Paxton & Wrighton, Elephant In
 Peach Edward, Cow lane
 Waterfield Thomas Bryan, 58
 Wellingborough road
 Wells Wm. Robt. 14 Victoria st.
 Williams Jos. St Andrew's sq.

Boot and Shoe Manufacturers (Wholesale).

Adams James, 22 Mayorhold
 Agutter Edwd. 70 Horsemarket
 Ainge Jas. 63 Lower mounts
 Allen John, 16 St Andrew's st.
 Andrews Alf. 91 Wellingboro' rd.
 Barton W. and R. 12 Quart-pot In Bass George, 3 Albert street
 Betts & Son, 25 Drapery
 Blakey E. & Sons, Palmerston rd.
 Blaxley Sml. Part. 30 Louise rd.
 Boddington Geo. Wellington st.
 Bostock Frederick, Victoria st.
 Boyson Jas. jun. 41 Alfred st.
 Bradford Chas. W. 23 King street
 Bramley Wm. Tha. 10 Abingt nsq.
 Brockett Bros. 4 Victoria road.
 Chester Cor. 17 St George's st.
 Church Alf. and Wm. 30 Maple st.
 Clarke Wm. & Sons, 12 Black
 Lion hill
 Collier Simon, 2 Craven street,
 Bailiff street
 Collins & Whatcott, Albert st.
 Coulson Wm. jun. Sawpit lane
 Cove John, Chalk lane
 Dawson J. & Sons, 10 Park st. and London
 Derby Robt. & Sons, Pike lane
 Derham Brothers, Marefair and Bristol
 Dorr Henry, 54 Vernon street
 *Dunsmore Edw. 23 St Mary st.
 Dyson James, 10 Pytchley st.
 Edens Joel, 41 St Mary street
 Edwards George, York street
 Ellard James, 9 Bath street
 Elley, Gibson, & Wooley, Newland and Kettering
 Evans Wm. & Eli, Denmark rd.
 Franks & Tebbutt, 3 Broad street
 Furniss Jabez, Mayorhold
 Gardner Chs. 66 Wellingbro' rd.
 Garratt William, 23 Broad st.
 Gawthorn, 22 Castle street
 Gent George, 35 Regent street
 Gibbs Joseph, 96 Cyril street
 Goss John, 24 Queen street
 Greaves John, 4 Kettering rd.
 Gross Henry, St Andrew's st.
 Hancock Joseph, 1A Kerr st.
 Harday Henry & Co. 9 Regent st.
 Harris Henry, Marefair
 Hartwell Wm. 35 Regent st.
 Hart Charles, Church lane
 Hasdell & Marlow, Victoria rd.
 Haynes Edward, 76 Newland
 Haynes Wm. 21 St George's st.

Hickson William & Sons, 36 Woolmonger st. and London (Charles Gray, manager)
 Hollis & Son, Silver street
 Homan & Co. 54 St Giles' st. and London
 Howe Alfred, 10 Bull lane
 Howe Major, 12 Bull lane
 Irons Elijah, Bird's-piece
 Jones William, Newland
 Jones Wm. 74 Wellingboro' rd.
 Kendall Edwin Jph. 3 Market st.
 Kent & Chapman, 7 Castle st.
 Kerridge Bros. 70 Horsemarket
 Leigh George, Dychurch lane
 Lewin Richard, 16 Queen street
 Mills Thomas, 40 Victoria street
 Manfield Moses Philip, Campbell square, and London, Paris, Hamburg, and Glasgow
 Marriott Geo. 7 Bull Head lane
 Marshall Henry, 3 Free School st.
 Marshall Wm. 3 St George's st.
 Matthews Hy. 62 St Edmund st.
 Mead & Faulkner, Inkerman ter.
 Mills Thomas, St John street
 Moore Alf. 77 Wellingboro' road
 Muscott Brothers, Sawpit lane
 Newton Wm. Upper Thrift st.
 Nichols J. K. Groomyard, Abington street
 Paxton & Wrighton, Elephant In
 Petchell John and Son, 22 Castle street
 Pollard Edmd. Queen street
 Poole Joseph Fred. Adelaide street and London
 Rabbitt Jas. 31 Grey Friars' st.
 Rice & Errington, Bull Head In.
 Robinson Jonathan, 34 Bath st.
 Robinson Wm. 3 Wood street
 Scott E. & S. 42 Wellingborough road and Glasgow
 Sears Geo. & Co. 41 Silver st.
 Sergeant Henry, 22 Regent st.
 Shaw Bros. 45 Woolmonger st.
 Slaymaker Ths. 27 St Mary's st.
 Smeed Gurney, Newland
 Smith Charles, 13 Vernon ter.
 Smith Cornelius, 19 Broad st.
 Smith Rt. & Co. 2 Lady's lane
 Spencer & Andrews, Exeter rd.
 Starmer Thomas, 105 Lower Thrift street
 Stanton Benj. 2 Victoria street
 Stimpson, John, 1 Princess st.
 Stone Thos. & Son, St Peter st.
 Tebbutt Geo. M. Robert street, Bailiff street
 Tebbutt Thomas, 24 King st.
 Thompson John, St Giles' ter.
 Timpson Henry, Ash street
 Trench James, 5 Wood street
 Turner Bros. Hyde & Co. Campbell square and London
 Tyler Brothers, 46 Drapery
 Wade Robt. 40 St Peter's street
 Wade Wm. 10 Augustine street
 Waite John, 90 Lower Thrift st.
 Walding Jas. 70 Wellingbro' rd.
 Ward Harry, 39 St James st.
 Ward Fred. 67 Palmerston rd.

Warren & Sons, 6 Newland
 Webb George, 1 Cromwell st.
 West Jos. Wm. 20 Victoria st.
 Wood Samuel, Stockley street
 Wooding Henry, Pytchley st.
 Wooding Thos. St George's st.
 Woods John, 55 Market street

Boot and Shoe Makers.

Abbey William, 3 College st.
 Abel Isaac, 38 Wellingboro' rd.
 Alderman Edmd. 14 Bearward st.
 Alderman Wm. 76 Bridge st.
 Ashton Dvd. 46 Woolmonger st.
 Bailey Joseph, 54 Marefair
 Belchambers Jos. St James' end
 Beeby Thos. 35 Kettering rd.
 Betts & Son, 25 Drapery
 Bonham Isaac, 33 St Giles' st.
 Bramley Wm Ths. 10 Abington square
 Brightwell Wm. 29 Adelaide st.
 Clarke Geo. 23 Vernon street
 Clarke Josiah, 22 Gt. Russell st.
 Coulson, Wm., 23 Sawpit lane
 England Major, 6A Newland
 Flavell Thomas, 25 Regent sq.
 Floyd Wm. 52 Wellingboro' rd.
 Frost James, 59 Gold street
 Frost Noah Pratt, 91 Horsemkt.
 Gardner Geo. 33 Gold street
 Gawthorn Henry, 59 Bridge st.
 Gent George, 12 Market square
 Gibbons Wm. 66 Bridge street
 Gibbs John, 41 Bridge street
 Glover Wm. 88 Upper Thrift st.
 Hardwick Hy. 58 Wellingbro' rd.
 Hewlett James, Church lane
 Holding Wm. 165 Bridge street
 Jeffs William, 14 Parade
 Johnson Wm. 11 Augustine st.
 Jones Edward, 13 Marefair
 Kendall Chas. Edwn. 50 Drapery
 Keynes Wm. 11 Free School st.
 Knibb Joseph, 9 Abington ter.
 Lay John, 13 Market square
 Leigh George, 52 Abington st.
 Lightwood Wm. 56 L. mounts
 Mason & Son, 7 Sheep street
 Mitton Wm. 44 Drapery
 Morley Wm. 103 Bridge street
 Nead Richard, 25 Regent st.
 Old Wm. Henry, 171 Bridge st.
 Passmore Php. 4 Grey Friars' st.
 Pell Mark, 1 Pytchley street
 Pell Stephen, 60 Newland
 Penn Edward, 94 L. Thrift st.
 Penn Frederick, 45 Gold street
 Pickering Sam. 14 Drapery
 Randall & Wicks, St Andrew's sq.
 Roper Wm. 12 King street
 Savery Wm. 27 Great Russell st.
 Sharp John, 90 Wellingboro' rd.
 Shaw Mrs Mar. 8 Mercer's row
 Simpson George, 105 Bridge st.
 Spencer William, 13 St Giles' st.
 Sprittles Wm. 140 Bridge st.
 Tuckley Rt. 8 St John's ter.
 Ward Wm. 10 Bearward st.
 Webb John, 57 Adelaide st.
 Woodford Chas. 15 Lawrence st.

Brassfounders.

Allchin W. & Son, Globe Works
 Thomas John, 42 Kingswell st.
 Merrill Normanton, Bridge st.
 Mobbs Henry, Lion Foundry

Brassers.

(See Tinmen and Braziers).

Brewers.

Coales & Allen, Lion Brewery
 Phillips Brothers, Steam Brewery, Bridge st. and Burton-on-Trent
 Phipps P. & R. Northampton Brewery and Towcester
 Ratcliffe & Jeffery, Albion Brewery
 Tresham Edwd. 1 St Andrew's terrace
 Youil Bros. Victoria Brewery

Bricklayers.

Allen Robt. 3 Upper Priory st.
 Gardner Thos. 19 Gas street
 Johnson Wm. 31 Sheep st.
 Norris William, 11 Gas street
 Ratledge John, 77 Palmerston rd.
 Rose Hezekiah, 11 Fish street
 Winckles James, 1 Exeter rd.

Brick and Tile Makers.

Green Stephen, 2 Upper Mnts.
 Ireson Josiah, Upper Cross st.
 Johnson Thos. Kingsthorpe rd.
 Northamptonshire Fire Brick and Tile Co. (limited), Cotton end, Geo. Norman manager
 Rixon Mrs Mary, 4 Freehold st.
 Vigo & Co. Houghton road
 Wills John, Kingsthorpe road

Brick and Tile Merchant.

Watkin Jas. & Son, 40 Sheep st.

Brokers - Stock & Share.

Bennett Sam. Pratt, Exchange buildings, Parade
 Macquire & Walker, 10 St Giles' st.
 Pressland & Son, 39 Drapery

Brush Manufacturers.

Bishop Henry, 4 Market sq.
 Brownless Geo. 52 Bridge st.
 Lillyman, William, 11 Gold st.
 Payne William, 6 Fish street
 Powell George, 66 Sheep st.

Builders.

Adams Jas. 36 Palmerston rd.
 Banks Wm. 12 Wellingboro' rd.
 Beardsmore Wm. 27 Wood st.
 Bex William, Northend Steam Works, Bailiff street
 Bonham Thos. 15 Cyril street
 Branson Geo. 36 St Mary's st.
 Cave John L. 1 Foundry st.
 Clark George, 23 St Giles' st.
 Cooke Samuel, 56 Marefair
 Cosford Thomas, 4 Lady's lane

Cosford Robt. 112 Abington st.
 Cross James, 28 Louise road
 Dunham Rt. 104 Wellingsbro' rd.
 Emery Wm. 12 Marefair
 Gent Alpha, 11 Inkerman ter.
 Godfrey William, 38 Wood st.
 Green Edw. & Hy. Palmerston'rd.
 Heap Geo. 18 St James' st.
 Holding & Son, 50 Abington st.
 Hull Chas. Lovell, 71 Waterloo
 Ireson Daniel, Waterloo
 Ireson Josiah, Upper Cross st.
 Johnson Wm. F. 42 Kingswell st.
 Knightley Jos. St Giles' ter.
 Labram Jonathn. 27 Grafton st.
 Martin Hy. 39 Victoria road
 Mason Geo. 27 St James' st.
 Masters Sam. 16 St George's st.
 Miller Chas. 4 Grafton st.
 Mills John Major, 1 Angel st.
 Parker Wm. P. 38 Lr. mounts
 Pool Elijah, 21 Lawrence st.
 Poole Fred. Ash street
 Poole Wm. 7 Broad street
 Pratt Owen, 13 Kerr street
 Rainbow Wm. 16 St Edmund's st.
 Redshaw Wm. 46 Wood stre
 Revett Benj. 74 Cyril street
 Shea Patrick, 49 Victoria road
 Smith Brothers, 28 Gold street
 Smith Richd. 3 Princess st.
 Sparrow Joseph, Kettering rd.
 Thornton Edward, Dunkley,
 Grove road
 Warren Bros. Bailiff street
 Watkin John, 15 St George's st.
 Wills John, Kingsthorpe road.
 Wooding Henry, 10 Albion pl.

Building Societies.

Northampton Town and County
 Benefit, and Freehold Land,
 1 Freehold st.—Joseph Gurney,
 secretary
 Starr Bowkett, (141st & 144th),
 Exchange bldgs.—T. C. Maun-ton, secretary

Butchers.

Ambidge Geo. 67 Grafton st. and Spring lane
 Ambidge Jph. B. 63 Primrose hill
 Ashby Joseph, P. 18 Newland
 Ashton Fred. 20 Horseshoe st.
 Askew Thos. 5 Gold street
 Barrit Wm. 1 St Giles' street
 Baseley John, 36 Horsemkt.
 Bates Samuel, 28 Raglan st.
 Brown Geo. 212 Wellingsboro' rd.
 Brown John, 17 Bailiff street
 Buckler David, 2 Phoenix st.
 Butler James, 21 Mayorhold
 Butler Geo. 14 Commercial st.
 Butler George, St James' end
 Checkley Mrs My. 59 Horsemkt.
 Cockerill Wm. 56 Wellingsbro' rd.
 Colledge Hy. 39 Abington st.
 Colledge Wm. 8 Regent sq.
 Collins W. 61 Palmerston road
 Comber John, 1 Ash street
 Dickens William, 32 Marefair and Harpole
 Dunkley Chas. 34 Abington st.

Fitzhugh John, 33 Bridge st.
 Fox Chas. Wm. Market
 Fox William, 85 Bridge st.
 Fox Wm. jun. 37 Marefair
 Francis Bryan, 4 Drapery
 Francis Frederick, 73 Wellingsborough rd. and Abington sq.
 Francis Joseph, 52 Hope's pl.
 Freear Henry, Spring lane
 Gilling Charles, Cotton end and
 Far Cotton
 Green Mrs Rosan. 34 Up. mounts
 Greenough Geo. 35 Victoria rd.
 Hargrave John H. 154 Wellingsborough road
 Heydon Mrs A. 45 Brunswick st.
 Hornsby Hy. 4 Denmark road
 Howells Dd. B. 36 Augustine st.
 Howes John, 5 The Green
 James Eli, 123 Bridge street
 Jarmon Amos, 51 Castle street
 Johnson Chas. 1 King street
 Jones John, 166 Wellingsbro' rd.
 Knight Saml. 5 Horsemarket
 Law John, 37 Castle street
 Law Wm. 10 Mercer's row
 Law Wm. Henry, 35 Bath st.
 Lawrence Wm. 40 West street
 Matthews John, 8 Lady's lane
 Osborn A. 186 Wellingsboro' rd.
 Pitt Thomas, 45 Grafton street
 Pollard James, St James' end
 Richardson James Blunson, 30
 Lawrence st.
 Ringrose John, St James' end
 Roberts Alf. 11 Upper Mounts
 Robinson Hy. 64 Wellington st.
 Roddis Robert, 5 Marefair
 Sabbage Geo. E. 12 St Andrew st.
 Sargeant Robert, Cow lane
 Sawbridge Fred. Vernon street
 Sharman Dan. 16 Lady's lane
 Sharman Fred. 53 Bath street
 Slater E. G. Leicester road
 Smith Mrs Ann, 4 Wellingsbro' rd.
 Spawton Fred. G. 1 Mayorhold
 Tarry Isaac, 2 Great Russell st.
 Tarry John, 20 Grafton street
 Tarry Wm. 6 St Andrew sq.
 Turner Law. L. 10 Kingswell st.
 Wellington Henry, 16 Gas st.
 Ward Thos. 150 Wellingsbro' rd.
 Warren Jph. (Bros.), 82 Great
 Russell street
 Watts Jph. 36 Augustine st.
 Wickes John, 3 Regent square
 Wickes Wm. 35 Bull lane
 Willis John, 70 Bouverie st.
 Wills John, 7 Wellington road
 Wilson Hy. 78 Bailiff street
 Wright Sam. 69 Kettering road
 Wright Wm. W. 85 Wellingsborough road

Butchers (Pork).

Abraham Isaac, Crane street
 Addington Jesse, 9 Abington sq.
 Agutter Edw. 62 Horsemarket
 Bacchus Edmund, 80 Bridge st.
 Blank Geo. Fred. 17 Sheep st.
 Clark Marchant, 120 Wellings-
 borough road

Cockerill Wm. 56 Wellingsbro' rd.
 Colson Wm. 32 Gold street
 Darley Wm. 27 Horsemarket
 Drage John Mor. 27 Grafton st.
 Hoerle Chas. 77 Wellingsbro' rd.
 Hoerle Geo. 92 Bridge street
 Knight Alf. 17 Crispin street
 Letts Dan. 65 Wellingsbro' road
 Mullis Thos. 58 Sheep street and 18 Wellington place
 Pitts Geo. 20 Marefair
 Pitts John Rose, 45 Bridge st.
 Pollard Edwin, 6 Wood street
 Ponting Mrs Eliz. 18 Mayorhold
 Prue John, 27 Abington street
 Wilson Wm. 33 Horsemarket

Cab Proprietors.

(Marked * keep livery stables).
 Bolton Chas. 27 Bearward st.
 Bonham Geo. 10 Broad street
 Bonham Hy. 38 Bull lane
 Checkley Geo. N. 16 Derngate
 Cooper Arthur, 5 Cow lane
 Cooper Ths. Alfred, 30 Wood st.
 * Frisby Saml. (and omnibus)
 Peacock Hotel yard
 Horlock Phineas, 11 Broad st.
 Lowe Geo. (horse and trap), 12
 Marefair
 Orton John, 2 Black Lion ter.
 Rainbow Wm. 16 St Edmund st.
 * Seaby Wm. Bull Inn yard
 Thompson John, Kettering rd.

Cabinet Makers.

(See also Upholsterers).

Camp John, 38 Gold street
 Cavitt John, 38 & 40 Bridge st.
 Law Wm. 33 Abington street
 Lewis Chas. Abbey, 6 Wood hill
 Marks Fred. 18 Victoria st.
 Mobbs John, 76 Lower Thrift st.
 Neudegg Chas. 21 Gas street
 Peirce Geo. 35 Kerr street
 Phipps & Son, 10 Gold street
 Rigby Wm. Dychurch lane
 Smith Bros. 28 Gold street
 Wadsworth Wm. St And. sq.
 Wells Israel, 86 Abington st.

Carpenters and Joiners.

Adams Jas. 36 Palmerston road
 Allum Wm. St James' end
 Banks Wm. 12 Wellingsbro' rd.
 Beardsmore Wm. 27 Wood st.
 Blackwell Wm. 41 Scarletwill. st.
 Bonham Thos. 15 Cyril street
 Cooch Geo. 16 Wellington pl.
 Cooke Samuel, 26 Marefair
 Cosford Robert, 4 Lady's lane
 Cosford Thos. 112 Abington st.
 Denton Levi, 52 Horsemarket
 Dodman Jno. 72 Wellingsbro' rd.
 Downs Cyrus, 9 Wellington pl.
 Durham Hy. 21 Gas street
 Durham Rt. 104 Wellingsbro' rd.
 Emery Wm. 62 Marefair
 Gent Alpha, 11 Inkerman ter.
 Godfrey Wm. 38 Wood street
 Green Edw. & Hy. Palmerston rd

Hart Joseph, 67 Newland
 Heap Geo. 18 St James' street
 Hewitt Charles, 60 Marefair
 Ingman John, 36 Bearward st.
 Knightley Joseph, St Giles' ter.
 Longland Geo. 7 Regent sq.
 Mackness Jesse, 6 Queen street
 Main Robert, 27 Marefair
 Mason Geo. 27 St James' st.
 Masters Saml. 16 St George's st.
 Mills John Major, 1 Angel st.
 Mott Thos. Jas. 24 St Peter's st
 Parker Wm. Posford, 38 Lower
 Mounts
 Pool Elijah, 21 Lawrence st.
 Poole Frederick, Ash street
 Poole William, 7 Broad street
 Pratt Owen Sturgess, 13 Kerr st.
 Rainbow Wm. 16 St Edmund's st.
 Reynolds Thos. 33 Alexandrar d.
 Rich Ambridge, 46 Deal street
 Rowledge Samuel, Ethel street
 Rowledge Thos. Lady's lane
 Scott James, 22 Horsemarket
 Smith Geo. 28 Alexandra road
 Smith Richard, 3 Princess st.
 Souster Robt. Jnthn. 36 Lawrence street
 Sparrow Joseph, Kettering rd.
 Stageman J. 40 Wellingbro' rd.
 Sturgess Thos. 29 Alexandra rd.
 Thornton Edd. Dunkley, Grove road, Kettering road
 Wadhams John, 29 Broad st.
 West Benjamin F. 15 Albert st.
 Whitbread Thos. 35 Alfred st.

Carpet Warehouses.

Camp John, 38 and 40 Gold st.
 Phipps & Son, 10 Gold street

Carvers and Gilders.

Atkins Hy. John, 26 Abington st.
 Bosworth Wm. 17 Kingswell st.
 Moore James, 35 Marefair
 Moss Henry, 60 Marefair
 Smith Bros. 28 Gold street

Catgut Maker.

Letts George, 16 Mayorhold

Cattle Dealers.

Bliss William, 9 Newland
 Bond Rt. (horse), 32 Lr. Mounts
 Griffin Robt. 8 Freehold street
 York Luke (horse), 18 Marefair

Cement Merchants.

Olney Fred. 61 St Giles' street
 Smith Brothers, 28 Gold street
 Watkin Jas. & Son, 40 Sheep st

Chair Manufacturers.

Cave Elijah (bottomer), 5 Bell-barn street
 Robins Wm. 63 Woolmonger st

Chemists and Druggists.
 (Marked thus * are Pharmaceutical).

Armitt Arthur, 37 Abington st.

Ashford Evan Charles, 24 Gold street and 32 Horsemarket
 Ayre Henry Mills, 43 Gold street
 Barry James, 2 Parade
 Berry & Co. (homœopathic), 4
 Parade
 *Bingley John, 3 Wood hill
 *Clarke Wm. Rd. 3 Sheep st.
 Dadford Thomas, 33 Gold st.
 Jeyes Philadelphus, 6 Drapery
 M'Kinnell Wm. 1 St Giles sq.
 Maxwell Geo. Neal, 21 Drapery
 *Mayger William David, 6
 Regent square
 *Merrick Thos. Jas. 33 Drapery
 *Negus Samuel, 55 Gold street
 *Sandall William, 2 Drapery
 Shipman John Jos. 22 Bridge st.
 Stovin J. B. (homœopathic), 15
 Abington street

Chimney Sweepers.

Bayes Richard, 19 Silver street
 Begley Matthias, 20 Regent sq.
 Billing Geo. 51 Wellingboro' rd.
 Burnell William, 2 Broad street
 Burton Chas. 38 Gregory street
 Letts George, 16 Mayorhold
 Lines Henry, 57 Silver street
 Lines John, Dychurch lane

China, Glass, and Earthenware Dealers.

Brickwood Edw. 19 Market st.
 Cooper George, 2 Bridge street
 Cooper Thomas, 12 Thomas st.
 Cooper W. C. F. 5 St James' st.
 Dorman Mark, 27 Drapery
 Eves William, 25B Bridge st.
 Fox George, 48 Marefair
 Hart Joseph, 1 Drapery
 Dykes Robt. 148 Wellingbro' rd.
 Thorley Frederick, 20 Drapery

Clothes Dealers.

Andrews Robert, 24 Bath st.
 Benford Benj. 77 Horsemarket
 Birch Mrs Mary, 26 Up. Mounts
 Casteldine Jph. 52 Scarletwell st
 Coneton Mrs Grace, 8 St Giles st
 Cooper William, 54 Bridge st.
 Davis Mrs Emma, 27 Welling-
 borough road
 Frampton Chas. 41 Grafton st.
 Giles Mrs Eliz. 9 College st.
 Gregg Mrs Charlite. 18 King st.
 Jackson John, 26 Grafton st.
 Jones Mrs Emma, 124 Welling-
 borough road
 Kilburn Robt. John, 59 and 61
 Broad street
 Martin James, 38 Bearward st.
 Moss Joel, 25 & 29 Bridge st.
 Smith William, 3 Bradshaw st.
 Vernon James, 86 Bridge street
 Walker Sam. 46 Bearward st.
 Warren Geo. 48 Kettering rd.

Coachbuilders.

Davies & Sons, 17 Abington st.
 Holmes & Son 27 St George's st.

Mulliner Henry, 83 Bridge st. and Leamington
 Sanders & Willson, 40 Marefair,
 Smith Henry, Midland Carriage Works, St John street
 Wilson John, 34 Gold street
 Wright George, 33 Broad st.

Coal Dealers.

Austin John, 116 Wellingbro' rd.
 Bass John, 87 Scarletwell st.
 Beckwith Geo. 60 Grafton st.
 Bonham Henry, 38 Bull lane
 Bonham Mrs My. St James' st.
 Brown Walter, 32 Newtown rd.
 Clegg Charles, 53 Silver street
 Clifton James, 1 Navigation row, Bridge street
 Clifton John Jas. 29 Augustine st.
 Coughlan Thos. 25 Grafton st.
 Dartnell Geo. 5 Upper Priory : t.
 Fawcett William, 89 Bath st.
 Gascoigne Stph. 12 St Peter's st.
 Grove Jas. 21 Free School st.
 Jarman Amos, 51 Castle street
 Lines Hy. 8 St James' square
 Malpas Henry, 42 Riding
 Markey James, 27 Bellbarn st.
 Meads George, 74 Cow lane
 Millard George, 11 Pike lane
 Race Edward, 98 Bath street
 Saddington Wm. 89 Park st.
 Sherwin William, 30 Green st.
 Stevenson Thos. 46 Kettering rd.
 Sykes Mrs Sarah, 20 Nelson st.
 Valentine Wm. jr. 20 The Green
 Ward William, 20 Bath street
 Webb Thos. 8 Scarletwell st.

Coal Merchants.

Baldwin George, 175 Bridge st
 Bevan George Edward, & Co.
 Cave Geo. & Co. (& coke) Cotn. end
 Dale John, 25 Gas street
 Dartnell George (and coke), 5
 Upper Priory street
 Farmer Havey, Cotton end
 Frost Jonathan, 83 Grafton st.
 Greenough Rand. Edward, 112
 Bridge street
 Higgins Henry, Weston st.
 Hillier Frederick, 33 Wood st.
 Hillyer George, 28 Bouverie st.
 Miller John, 20 Fetter street
 Mobbs Hy. (and coke), Shipley
 Wharf, 132 Bridge street
 Morgan Wm. Midland Railway
 Depot
 Norman Jno. Sm. 180 Bridge st.
 Norman William, Cotton end
 Northampton Coal, Iron, and
 Wagon Co. (Limited), Lepper
 & Dodgson, managing Directors, 5 Sheep street
 Perry J. exors. of (and coke),
 120 Bridge street
 Sale John, 12 Pytchley street
 Sherwin William, 1 Green st.
 Ward & Beeby, Cotton end
 Wells James, Cotton end
 West, Biddles & Co. 37 Sheep st.

Westley Jph. & Sons, Nun Mills
Whitehouse Ths. Gaswks. Wharf

Confectioners and Pastry Cooks.

(Marked thus * are dealers in wine).

*Barrat Wm. Edwd. 39 Gold st.
Clay James, 181 Bridge street
Cook William, 39 Bridge st.
Cottingham Wm. jr. 12 Sheep street and 2 Gold street
Dyson Cornelius, 49 Bridge st.
*Emery Rowland, 26 Drapery
Faulkner Thos. 14 Regent sq.
*Franklin J. C. Guildhall road
*Freear William, 4 Marefair
Gilbert Jno. Jas. 1 Abington ter.
Hall David, 12 Abington street
Hallam Wm. 11 Lady's lane
*Hemmings Thos. 28 Abington street and 7 George row
Hibbitt William Albert (sugar boiler), Church street
Hoare Lester Harry, 25 Gold st.
Johnson Rd. Stphn. 7 St Giles' st.
Kenning George, 1 Regent sq.
King James, 70 Abington st. and 1 Fish street
Latchmore Fred. S. 16 Bridge st.
Lawman George, 3 Bearward st.
*Lawrence Joseph, 35 St Giles' street and 5 Bridge street
Nichols George, 40 Drapery
Orton John, 2 Black Lion ter.
*Packer John, 11 Bradshaw st.
Roworth Jph. 5 L. Harding st.
Tassell Geo. T. 10 Derugate
Tonsley David, 22 Sheep street
*Wills Wm. Hy. 63 Horsemtk.
White William, 61 Gold street

Coopers.

Crick Alf. Wm. 9 Woolmonger st.
Ingman John, 36 Bearward st.
Smith Charles, Swan yard

Cork Cutter.

Rymill John, 15 Newland

Corn and Flour Dealers.

Abbot Jas. Mead, 13 College st.
Darby Frederick, 44 Sheep st.
Greenough R. E. 112 Bridge st.
Hallam Wm. 39 Horsemarket
Harvey Ebenezer, 15 Sheep st. and 68 Wellingborough road
Houghton Sam. 28 Pychley st.
Reeve William James, 1 Horsemarket and Birmingham k.
Swallow Geo. R. 30 Market sq.
Thompson Samuel, Cotton end
Thompson Sam. & Son, 13 Gold st.
Westley & Sons, 3 Abington st.

Corn Merchants.

Greenough Rand. E. 112 Bridge st.
Higgins Henry, Weston street
Pallett Alfred, 21 Marefair
Perry Jno. (exrs. of), 120 Bridge st.

Perry John & Son, Tanner st.
Thompson Samuel, Cotton end
Thompson Sam. & Son, 13 Gold st.
Westley & Sons, 3 Abington st.

Curriers and Leather-sellers.

(Marked * are Leathersellers only).

*Abraham Jas. 61 Grafton st.
*Adams James, 22 Mayorhold
*Ball Chas. Thos. 7 Bearward st.
*Berridge Wm. 47 Crispin st.
*Betts James, 15 Bradshaw st.
*Betts Ths. & Wm. 16 St Mary's st.
*Birch Charles, 69 Edith street
*Bligh Joseph, 31 Bath street
Borton Jos. 67 Horsemarket
Collier Wm. Thos. 7 Kerr st.
Derby Arth. 36½ Kingswell st.
*Dunmore Edw. 33 St Mary's st.
*Drakeford Israel, 39 Sheep st.
Draper John, 4 Mount street
Dyer Thomas, Mount street
Eyers Wm. 34 St Mary's street
Freeman & James, Oaks street
Frost Daniel, 10 Horsemarket
Garnett & King, Spring lane
*Goodman Fred. 30 Abington st.
Green Abraham, 13 Lady's lane
Green Charles, Maple street
Hardwick Wm. Edwd. Tannerst.
Hinton Daniel, Vernon street
*Henson Chas. 65 Horsemtk.
*Hockley Wm. Robt. 54 Gold st.
*Kent Wm. jun. 85 Horsemarket
*Kerridge Bros. 70 Horsemtk.
Lewis & Smith, 19 Newland
Low George, Pike lane
Moring Wm. & Geo. Bull Head ln.
*Moore Joseph Henry, 62 Gold st. and 63 Wellingborough rd.
Newton George Freeman, Free School street
Payne Thomas, Mayorhold
Pinkard Rbt. Deal st. Bailiff st.
*Preston Alf. 26 Augustine st.
Robinson & Heggs, Elm street
Rymer & Shepard, 7 Wood st.
Sperring James, Castle street
Stroulger & Co. 38 Victoria st.
Tyler William, 9 Kerr street
Wainwright Robt. 27 Castle st.
Wetherell & Neepe, 34 Newland

Cutlers.

Duckenfield Edw. 31 Gold st.
Marsh John, 50a Drapery
Rowden Mrs Sar. 13 Abington st.
Wiggins George, (working) 17 Bradshaw street
Wilson John, 3 Drapery

Dairymen and Cow-keepers.

Anderton Jas. 2 St James' st.
Bliss William, 9 Newland
Cottingham Wm. 28 Lorne rd.
Clark James, 30 Newtown rd.
Hitchcox Rbt. 37 Woolmonger st.
Hollowel Mrs An. 3 Lawrence st.

Johnson John, 48 Vernon st.
Labrum Wm. 23 Francis street
Marriott James, 9 Raglan st.
Peach Joseph, 129 Bridge st.
Perkins Robert, 26 Wood street
Picken Ths. Geo. 63 Kettering rd.
Watts John, 65 Compton street
Watts Joseph, 36 Augustine st.

Dentists.

Goddard Hy. Heygte. 42 Waterloo
Hiam Charles, 10 Newland
Wilkins Butler, 3 St Giles' sq.

Die-sinkers & Stampers.

Brown & Thomas, 18 Gold st.
Dorman Mark, 27 Drapery

Dining Rooms.

Brown Cave, 26 Bridge street
Evans Wm. Freeman, Cotton end
Franklin John Campbell, Restaurant, Guildhall road
Ingram Rd. 27 Market square
Moore Nicholas, 7 Market sq.
Warner Mark, 15 Market sq.

Drapers (Linen and Woollen).

(Marked thus * are linen only).

Allright Jesse, 21 Gold street
Barker Jas. 12 Abington ter. and 143 Wellingborough rd.
Barnard James, 19 Gold street
*Blackwell Misses Jane and Fannie, 7 Marefair
Brice & Sons, 43 & 45 Drapery
*Clarke Mrs Mary Ann, 8 Abington terrace
Curtis William, 6 Abington ter.
Fountain Jacob, 5 Drapery
Frisby, Dyke & Co. 21 Market sq.
Gourlay & Muscott, 4 Gold st.
Grant George, 20 Bridge street
Greenough Henry, 20 Gold st.
Hewett James, 47 Bridge street
Higgins John & Geo. 7 Parade
Hull Mrs Ann, 22 Abington st.
Norman, Shepherd, & Manning, 11 Drapery
Parker Hamilton William, 5 Mercer's row
Phipps & Son, 10 Gold street
Pressland & Son, 37 Drapery
Robinson Miss E. St James' end
Robinson Joseph, 68 Sheep st.
Shelton Jabez Chas. 57 Gold st.
Smith R. & Co. 17 Market sq.
Smith George, 15 Regent sq.
Spokes George, 10 Drapery
Stanton Rd. 23 Abington st.
Vernon J. Heygate, 2 Newland
Wall Simon, 3 Mercer's row
Wilde & Walford, 1 Sheep st.

Drapers (Travelling).

Copeland Alex. 83 Newland
Copeland John, 24 Greyfriars st.
Crabtree Charles, 24 Cyril st.
Green Mrs Agnes, 26 Newland
Hubbard Eben. T. 33 Albert st.

Izzett John, 3 Campbell sq.
Jardine John, 7 Black Lion hill
M'Dougall W. M. 20 Greyfriars st.
M'George John G. 14 Princess st.
M'Girr Robt. 15 Wellington pl.
M'Lachlan Chas. 83 Newland
M'Lean John 14 Kerr street
Parker James T. 29 Marefair
Patterson Jas. 13 Wood street
Seamark Wm. 7 Castilian st.

Dyers.

Austin Robt. 5 Black Lion hill
Bannister Jph. 149 Bridge st.
Duckett Rd. 44 Abington st.
Linnell & Glover, 28 Horsemk.

Engineer (Civil).

Smith George, 3 Exchange
Buildings, Parade

Engineers and Machinists.

Allechin W. & Son, Globe Works
Bassett Abshlm. 18 Kingswell st.
Coleman William, St John's street and Chapel Brampton
Gadsby E. (shoe), 24 Bearward st.
Harrison & Clayton, Cotton end
Parish John (shoe), 16 Silver st.
Rice & Co., Eagle Foundry,
Bridge street
Sheppard James Thos. (shoe),
Guildhall road
Spencer Thos. 135 Scarletwell st.
Taffinder, Wilson, & Hall (agricultural), 29 Broad street

Engravers.

Law W. W. & Sons, 49 Gold st.
Marriott Wm. 9 Abington st.
Perrin Henry, 15 Kingswell st.

Farmers.

(Marked * are Yeomen).

Fitzhugh John, 33 Bridge st.
Law John, 53 Scarletwell st.
Thompson Samuel, Cotton end
White George, 13 Church lane

Fellmongers.

Wade Wm. & Sons, Elephant In.
Wisdom James, 37 Green street

Fire and Life Offices.

Accidental (death), Abel & Sons,
9 Parade
British Empire (life), Hail M.
Mawby, 10 Castilian street
Briton & Medical (life), Peter
Derby, 12 Albion place
Caledonian, Berry & Co. Corn
Exchange
Church of England, Israel
Drakeford, 39 Sheep street
Clerical, Medical, and General
(life), William Tomalin, 18
Market square
Commercial Union, Parker
Gray, 17 Drapery

County (fire), George Norman
Wetton, 8 Drapery
Eagle (fire and life), Wm. John
Pierce, 5 Derngate, and Geo.
Rands, 43 Newland
Edinburgh (life), Israel Drake-ford, 39 Sheep street
General (fire and life), James
Scott, 22 Horse market
General (life and fire), John Errington, 43 Bridge street, and John Page, 2 Albert street
Gresham (life), Henry Wasley,
15 Princess street
Guardian (fire and life), Becke &
Green, 20 Market square
Imperial (fire and life), James
Edwin Wright, 18 York Parade, and Henry Wasley (fire),
15 Princess street
Lancashire (fire & life), Wm.
Warren, 14 Victoria road
Law, Edward Montague Brown
(life), 2 St Giles' square;
Thomas Auckland (fire), 49
Denmark road
Life Assurance of Scotland,
T. Auckland, 49 Denmark rd.
Liverpool, & London, & Globe,
Richard Harris, 6 Bridge st.;
Barber & Sons, 45 College st.;
Peter Derby, 12 Albion place;
Geo. Rands, Newland; and Ed.
Tresham, 1 St Andrew's ter.
London Assurance (fire and life),
Pressland & Son, 37 Drapery
London Guarantee & Accident,
Charles D. King, 38 Newland London & Lancashire (fire & life), C. D. King, dist. sup. 38
Newland; John Biden, 4 St
Giles' street
Manchester (fire), John Wilson,
3 Drapery
Mutual (life), Hail M. Mawby,
16 Castilian street
National Provident Thos. Cavit
Manton, Exchange Buildings, and Walter Hill, 16 Maple st.
North British and Mercantile life insurance, John Macguire, 10 St Giles' street; fire insurance, Tom Smith Muddeman, 22 Newland; Hail W.
Mawby, 10 Castilian street
Northern Counties (fire), Wm.
Simpson, 9 Sheep street
Pelican (life), Thos. Osborn, 22
Drapery and 14 Market sq.
Phoenix (fire), Thomas Osborn,
22 Drapery, William Dennis,
28 Sheep street
Plate Glass, Thos. Cavit Manton,
Exchange Buildings
Provident (life), Geo. Norman
Wetton, 8 Drapery
Prudential, Henry Parker, dist.
supt. 60 Louise rd.; Robert
Wm. Frisby, 62 Abington st.;
Joh Eyers, 90 Bailiff st.
Queen (fire and life), Joseph
Darnell, 48 Abington street

Railway Accident, Hail M.
Mawby, 10 Castilian street
Railway Passengers, Joseph
Darnell, 48 Abington street
Royal Farmers (Hailstorm), G.
Norman Wetton, Drapery
Royal (fire and life), Joseph
Peckover (fire), dist. supt. 50
St Giles' st.; W. D. Mayger
6 Regent square
Royal Exchange, M. A. Boeme,
Drapery
Scottish Amicable (life), Sam.
Pratt Bennett, Exchange
Buildings; Henry Wasley, 15
Princess street
Scottish Imperial (life), John
Biden, 14 St Giles' street
Scottish Union (fire and life),
Walter Walker, 1 Market sq.
Scottish Widows' Fund (life),
Wm. Bunting, 8 Royal ter.
Standard (life), William John
Peirce, 5 Derngate
Sun (life and fire), Geo. Smith,
3 Exchange Buildings; Fred.
Parker, 49 Sheep st.; Scriven
& Terry, 4 Derngate
United Kingdom (life), Joseph
Peckover, dist. supt. 50 St
Giles' street
Wesleyan & Provident, Berry
& Co. Corn Exchange

Fishing Tackle Makers.

Faulkner Ezekiel, 10 Marefair
Freeman John, 30 St Giles' st.

Fishmongers.

(Marked * are also Herring Curers).

Abraham Pil (fried), 7 Horsemk.
Allard James, 6 Crispin street
*Ash Mrs Matilda, 2 Regent sq.
Barker Geo. 43 Hope's place
Bates John, 7 Horseshoe street
Clarke John, 2 George row
Cooper Wm. C. F. 5 St James' st.
*Curl & Son, 41 Horsemarket
Mason John, Market
*Panter George, Market
*Puttnam Charles, 16 Marefair
Puttnam Mrs M. A. 11 Bridge st.
Puttnam Thos. 28 St Giles st.
Robbins Wm. 40 Scarletwell st.
Smith Ed. 28 Wellington rd.
Smith Thomas, 144 Bridge st.
Smith Wm. Woolmonger st.

French Polishers.

Phipps Edward, Kingswell st.
Rigby Wm. Dychurch lane

Fruiters and Green- grocers.

Adnitt Samuel, 45 Bath street
Archer Henry, 56 Abington st.
Bamford Wm. 70 Woolmonger st.
Barker Edw. 128 Bridge st.
Barker John, 18 Regent sq.

Bates Mrs M. 157 Wellingbro' rd.
 Bond John, 146 Bridge street
 Bottrell Edward, 3 Tanner st.
 Braines William, 74 Marefair
 Bull Wm. 165 Wellingboro' rd.
 Chaplin Geo. 12 Commercial st.
 Clarke John Wesley, 41 Lorne road
 Cockerill Alfred, 18 Drapery
 Coles William, 27 Silver street
 Collins Edward, 27 Gas street
 Collins William, 27 Grafton st.
 Collins Wm. 32 Wellinboro' rd.
 Corby John, 17 Mayorhold
 Coulson Joseph, 12 Silver street
 Curl John, 41 Horsemarket
 Eaton Mrs C. 17 Wellington pl.
 Fountain John, 12 Wood street
 Fox James, 83 Horsemarket
 Freeman James, 5 College st.
 Frost James, 20 Green lane
 Garrod James, 13 Newland
 Gross John, 80 Wellingboro' rd.
 Gross Joseph, 7 Derngate
 Gross Jos. jun. 19 Castle st.
 Hawgood Ob. 17 Kettering rd.
 Hawkes Joseph, 51 Grafton st.
 Henley Jas. 47 Horsemarket
 Hodges W. E. 126 Wellingbo. rd.
 Holloway Jn. 154 Kettering rd.
 Jenkinson John, 14 Bouverie st.
 Johnson Eli, 102 Bridge street
 King Rich. 2 Black Lion hill
 Law David, 51 Upper Mounts
 Law Mrs Harriet, 33 Bath st.
 Law Henry, 58 Horsemarket
 Law William, 2 Regent street
 Lewin Edward, 2 Weston street
 Lewin Enos, 70 Bailiff street
 Malpas Henry, 42 Riding
 Manning John, 49 Bearward st.
 Marshall John, 2 Wilberforce st.
 McCarthy Bart. 23 Up. Mounts
 Moring John, 60 Sheep street
 Moring Jn. Wm. 65 Adelaide street
 Moring Vin. 34 St. George's st.
 Panter George, Market
 Parsons Francis, 47 Grafton st.
 Percival Geo. 51 Wellington st.
 Percival Harry L. 22 Bailiff st.
 Perkins Mrs C. 2 Abington sq.
 Perkins Fred. 33 Wellingboro' rd.
 Perkins Wm. 5 Abington sq.
 Puttnam Charles, 16 Marefair
 Puttnam Mrs M. A. 11 Bridgest.
 Reynolds Isaiah, 19 Bearward st.
 Sargeant Jas. Kingsthorpe rd.
 Timpson Chs. 22 St George's ter.
 Timson Samuel, 91 Bath street
 Ward James, 124 Bridge st.
 Ward Richard, 58 Newland
 Warren Arthur, 58 Bailiff st.
 Watkin John, 24 St Giles' st.
 Watts & Son, 56 Gold street, and 110 Bridge street
 White Joseph, 45 Kettering rd.
 White Wm. 31 Horse Shoe st.
 Wright C. Wellingborough rd.
 Wright John, 53 Grafton st.
 Winkles Ed. 26 Newtown rd.
 York Thos. Cleveland road

Furniture Brokers.

Barwell James, 21 College st.
 Billingham Geo. 15 Horsemarket
 Bond William, 17 Mayorhold
 Collins Mrs E. 12 Bearward st.
 Denton Geo. 42 Horsemarket
 Dodman Jno. 72 Wellingbrod.
 Downs Cyrus, 9 Wellington pl.
 Dykes Rt. 148 Wellingboro' rd.
 Edmunds William, 64 Sheep st.
 Elson William, 57 Grafton st.
 Fauson Wm. 10 Inkerman ter.
 Fox George, 48 Marefair
 Fox Henry, 72 Bridge street
 Harding Jos. 21 Horsemarket
 Jackson John, 46 Grafton st.
 Kent William, 12 Horsemarket
 Morton Mrs Mary, 34 Sheep st.
 Nott W. 2 Park st. & 40 Newland
 Payne James, 7 Bull lane
 Payne Mrs Adelaide, 7 Bull lane
 Povey Mrs M. 4 Commercial st.
 Richards Herbert, 51 College st.
 Salmon Thomas, 88 Bridge st.
 Sewell Charles, 45 Bearward st.
 Smart John, 25-A Bridge street
 Smith Thomas, 47 Lawrence st.
 Stageman J. 40 Wellingboro' rd.
 Tebbutt David, 39 Grafton st.
 Tuckley G. 140 Wellingboro' rd.
 Warnes Wm. 26 Mayorhold
 Warren Mrs My. 42 Abington st.

Grindery Dealers.

Abraham James, 61 Grafton st.
 Adams James, 22 Mayorhold
 Ball Chas. Thos. 7 Bearward st.
 Berridge Mrs, 47 Crispin st.
 Betts James, 15 Bradshaw st.
 Betts T. & W. 16 St. Mary's st.
 Betts Thos. 54 Gold street
 Boddington J. 126 Kettering rd.
 Cartridge Benj. 45 Hope's pl.
 Dunmore Ed. 33 St Mary's st.
 Goodman Fred. 30 Abington st.
 Hockley Wm. Rbt. 54 Gold st.
 Hodges Hy. 152 Wellingbro' rd.
 Kerridge Bros. 70 Horsemarket
 Marriott Jon. 36 Up. mounts
 Mays Jeremiah, 74 Kettering rd.
 Mays Jno. 158 Wellingboro' rd.
 Moore Joseph Henry, 62 Gold st. and 63 Wellingborough rd.
 Ratledge Fred. 31 Bailiff st.
 Rawlings Wm. 55 Primrose hill
 Roe Richard, 2 Bouverie street

Grocers and Tea Dealers.

Barker Jas. 143 Wellingboro' rd.
 Beck Thos. 60 Great Russell st.
 Chandler Henry, 4 Mercer's row
Co-operative West End Industrial Society (Limited)—E. Spires, manager, 43 Marefair
 Dunkley George, 36 Sheep st.
 Dunkley Henry, 2 Wood hill
 Dyer Silas, 39 St Giles' street
 Eldridge Charles, 23 Marefair and Far Cotton
 Errington John, 43 Bridge st. and Yardley, Hastings

Gent Thomas, 5 George row
 Gray Parker, 3 Parade
 Gray & Hodges, 58 Abington st.
 Green Fred. W. 17 Leicester st.
 Hall Sidney & Co. 6 Gold st.
 Hardwick Ebenezer, 170 Wellingborough road
 Harris Jos. 67 Wellingboro' rd.
 Hensman & Earl, 8 Abington st.
 Holyoak Brothers, 22 Marget sq.
 Kilborn Alfred, 169 Bridge st.
 Kirkton John, 62 Bridge st.
 Laughton Leonard, 32 Deal st.
 Lightfoot William, 5 Regents sq.
 Margetta John, 4 Wood hill
 Mayor Mrs E. 65 Horsemarket
 Mobbs & Smith, 7 St Giles' sq.
 Mumford William, 32 Drapery
 Osborn Thomas, 22 Drapery
 Patrick Henry J. 63 Newland
 Perkins John, 47 Drapery
 Perkins S. E. & Co. 36 Gold st.
 Pitts William, 15 St. Giles' st.
 Richardson Alfred, 14 Newland
 Saddington Wm. 39 Park st.
 Simpson William, 9 Sheep st.
 Storey Stephen, 59 Grafton st.
 Ward Josiah, 78 Bridge street
 Ward Mrs M. 7 Abington sq.
 Warren & Carter, 1 Wellington place
 Warren Horatio, 23 Drapery
 Wells Sam. 64 Gold street
 Whitehead Eben. 13 Sheep st.
 Whitford Robt. St James' and
 Woodford Noah, 14 Albert st.

Gun Makers.

Baseley Wm. 11 Wellingboro' rd.
 Marsh John, 50-A Drapery

Hairdressers.

Allen Henry, 47 Bearward st.
 Barnes John, 8 Wellington pl.
 Belton John, 10 Abington st.
 Berrill & Thornton, 6 Mercers rw.
 Bingham Robert, 28 Sheep st.
 Bland Robert E. 127 Bridge st.
 Chester Thomas, 82 Bridge st.
 Cox Frederick, St James' end.
 Faulkner Ezekiel, 10 Marefair
 Freeman John, 30 St Giles' st.
 Gardner H. J. 25 Wellington pl.
 Harris George, 134 Bridge st.
 Lowe John, 79 Horsemarket
 Lyman John, 61 Upper Mounts
 Munns Edward, 7 College street
 Ross William, 35 Bellbarn st.
 Thompson J. 10 Wellingbro' rd.
 Vears James, 13 Kettering rd.
 Warner Fred. 54 Kettering rd.
 White Edwin Gent, 24 Marefair
 White William, 176 Bridge st.
 Wilford J. 168 Wellingboro' rd.

Hardware Dealers.

Clegg Charles, 53 Silver street
 Curtis Thomas, 186 Bridge st.
 Eves William, 25B Bridge st.
 Gonski & Davis, 24 Sheep street

Hatters.

Barnard James, 19 Gold street
 Barnard Phil. Puttrell, 7 Drapery
 Bastick Wm. Hy. 5 Market sq.
 Berrill Alf. E. 10 Abington ter.
 Birdsall Wm. Fras. 4 Bridge st.
 Blunsom & Co. 6 Abington street
 Cooley William S. 19 Drapery
 Carrall Joseph, 18 Abington st.
 Eldridge William, 16 Gold st.
 Hollis Frederick, 1 Parade
 Lay John, 13 Market square
 Lees Thomas (mfr.), 30 Drapery
 Meadows Jos. Dan. 6 Horsemtk.
 Mills W. & Son, 15, 17, and 35
 Bridge street
 Spoor J. & Son, Abington st.
 Woodhill, and London

Hay and Straw Dealers.

Abbott Jos. Mead, 18 College st.
 Cook William, 39 Bridge street
 Harris John, 5 Harrold street
 Houghton Sam. 52 Bearward st.
 Rainbow William (hay), 16 St
 Edmund's street
 Reeve Wm. Jas. 1 Horsemarket
 and Birmingham
 Thompson Samuel, Cotton end
 Thompson Sam. & Son 13 Gold st.

Herbalists.

Blunt Jn. Hy. & Son, 28 Drapery

Hambleton Geo. 175 Bridge st.
 Pinkard Samuel, 142 Welling-
 borough road

Higglers and Cartowners.

Bradford Ths. 35 Commercial st.
 Brice Wm. 45 Woolmonger st.
 King, Alfred. 39 Cyril street
 Malin Rd. Thomas street
 Pebody John, 6 Green lane
 Sale William, Cotton end
 Smith Jas. 37 Commercial st.
 West Joseph, 45 Kerr street

Hop Merchants.

Houghton Jas. 19 Horsemarket
 Johnson & Wright, 3 Gold st.
 Phipps P. & R. Northampton

Brewery

Portal Wm. Thos. 8 Gold street
 Ratcliffe & Jeffery, Albion Steam

Brewery

Steevenson Mrs Ann, 21 Sheep st.
 Treham Edw. 1 St Andrew's tr.
 Vernon John Middleton, Exchange Buildings, Parade
 Wilson John, 8 Drapery
 Youil Bros. Victoria Brewery

Horse Breakers.

Bond Robert, 32 Lower Mounts
 Thompson Jno. 84 Kettering rd.

Hosiery, Haberdashers,
and Glovers.

Attack Jacob, 10 Sheep street
 Barker James, 12 Abington ter. and 143 Wellingborough rd.
 Barnard James, 19 Gold street
 Barnard Phil. Puttrell, 7 Drapery
 Birdsall Wm. Fras. 4 Bridge st.
 Berrill Alf. Ed. 10 Abington ter.
 Blackwell John, 9 Drapery
 Blunsom & Co. 6 Abington st.
 Clifton Mrs Sarah Ann, 30 Well-
 ingborough road
 Cooley William S. 19 Drapery
 Cooper Edw. R. 34-A Gold st.
 Cooper Misses F. & S. 6 Marefair
 Emerton Henry, 24 Drapery
 Emerton Rd. 9 Market square
 Hewett James, 47 Bridge street
 Higgins John & Geo. 7 Parade
 Hollis Frederick, 1 Parade
 M'Girr Robt. 15 Wellington pl.
 Martin William, 80 Bailiff st.
 Powers Miss A. 14 Wellington pl.
 Shrewsbury Fred. 6 George row
 Smith George, 15 Regent square
 Spokes George, 10 Drapery
 Spoor J. & Son, Abington st.
 Woodhill, and London
 Wall Simon, 3 Mercer's row

HOTELS, INNS, AND TAVERNS.

Hotels, Inns, and Taverns.

Admiral Rodney, Mrs Ann Gascoigne, 48
 Drapery
 Alhambra (and Music Hall), Robert Higgitt,
 63 Gold street
 Angel (commercial, family, and posting-house),
 Thomas Shaw, 23 Bridge street
 Bantam Cock, William Hobbs, 1 Abington sq.
 Bear, James Jeffery, 11 Sheep street
 Bell, William Blamire, 18 Bridge street
 Bird-in-Hand, James Ansell, 4 Regent square
 Black Boy, James Hamlet, 4 Wood hill
 Black Lion, George Barnes, 19 St Giles' street
 Black Lion (Old), Mrs Amy Roddis, 1 Black
 Lion hill
 Boat, James Lancaster, 12 College street
 Bull, William Seaby, 16 Regent square
 Bull and Butcher, Thos. Trusler, 94 Bridge st.
 Bull's Head, William Warren, 33 Sheep street
 Burgley Arms, Edw. Harris, 33 Bearward st.
 Coach and Horses, Alfred Coles, 3 George row
 Crispin Arms, John Law, 53 Scarletwell street
 Cross Keys, Charles Konow, 25 Sheep street
 Crown and Anchor, John Smith Norman, 180
 Bridge street
 Dolphin, John Thomas Muggleston, 15 Gold st.
 Duke of Clarence, Mrs Ann Gudgeon, 11
 Mercer's row
 Eagle Tavern, Charles Corby, 9 Bridge st.
 Fish Inn, Thomas Chambers, 1 Riding

Fleece (commercial), Jos. Jules Guignard, 115
 Bridge street
 Franklin's Restaurant, John Campbell Franklin, Guildhall road
 George Hotel, Jn. Knight Higgins, Geo. row
 Green Dragon, Thos. Homan, 54 Bearward st.
 Green Man, Sabbage & Dickens, St James' end
 Half Moon, Jonas Cross, 163 Bridge street
 Half-Way House, Thos. Plumb, Kingthorpe rd.
 Hare and Hounds, Thos. Frost, 1 Lady's lane
 King's Arms, Jas. H. Sabbage, 38 Horsemarket
 King's Head, Thomas Harris, 15 Mayorhold
 Knightley Arms, Edward Chapman Craddock,
 9 Commercial street
 Lord Palmerston, Josiah Rechab Tonsley, 25
 Market square
 Melbourne Tavern and Gardens, John Collier,
 St James' end
 Mitre, John Ward, 8 King street
 Northampton Arms, Wm. Mayor, 10 Silver st.
 Peacock and Midland Hotel (commercial and family), Wm. Forth, 28 Market square
 Pheasant, Samuel Thompson, 104 Bridge street
 Plumbers' Arms, Edwin Bridgewater, 16 Sheep
 street
 Plume of Feathers, Geo. Tebbutt, 9 Bradshawat.
 Pomfret Arms, Joseph Wilson, Cotton end
 Prince of Wales, Hy. Aldridge, 7 Augustine st.
 Princess Royal, Thos. Jeffs, 172 Wellingbro' rd.
 Quart Pot, William Lay, 1 Quartpot lane
 Queen's Arms, Fred. Perkins, 6 Market square

Queen's Head, Alfred Wm. Crick, 14 Gold st.
Race Horse, James Clayson, 6 Abington sq.
Ram, Charles Norman, 19 Sheep street
Recruiting Sergeant, Jph. Barker, 31 St Giles' st.
Red Lion, Charles Bailey, 20 Horsemarket
Rose and Crown, Mrs Mary Penn, 30 Gold st.
Robin Hood, Edward Ward, St James' end
Rose & Punchbowl, Wm. Harker, 18 Marefair
Royal, Henry Holmes, 25 Gold street
Saracen's Head, Mrs Caroline Bull, 1 Lawrence street
Shakespeare, Daniel Sellers, 3 Marefair
Spread Eagle, Thos. Richardson, 37 Bridge st.
Stag's Head, Joseph Drage, 7 Abington street
Sullan (The), Arth. Mitchell Woore, 2 Silver st.

Swan, William Sauls, 8 Derngate
Three Tunns, William Tarry, 23 Market sq.
Town Arms, James Smith, 1 Great Russell st.
Trooper, William Swallow, 2 Market square
Two Brewers, Joshua Holding, 25 Abington st.
Wagon and Horses, Edwin Howard, 34 Bridge street
Warwick Arms, Geo. Disbury, 55 Bridge st.
White Hart, John & Walter Shipman, 12 Drapery
White Hart (Old), Mrs Mary York, Cotton end
White Horse, William Edmunds, 64 Sheep st.
White Lion, Fred. Allard, Kingathorpe road
William the Fourth, William Betts, 2 Commercial street
Woolpack, Geo. Lionel Linnell, 24 Bridge st.

Beerhouses.

Alderman Fred. 26 The Green
 Alsop Geo. 2 Bellbarn street
 Amerson William, 39 Marefair
 Atkinson George, 29 Grafton st.
 Baker Henry, 71 Horsemarket
 Baker William, 14 Regent st.
 Baldwin Geo. 173½ Bridge st.
 Baley John, 49 Horsemarket
 Ball William, Bailiff street
 Barker Mrs Ann, 23 Sawpit ln.
 Bassford Benj. 40 Compton st.
 Belton James F. 171 Bridge st.
 Bennett Mrs Elizabeth, 44 Wellingtonborough road
 Bennett James, 52 Bath street
 Bland Elias, Weston street
 Bland Henry, 18 Grafton street
 Bonham Hy. 33 Augustine st.
 Bowring Mrs L. 26 Wellington st.
 Brain William, Kingthorpe rd.
 Branson Geo. 86 St Mary's st.
 Brinkler Thos. 101 Bridge st.
 Brown Geo. 212 Wellingbro' rd.
 Brown John, 17 Bailiff street
 Burrell Geo. Ths. 22 Primrose hl.
 Burt John Sam. 97 Bridge st.
 Bushell, William, 38 Albert st.
 Butler Geo. O' Cnr. 31 Crispin st.
 Butlin Mrs Hanh. 26 Chalk ln.
 Catling Charles, Market street
 Chapman Fred. Kingswell st.
 Chubb Wm. 71 Bridge street
 Clark Thos. Upper Mounts
 Clarke Mrs Eliz. 31 Horsemrkt.
 Coe Charles, 51 Hope's place
 Coldwell Fran. 8 Newtown rd.
 Cole Ben. Wm. 138 Bridge st.
 Coles Jon. 147 Wellingbro' rd.
 Collins Wlfr. 61 Palmerston rd.
 Cooke Chas. 1 Alexandra road
 Cooper Benjamin, 3 Castle st.
 Corby Thomas, 78 Kettering rd.
 Coughlan Thos. 25 Grafton st.
 Craddock George, 3 The Green
 Critchett Henry, 46 Grafton st.
 Curl John, jun., 31 Horsemarket
 Dean William, 14 Deal street
 Dale John, 25 Gas street
 Desborough E. 150 Kettering rd.
 Dickens Dan. Dav. 5 Sawpit lane
 Dickinson John, 59 Bouverie st.
 Douglas Mrs M. A. 1 Augustn. st.

Dunkley Edw. T. 19 Wellington pl.
 Dunmore William, 46 Kerr st.
 Freeman Rd. 19 Bradshaw st.
 Frisby Richard, 49 Broad street
 Gardner Chas. 66 Wellingbro' rd.
 Gardner Mrs Sarah, Cotton end
 Garratt Samuel, 2 Portland st.
 Garvey John, 33 Up. Priory st.
 Gillson Wm. H. 44 Up. Harding st.
 Gotch Miss Ann, 2 Green street
 Goodman John, 3 Adelaide st.
 Green Geo. 14 Free School st.
 Gilbert Edwin, Maple street
 Gulliver G. Vigo cres. Bedford rd.
 Hall William, St James' end
 Hancock Thos. 49 St Mary's st.
 Harris Charles, 26 Bailiff street
 Harris Wm. 55 Lr. Harding st.
 Harrison Joseph, 47 Hope's pl.
 Harrison Vincent, 25 Marefair
 Hasler John, 15 Riding
 Henman Edward, 25 Mayorhold
 Henshaw Charles, Weston st.
 Henson Chas. 55 Horsemarket
 Heydon Mrs A. 45 Brunswick st.
 Hillyard Benj. St James' end
 Holloway John, 58 Cow lane
 Hooton Thomas, Cow lane
 Hough William, 54 Bath street
 Houghton John, 43 Horsemrkt.
 Howard John, St John's ter.
 Howard Thos. 47 Newtown rd.
 (and sec. to beer retail assn.)
 Howes Jos. 1 Lr. Harding st.
 Hughes Wm. 32 Vernon street
 Hutchings Wm. 1 Black Lion ter.
 Jackson Wm. 69 Woolmonger st.
 Jackson Chs. 53 Wellingbro' rd.
 Jarman Amos, 51 Castle street
 Jeffery Wm. 89 Wellingbro' rd.
 Jones George, 14 Gas street
 Knightley Chas. 9 Leicester st.
 Knight Ths. 226 Wellingbro' rd.
 Knight John, 17 Cyril street
 Knight's Ling, 64 Primrose hill
 Lambum Wm. 23 Francis st.
 Lamburne Chas. 14 College st.
 Law Alex. 20 Upper Priory st.
 Law Benjamin, 2 Regent street
 Lawrence William 40 West st.
 Lee Jeremiah, 6 Victoria road
 Lester Ambrose, 20 Market sq.
 Letts Daniel, 65 Wellingbro' rd.
 Levi William, 52 Broad street

Litchfield Geo. 1 Denmark rd.
 Longland John, 29 Silver street
 Lowe Mrs Ann, 17 Green lane
 Malin James, 36 Cleveland road
 Malin Thomas, Newland
 Marrable Wm. 10 Kettering rd.
 Marriott Wm. 46 Up. Harding st.
 Mason John, 27 Melbourne st.
 Mellowes Mrs My. 80 Mayorhold
 Miller John, 141 Bridge street
 Morgan Mrs Han. 150 Bridge st.
 Moring William, 50 Hope's pl.
 Munday Wm. 39 Little Cross st.
 Mundin John, 29 Up. Mounts
 Negus William, St Peter's street
 Newitt John, 56 Adelaide st.
 Nott William, 2 Park street
 Oddy Jos. 81 Woolmonger st.
 Osborn Ar. 186 Wellingbro' rd.
 Osborn Thos. 22 Woolmonger st.
 Osborn William, 25 Adelaide st.
 Parker John, 29 Cow lane
 Parrott Thomas, 1 Cow lane
 Pell George, St James' end
 Penn Charles, 79 Vernon street
 Penn Mrs Emma, 27 Mount st.
 Perrin Michael, 25 Crane street
 Pheasey Ried. 19 Commercial st.
 Pointer James, 97 Bath street
 Pollard James, St James' end
 Pollard Samuel, 7 King street
 Porteous Alex. 1 Western ter.
 Pratt Mrs Ann, 71 Melbourne st.
 Price John, 38 Abington street
 Ralley John, 171 Bridge street
 Reeve Henry, St James' end
 Rich Ambridge, 46 Deal street
 Rigby William, 97 Bridge st.
 Robbins Mrs Sarah, St John's st.
 Roberts Geo. 1 Up. Harding st.
 Robins John, 2 Gas street
 Roe George, 24 Pytchley street
 Rohrer Thos. 44 Kettering rd.
 Rose Henry D. 16 Newland
 Rose Ezekiah, 11 Fish street
 Sabbage Geo. Eli. 12 St Andrew's st.
 Sanders William, 87 Bath street
 Sargeant John, 18 Regent sq.
 Sawbridge Frederick, Vernon st.
 Sharp William, 5 Castle hill
 Sheffield Jno. 44 St Edmund's st.
 Sherwin William, 30 Green st.
 Simons Sam. 12 Lawrence st.
 Slater Lenrd. W. 48 Primrose hill

Skinner Geo. 7 Up. Priory st.
 Smith Edward, 28 Lawrence st.
 Smith Jno. 131 Wellingbro' rd.
 Solomon Levi, 121 Bridge street
 Stanton Benj. 30 Horseshoe st.
 Stevenson Mrs A. 56 Gt Russell st
 Stevenson Thos. 46 Kettering rd.
 Sutton Richard, 32 Dover st.
 Swindall Thos. 20 St James' st.
 Sykes William, 1 Victoria st.
 Tarry Geo. 40 Upper Mounts
 Tarry George, 87 York street
 Tew Alfred, 13 Nelson street
 Thompson Samuel, Cotton end
 Threadgold Wm. 32 Wellinbro' rd
 Timmins John, 51 Bearward st.
 Tippler Geo. Perkins, 40 Bailiff st.
 Townley Wm. 106 Market st.
 Troup Alexander 29 Drapery
 Tuckley Steph. 1 St Edmund st.
 Tyler William, 153 Bridge st.
 Vaughan, Sam. 61 St George's st.
 Wainwright Robt. 25 Castle st.
 Walton Thos. 96 Scarletwell st.
 Ward Thos. 59 St Edmund st.
 Ward Thos. N. 23. Gt. Russell st
 Warden Jno. 134 Gt. Russell st.
 Warner Mark, 15 Market sq.
 Warren George, 69 Lawrence st.
 Warren Jos. 82 Gt. Russell st.
 Walts Alfred, Alliston's gardens
 Webb Richard, 73 Market street
 Webb Wm. 73 Scarletwell st.
 Whittle Mrs Eliza, 11 Foundry st.
 Whitney Thomas, 58 Gold st.
 Whitworth Thos. 70 Lr. Thrift st.
 Wilcox Mrs E. 56 Wellington st.
 Wilkins John, 39 Bonverie st.
 Woodford Noah, 24 Albert st.
 Woodruff George, 28 Dover st.
 Wright Mrs A. 35 Wellington st.
 Wright Arth. Bull, 25 Chapel pl.
 Wright John, St James' end
 Wright Wilmer, 79 Kettering rd.

Ink Manufacturer.

Savory Edw. (& currier's size),
 21 Castle street

Iron Founders.

Allechin W. & Son, Globe Works
 Harrison & Clayton, Cotton end
 Merrill Normanton, Bridge st.
 Mobbs Henry, Lion Foundry
 Rice Wm. & Co. Eagle Foundry

Iron Masters.

Northampton Coal, Iron, and Wagon Co. (Limited), Lep-per & Dodgson, managing directors, 5 Sheep street
 Stenson & Co. St James' end

Ironmongers.

Banks Joseph, 3 Gold street
 Barford Valen. Ths. 1 Market sq.
 Camp John, 38 and 40 Gold st.
 Green William, 29 Abington st.
 Hill Rowland, 7 Bridge street
 Law Frank, 2 Abington street

Mobbs, Snow & Wood, 13 Parade
 Pell George, 46 Bridge street
 Porter J. S. 58 Bridge street
 Powell George, 66 Sheep street
 Samuel James, 6 Lady's lane
 Sheppard Wm. 69 Bridge street
 Warr Mrs Sophia, 3-A Marketsq.
 Wells John, 48 Sheep street
 Wilson John, 3 Drapery

Iron (scrap) Dealer.

Hitchcox John, 31 Woolmonger
 street

Jewellers and Silver- smiths.

Blunt Delenai, 14 Bridge street
 Chesterton Richard (working),
 9 Abington street
 Cox & Sons, 2 Mercer's row
 Dyer & Co. 36 Bridge street
 Jolliffe Wm. John, 34 Drapery
 Whitmore & Son, 42 Gold st.

Lace Manufacturers.

Cardwell Albert, 27 Newland
 Kightley & Foddy, 63 Abington st
 Mills Robert Wm. 1 Market sq.
 Mitton William, 44 Drapery
 Nicholson T. (leather) 5 Regnt. st.

Lamp Maker.

Green, William, 29 Abington st.

Land Agents and Surveyors.

Hayward Fran. H. 50-A Drapery
 Holding & Son, 50 Abington st.
 Hull Chas. Lovell, 71 Waterloo
 Hull William, 12 St Giles' st.
 Law & Sons, 29 Abington street
 Smith Geo. 3 Exc. bldgs. Parade
 Whitmy James, 6 Castilian st.

Last & Boot-tree Makers.

Boyes William, 11 Silver street
 Davis & Irons, Sawpit lane
 Edlow Samuel, 12 Horseshoe st.
 Macready Geo. 21 Kingswell st.
 Swallow Wm. 35 Abington st.

Laundresses.

Cotchin Mrs Mrth. 41 Marefair
 M'Main Mrs Bridget, 7 Lorne rd.
 Mallard Mrs Eliza, 102 Upper
 Thrift street
 Marshall Mrs Sarah, Cow lane
 Rice Mrs Sophia, 31 Denmark rd.
 Smith Mrs Martha, 13 Albert st.
 Wilson Mrs Ann, 113 Lower
 Thrift street
 Wilson Mrs Ruth, 17 Woodford st.

Lead Merchants.

Smith Brothers, 28 Gold street
 Watkin Jas. & Son, 40 Sheep st.

Leather Dressers.

Anderton Jas. 2 St James' st.
 Fudger Fred. (kid) 62 Lr. mounts
 Fudger Geo. (kid) St James' end

Green Chas. Maple st.
 Moring William & George, Bull
 Head lane
 Wade Wm. & Sons, Elephant In.

Leather Enamellers and Japanners.

Garnett & King, Spring lane

Leather Merchants.

Barnes & Peckover, 6 Newland
 Blakey E. & Sons, Palmerston rd.
 Melsheim Emile (foreign), 5 St.
 Peter's street
 Michel Geo. Leopold (foreign),
 37 Newland
 Oppenheim Hy. Martin, Wood st.
 Rymer & Shepard, 7 Wood st.
 Wetherell & Neepe, 34 Newland
 Williams Wm. St Andrew's sq.

Libraries (Circulating).

Abel & Sons, 9 Parade
 Dorman Mark (and reading room), 27 Drapery

Limeburners and Merchants.

Watkin Jas. & Son, 40 Sheep st.
 West Biddles & Co. 37 Sheep st.

Lithographers.

Law W. W. & Sons, 49 Gold st.

Loan Societies.

Equitable, 40 Newland; Joseph
 Neighbour, treasr. George
 Poole, secretary
Friend-in-Need, 76 Wellingborough road; Geo. Hickman, treasr. William Hughes, sec.
General, 40 Newland; Thomas
 Gibson, treasr. Wm. Curtis,
 secretary
Globe, 18 Gas street; Alex. Law, treasr. Wm. Vann, secretary
Improvement, 24 Priory street;
 John Dalton, treasr. George
 Munday, secretary
Labouring Artisan, 38 Horse-market; James Beetson, treasr. Richard Caswell, sec.
Lily of the Valley, 46 Grafton street; Philip Orbell, treasr.
 Wm. Barfield, secretary United Friendly, 131 Wellingborough road; John Smith, treasr. Geo. Robinson, sec.
United Provident, 2 Lorne road; Arthur Alliston, treasr.
 Henry Vorley, secretary Working Men's Provident, 40
 Newland; Wm. Nott, treasr.
 Edwin Inwood, secretary

Lodgings. 'I

Aspinal Mrs Eliz. 21 Pytchelyst.
 Baylias Mrs Hh. 14 Harrison rd.
 Capell Mrs Ann, 4 Seymour pl.
 Caulcutt Mrs E. 9 Alexandra rd.
 Field Mrs Caro. 40 Kingswell st.

Garret George, 13 Princess st.
 Harris Mrs Soph. 15 Thenford st.
 Hatton Miss Mary, 6 St Katharine's terrace
 Higgins Mrs Sah. 17 Victoria rd.
 Kilborn Mrs Cath. 10 Victoria st.
 Manning Mrs C. 15 Bearward st
 Morgan Mrs Han. 48 Horsemkt.
 Norton Mrs Eliz. 120 Bridge st.
 Osborn Mrs A. 10 Seymour pl.
 Palmer Miss Eliz. 3 Park street
 Rae Mrs Margt. 41 College st.
 Sharman Mrs E. 5 Alexandra rd.
 Watts John, 23 Cyril street
 Woodford Mrs J. 8 Augustine st.

Looking-glass Makers.

Atkins Hy. Jn. 26 Abington st.
 Moore James, 35 Marefair

Machinists and Millwrights.

Allechin W. & Son, Globe Works
 Gadaby Ed. (sewing machine),
 24 Bearward street
 Hewitt Ed. 34 Bearward street
 King Thos. (shoe tool), 41
 Scarletwell street
 Lunt John (shoe) 11 Newland
 Parish Jn. (shoe), 25 Lorne rd.
 Perkins Thos. (sewing machine),
 28 Regent street
 Pilgrim Geo. (sewing machine repaired), 11 Mayorhold
 Rice & Co. Eagle Foundry
 Sheppard Jas. Thos. (shoe tool),
 Guildhall road
 Spencer Thos. 134 Scarletwell st.
 Wright John (shoe tool), 2
 Augustine street

Maltsters.

Higgins Henry, Weston street
 Houghton Jas. 19 Horsemkt.
 Norman Jno. S. 180 Bridge st.
 Perry John (executors of), 120
 Bridge street
 Phillips Bros. Steam Brewery
 Phipps P. & R. Northampton
Brewery and Towcester
 Ratliffe & Jeffery, Albion Steam
Brewery
 Shelton Thomas, Derngate
 Youil Bros., Victoria Brewery

Marine Store Dealers.

Acton Robert, 4 Broad street
 Allen Joseph, Alley yard
 Barnes Jph. & Son, 5 Kingswell st.
 Kilburn Rt. J. 59 & 61 Broad st.
 Leadbeater Samuel, 46 Wellingborough road

Market Gardeners.

(See also Nurserymen).

Chaplin Geo. 12 Commercial st.
 Gill Hubert, 28 Cleveland road
 Moring John, 60 Sheep street
 Moring Jn. Wm. 65 Adelaide st.
 Moring Vin. 34 St George's st.

Laundon George, 110 Welling-
 borough road
 Lester Ambrose, 26 Market sq.
 Peach James, 17 St George's pl.
 Percival John, 9 Albert street

Mercers.

Brice & Sons, 43 Drapery
 Frisby, Dyke & Co. 21 Market sq.
 Higgins John & Geo. 7 Parade
 Norman, Shepherd, & Manning,
 11 Drapery
 Phipps & Son, 10 Gold street
 Pressland & Son, 37 Drapery

Millers.

Greenough R. E. Steam Mills
 Haynes Geo. St Andrew's Mill,
 St George's street
 Perry John & Son, Tanner st.
 Swallow Geo. R. Kingsthorpe
 Westley Jph. & Sons, Nun Mills

Milliners & Dressmakers.

Allen Geo. (sen.), 54 Abington st
 Attack Mrs Sh. 12 Grey Friars' st.
 Bagnall Mrs Susan, 44 Marefair
 Barret Mrs Sarah, 60 Horsemkt.
 Biggs Miss Selina, 30 York st.
 Blackwell Misses Jane and Fannie, 7 Marefair
 Chambers Miss M. 10 King st.
 Cave Mrs Eliz. 11 Alexandra rd.
 Clarke Mrs M. A. 8 Abington ter
 Cooper Misses F. & S. 60 Gold st.
 Cooper Miss Sarah, 17 Gas st.
 Fountain Miss Ann, 28 Regt. sq.
 Gray Miss Reba. 29 Bearward st.
 Godfrey Miss Mary, Wood street
 Hadland Mrs S. J. 10 Regent sq.
 Harris Chas. 57 Bearward st.
 Hart Miss Char. Kingswell st.
 Hewett James, 47 Bridge street
 Hicks Miss Eliz. 2 Bedford pl.
 Higgins John & Geo. 7 Parade
 Hoare John, 48 Wellingbro' rd.
 Law Henry, 36A Gold street
 Kirby Mrs A. 20 Wellington pl.
 Lokes Mrs J. 134 Kettering rd.
 Luck Mrs My. Jane, 53 Newland
 Lutt Misses Mary, Eliz. &
 Rhoda, 61 Marefair
 Manning Miss M. 38 St Giles' ter.
 Mee & Sands, 10 Bridge street
 Morriss Mrs Alice, 55 Grafton st.
 Neville Mrs Zillah, 29 Sheep st.
 Norman Mrs S. 18 Grey Friars' st
 Parker Hamil. Wm. 5 Mercer's ro.
 Pell Miss Mar. Soph. 48 Waterloo
 Perrin Mrs Char. 45 St Giles' st.
 Pike Miss Susan h. 61 Marefair
 Read Charles, 1 Derngate
 Remmett Miss Cath. Eleanor,
 36 Freehold street
 Robins Mrs E. 67 Woolmonger st.
 Rush Sam. 26 Gold street
 Samwell Hy. 70 Wellingbro' rd
 Saunders, Mrs Sarah & Eliz.
 11 Market square
 Seaby Miss Eliza, 11 Wood st.
 Sharpe Miss Eliz. 86 Welling-
 borough road

Shelton Miss M. A. 37 St Giles' st
 Smith Miss Eliz. 35 York street
 Smith Lewis 87 Horsemarket
 Turl Mrs Mary, 4 Charles st.
 Utley Wm. Wellingborough rd.
 Warwick Mrs Mary, 88 Well-
 ingborough road
 Woodford James, 6 Marefair
 Woolston Miss Lou. 43 Broad st.
 Wootton Miss H. 8 Victoria ter.
 Wright Mrs Sarah, 2 Victoria st.

Musio and Musical In- strument Dealers.

Abel & Sons, 9 Parade
 Biden John, 41 St Giles' st.
 Carter Hy. Geo. jun. (pianoforte maker), 80 Kettering road
 Humphreys Thos. 68 Bridge st.
 Kemshed J. & Sons, 19 Bridgest.
 Klitz Mrs Sarah, 7 Mercer's row
 Notcutt Jn. Talbot, 31 Drapery
 Warner Mark, 16 Market sq.

Newsagents.

Allen Henry, 47 Bearward st.
 Bates James, 3 Bridge street
 Bates John, 16 Drapery
 Bryant Albert, 9 Bull lane
 Bryant Joshua, 84 Bridge street
 Chapman, John V. 4 Abington
 square & 162 Wellingbro' rd.
 Corby John, 20 Mayorhold
 Dorman Mark, 27 Drapery
 Ford Ebenezer, 133 Welling-
 borough road
 Hilyard Lennell, 43 Grafton st.
 Kemshed Joseph & Sons, 19
 Bridge street
 Lowe Geo. 12 Marefair
 Ratnett James, 27 Bridge st.
 Read Thomas, 81 Bull lane
 Ross Wm. 35 Bellbarn street
 Rushton Joseph, 35 Gold st.
 Williams Fred. B. 57 Bridge st.

Newspapers.

Northampton Advertiser (first Sat. in month), Stanton and Son, 24 Abington street
Northampton Albion (Friday),
 Thos. Arldge, 5 St Giles' st.
Northampton Herald (Sat.),
 Jas. Butterfield, 24 Market sq.
Northampton Mercury (Sat.),
 Mrs Ann Mary Dicey, 11
 Parade

Nursery, Seedsmen, and Florists.

Cockerill Alfred, 18 Drapery
 Peach James, 17 St George's pl.
 Perkins Fred. 2 Gold street
 Perkins Jno. & Son, 52 Drapery and Billing road
 Perkins Thomas, 42 Drapery
 Watts & Son, 56 Gold street
 and 110 Bridge street

Oil & Colour Merchants.

Chandler Hy. 2 Mercer's row
 Green William, 29 Abington st.
 Hill Rowland, 7 Bridge street

Johnson & Wright, 3 Gold st.
Powell George, 66 Sheep street
Smith Brothers, 28 Gold street
Watkin Jas. & Son, 40 Sheep st.
Wells John, 48 Sheep street

Opticians.

Bass & Son, 59 Sheep street
Cox & Sons, 1 Mercer's row

Organ Builders.

Burke Wm. 50 Horsemarket
Parkinson James, 10 Fish st.

Outfitters.

Berrill Alf. E. 10 Abington ter.
Blunsom & Co. 6 Abington st.
Barton Thomas, 46 Gold street
Cooley William S. 19 Drapery
Curral Joseph, 18 Abington st.
Dimbleby John & Co. 1 Gold st.
Dyer & Co. 36 Bridge street
Eldridge William, 16 Gold st.
Jones William, 29 Gold street
Meadows Jos. Dan. 6 Horsemkt.
Mills James, 53 Bridge street
Mills William and Son, 15, 17,
and 35 Bridge street
Sporr J. & Son, Abington st.
Woodhill and London
Tuffley Edward Wornham, 49
Drapery

Packing-Case Makers.

Bolton Chas. 27 Bearward st.
Collins Thomas, Inkerman ter.
Lovell Joseph, 5 Bearward st.
Salmon Thomas, 88 Bridge st.

Painters, Paperhangers, &c.

Alsop Thomas, 40 Silver street
Archer Wm. 50 Wellingbro' rd.
Baker Charles, 5 Park street
Berrill Frederick (grainer), 30
Lower Mounts
Camp John, 38 Gold street
Corby Samuel, 1 Kerr street
Cooke Samuel, 56 Marefair
Goy Henry, 9 King street
Green Henry, Upper Mounts
Hall Charles, 51 Abington st.
Holdsworth John, 41 Waterloo
Inskip James, 22 Augustine st.
Law William, 33 Abingdon st.
Lewis Chas. Abbey, 6 Woodhill
Matthews Wm. 25 Commercial st.
Mobbs Hy. C. 26 St. Giles' street
Oliver George, 31 Mayorhold
Pearson Charles, 23 Wood st.
Roberts Dan. 22 Wellington pl.
Smith Brothers, 28 Gold street.
Smith Chas. John, 55 Newland
Smith Jas. 129 Wellingbro' rd.
Smith Lewis, 87 Horsemarket
Spatcher Wm. 49 Lawrence st.
Tomes Wm. 43 Bearward street
Tucker Wm. W. 50 Bridge st.
Wright James, 2 Victoria street

Paperhangers.

Cave Jno. Leach, 1 Foundry st.
Johnson William, 31 Sheep st.
Peirce George, 35 Kerr street
Rhodes Hy. 14 Gt. Russell st.
Smith Chas. John, 55 Newland
Watkin James & Son (dealers),
40 Sheep street

Paper Manufacturers.

Wise & Co. (bank-note), Rush Mills

Parcel Offices.

*Globe Express, * * **
London and North-Western Railway Co. (Chaplin and Horne), Thomas Shaw, agent,
23 Bridge street
Midland Railway Co. Samuel
Frisby, agent, 29 Market sq.
Sutton & Co. William Herbert
Swindall, agt. 31 Abington st.

Paviour.

Lynch John, 69 Palmerston rd.

Pawnbrokers.

(*Marked * are licensed for plate.*)

Abraham James, 61 Grafton st.
* Abraham R. & Son, Kettering rd.
Drage John, 49 Scarletwell st.
* Dyer & Co. 36 Bridge street
* Edwards George, 46 Newland
* Walter Geo. Hy. 122 Bridge st.

Photographers.

Biden John, 41 St. Giles' street
Cox William, 13 Bridge street
Dorman Mark, 27 Drapery
Katterns, James, 7 Gold street
Law W. W. & Son, 12 Bridge st.

Physicians.

Francis D. J. T. 32 Bridge st.
Webster Jno. Hy. 31 Market sq.

Picture Dealers.

Moore James, 35 Marefair
Moss Henry, 50 Marefair

Picture-Frame Makers.

Atkins Hy. Jno. 26 Abington st.
Boosworth Wm. 17 Kingswell st.

Plasterers.

Banks John, 40 Abington street
Clarke S. B. & Son, Derngate
Miller Charles, 4 Grafton street
Stanford Wm. 28 Lr. Mounts
Woodford Joseph, 24 Kerr street

Plumbers and Glaziers.

Allen Thomas, 47 St. Giles' st.
Alsop George, 2 Bellbarn street
Alsop Thomas, 40 Silver street
Baker Charles, 5 Park street
Cleaver Richard, 14 Wood st.

Corby Samuel. 1 Kerr street
Cross Thos. jun. Albion cottage
Goy Henry, 9 King street
Hall Charles, 51 Abington st.
Inskip James, 22 Augustine st.
Jones George, 13 Victoria st.
Matthews Wm. 25 Commercial st.
Mobbs Hy. C. 26 St. Giles' st.
Oliver George, 31 Mayorhold
Roberts Dan. 22 Wellington pl.
Smith Brothers, 28 Gold street
Smith Chas. John, 55 Newland
Smith Jas. 129 Wellingbro' rd.
Spatcher Wm. 49 Lawrence st.
Tipler Geo. Perkins, 40 Bailiff st.
Tomes Wm. 43 Bearward st.
Tucker William W. 50 Bridge st.
Walker Arton, 23 Horsemarket

Poulterers.

(*Marked * are dealers in game.*)

* Clarke John, 2 George row
* Garner James, Swan yard
Henshaw Mrs. Sa. 7 Bradshaw st.
Putnam Mrs. My. A. 11 Bridge st.
Robbins Joseph, 46 Cow lane

Printsellers.

Abel & Sons, 9 Parade
Atkins Hy. Jno. 26 Abington st.

Printers.

Arlidge Thomas 5 St. Giles' st.
Biden John, 41 St. Giles' street
Brown & Thomas, 18 Gold st.
Butterfield Jas. 24 Market sq.
Cordeux & Sons, Swan yard
Dicey Mrs. Ann Mary, 11 Parade
Dorman Mark, 27 Drapery
Harris Richard, 6 Bridge street
Law Alfred, 11A Abington st.
Lea Charles, 41 Gold street
Norton Edward, 17 St. Giles' st.
Notcutt John Talbot, 31 Drapery
Parker Charles, 20 Newland
Shemeld Brothers, 8 Sheep st.
Stanton & Son, 24 Abington st.
Taylor & Son, 22 Gold street

Proctors.

Gates Wm. Brookes, 6 Derngate
Markham Arthur Bayley, 2
Derngate

Provision Dealers.

Ashby Fred. 155 Wellingbro' rd.
Beck Thos. 60 Great Russell st.
Bell Edward, 11 College st.
Dunkley George, 36 Sheep st.
Dyer Silas, 39 St. Giles' street
Eldridge Charles 23 Marefair and Far Cotton
Errington John, 43 Bridge st. and Yardly Hastings
Green Brothers, 1 Bridge street
Green Fred. Walter, 17 and 19
Leicester street
Hardwick Ebenezer, 170 Wellingborough road
Lightfoot Wm. 5 Regent sq.
Morris Geo. Kettering road

Mumford William, 32 Drapery
Patrick Hy. J. 63 Newland
Saddington Wm. 39 Park st.
Simpson Wm. 9 Sheep street
Smith Dd. Berkin, 28 Bridge st.
Smith Josiah, 15 Kettering rd.
Warren & Carter, 1 Wellington pl.
Warren Horatio, 23 Drapery
Wells Samuel, 64 Gold street
Whitehead Eben. 13 Sheep st.
Woodford Noah, 24 Albert st.

Register Offices for Ser- vants.

Millard Mrs Hannah, Exchange
Buildings, Parade
Northampton Servants' Registration Society (Mrs A.
Wright), 51 Gold street
Smith Mrs Han. 11 Derngate
Wright Mrs Amelia, 51 Gold st.

Rope and Twine Manu- facturers.

Jelleyman Wm. Fred. 3 Kings-well street
Pendred Benj. 81 Bridge street

Saddlers and Harness Makers.

Beasley Thomas, 4 George row
Clarke Wm. 23 Gold street and
111 Bridge street
Crane Wm 44 Bridge street
Davies & Sons, 17 Abington st.
Green & Son, 9 Gold street
Harris Samuel, 29 St Giles' st.
Manning John & Thomas, 8
Wood hill
Monk Jno. & Thos. 126 Bridge
street
Oswin Wm. 4 Sheep street
Pattison John, 62 Sheep street

Salt Merchants.

Greenough Rand E. 112 Bridge st
Shewing William, Cotton end
West, Biddles & Co. 37 Sheep st.

Saw Maker.

Duckenfield Ed. 31 Gold street

Saw-Mill Proprietors.

Mold James, Commercial street
Wootton Thomas, Broad street

Scrap Leather Dealer.

Hollowell Wm. & Son, 3 Market street

Sculptors.

Belton Geo. 173 Bridge street
Phillips Chas. 8 Wood street
Revitt John, Church lane
Uley Wm. 75 Wellingbro' rd.

Seed Crushers.

Blewitt Wm. & Co. 112 Bridge st

Seed Merchants.

Harvey Ebenezer, 15 Sheep st. and 68 Wellingborough road
Johnson & Wright, 3 Gold st.
Laundon Geo. 110 Wellingbro' rd.
Mobbs, Snow, & Wood, 13
Parade
Phipps Edward, Cotton end
Reeve Wm. Jas. 1 Horsemarket
and Birmingham
Wilson John, 3 Drapery
Wright Chas. Wellingbro' road

Sewing Machine Agents.

Brooks George, 27 Sheep street
Brownbill Hy. 43 St Giles' st.
Drakeford Israel, 39 Sheep st.
Higgins John & Geo. 7 Parade
Phipps & Son, 10 Gold street
Singer Mfrg. Co. 11 Abington st.
Tipler James, 2 Edith street

Shawl and Mantle Ware- houses.

Brice and Sons, 43 Drapery
Frisby, Dyke, & Co. 21 Market sq.
Hall Thos. Douglas, 12 Parade
Norman, Shepherd, & Manning,
11 Drapery
Phipps & Son, 10 Gold street
Pressland & Son, 37 Drapery
Smith R. & Co. 17 Market sq.

Shoemakers' Tool Manu- facturers.

King Thos. 41 Scarletwell pl.
Lunt John 11 Newland
Shepherd Jas. Th. Guildhall rd.

Shoe Mercers.

Blakey E. & Sons, Palmerston rd.
Phipps & Son, 10 Gold street
Watkins & Stimpson, 44 Horse-market

Shopkeepers.

Adams Fred. 43, Lawrence st.
Adams Hy. 128 Scarletwell st.
Adams John, 10 Upper Mounts
Adnitt Erskine, 42 Marefair
Adson Edm. 23 Wellington pl.
Ager Thos. 3 Fish street
Allibone Wm. 38 Melbourne st.
Amerson William, 39 Marefair
Andrews Wm. 43 Wellington st.
Arch Thos. 140 Kettering road
Ashby Mrs Ann, 43 Lorne road
Ashton David, 46 Woolmonger st.
Ball William, 32 Scarletwell st.
Baker Henry, 71 Horsemarket
Baker William, 14 Regent st.
Barber Thos. 69 Lorne road
Barber Wm. 108 Kettering road
Barker Mrs Ann, 23 Sawpit ln.
Barwen Walt. 50 Newtown rd.
Bassford Benj. 40 Compton st.
Barron Mrs Rebecca, 3 Maple st.
Beasley John, 58 Wellingbro' rd.
Bennett James, 52 Bath street
Berry John, 78 Vernon street
Bevis John, 7 Kingswell street

Boddington Jos. 69 Vernon st.
Bonham Hy. 33 Augustine st.
Bonham Thos. 15 Cyril street
Bosworth Jesse, 47 Newland
Botterill Chs. 35 Lr. Harding st.
Brain Wm. Kingthorpe road
Brooks Wm. 23 Green lane
Brown John, 10 Spring lane
Brown John, 17 Bailiff street
Brown Joseph, 30 Grafton st.
Brown Walter, 32 Newtown rd.
Buckingham Geo. 2 Up. Cross st.
Burrows John, 17 Lady's lane
Busby Benj. 78 Wellingbro' rd.
Butlin Mrs Han. 26 Chalk lane
Caswell Geo. 15 Augustine st.
Cave Mrs Cte. 68 St George's st.
Cave Fred. 17 Grafton street
Chapel Wm. 15 Wellingbro' rd.
Chapman Fred. 27 Bull lane
Clapham Geo. 58 Vernon street
Clark Wm. 29 Compton st.
Clark Robt. 30 Great Russell st.
Clarke Alfred, 17 Brunswick st.
Clements Thos. 23 Bellbarn st.
Cockerell Benj. St John's st.
Coldwell Fras. 3 Newtown rd.
Cole Benj. Wm. 138 Bridge st.
Coles John. 147 Wellingbro' rd.
Cooke Chas. 1 Alexandra road
Co-operative Stores, 49 Grafton
st. and Oak st.; John Ashby and Job Dickens, managers
Co-operative (Phoenix) 11 St
Andrew's sq. and Wellingbro' road; George Knight, sec.
Corby Thos. 78 Kettering rd.
Cosford, Thos. 28 St Peter's st.
Coughlan Thos. 25 Grafton st.
Cottingham, Wm. 28 Lorne rd.
Cox Hy. Sam. 63 Palmerston rd.
Curtis Thos. 18 Adelaide street
Curtis William, 8 Moat street
Cutler Henry, 5 Woodford st.
Darnell William, 13 The Green
Davis Jno. Wigston, Bailiff st.
Dawkins Isaac, 39 Louise road
Dean William, 69 Lawrence st.
Dickins Dan. David, 5 Sawpit ln.
Dickinson Jno. 59 Bouverie st.
Doughlas Wm. 87 Wellingbro' rd.
Dunham Henry, 21 Gas street
Dunmore Edwd. 33 St Mary's st.
Early Henry, 4 The Green
Elliott Mrs. P. 13 Horseshoe st.
England Sept. St James' end
Farndon Thomas, 1 Lorne road
Faulkner Samuel, 12 Exeter rd.
Fearey Miss My. 75 Bird's-piece
Field Wm. 110 Kettering road
Field William, 3 Abington ter.
Foster George, 7 Freehold st.
Frisby Richard, 49 Broad street
Fudger George, St James' end
Garland Mrs Eliz. 86 Bath st.
Garlick Carrington, 24 Victoria street
Garratt Samuel, 2 Portland st.
Garratt Wm. 46 Denmark rd.
Garvey Jno. 33 Upper Priory st.
Gawthorn Stephen Edward, 2
Pytchley street

Gee Miss Cath. 187 Bridge st.
 Geyton Albert, 3 Black Lion hill
 Gibbs William, 37 Cyril street
 Gilkes Joseph, St James' end
 Gotch Miss Ann, 2 Green st.
 Goode Benj. 50 Lawrence st.
 Goodman Jno. 5 Augustine st.
 Goodman Jno. 3 Adelaide st.
 Green Joseph, 67 Bailiff street
 Greenough Geo. 35 Victoria rd.
 Grocock Mrs M. 39 Adelaidest.
 Griffiths Mrs Sarah, Angel st.
 Hall William, St James' end
 Hannell Thos. 113 Bridge st.
 Hasdell William, 42 Maple st
 Harpin George, St James' end
 Harris Wm. 55 Lr. Harding st.
 Harris Alf. Geo. St James' end
 Hasler John, 15 Riding
 Haynes Geo. 80 Kettering rd.
 Hayward Geo. Abs. 42 Exeter rd.
 Henson Chas. 55 Horsemarket.
 Heritage Wm. 58 Bouverie st.
 Heycock Mrs Han. 8 Spring ln.
 Heydon Mrs A. 45 Brunswick st.
 Hickman Jno. 11 Melbourne st.
 Hicks Wm. Slad. 17 Quartpot ln.
 Hill Thos. 3, 1st sq. Nelson st.
 Hines John, 17 Kerr street
 Holloway John, 58 Cow lane
 Holt John, Cotton end
 Hornsey William, 16 Nelson st.
 Hough William, 54 Bath st.
 Howard Thos. 47 Newtown rd.
 Howes Jos. 1 Lower Harding st.
 Howes William, 22 Marefair
 Hughes Wm. 32 Vernon street
 Hughes Mrs Sarah, St Giles' ter.
 Hurry Jph. Johnson, 17 Lady's ln.
 Hyde William, 58 Regent st.
 Ingram Edward, 143 Bridge st.
 Jackson Chas. 53 Wellingbro' rd.
 Kemp Wm. 8 Upper Mounts
 Kent Jas. 182 Wellingbro' rd.
 King Mrs Jane, 1 Bristol street
 Kirby Wm. 53 St Mary's street
 Knight Ths. 226 Wellingbro' rd.
 Knight Thos. jun. 1 Ash street
 Langdell Geo. Alf. 43 Riding
 Lanton Mrs Eliz. 65 Grafton st.
 Law Alex. 26 Upper Priory st.
 Lawrence William, 40 West st.
 Lee Jeremiah, 6 Victoria road
 Letts George, 16 Mayorhold
 Linnell Geo. 16 Grafton street
 Linnell Robert, 38 Alfred street
 Linnell Thos. 20 Wellingbro' rd.
 Litchfield Geo. 1 Denmark road
 Lloyd Edward, 110 Kettering rd.
 Lord Geo. 71 Scarletwell street
 McAllister Henry, 59 Silver st.
 Mackinlay Mrs En. 30 King st.
 Major Miss Eliz. 156 Bridge st.
 Major William, 14 Turner st.
 Marlow Mrs Ann, 34 Bird's-piece
 Main Jas. 36 Cleveland road
 Markham Mrs Isa. 19 Mountgns.
 Marriott Mrs Eliz. 55 Bull lane
 Marriott Geo. 46 Up. Harding st.
 Marshall Robt. 38 Leicester st.
 Martin Hump. 36 Wellingbro' rd.
 Martin John, 46 Market street

Mason John, 27 Melbourne st.
 Moore Benj. 1 Castle hill
 Morgan Mrs Han. 150 Bridge st.
 Morris Geo. 39 Kettering road
 Mullis William 47 Hope's place
 Munday Wm. 89 Little Cross st.
 Munding Jno. 29 Upper Mounts
 Neagle Morris, 31 Lorne road
 Neal John, 30 Palmerston road
 Newton George, 15 Union st.
 Oddy Joseph, 81 Woolmonger st.
 Ogden Jos. 155 Wellingbro' rd.
 Oliver James, 33 Bailiff street
 Osborn Wm. 25 Adelaide street
 Packer Wm. 8 Kingswell street
 Page Jno. 14 Wellingbro' road
 Payne William, 1 Vernon street
 Pell David, 38 Grafton street
 Penn Charles, 79 Vernon street
 Penn Mrs Emma, 27 Mount at.
 Philpott Thos. 20 Grafton st.
 Phipps Jas. Allen, St James' end
 Pointer James, 97 Bath street.
 Pratt Mrs Ann, 71 Melbourne st.
 Price George, 16 Cow lane
 Readings Wm. 55 Primrose hill
 Reedy Matth. 21 Grey Friar st.
 Reynolds Joseph, 5 Crispin st.
 Richards Alb. 40 Horsemarket
 Roberts Peter, 71 Edith street
 Robbins Mrs Sarah, St John's st.
 Robinson Thos. 55 Melbourne st.
 Robinson Wm. H. 5 Mayorhold
 Roe Charles, St James' end
 Roe George 24 Pytchley street
 Rohrer Thos. 44 Kettering rd.
 Roworth Jos. 5 Lr. Harding st.
 Samwell Fred. 60 Wellingbro' rd.
 Sanders William, 87 Bath st.
 Sebridge Thos. 118 Gt. Russell st.
 Sheffield Jno. 44 St Edmund's st.
 Skinner Geo. 7 Upper Priory st.
 Smith Edward, 28 Lawrence st.
 Smith John, 173 Broad street
 Smith Jno. 131 Wellingbro' rd.
 Smith Samuel, 31 Spring gards.
 Smith Thomas, 47 Lawrence st.
 Smith Wm. 98 Bailiff street
 Smith Wm. Eaton, 89 Horsemkt.
 Spawton Ts. Inchley, 34 Silver st.
 Stevenson Mrs A. 56 G. Russell st.
 Stevenson M. Ann, 9 Lr. Cross st.
 Stokes Mrs Eh. 14 Wellingbro' rd.
 Stratford Stephen, 1 Francis st.
 Sutton Rd. 32 Dover street
 Swindall Thos. 20 St James' st.
 Tarry George, 37 York street
 Taylor Fred. 32 St Giles' street
 Tew Alfred, 13 Nelson street
 Threadgold Wm. Wellingbro' rd.
 Tipler Geo. Perkins, 40 Bailiff st.
 Tompkins Geo. 65 Cyril street
 Tooby Thos. Rd. 21 Tanner st.
 Tuckley Steph. 1 St Edmund st.
 Valentine Wm. 13 Free School st.
 Vorley Hy. 7 St Andrew's sq.
 Vorley Hy. (jun.) 1 Bellbarn st.
 Walker Jas. 30 Upper Mounts
 Walton Thos. 96 Scarletwell st.
 Ward Thos. 59 St Edmund st.
 Warr Thos. 36 Melbourne st.
 Watkin Fred. 69 Adelaide st.

Watts Alfred, Alliston's gardns.
 Watts John, 1 Bristol street
 Webb Chas., 99 Market street
 Webb Mrs Hanh. 19 Bouverie st.
 Webb Richd. 73 Market street
 West Robert, St James' end
 White Jno. 3 Great Russell st.
 White Joseph, 1 Regent street
 Whittle Mrs Eliza, 11 Foundry st.
 Whitworth Thos. 70 Lr. Thrift st.
 Wickes Jno. 123 Gt. Russell st.
 Wilford Thos. 13 Inkerman ter.
 Wills Miss Mary, 20 Castle st.
 Wills Mrs Sar. 28 Horseshoe st.
 Winspear Jos. 6 St Andrew's st.
 Withers Fred. F. 52 Kettering rd.
 Woodruff Geo. 28 Dover street
 Worrell Chas. 52 Lower Mounts
 Wothall Chas. 12 Dover street
 Wright Arth. Bull, 25 Chapel pl.
 Wright John, 20 Upper Mounts
 Wright John, St James' end
 Wright Josiah, 62 Gt. Russell st.
 Wright Mrs Mary Ann, 48 Wellington street

Size Manufacturers.

Meads George, 74 Cow lane
 Savory Edward, 21 Castle st.

Slate Merchants.

Greenough Rand Edward, 112
 Bridge street
 Hill Wm. & Co. Cotton end
 Ward & Beby, Cotton end
 Watkin Jas. & Son, 40 Sheep st.

Slaters.

Clarke S. B. & Son, Derngate

Small Ware Dealers.

Davison Miss Priscilla, 88 Abington street
 Manning Wm. 76 Kettering rd.
 Matthews George, 81 Wellingborough road

Soda Water and Ginger Beer Manufacturers.

Bingley John, 93 Bailiff street
 Chambers & Manning, 21 King st.
 Chambers Thos. (ginger beer) 1
 Riding
 Dadford Thomas, 33 Gold st.
 Foster William, 44 Deal street
 Seal Joseph, 49 St James' st.
 Wills Wm. Hy. 63 Horsemkt.

Stationers.

Abel & Sons, 9 Parade
 Biden John, 41 St Giles' street
 Billingham Wm. jun. 26 Marefair
 Chapman John V. 4 Abington
 sq. and 162 Wellingbro' rd.
 Dorman Mark, 27 Drapery
 Hannen, Mrs Sarah Ann, 6
 Sheep street
 Harris Richard, 6 Bridge st.
 Humphreys Thos. 68 Bridge st.
 Law Alfred, 11 Abington street

Lea Charles, 41 Gold street
 Millard Mrs Hannah, 2 Exchange buildings, Parade
 Moss Hy. 50 Marefair
 Norton Edwin, 17 St Giles' st.
 Notcutt Jno. Talbot, 31 Drapery
 Rushton Joseph, 35 Gold st.
 Shemeld Brothers (manufacturing) 8 Sheep street
 Spence William, 17 Newland
 Stanton & Son, 24 Abington st.
 Taylor & Son, 22 Gold street.
 Winch John, Leicester road

Stay and Corset Maker.

Dando Mrs Rebecca, 16 Market square

Stone & Marble Masons.

Belton George, 178 Bridge st.
 Cane John L. 1 Foundry st.
 French Thomas, 7 Albert st.
 Revitt John, Church lane
 Utley Wm. 75 Wellingbro' rd.
 Warren Brothers, 65 Bailiff st.

Strawhat and Bonnet Makers.

Dunn Miss Mary A. 58 Denmark road
 Gray Miss Rebecca, 14 Parade
 Gunn Miss Emma, 99 Bailiff st.
 Law Hy. 36-A Gold street
 Seaby Richard, 35 Bearward st.
 Spriggs Miss Sarah Selina, 21 Grafton street

Surgeons.

Ashdown & Cogan, 50 Sheep st.
 Barr & Spurgin, 45 Abington st.
 Bryan Jno. Morgan, 36 Marefair
 Buszard Fk. M.D. 43 Abington st.
 Clifton Arth. Crowen, 65 Abington street
 Cotton Geo. 47 Abington st.
 Evans Chas. Jewl. 82 Abington st.
 Fitzpatrick James, 1 Wood st.
 Fitzpatrick Thos. 53 Sheep st.
 Flewitt Motteram W. 27 Gold st.
 Mash James, 4 St Giles' square
 Moxon William, 31 Sheep st.
 Olive Enstace Henry, 20 Sheep st.
 Percival Wm. 66 Abington st.
 Terry Hy. jun. 18 St Giles' st.

Surgical Instrument Maker.

Rowden Mrs Sarah, 13 Abington street

Tailors.

(Marked * are also Woollen Drapers.)

Baker Thos. 4 Inkerman ter.
 *Barnard James, 19 Gold street
 *Barnard Philip P. 7 Drapery
 *Blunsom & Co. 6 Abington st.
 *Burton Thomas, 46 Gold st.
 Clements Wm. 8 Inkerman ter.
 Cory Samuel, 46 Marefair

*Covington Fred. 61 Wellingborough road
 *Covington Geo. Sm. 23 Sheep st.
 *Craddock Wm. & Son, 47 Gold st.
 *Cretney Rt. S. 25 Grey Friars st.
 *Curral Jos. 18 Abington st.
 Darlow Jno. 55 Wellingbro' rd.
 *Dumbleby & Co. 1 Gold street
 Dunkley Wm. 15 Adelaide st.
 *Eesery Robert, 15 Fish street
 *Ford John 19 Marefair
 Goodman Hy. 2 Quart pot lane
 Gourlay & Muscott, 4 Gold st.
 Jackson Wm. Chas. St. James' end
 *Johnson William, 8 Parade
 *Langley Fred. Wm. 11 Marefair
 Lawrence William, 7 Wood hill
 Lay John, 13 Market square
 Litchfield James, 142 Bridge st.
 Love William, 40 Bearward st.
 *Mills James, 53 Bridge street
 *Mills, William & Son, 15, 17, and 35 Bridge street
 Owen George, 34 St Giles' st.
 Pendered Thos. 124 Lr. Thrift st.
 Roberts Samuel, 50 Green st.
 *Robinson Joseph, 68 Sheep st.
 Robinson William, 18 Dergate
 *Saddington Jas. 26 Victoria st.
 Smith William, 32 Semilong
 *Spoor J. & Son, Abington st. Woodhill, and London
 *Stanton Rich. 23 Abington st.
 Thompson Joseph, 54 Wellingborough road
 Tite Wm. 98 Wellingbro' rd.
 *Tuffley Edward W. 49 Drapery
 Wade James, 13 Castle street
 Warner Jno. 27 Commercial st.
 *Watts Wm. 7-B St Giles' st.

Tallow Chandlers.

Gray Parker, 3 Parade
 Perkins S. E. & Co. 36 Gold st.
 Ward Josiah, 78 Bridge street
 Ward Mrs Mrth. 7 Abington sq.

Tanners.

Rymer & Shepard, 7 Wood st.
 Thompson Samuel B. Spring ln.
 Wetherell & Neepe, Newland

Teacher of Dancing.

Dorrell Alfred, 32 Newland

Teacher of Languages.

Burvenich Const. 21 York par.

Teachers of Music.

Andrews Alph. 80 Abington st.
 M'Korkell Chas. Melbourne cres.
 M'Korkell Miss Emma, 14 York parade

Temperance Hotels.

Deeley George (private and com.), 108 Bridge street
 Goode Jos. 6 Commercial st.
 Lyster Abraham, 2 King street

Timber Merchants.

Baldwin Thos. 197 Bridge st.
 Hill W. & Co. Cotton end
 Mold James, Commercial street
 Phipps Edward, Cotton end
 Smith Brothers, 28 Gold street
 Ward & Beeby, Cotton end
 Watkin Jas. & Son, 40 Sheep st.

Tinmen, Braziers, & Tinplate Workers.

Bradford John, 3 Mount street
 Dickens A. C. 13 Kingswell st.
 Downing Edward, 67 Bridge st.
 Downs Emanuel, 37½ Horsemkt.
 Green William, 29 Abington st.
 Green Wm. Geo. 81 Horsemkt.
 Hewitt Eli, Maple street
 Hill Rowland, 7 Bridge street
 Lawman Thomas, 25 Newland
 Lumb Linley H. St James' end
 Parrott Jesse, 50 Kingswell st.
 Porter J. S. 58 Bridge street
 Stanford Dav. Jos. 7-A Marefair
 Warr Mrs Sopha, 3-A Market sq.

Tobaccoonists.

Berridge James, 98 Bridge st.
 Bingham Robert, 28 Sheep st.
 Birdsall Wm. Fras. 4 Bridge st.
 Checkley Geo. N. 16 Dergate
 Chubb William, 71 Bridge st.
 Coote William, 51 Drapery
 Foulsham William, 36 Drapery
 Hardy John Strover, 14 Sheep street and 21 Abington street
 Humphreys Thos. 68 Bridge st.
 Jelley William 56 Bridge street
 Johnson Rd. Step. 7 St Giles' st.
 Katterns James, 7 Gold street
 Lea Hy. Chas. 2 Abington ter.
 Lester Ambrose, 26 Market sq.
 Lowe George, 12 Marefair
 Mold Mrs Mary Ann, 5 Lady's ln.
 Mumford William, 32 Drapery
 Munns William T. 3 Dergate
 Peaks David Wm. 9 Regent sq.
 Phipps William, 100 Bridge st.
 Roberts George, 19 Mayorhold
 Roberts Robert, 76 Bailiff street
 Seaby Wm. 16 Regent sq.
 Swindall Wm. H. 31 Abington st.
 Troup Alexander, 29 Drapery
 Whitelaw George (and manufacturing), 17 Gold street
 Whitney Thomas, 58 Gold st.
 Winch John, Leicester road
 Wright John G. 11 Bearward st.

Tobacco Pipe Makers.

Brooks & Hughes, 18 Horseshoe street
 Chick James & Sons, Foundry st.
 Roberts Mrs H. 63 Scarletwell st.

Tool Dealer.

Duckenfield Edw. 31 Gold st.

Toy Dealers.

Albon Henry, 35 Scarletwell st.
 Billingham Wm. jun. 26 Marefair and 13 Bridge st.

Hardy John Stover, 14 Sheep street and 21 Abington street
Gonaki & Davis, 24 Sheep st.
Millard Mrs H. Exchange bldgs.
Milley Thos. 64½ Abington st.
Powell John, 17 Marefair
Steel Misses E. & C. 36 Abington street
Taylor & Son, 22 Gold street

Tripe Dressers.

Fathers Thos. 39 Bellbarn st.
Palmer Henry, 109 Bridge st.
Parker George, 37 Horsemarket
Roe William, 22 Silver street

Trunk Makers.

Bolton Chas. 27 Bearward st.
Collins Thomas, Inkerman ter.
Lovell Joseph, 5 Bearward st.
Salmon Thomas, 88 Bridge st.

Turners.

Bex William (wood and stone),
Northend Steam Works, Bailiff street
Black Wm. jun. 15 Albert street
Robins Wm. 63 Woolmonger st.
Smith William, 7 Marefair
Stanford Dd. Josiah, 7A Marefair

Umbrella and Parasol Makers.

Bew Thomas, 8 Market square
Mills John Major, 1 Angel st.
Smith Edw. 47 Wellingbro' rd.
Smith Thos. 75 Horsemarket
Whiting Daniel, 17 York terrace

Undertakers.

Bex William, Northend Steam Works, Bailiff street
Collins Thomas, Inkerman ter.
Downs Cyrus, 9 Wellington pl.
Hewitt Charles, 60 Marefair
Holding Josh. 27 Bellbarn st.
Longland George, 7 Regent sq.
Mackness Jesse, 6 Queen street
Main Robert, 27 Marefair
Mills, John Major, 1 Angel st.
Salmons Thomas, 88 Bridge st.

Smith William, 7 Marefair
Souster Rt. Jon. 36 Lawrence st
Sturgess Thos. 29 Alexandra rd.

Upholsterers.

Camp John, 38 and 40 Gold st.
Cavit Jno. 38 and 40 Bridge st.
Haddon John, 48 St Giles' st.
Hiron Henry, 18 Bailiff street
Lewis Charles A. 6 Wood hill
Marriott Henry, 25 King street
Mobbs John, 76 Lr. Thrift st.
Page & Son, 1 Sheep street
Payn Mrs Adelaide, 7 Bull lane
Peiros George, 35 Kerr street
Phipps & Son, 10 Gold street
Richards Wm. Hy. Bird's piece
Smith Brothers, 28 Gold street
Wells Israel, 86 Abington street

Veterinary Surgeons.

Berry John Parton, 4 Parade
Brake Matw. B. 12 Kingswell st
Garrett William, 35 Sheep street
Merrick Thos. Jas. 33 Drapery

Wagon Builders.

Northampton Coal, Iron, and
Wagon Co. (limited), Lepper
and Dodgson, managing directors,
5 Sheep street
Whitehouse Ths. (rwy.) Weston st

Watch & Clock Makers.

Bas & Son, 59 Sheep street
Blunt Delenai, 14 Bridge street
Cox & Sons, 1 Mercer's row
Haddon Geo. Hy. 48 St Giles' st.
Holt Henry, 16 Bailiff street
Hunt George, 63 Bridge street
Jolliffe & Son, 34 Drapery
Knight Jas. & Son, 9 Marefair
Marriott William, 9 Abington st.
Marshman William Frederick,
84 Wellingborough road
Renshaw William, 48 Gold st.
Robinson Jos. Haig, 12 Gold st.
Schworer Jph. & Chas. 51 Brdg. st
Stirmer Sam. Jno. 9 St Giles' st.
Vogt Alfred, 8 Marefair
Wellby & Son, 8 Newland

Whitmore & Son, 42 Gold street
Woodin Wm. Hy. 46 Hope's pl.
Wright Edwin, 46 Sheep street

Wharfingers.

Higgins Henry, Weston street
Norman William, Cotton end

Wheelwrights.

Bazeley George, Mayorhold
Kightley & Son, Leicester street
Marlow John, Wellingbro' road
Mold James, Commercial street
Sawbridge Wm. St John's st.
Willessden Robt. St James' end
Wright Richard, 93 Horsemt.

Whitesmiths.

Horsley William, St Giles' st.
Letts Geo. Knight, 44 Silver st.
Lunt J. 11 Newland & 45 Mount st.
Payne John, 23 Castle street
Pearson George, 19 Mount st.
Perrin Henry, Kingswell street
Perrin James, 45 St Giles' street
Pointer Thos. 16 Silver street
Roberts William, 24 Fish street
Tomlinson Francis, Sawpit lane
Wright John, 2 Augustine st.

Window Blind Makers (Venetian, &c.)

Bex Wm. Northend Steam Works, Bailiff street
Rigby Wm. Dychurch lane

Wine & Spirit Merchants.

Coales & Allen, Lion Brewery
Dorman Mark, 27 Drapery
Gray Parker, 17 Drapery
Hanson Thos. & Rt. Abington st.
Phipps P. & R. Northampton Brewery
Portal Wm. Thos. 8 Gold street
Shipman Jno. & Wlfr. 12 Drapery
Rodbard Benj. L. 10 Market sq.
Steevenson Mrs A. 21 Sheep st.
Tresham Ed. 1 St Andrew's ter.
Vernon W. M. Exchange Vaults

Wool Stapler.

Bunting William, 8 Royal ter.

PUBLIC OFFICES, ESTABLISHMENTS, &c.

Churches.

All Saints—Rev. Sydney Gedge, M.A. vicar;
Rev. H. S. Gedge, B.A. and Rev. F. H. Wood,
B.A. curates
St Andrew's—Rev. Thos. Storer, B.A. vicar;
Rev. Wm. Louis Gibson, B.A. curate
St Edmund's—Rev. Nathaniel T. Hughes, M.A.
vicar; Rev. H. Lester, curate; Geo. Mead, clerk and sexton, 20 Palmerston road
St Giles'—Rev. W. H. F. Robson, A.K.C. vicar; Rev. E. J. Wright, M.A. curate; John Haddon, clerk, 48 St Giles' street
St James'—Rev. Lewis Clayton, M.A.; Edward Penn, sexton, 22 Wood street

St Katharine's—Rev. Robert Collins King,
M.A. vicar; Rev. James Lunt, B.A. curate
St Michael and All Angels, Lower Mounts—
Revs. H. G. Parrish, B.A. & A.C. Ramsay, B.A.
St Peter's—Rev. Edward Nicholls Tom, M.A.
rector
St Sepulchre's—Rev. William Butlin, M.A. vicar; Rev. F. W. Goodacre, M.A. and Rev.
Charles Wright, M.A. curates Catholic (Blessed Virgin & St Thomas of Canterbury), Leicester road—Right Rev. Francis Kerril Amherst, D.D. Bishop; Very Rev.
Canon Mark Oleron, D.D. Vicar-General;
Very Rev. Canon Christopher Scott, D.D.

Dissenting Chapels.

Baptist (Calvinist), College street—Rev. John Turland Brown
Baptist, Greyfriars' street—Rev. Thos. Henry Holyoak.
Baptist (Calvinistic), Abington street—Rev. Thos. Shelton
Baptist, Grafton st.—Rev. Burwood Holland
Independent, Castle hill—Rev. Thomas Arnold
Independent, King st.—Rev. Arthur Vaughan
Independent, Commercial street, Victoria place, and St James' end—Rev. E. J. Prust and Rev. W. H. Stent.
Primitive Methodist, Horsemkt.—Rev. Js. Wallis
Reform Methodist, Kingswell street
Society of Friends, Wellington street
Unitarian, King street—Rev. Iden Payne.
Wesleyan, Gold street—Rev. W. B. Dennis
Wesleyan, Grafton st.—Rev. Wm. Gooderidge
Wesleyan Reform, Wellingborough road

Public Officers.

Chief Constable of Borough Police—Henry Keenan, Fish street
Chief Constable of County Police—Henry Lambart Bayly, St Giles' square
Clerk to Borough Magistrates—Charles Wickens, Town Hall
Clerk to Brixworth Highway Board—William Tomalin, 4 St Giles' street
Clerk to Guardians of Brixworth Union—Alfred John Jeffery, 1 Market square
Clerk to County Magistrates (Northampton Division), and to Board of Guardians for Northampton Union, and to Commissioners for Northampton, Division of Property, Income, and Land Taxes, and Inhabited House Duty—Wm. Tomalin, 4 St Giles' st.
Clerk to Commissioners of River Nene Navigation, and Solicitor—Thomas Scriven, 4 Derngate
Clerk to Improvement Commissioners' Taxes for Borough—Arthur Bayley Markham, Guildhall road
Clerk to Commissioners of Towcester and Cotton End Turnpike Trusts—Richard Howes, 14 Abington street, Northampton, & at Towcester
Clerk to the Feoffees of St Giles' Charity Estates—Arthur Bayley Markham, Guildhall road
Clerk to General Municipal Charity Trusts—John Hensman, 6 St Giles' street
Clerk to Guardians Hardingstone Union—John Jeffery, 1 Newland
Clerk to Hardingstone Highway Board—William Tomalin, 4 St Giles' street
Clerk to Hardingstone Local Board—Walter Walker, 1 Market square
Clerk to Improvement Commissioners—Arthur Bayley Markham, Guildhall road
Clerk to Trustees of Freemen's Commons—John Jeffery, 1 Newland
Clerk to Weedon Gas Light Company—William Dennis, 38 Sheep street
Clerks of the Peace (for the Borough)—Christopher Hughes, 23 Newland; (for the County)—Henry Philip Markham, County Hall, George row Collectors of Poor Rates for All Saints' and St Peter's—Samuel Pratt Bennett, Exchange Buildings; for St Giles' and St Sepulchre's

—Joseph Darnell, 48 Abington street; for St Andrew's—Charles Baseley, Gt Russell st.
Collector of Taxes—James Leighton Acklam, Post-office
Collectors of Improvement Rates—Wm. Mobbs, for All Saints' and St Peter's, 5 Alfred street; James Pebody, 39 Wood street, for St Sepulchre's, St Giles', and St Andrew's Commissioners for taking Acknowledgments of Deeds of Married Women—John Becke, 20 Market square; William Dennis, 38 Sheep st.; John Hensman, 6 St Giles' st.; John Jeffery, 1 Newland; Henry Philip Markham, Guildhall road; Thomas Scriven, 4 Derngate
Commissioners in Chancery—John Becke, 20 Market square; Edward Montague Browne, 2 St Giles' square; William Dennis, 38 Sheep street; John Hensman, 6 St Giles' street; Richard Howes, 14 Abington street; Christopher Hughes, 23 Newland; John Jeffery, 1 Newland; Arthur Bayley Markham, and Henry Philip Markham, Guildhall road; George Randa, 41 Newland; Thomas Scriven, 4 Derngate; William Shoosmith, 2 Newland Coroner for the Borough of Northampton—Charles Cecil Becke, 20 Market square; Deputy Coroner—Thos. Green, 20 Market sq.
Coroners, Midland District—William Terry, 4 Derngate; Northern District—William Marshall, Kettering; Southern District—Arthur Weston, Brackley; Peterborough Liberty—Andrew Percival. Deputy Coroners, Midland District—William Tomalin, 4 St Giles' st.; Southern District—Charles Boorn Barnes, Brackley
Deputy Registrar for Granting Marriage Licences for the Diocese of Peterborough—William Brooks Gates, 6 Derngate
District Registrar of Court of Probate—Wm. Brooks Gates, 6 Derngate
Inspector of Corn Returns—Thomas Robinson, Post-office
Inspector of County Police—George Williamson, in charge of Division, and Inspector of Weights and Measures, St Giles' square
Inspector of County Detectives—Thos. Swain, Police Station, Angel street
Inspector of Nuisances—William Gardner, 19 Kerr street
Lord Lieutenant—His Excellency, The Earl Spencer, K.G. Althorp
Notary Public—Wm. Brooks Gates, Derngate
Proctors of Ecclesiastical Courts—William Brooks Gates, 6 Derngate; Arthur Bayley Markham, Guildhall road
Recorder—John Hibberd Brewer, Esq. barrister, 4 Pump court, Temple, London
Registry Clerk of All Saints' Parish—John Jeffery, 1 Newland
Registrar of Births and Deaths for All Saints' District—Wm. John Thornton, 6 Mercer's row
Registrar of Births and Deaths for St Giles' District—Francis Chas. Robinson, 24 Wood street
Registrar of the Court of Record—George Randa, 41 Newland
Registrar of Marriages for Northampton Union—William Tomalin, 4 St Giles' street
Relieving Officer, Northampton District—John William Parker, 34 Horsemarket
Secretary to Race Stand Company—Thomas Marshall, Floore, Weedon

Sheriffs' Officers—William John Peirce, 5 Derngate; William Noble, 5 Derngate
Solicitor (Official) in Bankruptcy for Northampton County Court—William Dennis, 38 Sheep street
Solicitor to Church Charity Trustees—Thos. Scriven, 4 Derngate; Chas. Wickens, secretary
Solicitor to Freehold Land Society—Wm. Shoosmith, 2 Newland
Solicitors for Northampton and Wymersley Association for Prosecution of Felons—Scriven & Terry, 4 Derngate
Superintendent Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages for the Hardingstone District—John Jeffery, 1 Newland
Superintendent Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages for the Brizworth District—Alfred John Jeffery, 1 Market square
Superintendents in Conservative Interest for South Division—Arthur Bayley Markham, Guildhall road; for Borough, Wm. Mobbs, 7 St Giles' square
Superintendents in Liberal Interest for South Division of County—C. C. Becke, 20 Market sq.; for Borough, Fred. Parker, 49 Sheep st.
Superintendent Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages for Northampton—Wm. Tomalin, 4 St Giles' street
Surveyor of Borough—E. F. Law, 29 Abington street
Surveyor to Improvement Commissioners—John Hyde Pidcock, C.E. Town hall
Surveyor of Taxes—Augustus Farr, Post-Office
Town Clerk—William Shoosmith, 2A Newland
Treasurer for the Borough—Henry Billington Whitworth, 9 George row
Treasurer for the County—M. A. Boémé, Union Bank

Public Establishments, &c.

Barracks, Leicester road—Col. J. G. R. Aplin, 29th Brigade dep.; Thomas Stenson, barrack sergeant; Major C. W. M'Niell, staff-officer of pensioners and supt. of recruiting; Geo. Herbert Clifton, M.D., medical officer; W. E. Taylor, staff-sergeant of pensioners Borough Court—John Hibberd Brewer, barrister and recorder; George Rande, registrar; Christopher Checkley, high-bailiff.
Borough Gaol, Mounts—George Arkesden, governor; Mrs Elizabeth Arkesden, matron; Henry Terry, surgeon; Rev. W. H. F. Robson, A.K.C., chaplain
Chamber of Commerce (Northampton and Northamptonshire), Exchange buildings, Parade—Thomas C. Manton, secretary
Corn Exchange, Parade—A. B. Markham, secretary; Samuel Newton, hall-keeper
County Court, County hall, St Giles' square—Richard Harington, Esq. judge; William Dennis, registrar; John Macquire, high-bailiff; Christopher Checkley, sub-bailiff; Jn. Becke, treasurer; Jas. Hy. Fletcher, clerk
County Gaol, St Giles' square—Benjamin Rust, governor; Rev. John Dreaper, chaplain; Wm. Alex. Barr, M.D. surgeon
County Hall, Woodhill—H. P. Markham, clerk of the peace
Dispensary (Homœopathic), Abington street—A. C. Clifton, surgeon Dispensary (Royal Victoria), Albion place—W. A. Barr, Wm. Moxon, and E. J. Evans, surgeons; G. C. Osbourne, dispenser; and John Becke, hon. secretary Fire Brigade, keys kept at 55 Newland, and police station, Fish street—Charles John Smith, 55 Newland, superintendent Friendly Societies' Medical Institute, 11 St Giles' street—John Turner, M.D. medical officer; G. Knight, secretary

Gas Works, Mill lane—John Eunson, jun. manager and engineer; Alfred Dunham, cashier and chief clerk; Wm. Dennis, solicitor
General Cemetery, Billing road—Rev. Joseph Brown, chaplain and registrar; Messrs Becke & Green, solicitors, 20 Market square; and Mr John Kightley, treasurer, 63 Abington st.
General Infirmary, Billing road—Chas. Lewis, house surgeon; Rev. Wm. Butlin, chaplain; Miss Susan Pell, matron; S. P. Bennett, sec.
General Lunatic Asylum, Billing road—Jos. Bayley, medical supt.; Mrs Grant, matron; Rev. Robert B. Woodward, chaplain; John Godfrey, secretary
Inland Revenue Office, Post-Office—James Leighton Acklam, collector; Augustus Farr, surveyor of taxes; James Winter, supervisor; Thos. Robinson, insp. of corn returns
Mechanics' Institute, Exchange buildings, Parade—Rev. Iden Payne, secretary; Thos. Wright, treasurer; Joseph Rowlatt, librarian
Museum, Town Hall—Edward Jeffery, curator
Northampton Amateur Athletic Club, Dychurch lane
Northampton Young Men's Christian Association, 14 Kingswell street—Robert Brice, Edmund Law, and Alexander Eames Parsons, honorary secretaries
Northampton 3d Rifle Volunteers' Orderly Room, Corn Exchange buildings—John Pierce, sergeant instructor
Northamptonshire Agricultural Society—John M. Lovell, secretary, Harpole, Weedon
Northamptonshire Bankruptcy Court—Wm. Dennis, official assignee, 38 Sheep street
Northamptonshire Chamber of Agriculture, George Hotel—Thos. J. Adkins, The Booth Farm, secretary
Northamptonshire Female Servants' Training Institution—Orphanage, St Giles' street
Northamptonshire Militia Stores, Gt. Russell street—Capt. Thomas Rose, officer in charge
Orphanage for Girls, St Giles' street—Mrs Annie Stephenson, matron
Police Office (County), St Giles' square—Henry Lambart Bayly, chief constable; William Turner Lalor, chief clerk
Police Station (Borough), Fish street—Henry Keenan, chief constable
Police Station (County), Angel street—George Williamson, inspector; Thomas Swain, detective inspector
Railway Station (London & North-Western), Joseph Webster, station master; Joseph Guest, goods' manager and district superintendent; Thomas Everitt, goods' agent
Railway Station (Midland), St John's street good's depot, Cotton end—Charles Barnes, station master and goods' agent
Religious and Useful Knowledge Society's Depot, Gold street—E. Montague Browne, secretary; Charles Wright, librarian
Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge—Alfred Law's, 11 Abington street

Stamp Office, 19 Market square—Edmund Charles Burton, distributor; James Edwin Wright, manager
Telegraph (Post-Office), 14 Abington street
Theatre, Marefair—Robert Higgit, lessee, 63 Gold street
Town Hall, St Giles' square—Charles Wickens, clerk to Borough Magistrates; John Hyde Pidcock, C.E., surveyor to the Improvement Commissioners; Stephen Howes, hall-keeper
Tract Society's Depot—Mrs Sarah Ann Hannen's, 6 Sheep street
Union Workhouse, Wellingborough road,—Michael and Mrs Annie Eliz. Brannan, master and matron; John and Mrs Clercelina Beach, schoolmaster and mistress; George Cotton, surgeon, and Rev. N. T. Hughes, M.A., chaplain
Water Works, Billing road—Office, 87 Newland; Henry Armit, secretary; William Bernard, col.; Becke and Green, solicitors
Weights and Measures' Office (Borough), 21 St Giles' street—George Beattie, inspector; County, Angel street—George Williamson, inspector.
Working Men's Club, 27A St Giles' street—George Hancock, secretary and manager

List of Carriers to and from Northampton.

London and North-Western Railway Company, carriers to all parts of the kingdom—Agents—Chaplin and Horne, Railway Station, and Angel Hotel, Bridge street; Thos. Shaw, manager. Pickford and Co., Railway Station; Geo. Morgan, agent. Parcel Dispatch for every Passenger Train—Receiving Offices, George and Angel Hotels
Midland Railway Company, carriers to all parts of the kingdom. Parcels received from London and all parts of United Kingdom, and the Continent daily—Office, 29 Market square; Agent, Samuel Frisby. Parcels dispatched every Passenger Train—Receiving Offices, Peacock Hotel, and Midland Station, Bridge street
Grand Junction Canal Company, carriers from London by Steam Boats daily; to London and the South generally, daily. James Hughes, Bridge street, manager
Globe Parcel Express—to London and all parts, * * * * * manager. Morning Delivery in Northampton at 9 a.m., and Despatched at 7 p.m.
Sutton and Company's Small Parcels' Dispatch—to London and all parts. W. H. Swindall, 31 Abington street, manager. Morning Delivery, in Northampton, at 9.30, and a Dispatch at 7 p.m.
Abington—see Earl's Barton, Wellingborough
Abthorpe—John Middleton, Peacock, Sat.
Addington, Great and Little—see Irthingbro'
Adstone—see Moreton Pinkney
Alderton—Jelley, The Royal, Wed. and Sat. On Friday to Stony Stratford and Wolverton
Arthingworth—see Clipstone
Ashton—Cook, Bell, Wednesday, Saturday; William Dickens, Black Boy, Wed. Sat.
Ascote—Charles Clarke, Bell, Wed. Sat.
Badby—T. Blundell, The Royal, Saturday
Banbury—see Brackley

Banbury Lane—see Pattishall
Bedford—see Olney
Bicester—see Brackley
Billing Great—Jas. Horne, Vine, Wed. Fri. Sat.
Billing Little—Wm. Davis, Black Lion, Wed. Sat.; Fred. Shrive, Tempr. Hotel, Tues. Sat.
Blakesley—see Woodend
Blisworth—Packwood, Eagle and Child, Sat.; Ths. Marriott, Spread Eagle, Mon. Wed. Sat.
Boughton—Allen Dickens, Cross Keys, Mon. Wednesday, Saturday
Bozeat—Fred. Shrive, Tempr. Hotel, Tues. Sat.
Brackley—John Elliott, Woolpack, Wed. Sat.; On Thursday to Banbury, Farthinghoe, Middleton, Cheney; on Friday to Bicester, Middleton, Stony, and Oxford
Bradden—see Wappenham
Brafield-on-the-Green—see Denton, Yardley Hastings, Olney
Brington Great—Henry Beard, Rose and Crown, Wed. Sat.; Redley, Freeman's, Bradshaw street, Wed. Sat.
Brizworth—James Stafford, Admiral Rodney, Mon. Wed. Sat.; on Tuesday to Hazelbeech, Kelmash, Lamport, Maidwell, Market Harborough, Oxenden; Turland, Bear, Wed. Sat.
Brockhall—see Norton
Bromham—see Olney
Broughton—Hight, Peacock, Sat.
Buckby Folly—see West Haddon
Buckingham—see Paulerspury, S. Stratford
Bugbrook—Jacob Eales, Rose and Crown, Mon. Wed. Fri. Sat.; Mrs Mary Ru-h, Boot Mon. Wed. Sat.
Burton Latimer—see Finedon
Byfield—see Badby
Canon's Ashby—see Moreton Pinkney
Castle Ashby—see Yardley Hastings
Castlethorpe—Wm. Panter, Wagon and Horses, Wed. Sat.; on Tues. to Newport Pagnell
Chapel Brampton—see Cottesbrook, Creaton, Guilsborough, Welford
Charwelton—see Badby
Church Brampton—see Holdenby
Clipstone—Mrs Eliz. Stimson, Dolphin, Wed. Sat. On Tues. to Farndon and Market Harborough. Parcels forwarded to Arthingworth, Hazlebeech, and Oxendon
Cold Ashby—Cattell, Cross Keys, Sat.; David Ashby, Cross Keys, Sat.; Samuel King, Bear, Wed. Sat.
Cold Brayfield—see Olney
Cold Higham—Thomas Reeve, Spread Eagle, Wednesday, Saturday
Cooknoe—John Mumford, Black Lion, Wed. Sat.; Thomas Labutt, Stag's Head, Wed. Sat.
Cosgrove—see Stony Stratford
Cotton—see Guilsborough, Ravensthorpe
Cottesbrooke—John Brown, Ram, Wed. Sat.
Courteenhall—John Dunkley, Wagon and Horses, Wednesday, Saturday
Collingtree—see Wootton. Thos. Moring from Bull and Butcher daily
Cranford—see Finedon
Creaton—William Webb, Bear, Wed. Sat.; Langton, Ram, Saturday
Crick—John Fretter, Temperance Hotel, Sat.; Walton, The Royal, Saturday
Culworth—see Bugbrooke
Dalscote—see Ascote
Daventry—Jph. Higham, Dolphin, Tues. Thurs. Sat.; Wm. Geo. The Royal, Mon. Wed. Sat.

Deanshanger—see Stony Stratford
Denton—George Robinson, Swan, Wed. Sat.; George Knight, Stag's Head, Sat.; Charles Knight, Black Boy, Mon. Wed. Sat.
Desborough—see Rothwell
Doddington—Bonham, Three Tuns, Saturday
Dodford—see Badby, Daventry
Draughton—see Loddington
Duston—Mallard, Admiral Rodney, Wed. Sat.
Earls Barton—Jph. Horne, Three Tuns, Mon. Wed. Sat.; Jas. Line, Black Boy, Thur. Sat.
Eastcote—Henry Smith, Freeman's, Bradshaw street, Saturday
Easton Maudit—Thomas Labut, Stag's Head, Wednesday, Saturday
Ecton—Wm. Brown, Two Brewers, Mon. Tues. Wed. Thur. Sat.; Jno. Mallard, Vine, Tues. Thur. Sat.; John Middleton, Stag's Head, Wed. Sat.
Everdon—Ben. Bird, Crow and Horseshoe, Wed. Sat.; Jph. Wright, Rose & Crown, Wed. Sat.
Eydon—see Moreton Pinkney
Farndon—see Clipstone
Farthinghoe—see Brackley
Farthingstone—Ths. Reeve, Spread Eagle, Wed. Sat.; Jno. Masters, Rose & Crown, Wed. Sat.
Finedon—Roberts, Black Boy, Sat. On Tues. to Burton Latimer, Cranford, Thrapston
Floore—John Rogers, George Tap, Mon. Wed. Sat.; Major, Bell, Tues. Sat.; Tresler, The Royal, Wed. Sat.
Foster's Booth—see Astcote, Pattishall
Fozhall—see Rothwell
Fozley—see Woodend
Gayton—John Moore, Black Boy, Wednesday, Saturday; John Kingston, Woolpack, Sat.
Grafton Regis—Wm. Smith, Sturman's, Bridge st. Wed. Sat. On Fri. to Stony Stratford
Green's Norton—J. Smart, Boot, Saturday; William Payne, Boot, Wednesday, Saturday
Grendon—Geo. Brealy, Temperance hotel, Sat.; Thos. Labutt from Stag's Head, Wed. Sat.
Guildenburgh—Bettle, Plume of Feathers, Wed. Sat.; Johnson, Ram, Sat.; John Bettle, Wed. Sat. On Wed. to Daventry; Valentine, Bear, Wed. Sat. On Tues. to Market Harborough
Hackleton—see Piddington
Haddon, East—Chapman, Crow and Horseshoe, Wed. Sat.; Ried. Knowles, Dolphin, Wed. Sat. Ephraim Smith, Shakespeare, Wed. Sat.
Haddon, West—Garret, Royal, Wed. Sat.
Hannington—see Little Harrowden
Hanslope—Andrew Wickens, Bell, Mon. Wed. Sat.; William Lane, Spread Eagle, Thur. Sat.
Hardingstone—Joseph Jeffery, Bell, daily; Mrs Wooding, Freeman's, Bradshaw st. daily
Harlestone—Joseph Green, Dolphin, Wed. Sat.; Henry Irons, The Royal, Wed. Sat.
Harple—Richard Gibbons, Dolphin, Wed. Sat.; Collins, The Royal, Wed. Sat.; Jas. Mellows, Rose and Punch Bowl, Wed. Sat.; Charles Williams, Rose and Punch Bowl, daily; Dunmore, Rose and Punch Bowl, daily
Harrington—see Loddington
Harrowden—Samuel Bollard, Stag's Head, Sat.; Simeon Smith, Black Boy, Wed. Sat. & Isham, Moulton, Holcot, & Hannington, Wed. Sat.
Hartwell—Robert Cook, Bell, Wed. Sat.; Sparks, Coach and Horses, Wed. Sat.
Hazlebeach—see Brixworth, Clipstone
Heyford, Lower—John Eales, Dolphin, Mon. Wednesday, Saturday
Heyford, Upper—see Daventry, Floore

Highgate House—see Crenton, Welford
Higham Ferrers—see Irthlingborough, Wellingborough.
Holcot—Gammidge, Lord Palmerston, Wed. Saturday
Holdenby—William Clifton, Freeman's, Bradshaw street, Monday, Wednesday, Saturday
Hollowell—see Guilsborough
Horton—see Ravenstone, Stoke Goldington
Houghton, Great—William Smith, Swan, Wednesday and Saturday
Houghton, Little—see Denton, Yardley Hastings, Olney
Husband's Bosworth—see Welford
Irchester—see Wellingborough
Irthlingborough—Ebenezer Milward, Vine, Sat.
Kelmarsh—see Brixworth, Clipstone
Kettering—Wm. Briggs, Black Boy, Wed. Sat.
Kilworth, North and South—see Welford
Kingsthorpe—William Craddock, Ram, Mon. Wed. Sat.; Charles Craddock, Cross Keys, Monday, Wednesday, Saturday
Kislingbury—George Starmer (from Rose and Punch Bowl), Wed. Sat.; Easton, The Royal, Mon. Wed. Sat.; James, Gold street, Mon. Wed. Sat.; Mrs Mary Ward, Queen's Head, Mon. Wed. Thur. Sat.
Lamport—see Brixworth, Clipstone, &c.
Lavendon—see Olney
Litchborough—see Morton Pinkney
Loddington—Samuel Bates, Cross Keys, Sat.
Long Buckby—Letta, Alhambra, Mon. Wed. Sat.; Lovell, Boot, Mon. Wed. Saturday
Lubenham—see Welford
Lutterworth—see Welford, Yelvertoft
Maidford—Careless, The Victoria, Wed. Frid. er; and boy
Maidwell—see Brixworth, Clipstone, Scaldwell
Market Harborough—see Brixworth, Clipstone, Welford
Marston—see Welford
Mears' Ashby—Edward Mallard, Vine, Sat.; Alfred Thompson, Two Brewers, Tues. Sat.
Middleton Cheney and Stony Stratford—see Brackley
Milton—Thomas Plowman, Queen's Head, daily; Joseph Fisher, Spread Eagle, daily; Moring, Bull and Butcher, daily
Morton Pinkney—George Kinch, Temperance hotel, Abington st. Sat.; Gardener, Boot, Sat. On Mon. and Thur. to Banbury
Moulton—Jones, Three Tuns, Mon. Wed. Sat.; Cumber, Lord Palmerston, Wed. Sat.; John Ward, Black Boy, Tues. Thur. Sat.; John Bradshaw, Nag's Head, Kettering road, daily
Naseby—Samuel Underwood, Freeman's, Bradshaw st. Wed. Sat.; Jer. Wilford, Bear, Wed. Sat. On Tues. to Market Harborough
Neunham—see Badby
Nobottle—see Brington, Wilton
Norton (by Daventry)—George Major, Bell, Saturday. On Wednesday to Daventry
Old—Parker, Bear, Wed. Sat.; Joseph Meadows, Black Boy, Wed. Sat. Tues. to Market Harborough; Friday to Kettering
Olney—George Field, Dolphin, Mon. Wed. Sat. On Tues. and Thur. to Bedford, Bromham, Cold Brafield, Lavendon, Turvey
Orlingbury—see Pytchley
Overstone—see Mear's Ashby, Sywell
Ozendon—see Brixworth, Clipstone, Scaldwell
Oxford—see Brackley

- Pattishall*—Henry Furness, Freeman's, Bradshaw street, Wednesday, Saturday
Paulerspury—Richard Cook, Bell, Sat.; John Rogers from Black Boy, Sat. On Mon. to Poterspury, Deanshanger and Buckingham Piddington—Kightley, Waggon and Horses, Wed. Sat.; Tebbutt, Angel Tap, Wed. Sat.
Pitsford—William Liggins, Ram, Mon. Wed. Sat.; John Harris, Cross Keys, Wed. Sat.
Potterspury—Cook, Bell, Wed. Sat. On Tuesday and Friday to Wolverton
Preston Capes—see Everdon
Preston Deanery—see Piddington
Pyckley—Mrs Mobbs, Black Boy, Saturday
Quinton—see Castlethorpe, Hartwell
Ravensthorpe—Edward Hickman, Dolphin, Wed. Sat.; J. Hickman, Royal, Wed. Sat.
Ravenstone—Wickens, Coach and Horses, Wednesday, Saturday
Roads—George Hillyard, Bell, Wed. and Sat.; John Hillyard, Waggon & Horses, Wed. Sat.
Rothersthorpe—James, Bell, Wed. Saturday
Rothwell—Broome, Peacock, Wed. Sat. Goods conveyed to Desborough, Glendon, Rushton.
Rushden—see Wellingborough
Rushton—see Rothwell
Scaldwell—Adams, Ram, Wed. Saturday
Shuttlanger—Joseph Skears, Spread Eagle, Mon. Wed. Thurs. Sat.; Campion, Bull and Butcher, Wednesday, Saturday
Sibbertoft—see Welford
Silverstone—see Brackley. Wood on Saturday from Black Boy
Slapton—see Wappenham
Spratton—Peter Seamark, Cross Keys, Mon. Wed. Sat.; Osborn, Bear, Wed. Saturday
Standwick—see Irthingborough
Stoke Bruerne—Joseph Skears, Spread Eagle, Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, Saturday
Stoke Goldington—Sparrow, Black Boy, Wed. Saturday
Stony Stratford—Henry Jeffcote, Bell, Wed. Sat. On Mon. and Thurs. to Passenham, Deanshanger, Wicken, Buckingham; on Tues. to Towcester; on Friday to Newport Pagnell
Strixton—see Bozeat, Wollaston
Stowe Nine-Churches—Warwick, The Royal, Saturday
Sulby—see Wellford
Syresham—John Webb, Boot, Saturday; Jas. Allen, Woolpack, Saturday
Sywell—John Barker, Bear, Wednesday, Sat.
Teeton—see Creaton, Holdenby
Theddingworth—see Welford
Thornby—see Cold Ashby, Welford, Naseby
Tiffield—see Towcester
Towcester—Geo. Minard, Woolpack, Monday, Wednesday, Saturday; William Webb, The Royal, Monday, Wednesday, Saturday
Upton—see Kisingbury
Walgrave—Mr Chapman, Wednesday, Saturday; Smith, Black Boy, Thursday, Saturday
Wappenham—Edward Bodley, Boot, Saturday.
Banbury on Thursday, Towcester on Tuesday
Wardington—see Moreton Pinkney
Watford—see Crick
Weedon—Howard, Shakespeare, Wednesday, Sat.; John Chapman, Black Boy, Wed. Sat.
Welford—William Butlin, Bear, Wednesday, Saturday. On Tuesday to Husband's Bosworth, Theddingworth, and Lubenham. Goods conveyed to North and South Kilworth, Sibbertoft, and Sulby. Thomas Miller, Ram, Wednesday, Saturday. On Tuesday to Sibbertoft, Marston, Lubenham, Market Harborough; on Thursday to Lutterworth, North and South Kilworth, Misterton, Walcot. Goods forwarded to Husband's Bosworth, and taken direct to Sulby Hall
Wellingborough—Frederick Thompson, Stag's Head, Monday, Wednesday, Saturday. Parcels conveyed to Finedon, Harrowden, Higham Ferrers, Irchester, Rushden, Woolaston, and Irthingborough; John Turvey, Two Brewers, Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday
Wilton—Martin Smith, Temperance hotel, Sat.
Weston Favell—George Middleton, Vine, Mon. Wed. Frid. Sat.; Richd. White, Stag's Head, daily
Weston-by-Weedon—Marriot, Dolphin, Wednesday, Saturday
Whilton—Boot, Black Boy, Sat.; Adams, The Royal, Sat.; John Dunkley, Black Boy, Sat. On Wednesday to Daventry
Whiston—see Bozeat, Easton Maudit
Whittlebury—see Brackley
Wicken—Panter, Bull and Butcher, Saturday. On Thursday and Friday to Deanshanger, Stony Stratford, and Wolverton
Wilby—see Wellingborough
Wollaston—Benjamin Partridge, Vine, Wed. Sat.; John Walker, Black Boy, Wed. Sat.
Woodend—Wm. Marriott, Dolphin, Wed. Sat.
Woodford—Joseph Skears, Spread Eagle, Mon. Wed. Thurs. Sat.; Aldcock, Peacock, Sat.; Marriott, Royal, Saturday
Wootton—John Beech, Coach and Horses, daily; and Mrs Fairbrother, daily
Yardley Gobion—Mason, Bull and Butcher,
Yardley Hastings—William Walden, Black Boy, Wed. Sat.; Johnson, Coach and Horses, Monday, Wednesday, Saturday
Yelvertoft—Owen Perkins, Dolphin, Saturday. Also to Daventry and Lutterworth

SPELHOE HUNDRED.

THE hundred of Spelhoe, or as it is variously written in Domesday Book, Spelho, Spelehon, Spelchot, Sperchot, Sperchou, and Spercholt, comprehends the town and borough of Northampton, and eleven parishes. It is bounded on the north by Orlingbury hundred, on the east by Hamfordshoe, on the south by Wymersly, from which it is divided by the river Nene; and on the west by Nowbottle Grove hundred; is of an irregular figure, comprising 17,538 statute acres, extending about nine miles from north to south, and four miles from east to west at its widest point. Mr Baker, in his "History of Northamptonshire," tells us that "the Saxon orthography of this hundred presents an obvious and characteristic etymology. Spel, including in its widest acceptation any species of oral address or written documents, and hoh, denoting a hill or elevated site, form, when combined, a complete illustration of the original hundred courts which, 'in the olden time,' were convened in the open air, or some conspicuous well-known spot selected for the general convenience of the inhabitants; and hence most of the hundreds were primarily denominated not from the principal town within the district, but from places of rendezvous, the very names of which have, in many instances, sunk into oblivion with the disuse of the custom." A field in the northern part of the parish of Weston Favell, adjoining Moulton Park, still retains the name of Spelhoe Close, Bushy Close, now better known by the name of Stocking Close. This hundred belonged to the manor of Kingsthorpe in the reign of King John, and a writ was issued to the Sheriff of the county in 1224, eighth of Henry III., to restore it to the freeholders of that place. In the fifty-fourth of Henry III., a grant was made of the hundred to Eleanor, the wife of Prince Edward; but, by an inquisition taken in the twenty-eighth and thirty-ninth of Edward III., it was again found to be annexed to the manor of Kingsthorpe. The freeholders of Kingsthorpe were summoned, by writ of quo warranto, in the thirty-seventh of Henry VIII., 1546, to show cause why they claimed it, to which they pleaded that it had been a member and parcel of their township from time immemorial. Judgment is not recorded, but the fee of the hundred is now vested in the crown. The following enumeration shows the names of the parishes (exclusive of the borough of Northampton), with the number of acres (as specified in the parish rate books), population, and number of houses in 1871, and the rateable value and gross estimated rental of each parish:—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION. *			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Northampton :—*								£	£
All Saints	about 4,000	1,858	82	8	4,720	4,783	9,503	36,272	42,728
St Giles		1,615	48	18	4,172	4,586	8,758	27,912	32,353
St Peter		304	6	8	789	806	1,595	3,584	4,480
Priory of St Andrew,		1,415	19	14	4,219	4,325	8,544	17,087	21,901
St Sepulchre		2,402	55	15	6,366	6,402	12,768	28,484	35,832
Abington	4,000	7,594	210	63	20,266	20,902	41,168	113,339	137,294
Billing Great	1,080	24	—	—	79	85	164	2,874	3,000
Billing Little	1,324	90	13	—	207	202	409	2,991	3,064
Boughton	833	18	—	—	29	35	64	1,759	1,872
Kingsthorpe	1,432	87	3	—	172	167	339	2,665	3,165
Moulton	1,830	551	16	16	1,220	1,189	2,409	8,900	10,403
Moulton Park	3,034	394	49	2	845	847	1,692	6,814	8,139
Moulton Park	450	2	2	—	7	4	11	650	765
Overstone	1,719	47	—	—	87	92	179	2,670	3,165
Pitsford	2,163	136	6	1	287	295	582	2,855	3,392
Spratton †	2,163	201	28	—	368	406	774	4,371	5,166
Creaton Little, hamlet ...	—	13	5	—	29	26	55	—	—
Weston Favell	1,083	113	8	—	231	239	470	2,769	3,129
	21,111	9,270	340	82	23,827	24,489	48,316	152,657	182,854

* The population of the following new parishes is included in the five old parishes above enumerated—namely, St Andrew, containing 5546 (2806 males, and 2740 females); St Edmund, 10,203 (5008 males, and 5195 females); and St Katharine, 4141 (2012 males, and 2129 females).

† The population of this parish, exclusive of the hamlet of Little Creaton (in Guilsborough hundred), according to the return made by the enumerator, is 797, or 23 in excess of the number given in the census returns as stated above.

THE CHARITIES OF SPELHOE HUNDRED, with the date of nearly each bequest, the name of the donor, the amount, appropriation, and annual value, as abstracted from the Reports of the Commissioners for inquiring respecting Charities, printed by order of the House of Commons. See the histories of the parishes for more recent bequests, and also for the present value of such of these as have increased or decreased since the Parliamentary reports were published.

NORTHAMPTON GENERAL MUNICIPAL CHARITIES, with their present annual value, under the direction of trustees :—

Date.	Donor and nature of gift.	To what places and purposes applied.	Annual value.
1138.	St John's Hospital (rents).....	Northampton, poor	£986 0 0
1558.	Henry Prior (rent).....	Ditto, poor	1 10 0
1562.	Matthew Sillesby (rent).....	Ditto, two poor widows.....	45 19 0
1593.	Ann Hopkins (rent)	Ditto, poor	53 11 0
1597.	John Neale (rent)	Ditto, poor widows.....	6 1 0
"	Beatrice Ogle (rent)	Ditto, poor	4 0 0
"	St Thomas' Day Charity	Ditto, poor	26 10 0
1606.	Thomas Crasswell (£50)	Ditto, the interest to be paid to a poor maid.....	2 10 0
1686.	Ed. and Dorothy Pickering (rent)..	Ditto, poor	10 6 8
1691.	Richard White (rent)	Ditto, poor	84 15 0
"	John Ball (£50)	To clothe six poor widows.....	2 10 0
1552.	Thomas Chipsey (lands, &c.)	Grammar School	377 16 0
1669.	George Norwood (lands)	Poor, and apprenticing boys.....	46 0 0
	Bugbrooke.....		135 0 0
1669.	Hyde & Evans	For apprenticing boys	90 0 0
1552.	Sir Thomas Whyte (estate)	Loans of £100 each to deserving young men, 225 of which are out 31st December 1870

Those under the management of the Church Charity Trustees are the following, with their present annual value :—

1450.	St Thomas' Hospital. (See page 146)	1724 1 10
"	Wade's Charity	Minister, clerk, and sexton of All Saints
		2 0 0
1703.	Robert Ives (£100), £1 to minister of All Saints, and the remainder for clothes for poor women	5 0 0
1753.	The Corporation School, various grants, including Freeman's and Acham's, the Earl of Northampton's, Pickering's, and Gabriel Newton's Charities	161 17 10
1735.	Beckett and Sargeant's blue girls' schoolhouses and land	250 0 0
No date.	John Allen (£200) ditto	4 11 8
1731.	Mary Palmer (rent)	Abington parish, poor
1778.	Stephen Hawke (£20)	Ditto, poor
1848.	George Wortley Lovell (£117) ..	Billing Great parish
"	Almshouse	Ditto
1547.	Rd. Humphrey (lands, &c.).....	Boughton parish, poor, repairing highways, and apprenticing children
		35 15 8
1758.	Earl of Stratford (rent)	Boughton parish, poor
1776.	Poors' Allotment	Kingthorpe parish, poor
"	Several small benefactions	Ditto, poor
"	The Maiden Hook (land).....	Ditto, bread for wayfarers.....
1690.	George Cook (£100).....
"	Clark and Gooding (£65).....	Ditto, bread for poor
1749.	Thomas Cook (land).....	For support of Kingthorpe School
1707.	Dame Sarah Pritchard	For teaching two poor boys
"	Mrs Luffday (£100)	Moulton parish, bread for poor ...
"	Four other benefactions of £5 each	Ditto, poor
1711.	Rt. Mills (land)	Ditto, poor widows.....
1721.	Sarah Edwards (£100)	Ditto, poor
"	Donor unknown (land)	Ditto, poor
"	Earl of Stratford (rent)	Pitsford parish poor
"	Donor unknown.....	Spratton parish, apprenticing children, church, poor, and highways
1704.	Hy. and Eliz. Ekins	Weston Favell par., Charity School
1739.	Thos. Green (land)	Ditto, schoolmaster.....
1705.	Gertrude Ekins	Charity School, apprenticing children, bread for the poor, &c.....
"	Lady Holman (land) ..	Ditto, poor's close
		51 4 4
		26 0 0
	Total.....	£4298 16 0

ABINGTON PARISH.

The parish of Abington, called in Domesday Book, Abintone, is bounded on the east by Weston Favell, on the north by Kingsthorpe and Moulton parishes, on the west by Northampton, and on the south by the river Nene. Bridges, writing about the year 1720, says, "it is a village of thirty-three houses, in an enclosed lordship." The parish contains 1080 acres, of the rateable value of £2874, and its population in 1801 was 170; in 1831, 155; in 1841, 143; in 1851, 164; in 1861, 164; and in 1871, 164 souls. The estimated gross rental is £3000. The village now consists of a few scattered cottages, situate one and a half mile E.N.E. of Northampton, on the Wellingborough road, and the soil is a light red loam of excellent quality. At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Abington was in the hands of one Richard, who held here four hides of land, and which, with a mill worth 20s. a year, and twenty acres of meadow, were all valued together at 40s. yearly at the time of Edward the Confessor, but was then advanced to £4. Humphrey de Bassingburne had these four hides certified to him in the reign of Henry II., from whom they descended to Nicholas de Bassingburne, and remained in this family till the death of Alice, formerly the wife of Giles de Bassingburne, in the forty-second of Edward III., 1369. The manor then passed to Robert de Colville (son of Margaret, the daughter of Alice, who married Walter de Colville), who died without issue in the forty-third of Edward III., 1370, and was succeeded by Sir Ralph Basset, of Sapcote, and Sir John Gernoun, who were found by inquisition to be his next heirs. In the ninth year of Richard II., 1386, Sir Robert de Swynburn, William Ashby, and others, were sentenced to pay a fine of thirty-five marks, for having purchased the manor and advowson of the church of Abington, which were held of the crown in capite of Sir John Gernoun, without the King's license. From these gentlemen it passed to Sir Nicholas Lylling, from whom it descended to Robert Bernard, in right of his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of this Sir Nicholas, in which family it remained for upward of two hundred years, till purchased of Sir John Bernard, in 1669, by William Thursby, Esq., then of the Middle Temple, London, for £13,750. William Thursby, by will dated 30th July 1700, "devised his manor and premises in Abington, Little Billing, and Weston Favell, and estates in Pighesley and other places, to his nephews, William Thursby and Richard Thursby, successively entail male, with remainder to his niece, Mary Harvey, wife of Robert Harvey, Esq., of Stockton, in Warwickshire, with divers remainders over. The nephews both dying, the settled estates devolved to John Harvey, Esq., son and heir of Robert and Mary Harvey, who thereupon, in pursuance of an express proviso in the will of the devisor, assumed the name and arms of Thursby of Essex, and from whom they have descended to John Harvey Thursby, Esq." The Right Hon. Lord Overstone, of Overstone, is the present lord of the manor, and principal owner of the soil.

The Abbey, or Manor House, is situated in a walled park of about eighty acres, which is well stocked with elms, chestnuts, and pink thorns, and is certainly one of the most pleasing parts of the environs of Northampton. "The hall," says Mr Baker, "is a lofty Gothic room with open timber roof, a recess at one end, and mullioned windows adorned with the achievements of O'Brien, Earl of Thomond, and other arms from the old manor house at Great Billing. . . . The dining-room is wainscoted, and the arms and quarterings of Bernard, intermixed with a variety of grotesque devices, introduced into the panels. The grounds present some agreeable home scenery, and a tower overhung with ivy, constructed to supply the house with water from Broadley-head spring, serves the double purpose of utility and ornament. The enthusiastic admirers of the 'bard of nature,' and the actor who 'embodied what the poet drew,' will here feel their sympathetic affections awakened by viewing the residence and last long home of Shakespeare's favourite grand-daughter; and in an adjacent lawn, the mulberry-tree inscribed, 'This tree was planted by David Garrick Esq., at the request of Ann Thursby, as a growing testimony of their friendship.'" The mansion is now occupied as a private asylum, and known as Abington Abbey.

It was instituted October 1st, 1845, and registered in pursuance of the Act 8th and 9th Victoria, cap. 100. The institution is intended exclusively for the reception of a limited number of patients of both sexes from the upper and middle classes of society, and combines all the advantages of a large public hospital with the comforts and retirement of a private residence. The mansion, as regards its construction, is singularly well adapted for the purposes to which it is applied. The sitting-rooms, eight in number, are lofty, most of them very spacious and cheerful, and none of them either small or gloomy. The sleeping apartments are equally eligible; nor can any part of the house suggest ideas of restraint or coercion. It was originally intended for the temporary retirement of invalids from the first classes of society; it has consequently been fitted up in a style that is not excelled in similar establishments of the highest celebrity. The Gothic entrance-hall affords space for exercise during inclement weather, being about forty feet long by twenty-two and thirty-five feet high; it contains a finger organ, and antique furniture in keeping with the character of the apartment. The village church stands upon the eastern lawn, to which the patients have access by a private entrance. The number of pews attached to the Abbey enable a large proportion to attend divine service. The institution is under the efficient superintendence of Dr Thomas Prichard, the resident physician.

The Church, dedicated to Saints Peter and Paul, was rebuilt (except the tower) in 1821 by subscription, and consists of a nave, north and south transepts, south porch, chancel, and square embattled tower, in which are three bells. The building exhibits various styles of English architecture. The south front is mantled with ivy, and the interior is very neat; the font is octagonal, the pulpit is of oak, very richly carved, and was presented by Thomas Rocke, "a great benefactor to this church, who died January 3, 1715, ætatis suæ 80," as his monument testifies; and the chancel window is filled with stained glass, presented by the late rector and his brothers to the memory of their father, John Harvey Thursby, Esq., who died in 1860. There are several monuments in the church belonging to the Thursby family. The benefice is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £20, but now worth about £500 a year. The tithes have been commuted for £301, 15s. 2d, and there are about fifty acres of glebe. The living is in the patronage of Lord Overstone, and the Rev. Lewis Haig Loyd, M.A., is the rector. The church was broken into about sixty years since, and robbed of two large silver flagons, a chalice and plate, inscribed, Oblatio Gul. Thursby; and the large bible and a prayer-book were stolen in November 1848, but were afterwards found hid in a heap of stones in a brickyard, near the Northampton race-course. The Rectory-house, built in 1848, occupies a pleasant situation a short distance from the church; it is a substantial building of stone (quarried on the premises), with quoins and dressings of Bath stone, and overhanging eaves supported by brackets; the structure, which is from a design by Mr E. F. Law, architect, is of an Italian character. The cost of its erection was about £2500. The rent of the church land amounts to £50 a year.

Leonard Welsted, the poet and dramatist, son of the Rev. Leonard Welsted, rector of this parish, was born here in 1688.

Post-Office.—Letters from Northampton, for arrivals and despatch see Weston Favell.

Hargood Fred. H. surgeon,
Abington Abbey
Loyd Rev. Lewis Haig, M.A.
rector

Prichard Thomas, M.D. Abington Abbey

Farmers and Graziers.

Britten Richard

Campion Joseph
Harris Frederick, Bartlett
Stanton Richard

BILLING GREAT PARISH,

Or Billing Magna, is bounded on the east by Ecton, on the north by Overstone, on the west by Billing Little, and on the south by the river Nene. It contains 1324 acres, the rateable value of which is £2991; the gross estimated rental is £3364. Its population in 1801 was 267; in 1831, 372; in 1841, 401; in 1851, 459; in 1861, 420; and in 1871, 409 souls. The soil varies from a light red loam in the upper lands, to clay on the hillsides, whilst that part bordering on the river consists of a gravelly nature ; two-thirds of the land is arable, but there are excellent meadows and pastures in the lower parts of the parish. V. D. H. Cary-Elwes, Esq., is lord of the manor, and the principal proprietor of the parish.

Manor.—Billing Magna, or according to the Domesday book, Belinge, contained four hides of land, which, with twenty-eight acres of meadow and a mill, had been valued at 40s., but at the time of the Conqueror's survey was rated at £5. This was then held of the king by Gilbert the Cooke ; but in King Edward's time it was the freehold of Thor. The lordship of Great Billing was certified to contain four hides in the reign of Henry II. ; by inquisition taken in the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), Robert Barre, or Barry, was found to hold one moiety of Roger de Mortimer, by knight's service, and the other moiety by knight's service of the Countess of Rivers, who held it of the king in capite. These moieties in the preceding reign were in the hands of Peter Barre, and estimated at a knight's fee each. The manor remained in the possession of the family of Barry, whose place of residence was at Stanton-Barry, in Buckinghamshire, until the reign of Edward III. In the thirty-eighth of this reign (1365), a precept was directed to the king's escheator, to inquire after a pot of silver sterling, found by one John Nore, within this parish, with orders to seize and detain it, in the name and for the use of the king. The reversion of this manor was granted in the first year of Richard III. (1483), by the crown to John de la Pole, Earl of Lincoln, eldest son of the Earl of Suffolk, by Elizabeth, sister of Edward IV. Bridges tells us that he was so much in favour with the king (Richard III.), that, upon the death of his own son, he was in the second year of his reign proclaimed heir-apparent to the crown of England, to the prejudice of the daughter of King Edward IV., his elder brother. Upon the advancement of Henry VII. to the throne, he (John de la Pole) fled to Flanders, to his maternal aunt, Margaret, Duchess of Burgundy, and returning at the head of a powerful army, made an ineffectual attempt to dethrone him in the second year of this reign. He was encountered by the king's forces at Stoke, near Newark-upon-Trent, on the 16th of June 1487, where, after a sharp engagement, his army was routed and himself slain. The manor of Great Billing was included in a very extensive grant made by the king in the fifth of his reign (1490) to Sir John Fincox, Lord Chief-Justice of the King's Bench, and co-tenants "in trust to settle on the dean and canons of Windsor, in recompense of their prayers for the souls of the king, the late Countess of Richmond, his grandmother, and Catherine his wife. This grant, if not subsequently revoked by the king, was avoided by his executors, who in first Edward VI. (1547) substituted certain rectories, advowsons, and tithes to the same uses." The manor seems to have reverted to the crown after this, for, in the thirty-second of Elizabeth (1590), it was granted to Alexander King and Thomas Crompton, with license to alienate it to John Freeman of Ecton, who purchased it, and whose grand-daughter and heir, Catherine, wife of Edward Georges, Baron Dundalk in Ireland, sold it to Sir Barnaby O'Brien, about the year 1628. This Sir Barnaby O'Brien was a lineal descendant of Brien Boroihme, King of Ireland in 1002, and the heads of which family were denominated kings of Thomond, till Murrough O'Brien surrendered the sovereignty to Henry VIII. "Sir Barnaby O'Brien," says Mr Baker, "on the death of his brother Henry without male issue in 1639, became sixth Earl of Thomond. On the breaking out of the civil wars, he hastened into England and joined the king at Oxford, who, in return for his zealous attachment, created him Marquis of Billing, in the county of Northampton, to him and his issue-male, by patent bearing date 3d May 1645 ; but in the feverish agitation of that eventful period the enrolment of the patent was neglected, and neither he nor his descendants enjoyed the dignity." From Murrough O'Brien, who died in 1741, the estate descended to Percy Windham, who assumed the name of O'Brien, but dying in 1774, it passed to his nephew George, the late Earl of Egremont, who sold Billing in 1776 to Lord John Cavendish, fourth son of William, third Duke of Devonshire. Lord Frederick Cavendish succeeded his brother Lord John, and sold the estate, comprising the manor, mansion, and from six to seven hundred acres of land, to Robert Cary-Elwes, Esq., of Roxby in Lincolnshire, about eighty years since, and from whom it descended to the present proprietor, Valentine Dudley Henry Cary-Elwes, Esq., who succeeded in 1866.

Great Billing is a handsome village, situate on an eminence, four miles N.E. of Northampton, commanding extensive prospects.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, stands north of the village, and consists of a western tower containing four bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, chancel, and north chapel. The tower, which is of three stories, was originally surmounted by a spire, which, on April 11, 1759, was destroyed by lightning, "and some of the stones," says the Northampton Mercury, "were whirled into the air with such an astonishing force and rapidity as to be carried to a considerable distance. Many of the pews in the church were shivered to pieces, and the sulphurous smell was so powerful that scarcely anybody could bear to go near the church, which is so much shattered that it was thought the whole fabric must be rebuilt." The church was restored in 1867 at a cost of £1000, the chancel being at the expense of the present rector, and the remainder by Mr Cary-Elwes. It was furnished throughout with open sittings, and an organ was presented at the same time by Mrs Cary-Elwes. The tower is parapeted with panellings from the mansion of the Earls of Thomond, which Bridges describes as "a handsome old house with pleasant gardens adjoining," and which was taken down in 1776 by Lord John Cavendish. The chancel is separated from the nave by a wooden screen, under an open pointed arch, and communicates with the north chapel, or burial-place, through double pointed arches of the same character as the chancel arch, supported by a cluster pillar in the centre. In the chapel is a large and costly monument to Henry, the seventh Earl of Thomond, ob. 1691, and also a small but elegant tablet, with a bas-relief by Flaxman, to Caroline, wife of R. Cary-Elwes, Esq., ob. 1812. The benefice is a rectory, in the deanery of Haddon, valued at £19; gross income £521, in the patronage of the principal and fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford, and incumbency of the Rev. Joseph Walker, M.A. The tithes were commuted at the enclosure of the common in 1788, for about 300 acres.

The Rectory House, a good substantial building, occupies a pleasant situation in the village. One portion of it was built in 1672, and the other between seventy and eighty years since.

In the village is a small Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, erected in 1836.

A National School was built here in 1845, but a new and more commodious one was erected in the centre of the village in 1873, at the expense of Mr Cary-Elwes, and is well attended.

Billing Hall, the seat of Valentine Dudley Henry Cary-Elwes, Esq., stands nearly on the site of the old mansion of the O'Briens, Earls of Thomond, and was erected by Lord John Cavendish, from a design by Carr, of York, a celebrated architect, though originally bred a common mason. It is a plain, commodious edifice of Kingsthorpe stone, with east and west fronts, and from its elevated situation is one of the most conspicuous objects in the neighbourhood.

An Almshouse, for five poor widows and one poor widower, was founded here in the reign of James I. This charity is in an unsettled state: the almshouse is partially occupied, and the poor receive each £6 a year.

Charity.—George Wortley Lovell, Esq., bequeathed, on the 26th March 1848, the sum of £117, 3 per cent. consols, the interest of which to be distributed to such poor as the trustees should select as proper objects.

Biography.—Sir Isaac Wake, orator of the University of Oxford in 1604, ambassador extraordinary in Savoy and Piedmont, ordinary for Italy, Helvetia, and Rhetia, select for France, and about to become Secretary of State, when he died in 1632, was son of the Rev. Arthur Wake, rector of this parish, and born here about the year 1575.

Post-Office.—Thomas Bustin, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 6.30 A.M., and are despatched at 6.30 P.M.

Cary-Elwes Valentine Dudley Henry, Esq. F.S.A. Billing Hall, and The Manor House, Brigg, Lincolnshire	Harlot William, brazier Jones John Erasmus, school- master and assistant-overseer Rixon John, brick and tile mkr. and beerhouse Rose Daniel, stonemason Slow Thomas Shortland, vict. Stag's Head Spokes Mrs Mary Walker Rev. Joseph, M.A. rector	Wightman George, head gar- dener Farmers and Graziers. Britten Arthur Brookes Mrs Anna Dunn George Faurey John (and corn miller), Billing Mill
Britten Misses Fanny and Elizabeth Britten George, butcher Campion Mrs Sarah Co-operative Store, grocers, bakers, &c. (William Wright, manager)

Carriers to Northampton.—James Horn, daily, and Fred. Threadgold, Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday.

BILLING LITTLE PARISH.

Billing Little, or Billing Parva, is bounded on the north and west by Weston Favell, on the east by Great Billing, on the north-east by Overstone, and on the south by the river Nene, which divides it from Little Houghton. It contains 833 acres, of the rateable value of £1759. The population in 1801, was 64; in 1831, 88; in 1841, 101; in 1851, 93; in 1861, 76; and in 1871, 64 souls; and the gross estimated rental is £1873. The soil is of a similar character to that in Great Billing, with a larger proportion of meadow and grazing land. Lord Overstone is lord of the manor, and principal proprietor of the parish.

Manor.—Gunfrid de Cioches held here three hides and 1½ virgate of land, the arable land being 7 carucates, a mill, and 50 acres of meadow in the time of the Conqueror's survey. The whole had been valued at 40s., but was then rated at 70s. The Earl of Morton appears to have held a hide and half a virgate at the same time, which had been valued at 2s., but was then rated at 10s. The lordship of Little Billing was certified to contain four hides in the reign of Henry II.; it was in the hands of Gilbert de Preston in Henry III.'s time. In the fourth year of Edward II., 1311, John de Longueville levied a fine on the manor, and in the ninth year of the same reign was declared to be lord of it. This John de Longueville founded the convent of the Friars Augustins in Northampton, in the sixteenth year of the same reign. Several of his descendants were afterwards benefactors to it, and there buried. The manor remained in the possession of this family till about the year 1661, after which it was sold to pay debts, and raise portions for younger children. It was purchased of the Longuevilles by William Thursby, Esq., and accompanied Abington to J. H. Thursby, Esq. The manors of Little Billing and Abington were purchased, the former in 1837 and the latter in 1841, by the late Lewis Loyd, Esq., from whom they passed in 1858 to his son, Lord Overstone, the present possessor.

The Village, which is small, is situate about 3½ miles east of Northampton. In Bridges' time it consisted of eleven families.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is a small ancient edifice of stone, partly in the Early English style, and consists of a nave and chancel, with north chapel and south porch, and a tower containing three bells and a clock. The chancel and north chapel are divided from the body by wooden screens under open arches, and the north chapel was rebuilt in 1849 by the late Lewis Loyd, Esq., to whom it belonged; and in 1854 he also restored the church, at a cost of about £800. At the same time Dr Geldart, the late rector, restored the chancel at a further cost of £300. The font is an exceedingly curious relic of a primeval church. In Van Voors's volume of fonts it is thus described:—"This jar-like and singular font may be placed early in the Norman period; both irregular in shape and rude in workmanship. It is chiefly interesting for its curious legend, which is written in characters exactly conformable to the great seal of William the Conqueror—

'WILBERHTVS ARTIFEX ATQ: LEMENTARIUS HVNL FABRICAVIT
QVISQVIS SVVM VENIT MERLERE LORPVS PRLOVL DV BIO LAPIT.'

P

The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, 2s. 11d., now worth over £350. Earl Brownlow is patron, and the Rev. Thomas Collingwood Hughes, B.A., is the rector. The tithes have been commuted for £349, and there are eight acres of glebe land. Near the church stands the Rectory House, a very neat and comfortable building.

Post-Office.—Wall Letter Box. Letters arrive from Northampton at 9 A.M., and are despatched at 8.30 P.M.

The principal inhabitants are the Rev. Thomas Collingwood Hughes, B.A., rector, and Thomas Britten and Mrs. Sarah Pell, farmers.

BOUGHTON PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Moulton, on the north by Pitsford, on the south-east by Moulton Park, on the west by the river Nene, which divides it from Chapel Brampton, and on the south by Kingsthorpe parish. It contains 1432 acres of land, of the rateable value of £2665, and the gross estimated rental is £3165. Its population in 1801 was 344; in 1831, 360; in 1841, 389; in 1851, 369; in 1861, 372; in 1871, 339 souls. The soil is principally of a reddish loam, with a sandy bottom, is remarkably early and very fertile, and the greater part of the land is arable. The principal landowners of Boughton are the executors of the late Colonel R. H. Howard-Vyse (lords of the manor), H. P. Markham, Esq., John Fowler Eland, Esq., and the rector in the right of the church. Bridges, when he wrote, says that Boughton contained "forty houses, besides the Earl of Strafford's seat and lodge on the green." There is a small spring of the temporary kind, of great note, which the vulgar called Marvel Sike, about two bowshots from Brampton Bridge, nigh Kingsthorpe Road, says Morton, and several petrifying springs in the lordship, particularly the grotto spring in the Park, adds Mr. Baker. The mill mentioned in Domesday book is near Brampton Bridge; it was given to the hospital of St. David, at Kingsthorpe, but since the dissolution it has passed again to the lord of the manor.

Manor.—Boughton, or, as it is variously called in Domesday book, Buchedone, Bochetone, and Buchenho, and in later records, Buckton, or the town of Bucks, contained at the time of the Conqueror's survey three hides, wanting half a virgate, held by the Abbot of St. Wandregisile, in the diocese of Rouen, in Normandy, which were given to that convent by the Countess Judith, with the Conqueror's consent. There were ten acres of meadow; the whole, in King Edward's time, had been valued at 20s., but was then rated at 40s., and had been the freehold of two Thanes. One Girard also held of the Countess half a virgate, which was valued at 6s.; and Godwin the priest held of the crown 1½ virgate and half a carucate, which was valued at 5s. In the time of Edward I., William de Nutricilla, abbot of St. Wandegisile, conveyed the lands to John de Boketon, or Boughton, from whom they descended to Sir Thomas de Boketon, his grandson, and who was succeeded by Sir Henry Green, his son and heir, who was Lord Chief-Justice of England. "An able and ingenious genealogist,"—(Halstead)—writes Mr. Baker, "in a work of extreme rarity, thus comments on the family of Boughton and Green being synonymous: 'Of the origin of the house of Green we have no certain information, but it is apparent they assumed their name and arms from an allusion to their principal and beloved lordship, which was Buckton, or the town of Bucks, in the county of Northampton, being in the hundred of Spelhoe, a place memorable for the excellency of its soil and situation, has a spacious and delightful green, upon which, at the desire of the lords, was yearly held and exercised a fair, with particular and extraordinary privileges. Hence they are called Greene, or of the Green.'" Sir Henry Green obtained a grant or charter, dated 28th February 1351 (25th of Edward III.), for an annual fair to be held in the manor for the space of three days, beginning with the vigil of the nativity of St. John the Baptist (23d June), and ending the day after it. Sir Thomas Green succeeded Sir Henry, and the manor of Boughton remained in the possession of the family till the 15th of Henry VIII. (1524), when Anne, the eldest daughter of the sixth Sir Thomas Green, conveyed it to her husband, Lord Vaux, of Harrowden, and his heirs, with whose descendants it remained till the death of Edward, the fourth Lord Vaux, who married Elizabeth, widow of William, Earl of Banbury, and daughter of Thomas, Earl of Suffolk, and died without lawful issue in 1661. Nicholas Knowles, who succeeded Lord Vaux, was son of Elizabeth his wife, by her first husband, the Earl of Banbury. The manor was afterwards purchased by Sir John Brisco of his wife's half-brother, Charles, Earl of Banbury, who died in 1724, leaving Boughton and Pitsford mortgaged to Lord Ashburnham, who sold it to Thomas Wentworth, third Earl of Strafford, but first of the last creation. On the death of his son William, the fourth Earl, the family manors and estates in this and several other counties were vested in the heirs of his three daughters, in equal proportions as tenants in common, "who being desirous," says Mr Baker, "of holding their shares in severalty, a partition was made between Thomas Conolly, Esq., Henry Vernon and Leveson Vernon, Esqs., and Major-General Richard Vyse, in behalf of R. W. H. Howard-Vyse, a minor, and confirmed by Act of Parliament in 1795, by which, inter alia, the manors of Boughton and Pitsford, with the advowson, mansion, park, mill, and 807a. 6p. of land in Boughton were allotted to R. W. H. Howard-Vyse, Esq., entail, and the advowson, with 446a. 3r. 15p. of land in Pitsford in fee." Colonel R. H. R. Howard-Vyse succeeded his father in 1853. He died in June 1872, and his eldest son, Howard Henry Howard-Vyse, born in 1858, is his heir. A Court Leet and Court Baron are held for both manors.

The Village is pleasantly situated about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Northampton. Boughton House, one of the ancient seats of the noble families of Green, Vaux, Knolles, and Wentworth, is now nearly demolished. The park and adjacent grounds, which are partly walled, are well wooded; and temples, triumphal arches, and artificial ruins were interspersed in fantastic variety. An obelisk, erected on an eminence, to the memory of one of the dukes of Devonshire, is seen from almost every point of the surrounding country. The Old Church of St John the Baptist, of which a picturesque fragment is all that now remains, stands upon the green about half a mile from the village; the tower and spire were standing in Bridges' time, but fell about the year 1785. St John's Spring, which rises from the east bank of the churchyard, formerly furnished the element for the holy rite of baptism, but now, in the words of Mr Baker, "supplies the water for culinary purposes at the fair—To what base uses may we not come." The present Church, also dedicated to St John the Baptist, is situated in the middle of the village, and consists of a tower, containing three bells, and a nave. The tower is the only portion of the original church or chapel, and, indeed, the only portion that has any pretensions to architectural style. It is noted in the time of Henry VIII., that "yet it is to be remembered that there ys one chapell situat within the town of Boughton, wherein comonly the said ii prestes do celebrate for the ease of the parishioners, for the parish church is distaunt iii pts. of a myle from ye towne, or any house." This tower was repaired in 1599; the body rebuilt and enlarged in 1806; and again enlarged, refitted, and a vestry added in 1847. The east window is filled with painted glass, the gift of the present rector. A new burial-ground was consecrated in 1847 contiguous to the church, the old churchyard being hitherto the only parish burial-place. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £20, 9s. 7d., but now worth £360 per annum, in the patronage of the Executors of the late Colonel R. H. R. Howard-Vyse, and incumbency of the Rev. G. S. Howard-Vyse, M.A. The rectorial land granted at the enclosure in 1756 in lieu of tithes, &c., is 185 acres and 34 perches.

The Rectory House is let to a private family, but a residence for the rector was built in 1844 by Colonel Howard-Vyse, on an elevated site, three miles north of Northampton; it is a large commodious structure of stone, quarried on the estate, and is in the Old English style of architecture.

The National School, which is attached to the north side of the tower of the church, was built in 1841; and the Sunday school is held in the same building.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a small chapel in the village.

Boughton Green Fair.—This celebrated fair, as has been shown, was legally established by charter in 1351, and takes place on the green of 17 acres, about half a mile south-east of the village, on the 24th, 25th, and 26th June annually. The site is "contiguous to the old church, the patron of which," says Mr Baker, "is peculiarly propitious, from the eve of St John the Baptist, whose name is appended both to the church and the spring in the churchyard. It was customary for children and youth to assemble at certain wells and springs, when wrestling and other rural sports attracted a concourse of spectators and itinerant traders. A tradition prevailed here that the clergy for six miles round came to this church on St John the Baptist's day to pray and preach for an hour, and after the conclusion of the service the neighbouring youths exercised their manhood at football and other pastimes, for whose reception some small booths were erected, and at length a charter for a fair obtained." The first day is appropriated to the sale of implements of husbandry, wooden ware, &c.; the second day is principally devoted to pleasure; and on the third day a large horse and cattle fair is held. In Bridges' time this fair was "kept with great solemnity, and was famous for its trade in brooms and wooden ware, and for a variety of shops and booths for entertainment." Many rural sports and games, as racing, wrestling, and the single-stick exercise, were practised formerly at this fair.

Charities.—Humphrey's charity consists of 48a. 2r. 32p., and three tenements at Pitsford, the rent of which, about £188 per annum, is applied to the repairs of highways, the maintenance of schools, the relief of the poor, and the occasional apprenticing of poor children. There is a rent charge of £5 per annum, arising from the Earl of Strafford's charity, which also goes to the relief of the poor.

Post-Office.—John Russell, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive here from Northampton at 5.30 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 7.14 P.M.

Adams Miss Cath. teacher of Infant School	Hollis Mrs Mary	Farmers and Graziers. Eady Francis, Bunker's Hill Farm Francis Palmer (and butcher) Painter William Potterton William Higgins, Boughton Grange Tippen Wm. Perkins (and rate collector) Warren Matthew (corn and miller)
Bates William, baker and shop-keeper	Howard-Vyse Rev. Granville Sykes, M.A. rector
Dickens John, baker and beer-house	Panther Mr David Frederick
Dickens Samuel, blacksmith, and Pitsford	Russell John, postmaster
Gibbs William, builder and parish clerk	Russell Mrs Amelia, grocer
Heywood Miss Hannah, National schoolmistress	Sears Mrs Elizabeth, vict. The Old Griffin
	Walton Miss Elizabeth, maltster
	Wickes Rev. John Beck, M.A.

Carrier to Northampton.—Allen Dickens, on Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday.

KINGSTHORPE PARISH,

Or Torp, as it is called in Domesday book, is bounded on the east by the parishes of Moulton and Abington; on the north by that of Boughton; on the west by the river Nene, which divides it from Dallington; and on the south by Northampton. It contains 1830 acres, of the rateable value of £8900, and the gross estimated rental is £10,403; the population in 1801 was 909; in 1831, 1344; in 1841, 1467; in 1851, 1580; in 1861, 1905; and in 1871, 2408. The soil of the more elevated parts of the parish is a stiff marly loam; and in the lower portions a light porous red earth prevails, well adapted for the growth of turnips and onions. The principal landowners, and lords of the manor, are Sir George Robinson, Bart., the Rev. William Thornton, Messrs Charles Danes, William Trasler, George Ashby, William F. Roberts, and Arthur B. Markham.

The Village, which is long and straggling, is situated on the Leicester Road, 1½ mile north by west of Northampton, near to a branch of the Nene. Bridges says it contained 140 families in his time, and it is traditionally reported that three coaches and six were formerly kept here. On the village green is a beautiful spring, called Kingswell, which has never been known either to fail or freeze; on the Semilongs are springs which possess the property of incrusting stone with calcareous crystal, and near the village is a quarry of white freestone of a delicate tint and soft texture, which hardens by exposure to the air. This quarry enjoys considerable local celebrity, having furnished stone for the erection of the general infirmary, the barracks at Northampton, and some of the neighbouring mansions. There are also extensive limestone quarries in this parish, and the limekilns here and at Duston are said to be the largest in the county.

The Manor of 'Thorp' consisted of four hides and three virgates of land, which were held by the king at the time of the Conqueror's survey; there were also three mills worth 43s. 4d. yearly, with five acres of meadow, and one hide and a half and a bovate at Moulton and Weston Favell, which belonged to this manor, and the whole was valued at £15 yearly. "Those royal villas which were not of sufficient importance to become corporate boroughs," writes Mr Baker, "were either placed under a prepositus or bailiff, who accounted for the proceeds as they arose, or were rented by an individual for a term of years at a certain sum, and what was obtained by rigid exactions beyond the stipulated rent constituted his profit. To these established modes Kingsthorpe formed one of the few exceptions; the inhabitants themselves being permitted to hold their town at farm by lease from the crown." It is supposed to have been first demised to them by King John; Henry VI., in 1441 demised this manor to his tenants for forty years, at a yearly rent of £50; and in 1445, he granted £40 per annum out of the said rent to Queen Margaret for life in part of her dower. A similar annuity was granted to Elizabeth, Queen of Edward IV., in 1468; and on the accession of Henry VII., the fee-farm rent of this town was appropriated by Parliament towards the maintenance of the royal household. In 1616, the manor, which continued to be held by successive lessees, was granted in fee to feeoffees, to hold in trust for the other freeholders at a yearly rent of £40. Lady Pritchard erected a "town house, consisting of one long room built neatly of stone, for the freeholders, or trustees to meet in," and their common seal, which is now in the possession of the rector, is "a crowned head between two fleurs de lis, with this inscription round it, Sigillum commune de Kingsthorp." The office of bailiff and the manorial courts have been long since dispensed with, and no traces remain of the feudal dependence of its ancient berewicks at Moulton, Weston Favell, &c.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, stands on the west side of the village, and consists of an embattled tower surmounted by a handsome spire, a Norman nave, with portions of the original Saxon building, north and south aisles with chapels, in which are some fine decorated windows, and a chancel, in the Perpendicular style, under the east end of which is a crypt with central shaft and stone vaulting. The whole, with the exception of the tower and chancel, was thoroughly restored in 1863. The south aisle and porch were entirely rebuilt; the gallery was removed, the west window opened to the Church, and the old unsightly pews were replaced by open oak benches. The expense of the restoration amounted to £2408. In the tower is a peal of five bells. There is a piscina in each of the chapels, as well as one near the altar. The living is a vicarage, annual value £700, in the gift of the chapter of St Katharine's Hospital, London, and incumbency of the Rev. John Hulbert Glover, M.A.

The Vicarage House is at the north-western extremity of the village. At the enclosure of the Commons in 1776, 276 acres were granted in lieu of tithes.

The Baptist Chapel, erected in 1835, will seat about 350 persons. The Rev. Joseph Litchfield is the minister.

The National School, which stands about the centre of the village, is a plain substantial building, erected in 1840. It has an average attendance of 100 pupils; and the Sunday school, which is held in the same building, has about 250 in attendance.

The Church School, built in 1872 in Semilong, at the southern extremity of the parish, is a good brick building, and will accommodate 150 children.

The Free School was endowed with an estate here and another in Kingston, Surrey, in 1753, by the Cooke family for the education of 30 children. The property having increased in value, a new schoolhouse was built in 1870 in the High Street. It is under the management of three trustees, who must belong to some sect of Protestant dissenters. The present master is the Baptist minister of Kingsthorpe.

Kingsthorpe Hall, the property and seat of the Rev. William Thornton, is about one mile north by west of Northampton.

On the east side of the entrance into the village from Northampton stood an hospital of St David, or the Holy Trinity, founded in the second year of the reign of King John (1200), for the reception of pilgrims and strangers. "It consisted principally," says Bridges, "of one large body, wherein were three rows of beds for the use of the poor, the sick, and the stranger, with two chapels adjoining, one of which was dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and the other to St David." The masters of this hospital were presented by the convent of St Andrew, and instituted by the Bishop of Lincoln. The clear yearly value of its revenues at the dissolution was £24, 6s. Two pillars, portions of an arch or gateway, and a few small arches in the cottage walls, are the only remains of this hospital at present.

Mr Baker tells us, that the quintain, a Roman military exercise, was formerly practised here, and in other parts of the kingdom, at the celebration of rural weddings. It consisted "of a high upright post, at the top of which was placed a cross piece on a swivel, broad at one end and pierced full of holes, and a bag of sand suspended at the other. The mode of running at the quintain was by a horseman riding full speed and striking at the broad part with all his force; if he missed his aim, he was derided for his want of dexterity; if he struck it, and the horse slackened pace, which frequently happened through the force of the shock, he received a violent blow on the neck from the bag of sand, which swung round from the opposite end; and if he succeeded in breaking the board, he was hailed as the hero of the day. The last, and indeed only instance of this sport," continues the same historian, "which I have met with in this county, was in 1722, on the marriage of two servants at Brington, when it was announced in the Northampton Mercury that a quintain was to be erected on the green at Kingsthorpe, and the reward of the horseman that splinters the board is to be a fine garland as a crown of victory, which is to be borne before him to the wedding house, and another to be put round the neck of his steed; the victor is also to have the honour of dancing with the bride, and to sit on her right hand at supper."

The Poor's Close, or Bush Close, as it is called, consists of 14a. 13p. allotted at the enclosure, in lieu of their right of cutting furze. This is in the hands of trustees, who are required to distribute the proceeds, either in fuel or bread, to "the most industrious, necessitous, and honest poor persons of Kingsthorpe." The other charities are as follow:—The Bread Fund, consisting of £280 consols, the interest of which is paid over yearly to the trustees by the Charity Commissioners, for the purchase of bread to be distributed weekly to appointed recipients. Pritchard's Charity consists of £1228, 8s. consols, in the hands of the Charity Commissioners. A portion of the interest of which—viz., £6, os. 2d., is payable to Kingsthorpe for the purpose of apprenticing poor boys. Baxter's Charity (founded by the Rev. R. Baxter, late rector) consists of £1200, 3 per cent. reduced annuities, the interest of which is payable half-yearly for the following purposes—namely, to increase the salary of the parish clerk; to provide certain payments to twenty-four poor persons nominated by the rector, and to increase the annual payment of the Pritchard Apprenticeship Fund, just mentioned.

Post-Office.—Miss Sophia Trasler, sub-postmistress. Letters arrive from Northampton at 5.30 A.M., and are despatched at 7.30 P.M.

Aldrich Mrs Susannah
 Atkins Martin, compositor
 Barber Samuel, house and land agent and assistant overseer
 Brown Mrs Elizabeth
 Clarke Edwin, carpenter and undertaker
 Clarke John, fishmonger at Northampton
 Collier Wm. Thos. currier, &c. at Northampton
 Cox Mr Stephen
 Cross Joseph, j. stonemason
 Douglass Jph. rent and debt collector
 Fitzhugh Richard, tailor Gardner Fred. carpenter and undertaker
 Gardner Mr John Paterson
 Gardner Misses Sarah and Harriet
 Garner John, butcher
 Glover Rev. John Hulbert,
 M.A. vicar
 Hall Mr Joseph
 Jennings Thomas, blacksmith
 Lewis John, schoolmaster Litchfield Rev. Joseph (Baptist) master of Free School
 Moss Thomas, corn miller
 Negus Mr Samuel Thomas
 Parkins Mr Thomas
 Swallow George Rushforth, miller, and corn merchant at Northampton

Thornton Rev. William, M.A.
Kingsthorpe Hall
 Tomalin Misses Mary and Frances Anne
 Trasler John, carpenter, &c.
 Trasler Mr William
 Turner Mr William
 Waterfield Miss Wybrow,
 dressmaker, &c.
 Westgate Robert, draper's assistant
 Wood Mrs Julia Anne

Bakers.

Cooke William
 Dale Charles
 Hollowell William
 Tatham George

Farmers and Graziers.

(Marked * are Yeomen).

* Ashby George
 Baldwin Richard
 Cox Thomas, The Lodge
 Cox William
 *Cumberpatch Mark
 *Danes Charles
 Dunkley George
 *Fitzhugh Charles (and butcher and maltster)
 Longland Francis
 *Roberts William Finney

Spencer John (and thrashing machine propr. and miller)

Inns and Taverns.

Cock, Francis Longland
Five Bells, William Goode
Halfway House, Thomas Plumb
Rose and Crown, George
 Leonard

Beerhouses.

Brazier George (and bricklayer)
 Cross Robert
 Dix John
 Gardner William ?
 Johnson Benjamin
 Love Cornelius
 Parberry Mrs Rebecca
 Waterfield George

Shopkeepers.

Barber Richard
 Gardner William
 Harris Thomas
 Hine William
 Hollowell William
 Kelsey William
 Lack Reuben
 Norman John
 Parberry Samuel
 Reeve William
 Weston Frederick
 Weston John

For remainder of Directory see Northampton.

MOULTON PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Brixworth and Holcot, from which it is divided by a brook, on the east and south-east by Overstone, on the south by Weston Favell and Moulton Park, and on the west by Boughton and Pitsford parishes. It contains 3034 acres, of the rateable value of £6814, and the gross estimated rental is £8139. Its population in 1801 was 843; in 1831, 1334; in 1841, 1368; in 1851, 1524; in 1861, 1848; and in 1871, 1692. The open common was enclosed in 1772, and the land divided between sixty-eight freeholders. The soil is principally a reddish loam, except the south side of the lordship, which is a dark strong clay, and there are three limestone quarries in the parish, one of which is of considerable note. The lordship consists of about 2970 acres, exclusive of Moulton Park. The manor is divided, and Lord Overstone, Henry Osmond Nethercote, Esq., Rev. Geo. Robertson, Rev. S. Backler, Wm. Barber, Wm. Marsh, Lewis Brown Elliot, Esqs., the Trustees of the late Charles Britten, Esq., and Mr Jeyes are the principal proprietors. Morton mentions a chalybeate spring in this parish, of which nothing now is known. "The Meadow Brook," says Mr Baker, "which divides the fields of Moulton and Brixworth, must have formerly been a stream of some consequence, for in the fourth Edward I., 1276, the jurors of Spelhoe hundred presented that Simon Fitz-Simon, of Brixworth, had appropriated to himself a free and several fishery in the water between those parishes which used to be common."

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, William the Conqueror, after having ejected Ailric, the Saxon proprietor, gave the manor of Moulton, consisting of three hides and one virgate of land, valued at 40s. in the time of King Edward, but then rated at 50s., to the Countess Judith, his niece, under whom it was held by Grimbould. In the reign of Henry II., two hides and four small virgates were held of the fee of Engayne; Guy de Baillol held one hide and a half, and one small virgate of the fee of Faxton; and Richard de le Pek four hides of the fee of King (Earl) David, or of the fee of Huntingdon. John Fitz-John, the son of John Fitz-Geoffrey, Lord Chief-Justice of Ireland, died seized of the manor of Moulton, which he held of William Grimbauld, by the service of one knight's fee, in the fourth year of Edward I., 1276, and was succeeded by Richard Fitz-John, his brother, who died whilst engaged in the expedition against France, seized of this, and many other manors and fees in several other counties. At the final partition of his estates, Moulton Manor was valued at £43, 6s. 11d., and assigned to Robert de Clifford, Baron Clifford, and Idoned, widow of Roger de Leybourn, and wife of John de Crombwell, or Cromwell, the two co-heirs of Isabel de Vipond, his second sister. In the ninth of Edward II., 1316, this John de Cromwell was found to be the lord of the manor of Moulton.

In the twentieth of Edward II., 1326, having incurred a forfeiture of his estates by contumaciously remaining abroad with the queen, who was exciting the French court against her husband, the manor of Moulton and lands in Potter's Pery and Yardley were consigned to Roger de Bilney during pleasure; but on the accession of Edward III. he obtained restitution of all his possessions. Having afterwards fallen under the king's displeasure, the manor was conveyed to Hugh de Spencer, junior, sometimes called Earl of Gloucester, by whom it was restored to them during the term of their natural lives, with remainder to himself for life, and to his second son. On the death of Cromwell, about 1335, the manor devolved upon Edward de Spencer, whose father (Hugh de Spencer) had been beheaded at Hereford in 1326, and who alienated it almost immediately after it came into his possession. It then passed into the hands of the Beauchamp family, and from Thomas Beauchamp, then Earl of Warwick, who held it in 1390, it lineally descended to Anne, Countess of Warwick, widow of "the king-maker," who in 1487-8 conveyed all her possessions to the king entail male, with remainder to herself in fee. Edward VI. afterwards settled it on the Princess Elizabeth for life, on whose succession to the throne it again merged in the crown, where it remained till the fourth of Charles I., 1628, when it was granted to the Corporation of London, for moneys advanced to the king, and by whom the manor and estates were probably sold soon after in lots.

The Village, which is large, and pleasantly situated midway between the Kettering and Market Harborough roads from Northampton, is about four miles N.N.E. of the latter town.

The Church, which is situated on a gentle eminence, is dedicated to St Peter and St Paul, and consists of a nave, chancel, north and south aisles, both terminating eastward in chapels, western tower embattled, and south porch. The tower is of three decorated stages, and contains six bells; the upper stage is of subsequent erection, and of superior stone and masonry to any other part of the building. The aisles, though not of the same masonry, agree very nearly in character with the tower; their characteristic is the channelled and the swelled chamfer in the mouldings of the windows and doors. The interior retains the open roof, which was partly restored in 1842 and 1844. The church was repewed and a west gallery erected in 1816; and in 1869 a handsome organ was added by subscription. The body of the edifice is in the semi-Norman style. The chancel is separated from the nave by an open arch; the north chapel communicates with the chancel through a lofty pointed arch; the doorways once opening to the rood-loft still remain, and there is a piscina in the chancel, and in each chapel. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Haddon, valued in the king's books at £14, 3s. 9d., now worth £420 a year. The Rev. Thomas A. Walker, M.A., is patron; and the Rev. Thomas Sanders, M.A., vicar. At the enclosure of the common, 397a. 3r. 35p. were allotted in lieu of the great tithes of the parish except Thorplands, and the rector of Blatherwick's portion. An action was tried in the Court of Exchequer in 1784, Hatton versus Pell, by which the impropiators recovered the great tithes in kind of Thorplands, but they have been since exonerated by the late Mr Hillyard. Henry Osmond Nethercote, Esq., is the present impropiator.

At the west end of the village is a Particular or Calvinistic Baptist Chapel, which was erected under the ministry of the celebrated Dr Wm. Carey, professor of the Sanscrit and Bengalee languages in the College of Fort William, in India. Whilst here, he projected the Baptist Missionary Society, and in promotion of that object published "An Inquiry into the Obligations of Christians to use Means for the Conversion of the Heathen." This chapel was enlarged in 1870 at a cost of £500, and will seat 400 hearers. It has a house for the minister, and also a burial-ground attached. Rev. John Richard Parker is the present minister.

The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, a stone building, capable of seating about 300 persons, is situated in the village; and here also is a Primitive Methodist Chapel, built in 1864, at a cost of £250.

The National School, built in 1843, is a handsome commodious building in the modern Gothic style. Sunday schools are attached to each of the places of worship, and they are all well attended.

The Vicarage House, a very old thatched building, stands near the centre of the village.

Moulton Grange, the seat of Henry Osmond Nethercote, Esq., is a handsome structure, situate about six miles north-east of Northampton. Thorplands is the property of Lord Overstone, and at present occupied by George Turner, Esq.

Holly Lodge is another good residence, occupied by Mr Philadelphus Jeyes, pleasantly situated about half a mile west of the village.

About half a mile north-west of the church is Castle Hill, the supposed site of the baronial residence of the Fitz-Johns, of which no vestige now remains beyond traces of the moat. The old Manor House, or as Bridges says, "the new house, now called the hall," lies north of the church; it formerly belonged to the family of Sanderson, and afterwards to that of Staunton of Longbridge, near Leamington. It is now the property of Lord Overstone, and is reduced to a plain farmhouse.

Charities.—The commissioners allotted 38a. 3r. 33p. at the enclosure in lieu of the different charitable bequests in land, which now lets for £112, 15s. per annum, subject to the interest of a mortgage of £2000 imposed by the authority of the Court of Chancery.

Post and Money-Order Office, Telegraph, and Savings Bank.—Mrs Martha Britten, post-mistress. Letters arrive from Northampton at 6.45 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 6.20 P.M.

Bonson Jas. land surveyor and house agent	Marshall Francis Henry, surgeon, &c.
Bradshaw Charles, joiner and wheelwright	Nethercote, Hy. Osmd., Esq., Moulton Grange
Bradshaw John, post messenger	Onn William Thos. teacher, National School
Bradshaw William, joiner	Parker Rev. John Richard (Baptist)
Britten Miss Ann	Pell Thomas West, maltster
Buswell Hy. plumber, painter, and paperhanger	Sanders Rev. Thomas, M.A. vicar
Cox Chas. Hump. watchmaker at Northampton, Ivy Cottage	Smith Jesse, greengrocer
Cox Mrs Helen, teacher of National School	Stevenson Charles, shoe manufacturer
Dawson Robert, higgler	Walker Joseph, Excise officer
Denton & Luck, shoe manufacturers	Wheeler Mrs Elizabeth
Denton Geo. (Denton & Luck)	Willis George, higgler
Green Mr John
Howe Samuel, saddler and harness maker
Jeyes Philadelphus, chemist at Northampton, Holly Lodge
Luck William (Denton & Luck)
Luddington Robert, draper and hosier

Blacksmiths.

Brown Joseph
Clark Thomas

Butchers.

Clayson Joseph
Dove Mrs Ann
Letts John
Pell William

Farmers and Graziers.

(Marked * are Yeomen).

*Barber William
Drage John, Moulton Lodge
Ead Mrs Jane, Manor Farm
Elliott John
Elliott Lewis Brown (and brickmaker)
Hopkins Henry Joseph, Grange Farm
Jones John George
*Marsh William
Ratcliffe Thomas

Bakers.

Andrews Mrs Rebecca
Nichols James
Sheffield Joseph
Tipler William
Roddiss John

*Tressler John
Tressler William
Turner George, Thorplands
Walker Alfred, Moulton Lodge

Grocers, &c.

Britten Mrs Martha
Checkley William Fisher
Co-operative stores, John Joyce, manager
Day Allen

Dove Mrs Ann
Page James

Inns and Taverns.

Artichoke (old), Thomas Clark
Blue Bell, Mrs Sarah Francis
Cardigan Arm, Benjamin Cox
Shoulder of Mutton, George Jolly Sanders (and soda-water manufacturer)
White Lion, James Walton

Beerhouses.

Ball Joseph
Herbert George
Slater Isaac
York John

Tailors.

Day John
Frisby William
Palmer John
Tipler William

Carriers to Northampton.—Charles Jones, Monday, Tuesday, and Saturday; John Ward, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

MOULTON PARK PARISH.

Moulton Park, comprising about 450 acres, was formerly extra-parochial, but is now an independent parish, belonging entirely to Messrs P. & R. Phipps, the well-known firm of brewers at Northampton, who purchased the estate in 1871. It is walled round, and bounded on the north by Boughton, on the east by Moulton, on the south by Abington, on the west by Kingsthorpe, and is situated $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.N.E. of Northampton. The rateable value of the parish is £650, and the gross estimated rental £765. Its population in 1841 was 18; in 1861, 8; and in 1871, 11 souls. This park, called in some early records Northampton Park, was a feudal appendage to the castle of Northampton. When it was disparked is quite uncertain, but evidently not till after the twenty-third of Henry VIII. (1531); for in that year Sir John Mordaunt, Surveyor-General of the Woods and Forests, was required, by royal mandate, to write to "the officers of our forest of Sawcey, and of our park of Moulton," commanding them to deliver "such and as many oaks, convertible for posts and rayles, with the lops, tops, and bark of the same," as shall be "sufficient for enlarging the park at Hartwell, and making a new lodge there." Mr Baker tells us that "there is direct evidence of the existence of this park as early as Henry II.," and that in the "twelfth of Henry III. (1227), the sheriff was directed not to distrain on the demesnes of the Abbot of Peterborough, towards the enclosure of the King's park of Northampton, otherwise than had been customary in the reigns of Henry II., Richard, and John." That in the second of Edward III. (1328), "the sheriff was required to ascertain by jury what proportion of the park wall of Northampton ought to be repaired by the crown, and to repair it accordingly out of the issues of his bailiwick; and on a plea of the crown in the following year, the jurors found that the men of certain villages—Guilsborough, Orlingbury, Warden, Norton, Corby, &c.—were bound to repair a great part of the wall of the King's park of Moulton, and that each village had an allotted portion." Robert de Mares is the earliest recorded keeper, and was succeeded by Robert Basset, sheriff of the county, in the thirty-fifth of Henry III. (1250). The noble families of Zouch, Roos, and Hastings did not consider this office beneath their dignity; and in 1576, Christopher Hatton, Esq., afterwards Lord Chancellor, obtained a grant in fee of the custody of the park, with the herbage and pannage, the freehold remaining with the crown. In the tenth of Charles I. (1634), the park, with the warren of Moulton and Moulton Park, were granted to Richard Lane and Christopher Hatton in fee-farm for ever, to hold in capite, by service of one knight's fee, and a reserved rent of £5 per annum. It was afterwards sold and resold, until it came into the hands of its present possessors. The ancient mansion, which was in recent times reduced to a farmhouse, has lately been pulled down, and a commodious house and farm-buildings erected near its site by the present proprietors.

OVERSTONE PARISH.

Overstone, or in early records Oveston and Ovyston, is bounded on the east by Mears Ashby, on the north and north-west by Holcot and Moulton, and on the south by Great Billing parishes. It contains 1719 acres, of the rateable value of £2670; the gross estimated rental is £2165. In 1801, its population was 173; in 1831, 203; in 1841, 187; in 1851, 226; in 1861, 206; and in 1871, 179 souls. The lordship, which was enclosed in 1727, occupies an elevated position. Morton mentions forty-five churches which might be seen on a clear day without the aid of a glass, from a hill between Great Billing and Overstone; but from the altered face of the country, many of them are not now visible. Mr Baker says "there was formerly a tree on the spot called Golden Ash, with steps up it, which being decayed, was destroyed a few years since by the wind." The soil is various; a part of it is a red rich loam, particularly adapted for turnips. The lordship is famous for its growth of ash, it being considered amongst the best in the country. There are several quarries in the parish, one of which supplied stone for building the previous mansion.

Manor.—Overstone is not mentioned in the Domesday survey; the first mention of it is in the fourteenth of Henry II. (1167), when Gilbert de Milers was certified to hold four hides of land here, which remained in the possession of his family until the fifth of Edward I. (1276), when we find it in the hands of the crown. In the tenth of Edward I. (1281), it was granted to hold at the will of the king, to Christiana de Mariscis, who in 1295 was found to hold it of the king in exchange for other lands. It was again in the possession of the crown in the twenty-sixth of Edward I. (1297), and was granted to Stephen le Chaundeler and Margaret his wife, Prince Edward's nurse, to hold during the king's pleasure; in the seventh of Edward II. (1313) and within two years after, it was transferred on the same conditions to Martin de Ispanum. In the following year it was regranted to Christiana de Mariscis, who in the thirteenth year of this reign (1319) was certified to hold the manor of Oveston, at the annual rent of £50. Edward III. granted the manor to John Mantravers, junior, for life, but who soon after forfeited it; it was then assigned to Richard Grey, for seven years, at the annual rent of £35, 12s. 11½d., who dying before the expiration of the term, it was granted to Sir Walter Manny in fee, to hold by the accustomed services. This was afterwards confirmed by a second grant, fixing its annual value at 100 marks, and reserving for this and several other manors in Wales the nominal service of a rose annually in full satisfaction of £100. "Sir Walter," says Mr Baker, "was born at Hainault, in the diocese of Cambray, and accompanying Queen Philippa into England, was appointed her carver; but forsaking the court for the camp, he became one of the most renowned warriors of the age. The monastery of the Carthusian order in London, now well known as the Charter House, was of his foundation; and dying on the Thursday before St Wolstan, 1372, he was, pursuant to his will, interred there in the middle of the choir, with great pomp, the king and the princes, attended by a numerous retinue of prelates and barons, honouring the solemnity with their presence. His only son Thomas Manny, having been accidentally drowned in a well at Deptford in Kent, his barony and estates in no less than seventeen counties and the marches of Wales, exclusive of those which he held in right of his wife, became vested in Ann his daughter and heir, wife of John Hastings, Earl of Pembroke, from whom the manor descended to their son John, the last Earl, who was also accidentally killed in a tournament at Woodstock by Sir John St John; and leaving no issue, it reverted again to the crown. In two years after, the king, for a fine of £20, made a grant of the manor to trustees, with license to settle it upon Sir John de Beaufort, eldest son of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, by Catherine Swinford, sister to the poet Chaucer, prior to her becoming his third wife, but whose children were legitimated by act of parliament in the twentieth of Richard II. (1397). This Sir John was created Earl of Somerset at the same time, and in the following year Marquis of Dorset. He was succeeded by his son and heir Henry, second Earl Somerset, a minor, who dying in his minority, the manor descended to his brother John, third Earl and first Duke of Somerset, who dying without male issue, his Northamptonshire estates descended to his daughter Margaret, successively by marriage, Countess of Richmond and Derby, the mother of King Henry VII., and 'the brightest ornament of her sex in the fifteenth century.' At her decease in 1509, the manor of Overstone once more fell into the hands of the crown. In the fourth of Edward VI. (1551), in consideration of £414, 10s. 4d., and of divers messuages, lands, &c., in the counties of Derby and Middlesex, the manor, advowson, lordship, &c., of Overstone, were granted, subject to a fee-farm rent of £8, 7s. 3d. annually, to Sir Thomas Smythe, one of the secretaries of state in this and the following reign of Elizabeth. Sir Thomas died in 1577, when the manor passed to his nephew, Sir John Wood, from whom it descended by co-heiresses to Benjamin Mildmay, Esq., afterwards Lord Fitz-Walter, who sold it in 1672 to Edward Stratford, Esq., whose son, Henry Stratford, Esq., conveyed it in 1737 to Thomas Drury, Esq., created a baronet in 1738-9. Sir Thomas Drury purchased also the manor and advowson of Sywell, and the advowson of Little Billing, which, together with Overstone, descended to his two daughters and co-heiresses, in undivided moieties. Jacosa Catherina, the youngest daughter, in 1770 purchased her late sister's moiety, and married Sir Brownlow Cust, Bart., afterwards Lord Brownlow, who survived her, and upon the death of their only child, became possessed of the whole Drury estate in this county. Lord Brownlow sold his estate at Overstone to John Kipling, Esq., in 1791; and it was subsequently purchased in 1844 (except 130 acres belonging to the church) by the late Lewis Loyd, Esq., from whom it passed, in 1858, to his only son, Samuel Jones Loyd, the present Lord Overstone, who was born in 1791, married in 1829, Harriet, daughter of J. Wright, Esq., received his title in 1850, and is the present proprietor and lord of the manor.

Overstone Hall, the seat of Lord Overstone, was erected in 1862, on the site of the previous structure, which was built by Henry Strafford, Esq. The style of the present mansion is said to be that which prevailed in the time of Francis I. The external walls of the building are constructed of wrought ashler, and the window and door dressings, copings, cornices, carvings, and other parts exposed to the weather, are of Ketton stone. The walls throughout are built double, and quite independent of each other, the inside walls being of brick, tied to the outer walls by means of galvanised iron clamps. This fine mansion is situated a little east of the Kettering road, about five miles from Northampton, in a walled and well-timbered park of 800 acres. On the west side of the building terraces are constructed, overlooking the gentle slope down to the picturesque lake and rising grounds beyond. In the thirty-ninth of Henry III. (1254), a licence was granted to Gilbert de Millers to convert his wood here into a park, which was committed to the care of a keeper, whilst in possession of the crown. Edward I., on his way to Rockingham Castle in the year 1300, rested on the 22d of April at the "Old Manor House of Overstone."

The Village, which is small, is situated on rising ground, about four and a half miles north-east by north of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St Nicholas, stands within the park, a short distance south of the village, and was erected in 1807 by John Kipling, Esq. It is a small Gothic building, of Kingsthorpe freestone, and consists of a tower, containing two bells, a nave, and chancel. The interior is very neat, including a large parlour pew belonging to the lord of the manor. The east window of three lights is filled with German painted glass, representing our Saviour blessing the elements, above which figure there is a fine head of the prophet Isaiah; St John preaching in the wilderness; and the baptism of Christ with the descent of the Holy Ghost.

The Old Church, of which no traces are left, "and its very site blended with the verdant lawn," stood in front of the manor house, and consisted of an embattled tower, nave, north aisle, and chancel. In the fifteenth century it contained no less than four altars dedicated to Sts Mary, Anne, Thomas, and John the Baptist. It was demolished in 1803, and its site, with that of the churchyard by which it was surrounded, are now joined to the park; not a mound marks the spot where

“The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.”

The benefice is a rectory, in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £12, 16s. 3d., and now worth £320 a year. Lord Overstone is patron; and Rev. Edward Jonathan Birch, B.A., is the rector.

The Rectory House is a neat building, pleasantly situated about one mile north of the village. There is a schoolhouse in the village, built in 1842, and a Sunday-school supported by Lord Overstone.

Post-Office.—Letters arrive through the Northampton office.

Overstone The Right Hon. Lord, Overstone Hall	Britten George, farmer, Overstone Farm	Palmer William, carpenter
Birch Rev. Edward Jon. B.A. rector	Cox Jn. farmer, Overstone Lodge	Pell John, farmer, Overstone Farm
	England Thomas, blacksmith	Wiggins Robert, farm-bailiff

PITSFORD PARISH.

Pitsford, or Pisford, called in Domesday book Pidesford and Pitesford, is bounded on the east by Moulton, on the north by Brixworth, on the south by Boughton, and on the west by Chapel Brampton parishes. It contains 1416 acres of land, of the rateable value of £2855. The population in 1801 was 339; in 1831, 539; in 1841, 545; in 1851, 633; in 1861, 609; and in 1871, 582; and the gross estimated rental £3392. The soil is principally red, or a light or brown loam, and its principal owners are the Executors of the late Colonel Howard-Vyse (the lord of the manor), Lord Overstone, and H. O. Nethercote, Esq. Though the situation of the parish is high and sandy, yet it abounds remarkably with springs. Morton says that “there are at least 300 springs, and no fewer than twenty-five little rills, which are formed of the water running down from four or five little valleys that open into greater, and that have several springs upon the sides of them.” Mr Baker thinks that the original ford was probably where the bridge is now erected adjoining the turnpike on the Harborough road. “In the stone pit at Pitsford,” continues Morton, “is dug up a broad stone that rises, as the diggers express it, a head and a bed, that is, an even side or edge, and an even surface, insomuch that they lay pretty handsome floors of it, which, was it not naturally thus even, they could not do, the stone is so hard to cut. It also bears the fire well, and is used for oven hearths. Some of these are eight feet in length and four in breadth.” The London and North-Western Railway intersects and has a station in the parish, which also contains quarries of slaty limestone.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, the Earl of Morton, half-brother to William the Conqueror, was possessed of one virgate of land and a mill, of the yearly rent of 2s.; the whole had been valued at 3s., but was then rated at 10s., and had been the freehold of Osmund. Walterius Flandensis (lord of Wahul) had three hides and one virgate, which were held of him by Fulcherius, and a mill of the yearly rent of 1s.; the whole was valued at 70s. annually. Henry Malesures and Philip de Pittesford were possessed of the 3½ hides, which were held of the fee of Wahul, in the reign of Henry II.; and the Earl of Leicester also held six small virgates, which are supposed to include the lands belonging to the Earl of Moreton. In the seventeenth of King John (1215), the lands belonging to the heir of Henry Malesures were seized by the crown, and granted, with the advowson of the church, to Godescall de Maghelin; and Ascelin, son of Philip de Pittesford, gave one virgate of land in Pitsford to the hospital of St Leonard, near Northampton, about the same time. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), Thomas Fitz-Philip was certified to hold the township of Pitsford of Richard Malesures, of Walgrave, who held it of the Baron Wahul. In the thirty-second of the same reign, these two knight's fees were held of Thomas de Wahul by the heirs of Walter de Waldegrave; and in the forty-fifth of Edward III. (1372), the heirs of John de Waldegrave held divers lands and tenements at Pitsford of John, Lord Wahul, by the service of two knight's fees. In the forty-third of Edward III. (1370), Sir Henry Greene, of Norton, died seized of a messuage and two virgates of land here, which he held of the heir of John, late lord of Wahul. He was succeeded by his son, Sir Thomas Greene, who, in the fifteenth of Richard II. (1322), died seized of six messuages and two carucates of land in Pitsford, with the advowson of the church; and in the twenty-second of Henry VII. (1507), Sir Thomas Greene died seized of the whole manor, who having no male issue, left it to his daughters, Anne and Maud. Anne, the eldest, having married Sir Nicholas Vaux, afterwards created Lord Vaux, of Harrowden, who levied a fine of the manor in the third of Henry VIII. (1512), in whose family it continued till the death of Edward, Lord Vaux, in 1661, when it passed with the rest of his estates to Nicholas, his supposed son, by Elizabeth, Countess of Banbury. From Nicholas it passed to Sir John Briscoe, and from him, by purchase from Lord Ashburnham, his mortgagee, to the Earl of Stratford.

The Village of Pitsford is pleasantly situated about five miles north of Northampton. In the time of Bridges it was "a village of three-and-thirty houses, besides the poor's houses, which were five." On the 18th of August 1619, a dreadful fire broke out here at nine o'clock A.M., which, before three in the afternoon, consumed above twenty dwelling-houses, including some of the best farm-houses, with all their barns, ricks, and hovels, the whole damage being estimated at upwards of £3000.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, was restored in 1867, at a cost of £2500, and stands on a knoll at the north-west angle of the village, embowered in the elm-trees by which the churchyard is adorned. It consists of a low western tower, containing five bells, a nave, north aisle, and chapel, south porch, and chancel. The venerable and massive tower alone, of all the church, retains its architectural features complete. Circular shafts, banded, run up the angle of the buttresses of the west front; the south doorway is a remarkable example of early Norman work, and the rest of the church is in the Decorated style. The nave is divided from the chancel by an open arch; another open arch separates the chancel from the north chapel, which has a piscina and a sepulchral arch. The font, which is curious, has been removed to the west end, and the base of the ancient rood screen still remains. The living, which is a rectory, in the deanery of Haddon, is rated in the king's books at £17, 19s. 7d., and is now worth about £400 per annum. It is in the patronage of the Executors of the late Colonel R. H. Vyse, and incumbency of the Rev. G. S. Howard-Vyse, M.A., who has for his curate the Rev. John Day, M.A.

Here is a small Baptist Chapel, in which the Rev. John Richard Parker, of Moulton, officiates; a Methodist Chapel, to which a Sunday school is attached; and a National School (with master's house), built in 1843, enlarged in 1870, and to which an Infant School has been added, at a cost of £450, raised by subscription, principally by the landowners of the parish—average attendance about 90.

Longman's Hill, a tumulus near the village, which Morton describes "of an oblong shape, about ten yards wide," is now planted; and a square entrenchment, called Barrow Dyke, upon Pitsford Heath, is now an enclosed field south of the lane leading to Brampton. Pitsford House, the residence of Joseph Noble Beasley, Esq., and the property of Lord Overstone, is a stone building, very pleasantly situated.

Charities.—There is a rent charge of £5 per annum, arising out of the Earl of Stratford's bequests, which is distributed in coal amongst the poor of the parish.

Post-Office.—John Blunt, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 6 A.M., and are despatched at 6.50 P.M.

Ball William, butcher, and Chapel Brampton	Dickens Samuel, blacksmith, and at Boughton	Watts William, victualler, For and Hounds
Beasley Joseph Noble, Esq. agent to Lord Overstone	Mackness Samuel, butcher	Wills Mrs Grace Mary, victu- aller, Griffin
Blunt Francis, wheelwright	Markham Henry Philip, solici- tor at Northampton, Sedge- brook	Youil Edwin, brewer at North- ampton
Blunt John, carpenter, and post-office	Scott George, grocer and draper	Farmers and Graziers.
Caine John James, schoolmaster	Underwood John, baker and beer retailer	Buswell William and John Jeffrey George
Co-operative stores, grocers, &c. Bartholow Tarry, mana- ger	Wake Drury, Esq. J.P.	Pickering Benjamin
Dalton Mr George	Wake The Dowager Lady	Pickering Mrs Mary Ann
Day Rev. John, M.A. curate	Charlotte	Spenser Thomas, Pitsford Lodge

Carriers to Northampton.—William Liggins, Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday, and John Harris, on Wednesday and Saturday.

SPRATTON PARISH.

This is an insulated district surrounded by other hundreds, and comprising the hamlet of Little Creaton, which is locally situated in the hundred of Guilsborough. It is bounded on the north by Creaton, on the east by Brixworth, and on the south and west by Teeton brook, which divides it from Brampton, Holdenby, and Ravensthorpe. The parish contains 2163 acres of land, including the hamlet of Little Creaton, of the rateable value of £4371; the gross estimated rental is £5166. The population in 1801 was 850; in 1831, 1012; in 1841, 966; in 1851, 899; in 1861, 1013; in 1871, 829 souls. (For summary of population, see note at foot of table for this hundred.) The soil is principally a red light loam, except towards the east, where it is clayey. The principal proprietors are A. A. Berens, Esq.; Captain M. Clerk; T. J. Bosworth, Esq.; W. Lantsbery, Esq.; Edward Studd, Esq.; and Mr Charles Bateman. The parish is well supplied with springs, one of which, called Moors-well, is slightly chalybeate.

Wool-combing was carried on here to a great extent up to 1820 by Mr Butler and Mr Brown, but, owing to the introduction of machinery, its manufacture was transferred to Yorkshire.

On the Market Harborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway is the "Spratton Station," $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile from the village, and $\frac{3}{4}$ mile from Brixworth, in which parish it is situated.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, William and Durand held three hides, deducting one virgate, in "Spretone," of the Earl of Morton, and a mill of the yearly rent of 6s.; the whole had been valued at 20s., but was then rated at 60s., and had been, in King Edward's time, the freehold of Osmund. One virgate and one oxgang was held by Ralph, of Robert de Buci, which was rated at 5s., and had been the freehold of Ulmar in King Edward's time. Besides this, Rohais held one hide in Spretone, of the Countess Judith, and a mill of the yearly rent of 6d.; the whole had been valued at 10s., but was now advanced to 20s. In the reign of Henry II. nine small virgates were certified to be held in Sprattan of the fee of King David, and three small virgates of the fee of Richard Basset; besides which, the Earl of Leicester, who obtained a portion of the Moreton fee on its confiscation, had two and a half hides and a large virgate in Spratton. "By inquisition taken in the forty-fifth year of Edward III.," says Bridges, "Thomas d'Arderne was found to hold one knight's fee and a half in Spratton and Holdenby of William, Lord Ferrers, of Groby; and in the forty-eighth of the same reign a fine was levied by William Alderbury and Elizabeth his wife, of the manor called Arden's manor, in Sprattan, and of another manor in Holdenby. This manor, in the thirty-sixth of Henry VI., was in the hands of William Chambre, who died seized of it in the ninth of Henry VII., and left it to John Chambre, clerk, his son and heir; who dying without issue in the twenty-first of the same reign, it descended to Henry Maxe, and Elizabeth, the wife of Richard Inguersby, who by inquisition were found to be his heirs. From these possessors it hath had the name of Chambre's and Maxe's manor." Richard Inguersby, Esq., died seized of a moiety of this manor, in the twenty-first of Henry VIII. (1530), and was succeeded by George, his brother and heir. In the first of Edward VI. (1547), a fine was levied of this manor between Lawrence Manley, plaintiff, and Thomas Downhale and other deforciant. "This gentleman," continues Bridges, "died in the fifth year of Queen Mary, possessed of a manor in Spratton called Downhale's manor, which was held of the crown as of the fee of Peverell, and of a moiety of the manor called Maxe's or Chambre's manor, which was held of the Earl of Derby, as of the fee of Winchester. His successor was Edward Manley, his son and heir." The Manley property here remained entire for more than a century, when it was alienated. The third manor, which was in the possession of the family of Keynes in the reign of Edward I., was in the fifth of Henry VIII. (1514) in the hands of Ann, wife of William Lovett, and daughter and heir of Edward Cope. All these manors have since fallen into disuse. The church and an acre of meadow belonged to St James' Abbey, near Northampton, the temporal revenues of which were valued at 40s. per annum in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535, and granted to Henry Cartwright, in exchange for other lands, with license to alienate them to Lawrence Manley, of Northampton.

The Village of Spratton, situated on the summit of a hill, covering over 50 acres of land, is about seven miles N.N.W. from Northampton. Bridges says that in his time it consisted of 134 houses, whereof six were for the use of the poor, and that the Manleys had here a very good mansion-house, then in the possession of Mr Randolph Malcher, who bought it of the late Lawrence Manley, Esq. It stood west of the church, and has long since been reduced to a farmhouse.

The Church, dedicated to St Luke, is a very interesting structure of mixed styles of architecture; it stands in the centre of the village, and consists of a nave and chancel, north and south aisles, porches, north chantry, and an embattled tower containing five bells. The tower is divided into four stages, supporting a handsome spire, ribbed at the angles, and the belfry story is enriched with a good arcade of semi-Norman arches. The nave is of five bays, with semi-circular arches on the north, and first pointed on the south side. The chancel, in the Perpendicular style, is separated from the nave by an open-pointed arch; the sedilia and the three piscina occupy the usual places, and the font is of early character. The interior was thoroughly restored in 1847, at a cost of £1860, defrayed by subscription, with the exception of about £260, raised by a rate levied on the parishioners. The spire was taken down nearly to the tower, and rebuilt in 1870, at a cost of about £110. Under the arches which divide the chantry chapel from the chancel are two altar tombs, one bearing a well-executed alabaster figure of a knight in armour of the time of Edward III., with the arms of Arden. The chantry was founded and endowed by John Chambre, clerk, for a priest to offer the holy sacrifice for the souls of himself and his parents. It was valued, at the dissolution of the religious houses by Henry VIII., at £5, 18s. 7½d. per annum. The benefice is a vicarage, in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £15, and now worth about £450 a year, in the patronage of J. A. Bartlett, Esq., and incumbency of the Rev. J. Ll. Roberts, M.A. The tithes were commuted at the enclosure in 1765 for 143a. 3r. 5p. and 60 acres at Little Creaton.

The Vicarage House, a stone building near the church, is now occupied by the tenant of the glebe farm. Spratton Hall and Spratton Grange are two large and commodious mansions; the former, standing at the north end of the village, is the seat and property of Captain Mildmay Clerk; and the latter, a fine brick building, erected about twenty-six years ago, and situated about three-quarters of a mile south-west of Spratton, is the residence of A. A. Berens, Esq. In the village is a Baptist Chapel, opened in 1840; it is a substantial building, which will accommodate over 300 hearers; Rev. J. Hedges is the pastor. And here also are the Parish Schools, for boys, girls, and infants, built in 1819, which are well attended.

Little Creaton, or Creaton Little, is a hamlet in this parish, though locally situated in the Guilsborough hundred. It lies about a mile north of Spratton, and contains about 334 acres, and in 1871 it had fifty-five inhabitants. The rateable value is £528, and the gross estimated rental, £624. The hamlet maintains its own poor, but for ecclesiastical purposes it forms a part of this parish.

The Charities of the parish of Spratton amount to about £70 per annum, arising from certain lands and houses left by unknown donors, and are divided as follow:—About £15, 15s. to the apprenticing of children, £15, 14s. to the poor in bread, £14 to the repairs of the church, £10, 10s. to the highways, and the remainder to the repairs and improvement of the property, &c.

Post-Office.—Miss Elizabeth Pendred, sub-postmistress. Letters arrive from Northampton at 7.30 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 5.20 P.M.

Bailey Thomas, butcher	Hedges Rev. J. (Baptist)	Walton John, baker
Barnett Zachariah, blacksmith	Holt Robert, parish clerk	Ward Robert, gardener
Bateman Mr Charles	Holt Mr William	Ward William, grocer, &c.
Bates Thomas, tailor and draper	Johnston William, baker	Watts Robert, saddler
Berens Alex. Augustus, Esq.	Kimbell Mrs Ann, shopkeeper	Whitmee Jethro, higgler
J.P. The Grange	Kimbell Peter, wheelwrt. and beerhouse	Wykes William, higgler
Bosworth Mrs Matilda	Knight Mr Thomas	Farmers and Graziers.
Butlin Mr Edward	Landon Captain Henry	Betts Robert
Cheney Jonah, mason and bricklayer	Lucas Mr John	Bosworth Thos. Jones (yeoman)
Clerk Captain Mildmay, The Hall	Main Robert, butcher	Cooper William
Cooper George, draper and clothier	M'Main Charles, shoemaker	Crane John Beeby
Cooper George, jun. butcher	Marlow James, baker & shopkr.	Gilby Richard Henry
Copson Edward, shoemaker	Munton Geo. H., schoolmr.	Lantsbery William (yeoman),
Crane Mr John	Palmer Edward, baker	Manor House
Davis Thomas, vict. King's Head	Palmer Thomas, tailor	Pearson Andrew Mallard
Dickens John, shopkeeper	Pearson James, beer retailer	Pearson John
Dring Miss Elizabeth	Pearson Wm. vict. Chequers	Rixon John
Eagles Thomas, carpenter	Pendred Miss Eliz. draper, P.O.	Smith Thomas
Gardner Mr William	Roberts Rev. John Llewellyn, M.A. vicar	Wright Thomas
Green Thomas, blacksmith	Rose James, coal dealer & beerhouse	LITTLE CREATON.
	Tyrell Charles, tailor	Eady Mrs Ann Eleanor, vict.
		Highgate House
		Tipler George, gentleman

Carriers to Northampton.—John Peter Seamark, on Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday; George Osborn, on Wednesday and Saturday.

WESTON FAVELL PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Billing Little, on the north by Moulton, and north-west by Moulton Park; on the west by Abington, and on the south by the river Nene, which divides it from Houghton and Brayfield parishes. It contains 1083 acres, of the rateable value of £2769. The village consisted of fifty families when Bridges wrote; and the population in 1801, was 354; in 1831, 443; in 1841, 436; in 1851, 508; in 1861, 470; and in 1871, 470 souls. The gross estimated rental of the parish is £3129. The soil varies from limestone to a light red loam and strong marl, and towards the river it is excellent grazing land. The principal proprietors are William Oliver Harris, Esq., John A. S. Bouverie, Esq., and H. B. Whitworth, Esq., the lord of the manor. In Domesday Book, Westone, was so named from the family of Favell, who were its ancient lords, to distinguish it from the other Westons in this county.

The Manor.—The Earl of Moreton held two and a half hides of land in "Westone," at the time of the Conqueror's survey; there were five carucates of arable land, and ten acres of meadow, the whole of which had been valued at 40s. yearly, but was then advanced to 60s. per annum. Besides this, he held two and a half virgates, which lay within the soke of Billing, and was valued before the Conquest at 10s. yearly; half a virgate in Westone was held by one John, of Gunfrid de Cioches, and there was also one hide here belonging to the royal manor of Kingsthorpe. Richard de Weston was certified to hold four hides here in the reign of Henry II., and Sir Hugh Favell was lord of the manor in Henry the Third's time. This gentleman gave a rent-charge of eightpence per annum to supply a light, called St Mary's light, in the church of Weston. The manor remained in the possession of the Favell family till the eighth of Edward II.,

1315, when, at the death of Sir Richard Favell, without any surviving issue, it descended to Elizabeth his niece, at that time the wife of Sir John Griffin, who had already enjoyed a portion of the manor by inheritance, and in the following year he was certified to be the Lord of Weston. The manor continued in this family until the reign of James I., when it consisted of thirty-four yard lands and a quarter. Mention is also made of another manor in the reign of Henry VIII., which was called Tyingham's manor, and was in possession of the family of Eden. This, Bridges supposes, comprised the lands which were held by Gunfrid de Cioches, with the two and a half virgates which lay within the soke of Billing. Both manors united passed into the possession of the Markham and Travell families about the year 1607, and in 1617 Henry Travell conveyed it by feoffment to Alexander Ekins, Esq., in fee, with whose descendants it remained until Mrs Elizabeth Ellen Ekins, by a codicil to her will, in 1803, devised it in trust to be disposed of, and the proceeds to be divided amongst the representatives of her husband's sisters in specified proportions. The estate was sold in 1814 for £23,970. Edward Bouverie, Esq., of Delapre, purchased the two principal farms, and Mr Thomas Butcher, solicitor of Northampton, the manors in gross. H. B. Whitworth, Esq., of Northampton, is the present lord of the manor.

The Village of Weston Favell, situated about $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles east of Northampton, is skirted by the turnpike road to Wellingborough. It appears to have been formerly of considerable importance, for it is observed that of three mansions standing here at the commencement of the last century, not one was remaining at its close. Each displayed its gay equipage—a coach and six, to the admiration of the villagers. The erection of these seats has been considered a proof of the superiority of the situation.

The surrounding country is remarkable for its fine woodland scenery, and other verdant beauties, which render it picturesque and highly suited for the residence of one who possessed so distinguished a taste for the beauties of nature and rural life, as the Rev. James Hervey, the celebrated author of the "Meditations," whose connection with this parish has rendered its name as popular, and almost as well known, as that of the metropolis of the British Empire.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, stands in the village in a delightful situation, and is a neat plain structure. It consists of a nave, chancel, coped tower, containing five bells, and south porch; it adds its full share of beauty to the landscape of which it forms a part. This church, in which are interred the remains of Hervey, observes a recent writer, "is an unornamented building, but thickly shaded by trees of rich foliage; and stands so delightfully retired in the midst of rural scenery, that a more appropriate situation for a mausoleum to that ardent admirer of nature, could scarcely have been devised, than his own village church has afforded.

"The style of the interior is as simple as imagination can conceive: no pompous monument points out the spot of the interment of this 'messenger of peace:' everything is in perfect unison with those conspicuous traits of his character—plainness and humility. A common slab, with an expressive epitaph, are the only objects to direct the stranger to the place where 'this righteous man lies in the bosom of the earth, as a wary pilot in some well-sheltered creek; till all the storms, which infest this lower world, are blown over.' More happy coincidences could not occur, to the man of taste and virtue, to and assimilate so forcibly, as they certainly do, with the character of him, who might truly say with the poet,

'Render sweet this charming spot,'

'Thou, Nature, art my goddess.'

"Although the interior has no architectural beauties to please the eye, or delight the fancy, 'here,' to use the words of Hervey, 'the high and lofty One, who fills immensity with His glory, does not disdain to fix His abode; He permits sinful mortals to approach His Majesty ; and promises to make them joyful in His house of prayer ! This should more sensibly affect our hearts than the most curious arrangement of stones can delight our eyes."

The tower of this church was once surmounted by a spire, which was destroyed by lightning on the 19th of May 1726. Over the altar is represented the Passover, in needlework, on a ground of bugles, by his lady ; above it is inscribed "Gloria Deo," and below, "Weston Favell, December 1698." The chancel was restored by the present rector in 1851 ; the nave was re-roofed, the chancel arch rebuilt, and the south porch restored in 1869 ; in the chancel is a trefoil-headed piscina and locker, and a handsome mural tablet to the Green family. The living is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £16, 16s. 3d., and now worth £238 a year. The Rev. Robert Hervey Knight, M.A., is the present patron and incumbent ; and 104a., 2r., and 13p. were allotted at the enclosure in lieu of all tithe. In the chancel, within the altar rails, beneath a dark slab, lie buried the remains of the Rev. James Hervey, M.A., author of the "Meditations amongst the Tombs," and late rector of this parish, who died December 25, 1758, in the forty-fifth year of his age. The following simple epitaph, carved upon his gravestone, is characteristic of the man :—

"Reader, expect no more to make him known,
Vain the fond elegy and figured stone ;
A name more lasting shall his writings give ;
Their view displayed his heavenly soul, and live."

Suitable, indeed, is that unostentatious elegy to the memory of him who penned the following observations on ruins :—

"This draught in my hands shows us the instability of the grandest and most laboured monuments of human art. They are soon swept away, among the other feeble attempts of mortality, or remain only, as you see here, in shattered ruins. How strange then, that a structure, incomparably more tender and delicate, should be preserved to old age and hoary hairs ! That the bodily machine, which is so exquisite in its frame, so complicated in its parts, and performs so many thousands of motions every moment, should continue unimpaired, yet act without intermission, so many days, and weeks, and months, and years. How strange all this ! Yet because common, how seldom does it excite our praise, or so much as engage our notice."

The tomb of Hervey is visited by persons from various distant parts of the kingdom, as well as by those in the vicinity. In July 1826, Mr James Fisher, author of "The Spring Day," "The Winter Season," &c., who was blind from the age of two years, repaired to Weston Favell to visit the house of Hervey and not to see but to feel his tomb, and was highly gratified. There are several monuments also in this church belonging to the Ekins, Knight, and Hervey families.

In the village is a small Wesleyan Chapel, built in 1853, at a cost of £105.

The Rectory House, which stands a short distance from the church, is a commodious edifice, rebuilt and enlarged by the Rev. James Hervey in 1758.

A small Cemetery was opened here in 1864, near the churchyard, by the parishioners.

School and Apprentice Charity.—The rents of lands left by will, in 1704, by Gertrude Ekins, for the endowment of a school, wherein nine boys and six girls were to be instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and for apprenticing one boy annually, &c., have been augmented by Justinian Ekins, Esq., and W. Ekins Piers, Esq., who contributed money with which Park Hill Close, three acres, was purchased and added to the charity. By a decree in Chancery, in 1819, the master's salary was augmented ; the number of children increased to fifteen boys and twelve girls, and the apprentice premium raised to £20. The endowment, which consists of 18a. 2r. 34p. exclusive of the schoolhouse, is worth £51, 4s. 4d. a year, including £1 rent-charge out of Mr Bouverie's estate. After paying the master's salary, the minister for preaching a sermon on the 30th of November (the anniversary of Gertrude Ekins' death), and the apprentice fee, the residue is distributed annually in bread amongst the poor of the parish. Here is also a Sunday-school.

Lady Holman's Land, called the Poor's Close, containing 8a. 9p., now worth £26 per annum, of which sum the minister receives £1 annually for preaching a sermon on Good Friday, when the remainder is distributed in money to the poor of this parish.

Post-Office.—Joseph Maycock, postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 5.30 A.M., and are despatched at 7.55 P.M.

Barber Chas. vict. Horse Shoe .	Law George, shopkeeper	Spencer John, baker and assis-
Bliss Francis, shopkeeper	Luck Edward, carpenter and	tant overseer
Corby Mrs Frances, blacksmith	wheelwright	Trasler Mrs Hannah
Darker Thomas, tailor	Lyman John Kingston, vict.
Darlow Wm. shoemaker	Trumpet	Farmers and Graziers.
Dent William, corn miller	Mason Samuel, shoe manufac.	Adkins Thomas Jabez (and lime
Jenkins Rev. Charles Alfred,	at Northampton	merchant), The Booth Farm
B.A. curate	Maycock Joseph, schoolmaster	Barber Charles
Knight Miss Elizabeth	and post-office	Harris Mrs Sarah
Knight Hy. beerho. and thresh-	Maycock Thos. wheelwright	Hawkes Thomas
ing-machine owner	and parish clerk	Lyman John Kingston
Knight Rev. Robert Hervey,	Roddiss John, maltster and	Manning John, The Lodge
M.A. rector	farmer	Roddiss John

Carrier to Northampton.—Richard White, on Wednesday and Saturday.

WYMERSLEY HUNDRED

Is bounded on the north by the river Nene, which separates it from Nobottle-grove, Spelhoe, and Hamfordshoe hundreds; on the east by Bedfordshire; on the south by Buckinghamshire and the hundred of Clely; and on the west by Towcester hundred; is of an irregular oblong form, about twelve miles in length from east to west, and averaging about five in breadth from north to south. At the time of the Domesday survey, this hundred was divided into Colentreu hundred and the hundred of Winemerslea, or Wimersle. "It was," says Mr Bridges in his "History of Northamptonshire," "the western part which, from a village of the same name, was then called Colentreu; as Wimersle was probably so named from Wimer, or Winemar, who had been lord of it in the Saxon times." It is not known how long this distinction continued, but in the reign of Henry II. both hundreds were united, and was then called, as it now is, Wymersle, or Wymersley hundred. It formed a parcel of the honor of Huntingdon, of which the family of Hastings were lords for several generations. In the ninth year of the reign of Edward II., John de Hastings was lord of it, and in the eighteenth of the same reign, left it to Lawrence his son, then only five years of age. Henry de Hastings, who possessed this hundred in the reign of Henry III., obliged the inhabitants of Colentreston to make their presentments at his hundred court of Wimersle, instead of to the king, to whom they formerly paid their taxes. Down to the time of Henry VIII., this hundred continued in the hands of the lords of the manor of Yardley Hastings. Sir William Compton possessed it in the twentieth year of this reign, and was succeeded by Peter his son, a minor six years old. Sir John Fermor was lord of it in the fourteenth year of the reign of Elizabeth; from him it passed to his lineal descendants, and is now in the possession of the Earl of Pomfret. At the death of Sir George Fermor, in the eleventh year of the reign of James I., the hundred was found to be held of the king, as of his manor of East Greenwich by fealty only, in free socage and not in capite. The hundred court is held at Cotton End in the parish of Hardingstone, and is usually called Cotton Court. Wymersley hundred contains, according to the Parliamentary returns of 1871, 35,908 statute acres, and is divided into twenty parishes, of which the following is an enumeration, showing the number of acres

(as collected from the parish rate-books), the population and number of houses in 1871, with the rateable value and gross estimated rental of each parish :—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	Houses.			Population.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Blisworth,.....	1,895	212	7	—	478	500	978	£ 8,468	£ 28,905
Brafield on the Green,.....	1,282	126	3	—	322	274	596	2,348	2,716
Castle Ashby,.....	1,928	42	1	—	86	111	197	3,652	4,284
Chadstone Hamlet,....
Cogenhoe, or Cooknoe,....	965	75	1	—	187	180	367	2,361	2,728
Collingtree,.....	666	51	3	—	115	115	230	1,463	1,718
Courteenhall,.....	1,323	30	—	—	71	75	146	3,490	4,188
Denton,.....	1,503	134	2	—	293	326	619	1,598	1,909
Grendon,.....	1,648	125	11	—	263	275	538	3,391	3,956
Hardingstone,.....	3,060	504	4	—	1,260	1,237	2,497	11,970	14,318
Horton,.....	1,630	16	1	1	49	52	101	2,055	2,387
Houghton Great,.....	1,723	76	1	—	203	166	369	4,207	4,836
Houghton, Little,.....	1,630	135	5	—	280	295	575	3,611	4,381
Milton, or Middleton- Malzor,.....	1,367	155	9	—	363	338	701	3,598	4,254
Piddington,.....	2,250	119	7	—	298	274	572	1,771	2,117
Hackleton Hamlet,....
Preston Deanery,.....	1,427	14	—	—	41	42	83	2,291	2,690
Quinton,.....	1,170	32	1	—	60	60	120	1,556	1,832
Rothersthorpe,.....	1,213	64	3	—	141	152	293	2,376	2,687
Whiston,.....	787	13	2	—	27	36	63	1,455	1,670
Wootton,.....	1,900	168	6	—	398	393	791	4,498	5,311
Yardley Hastings,.....	3,510	272	4	—	597	591	1,188	3,774	4,464
	32,977	2,473	76	1	5,862	6,027	11,499	71,587	103,339

* The return for the parish of Hardingstone includes Cotton End and Far Cotton, forming suburbs of the town of Northampton.

THE CHARITIES OF WYMERSLEY HUNDRED, with the date of nearly each bequest, the name of the donor, and the appropriation and annual value, as abstracted chiefly from the last Parliamentary reports. See also the histories of the parishes, &c. :—

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what places and purposes applied.	Annual value.
	Crown revenues.....	Blisworth parish school.....	£10 5 4
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent).....	Ditto, poor.....	1 10 0
"	Church lands allotted at the in- closure.....	Ditto, ditto.....	29 0 0
"	Church lands.....	Brafield-on-the-Green par., about	3 4 0
1731.	Several benefactions.....	Ditto, poor,.....	10 0 0
"	Hannah Pendrid.....	Ditto, ditto.....	0 5 0
1802.	James Burgess, £100 in the 3 per cent. Consols.....	Castle Ashby parish poor.....	3 0 0
1672.	Sir Samuel Jones (rents).....	Courteenhall parish free school....	100 0 0
"	Ditto.....	Ditto, apprenticing three children	20 0 0
"	Church land.....	Denton parish.....	16 14 10½
1665.	Rev. Robert Shelbourne (land) ...	Grendon par. poor and par. clerk	24 5 0
"	Charity estates.....	Hardingstone parish poor and ap- prenticing children.....	88 6 8
1762.	John Clark, £150.....	Ditto, poor.....	8 2 0
1775.	Elizabeth Murray, £300.....	Ditto, clothes for poor widows...	10 8 10
"	Donor not known (land).....	Ditto, coat to a poor man.....	0 14 0
1785.	Margaret Goodfellow, £125 in the 3½ per cents.....	Houghton Great parish poor.....	4 7 6
"	Land and cottages, repra. of chrch.	Houghton Little parish.....	36 0 0
1665.	Robert Ward, £210 4 per cent. ...	Ditto, apprenticing boys.....	8 8 0

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what places and purposes applied.	Annual value.
1655.	Mary, Martha, and Dorothy Ward, and Christopher Smyth, £500, 3 per cent. annuities,....	Houghton Little parish, poor.....	£15 0 0
1673 and 1822.	William Ward and Chr. Smyth, £700, 3 per cent. Consols,.....	Houghton Little parish school....	21 0 0
1822.	Church estate.....	Middleton-Malzor parish.....	70 3 0
„	The poor's estate.....	Ditto.....	14 13 0
„	Dodwell's or Maile's charity (rent charge).....	Ditto, bread to poor.....	2 12 0
1746.	Eliz. and J. Gaffield, rents (£3 12s).	Ditto, to educate six poor childrn.	withheld.
1799.	William Underwood (£100).....	Ditto, bread to poor.....	5 8 4
1704.	Judith Willoughby (rent).....	Piddington par., appnticng. boys	15 0 0
„	Poor's allotment.....	Ditto.....	7 15 0
„	Poor's allotment.....	Hamlet of Hackleton.....	17 2 6
1658.	John Langford (rent).....	Wootton parish, poor.....	1 10 0
1735.	Rev. Christopher Crouch (rent).....	Ditto, 10 poor people of Wootton and 10 of Holcott.....	2 12 6
1778.	Poor's allotment.....	Wootton parish, poor.....	6 0 0
			<hr/> £553 8 0½

BLISWORTH PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the east by Courteenhall and Road, on the north by Milton, on the west by Gayton, and on the south and south-east by Tiffeld, Shutlanger, and Stoke Bruerne parishes. It contains 1895 acres, of the rateable value of £8468, 10s., and the gross estimated rental is £28,905. The population in 1801 was 730; in 1831, 679; in 1841, 882; in 1851, 951; in 1861, 1022; and in 1871, 978 souls. The land varies from a strong clay to a red sandy mixed soil, with a black loam towards the wood. It yields excellent crops of corn, beans, turnips, &c. Ironstone is found in this and the adjacent parish of Gayton, and is extensively worked here by Messrs G. E. Bevan & Co. The parish also abounds with limestone, and there are extensive quarries, worked by Mr Samuel Montgomery. The stone is of an excellent quality for carving and building purposes, &c.

The Grand Junction Canal passes through a tunnel 1½ mile long in the vicinity of the village; and the London and North-Western Railway is conducted through a very deep cutting near this (in the parishes of Courteenhall and Roade), which, though not the largest work of this description on the line, has, from the character of the material, been by far the most expensive and arduous. This excavation contains 1,200,000 cubic yards, averaging 50 feet deep for two miles in length. About 400,000 yards have been removed from each end to form adjoining embankments, which reach to a height of 45 feet at the highest point. The remaining 400,000 have been raised up the steep side of the excavation, and deposited on the adjoining lands, forming what are termed spit banks. The cost of this work was £200,000, and it is believed to be one of the largest excavations of the kind ever executed.

The Manor.—William Peverell, the Conqueror's natural son, held 3½ hides of land here at the time of the Domesday survey, which, with a mill of the yearly rent of two shillings, had been rated at 60s. and was now valued at 80s. This lordship was in the possession of Gitda in King Edward's time. In the first year of the reign of King John (1199), William de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, granted the manor of Blisworth to William de Briwere, from whom it passed to his son William, who, dying without male issue in the sixteenth year of the reign of Henry III. (1232), it descended with the rest of his estate to his sisters and their heirs, amongst whom a partition was made. "But notwithstanding this allotment," says Bridges, "it appears that both this manor and advowson were after this assigned in dower to Joan the widow of the last-mentioned William de Briwere, and that after her decease they descended to Baldwin Wake, the son of Hugh Wake, and grandson of Baldwin Wake, by Isabel, the second sister of the said William de Briwere. From Baldwin Wake they descended to John Wake, his son and heir, who made a gift of the manor to Hugh Wake, his younger brother, reserving to himself and his heirs the advowson of the church with a rent-charge of £10 per annum. The manor was at this time held of the Earl of Ferrers by the service of half a knight's fee." The family of Wake seems to have enjoyed the manor from this time till about the year 1483, when Roger Wake, who married the daughter of Sir William Catesby of Ashby Legers, the favourite of Richard III., was attainted upon the defeat of that monarch at Bosworth field, and his lands escheated to the Crown. This manor was granted to Sir James Blounte, in the third of Henry VII. (1488), but Roger Wake was afterwards reinstated in his possessions, and dying seized of it in the nineteenth year of the same reign (1504), it passed to his wife Elizabeth, from whom it descended to Thomas Wake, his son, who, in the fourteenth of Henry VIII. (1523), sold it for 100 marks to Sir Richard Knightley of Fawsley. In the thirty-third year of the same reign (1542), Sir Edmund Knightley gave this manor, with a moiety of the manor of Stoke Bruerne, to the Crown in exchange for the manor of Bradby, and certain other of the dissolved Abbey lands, and the same year it was annexed by act of Parliament to the Honor of Grafton.

The advowson of the church and annual rent-charge of £10, which John Wake reserved to himself when he presented the manor to his brother Hugh, remained in the possession of the family till the fourteenth of Edward IV. (1475), when it fell into the hands of the lord of the manor. The Duke of Grafton is the present lord, and owner of nearly all the soil.

The Village of Blisworth, which is large and scattered, is situate about 5 miles nearly south from Northampton, and 3½ north-east from Towcester.

The Blisworth Station on the London and North-Western Railway, at the junction of the Peterborough branch and the Northampton and Banbury junction, is situated about one mile from the village. About 350 trains—passenger and goods—pass daily through this station.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, stands near the centre of the village, and is an ancient and handsome stone structure in the Perpendicular and Decorated styles. It underwent a thorough restoration in 1855 at a cost of £700, when the gallery was removed and the pews thrown open, and in 1871 it was paved throughout with encaustic tiles. It consists of a nave, chancel, north and south aisles, north porch, and embattled tower containing five bells. The south aisle is about half the length of the north aisle, and appears to have been added since the erection of the church; it was probably the burial-place of the Wakes. Near the screen which separates the nave from the chancel are the steps which formerly led to the rood loft. In the chancel is a stained glass window representing our Saviour raising the daughter of Jairus. The old piscina still remains in the chancel; and in the churchyard are the remains of an ancient sepulchral cross and a curious sun-dial. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £20, 3s. 9d., and now worth about £500 per annum. The Rev. William Barry, M.A., is both patron and incumbent. The tithes of the parish were commuted in 1808 for land. A new cemetery was opened here in July 1863,—the land was given by the Duke of Grafton.

The Rectory House, which is a handsome stone building in the Elizabethan style, was built in 1841 by the present rector, and is pleasantly situated a little south-west of the church.

The Baptist Chapel, of brick, was erected in 1825. In 1865 new vestries and graveyard were added, and a house for the minister, erected at a cost of £1200. In 1871 the chapel was enlarged, the frontage being ornamented with stone dressings, and a large Sunday-school added, at a further cost of £1350. The chapel will seat 350 hearers. The Rev. George Jarman is the minister.

The School is endowed with £10, 5s. 4d. per annum, arising out of an original endowment of some 400 years' standing, left by the Wake family, and now vested in the Crown. In 1861 the school and master's house attached were restored at a cost of £300. The school has an average daily attendance of eighty-five.

Blisworth House, an ancient building of stone situated near the church, is the property of the Duke of Grafton, and the seat of Captain Maunsell.

The Railway Hotel and posting-house stands opposite the railway station, and is an extensive establishment, attached to which are very tastefully arranged gardens and pleasure-grounds. It has been conducted for many years by Mr Thomas Shaw, the present proprietor.

Charities.—Besides the school endowment, there are 7a. 2r. 13p. bequeathed, it is supposed, by the Wake family, about the same time as the above-named sum was left; it now lets for £29 per annum, and is appropriated by the churchwardens for church purposes. There is also 3os. per annum belonging to the poor of this parish, arising from Mrs Jane Leeson's charity.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank.—Frederick Warren, postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 7.45 and 10.55 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 7 P.M.

Allbright William, butcher
Bailey Richard, station-master
(L. & N.-W. R.)
Barry Rev. William, M.A.,
rector
Bevan G. E. & Co. (limited), ironmasters, and Duston, R.
T. Jones, manager
Birch William John, baker
Carter Benj., coal mercht. & vict. Grafton Arms
Cherry Jesse, surveyor to Gnd.
Junc. Canal Company
Chester Fred. butcher, cattle dealer, and vict. Sun, Moon, and Seven Stars
Chester Walter, carpenter & joiner
Dunkley Richard, builder & contractor
Dunkley Wm. foreman builder
Faulkner Wm. vict. Royal Oak
Foster Benj. hardware dealer
Gascoigne John, blacksmith
Gibbs Joseph Gaffield & Son
(James), butchers
Goode Benjamin, shoemaker
Goodridge Mrs Margaret
Goodridge William, blacksmith
Griffin George, shoemaker
Harris Leonard, rag & general dealer
Hobbs William John, schoolmaster and assistant-overseer
Jarman Rev. George (Baptist)

Jelley Edward, farm bailiff
Jones R. Prothero, manager for
G. E. Bevan & Co.; h. Milton
Knott Jas. Parsons, surgeon,
Grafton Villas
Knott Mrs Maria Croft,
Grafton Villas
Lepper William, butcher
Mallard John, goods agent (L.
& N.-W. R.)
Marlow George, paraffin lamp and oil dealer
Marriott Benjamin, tailor
Marriott Joseph, shopkeeper
Marriott Thomas, cab-proprietor and carrier
Marriott William Montague, toll-clerk for Grand Junction
Canal Company
Mash Mrs Jane
Maunsell Capt. Thos. Cokayne
(late of the 12th Royal Lancers), Blisworth House
Montgomery Samuel, stone merchant and lime burner,
Blisworth Stone Works
Packwood Wm. coal merchant
& carrier
Paxton John, boat proprietor
Savage George, vict. Navigation Inn; ho. Stoke Bruerne
(Joph. Stockford, manager)
Shaw Thomas, vict. *Railway
Hotel* and posting-house, and Northampton

Warren Fred. postmaster
Warren Mr Robert
Westley Joseph & Sons, corn millers, bakers, and nurserymen, and Northampton
Whitlock John, carpenter and joiner
Whitlock Thos. shopkeeper & beer retailer
Whitlock William, watchmaker
Worster Mrs Caroline

Coal Merchants.

Carter Benjamin
Jones Richard Prothero
Packwood William

Farmers and Graziers.

Campion John, Blisworth Hill
Carter Benjamin
Carter Joseph
Cave John Tite, Tunnel Hill
Gudgeon John, Blisworth Lodge
Montgomery Samuel
Roper Charles Edward

Grocers, &c.

Allbright William
Blisworth Industrial Society,
Geo. Robinson, manager
Hickson William
Young Walter

Railways.—London and North-Western—Richard Bailey, station-master. Northampton and Banbury Junction—Edmund Stanton, station-master.

Grand Junction Canal.—Jesse Cherry, surveyor, and William M. Marriott, toll-clerk.

Carriers to Northampton.—Thomas Marriott, on Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday; and William Packwood, on Saturday.

BRAFIELD-ON-THE-GREEN PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Cogenhoe and the river Nene, on the west by Houghton and the London road from Billingbridge, on the south by Hackleton, and on the east by Denton, Whiston, and Cogenhoe. It contains 1282 acres, of the rateable value of £2348, and the gross estimated rental of which is £2716. Its population in 1801 was 284; in 1831, 460; in 1841, 428; in 1851, 497; in 1861, 494; and in 1871, 598 souls. This parish, which is called Brachefeld, Brachesfelde, and Bragefelde in Domesday book, in later records Braundfield, and now Brafield-on-the-Green, is situated on the top of a gradual ascent, commencing at the river. The soil varies from a light red gravelly surface to a strong black clay; the greater part is in grazing land; and the Rev. Christopher Smyth, M.A., is lord of the manor and principal proprietor of the parish.

Manor.—The Countess Judith, the Conqueror's niece, held three virgates of land here at the time of the Domesday survey, which was certified to by a member of the manor of Yardley. Winemar held one virgate of the Countess here, of the soke of Yardley at the same time; and William Peverell held three virgates of the fee of the Bishop of Bayen, which were claimed by one Nigel for service to the Countess Judith. The whole was rated at 20s., which was the former valuation. It was the freehold of Alf, the son of Azor, in the time of Edward the Confessor. In the fifth year of the reign of Edward I. (1277), Ernald de Boys, who had held this manor of Grimbald de Houton, in capite, by the service of half a knight's fee, died seized of it, and left it to his son John de Boys, from whom it passed to William de Boys, his younger brother, who afterwards conveyed it to Millisent de Montalt, eldest daughter of William de Cantilupe, and relict of Eudo la Zouche. At the death of Millisent de Montalt, in the twenty-seventh year of this reign (1299), it descended to William la Zouche, her son and heir, who was certified to be lord of the manor in the ninth year of the reign of Edward II. (1316), and obtained a grant of free warren for himself and his heirs in Brafield and Houghton, in the sixth year of the reign of Edward III. (1333). The manor continued in this family till the reign of James I., when it consisted of eighteen ploughlands, each ploughland containing three yard lands, and was purchased of Edward, Lord Zouche, by William Ward. George, Lord Zouche, the father of Edward, was found at his death, in the thirteenth year of the reign of Elizabeth (1571), to have held the manor of Brafield, with 90 messuages, 20 tofts, 15 cottages, 2 dovecots, 40 gardens, 30 orchards, 2000 acres of arable land, 1000 acres of meadow, 200 acres of pasture, 80 acres of wood, 60 acres of heath and furze, and an annual rent-charge of 20s. of Sir Henry Compton, as of his manors of Earls Barton, formerly parcel of the Honor of Huntingdon by an unknown service.

The Village of Brafield is partly situated on a declivity about 4½ miles E. by S. of Northampton.

The Billing-road Railway Station, one mile W. by N. of this village, stands in Little Houghton parish.

The Church, dedicated to St Lawrence, is an ancient edifice, and consists of a nave, north and south aisles, south porch, chancel, and a high embattled tower, containing five bells with chimes. The tower has undergone several repairs of late years; a new organ was erected a few years since by subscription; the chancel was rebuilt in 1848, and a handsome arch erected at the west end of the nave at the sole expense of the patron. The east window and four others are filled with stained glass, and the north aisle was rebuilt in 1850 by the parishioners. The living is a discharged vicarage annexed to that of Houghton, and now worth £350 per annum. The Rev. Christopher Smyth, M.A., is patron and incumbent. This church, with one virgate of land belonging to it, was given to the Priory of St Andrew at Northampton, by David, Earl of Huntingdon, afterwards King of Scotland, and the gift was confirmed by Richard, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Hugh Wells, Bishop of Lincoln. Upon the dissolution of the monasteries the living and advowson fell into the hands of the Crown, and appear to have been afterwards granted to the lord of the manor.

The Baptist Chapel, which will seat about 100 persons, was erected in the village in 1829, and is in connection with the Baptist chapel at Hackleton.

A Wesleyan Reform Chapel was built here in 1871; it will seat about 10 persons, and cost about £140.

The School, which was built by the vicar, stands near the church, and was erected in 1842. It is a stone building with thatched roof, the eaves and gables projecting considerably, and finished with verge boards, with pendants and ridge knops, which give a picturesque Swiss-looking character to the whole.

The Charities of this parish yield £13, 9s. a year.

Post-Office.—Wm. George Paxton, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 8 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 5.15 P.M.

Barber Thomas, shopkeeper	Hayes Miss Fanny Maria,	Farmers.
Billson Thos. vict. Old Red Lion	schoolmistress
Boyes John, shopkeeper	King Spencer, blacksmith	Bilson Thomas
Clayson William, builder	Lamb Rev. Francis Wm. M.A.	Downing Mrs Elizabeth
Co-operative Stores , Josiah	curate in charge	Downing William
Battison, manager	Shaman Thomas, wheelwright	Mackaness Charles
Elliot Richard, saddler, &c.	Warner Wm. tailor & beer retr.	Sargeant Charles
	West, Biddles, & Co. coal mer.	Sargeant Charles Simon

CASTLE ASHBY PARISH.

Castle Ashby, or Ashby Castle, is bounded on the east by Easton Maudit and Grendon, on the north by Whiston, on the south by Yardley, and on the west by Denton. It comprises the hamlet of Chadstone, and contains 1928 acres, of the rateable value of £3652, and a gross estimated rental of £4284. The population in 1801 was 123; in 1831, 150; in 1841, 172; in 1851, 214; in 1861, 183; and in 1871, 197 souls. The Wellingborough road separates this parish from Grendon on the east, and the Bedford road divides it from Denton on the west. The parish is supposed to have been named from a castle which once stood here, but of which scarcely any traces remain. The Most Noble the Marquis of Northampton is lord of the manor and principal proprietor of the parish, the soil of which is of a mixed quality.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey the Countess Judith possessed two hides, deducting one virgate, which was held by one Hugh, and which, with a mill of the yearly rent of 6s. 8d., were rated in Edward the Confessor's time at 20s., and now valued at 80s. In the account of hides taken in the reign of Henry II., William Fitz-Charenbald was certified to hold three hides and a half in Esseby and Chaddeston. In the reign of Henry III. David de Esseby was possessed of one knight's fee in Esseby and Grendon, of the Honor of Huntingdon, which then belonged to Henry de Hastings. David de Esseby left the lordship to one Moesin la Jeu, who afterwards settled it in fee on Alan la Zouche and Elena his wife, from whom it passed to Oliver la Zouche, their son. In the twenty-fourth year of Edward I. (1296), the said Oliver was certified to hold one knight's fee in Esseby and Grendon of John de Hastings, who held it of the Crown in capite. It was soon after conveyed with the advowson of the church to Walter de Langton, Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield. In the thirty-fourth year of the same reign (1306), "this Walter de Langton," says Bridges, "had license from the king to fortify his mansion at Esseby with kernelled walls after the manner of a castle. From hence his lordship assumed the addition, which it still retains, of Castle Ashby." In the first year of the reign of Edward II. (1307), all the lands in the possession of Walter de Langton in Northamptonshire, were seized by the Crown, but previous to this seizure he appears to have conveyed this lordship to Robert Peverell and Alice his wife, for the term of their respective lives, with remainder to Edmund Peverell and his heirs, and in 1316 Robert Peverell was lord of the manor. Alice surviving her husband Robert, and afterwards marrying Sir Thomas le Verdoun, he became jointly seized of this manor by virtue of said marriage. In the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), Sir Thomas de Verdoun accounted for half a knight's fee of the manor of Huntingdon in Ascheby and Grendon, and upon the death of Alice it passed to John, son of Edmund Peverell, from whom it descended through the families of De L'Isle of Rougemont, De la Pole, De Mowbray, Braybrok, and De Grey, to Lord Hessay, who conveyed it to Sir William Compton, Knight, in the reign of Henry VIII.

Sir William Compton was son of Edmund Compton, a descendant of an ancient family of Compton-Winyates in Warwickshire, from whence they assumed their name, and where they had possessions in the reign of Edward I. Sir William was page to Henry, Duke of York (afterwards Henry VIII.), upon whose elevation to the throne he was appointed chief gentleman of his bedchamber, and died of the sweating sickness in the 20th of that king's reign (1529), in possession of the manor of Ashby-David, with 20 messuages, a water-mill, 1000 acres of arable land, 200 acres of meadow, and 300 acres of pasture, which he held of the Crown by an unknown service. He was succeeded by Peter Compton, his son, a minor, only six years old, in ward to Cardinal Wolsey, and afterwards married to Anne, daughter of George, Earl of Shrewsbury, by whom he left issue, Henry, afterwards knighted, and summoned to parliament as a baron of the realm by the title of Lord Compton. This nobleman was twice married,—first, to Frances, daughter of Francis, Earl of Huntingdon, by whom he had issue two sons, William, who succeeded to the title, and Thomas, who was afterwards knighted, and one daughter, Margaret, married to Henry, Lord Mordant. His second wife was Anne, daughter of Sir John Spencer, of Althorpe, by whom he had one son, Henry, who was made Knight of the Bath at the coronation of James I. He died in the thirty-second of Elizabeth (1590), and was succeeded by William, his eldest son, who was afterwards summoned to parliament, knighted, and in the sixteenth of James I. (1619) advanced to the Earldom of Northampton. This, the first Earl of Northampton of that name, died in 1630, sixth Charles I., leaving issue by Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heir to Sir John Spencer, Knight, Lord Mayor of London, Spencer, his only son, who succeeded him in his honours and estates, and two daughters. Spencer, the second Earl of Northampton, distinguished himself by his loyalty and valour, and lost his life in the cause of Charles I.

When the royal army was being raised, he levied a troop of horse and a regiment of foot at his own expense, and four of his sons were officers under him in the same service. In 1643, the Earl with an army of less than 1000 men, advanced towards Hopton Heath, near Stafford, to meet the rebel party, which consisted of a force of nearly 3000 horse and foot and a good train of artillery, commanded by Sir John Gell and Sir William Bruerton, when a sanguinary engagement took place in which the noble Earl fell gloriously. "The Earl," says Bridges, "not discouraged by their superiority of number, began the engagement, charging their horse with such resolution and success, that the greater part of them precipitately fled. On renewing the charge, he had his horse killed under him; and his own party inconsiderately pursuing the retreaters, he was surrounded by the enemy. Before he fell, he killed with his own hand the colonel of foot, who attempted to take him. His head-piece was soon after beat off by the butt-end of a musket, and quarter being offered him, which he manfully disdained to accept, he was slain by a blow with an halbert on the hinder part of his head, and received at the same time another deep wound on his face. For such a loss," continues Bridges, quoting from Lord Clarendon, "a greater victory had been an unequal recompense. He was a person of great courage, honour, and fidelity. From the time he submitted himself to the profession of a soldier, no man more punctual upon command, no man more diligent in duty. All distresses he bore like a common man, and all wants and hardships as if he had never known plenty or ease; most prodigal of his person to danger, and would often say 'that if he outlived these wars he was certain never to have so noble a death.'" His body was afterwards buried in the Church of All-Saints, Derby, in the same vault with the Countess of Shrewsbury. His eldest son, James, succeeded him in his titles and estates, and became third Earl of Northampton. He, too, performed considerable service to his prince at the time of the rebellion, particularly by routing the Parliamentary forces, and relieving Banbury Castle, where his brother, Sir William Compton, the Governor, had been closely besieged for three months. He was Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Warwick, and recorder of Coventry, Northampton, and Tamworth. He died at Castle Ashby in 1681, and was buried with his ancestors at Compton. To him succeeded George, his eldest son by his second wife, Lady Mary, daughter of Baptist, Viscount Campden; and at his decease, his honours and inheritance devolved upon James, his eldest son, who died in 1754, and was buried at the family seat at Compton Winyates, Warwickshire.

George, the sixth Earl, died in 1758, and was succeeded by his nephew, Charles, the seventh Earl, being the son of Charles, the youngest son of George, the fourth Earl, who died in 1763. Charles was succeeded by his second son, Spencer, the eighth Earl, who died and was buried in Switzerland in 1796. Charles, his son and successor, was created Marquis of Northampton in 1812, and died at Castle Ashby in 1828, where his remains were interred. He was succeeded by his son, the second Marquis, Spencer Joshua Alwyne Compton, by the eldest daughter of Joshua Smith, Esq., of Earlsstock Park in Wiltshire. He was born in 1790, and married the eldest daughter of the late Major-General Douglas Maclean Clephane in 1815. She died in 1830. The late noble Marquis was president of the Royal Society, and a great patron of the arts and sciences, as well as of every charitable and useful institution in the county. He died at Castle Ashby in 1851, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Charles Douglas-Compton, the third and present Marquis of Northampton, who was born in 1816, assumed the name of Douglas by sign manual in 1831; and was appointed a Deputy Lieutenant of Argyllshire in 1848. In 1859, he married Theodosia Harriet, second daughter of Henry Vyner, Esq., of Newby Hall, near Ripon, who died without issue in 1864. The title of Northampton had become extinct in the families of St Liz. Bohun, Parr, and Howard, and the present noble inheritor of the title is the tenth of the family which has enjoyed the dignity of earl or marquis in eight generations through 250 years. Residences—145 Piccadilly, London; Castle Ashby, Northamptonshire; and Compton Winyates, Warwickshire.

The Village of Castle Ashby is small and pleasantly situated on a declining eminence about $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles E. by S. of Northampton. In Bridges' time "it consisted of twelve houses besides the Earl of Northampton's seat."

The Church, dedicated to St Mary Magdalene, is an ancient and a remarkably handsome structure, chiefly in the Perpendicular style, with some Decorated and Norman work, and consists of a nave, north and south aisles and porches, chancel, and a small embattled tower in which are five bells. In the chancel is a handsome altar of Caen stone erected in 1848, and the east window of the north aisle is filled with elegantly stained glass. The church underwent a thorough restoration in 1870, at an expense of £4709, 11s. 4d., towards which sum £3809, 11s. 4d. was given by the Marquis of Northampton, £600 by the rector, the Rev. Lord Alwyne Compton (for the chancel), and £300 by the parishioners. The interior is paved with encaustic tiles designed by the rector. In the north aisle is a monument of a cross-legged knight, supposed to be that of the founder of the church, and a good brass representing a priest. Amongst the modern monuments is one to Lady Northampton, the wife of Spencer, second Marquis of Northampton, by Tenerani of Rome, and one to Lady Margaret Leveson Gower; the figure, which is an exquisite one, is by Baron Marochetti. The north chapel is of the Jacobean period, of good character, and was probably the work of Inigo Jones. In the restoration of the sacred edifice the greatest judgment and taste have been displayed, and it is now one of the most beautiful churches in the county. The Benefice is a rectory in the deanery of Preston, valued in the king's books at £17, 9s. 7d., and now worth about £500 per annum. The tithes of the parish amount to £237, 18s. 2d. The Marquis of Northampton is the patron, and the Rev. Lord Alwyne Compton, M.A., incumbent. There is a Sunday-school in the village.

The Castle is the princely mansion of the Marquis of Northampton, and formerly the residence of the Comptons, Earls of Northampton. This magnificent residence, which commands extensive and most delightful prospects, is built of Weldon stone in the form of a quadrangle, with two lofty octangular towers at the north-east and south-west angles, and from its south front a fine avenue of trees extends itself to the deer-park. The east and south sides, with several of the chimney-pieces, were designed by Inigo Jones, but the more ancient parts were erected by Henry, Lord Compton, in the reign of Elizabeth, and finished in 1624. In the gallery, and dispersed through the house, is a fine collection of paintings, amongst which are portraits of John, Lord Talbot, the first Earl of Shrewsbury, who was slain at the siege of Chatillon in 1453. The library contains a valuable collection of books, a translation of the Bible by Coverdale, and a Dedication to Henry VIII., with a Preface printed in 1553; also a manuscript "History of England," supposed to be Caxton's. In forming the avenue in 1719 several Roman coins were dug up.

CHADSTONE is a hamlet in this parish, situate about three-quarters of a mile west of Castle Ashby. Bridges says it was a village of six houses in his time, but that it appeared from several wells filled up and foundations discovered in ploughing, to be formerly of greater extent.

The Rectory House, a substantial building situate in this hamlet, is the residence of the Rev. Lord Alwyne Compton, M.A.

Manor.—Droge de Bevreire, by birth a Fleming, and a near relation of William the Conqueror by marriage, at the Domesday survey held of the king one hide and three virgates of land in Cedestone, which had been rated at 20s., but was now valued at 40s. Ulf, a tenant of Waltheof, held it in the reign of the Confessor, and the Countess Judith claimed it at the time of the survey. Drogo, or Droue de Bevreire, came into England at the Norman invasion, and obtained the territory of Holderness in Yorkshire; but having killed his wife some time after, he escaped out of the kingdom by a stratagem before the occurrence reached the king's ears. His estates being seized into the hands of the Crown, were given to Odo de Campania, Earl of Albemarle and Holderness, so that the manor of Chadstone was afterwards held of the fee of Albemarle. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), Oliver la Zouch held it for the fourth part of one knight's fee of the Countess of Albemarle, who held it of the king. Robert Peverell was lord of the manor of Chadstone in the ninth of Edward II., 1316, and from henceforth it continued in the hands of the several successive lords of the manor of Castle Ashby, and now forms part of the possessions of the Marquis of Northampton.

Mr Lye, author of the "Saxon Dictionary," was rector of this parish, and died here in 1767.

Charity.—James Burges, in 1802, left £100, 3 per cent. consols, to the poor of Castle Ashby, which yields £3 per annum.

Post-Office.—Wall Letter-Box. Letters arrive from Northampton about 8.30 A.M., and are despatched at 4.35 P.M. on week days only.

Northampton, Marquis of, The	Robinson Mrs Mary, Rectory
Most Noble Charles Douglas	Farm
Compton, Castle Ashby	Rogers Mrs, Menagerie
Compton, Rev. Lord Alwyne,	Scriven George, agent to the
M.A. rector, Rectory House	Marquis
Beech George, head gardener	Scriven Mrs Mary Ann
Davis David, vict. Falcon Inn	Smith William, blacksmith
Harrold Joseph, corn miller	Winter Richd. clerk of the works

Farmers and Graziers.

Robinson Thomas, Park Hill
Rogers William, Castle Ashby
Lodge
Scriven Richard George
White John Alexander Lehair

COGENHOE PARISH.

Cogenhoe, or, as it is commonly called, Cooknoe, is bounded on the west by Whiston, on the north by Ecton, from which it is divided by the river Nene, and on the west and south by Brafeld and Whiston parishes. It contains 965 statute acres, of the rateable value of £2361; and the gross estimated rental is £2721. Its population in 1801 was 184; in 1831, 276; in 1841, 332; in 1851, 374; in 1861, 360; and in 1871, 367. Ironstone is worked in this parish to a considerable extent by the Cogenhoe Iron Ore Co. The soil is of a mixed quality, and is in general very fertile; the quantities of arable and meadow land are nearly equal. The Rev. John Christopher Whalley, M.A. (the lord of the manor), Dennis L. Higgins, Esq., Ambrose Isted, Esq., and Mr Robert Rogers, are the principal proprietors. "In a lane to the south-east of the town," writes Bridges, "is found an uncommon fossil, very transparent, and capable of receiving a polish as bright and hard as crystal. Part of it was sent up to some skilful lapidaries in London, who had never seen anything of the like kind before. But not being applied to any particular use, very little was dug, though considerable quantities, it is supposed, might have been raised. Some Roman coins have been found in the common field; and in a barn within the town was discovered an urn, very thin and of a whitish colour, containing a mixture of ashes and earth. From its size, Mr Morton conjectures it was one of those which are called family urns; and from its ordinary appearance, probably to have belonged to some vulgar family."

Manor.—Norgiot held three and a half virgates of land of Wids de Reinbud-curt in Cugenho at the time of the Domesday survey, which, with a mill of the yearly rent of 13s., ten acres of meadow, and a wood half a mile in length and one furlong in breadth, was valued at 10s., but now rated at 30s. In the Confessor's time it was the freehold of Edwin. Norgiold held three virgates here of the Countess Judith at the same time, which had been valued at 5s., but were now rated at 10s. William de Cugenho was certified to hold here one and a half hide and one virgate in the reign of Henry II.; and Nicholas de Cugenho was found, in the ninth of Edward I. (1281), to have held one moiety of the manor of John, son of Henry de Hastings, by the service of one knight's fee; and the other moiety of Nicholas de Haversham, by the service of another knight's fee. In the ninth of Edward II. (1314), Gules de Cugenho was certified to be lord of this manor; and in the twenty-third of Edward III. (1350) he died seized of it, though it had been seized into the hands of the Crown in the interim. By inquisition taken at his death, he was found to have held one moiety of the heir of Lawrence de Hastings, late Earl of Pembroke; and the other moiety with certain lands in Harwedon Magna of the heir of William de la Plaunche, as of the manor of Haversham by knight's service. This manor continued with the family of Cugenho till the twenty-second of Richard II. (1399); upon the decease of William de Cugenho, a minor, the manor and advowson, which were certified to be held by knight's service of Reginald de Gray as of his manor of Yerdele-Hastynes, descended to Agnes his sister, wife of Sir John Cheyne, who in right of said wife became possessed of it. It afterwards passed into the hands of William Chamberleyn, the parson of the church of Cogenho, Thomas Cheyne, and others; Richard Barry, clerk, Sir John Cheyne, and Agnes his wife, with whose descendants it continued till about the year 1600, when Charles Cheyne sold both the manor and advowson to — Bond, Esq., of whom the former was purchased by Matthew Linwood, Esq., and the latter by Peter Whalley, the late rector of this parish. A house and farm of about 250 acres, called Cogenho-Bran or Cheyne-house, distant about seven miles, in the parish of Stoke Golding in Buckinghamshire, belongs to this parish, and is the property of George H. Finch, Esq., M.P.

The Village of Cogenhoe is small, and stands on an eminence about five and a half miles east of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, is an ancient structure of the Early English and Decorated styles. It contains a nave with clerestory, chancel, north and south aisles, south porch, and tower, in which are three bells. The chancel is of the Early English of good character, the nave of the Decorated order, and the fine embattled tower is of the same period. The church was thoroughly restored in 1869 at a cost of £1300, the restoration of the chancel being at the sole expense of the patron. The old chantry chapel which once stood at the north side of the chancel, and was founded and endowed by William de Cugenho "for one priest to sing for ever at our lady's altar," was rebuilt on the original foundation at the expense of the present rector. The aisles and chancel have been re-roofed, and are in pitch pine, as is also the roof of the nave. The old square pews, &c., have been removed, and open seats of oak erected in their stead. The west window and belfry arch, which were blocked up, have been re-opened, the tracery reinserted in the windows, the arches relieved of their many coatings of plaster and whitewash, and the stone-work throughout the building has been pointed and renewed. A window of two lights on the north side of the chancel, for many years closed, has been opened and filled with stained glass in memory of the late rector, the Rev. Edward Watkin, by his widow. Beneath the upper window of the south aisle is a monument bearing the figure of a Knight Templar in armour, supposed to be the tomb of Sir Nicholas de Cugenho, the reputed founder of the church, and lord of the manor in the reign of Edward I. A holy water-trough, much decayed, is still in the porch. In 1871 an organ was presented to the church by Edward Saunders, Esq., of this parish. Amongst other subjects of interest connected with the church may be noticed a black-letter Bible of the date 1617, and an altar cloth of the time of Queen Elizabeth. The present rector has in his possession a manuscript volume of sermons of Francis Smyth, who was rector of the parish in 1637. This volume was accidentally picked up at an old bookstall in London. The benefice is a rectory in the patronage of George Burnham, Esq., of Wollaston, and incumbency of the Rev. Charles Havey Burnham, M.A. The living is rated in the king's books at £17; but in the twenty-sixth of Henry VIII. (1535) it was returned at £3, 7s. 4d., and in the second of Edward VI. at only £2, 10s. 9d. per annum. The present yearly value is £400. The Rectory House is a good mansion, commanding delightful and extensive prospects.

There is a Baptist Chapel here in connection with the one at Hackleton; it is a small building of brick, erected in 1843. Attached to the chapel is a Sunday-school, built in 1869 at an expense of £100. The National School was built in 1843 by the principal inhabitants of the parish, aided by a grant from the National Society, and is situated near the rectory-house at the end of the village.

Post-Office.—Wall Letter-Box. Letters arrive from Northampton at about 8 A.M., and are despatched at 5.20 P.M.

Anthony Arthur Hollis, miller	Man Thnos. shoe manufacturer	Sharman Mrs Sarah, vict.
Brafield Industrial Co-operative Society (branch), Thomas Mann, manager	Mills Mr Robert	Royal Oak
Burnham Rev. Charles Havey, M.A. rector	Mills Robt. Wm. lace manufacturer, and Northampton National School, Miss Annie Bramish, teacher	Smith John, blacksmith
Cogenhoe Iron Ore Co. Edward Saunders, director	Robinson John, baker	Farmers and Graziers.
Coles Thomas, butcher	Saunders Edward, director Cogenhoe Iron Ore Co.; house, Kingston-on-Thames, Surrey	Coles Mrs Lydia, & Son (Joseph)
Leach Seymour, cooper	Sharman Jas. Coles, joiner and wheelwrt. painter, plumb.&c.	Roe Thomas
Lines Geo. grocer, baker, and beer retailer		Rogers John Natt
		Sharman Charles
		Sharman Mrs Lucy
		Silby John

Carrier to Northampton.—John Mumford, Wednesday and Saturday.

COLLINGTREE PARISH

Is bounded on the east and south by Courteenhall, on the west by Milton, and on the north by Wootton, from which it is divided by a small brook which runs into the Nene. The parish contains 666 acres, the rateable value of which is £1463, and the gross estimated rental £1718. Its population in 1801 was 154; in 1831, 194; in 1841, 232; in 1851, 234; in 1861, 237; and in 1871, 230; The soil varies from a strong clay to a sandy land, and about one-third of the parish is in grass. Thomas George Fermor Hesketh, Esq., is lord of the manor, and Sir Herewald Wake, Bart., Messrs Richard Dunkley, the Executors of the late Serjeant Manning, Rev. John Prideaux Lightfoot, D.D., Joseph Campion, Daniel Ireson, Trustees of Messrs Kirby, John Gudgeon, and James Trench, have each small possessions here.

Manor.—Collingtree, or, as it is written in Domesday Book, "Colentreu," and, in later records, "Colyngtrough," was certified at the Conqueror's survey to be a member of the manor of Middleton, and to contain two hides, deducting one virgate, which were then held of the king by Geoffrey Alselin. In the second year of the reign of King John (1201), William de le Fremunt, who at that time held the manor of Collingtree, conveyed it by royal license to Simon de Pateshull and his heirs, with the advowson of the churches of Middleton and Collingtree. The manor continued in the possession of the family of Pateshull from this time until the thirty-third of Edward III. (1360), when, at the death of Sir William de Pateshull without male issue, his inheritance descended to his sisters. Partition being made the following year, the lands which belonged to him in Collingtree, Middleton, and other places, were assigned to Alice, the wife of Sir Thomas Wake, of Blisworth. From this lady the manor of Collingtree passed to her grandson, Thomas Wake, Esq., the son of Sir Thomas Wake, her eldest son, from whom it descended, in the thirty-seventh of Henry VI. (1459), to Thomas Wake, Esq., his son, who left issue, Roger Wake, his successor. This Roger Wake was a firm adherent of Richard III., upon whose defeat at Bosworth field his possessions were confiscated. This manor was granted to Sir Charles Somerset in the first year of Henry VII. (1485), but was afterwards restored, with his other estates, to the said Roger Wake, who died seized of them in the twentieth of this reign (1505). His successor was Thomas Wake, Esq., his eldest son, who sold the manor of Collingtree to Oliver Wode, from whom it descended in the sixth of Henry VIII. (1515) to Margaret, his daughter, the wife of Sir Walter Mantell, of Heyford. At this lady's decease, in the fifteenth of Elizabeth (1573), she was succeeded by Matthew Mantell, from whom it received the name of Mantell's Manor. It came afterwards into the hands of William Dry of Milton, who died in possession of it in 1637, and left it to his posterity. The Abbey of St James, near Northampton, had possessions in this parish, which in 1535 were valued at 17s. per annum.

The Village of Collingtree, which is small, is situated about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Northampton, and 3 from Blisworth station.

The Church, dedicated to St Columba, is an ancient edifice, of rather late Decorated character, and consists of a nave, with clerestory and south aisle, south porch, and chancel, and an embattled tower containing four bells. The north aisle was taken down about seventy years since. The sedilia is still in the chancel, where also may be seen the ancient locker; and in the south aisle is the piscina in a state of good preservation. The church has been undergoing internal restoration for the past three years. In 1871, there was a new window placed in the west end of the tower at the expense of George Norman Wetton, Esq., of Northampton. It is of two lights, and in the Early English style, filled with stained glass, and representing St Andrew and St Helena. On the south side of the chancel is another window, with two lights, put in by the present rector in 1859, to the memory of his parents, and adjoining which is a neat mural tablet of marble, in the Gothic style, to the memory of his sister. In the centre of the north side of the nave is another memorial window of one light, bearing date 1870, representing the "Flower Faded," by Pickering Phipps, Esq., to the memory of his daughter, aged 7 years. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £16, 10s. 5d., but now worth about £430 per annum. The advowson of the living was purchased in 1871 by Pickering Phipps, Esq., the present patron. The Rev. George Benjamin Hill is rector. The tithes were commuted at the enclosure in 1779 for 238 acres. The church land of the parish consists of 6a. 2r. 13p., which lets for about £26 a year, and is applied to the repairs of the church. The Rectory House, a neat building, stands a short distance west of the church.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a small place of worship here, which was formerly a cottage.

In 1861 there was an Infant School erected, with teacher's house attached—a good building of brick, partly in the Elizabethan style, surmounted by a neat bell-turret. It is capable of accommodating about eighty children, and has an average attendance of forty-five.

Post-Office.—Wall Letter-Box, placed in the centre of the village. Letters arrive from Northampton at 8 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 5.30 P.M.

Bull Wm. Goddard, market-gardener	Harris Josiah, vict. Wooden Walls of Old England	Williams Ephraim, baker and shopkeeper
Dunkley John, carpenter and rate collector	Hill Rev. Geo. Benj. rector	Farmers and Graziers.
Freeman Wm. bailiff to P. Phipps, Esq.	Hutchings Mr Richard, Ash Cottage	Campion John
Grady Thomas, gardener	Johnson Edward, mason	Harris George
Grady William, beer retailer	Pearson Rd. shopkeeper	Phipps Pickering
Harris Miss Harriet, teacher of infant school	Phipps Pickering, brewer at Northampton and Towcester	Wetton George Norman, ho. Northampton

Carrier to Northampton.—Ephraim Williams, on Wednesday and Saturday.

COURTEENHALL PARISH.

Courteenhall is bounded on the east by Quinton, on the north by Wootton, on the west by Blisworth and Collingtree, and on the south by Roade. It contains 1323 acres, 1 rood, 20 poles, of the rateable value of £3490; its population in 1801 was 139; in 1831, 120; in 1841, 143; in 1851, 135; in 1861, 162; and in 1871, 146. The gross estimated rental is £4188. The soil varies from a strong stiff clay to black and red loam; the surface near the railway is very stony, and there is excellent grazing land near the hall. Sir Herewald Wake, Bart., is lord of the manor, and proprietor of the whole parish, except the church land and about three acres belonging to the school.

Manor.—William Peverell held three hides and a half of land here, at the time of the general survey: there was a mill of the yearly rent of 12d., four acres of meadow, and a wood of two square furlongs, and the whole was then valued at five pounds. Thurstin held half a hide and half a virgate here at the same time. This William Peverell founded the Priory of Lenton, near Nottingham, for Cluniac Monks, and largely endowed it. Amongst other possessions he gave them the lands of "Corteenhall," except one knight's fee, and the land of Turstin Mantell. King Henry II. gave afterwards eighty acres of land here, with Blockcliff mill, in exchange for certain lands in Papelwick, which he bestowed upon the Canons of Newsted, in Shirwood. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), the Prior of Lenton held the township of "Corteenhall," of the king in capite; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1316) he was certified to be lord of the manor. In the twenty-eighth of Henry VIII. (1537), Nicholas Heth, Prior of Lenton, being attainted of high treason, the manor was seized into the king's hands. In the fourteenth of Elizabeth (1572), Richard Ouseley, Esq., was in possession of and built part of the manor-house in 1580. His son, Sir John Ouseley, who in 1598 succeeded to the estate, was married to Martha, the daughter of Bartholomew Tate, Esq., and had issue, Richard, his son and successor, and four daughters. Sir Samuel Jones, Knt., purchased the manor of Richard Ouseley about the year 1650, but dying without issue, he left his whole estate to Samuel, the younger son of Sir William Wake, Bart., whom he obliged by his will to take the name of Jones. This Samuel Wake Jones died in 1712, and left the estate to his nephew, Charles Wake, the son of Sir Baldwin Wake, Bart., his elder brother, whom he also obliged to assume the name of Jones. Sir Herewald Wake, Bart., the present possessor, was born in 1852, succeeded to the title and estates in 1865, and attained his majority on 19th July 1873.

"To the lords of the manor in this parish," says Bridges, "the ancestors of the Lord-Keeper Lane were tenants in husbandry. He was the son of Richard Lane, by Elizabeth his wife, the daughter of Clement Vincent of Harpole." (See Harpole Parish).

The Village of Courteenhall consists of a few cottages, situate about five miles south of Northampton, in the vicinity of the London and North-Western Railway, and about one mile north of Roade Station, and four and a half from the Blisworth Station.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter and St Paul, is an ancient edifice situated on an eminence near the village, adjoining the park, and surrounded by trees. It consists of a nave and side aisles, chancel, north and south porch, and an embattled tower, containing five bells. "It is now," says Bridges, "seated at the upper end of the town, but within the memory of man had many houses standing beyond and about it, which, since the inclosure of the parish, have been destroyed." The advowson of this living was given with the manor to the Priory of Lenton, in Nottinghamshire, by William Peverell, but, upon the dissolution of the religious houses, the right of patronage fell to the crown, and is now in possession of the lord of the manor. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £12, 10s. 10d., but now valued at about £450 per annum. The Rev. Augustus Dampier, M.A., is the incumbent. The church contains a handsome monument of Sir Samuel Jones, founder of the grammar school, who died in 1672, and of Mary his wife, both figures sculptured in white marble, life size, both kneeling, the former clad in mail, and the lady in the loose robe of the period, and others of the Ouseley and Wake families. Amongst the latter is one to the late rector, who died in 1850, and was incumbent of this parish for thirty-seven years. Mr Richard Lane, and Elizabeth his wife, the parents of the Lord-Keeper Lane, are buried in the north aisle.

The Rectory House, which stands close to the south side of the church, is a stone building, erected about seventy years since, and much enlarged by the late incumbent, Rev. Richard William Wake, M.A.

The Free School was founded and endowed in 1672, by Sir Samuel Jones, with the sum of £100 a year towards the maintenance of a schoolmaster and usher, who should teach "the children of such persons as should inhabit in Courteenhall, and within four miles compass thereof, which should from time to time be sent to them, or either of them, English, Latin, Greek, writing, casting of accounts, or such other qualities as are usually taught in free schools." The master to receive £80, and the usher £20 a year. The schoolhouse is a large substantial stone building, situated amongst trees, near the hall. Sir Samuel also left £500 for the building of this school, with houses for the master and usher; £500 towards repairing the church, and increasing the bells to the number of five; and £20 a year to the overseers of the poor of the parish for the time being, to be employed to put out as apprentices three boys or girls born in the parish. The several sums of £80, £20, and £20, to be paid for ever out of the lands and manor of Courteenhall, Quinton, Wootton, and Collingtree, in this county. These annuities are paid by the owner of the property charged therewith. The sum of £20 is given as a premium to each boy, and in doing so there has not been found occasion to refuse a single application for apprenticing.

Here is an Infant School, built about the year 1840, by the late Sir W. Wake, Bart., which is principally supported by the rector.

Courteenhall Hall, the property of Sir Herewald Wake, Bart., and the residence of C. C. Dormer, Esq., is a splendid square mansion of stone, delightfully situated in the midst of a well wooded park, a short distance from the village.

Dampier Rev. Aug. M. A. rector
Dormer Clement Cotterell,
Esq. The Hall
Gardner William, bailiff
Gray Wm. steward to Sir H.
Wake, Bart.
Haskins Wm. Thos. master of Free School

Knight Miss Mary Ann, teacher, Infant School
Perry Mr Charles
Sturges John, parish clerk

Farmers and Graziers.
Gray William

* Ambrose Thomas
Robinson John
* Sharman John Adams

*(Messrs Ambrose and Sharman are in the parish of Wootton, but Courteenhall is their postal address.)

Carrier to Northampton.—John Dunkley, on Wednesday and Saturday.

DENTON PARISH

Is bounded on the east by the parishes of Castle Ashby and Yardley Hastings, on the north by Whiston and Brafield, on the west by Hackleton, and on the south by Horton. The parish contains about 1503 acres, inclusive of about 325 acres of woodland, of the rateable value of £1598, and a gross estimated rental of £1909. Its population in 1801 was 378; in 1831, 527; in 1841, 557; in 1851, 595; in 1861, 578; and in 1871, 619 souls. The soil is principally a cold stiff clay, but towards the south side of the parish it has a light black surface, and the remainder is chiefly arable. The principal proprietors are the Marquis of Northampton (the lord of the manor), Mr Thomas Sargeant, and Mr Floyer.

Manor.—Denton is written in the Domesday book Dodintone, and in later records, Dodinton-Parva, Deyventon, and Deynton. At the time of the general survey, a part of this lordship was included in that of Whiston, and the other part was a member of Yardley. The Countess Judith held one hide of land belonging to Yardley, and Winemar held also half a hide of the said countess. King David of Scotland was certified to hold one hide in Dodington in the reign of Henry II.; Walter Fitz-Winemar held six small virgates of the Abbot of Ramsey; and William de Wytendon ten small virgates of the same fee. Dodington seems to have been divided between the lords of Whiston and Yardley Hastings in after ages. John de Hastings held a moiety of Dodington of the king in capite, in the twenty-fourth of Edward IV. (1485); and in the thirty-fifth of the same reign (1496), Laurence de Preston held one knight's fee in Quenton and Dodington of Edmund, Earl of Lancaster. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), John de Hastings held one part of the manor, and John Cave possessed the other. That part of the manor of Denton formerly held by the family of Hastings, afterwards passed into the hands of the Earl of Northampton, and the other part into the possession of the Earl of Pomfret; and these distinct shares were separated by a small stream, which runs through the middle of the village. On the death of William, Earl of Stratford, in the eighteenth of Richard II. (1395), it was found that Sir Thomas Griffin held half a knight's fee of him in Deynton-Parva. In the eleventh of Elizabeth, Edward Griffin, Esq., died seized of certain lands and tenements in Denton, which seems to have been the above-mentioned estate, and which he was certified to have held of Sir Henry Compton, Knight, by an unknown service, and from whom it lineally descended to the present noble possessor.

The Village of Denton stands partly on a declivity about six miles E.S.E. of Northampton. An oak-tree was planted in the centre of it to commemorate the coronation of Queen Victoria.

The Church, dedicated to St Margaret, stands on one side of a hill, and is a neat edifice, consisting of a large square nave, chancel, south porch, and a small embattled tower, containing three bells. The church was repaired, and a gallery added at the west end in 1827, when it received an addition of 160 sittings, of which 152 are free, at a cost of about £700, to which the patron contributed £120, and the Incorporated Society for the Enlargement of Churches and Chapels granted £100; the remainder, with the exception of £20 given by W. T. Smyth, Esq., was raised by a rate levied on the parishioners. One of the bells of the tower was recast at the same time. The living is a joint rectory with that of Whiston and Yardley Hastings; its annual value is £230, the Yardley Hastings portion is about £155, and that of Whiston £75. There are two farms in the parish; one of about 64 acres, belongs to the rector of Whiston, and the other, of about 140 acres, to the rector of Yardley Hastings. The Marquis of Northampton and Lord Boston are patrons; the Rev. Daniel Baxter Langley, LL.D., and the Hon. and Rev. Llewellyn C. R. Irby, M.A., are the incumbents alternately. The Rev. Fras. John Cockett is curate in charge.

A Guild or fraternity in honour of the Blessed Virgin existed here formerly, and they had a chapel situate at the north-west end of the village.

There is a small Baptist Chapel in the village, capable of seating about 140 persons; it was rebuilt and enlarged in 1837, and is in connection with that at Hackleton.

The National School is a good stone building erected by subscription in 1829, and towards which the Marquis of Northampton and the National Society were the principal contributors. This school was enlarged in 1868, by the addition of a class-room; in 1871 it was refitted and further improved, and in 1872 a new wing was added as an infant school.

Post-Office.—Wall Letter-Box. Letters arrive from Northampton at about 9 A.M., and are despatched at 5 P.M.

Barker Charles, baker	Robinson William, carpenter and joiner	Farmers and Graziers. Morris Charles, The Elms Ridley John Hornsby Robinson James, Denton Wood Lodge Robinson Richard (and assistant overseer) Sargeant Thomas (yeoman and maltster) Smith Charles
Cockett Rev. Fras. John, curate in charge	Sargeant Mrs Ann and Miss Sarah
Cooke Mrs Mary, vict. Quart Pot	Smith William, baker
Knight Chas., shopkeeper and carrier	White Miss Cecilia, schoolmrs.
Knight Thomas, soda water manufr. and vict. Red Lion	White Dunkley, bricklayer
Madge Mrs Mary	White Geo. stone and marble mason & shopkeeper
Robinson Joseph, shopkeeper	White Joseph, shopkeeper
	Wilmer Mrs Sarah

Carriers to Northampton.—Charles Knight, on Monday, Wednesday and Saturday; and George Knight on Wednesday and Saturday.

GRENDON PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the east by Bozeat, on the north by Strixton, on the west by Whiston and Earls Barton, and on the south by Castle Ashby and Yardley Hastings. It contains 1648a. of the rateable value of £3391; and the gross estimated rental is £3956. Its population in 1801 was 480; in 1831, 622; in 1841, 595; in 1851, 558; in 1861, 610; and in 1871, 538 souls. The parish is watered by two streams, one of which rises at Yardley Chase, and is fed by several tributary springs in its course; the other flows from the fish-ponds of Castle Ashby, and after forming a small waterfall about a quarter of a mile west of the village, runs into the Nene. The soil is of a mixed quality, and the grazing lands are excellent. The principal land-owners are the Marquis of Northampton (who is lord of the manor); Borrett Bletsoe, Esq., Trinity College, Cambridge, the executors of the late Rev. John Weatherell, Mr James Robert Whitworth, and a few resident yeomen.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, Grendone consisted of three hides and one virgate of land, and was a member of the manor of Yardley. The Countess Judith, niece of the Conqueror, was the owner. In the fifty-second year of the reign of Henry III. (1268), the manor of Grendon was in the possession of Baldwin de Paunton, by certain servile customs and services; and Philip de Paunton, in the twenty-fourth of the following reign (1296), was certified to hold half a knight's fee of the heir of John de Hastings, who held it of the king in capite. John de Harrington was found to hold half a knight's fee here of the heir of John de Hastings in the seventh of Edward II. (1314), and in two years afterwards he was certified to be lord of the manor. His successor, Richard de Harrington, died seized of it in the eighteenth of this reign (1325), and left it to John de Harrington, his son, a minor eighteen years of age. He held it of John, Lord Hastings, by the annual payment of sixpence on Christmas day in lieu of all other services. Upon his decease, in the fifty-first of Edward III. (1378), it descended to his two daughters, Amya, the wife of John Carnell, and Isabel, the wife of Hugh Fairfax. From this time forward, there were two manors in Grendon possessed by the several descendants or heirs of these two sisters. The one, named Over Grendon, was in the possession of Thomas de Bromslete, governor of the Castle of York in Henry the Fourth's time; and in the fifth year of that reign (1404), being then a knight, he obtained a charter of free warren for himself and his heirs in this manor. In the seventh of Henry VII. (1492), Roger Salisbury, Esq., died seized of it, and left it to William, his son and heir, from whom it descended to Mary, his daughter, a minor fifteen years of age, in the fourteenth of the same reign (1499). Sir Thomas Tresham, Prior of the Order of St John of Jerusalem, died seized of it, and left it to Thomas Tresham, his grandson, a minor fifteen years old. This Thomas Tresham was afterwards honoured with the title of knighthood; and in the twenty-ninth of the same reign (1514), a fine was levied of the manor between him and Lewis, Lord Mordaunt. The other manor remained in the family of Fairfax till the time of Henry VII., in the thirteenth of whose reign (1498) William Fairfax, Esq., died seized of it, and left it to William, his son, from whom it descended to Margaret, his daughter, the wife of Tyles Worsley, Esq., who was succeeded by his son John, a minor seven years of age, in the seventh of Henry VIII. (1516). The manor of Grendon continued in the possession of this family, from whom it had the name of Worsley's Manor, for several generations. Both manors afterwards became united, and passed into the hands of the Earl of Northampton, from whom they descended to the present proprietor, the Marquis of Northampton.

The Village of Grendon, which is rather large and scattered, stands on an eminence commanding some very interesting prospects of the surrounding country; it is situate about six miles S.S.W. of Wellingborough, eight and three quarter miles east of Northampton, and about one and a half miles from the Northampton and Peterborough railway, and has a station on the road to Earls Barton, in which parish it is situated.

The Church, dedicated to St James, occupies the highest ground in the centre of the village, and is an ancient structure. It consists of a nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. As this has been termed the "county of squires and spires," so Grendon may be said to be in the tower country the embattled pinnacled tower (in which are five bells), being a remarkably fine one. The pinnacles are modern, the old ones having been removed about thirty years ago. About the year 1848 the chancel was newly roofed and the west arch opened at the expense of the patrons and incumbent. The church contains portions of various styles. At the south side of the chancel is a very good Perpendicular aisle roof, and some fine sediliæ; the two western arches are Norman; a window at the west end of the north wall, a door and a piscina in the south wall, are Early English; the rest of the nave is in the Decorated character. In the church is a fine brass, with three figures, in memory of a lady and her two husbands. Another brass, to the memory of John Mortimer, with reference to whom, as giving a picture of domestic life in the beginning of the fifteenth century, an extract from a Chancery document of that period, which was published in an early number of All the Year Round, was read by Lord Alwyne Compton. The paper is an account of an inquisition which was taken by order of Henry the Fifth, who, on being informed that an outrage had been committed on the person of John Mortimer of Grendone, issued a writ to certain commissioners to inquire into the same. The commissioners summoned a jury, who met at Northampton Castle on the Thursday before Christmas 1413. The result of their researches was as follows:—"The jurors say that whereas John Mortimer of Grendon, Esquire, was sitting in his mansion-house of Grendon, aforesaid, at the dawn, busy about shaving his beard," &c. . . . (See "Architectural Report for 1871.") The living is a discharged vicarage, in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £8; endowed with £40 private benefaction, £40 royal bounty, and £40 parliamentary grant. It is in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, and incumbency of the Rev. Daniel Brent, D.D. The living is about being augmented by the patrons to £150 a year. This rectory was given by Edward III. to his new college, called Kingshall, in Cambridge, founded by him in 1337; and upon the foundation of Trinity College, Cambridge, by Henry VIII., the rectory and avowson of the vicarage were granted to the Master and Fellows, in the thirty-eighth year of his reign (1547), with whom the right of patronage has ever since remained.

The Vicarage House was erected in 1850, and there is a school built by subscription. At the inclosure of the common in 1780, land was allotted in lieu of tithes. The quantity of land belonging to Trinity College is 273a. 1r. 13p.; and there are 22a. 2r. 21p. of church land. There are also about 21 acres in this parish belonging to Duston vicarage, and 8 acres of poor's land, which now lets for £24, 5s. a year, which sum is distributed by the churchwardens on St Thomas' day to the poor of the parish. Grendon Hall, the property of Borrett Bletsoe, Esq., stands in the village, and is a spacious stone mansion of considerable beauty and antiquity. It was formerly the seat of some members of the Compton family, and has been much larger than it is at present. "General Compton," says Bridges, "Deputy Lieutenant of the Tower, hath here a very good house and gardens, where he sometimes resides." The hall (now a farmhouse) is in good repair, and in the occupation of Mr John Spencer. Grendon House, another excellent farmhouse, situated about one mile north of the village, is now occupied by Mr John Lovell Wright.

Post-Office.—James Brawn, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at about 8.50 A.M., and are despatched at 4 P.M.

Bailey John, parish clerk	Laughton Misses Mary and Rebecca, shopkeepers	Farmers and Graziers.
Brealey Thomas, baker	Partridge Joseph, wheelwright & vict. Crown	(Marked * are yeomen).
Brent Rev. Daniel, D.D. vicar	Police station—John Muddiman, constable	*Brawn Thomas (and collector of taxes)
Collier Miss Charlotte, dayschl.	Pulley William, assistant overseer	Collier Thomas
Driver Thomas, shopkeeper and beerseller	Rodwell Thomas, butcher	Collier William
Fletcher Edwin, master of National School	Scriven Miss Catherine	Longland James, Manor House
Goodman Wm. {vict. Station Hotel , & coal agent	Sears William Lovell, vict. Half Moon	Quincey James
Labram Thos. Abm. joiner & timber merchant	Smith Thomas, blacksmith	Spencer John, Grendon Hall
Latham Thomas Thorpe, cattle dealer	Wright Jonathan, shoemaker	*Stevenson James
		Wright John Lovell, Grendon House
		Wright William

Carrier.—George Brealey, to Wellingborough on Wednesday and Northampton on Saturday.

HARDINGSTONE PARISH.

Hardingstone, situated on the south side of the valley of the Nene, is bounded on the north by that river, on the east by Houghton Great, on the west by Wootton and Rothersthorpe, and on the south by Preston Deanery and Wootton. The parish contains 3060 acres. The rateable value is £11970, and the gross estimated rental is £14,318. Its population in 1801 was 712; in 1831, 1306; in 1841, 1053; in 1851, 1196; in 1861, 1915; and in 1871, 2497, including the hamlets of Cotton-end, Far Cotton, and De-la-Pre. The river Nene, and a branch of the Grand Junction Canal to Northampton, pass through the parish, and join at Cotton-end, where are commodious wharfs and warehouses, and also the Northampton station of the Peterborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway. The soil is various—about three-fifths of the lordship is arable and two-fifths pasture, of which there are about 200 acres of rich meadow. The pastures furnish a goodly quantity of beef, mutton, and lamb to the London markets. The arable land in the south-east of the parish is principally a strong clay, and produces good crops of wheat, beans, barley, &c. This part of the lordship is situated about 200 feet above the river Nene, and as the valley is neared the soil changes to a red sand and light gravel. At Hunsborough Hill iron ore is being extensively worked, and blast furnaces are now in course of construction by the Northampton Coal, Iron, and Wagon Company. The lord of the manor, and principal proprietor, is John Augustus Sheil Bouverie, Esq., of De-la-Pre Abbey.

Manor.—The crown possessed five hides of land, besides the inland, in Har-dingstone, or as it is called in Domesday-book, "Hardingesthorp," and in some later records, "Hardingesthorne," at the time of the Conqueror's survey, which, with two mills of the yearly rent of 50s., was rated in King Edward's time at £30, but was then valued at £12. William Peverell and Gunfred de Cioches, had two hides and sixty acres of meadow here of the king's donation; and two hides in the possession of the Countess Judith had been a member of the manor of Yardley at the same time. These lands belonging to the Countess were given, upon her disgrace with the Conqueror, together with the earldom of Northampton, to Simon de St Liz, in marriage with Maud, her eldest daughter. This Simon founded or rebuilt and endowed the Priory of St Andrew in Northampton (see page 117); and his son and successor, called Simon de St Liz the younger, founded the Abbey of St Mary-de-la-Pre in this parish, and endowed it with large possessions; to which were afterwards added several other donations in Hardingstone, confirmed to the abbess and nuns by Edward III. Robert de Vieuxpont was lord of the manor of Hardingstone in the first year of Henry III. (1216), and was succeeded by William de Vieuxpont, who, in the twentieth of the same reign (1236), had a dispute with the Abbess of St Mary-de-la-Pre respecting twenty virgates of land, which was afterwards called a moiety of the manor of Hardingstone. The Abbess and Ralph de Beseville were found, in the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), to hold one knight's fee in "Hardingstone" and Jotes of John de Hastings, who held of the crown in capite; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1316), the Prior of St Andrew in Northampton and the Abbess of De-la-Pre were certified to be lord and lady of Hardingstone and Cotone. Richard Beseville and the Abbess of St Mary's held one moiety of a knight's fee in Hardingstone and Cotone, and Gyles de Cugenho another, of John de Hastings, in the eighteenth year of this reign (1325); and in the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), they accounted for one knight's fee here of the Honor of Huntingdon. Richard, Earl of Arundel, died seized of the moiety of a knight's fee here in the twenty-first of Richard II. (1398), which was held of him by the heirs of Richard Beseville and the Abbess of De-la-Pre.

General Everard William Bouverie succeeded his father in 1858, and in 1871 the manor and estate passed to his nephew, John Augustus Shiel Bouverie, Esq., the present proprietor.

The Village of Hardingstone is delightfully situated, about one mile and three quarters S.S.E. of Northampton, on ground elevated about 150 feet above the valley of the Nene.

The Church, dedicated to St Edmund, stands in the centre of the village, and consists of a nave, side aisles, chancel, and a square embattled pinnacled tower, in which are five bells. Portions of the edifice are in the Early English style. It was thoroughly restored in 1869, at an expense of £1451, 4s. 11d., towards which the late General Bouverie contributed £1100, and the chancel was restored entirely at his expense. The early archway in the tower, which, with its variety of alternate colours, artistically irregular in size, and previously blocked up, has been opened, and forms the most interesting feature in the building. The old east window of the chancel has been removed, and a decorated stained glass window of three lights erected in its place by the tenants and other inhabitants of the parish, as a testimony of respect to General and Mrs Bouverie. The window, painted by Wales of Newcastle, represents the figure of Christ in the centre carrying a lamb, with the inscription, "I am the Good Shepherd." On either side are Peter and John, with the inscription, "Love as brethren"—"God is love." This window is an interesting artistic addition to the church. The font is the gift of the architect, Mr Palgrave of London. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Northampton, rated in the king's books at £13, 5s., and now worth about £534 a year. The Lord Chancellor is patron, and the Rev. Robert Henry Cox, M.A., vicar. This church was appropriated to the Priory of St Andrew at Northampton very early after the Conquest, and was probably given to it by Simon de St Liz. It was confirmed to it by Hugh Wells, Bishop of Lincoln, in whose time the vicarage was ordained. Upon the dissolution of the monasteries, the right of presentation fell to the crown, where it continues still. In the church are several monuments to the Hervey and Tate families. The Vicarage House is a commodious building, standing in its own grounds, near the church.

There is a Baptist Chapel in the village, built in 1857, at a cost of £200; also National and Infant Schools, erected by the late General Bouverie.

A military work of the olden time called "Dane's Camp" occurs in this parish, on the north of the village, about a mile south-west from Northampton. It is seated on the brow of Huntsborough or Hunsborough Hill, from which an extensive view of the town and surrounding country is obtained, and consists of a single ditch, about twenty feet wide and twelve deep, now shaded with trees and overgrown with brushwood, enclosing an area of upwards of an acre, in an oval or circular form. The fosse has a double rampart, and appears to have had originally a single entrance from the south. Various conjectures have been entertained respecting this work: "Mr Morton," says Bridges, "is of opinion that this was a summer camp, raised by a party of Danes, who supported themselves by plunder and rapine, and apprehends it to have been pitched about the year 921, at the time that Towcester was built by King Edward the Elder, or at least a few years before it. It hath neither the usual form of a Roman camp, nor the manner of the entrance, and wants besides the convenience of water, which the Romans were particularly careful to secure. The camps of the Saxons are generally larger, not so circular, nor single trenched." Some attribute its construction to Sweyn, the father of Canute. It commands views of the other military works in the neighbourhood,—the entrenchment at Rothersthorpe and Clifford-hill on the west and east, and Borough-hill and Guilsborough to the north-west and north in the distance.

In this parish also, on the London road, at the south-west corner of the park of De-la-Pre, and a little less than a mile south of Northampton, stands Queen's Cross, one of the most interesting monuments in the kingdom, still beautiful though worn by time and defaced by memorials emblazoning the deeds of modern reformers. Eleanor, Queen of Edward I., dying at Harby in Nottinghamshire, monumental crosses were erected to her memory at Lincoln, Grantham, Stamford, Geddington, Northampton, Stony Stratford, Dunstable, St Albans, Waltham, London (Charing Cross), and Westminster, upon the places where her hearse rested. Of these monumental erections, the number of which have been variously stated at fifteen, thirteen, and ten, those at Geddington, Northampton, and Waltham, alone survive the rude hand of time. The present cross occupies a well-selected spot (supposed to be part of a site of a Roman encampment, several silver coins of the emperors, one of Nero, having been found in the adjoining fields) on the brow of a hill overlooking the town of Northampton and the verdant valley of the Nene. It consists of three diminishing compartments or storeys, surmounted by a broken cross, occupying a pediment of stone, ascended by nine steps, and rising from hence to the height of about forty feet. The first story is octagonal in form, fourteen feet high, and the arms of England, the county of Ponthieu in Picardy, Castile, and Leon, sculptured on escutcheons in the compartments, with an open book in high relief in four of them. The second story, which is twelve feet high, is likewise octagonal, and has a female figure crowned in every alternate compartment. These figures, effigies of the queen, are about six feet high, and have each a canopy over the head supported by two Gothic pillars. The upper tier has four sides facing the four cardinal points of the compass. Bridges says the top was surmounted with a cross three feet high in his time, and that it was added when the whole was repaired by the order of the Bench of Justice in 1713. This cross has long since been broken. The whole structure is a composition of peculiar elegance and beauty, and is in the Early English style in transition to the Decorative. John de Bello, or De la Bataille, was the architect of this and some of the other crosses, and Alexander of Abington and William of Ireland were employed on the statues. The crosses were all erected between the years 1291 and 1294.

"One of the most commonly-known facts connected with the personal history of Edward I.," says Mr Hartshorne, "is his affectionate attachment to Eleanor of Navarre, and as few kings have left behind them so high a reputation for prudence and valour, so have none exceeded him in attachment and tenderness for their queen. No uncertain charm of endearment bound together these royal hearts; no false lustre shone from their union. Whilst the active spirit of this monarch brings him more prominently forward than any of the Plantagenets, his virtues also lead us to bestow upon him more unvarying regard. Nor is our interest in Eleanor lessened through the favourable light in which Edward himself is represented in history. There is, unfortunately, but little known of her personal character; that little is, however, associated with no equivocal reputation." Eleanor was the daughter of Alphonso, King of Castile, and her marriage with Edward was celebrated at Burgos in the year 1254. She accompanied her husband to the Holy Land, and during a period of thirty-six years their lives were crowned with joy and felicity. She died of an autumnal fever at the house of Richard de Weston, at Harby in Nottinghamshire, on the 28th of November, 1290. "She was attended during her illness," says a writer, "by Master Leopold, her physician, to whom she bequeathed twenty marks, and also by a leech in the service of the King of Arragon, to whom she gave a cup worth twelve marks and a half. Attended by the king, the corpse was removed to Westminster, and crosses were erected at each of the places where the procession rested on the journey. No account remains of its arrival at Northampton; but we may suppose that much the same proceedings took place as at Dunstable, of which the annalist states—"Her body passed through our town, and rested one night, and two precious cloths, to wit, baudekyns were given unto us. Of wax we had eighty pounds or more, and when the body of the said queen was departing from Dunstable, the bier rested in the centre of the market-place, until the king's chancellor and the great men then there present had marked out a fitting place where they might afterwards erect, at the royal expense, a cross of wonderful size, our prior being then present, and sprinkling holy water." Edward's design in the erection of these crosses was not merely to preserve the memory of the queen, but to induce passengers to stop at them to offer up prayers for the eternal welfare of her soul.

The Battle of Northampton was fought in the meadows by the river, and in Hardingstone field, on the 10th of July 1460, in which Henry VI. was made prisoner, and the Duke of Buckingham and many other nobles were killed. (See page 116.)

De-la-Pre.—This beautiful domain forms the boundary of the town of Northampton on the south, "ornamenting the landscape with its woods in leafy June." It is the seat of John Augustus S. Bouverie, Esq., whose elegant mansion is the old Abbey of St Mary De-la-Pre. The Abbey was founded in the reign of King Stephen for Cluniac nuns, by Simon de St Liz the younger, Earl of Northampton. He endowed it with the churches of Barton, Doddington, and Fotheringhay, and with large possessions in Hardingstone and other places. It was also further endowed with lands and tenements in this parish, and in Northampton, by several others. At the survey in the twenty-sixth of Henry VIII. (1535) its revenues were valued at £119, 9s. 7d. This abbey was excepted from the general suppression of the religious houses, but freely surrendered by the lady-abbess Clementissa Stokes, "a gudde agyd woman," whose house was in a "gudde state," chargeable with no disorders, and possessed of well managed revenues. It had "pratye store" of every "kinde of grayne," every "sorte of catell," likewise of "stuff and implements," a portion of which, "fourt partt of the schepe—viz., four score," was assigned to the abbess for "herre comfort in her greate age," with a pension for life. The nuns were also pensioned, one of whom, sister Dorothy, a member of the Bernard family at Abington, had a stipend of twenty shillings. In the thirty-fourth of the same reign (1543), the site of this monastery and the demesne lands belonging to it in this parish, were granted to John Mershe, and came into the hands of the Tates in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, with whom they continued till the middle of the last century. Zouch Tate, Esq., served as member of Parliament for Northampton in the reign of Charles I., espoused the popular cause, subscribed the covenant, and moved the celebrated self-denying ordinance, by which members of Parliament were prohibited the enjoyment of any office, civil or military, during the wars.

Far Coton, or Cotton, and Cotton-end, formerly called East and West Colone. The former hamlet contained only four farmhouses in 1849, and the latter forms a part of the town of Northampton. In Bridges' time each of them contained about sixteen families, "and they appear," he says, "to have been the several branches of the manor of Hardingstone and Coten divided between the Prior of St Andrews, the family of Besseville, and the convent of De-la-Pre."

In 1868 these hamlets were, for parliamentary purposes, incorporated with the borough of Northampton. They have considerably increased in size and population during the last few years, numbering at the last census 1700 souls. In Far Cotton is a National School, erected in 1866 by the late General Bouverie. It is licensed for divine worship; and here also is a Baptist chapel, erected in 1860 at an expense of £300, and a Wesleyan chapel, which cost £150.

The Hospital of St Leonard, said to be founded by William the Conqueror for a master and leprous brethren and sisters, stood formerly in Cotton-end, on the site of which is now a blacksmith's shop. Within the district of this hospital was a chapel for the use of the inhabitants of the said district. In Bridges' time a farmhouse stood on the site of the hospital, which was then called St Leonard's Farm, belonging to the corporation of Northampton, and adjoining it there was a small tenement called the Spital or Lazarhouse, inhabited by a poor man who received two shillings a week and clothing, and a load of firewood once a year, defrayed out of the rents of the said farm. At the survey in 1535, the revenue of this hospital was valued at £10 clear of all deductions.

The Paper Mills or Rush Mills, on the river Nene, were rebuilt after being burned down in 1847, at a cost of about £4000, by the Norwich Insurance Company. These premises are noted for the manufacture of paper used for the Government stamps, the water being peculiarly suited for that purpose. Several thousand pounds worth of paper had, fortunately, just been removed to the Government offices in London when the premises took fire in 1847. These mills, which are worked by steam and water power, are the property of Dr Faircloth, and the business is carried on under the name of Wise & Co. The river Nene is crossed near these mills by a handsome cast-iron bridge, about 61 feet long, and 25 feet broad, designed and executed by Barwell & Co., of Northampton. It was erected by the county in 1842 at a cost of nearly £2500. Nun Mill is also an extensive establishment on the river Nene in this parish; the fall of the river from these mills to Peterborough is about 107 feet.

Charities.—The charity estates, under the management of J. A. S. Bouverie, Esq., and other trustees, consist of 14a. 3r. 38p. in the parish of Wootton, which lets for about £42 a year; a close of 2a. 3r. 34p. in the same parish lets for nearly £20 a year; a piece of ground in Milton parish, containing 9a. 3r. 4p., lets for about £25 a year; and a rent charge of £1, 6s. 8d. issuing out of lands in the parish of Collingtree. The ordinary course of application of the income is as follows:—The yearly sum of £15 or thereabouts, upon an average, is laid out in the purchase of bread, which is distributed among the poor on Easter Monday, when a sermon is preached, for which 10s. is paid to the vicar; apprentices are put out as opportunities occur, generally three or four in the course of a year, with premiums varying from £15 to £20, for children bound to masters out of the parish, and of £8 or £10 for children bound to masters within the parish, half the premium being paid at the commencement, and the remainder at the expiration of half the term of apprenticeship; and the residue of the rents is laid out from time to time as is found convenient, in the purchase of shirts, shifts, and other articles of clothing given to all the poor persons in the parish, and sometimes in part in the purchase of coals, which are distributed in the like manner. John Clark, in 1762, bequeathed £150, which was laid out in the purchase of £270, 3 per cent. consols, yielding a dividend of £8, 2s. a year, which is expended, in compliance with the will of the testator, in purchasing good warm coats for poor men. Mrs Elizabeth Murray, of Northampton, left, in 1775, the sum of £300, with which was purchased £348, 6s. 7d. 3 per cent. annuities, yielding a dividend of £10, 8s. 10d. a year, which is expended in clothing four poor widows; and there is an annual sum of 14s. payable out of a field in Great Houghton parish, in the possession of Mr Bouverie, the origin of which is unknown. In lieu of this, Mr Bouverie provides a coat of greater price for a poor man, annually. In 1872 the late Mrs Sarah Forbes left a legacy of £100 to be distributed amongst the poor of Hardingstone, and £100 to the Hardingstone Friendly Society.

The Rev. James Hervey, the celebrated author of the "Meditations amongst the Tombs," was born in 1714, in the house at the west end of the village at present occupied by Mrs Anne Higgins. (See Weston Favell parish.)

Post-Office.—Letters arrive from Northampton at 6.15 A.M., and are despatched at 6.10 P.M.

Allen Philip, brewer at Northampton	Faithfull, Rev. Charles Henry, M.A. vicar of Preston Deanery	Northampton Coal, Iron, and Wagon Co., office 5 Sheep Street, Northampton
Arnold Mr Henry	Frost Samuel, butcher	Ogden John, blacksmith
Bacon Perkins, paper manufacturer (Wise & Co.), ho. 69 Fleet St., London	Garner Chas. market gardener	Perry Mrs Caroline Devonsire
Baines Mrs Hannah, teacher of Infant School	Garner Hy., market gardener	Rolfe John, Brafield, baker
Berry John Parton, homoeopathic chemist at Northampton	Gray Mr Thomas Edis	Shaw Mrs Ann
Bouverie John Augustus Sheil, Esq.	Green Mrs Mary and Miss Lucy	Shaw John, auctioneer
Brown Mrs Elizabeth	Hall Geo. builder & shopkr.	Simmons Edw. staircase builder
Clayson Mrs Anne	Higgins Mrs Ann	Simmons Jas. staircase builder
Couper Mr Henry	Jackson Mrs Mary, shopkeeper	Timms Geo. boot & shoemaker
Coulart Edward, clerk of School Board	Jones Thos. Porter, master of National School	Timms James Percival, shoe manufacturer
Cox Rev. Robert Henry, M.A. vicar	Kendall Charles Edwin, shoe manufr. at Northampton	Underwood Arthur, farm bailiff
Denton Uri, shoemaker and vict., Britannia, Rush Mills	Kendall Miss Eliz. Agnes, School	Walker Charles, parish clerk
Elton Charles, builder, wheelwright, and vict. Crown	Labrum Andrew jun. carpenter	Welch Charles Ball, tailor
Elton, James, victualler, Sun	Lowe Wm. farm bailiff, Hardingstone Lodge	Westley Joseph & Sons, corn millers and coal merchants, Nun Mills, and Blisworth and Northampton
Elton Miss Maria, shopkeeper	Mackie Miss Eliza, dressmaker	Wise & Co. paper manufacturers, Rush Mills
Elton Thomas, sub-postmaster	March Mrs Mary	Woodward Thomas, gamekpr.
Faircloth John M. C. M.D. (Wise & Co.), ho. Northampton	Marriott Mrs C. firewood dlr.
	Marriott Mr William	Farmers and Graziers.
	Martin H. manager of paper mills, Rush Mills	Battams Thomas Timms
	M'Neill Major Christian Wm. staff officer	Rice William, Brier Hill
	Mobbs Samuel, head gardener	Rogers William
		Sargent Joseph
		Simmons Felix
		Underwood Francis

Carriers.—Joseph Jeffery and Mrs Wooding, Northampton, daily.

FAR COTTON.

Post Office.—Wall Letter-Box, cleared for Northampton at 6.30 P.M. on week days.

Allbright John, beer retailer	Goocock Mrs Elizabeth, shopkeeper	Spencer Thomas, foreman
Bates Jno. vict. Rose and Crown	Hobbs Frederick, tailor	Storer John, carriers' clerk
Boothey Thomas, coal dealer	James Eli, butcher and beer retailer	Vickers Geo. Tomalin, school-master, ho. Northampton
Cox Chas. tailor & coal dealer	Leonard Thomas, bricklayer	Wareing John, builder and carpenter
Eldridge Charles, grocer, and Northampton	Rice Wm., farmer, Brier Hill , and ironfounder at Northampton	Webb John, beer retailer
Facer Joseph, shoemaker	Rickards Wm. jun. carpenter	Webb Thomas, shopkeeper
Ford Richard, shoemaker	Rogers John, baker and shopkeeper	Welch William, railway inspector
Gilling Chas. Faulkner, butcher, and Cotton End		White Wm. shoemr. and inspector of nuisances.
Goode Thomas, milkman
Grant Wm. baker & shopkeeper

(For Directory of Cotton End, see Northampton.)

HORTON PARISH.

This parish, which is on the borders of Buckinghamshire, is bounded on the north by Brafield, on the west by Hackleton and Piddington, on the south-west by Hartwell, and on the east by Ravenstone in Buckinghamshire. It is intersected by the Northampton and Bedford Railway, and contains 1630 acres, the rateable value of which is £2055. Its population in 1801 was 79; in 1831, 115; in 1841, 65; in 1851, 56; in 1861, 76; and in 1871, 101 souls. The gross estimated rental is £2387. The soil is chiefly a strong clay. The lord of the manor and owner of the whole parish is the Rev. Sir Henry John Gunning, Bart.

Manor.—The lordship of Horton was in the hands of several possessors at the time of the Conqueror's survey. Otbet held two hides of Walterius Flandrensis, which with a mill had been rated at 10s., but was then valued at 30s. Turbern held three virgates of the Bishop of Constance, which was then rated at 10s. Turstin held half a hide also of the Bishop of Constance, which was valued at 10s. The Countess Judith had here likewise half a hide, which was held of her by Turbern, and also valued at 10s. Besides these, one virgate of land in Hortone, and of the soke one hide, was annexed to the manor of Yardley, and in the possession of the Countess Judith. In the reign of Henry II., Alouf de Merks held two hides and one small virgate here of the fee of Wahul. Walter Fitz-Wynemar held six small virgates of the fee of Olney; Turgis de Quenton held six small virgates of the fee of the King of Scots; and there were also three small virgates of the same fee. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), Thomas de Morteyn and Laurence de Preston held half a knight's fee here of John de Wahul, who held of the king in capite. John de Sherington held one carucate of John de Wahul; and the heir of Albredus de Wylebury one carucate of Laurence de Preston, who held of John Wahul, who held of the king in capite. The lands which were held by Laurence de Preston appear to have been annexed from this time forward to the manor of Preston. At the same time Henry de Hakelington held one carucate, and the Abbot of St James', near Northampton, two virgates of John de Hastingses, who held of the king in capite. These latter were the lands which, at the time of the general survey, were in the hands of the Countess Judith, and were afterwards held of the fee of the King of Scots. In the thirty-second of Edward I. (1304), Thomas de Wahul, the superior lord of the fee, died, when it was found that John de Sherington and John de Wylebury had held each of him a fourth part of a knight's fee; and Ralph le Botlyer, Henry de la Welle, and the heirs of Richard Gobion two-fourth parts of a knight's fee, which were held by the said Thomas de Wahul of the king in capite. In the fifth of Edward II. (1312) a fine was levied by Ralph le Botlyer of tenements in Horton, and in the ninth of the same reign (1316) he was certified to be lord of the manor. From this time forward the lordship of Horton continued in the family of Le Botlyer till the latter part of the reign of Edward VI. In the first year of Henry IV. (1399), John de Wylebury died seized of a manor in Horton called Wylebury Place, which he held of the king in capite, and left it to Albredus de Wylebury, his son. In the thirty-first of Henry VI. (1453), John Mortimer of Grendon was lord of the manor of Horton, from whom it descended to Roger Salisbury, who, in the seventh of Henry VII. (1492), died seized of it with 10 messuages, 100 acres of arable land, 200 acres of meadow, 200 acres of pasture, and 200 acres of wood, which were held of the Earl of Kent by fealty only. His successor was William Salisbury, who dying without male issue in the fourteenth of the same reign (1499), it descended to Mary, his daughter, who was afterwards married to Sir William Parr, the uncle of Queen Catherine, the sixth and last wife of Henry VIII. Sir William Parr was created Lord Parr of Horton in the thirty-fifth of Henry VIII. (1544), and died in 1546. Upon his decease this manor descended to Sir Ralph Lane (eldest son of William Lane, Esq., of Orlingbury) in right of his wife, with whose descendants it continued until the latter end of the reign of James I., when it passed into the hands of Sir Henry Montagu, fourth son of Sir Edward Montagu, and grandson of Sir Edward Montagu, Lord Chief-Justice of England, and one of the executors of Henry VIII.'s will. This gentleman filled the offices of Recorder of London, King's Serjeant, Chief Justice of the King's Bench, and Lord High Treasurer of England. He was created Viscount Mandeville and Earl of Manchester, and made Lord Privy Seal, in which office he continued to his death in 1642. He was succeeded by his son, George Montagu, Esq., from whom, in course of descent, the manor of Horton and the whole parish came to the Earl of Halifax, from whom it passed to the crown by forfeiture; and about eighty-two years ago it was granted to the Gunning family, whose present representative, the Rev. Sir Henry John Gunning, succeeded in 1862. "Charles Montagu," writes Mr Bridges, "the first Earl of Halifax of this family, was educated as a king's scholar at Westminster School, from whence he was elected to Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he afterwards became a Fellow. He was early distinguished by the elegance of his genius and wit, his patronage of learning and learned men, and in his more advanced years by his integrity and abilities in the service of his country. He died in 1715, and was buried in Henry VII.'s Chapel in Westminster Abbey, where is a monument and inscription to his memory."

The Village of Horton is composed of three scattered farmhouses and some cottages, and is situated about six and a half miles south-east of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is an ancient building in the Early English style, consisting of a nave, chancel, south aisle and porch, and an embattled tower, in which are three bells. The living is a vicarage, to which Piddington is annexed, in the deanery of Preston. It is valued in the king's books at £17, 17s. 1d., and is now worth about £120 a year. It is in the patronage of Rev. Sir H. J. Gunning, Bart., and incumbency of the Rev. W. H. Gough, M.A. This church, with a wood called Purneho, was given to the convent of St James, near Northampton, by Richard Gubion, and confirmed to it by Hugh Wells, Bishop of Lincoln; and afterwards, in 1278, by Robert Kilwarby, Archbishop of Canterbury. Upon the dissolution of the monasteries, the rectory and advowson of the vicarage fell to the crown. It was afterwards granted to private individuals, and passed with the manor into the hands of the present patron. In this church are some curious and interesting monuments to William, Lord Parr, K.G., Lord Chamberlain to Katharine, last queen of Henry VIII., and some members of the Salisbury family.

Horton House, the seat of the Rev. Sir H. J. Gunning, Bart., is a spacious mansion of great beauty; the portico is supported by six lofty pillars, and displays some very elegant carving. The house stands a short distance from the village in the midst of a park, the sylvan beauties of which have been much admired. About a quarter of a mile south of the hall is a building, formerly used by the Earl of Halifax as a menagerie, about which there is some excellent carving; and in the park are two temples supported by ornamental pillars. The entrances and outbuildings are very beautiful.

Post-Office.—Wall Letter-Box. Letters arrive from Northampton at about 9 A.M., and are despatched at 4.25 P.M.

The principal inhabitants are—Rev. Sir Henry John Gunning Bart., George William Gunning, Esq., Horton House; and the farmers are Thomas Newman Cave, Hugh Higgins, and Thomas Lucas.

HOUGHTON GREAT PARISH.

Houghton Magna, or Great Houghton, is bounded on the east by Houghton Little, on the north by the river Nene, on the west by Hardingstone, and on the south by Preston and Brafield. The parish contains about 1723 acres, the rateable value of which is £4207; the gross estimated rental is £4836; and the population in 1801 was 214; in 1831, 395; in 1841, 332; in 1851, 317; in 1861, 369; and in 1871, 369 souls. The soil varies much in character; and its principal owners are William Oliver Harris, Esq.; John A. S. Bouverie, Esq.; Lord Overstone; Mr Thomas Marriott; and J. H. Astell, Esq. The manorial rights are divided.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, Robert held one hide and half a virgate and two carucates of land here of William Peverell, which was rated in King Edward's time, and then at 40s., and had been the freehold of Osmond. The Countess Judith possessed one hide here at the same time, which was held of her by one Hugh, and was then valued at 13s. 4d. In the reign of Henry II. Robert de Paveli held one hide, half a large virgate, and two small virgates, which were granted to him by William Peverell; David, King of Scotland, four small virgates; and Simon, one hide and one virgate. William de Albiniaco, died seized of a manor here, which he held of Henry de Hastings, by the service of half a knight's fee, in the forty-third of Henry III. (1259). His successor Simon made a grant of the manor for life to Anketil de Martallis, with the reversion of it after his decease to his sisters Isabell, Christian, and Joan. It appears by inquisition taken upon the death of Robert de Paveli in the sixteenth of Edward I. (1288), that he had made a grant of his lands and tenements in Houghton to Laurence de Paveli, his eldest son and successor. Laurence de Paveli and John de Gaddesden were certified to be lords of Houghton in the ninth of Edward II. (1316), which then consisted of two manors. John de Gaddesden held the manor in his possession in right of Christian, his wife, who was a descendant of Christian Stanes, one of the sisters and co-heirs of Simon D'Aubeney, and dying seized of it without issue in the thirteenth of Edward III. (1340), it passed to Thomas de Norton, Knight, Bryan de Saffray, and John de Bedikes, who were the next heirs to Christian, his wife. This manor being thus divided among three possessors, the several parts have from this time forward been considered as three distinct manors. The manor of Laurence de Paveli continued with his descendants for three generations, after which it passed to the Tresham family, with whom it remained till the first of Edward IV. (1461), when it was seized into the hands of the king, and by him granted to John Donne and his heirs, upon the attainder of Sir Thomas Tresham. "This Sir Thomas Tresham," says Bridges, "was the son of Sir William Tresham, of Sywell, by Isabel, the daughter of Sir William Vaux, of Harrowden. He adhered to the house of Lancaster, and was in the engagement at Tewkesbury, fighting for Prince Edward. Upon the defeat he took sanctuary in the church, and was one of those whom the Conqueror first granted his pardon, and then caused to be taken out and beheaded." John Robyns, gent., died seized of this manor in the thirty-second of Henry VIII. (1541), and left it to his son, a minor, who levied a fine of it in the fourteenth of Elizabeth (1572). That portion which fell into the hands of John de Bedikes, passed soon after into the family of Greene, with whom it continued till Anne, daughter of Sir Thomas Greene, carried it in marriage to Sir Nicholas Vaux, created Lord Vaux of Harrowden in the fifteenth of Henry VIII. (1524). Sir Thomas de Norton died seized of his third part of the manor of Houghton in the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), and left it to Ralph his son, who levied a fine of it in the thirty-third of the same reign. Bryan Saffrey died seized of his third part in the twenty-third of Edward III. (1350), from whom it descended to his daughter and brother; and in the thirty-third of this reign, a fine was levied of it by John de Edyngton. Thomas Clarell claimed one of these manors in the second of Henry V. (1415), and John Parke obtained a grant of another from the crown, to hold for life, in the twenty-third of Henry VI. (1445). In the twenty-eighth of Henry VIII. (1537), a fine was levied of the third between Francis Morgan and others, and John, Lord Mordaunt; and in the fifth of Mary (1558), a second fine between John, Lord Mordaunt, and Gregory Browne, Esq., and others. From these possessors they have since been called Parke's and Mordaunt's manors.

The Village of Houghton, which is small, stands on an eminence about two and three quarter miles S.E. by E. of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a handsome edifice in the Italian style, consisting of nave, chancel, and a beautiful spire, containing two bells. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Preston, value £620, and about forty acres of glebe, rated in the king's books at £22, in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford, and incumbency of the Hon. and Rev. William Henry Spencer, M.A. The Rectory House, a picturesque building in the Elizabethan style, stands near the church.

There is a National School in the village, built in 1844, which is supported by voluntary subscription, Government grant, and school pence, and is attended by about fifty scholars. Here are also two Sunday-schools, which are well attended.

Houghton House, the property of Lord Overstone, is occupied by Thomas Coales, Esq., and situated on rising ground near the church.

Charity.—In 1785, Mrs Margaret Goodfellow bequeathed the sum of £125 in the three and a half per cent. consols, the interest to be divided among the deserving poor of this parish annually.

Post-Office.—Wall Letter-Box. Letters arrive from Northampton at 7 A.M., and are despatched at 6.13 P.M. on week days only.

Adkins John Cave, organist	Collins William, shoemaker	Trasler Mr George
Adkins William, parish-clerk	and shopkeeper
Bartlett Alex. schoolmaster	Lawrence Chapman, shopkpr.	Farmers.
Blencowe George, Esq.	Paine Mrs William	Bird Samuel (grazier)
Cave Richard, vict. White Hart	Spencer Rev. William Henry,	Dunkley Charles
Chaplin George Kilsby, butcher	M.A. rector	Sargeant William
Coales Thomas, brewer at	Tarry Chas. brush mfr. & vict.	Townsend Chas. Great Houghton Lodge
Northampton, Houghton Hall	Cherry Tree

Carrier.—William Smith, to Northampton, Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday.

HOUGHTON LITTLE PARISH,

Or Houghton Parva, is bounded on the east by Brafield, on the north by the river Nene, and on the west and south by Houghton Great. It contains 1630 acres, the rateable value of which is £3611, and the gross estimated rental, £4381. The population of the parish in 1801 was 389; in 1831, 539; in 1841, 566; in 1851, 558; in 1861, 578; and in 1871, 575. The soil is of a mixed character, but very fertile. The principal proprietors are the Rev Christopher Smyth, the lord of the manor, and Mr Thomas Marriott. A remarkable mound, of a circular form, encompassed with a ditch or moat, and called Clifford Hill, is situate on the bank of the river Nene, in this parish. Morton supposes it to have been raised as a watch-hill for observing the motions of the enemy on the other side of the Nene, or, perhaps, a fortress to guard the ford by which they formerly crossed the river. There is still a ford below the mill, near that part of the river where it is divided into two streams, through which the whole of the hay from the Brafield meadows adjoining is still conveyed. "There is also a hill," says Bridges, "now named the 'Cliff,' not far from Brafield, which possibly lay in or near the road that led down to the ford, from whence we may reasonably suppose it to have taken the name of Clifford. But notwithstanding the present name, the Roman coins which have been found in paving of the hill, and in the neighbourhood, show this to be a Roman work." In 1717, a gold medal of Augustus was found while ploughing a field a short distance from this place. This hill commands very extensive prospects on all sides except towards the south.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Nigellus held two hides of land in the township of "Hobtone," and half a virgate of the soke of Hobtone of the Countess Judith; and Winemar held one virgate here of the soke of Gerdelai of the said Countess, which, together with a mill of the yearly rent of 13s., and ten acres of meadow, and a wood one furlong in length and half a furlong in breadth, were rated at 40s., and now valued at 50s. At the time of the Confessor it was held by Ulph. William Peverell held also one hide and half a virgate of the fee of the Bishop of Bayeux, which, with a mill of the yearly rent of 8d., twenty acres of meadow, and a wood of the same size as the former one, were rated before the Conquest at 20s., and then at 40s., and claimed by the Countess Judith. William de Houghton held three and a half hides here and at Brafield in the reign of Henry II. William Grimbaud sold the manor of Houghton to William de Luda, who sold it to John de Kirkeby, Bishop of Ely, from whom it descended to his brother, William de Kirkeby, who conveyed it to Henry Spigurnell for life for the sum or £20. In the twenty-ninth of Edward I. (1301), John la Zouche levied a fine of the manors of Brafield and Houghton; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1316), William la Zouche and Henry Spigurnell were certified to be lords of Houghton Parva and Brafield. In the twenty-fifth of Edward III. (1352), the said William la Zouche levied a fine of these manors, by which they were entailed upon William, his son, and by means of this settlement, William la Zouche, his grandson, was in possession of them in the nineteenth of Richard II. (1396). The manor continued with the family of Zouche till the beginning of the reign of Charles I., when it was sold with the advowson of the living by Lord Zouche to Daniel Ward, Esq. By inquisition taken upon this gentleman's death in the second of Charles I. (1627), he was found to have held the manor of the Earl of Northampton, as of his manor of "Barton Comites," being parcel of the Honor of Huntingdon, by an unknown service. This manor and estate passed by purchase from Mrs Dorothy Ward to Christopher Smyth, Esq., who was succeeded in 1822 by his son William Smyth, Esq., at whose death, in 1872, they devolved upon his brother, the Rev. Christopher Smyth, the present proprietor.

The Village of Little Houghton is pleasantly situated about three and a half miles east by south of Northampton. The old mansion belonging to the Ward family, which formerly stood in this village, was taken down about the end of the last century; and from the beautiful groined arches of the vaults, and other remains which are still to be found beneath the surface, it must have been very extensive. The old summer-house connected with the building, but now converted into a cottage, bears on its ancient stone front of elaborate architecture, a Latin inscription, and the initials, "M. T. W.," dated 1685. There is also an ancient dovecote dated 1673, very handsome, and in a good state of preservation.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is in the Decorated style, and consists of nave, with clerestory, north and south aisles, and north chapel, or chancel aisle, and south porch. At the west end is an antique embattled tower, ornamented with arcades (now filled up), supported by small pillars, and containing five bells. The old piscina is in a good state of preservation. This church was given to the Priory of St Andrew, at Northampton, by Robert Grimbaud and Maud his wife, and confirmed to it by Robert, Bishop of Lincoln. It has been lately restored at a cost of £2300. A memorial window (the east) to the late William Smyth, Esq., has been added, together with a handsome reredos, by Hughs and Ward; and in the chancel are two stained windows, and two in the belfry, by Clayton and Bell. The chancel seats are of oak, and it also contains a handsome marble monument in memory of the benevolent family of Ward, whose benefactions are recorded in the church. The benefice is a vicarage, annexed to that of Brafield-on-the-Green, in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £6, 9s. 2d., and now valued at £350 per annum. The Rev. Christopher Smyth, M.A., is both patron and incumbent.

The School was founded by the Ward family in 1673. Christopher Smyth, Esq., by his will, dated 4th October 1822, taking into consideration that when he purchased of the late Mrs D. Ward her estate at Little Houghton, he had bought the same charged with the annual payment of £8 a year; and further reciting that he was desirous of securing the same, and of adding to it the further yearly sum of £13, making together £21, which was vested in the three per cent. consols, for which, according to the Commissioners' Reports, twenty boys are to be taught free, viz., eight belonging to Little Houghton, eight to Brafield, and four to Great Houghton. This school was much improved by Mr Smyth during his lifetime. There is also a Sunday-school in the village, in which an Infant School is held.

The other charities belonging to this parish are as follow:—8a. 3r. of land, with six cottages, which now let for £36 a year, were originally set apart for the relief of the poor and other public uses in connection with the parish; but the rents have for some time past been applied to the repairs of the church. In 1665, Robert Ward, Esq., left £200 to be applied to the apprenticing of boys belonging to Little Houghton, and for this sum £210 were purchased in the 4 per cents., which yield annually £8, 8s. The Misses Ward, Mary, Martha, and Dorothy, purchased £474, 16s. 2d. in the 3 per cent. reduced annuities, which was increased to £500 by the above-named Christopher Smyth, Esq., in 1825, and the interest (£15) is distributed annually in money and clothing to the poor of the parish, in accordance with the will of the donors.

Post-Office.—Charles William Langdon, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 7.30 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 6 P.M.

Bamford Miss Eliza, teacher of Infant School

Barringer Mr John
Cardall Samuel, inland revenue officer

Cottrell Benjamin, blacksmith

Crow Misses Eliz. and Ann

Deacon Mr Daniel, Prospect Cot.

Deacon Mr Josiah

Giles James, market gardener

Gourlay David, pensioner

Harris John, carpenter, &c.

Higgins Mr William

High James Daveney, vict.,
Red Lion

Howes Mr John

Longland Eli, cattle dealer,
Primrose Cottage

Mackness William, butcher

Marriot Mr Thomas

Monk Samuel, corn miller,
Houghton Mill, and farmer

(M. & Hensman)

Penn Wm. Sharman, shoe agent

Rixon Benjamin, baker, &c.

Robinson Mrs Esther, agricultural machine proprietor

Sharp John, market gardener and florist, Primrose Cottage

Smith Caleb, shopkeeper, Cooperative Stores

Smith Charles, schoolmaster, and assistant-overseer for

Great and Little Houghton

Smith Mrs Eliz. shopkeeper and beer retailer

Smith John, shoemaker

Smyth Rev. Christopher,
M.A. vicar

Smyth Mrs Lucy, Houghton
House

Wake Miss Emily Georgiana

York, Misses Rebecca and

Elizabeth, Prospect Cottage

Farmers and Graziers.

Atwood Benjamin Stanton

Childs John

Mackness William

Marriott Thomas, jun.

Monk & Hensman (Hy.) Lodge

Smith William Marriott

Smith William Wareing, and maltster

Railway (London and North-Western).—Billing Road Station—John Briggs and James Booker, collectors.

MILTON, OR MIDDLETON MALZOR PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Collingtree, on the north by Wootton, on the west by Rothersthorpe, and on the south by Blisworth and Courteenhall parishes. A small brook which rises in Horton parish, called Wootton or Milton brook, forms the boundary to this parish on the north for nearly two miles. The parish contains 1367 acres (including 27a. of roads, and 89a. 1r. and 36p. of old enclosure), of the rateable value of £3598; and its population in 1801 was 327; in 1831, 541; in 1841, 607; in 1851, 627; in 1861, 668; and in 1871, 701 souls. The gross estimated rental is £4254. The soil is various: towards the south-east and south-west it is of a light red sandy nature; at the extremity of the south it is strong, deep, and rich, and the north side is loamy. The stone found in the lordship is principally used for repairing roads, but occasionally serves for building cottages and walls. The parish is in general well-timbered with elm and ash of a superior size and quality; and it also abounds with excellent springs and with beds of sand which is well adapted for building purposes. About half the parish is in grass, and the remainder is very good corn and turnip land. A small portion of its southern extremity is skirted by the main trunk of the London and North-Western Railway, and the Northampton and Peterborough branch of the same line also crosses the western side of the lordship. The principal proprietors are—Mrs Elizabeth Ryland Trestrail, Miss Caroline Dent, Mrs Harriet Dent Adkins (three sisters), and the executors of the late Wm. Harris, Esq., Wm. Blake, Esq. the Rev. Robert Montgomery, Mrs Jane Peppercorn, and Mrs and the Messrs Smith.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Geoffrey Alselin held of the king three and a half hides of land in Midelstone. There was a mill of the annual rent of 30d., and ten acres of meadow, with a wood three furlongs in length and two and a half in breadth. At the same time there was half a hide in Torp pertaining to this lordship; the whole had been valued at £4, but was then rated at £6. Robert de Causho and one Geoffrey were certified, in the time of Henry II., to hold five and a quarter hides here, two hides and one virgate of which were in Collingtree, which was then reputed a member of Middleton. From Geoffrey Alselin this manor, with other lordships in his possession, devolved to Ralph Hanselyn his successor, upon whose decease without male issue it fell to Thomas Bardolph, who married his daughter Rose, and became in right of her the superior lord of the fee. By inquisition taken in the reign of Henry III., John Malsoures was found to hold of William Bardolph, the grandson of the said Thomas Bardolph, one knight's fee in Middleton and Holentre, of the honor of Peverell. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), John Malsoures was lord of Middleton; and in the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), he accounted for one knight's fee in Middleton and Colyntre as held of the fee of Bardolph. From John de Malsoures the manor of Milton descended to Sir Thomas Malsoures, Knight, who in the thirty-fifth of this reign (1362) assigned it to Hugh Malsoures, his brother, for the term of his life, with remainder to Amicia, the daughter of the said Thomas, and her heirs. Accordingly in the thirty-ninth of the same reign (1366), it was found by inquisition that Hugh Malsoures was at that time in possession of this manor; and that the advowson of the church, with four acres of glebe land, were held by Thomas Wake. In the twelfth of Richard II. (1389), Sir John Bardolph died seized of three parts of one knight's fee in Middleton and Colyntre, then in the tenure of Robert le Veer, the husband of Amicia. In the seventh of Henry VI. (1429), Thomas Parwich was certified to hold one knight's fee here; and in the tenth of Henry VIII. (1519), Godtha Wigston died in possession of this manor, which she had held of the king, as of his manor of Shelford, in Nottinghamshire, by the service of one knight's fee. Her successor was John Digby, her grandson, who married the third daughter and co-heir of William, Lord Parr, of Horton, who, after his decease, was re-married to Henry Brooke, Esq. of Lubenham, and transferred the lordship to that family, with whom it remained for several generations. Sir William Samwell, Knight, in the eleventh of James I. (1614) conveyed this manor, with the advowson of the living, to Sir Sapcotes Harrington, who had married Jane, his daughter, and to his heirs for ever. This Sir Sapcotes conveyed the manor to Francis Hervey and his heirs in the eighteenth of the same reign (1621), in which family it continued till the twenty-fourth of Charles I. (1649), when Richard Hervey, the then lord, sold it to Richard Gleed and Edmund Gleed his son, and their heirs for ever, for the sum of £1500, with whose descendants it remained for several generations. William Blake, Esq., is the present lord of the manor, of one portion; and the Dent family—Mrs E. R. Trestrail, Miss Caroline Dent, and Mrs H. D. Adkins—enjoy the manorial rights of the other portion.

The Village of Milton is pleasantly situated in a valley about 3 miles S. by W. of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, stands at the eastern side of the village; it is in the Early English style, and consists of a nave with clerestory and side aisles, south porch, and chancel, and a square embattled tower, surmounted by a small octagonal spire. The tower contains five bells and a clock; and in the east ends of the north and south aisles are two circular or Catherine wheel windows well deserving of notice. The chancel window is of five lights; the clerestory is lighted on the south side by three plain and very low square-headed windows, and throughout the building the windows are of plain glass—indeed, the whole fabric is much in need of a thorough restoration. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £16, 15s. 10d., and now valued at about £400 a year. The executors of the late Rev. Thos. Atherton Kershaw, M.A., are the patrons, and the Rev. John Brown, M.A., incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1777 for 200 acres of land.

The Rectory House, at the south side of the village, is a commodious residence, standing on a gentle rise, with a good eastern prospect.

Here is a Baptist Chapel, built in 1827, and to which a large vestry or classroom, used as a Sunday-school, was added in 1844. The Rev. Edward Richard Broom is the minister. The Baptists of this neighbourhood are indebted to their late pastor, the Rev. Thomas Marriott, for his munificence in furtherance of their cause, as well as for his faithful and gratuitous services in ministering to their spiritual wants during the long period of forty-eight years. The Primitive Methodists have a small chapel of brick, built in 1865; and the Wesleyan Methodists conduct their services in a temporary room in the village. The Infant School is partly supported by subscription.

The Parish School, which is in the Elizabethan style, was erected by subscription in 1848 on a site given by the late William Montgomery, Esq. The building has two large gables in front, a porch in the centre, and an open roof covered with ornamental slates. It will accommodate about 100 pupils, and has an average attendance of 85.

Milton House, the property of the Rev. Robert Montgomery, and occupied by Mr Alfred Charles Phillips, is a handsome stone mansion, built in 1777, pleasantly situated on the southern side of the village, commanding some very fine prospects. Manor House, situate in the village, belongs to William Blake, Esq., and is at present occupied by Mr Richard Prothero Jones. In the village is also situated the Old Manor House, the property and residence of Miss Caroline Dent.

Charities.—The church estate, consisting of 18a. 3r. 37p. of land, lets for £73, 3s. a year. The poor's estate, 1a. 3r. 17p. and two tenements, now lets for £14, 13s. a year; and Dodwell's or Maile's charity is a rent-charge of £2, 12s. a year for bread for the poor; Gaffield's gifts consist of a rent-charge of £2, 12s. per annum, for teaching six poor children to read, and 20s. to the poor (this charity has been withheld for some time). Underwood's gift of £100, for providing bread for the poor, was laid out about the year 1799, in the purchase of £184, 15s. three per cent. consols, and the dividends are distributed amongst the poor of the parish. The village "feast" is held here on the Sunday following the 14th of September.

Post-Office.—Thomas Gibbs, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 7.20 A.M., and are despatched at 5.40 P.M.

Asplin James, joiner & builder Bennett John, master of National School
Blunt Stephen, vict. Compasses
Broom Rev. Edward Richard (Baptist)
Brown Rev. John, M.A. rector
Clarke Ahm. gardnr. asst.-overseer and collector of taxes
Dent Miss Caroline, Old Manor
House
Dunkley Wm. carpr. painter, grocer and beer retailer
East Wm. John, gardr. grocer, and vict. Greyhound
Elliott Thomas Jakeman, baker
Fisher Joseph, gardener, and carrier

Goodall Miss Agnes Edgar, mistress of Baptist school
Gibbs Thomas, gardener postoffice
Houghton James, shopkeeper
Houghton William, shopkeeper
Johnson Mr William
Jones, Richard Prothero, manager for G. E. Bevan & Co.
Manor House
Marks George, butcher
Marriott Rev. Thomas (Baptist)
Palmer Henry, coal dealer
Phillips Alfred Charles, brewer
at Northampton
Plowman Thomas, gardener, grocer and carrier
Robinson Charles, shopkeeper

Stanton Edmund, station-master at Blisworth
Tew Edwin, wheelwright
Turner James Philip, blacksmith

Farmers and Graziers.

Fisher Nicholas
Garnett John, Milton Lodge
Manning John, Milton Ham
Farm
Marks William Marriott Thomas Gaunt (and maltster)
Phipps Mrs Mary Ann (and baker)
Voss Thomas
Westley Robert Campion

Carriers to Northampton daily.—Joseph Fisher, James Moring, and Thomas Plowman.

PIDDINGTON PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the east by Horton, on the north by Preston, and on the south and west by Quinton, and Stoke Goldington in Bucks. It comprehends the hamlet of Hackleton, and with it contains 2250 acres, the rateable value of which is £3425, and its gross estimated rental £4105. Its population in 1801 was 660; in 1831, 983; in 1841, 981; in 1851, 1056; in 1861, 1102; and in 1871, 1047. The soil is principally a strong clay and marl, subsoil limestone rock; and the principal landowners are—Lord Overstone (lord of the manor), the Rev. Sir Henry John Gunning, Bart., Horton House; Mr George Cave, Worcester College, Oxford; George B. Lynes, Esq., and the Rev. J. H. Wake. This parish abounds with springs, one of which in the village called Stockwell spring is scarcely ever dry.

Manor.—Gilbert held one hide and three virgates of land in Pidenstone of the Countess Judith at the time of the Conqueror's survey. There was a wood four furlongs in length and two in breadth, and twenty acres of meadow, the whole of which had been rated at 20s. but was then valued at 40s. The manor of Pidenstone was found to contain one and a half hide and one virgate of the fee of King David in the reign of Henry II.; and in Henry III.'s time it was said to be in the hands of Gilbert de Preston, and valued at 20s. 8d., and by an inquisition taken upon the death of the said Gibert, in the second year of the reign of Edward I. (1274), it was found to belong to Laurence, the son of William de Preston, and rated at 30s. 8d. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), the Master and brethren of St John's Hospital, Northampton, held one knight's fee here of Ralph de Moryn, who held of John de Hastings, who held of the king in capite. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), the Master of St John's Hospital, and the Prior of St Andrew's at Northampton, were certified to be lords of Pidentone and Hacklyntone, and in their hands it continued till the general dissolution of the monasteries. Upon the suppression of the religious houses, the lands here belonging to the Priory of St Andrew fell to the crown, and were partly granted in the eighteenth of Elizabeth (1576), to John and William Mershe, and Sir Christopher Hatton. The possessions of the Hospital of St John in this parish consisted of the great tithes of Piddington and Hackleton, which were in the hands of Sir John Wake in 1641, and came afterwards into the possession of Lord Halifax.

The Village of Piddington consists of two farmhouses, two inns, and a number of cottages, situate about five and a quarter miles S.E. by S. of Northampton, and about a quarter of a mile off the London road.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, is an ancient stone structure, in the Early English style, consisting of a nave with clerestory, side aisles, chancel, south porch, and tower surmounted by a spire, which was repaired in 1847, the necessary sum having been raised by a rate in the parish. The tower contains five bells, some of which are new, and some recast, at a cost of about £160. By a fine levied in the sixth of John (1205), the advowson of this church was conveyed to the Prior of the Hospital of St John, at Northampton, by Philip and John, sons of William de Pedinton. In the twenty-sixth of Henry VIII. (1535), the vicarage was united to the church of Horton, and it is now a donative, having the same incumbent with Horton. The living is a vicarage, annexed to that of Horton, and styled Horton-cum-Piddington; it is worth about £120 per annum, is in the deanery of Preston, in the gift of the Rev. Sir H. J. Gunning, and incumbency of the Rev. W. H. Gough, M.A. The tithes were commuted in 1782.

The Vicarage House, situated at Hackleton, was built in 1870, at a cost of about £1200.

The National School is supported by a voluntary rate on the parishes of Piddington, Horton, and Preston Deanery, and is attended by an average of 50.

Post-Office.—Frederick Russell sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 8 A.M., and are despatched at 5 P.M.

Courtman Thomas, blacksmith	Keightley Mr John	for Hardingstone dist. and
Dee George Henry, joiner and	Keightley Joseph, baker	asst.-overseer, P. O.
shopkeeper	Kightley Mrs Rachel, shop-	Tebbutt Wm. wood dealer
Elliott Thomas, parish clerk	keeper and beer retailer	Westley Mrs Ann, shopkeeper
Gulliver John, timber merchant,	Nichols John, shoemaker	and beer retailer
Grange Cottage	Old George, shopkeeper	Whitbread John, mason
Gulliver Thomas, woodman,	Old John, vict. Old Crown and	Farmers.
Piddington Lodge	Thistle	Gillitt Ambrose
Houghton Thomas, gardener	Russell Fred. schoolmr. and	James Mrs Eliza, Grange
and vict. Spread Eagle	registrar of births & deaths	York Robert Carrier to Northampton.—Joseph Keightley, on Wednesday and Saturday.

HACKLETON HAMLET, in the parish of Piddington, is pleasantly situated on the London road, about five and a half miles S.E. by S. of Northampton, one and a half mile W. of Horton station, and is intersected by the Northampton and Bedford railway. This hamlet supports its own poor; its rateable value is £1654, and its area is 1045 acres. The population in 1801 was 278; in 1831, 425; in 1841, 436; in 1861, 535; and in 1871, 475, which is included in the return for the whole parish. In the village are a few good houses, and near it stands Hackleton House, a commodious residence, now a farmhouse.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Winemar held one hide of land in Hachelintone, of the Bishop of Constance, which had been valued at the time of Edward the Confessor, at 16d. but was then rated at 10s. Before the Conquest it was the property of Burred. In the reign of Henry II., Northgold was certified to hold one hide, Turgis de Quenton half a hide, the monks of Northampton one hide, William de Lisurs half a hide of the fee of Olneye, and Walter Fitz-Winemar eight small virgates of the same fee. In the twenty-fourth of Edward III. (1351), Hugh de Lutrinton was found by inquisition to have died seized of the manor of Hakelinton, and to have held it by knight's service of Laurence de Hastings, as of the manor of Yardley. In the reign of Henry VI. it was in the possession of Humphrey Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, who was slain in the battle of Northampton, fighting on the king's side, in the thirty-eighth of this reign (1460). Upon his decease this manor, with that of Piddington, reverted to John Stafford, his son, created Earl of Wiltshire in the ninth of Edward IV. (1470). At the death of this nobleman in the thirteenth year of the same reign (1474), he was succeeded by Edward his son and heir, a minor three years of age, who dying without issue in the fourteenth of Henry VII. (1499), the manor reverted to Edward Stafford, Duke of Buckingham. Upon his attainder and death, in the thirteenth of Henry VIII. (1522) this manor, which in the inquisition is called Haculton and Pedyngton, fell to the crown, and was granted to Roger Ratcliffe for life, who died seized of it in the twenty-ninth of the same reign (1538). In the thirtieth of Henry VIII. (1539), it was granted to Thomas, Lord Cromwell, together with the manor of Clapthorne, but being attainted in the second year after, he was beheaded on Tower-hill on the 24th July in the same year. The manor, however, appears to have descended to Gregory his son, who within five months after his father's execution was created a baron of the realm by the title of Lord Cromwell, being then employed in the king's service. From the grandson of this nobleman, the manor was sold in the thirty-fourth of Elizabeth (1592) to Anthony Osborne, Esq. of Piddington. The manors of Hackleton and Piddington continued in this family till the year 1691, when they were bought of Robert Osborne by Thomas Johnson, Esq. of London, who sold them in 1705 to Mr Thomas Mercer. They are now in the possession of Lord Overstone.

There is a Baptist Chapel, built in 1809, to which a schoolroom and vestry were added in 1862, at a cost of £240. The chapel will seat about 270 persons; adjoining is the pastor's house, a very ancient building, in which the Rev. Dr William Carey preached his first sermon. The Rev. Samuel Williams is the present minister. In 1866, an Infant School was erected for about sixty children at the expense of the Rev. Sir Henry John Gunning.

Antiquities.—About the year 1781 some very extensive remains of a Roman building were discovered in some stone pits near Piddington, close to Preston wood. A beautiful tessellated pavement, about fifty feet square, was cleared and found perfect; and fragments of large and curious tiles, pottery, &c., together with several coins, and a large portion of a skeleton, with a gold ring apparently attached to it, and a spear by its side.

Charities.—Judith Willoughby, by will dated 26th October, 1704 gave an annuity of £15, payable out of land in the parishes of Horton and Piddington; £14 to be expended in apprenticing poor boys, sons of inhabitants of the parish of Piddington; £10 to be given to each of them who should faithfully serve out his apprenticeship; and £1 to the trustees for executing the trust.

The Poor's Allotment consists of four acres, which was awarded at the inclosure of Salcey Forest for the use of the poor of Piddington and Hackleton, in lieu of their right to take sear and brokenwood from the Common. This land is let in allotments for £7, 15s. a year, which is divided amongst the poor.

The Poor's Allotment for the hamlet of Hackleton consists of 14a. 1r. and 24p., one rood of which, adjoining Salcey Forest, now in the occupation of Joseph Keightley, was given about the year 1820 in lieu of common rights, and at present lets for £17, 2s. 6d. per annum. It was awarded to nine trustees at the inclosure of Hackleton, in lieu of common rights, and to distribute the same at their discretion among the deserving poor of Hackleton.

Post-Office.—Wall Box. Letters arrive from Northampton at 8.30 A.M., and are despatched at 5.15 P.M.

Baseley Miss Annie, mistress of infant school	Howes George, shoemaker	Westley John, jun. tailor
Cave John, butcher	Keightley Mr John	Williams Rev. Saml. (Baptist)
Clarke William, vict. White Hart	Nichols Clarke, shoemaker	Wrench George, blacksmith
Co-operative stores, groceries, &c. Mrs Eliza Clarke, manager	Police Station, Thomas Ayres, constable	Wrench William, blacksmith
Gardener Wm. shoe manufr.	Smith Charles, baker, shop-keeper and beer retailer	Farmers.
Gough Rev. Walter Henzell, M.A. vicar	Smith Thos. joiner and wheelwright	Cave George (yeoman) Hackleton Hill
Hollowell John, shopkeeper	Tear Wm. butcher and vict. New Inn	Clarke William,
	Westley Mr John	Haselwood Thomas, Hackleton House
		Parr Thomas

Carrier.—Henry Elliott, to Northampton, on Wednesday and Saturday.

PRESTON DEANERY PARISH

Is bounded on the east and north by Hackleton, Great Houghton, and Hardingstone, on the west by Wootton and Quinton, and on the south by Piddington and Salcey Forest. The parish contains 1427 acres, of the rateable value of £2291, and the gross estimated rental is £2690. The population in 1801 was 70; in 1831, 64; in 1841, 84; in 1851, 65; in 1861, 80; and in 1871, 83. The soil is a rich loam, with a subsoil of clay; about half the parish is in grass, and there are fifteen acres of wood. The principal landowners are, Edward Singleton, Esq. (the lord of the manor), William Oliver Harris, Esq., and the Rev Sir Henry John Gunning. The parish, which has no village, is commonly called Preston Deanery, from its having given name to the deanery of Preston, and is from four to five miles south of Northampton.

Manor.—Winemar held one hide of land in Preston of the Bishop of Constance, at the time of the general survey; and three virgates and three acres of meadow of the Countess Judith, as pertaining to the soke of Yardley. In the reign of Henry I., Walter, the son of Winemar, held one hide and one virgate of the fee of King David, and half a hide of the fee of Olney. A third part of a hide was in the hands of King David. In the twelfth year of the reign of Henry III. (1228), Walter de Preston obtained the grant of a certain number of deer out of Salcey Forest to stock his park at Preston; and by inquisition taken at the close of the same reign; and in the second of Edward I. (1274), Gilbert de Preston died seized of the manor of Preston. To this manor were annexed certain lands in Hackleton, Horton, Piddington, Quinton, and Wootton, which were held of John de Hastings by the service of one knight's fee, and it continued in the possession of this family till the eighth of Henry VI. (1430), when Wymer Preston, Esq., gave it up to John Hertwell and his heirs for ever. By course of succession the manor of Preston descended to Jasper Hertwell, Esq., who died seized of it in the twenty-first of Elizabeth (1579), leaving Robert his son to succeed him. A fine had been levied in the fifth of Mary (1558), between Humphrey Bury and this Jasper Hertwell, and other deforciant. From the family of Hertwell it passed to Sir Clement Edwards, Knight, one of the clerks of the privy council to King James I., who died possessed of it in the twentieth of James (1623). Charles Edwards, Esq., the successor of Sir Clement, died in 1652, and was succeeded by Henry his eldest son, who lived till the year 1701. This manor came subsequently into the hands of Sir Richard Newman, Bart., in right of Grace, his mother, one of the daughters and co-heirs of Henry Edmonds, Esq. It afterwards came into the possession of Langham Christie, Esq., from whose family it passed by purchase, in 1871, to Edward Singleton, Esq., the present possessor. The family of Tate of De-la-Pre purchased an estate here of Sir Robert Hertwell in the time of James I.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter and St Paul, is an ancient structure, consisting of nave, chancel, and square tower. In the reigns of Queen Elizabeth and King James, this church lay in a very ruinous condition; Jasper Hertwell and his son having, as it is said, sold the lead and bells, pulled down the body, and converted it into a profane use. It was afterwards repaired by Charles Edmonds, Esq. This church was given to the convent of St Andrew, at Northampton, by Gilbert de Preston; and at the dissolution of the monasteries, the rectory and advowson came to the crown, who presented to the vicarage till the second of Elizabeth, when the advowson was granted to John Dodyngton and John Jackson, and is now an appendage to the manor. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £7, and now worth about £150 a year. The tithes were commuted in 1839 for £173. William Langham Christie, Esq., is patron, and the Rev. Charles Henry Faithfull, M.A., is incumbent. This church contained formerly a chantry chapel of St Saviour, and an altar to the honour of St Edmund.

Preston Deanery Hall, the seat of Edward Singleton, Esq., is beautifully situated about four and a quarter miles south of Northampton. This hall was partially burnt down in March 1872, but has since been rebuilt and considerably enlarged by the present owner, who also erected some excellent labourers' cottages in 1872.

Biography.—Sir Clement Edmonds, who purchased the manor of Preston of the family of Hertwell, was the son of Sir Thomas Edmonds, Comptroller of the Household to Queen Elizabeth. He was born in Shropshire, was elected a Fellow of All Souls' College in Oxford in 1590, represented the University in Parliament in the reign of James I., was Secretary for the French tongue to Queen Elizabeth, Remembrancer of the City of London, one of the Clerks of the Council, &c. He was a man of general learning, and wrote "Observations on Cæsar's Commentaries," which were published in 1600.

Post-Office Letter-Box.—Letters arrive from Northampton at about 7.30 A.M., and are despatched at 5.50 P.M., on week days only.

Faithfull Rev. Chas. Hy. M.A. vicar; house, Hardingstone
Singleton Edward, Esq., Preston
Deanery Hall

Farmers and Graziers.

Cosford William Marriott, The Rookery

Higgins William Hervey
Paine Jebez, Parkfield Lodge
Roddiss William
Smith William, Westhall

QUINTON PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Wootton, on the east by Preston Deanery and Piddington, on the west by Courteenhall, and on the south by Hartwell and Salcey Forest. It contains 1170 acres, the rateable value of which is £1556, and its gross estimated rental is £1832. The population in 1801 was 92; in 1831, 128; in 1841, 143; in 1851, 133; in 1861, 119; and in 1871, 120. The soil varies from a strong clay to a yellow marl, and in some parts it is of a light gravelly nature. Nearly the whole parish is the property of Rev. Sir Henry John Gunning, Bart. (lord of the manor). About one half of the parish is in pasture.

Manor.—The Countess Judith held half a hide of land in Quintone at the time of the general survey, and Winemar held of the Countess at the same time three virgates of arable land, five acres of meadow, and half a hide in Quintone, which belonged to the soke of Yardeley. David and Philip de Quinton held here, in the reign of Henry II., one hide and three quarters; and in the twenty-fourth year of the reign of Edward I. (1296), Philip de Quinton was certified to hold here one knight's fee of John de Hastings, who held of the crown in capite. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), Philip de Quinton, or de Hastange, was certified to be lord of the manor. In the forty-second of Edward III. (1369), a fine was levied of this manor by Edmund Fitz-John. Sir William de Quinton died jointly seized of it with Isabel his wife in the forty-eighth year of this reign (1375); and by inquisition taken at his death, he was found to have held it of Edmund Fitz-John and Richard de Leycestre. Laurence Dyve, who was the successor of Sir William de Quinton, levied a fine of a third part of the manor of Netherbury in Quinton in fee to himself, and became possessed of it in the fourth of Henry IV. (1465). The manor of Quinton continued in the possession of the family of Dyve until the middle of the reign of Charles I., when Sir Lewis Dyve sold it to William Lane, Esq., who devised it, in 1694, to Robert Willoughby, Esq., of Lenton, in the county of Nottingham, and others, to be sold for the payment of his debts, and for raising £300 each for his seven daughters. John Langham of London, merchant, was the purchaser, from whose descendants it passed by purchase into the hands of the Earl of Halifax. Rev. Sir H. J. Gunning, Bart., is the present lord.

The Village of Quinton is very small, consisting only of three farmhouses and twenty-nine cottages, about four and a half miles S.S.E. of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, is a small edifice in the Early English style, consisting of nave, with clerestory, chancel, south aisle, and porch, and an embattled tower containing two bells. The nave is separated from the aisle by three pointed arches, supported by circular columns. The chancel is very small, with a low ceiled roof, lighted by three small plain windows. The roof of the nave is also ceiled, but that of the aisle is open to the timber. There was formerly a north transept or chapel, of which there is no account. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £11, 3s. 9d., and now worth about £295 a year. The Lord Chancellor is the patron, and the Rev. George Edward Cole, M.A., rector. This church was given to the Priory of St Andrew at Northampton by Philip and David de Quinton. Upon the dissolution of the religious houses it fell into the hands of the crown, where it still remains. The tithes were commuted in 1814 for 136 acres.

The Rectory House is a commodious building near the church, a little to the south-west of the village, and there is also a day and Sunday school.

The principal inhabitants of the parish are—the Rev. George Edward Cole, M.A., rector; and Samuel Mackaness, John Thomas Smith, and Robert William Traser, farmers, and William Matthews, parish clerk.

ROTHERSTHORPE PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Milton and Wootton, on the north by Kislingbury, on the west by Bugbrooke, and on the south by Gayton. It contains 1213 acres, the rateable value of which is £2376; the gross estimated rental is £2687. Its population in 1801 was 197; in 1831, 270; in 1841, 274; in 1851, 244; in 1861, 289; and in 1871, 293. The soil is principally a black stiff clay, with a blue subsoil, but towards the east it is gravelly, and more than half the parish is arable. The principal landowners are—Thomas Caldecott, Esq., of Rugby (lord of the manor); Wm. D. Manning, Esq.; Geo. Pell, Esq.; and Mrs Elizabeth Howes. The Northampton branch of the canal, and the Peterborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway, pass through the parish. A piece of ground here, of about four acres, called Berry, and entrenched round, is supposed to have been an ancient fortification.

Manor.—Gunfrid de Cioches held of the king two hides of land in Torp in the time of William the Conqueror, which, with a mill of the yearly rent of 32d., and a wood of 5½ furlongs in length and 1½ in breadth, had been rated at £4, but was then valued at £5. Winemar held half a hide here of Gunfrid at the same time. In the reign of Henry II., Acetite de Chokes was certified to hold two and three-quarter hides in Torp, and the Hospital of St John, at Northampton, three-quarters of a hide. The manor was in the hands of William of Arras in the time of King John, and was granted by the crown in the tenth of this reign (1209) to Simon de Pateshull and his heirs, with the reservation of an annual rent-charge of £10 to the said William and his heirs, and the customary service of one knight's fee. In the fifteenth of this reign (1214) the king granted two years' rent, and afterwards £10 per annum, out of this lordship, to the monks of an abbey founded by Alice de Nerford, near Creyke, in Norfolk. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296) John de Pateshull was certified to hold one knight's fee in this lordship of Philip de Gayton, which he, Philip, held of William de Feines, and the said William of the king in capite. At the same time the Master of St John's Hospital, at Northampton, held eight virgates here of Laurence de Preston, which Laurence held then of John de Hastings, who held them of the king in capite. The heir of Simon de Pateshull accounted for one knight's fee here in the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), as held of the fee of Chokes. In the twenty-third of this reign (1350) John de Pateshull died seized of this lordship, which he was found to have held of the Abbot of Creek or Creyk by the service of an annual payment of £10 a year to the abbot, and of 12d. to one John Cook. William de Pateshull, his son and successor, dying without male issue in the thirty-third of the same reign (1360), his inheritance descended to his sisters. Partition being made of his estates, the manor of Rothersthorpe was assigned to Thomas, the son of Maud, his younger sister, who was married to Walter de Fauconberge. This Thomas, in the forty-fourth of this reign (1371), made over this, with several other manors for a certain time, to Hugh de Westwyk and John Capon, and had them all released to him in three years after. Having been afterwards charged with declining from his allegiance, his manor of Rothersthorpe was seized, with the rest of his estates, into the king's hands. In the fifth of the following reign (1382), they were restored to the family, and settled upon Sir John de Fauconberge and Joan his wife, and his heirs male. Upon the decease of this Sir John without issue, they descended to Joan his sister, the wife of William Nevill, afterwards Lord Fauconberge, on his inheritance of this estate. Leaving no male issue, this manor devolved upon Elizabeth, his second daughter, who was married to Sir Richard Strangeways, from whom it passed into the possession of the family of Englefield. John Englefield, Esq., died seized of it in the ninth year of the reign of Elizabeth (1567), when it was found he held it of the queen in capite by the service of the twentieth part of a knight's fee and certain yearly payments, and by the further payment of £10 per annum to the Master and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. The last-mentioned sum was the rent-charge formerly enjoyed by the Abbey of Creyk, and was given by Henry VII. to this college; with the rest of the possessions belonging to that abbey. The manor is now in the possession of Thomas Caldecott, Esq., of Rugby.

The Village of Rothersthorpe, which is small, occupies a pleasant situation about three and three-quarter miles S.W. of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter and St Paul, is an ancient structure in the Early English style, consisting of a nave, with clerestory, north and south aisles, south porch, chancel, and tower, with a saddle roof, containing four bells. It was re-pewed in 1841 at a cost of £237 13s. ; £50 of which was the accumulated rent of 4a. 2r. of "church land," and the remainder was raised by rate levied on the parishioners. The Living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £5, 9s. 4½d., and valued at present at about £173 a year. It was endowed with £400 royal bounty, and is in the patronage of Rev. J. Leigh Hatton, and incumbency of the Rev. John Peter Carey, M.A. William Dunkley Manning, Esq., purchased the Upton estate in 1861 (then in Court of Chancery), which involves on him the keeping of the chancel in repair. There is a small Baptist Chapel, which was built in 1844 at the west end of the village, supplied by the clergy of Kislingbury and Milton alternately.

The School, which is supported by voluntary subscription, and attended by an average of forty-five, was built in 1860 by the lord of the manor, and given to the parish for his natural life.

There is a "feast" held here on the first Sunday after Michaelmas, or on that day should it fall on Sunday.

Post-Office.—Wall Box. Letters arrive about 8 A.M., cleared for Northampton at 5.10 P.M. on week days only.

Billing John, jun., butcher	Fisher Wm. shoemkr. & shopkr.	Farmers.
Carey Rev. John Peter, M.A., vicar	Gillitt James, agricultural im- plement maker and machinist	Billing John (yeoman)
Collins Mrs Eliza Jane, school- mistress	James Jno. coal dlr. and carrier	Dunkley Samuel & Henry (and millers)
Davis Joseph, vict., Chequers	James Thomas, shopkeeper	Faulkner William
Elliott Mr Robert	Manning Miss Sophia, rag, &c., dealer	Manning Wm. Dunkley, yeoman
		Payne John Manning

Carrier.—John James, to Northampton, on Wednesday and Saturday.

WHISTON PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Castle Ashby and Grendon, on the north by Earls Barton, from which it is divided by the river Nene, on the west by Cogenhoe, and on the south by Brafield, Cogenhoe, and Denton. It contains 787 acres of the rateable value of £1455; the gross estimated rental is £1670. Its population in 1801 was 54; in 1831, 64; in 1841, 66; in 1851, 69; in 1861, 69; and in 1871, 63. The soil is of a red sandy nature, very fertile, and the grazing land is excellent.

Manor.—The abbot of Ramsey held of the king three hides of land in Wicentone and Dodintone at the time of the Domesday survey, which, with the mill of the yearly rent of 20s., twenty acres of meadow, and a wood, was rated in King Edward's time at 30s., and now valued at 80s. The Countess Judith possessed a soke of half an acre here at the same time; and here was also one virgate belonging to the soke of Yardley. In the reign of Henry II., William of Whiston held one and a half hide here of the fee of Ramsey, and one large virgate of the fee of King David of Scotland. This William conveyed the lordship of Whiston to Richard de Clare, who, dying in the eighth year of the reign of King John (1207), left issue Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford, his son and successor in the manor. From Gilbert it descended in course of succession to Gilbert his great-grandson, who in the seventh of Edward II. (1314) was slain at the battle of Bannockburn, near Stirling in Scotland. Gilbert dying without issue, the manor passed into the hands of his sister Margaret, the wife of Hugh de Audley, a descendant of the ancient family of that name in Staffordshire. This Hugh was created Earl of Gloucester in the tenth of Edward III. (1337), and died in the twenty-first of the same reign (1348), leaving issue Margaret, the wife of Ralph, Lord Stafford. This Ralph, Mr Bridges tells us, "was the son of Edmund, Lord Stafford, the descendant of Robert de Stafford who came into England with the Conqueror. He eminently distinguished himself in the wars with Scotland and France, and was honoured with many offices of trust and power. In the nineteenth of Edward III. (1346), the high dignity of Seneschal of Aquitaine was conferred upon him; and in the next year he was posted in the van of the army, under the Black Prince, at the glorious victory of Cressy. As a reward for his approved fidelity in all these employments, his Majesty, in the twenty-fifth year of his reign, advanced him to the earldom of Stafford, with an annual pension of a thousand marks in fee, till he should settle lands of equal value on him and his heirs." This nobleman was succeeded in his honours and inheritance by Hugh, his youngest son, who entered very early on a military life; and on his return from the holy land, whither he had taken a journey, died at Rhodes. The manor of Whiston next passed into the hands of Nicholas de Bradeshagh. In the sixteenth of Henry VI. (1438) Humphrey, Earl of Stafford, exchanged the lordships of Whiston and Woodford in this county with Sir John Clinton for the castle and manor of Maxstoke in Warwickshire. Henry Drury levied a fine of the manor of Whiston in fee to himself in the same year. In the thirty-fourth of Henry VI. (1456) a second fine was levied of it by William Nevill, Lord Fauconberge; and a third fine in the year following by George Nevill, Bishop of Exeter. In the eleventh of Henry VII. (1496) Robert Wingfield became possessed of this manor, from whom it passed into the hands of Sir Humphrey Catesby, Knight, son of Sir John Catesby, Knight, Judge of the Common Pleas, and a descendant of the ancient family of Catesby of Ashby St Legers. The manor remained with this family for many generations, and is now the property of Lord Boston through the marriage of Sir Edward Irby with the daughter of Lord Paget, who married one of the daughters of the last of the Catesbys.

The Village of Whiston is very small, and pleasantly situated about six and three-quarter miles E. by S. of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands near the village on an eminence called Combe Hill, and consists of a nave, side aisles, and embattled tower, and chancel. This church, which was built in 1534 by Anthony Catesby, Esq., the lord of the manor, Isabel his wife, and John their son, is a good example of the Perpendicular style, and is remarkable for the beauty and gracefulness of its proportions. The tower, which is a lofty one, surmounted by pinnacles, and containing a peal of six bells, appears to be of a later date. A new pulpit and organ screen were added, and the western arch opened to the church internally, in 1855 by the present rector. The living is a rectory, with a detached part of that of Denton annexed, in the deanery of Preston, valued in the king's books at £14, 11s. 0½d., and now worth about £296 a year. The tithes were commuted in 1839 for £250, 10s. Lord Boston is patron, and the Hon. and Rev. Llewellyn C. R. Irby, M.A., is the rector. There are several monuments in the church. Two of them in the chancel are by Nollekens; the one on the north side is to the Catesby family.

The Rectory House, which was built in 1852 by the present rector, is a substantial building of stone, very pleasantly situated a short distance from the church, and commanding a fine prospect of the surrounding districts.

Place House, which is now an out-building attached to a farmhouse, was formerly a considerable mansion surrounded by entrenchments, which may still be traced. Tradition says that it was a seat of King John; part of the stone was carried away to build the manor house at Ecton.

Post-Office.—Letters arrive from Northampton at 7.30 A.M., and are despatched at 5 P.M.

The principal residents are—The Hon. and Rev. Llewellyn Chas. Robt. Irby, M.A., Rectory, David Hunt, corn miller; and the farmers are George Mills, Thomas Pell, and Joseph Sargeant, Whiston Lodge.

WOOTTON PARISH.

Wootton is bounded on the north and east by Preston Deanery and Hardingstone, on the west by Rothersthorpe, and on the south by Milton, Collingtree, Courteenhall, and Quinton parishes, from all of which lordships it is divided by a small brook. It contains 1900 acres, of the rateable value of £4498, and the gross estimated rental is £5311, with a population in 1801 of 427; in 1831, 643; in 1841, of 793; in 1851, 877; in 1861, 792; and in 1871, 791. The soil is various; towards the north it is principally a red soil; southward it is chiefly grazing and meadow land, and a black heavy soil towards the east. There is some limestone in the parish, but not adapted to building purposes. The principal landowners are—William Oliver Harris, Esq. (lord of the manor), Sir Hereward Wake, Bart., Mr John Blunt, Richard Evans, Esq., and Rev. John Prideaux Lightfoot, D.D. "In 1645," says Bridges, "the Parliamentary army, in their march from Stony Stratford under the command of Fairfax, encamped on the 11th of June in Wootton Field, from whence they proceeded the next day to Kislingbury, and thence to Guilsborough and Naseby, where the battle was fought on the fourteenth of the same month." Some years since, a jar, containing from five to six hundred coins of the empire, was found in this parish.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, Winemar held two and a half hides of land in Wetone, Witone, or Wotton, as it is variously called, of Walterius Flandrensis, which were valued then, as before the Conquest, at £4. He held also one hide here of the Countess Judith, of the soke of Yardley. From henceforward there appear to have been for some time two manors in this lordship in the hands of different possessors. In the time of Henry II., the one was certified to contain two and a half hides, corresponding with that portion which, in the Conqueror's reign, was held of Walterius Flandrensis, and afterwards of the fee of Wahul. The other manor consisted of one hide, and one sixth of a hide, held by Michael de Wotton, and was a parcel of the Honor of Huntingdon. In the reign of Henry III., this last was in the possession of Gilbert de Preston, who held the manors of Preston and Wootton for two knights' fees of the heir of Henry Hastings; and the former was at this time in the hands of Milo de Beauchamp and Luke de Colum, who were certified to hold one fee in Wootton of the fee of Saer de Wahul. Gilbert de Preston made a feoffment of his manor to Robert Burnell, who granted it to Philip Burnell, who died seized of it in the tenth of Edward I. (1282), with one virgate of land in Wotton, which he held of Alice, the widow of Gilbert de Preston, upon whom it had been settled in dower. Upon the death of John de Wahul in the following year, the manor he was possessed of here, with the advowson of the church, was certified to be held of him, by homage, relief, wardship, and scutage, for one knight's fee. His successor was Thomas de Wahul, of whom John de Hastings and William de Wotton were found to hold half a knight's fee, and the fourth part of one knight's fee, in the thirty-second year of the same reign (1304). In the sixth of Edward II. (1313), John de Hastings died seized of a knight's fee here, then in the hands of Laurence de Preston, which descended to him from Henry his ancestor, and in which he was succeeded by John his son. In the ninth of this reign (1316), Laurence de Preston and Margery Menteth were certified to be lords of Wotton. From John de Hastings this manor descended to Laurence his heir, in the eighteenth of this reign (1325). In the third of Edward III. (1330), George Longueville, of Little Billing, was in possession of a third part of the lordship, and in a short time after of the whole. In the thirty-fifth of the same reign (1362), John Longueville, the successor of George, died seized of this lordship, jointly with Isabella his wife. George Longueville, grandson of the above-mentioned John, gave it up to John Haldenby and others, who, by deed bearing date the 20th of June (1455), demised it to the said George for his life, with remainder to Margaret, the wife of Sir Richard Roos, for the term of her life, with remainder to the right heirs of the said George. Upon his decease, in the thirty-sixth of Henry VI. (1458), the said Margaret succeeded to the manor, which was at this time certified to be held of Edward, Lord Grey of Ruthven. A fine was levied of this manor between Henry Bever and Sir John Longueville, in the thirty-third of Henry VIII. (1542); and a second fine the same year, of the manor and advowson of the church, between John Alleyn, demandant, and Sir Thomas Wyatt and others, deforciant. In the thirty-seventh of this reign (1546), Sir John Alleyn died seized of this estate; and leaving no lawful issue, his sister, Elizabeth Ascough, widow, and John Hasillwood, the son of another sister, were found to be his heirs. In the thirteenth of Elizabeth (1568), a fine was levied of the manor by Sir Robert Lane and Edmund Huddleston; and another fine between William Bradborne and Sir Robert Lane, in the twenty-first of the same reign (1576). Nothing further is known of this manor till the twelfth of Charles I. (1637), when John Rowland died seized of it, and left it to Rowland, his son. The manor was afterwards sunk and divided amongst several freeholders; but William Oliver Harris, Esq., now possesses the manorial rights.

The Village of Wootton is situate about two and three-quarter miles S. by E. of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St George the Martyr, is an ancient edifice, consisting of nave with clerestory, north and south aisles, porch, chancel, and embattled tower, containing five bells. The tenor, which is a fine toned bell, was recast in 1836, at which time the fifth bell was also cast, and the other three bells are of an ancient date. There are chantry chapels at the west end of each aisle, and sedilia, and a piscina in the chancel. The church underwent several repairs in 1844, at the sole expense of the then rector. The east window is filled with stained glass, bearing the figures of our Saviour in the centre, with those of the Blessed Virgin and St John on either side. On removing the plaster, during the repairs in 1844, two very ancient paintings were discovered in the chancel. The church was thoroughly restored in 1865, at a cost of upwards of £1300, of which sum £500 was borrowed from the Public Loan Commissioners. At the time of the restoration the north porch was taken down. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £21, 15s., and now valued at upwards of £700, in the patronage of the Rector and Fellows of Exeter College, Oxford, and incumbency of the Rev. William W. Woollcombe, M.A. The tithes were commuted for 251 acres at the inclosure in 1788.

The Rectory House, part of which bears date 1630, and which was partly rebuilt and repaired in 1835 by the then rector, stands a little south of the church.

The Wesleyan Reform Chapel, which will seat 200 hearers, was built in 1861 by Mr William Marriott, who receives an annual rentage from that body.

A New School was built in 1873 by subscription, aided by a Government grant, and a contribution from the Northamptonshire Special School Fund.

Wootton Hall, the property of William Oliver Harris, Esq., and the seat of Thomas Phillips, Esq., is a large handsome square mansion, situate about two miles S.W. of Northampton.

Hardingstone Union Workhouse stands in this parish, about a quarter of a mile west of the church, and is a large commodious building, erected in 1839, at a cost of £4000, though the contract for the work was only £2850. The average number of paupers in the house is 50, and the average weekly expense of each for food, clothing, &c., is 3s. 6d. The union comprehends the following nineteen parishes and one township, embracing an area of fifty-one square miles:—Hardingstone, Brafield, Castle Ashby, Cogenhoe, Collingtree, Courteenhall, Denton, Horton, Great Houghton, Little Houghton, Milton, Piddington, Hackleton (hamlet), Preston Deanery, Quinton, Roade, Rothersthorpe, Whiston, Wootton, and Yardley Hastings. The affairs of the union are conducted by a board of twenty-two guardians, of which the Rev. Christopher Smyth is chairman, and Mr William Shaw vice-chairman. The medical officers are—for the Milton district, Henry Terry, jun.; Hardingstone district, William Percival; Brafield district, Edward Dudley. Clerk to the Board of Guardians, John Jeffery; Chaplain, the Rev. Henry Cox, M.A. Master and Matron, J. D. Old and Miss Mary Ann Ball. Schoolmistress, Mrs Mary Ann Freeman.

Biography.—The Rev. Jeremiah Stephens, rector of this parish about the year 1630, suffered much annoyance and persecution from the Parliamentary authorities under Cromwell. "In 1644," writes Bridges, "he was formally sequestered from his living. The witnesses produced against him were persons of the most infamous character, and his judges of as remarkable ignorance. Mr Stephens, in his defence before the commissioners, citing a passage from Bracton, was reprehended for the affront, in using a language which, they said, they did not understand. . . . Besides the loss of his benefice, he was plundered and imprisoned; but, outliving his sufferings, he was restored on the return of the king to his former preferments, and presented to a prebendary in the church of Salisbury. He was author of several books; was well acquainted with ecclesiastical antiquity, and particularly servicable to Sir Henry Spelman in compiling and publishing the first tome of the English Councils."

Charities.—John Langford, by will dated 28th April 1658, bequeathed the sum of 30s. yearly to the poor of Wootton. The Rev. Christopher Crouch, by will dated 1st August 1735, devised about two acres, which now (1873) let for £5. 5s., in the parish of Hardingstone, to be distributed yearly, on the 15th of February, between ten poor people of Wootton and ten of Holcott, at the discretion of the minister of each parish.

The Poor's Allotment consists of about three acres, allotted at the inclosure for the use of the poor not receiving parish relief, which lets for £6 per annum.

Post-Office.—Frederick Douglas, sub-postmaster and parish clerk. Letters arrive from Northampton at 6.45 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 6 P.M.

Bennett John Alfred, relieving officer and registrar of births and deaths for Milton district	manufacturer, Ram's Hill and Northampton	Whitbread Thomas, bricklayer
Branson Stephen, bricklayer and beerhouse	Jarrett Jno. joiner & wheelwt.	Woollcombe Rev. Wm. Wyatt, M.A. rector
Brown Rev. Abner Edmund, M.A. curate	Jeffs Thomas, beerhouse
Chapman Wm. joiner and wheelwright	Jones George, tailor	Farmers and Graziers.
Clark Mrs Maria, shopkeeper	Mallard Jph., joinr. & wheelwt.	Frost Ed. (and butcher, grocer, and assistant overseer)
Clarke John, cowkeeper	Old John Dorset, master of workhouse	Harris George Manly, Wootton Grange
Clarke Joseph, vict. Old Crown	Old Miss Rachel	Harris Thomas William Daniel
Dickins Wm. Pope, blacksmith	Phillips Thomas, brewer at Northampton, Wootton Hall	Higgins Richard
Douglas Henry, gardener	Robinson John, rope manufr. farmer and vict., Red Lion	Marriott Wm. (and miller)
Green Stephen, brick and tile	Smith Mrs Elizabeth	Williams Thos. (and maltster, brick and tile manufacturer, and lime merchant)
	Smith Mrs Jane, baker

Carriers.—John Beach and Charles Septimus-Fairbrother, to Northampton, on Monday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday.

(For remainder of directory see Courteenhall.)

YARDLEY HASTINGS PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Easton Maudit, on the north by Grendon, on the west by Castle Ashby and Denton, and on the south by Olney in Buckinghamshire. It contains 3510 acres, and its population in 1801 was 714; in 1831, 1051; in 1841, 1134; in 1851, 1210; in 1861, 1162; and in 1871, 1188 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3774, and the gross estimated rental £4464. The soil varies from a strong clay to a red and black marl. The Marquis of Northampton is lord of the manor, and proprietor of the greater part of the parish; the rector is lord of the copyhold property in the lordship.

Manor.—This lordship or parish was called Gerdelai in the Conqueror's time; in later records Jerdele; and it took the additional name of Hastings from the family of that name, Earls of Pembroke, who were afterwards possessed of it. The Countess Judith held of the king three and a half hides of land in Yardley at the time of the Domesday survey. There was a wood thirteen furlongs in length and eight in breadth; the whole had been valued in King Edward's time at £12, but was then rated at £15, and had been the freehold of Waltheof. This Earl Waltheof, as has been seen at page 100, was son of the valiant Siward the Dane, Earl of Northumberland and Huntingdon before the Conquest, who led the armies of Edward the Confessor against Macbeth, the usurper of the Scottish throne. The more firmly to attach him to his interest, he being a man of pre-eminent note, the Conqueror gave him in marriage Judith his niece, daughter of Maud, Countess of Albemarle, his uterine sister, at the same time restoring to him the earldoms of Northampton and Huntingdon, which belonged to his father. After having been drawn into the plot, in the tenth year of the Conqueror's reign (1076), for the expulsion of the king, he was executed at Winchester in the same year, and his decapitated trunk treated with every possible indignity. The body having lain for some time in the cross-way where it was buried, it was afterwards removed to Croyland Abbey in Lincolnshire, where it was honourably sepulchred. The execution of this nobleman is observed to be the first instance of beheading in this kingdom. His widow, the Countess Judith, not being a participant in her husband's treason, was allowed to retain his lands and manors, with the earldoms of Northampton and Huntingdon. Historians, however, have accused her of treachery towards her lord; for though his innocence was attested by Archbishop Lanfranc, yet at her instigation, who is said to have effected a second marriage, he was condemned. Ingulphus, a monk of Croyland and her contemporary, has not scrupled to describe her by the execrable appellation: impiissima Jezabel. Incensed at Judith's refusal to marry Simon de St Liz, a noble Norman, the king a few years afterwards seized on the earldoms, and, with her other possessions, gave them to St Liz in marriage with Maude her eldest daughter. He was succeeded by Simon de St Liz, his eldest son; but Maude afterwards marrying David, the brother and successor of Alexander, King of Scotland, the Earldom of Huntingdon, by the favour of Henry I., was granted to him, and was possessed for some time by the royal line of Scotland. The manor of Yardley was also respectively enjoyed by those who succeeded to the earldom. David was succeeded by Henry his son, who died seized of it in the eighteenth of Stephen (1153). Henry left issue three sons, Malcolm and William, both successively Kings of Scotland and Earls of Huntingdon, and David, who afterwards enjoyed the earldom by gift from William his brother. He died in the third of Henry III. (1219) at his manor of Yardley, and was buried at Sawtree Abbey. His successor was John, his youngest son, who on the decease of his uncle Ranulph, Earl of Chester, in the sixteenth of Henry III. (1232), succeeded to the earldom of Chester, and died in the twenty-ninth of this reign, poisoned by Helen his wife, daughter to Leoline Prince of Wales. Not leaving issue, his sisters became his heirs, and in the division of his property this manor was assigned to Ada, the wife of Henry de Hastings, the descendant of William de Hastings, steward to Henry I. He died in the thirty-fourth of this reign (1250), and was succeeded by his son Henry, who in the forty-seventh of Henry III. (1263), joined the barons against the king, and, committing great outrages upon the church and clergy, was, together with the sons of Montford, Earl of Leicester, excommunicated by the Archbishop of Canterbury. He held out the town of Northampton, and upon the king's defeat at Lewes was made governor of Scarborough Castle, and shortly after of the Castle of Winchester. In the forty-ninth of this reign (1265) he was governor of Kenilworth Castle, and maintained it during a siege of six months against a victorious army, with great loss to the besiegers. He surrendered it at length, and being excluded the benefit of the "articles of mercy," known as the Dictum de Kenilworth, he was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment, or submission to the royal mercy. By the intercession of Prince Edward he was shortly afterwards restored to favour, and died about the fifty-third of the same reign (1269). The manor of Yardley continued in the possession of the family of Hastings until the forty-third of Edward III. (1370), when John de Hastings, Earl of Pembroke, grandson to Lawrence, created Earl of Pembroke in the thirteenth of this reign (1340), made a deed of feoffment of it, with all his other lordships in this county and elsewhere, to Walter Amyas and others for certain uses therein mentioned. At the inquisition taken at the death of the first Earl of Pembroke in 1349, it was found that amongst the other profits of the manor he had three common ovens which brought in 54s. yearly, and the annual toll of the market of Yerdele, amounting to 3s. 4d. This market was held on Wednesday in every week, and with a fair, beginning on the Eve of the Holy Trinity and continuing the following days, was obtained by John de Hastings in the eighth of Edward II. (1315). John Earl of Pembroke was succeeded in 1376, the forty-ninth of this reign, by John his son, a minor only two years old. In the eleventh of Richard II., 1388, Walter Amyas and others gave up to him and his heirs all their right in the manor of Yardley, with the other lordships conveyed to them by his father; and in the thirteenth year of the same reign he was accidentally killed whilst tilting with Sir John St John. Reginald, Lord Grey of Ruthyn, was found to be his next heir; and he dying in the nineteenth of Henry VI. (1441), the manor, with the advowson of the church, descended to his grandson. His successor was George, Earl of Kent, his son, from whom it devolved to Richard,

Earl of Kent, his son. In the twelfth year of the reign of Henry VIII. (1521), a fine was levied between Sir Walter Rodney, Knight, and other demandants, and Richard, Earl of Kent, defendant of the manor, park, and chase of Yardley, and the advowson of the church. Upon his death in 1524, they passed into the hands of Sir William Compton, Knight, who died five years after seized of them, together with 40 messuages, 1000 acres of arable land, 1000 acres of meadow, 1000 acres of pasture, and 2000 acres of wood. From Peter, the son of Sir William Compton, they descended to James, Earl of Northampton, and by lineal descent to the Marquis of Northampton, the present possessor.

The Village of Yardley Hastings, which is rather large and straggling, stands on the road from Northampton to Bedford, about eight miles E.S.E. of the former town, and eight S.S.W. of Wellingborough.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, is an ancient edifice consisting of a nave and side aisles, chancel and south porch, with an embattled tower, in which are six bells. The living is a rectory, to which a portion of the rectory of Denton is annexed, in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £13, 16s. 0½d., and now worth about £600 a year, including the Denton portion. The Marquis of Northampton is patron, and the Rev. D. B. Langley, LL.D. is the rector. The tithes were commuted for land in 1776.

The Rectory House, a substantial brick building, stands at the end of the village.

The Independent Chapel, a large stone building, capable of seating 600 persons, was erected in 1813, the former chapel having been burnt down in that year in an accidental conflagration that consumed a large portion of the village; and in 1869 it was newly seated and otherwise improved at a cost of £500. On the north side of the chapel are spacious School-rooms for the accommodation of 250 children, and where nearly that number are gratuitously instructed on Sundays, and about 90 daily in the Infant School. The Rev. W. E. Coupland is the present minister, who occupies a house on the south side of the chapel. A small Methodist Chapel was built here in 1848, but it is now converted into cottages.

The village also contains a National School, erected in 1838, and supported mainly by the Marquis of Northampton, aided by a Government grant, and a voluntary rate; and here is another Infant School, supported by subscription. There is much lime burned in this parish, and there is also a brick and tile manufactory. In 1655, from the 5th of June to the 3d of January following, 60 persons died of the plague in this town. A pleasure fair is held here on Whit-Tuesday. The ruins of the old Manor House stand northward of the church, and appear from the remains of arches with door-cases and window-frames of stone, to be of great antiquity, and belong to the Decorated period. Only a small portion of the old building, which is now used as a barn, remains, and in this portion the court-leet of the lord of the manor, according to old custom, is commenced; and, after the ceremony of opening, an adjournment is made to the inn.

Yardley Chase is one and three-quarter mile S.W. of Yardley Hastings, and "consists of one and twenty coppices, abounding with fine timber, and well-stocked with deer." In this noble chase is Yardley Oak, or, as it is more commonly called, "Cowper's Oak," rendered celebrated by the poet Cowper, it being a favourite meet for the Duke of Grafton's and the Oakey Hunts. There are two other immense trees, called Gog and Magog, one of which contains 1800 solid feet of timber, and the other 1400 feet.

Post-Office.—James Denton, junr., sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 9 A.M., and are despatched at 4.20 P.M. The nearest money-order office is Olney.

Arnold Christopher Edward, master of National School	Davison Mrs Char. & Miss Mary	Dudley Edward, surgeon
Berrill Mrs Sarah, shopkeeper	Denton James, jun., shopkpr.	Eady Robert, baker
Blower Misses Eliz. and Sarah	and post-office	Errington John, grocer and
Churton Rev. Henry, curate	Denton Mr Joseph	draper, ho. Northampton
Coupland Rev. William Edwd.	Downing Charles, shopkeeper	Hornsby Mrs Elizabeth
(Independent)	and coal dealer	Hornsby Henry Rogers, ma-
	Downing John, wheelwright	chine proprietor

Johnson Henry, shopkeeper and organist	Ridley Miss Rebecca	Wooding William, baker
Kingsham Miss Marion, teach. Girls' School	Roberts James, cartowner and coal-dealer	Farmers and Graziers.
Langley, Rev. Daniel Baxter, LL.D., rector	Roberts Mrs Maria, teacher of Infant School	Berrill John
Lawrence Henry, baker	Robinson, Miss Miriam, School	Berrill John (yeoman)
Longland Benjamin, vict. Rose & Crown , and registrar of births, deaths, and marriages for the Brafield district	Rogers John, butcher and beer retailer	Denton James, Yardley Lodge
Longland Mrs Francis	Rogers Mr Thomas	Hornsby Richard (and butcher)
Longland Mr John	Smith Samuel, shoemaker	King George
Longland John, vict. Red Lion	Smith William, shoe agent	Lawrence Spencer, The Lodge
Longland Simeon, butcher	Taylor Mr Joseph	Longland Thomas, The Farm
Longland Mrs Susannah, malt- ster and vict. Northampton Arms	Underwood David, woodman	Robinson George William, Deer Park Farm
Longland Thomas, blacksmith	Underwood Ebenezer, woodman	Robinson James White, Water- fall Farm
Morris Thomas, blacksmith	Whitney Robert, parish clerk and sexton	Robinson Jonathan, Rectory Farm
Ratley Isaac, post-messenger to Northampton	Wooding Charles, jobbing car- penter	Robinson Thomas, Biggin Lodge
Ridley Mrs Mary	Wooding Cornelius, shoe agent	Robinson William, Manor House
	Wooding Enos, job carpenter	Rogers George, Round Hay Lodge
	Wooding James, shopkr. and agent for United Kingdom Insurance Office

Carriers to Northampton,—Jabez Johnson, on Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday; and Thomas Walden, on Wednesday and Saturday.

NOBOTTLE-GROVE HUNDRED.

NOBOTTLE, or Newbottle-grove hundred, is bounded on the north by Guilsborough hundred, on the east by that of Spelhoe, on the south by the hundreds of Towcester and Wymersley, and on the west by Fawsley hundred. Its form is partly oval: its greatest length, from north to south, is about ten miles; and its greatest breadth, from east to west, about six miles. In Domesday Book it is called Nivebottle-grave, Neubottle-grave, Nivebot, and Nuvebotle-grave, from the grove or wood, now named Newbottle, in the parish of Brington. Bridges tells us that this hundred was always possessed by the lords of the manor of Upton. Nicholas de Cancellis, or De Chaunceaux, on being summoned by an action in the King's Bench, to show cause why he claimed the hundred of Newbottle-grove, then in his possession, produced letters-patent of Edward I., dated the twenty-ninth year of that reign, to support his right, and by which it appeared that the said hundred, through the forfeiture of Hugh de Chaunceux, had been seized into the hands of the Crown, and granted to his father, Thomas de Chaunceux, son of the said Hugh, to be held of the king and his heirs by serjeanty of finding a servant to execute the sheriff's writs within the hundred in behalf of the king, and rendering to the sheriff 13s. 4d. yearly for the profits. The hundred descended uninterruptedly with the manor of Upton, through the Knightly and Samwell families, to its present proprietors.

The hundred comprises 33,505 statute acres, divided into the following parishes, &c., showing their area according to the rate-books, with the number of houses, population, rateable value, and gross estimated rental of each parish in 1871:—

It will be seen from the tables appended to the different hundreds that the area assigned to each (as collected from the rate-books) does not agree with that furnished by the parliamentary returns. The latter, being the statutable measurement, includes all waste lands, woods, water, roads, &c., whilst the former comprises the rateable acreage only. Any attempt, therefore, on our part, to reconcile the discrepancy would be futile.

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross estimated Value.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Althorpe	795	16	20	25	45	£ 1,257	£ 1,476
Brampton Chapel	1,240	43	2	...	96	109	205	1,954	2,322
Brampton Church	1,113	34	57	74	134	1,621	1,919
Brington	3,017	188	1	...	412	400	812	4,420	5,195
Brington Little, hamlet
Nobottle, hamlet
Brockhall	721	10	2	...	18	24	42	1,363	1,581
Bugbrooke	2,052	204	20	3	491	451	942	9,886	11,997
Dallington	1,520	209	4	20	490	561	1,051	6,492	7,428
Duston	1,896	336	19	4	851	789	1,640	9,401	10,541
Floore	2,623	253	16	...	534	546	1,080	5,705	6,823
Haddon, East	2,602	155	7	...	361	365	726	4,379	5,172
Harlestone	2,504	136	3	10	287	296	583	3,721	4,383
Harpole	1,834	196	3	...	444	380	824	4,798	5,332
Heyford Nether	1,192	170	25	...	378	401	779	7,352	8,277
Heyford Upper, hamlet	882	29	1	1	54	67	121	1,919	2,044
Holdenby	1,843	34	1	...	85	87	172	2,783	3,298
Kislingbury	1,809	164	9	...	327	342	669	4,942	5,519
Ravensthorpe (part of)	1,437	104	9	...	245	219	464	2,567	2,975
Tetton, hamlet	666	22	4	...	51	51	102	1,096	1,291
Upton	967	8	15	18	33	2,632	2,798
Whilton	919	85	3	...	179	172	351	3,711	4,328
	31,632	2,376	129	38	5,395	5,377	10,775	82,159	95,679

CHARITIES IN NOBOTTLE-GROVE HUNDRED, as abstracted from the Parliamentary Reports, with the date of each bequest, and the name of the donor. See also the histories of the parishes, &c. :—

Date.	Donors and Nature of Gifts.	To what Place and Purpose applied.	Annual Value.
1663.	Jas. Bracegirdle (rent)	Brampton Church parish, poor and church repairs	£ 1 16 0
1798.	The Charity Estate	Brington Great parish	230 0 0
1700.	Peter Fournoy's (£125)	Ditto, apprenticing children, and books	3 17 9
1623.	Jas. Bracegirdle (rent)	Bugbrooke parish, poor	1 0 0
	Charity Estate	Ditto, bread to poor	20 0 0
1826.	Johnson's (£900, 3 per cent.)	Ditto, four poor widows	27 0 0
	Ditto (£270, 3 per cent.)	Ditto, apprenticing poor boys	8 1 6
1673.	Sir Rd. Raynsford (rent)	Dallington parish almshouse	27 14 10
1777.	The Poor's Allotment (10 acres)	Duston parish, poor	20 0 0
	Arthur Reynolds (£20)	Ditto, poor	1 0 0
	Facer's Dole	Ditto, ditto	0 10 0
1728.	James Curtis (land)	Floore parish, four poor widows	22 0 0
1727.	George Knight (£5)	Ditto, poor	0 5 0
1730.	Abigail Rushton (£100, 3 per cents.)	Ditto, teaching four children to read and spin	3 0 0
1779.	The Town Close, granted in lieu of Gardiner's, Steer's, and Muscott's Charities	For the poor, and apprenticing children	23 14 0
1774.	Poor's Allotment Land	East Haddon parish, coals to poor, & teaching poor children	9 6 0
	Charity Estate	Harlestone parish school	78 0 0
1670.	Benj. Tomkins (£5)	Harpole parish, coat for a poor man	0 16 0
1740.	John Garner (land)	Ditto, ditto	0 6 0
1731.	Rd. Smith (land)	Ditto, bread to poor	12 0 0
1778.	Poor's Allotment Land (20 acres)	Ditto, poor	50 0 0
	Ditto	Ditto, free school	52 0 0
1653.	Thomas Chater (£25)	Ditto, coats to poor men	8 0 0
	Donor unknown (£105)	Ditto, poor	5 0 0

Date.	Donors and Nature of Gifts.	To what Place and Purpose applied.	Annual Value.
1689.	Edmund Arnold (lands)	Heyford Nether parish, poor ...	£20 0 0
"	Ditto	Ditto, apprenticing poor boys ...	40 0 0
"	Ditto	Heyford Upper, ditto	40 0 0
1674.	William Bliss (£400)	Heyford Nether and Upper schools	37 0 0
"	Town and Charity Estates	Kislingbury parish	110 0 0
1707.	Margaret Welsh (land)	Ditto, apprenticing orphans	16 0 0
1731.	Mary Palmer (land)	Ravensthorpe parish, poor	29 4 6
"	Town Land	Ditto	21 4 0
1768.	Jonathan Emery (£500)	Whilton par., founding a school	20 0 0
1783.	Langton Freeman (£20)	Ditto, poor	1 0 0
"	Judith Worsfield (£1000)	Ditto, teaching poor children ...	32 0 0
"	Ann Rose (£400, 3 per cent. consols)	Ditto, clothing 12 poor girls	12 0 0
1833.	John Murcott (£100, 3 per cent. consols)	Poor	3 0 0

£979 4 7

ALTHORP PARISH.

Althorp, called in Domesday Book Ollethorp and Alidetorp and at a later period Oldthorp, was an extra parochial district, but is now an independent parish, four miles N.W. from Northampton, and consists of Althorp Park, the principal seat of his Excellency the Earl Spencer, and 795 statute acres, of which the park comprises about 500 acres. The soil is a rich dark-coloured loam. Its population in 1841 was 55; in 1861, 78; and in 1871, 45. Althorp was formerly a hamlet, or township, consisting of several houses, but is now a manor, from which Earl Spencer derives the title of viscount. "A little more northward," writes Camden, "I saw Althorp, the noble and beautiful seat of the famous family of the Spencers, knights, allied to very many families of great worth and honour, of which Sir Robert Spencer, the fifth knight in a continued succession, an eminent encourager of virtue and learning, was by King James I. advanced to the title and honour of Baron Spencer of Wormleighton. Since which they have been raised to the title of Earls of Sunderland, and have been employed in some of the highest offices of the State."

Althorp House.—This magnificent mansion is approached by a handsome avenue beautifully shaded with trees. The date of its erection is not known, but it was restored in 1688 by Robert, second Earl of Sunderland, and much improved by the late Earl Spencer. The south front consists of a centre with transverse wings, and the west front presents an unbroken façade without an entrance. The splendid and matchless library, consisting of about 40,000 volumes, is considered the finest collection of books in Europe, and occupies a suite of apartments (five in number) extending about 300 feet in length. These are "garnished from 'top to toe' with the choicest copies of the choicest editions of the choicest authors in the choicest bindings." The picture-gallery, which measures 115 feet by 20, contains a collection of portraits not exceeded, perhaps, by any in the kingdom, not only in point of number, but in beauty; the family portraits alone amount to above fifty. This splendid collection is enriched by the works of the most celebrated masters, amongst which may be noticed—Mary Queen of England, by Holbein; Lady Jane Grey, by Lucas de la Hire; Hans Holbein, by himself; Pedro van Moe, by himself; Artemisia Gentileschi, with her pallet, by herself; Frobenius the printer, by Holbein; St Ignatius Loyola, by Titian; Cardinal Pole, by Perino del Vaga; Oliver Cromwell, by Walker; Charles II., by Lely; Lady Longueville, John Duke of Marlborough, Sarah Duchess of Marlborough, &c., by Kneller; Rembrandt's mother, by Rembrandt; Sophonisba Anguisciola, by herself; St Charles Borromeo celebrating a high mass, by Domenichino; the Holy Family, by Raphael; Lucretia, and a Cleopatra, by Guido; Venus and Adonis, and the mistress of Titian, by Titian, &c. &c.

In 1603, Queen Anne, consort of James I., with the prince her son, rested here for some days, on their journey from Scotland to London, and during their stay a mask, composed by Ben Jonson, was exhibited for their entertainment. The Spencer family became possessed of Althorp Park in the fourth year of Henry VIII. (1513.) This originated in a licence from the king to John Spencer, Esq., afterwards Sir John Spencer, to impark 300 acres of land, 100 acres of wood, and 40 acres of water in Oldthorpe, with free warren there and at Great Brington. It has since been enlarged, and is now well stocked with deer. At the time of the Conqueror's survey the Earl of Morton held here two parts of a hide of land, and William Peverel held a third part of a hide and half a virgate of land. In the reign of Henry II. the lordship consisted of one hide and one small virgate of the fee of Berkhamstede. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), Haman de Vileston was certified to hold a fourth part of one knight's fee in Oldthorpe of the Honor of Berkhamstede; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1316) he was lord of the manor. "In the reign of Henry VII.," says Bridges, "it was in the possession of John Catesby, second son of John Catesby of Legers Ashby, Esquire, who sold it to John Spencer, Esq. This gentleman, afterwards knighted by King Henry VIII., was the son of William Spencer, Esq. of Wormleighton, in Warwickshire, descended from a younger branch of the Despensers, anciently Earls of Gloucester and Winchester, the head of which family was Ivo Viscount Constantine, who married Emma sister to Alan Earl of Brittany, before the Conquest." Sir William Spencer succeeded his father, Sir John Spencer, in this estate, and received the honour of knighthood at York place in 1529, the Parliament then sitting. He died Sheriff of Northamptonshire in the twenty-fourth of Henry VIII. (1533.) The lordship of Althorp descended to his only son, Sir John Spencer, Knight, from whom it passed, at his decease, to his son of the same name. In the first of James I. (1603), Sir Robert Spencer, the fifth knight of his family in an immediate succession, by letters-patent dated 1st of July, was created a baron of the realm by the title of Lord Spencer of Wormleighton. "This nobleman," continues Bridges, "was firmly attached to the interest of his country, and had great magnanimity of spirit. Mentioning, on a debate in Parliament, the valour of the English in defending their liberties, 'Then were your ancestors,' said the Earl of Arundel, interrupting him, 'employed in keeping sheep'—the Lord Spencer and his predecessors being remarkable for their breed and numerous flocks—to which he briskly replied, 'And yours were then busied in plotting treason.' Upon this they were both ordered into custody, but the House afterwards decreed satisfaction to be made to Lord Spencer, as being first, and without cause, provoked."

William, second son of Robert Lord Spencer, succeeded him in 1627, and Lord William was succeeded at his death in 1636 by his son Henry, who was in the nineteenth of Charles I. (1644) raised to the dignity of an earl by the title of Earl of Sunderland. He was killed by a cannon-ball at the battle of Newbury, fought in the same year, in the twenty-third year of his age, whilst attending upon the king's person as a volunteer. The wife of this earl (daughter of Robert Sidney, second Earl of Leicester, and better known as the celebrated Sacharissa of Waller the poet) erected and covered in the great staircase, in Althorp House, which had been formerly an interior courtyard in the fashion of the times. Robert, only son of the first Earl of Sunderland, succeeded to the title and possessions, and arrived at high honours in the State. In 1671 he was appointed Ambassador to the Court of Spain; in 1678 he was called to the high office of Secretary of State; in 1697 he received the white staff of the Lord Chamberlain of the Household, and died at Althorp in 1702. Charles Earl of Sunderland, his son and successor, was appointed Envoy-Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Emperor, and in the following year was sworn a Privy Councillor, and made one of the principal Secretaries of State. In the reign of George I. he was appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland; in 1717 he was made Lord President of the Council, and constituted First Lord of the Treasury. He was afterwards nominated Groom of the Stole, and elected a Knight of the Garter. By his death in 1722, his titles and possessions descended to Robert, his eldest surviving son, who dying of a fever in Paris in 1729, unmarried, the title and estates devolved on his next brother, Charles, fifth Earl of Sunderland, who on the death of his aunt, Henrietta Duchess of Marlborough, in 1723, succeeded to that dukedom. Upon the death of the Honourable John Spencer, brother of Charles Duke of Marlborough, in 1746, John, his son, became possessed of the title and possessions, and was elevated to the peerage in 1761 by the titles of Viscount and Baron Spencer; and in 1765 was further advanced to the rank of Earl Spencer and Viscount Althorp. "He possessed the virtues of humanity and benevolence in a degree so eminent as to render his character as much distinguished, through many parts of Europe, for its goodness, as that of his illustrious ancestor, the Duke of Marlborough, was for its greatness." After his death, which occurred at Bath in 1783, his honours and estates descended to his only son, George John, the second Earl Spencer, "who has filled," as Mr Baker truly observes, "some of the most responsible public situations with honour to himself and advantage to his country. Under his administration the British navy obtained the pinnacle of renown." He died November 10th, 1834, and was succeeded by John Charles, the third Earl Spencer, who was Chancellor of the Exchequer from 1830 to his father's death in 1834. Frederick, the fourth Earl Spencer, and third son of the second earl, was born in 1798, and succeeded his brother John Charles in 1845. He was Lord Chamberlain from July 1846 to September 1848, and was appointed one of the Council of the Duchy of Lancaster in 1847. He became a captain in the Royal Navy in 1822, commanded the Talbot, and bore a conspicuous part at the battle of Navarino, and assisted at the reduction of Morea Castle in 1828. John Poyntz Spencer, K.G., P.C., LL.D., the fifth and present Earl Spencer, the elder son of the fourth earl by his first wife, Elizabeth Georgiana, daughter of W. S. Poyntz, Esq., was born in 1835; succeeded in 1859, on the death of his father; married in 1858, Charlotte, daughter of the late F. C. Seymour, Esq.; is Lord-Lieutenant of county of Northampton, and Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. Residences—Althorp Park, Northampton; 27 St James' Place, London; and the Castle, Dublin.

BRAMPTON CHAPEL PARISH,

Commonly called Chapel Brampton, is an ecclesiastical chapelry to Church Brampton, but in its civil capacity it is a separate parish. It is situated in the south-eastern part of the lordship of Church Brampton, four miles N.N.W. of Northampton, and contains 1240 acres of the rateable value of £1954; the gross estimated rental is £2322; and the population in 1841 was 229; in 1861, 170; and in 1871, 205. The soil is principally of a red loamy nature, on a loose stony under-stratum. The Naseby head of the Nene first assumes the name of the river in this lordship, and at the point of junction with Boughton is crossed by a stone bridge of six arches.

The Manor of Chapel Brampton was anciently possessed by the Dyves, from whom it passed to the De Buctons, Greens, and Nevills. John Beaufort, Earl of Somerset, died seized of a moiety of this manor in 1409; but all the parcels into which it was divided merged in the Crown in the reign of Henry VIII. "Christopher Hatton, Esq.," Mr Baker tells us, "afterwards knighted, and made Lord Chancellor, 'for his fidelity and acceptable services,' obtained a grant in fee of the manor and lordship of Chapel Brampton, with mills and fishery, £11, 11s. 1½d. rents of assize, and advowson of the parish church of Chapel Brampton, to be held in socage by fealty only, and a fee-farm rent of £20, 4s. 1½d. yearly." From this family it passed with Church Brampton to the Gores, who sold the principal part of the estate to Mrs Ann Isted in 1715, from whom it descended to Samuel Isted of Ecton, who sold it in 1793 to the Earl Spencer, who subsequently purchased the remaining portion of this lordship.

The Village is pleasantly situated, and when Bridges wrote "it contained thirty houses and two water-mills. Of the chapel," says he, "from which this village received its name of distinction, there are no remains, but a very imperfect tradition. A small bell, some years ago preserved in the town, was said to have belonged to it." The inhabitants of this parish attend the mother-church at Church Brampton, with which this living is incorporated. In the village is a National School, a handsome building erected by the late Earl Spencer. The present earl owns nearly the whole of the parish, and is lord of the manor.

Post-Office.—Joseph Boughton, postmaster. Letters arrive here from Northampton at 7 A.M., and are despatched at 6.15 P.M.

Ball William, butcher	Bray William, corn-miller and victualler, Spencer's Arms	Denton Joseph, shopkeeper
Beasley John, agent to Earl Spencer	Butcher Mrs Eliz. schoolmistress.	Farmers.
Beasley Mrs Louisa	Coleman William Thomas, machinist, and at Northampton	Sanders Henry
Bray Mrs Hannah		Woods John, The Grange

BRAMPTON CHURCH PARISH,

Or Brampton Magna, is bounded on the east by the parish of Boughton, on the north by those of Spratton and Chapel Brampton, on the west by Harleston and Holdenby, and on the south by Dallington parish. It contains 1113 acres, the rateable value of which is £1621. Its population in 1801 was 173; in 1831, 176; in 1841, 169; in 1851, 369 (including Chapel Brampton); in 1861, 158; in 1871, 134. Gross estimated rental, £1919. The soil, which has been much improved, is similar in quality to that of Chapel Brampton, and belongs principally to Earl Spencer, who is also the lord of the manor. Brampton is called in Domesday Book Brantone; in ancient records, Brampton Magna; and in later records Church Brampton, from the mother-church standing in this parish.

Manor.—The Earl of Morton held here four hides, deducting five acres, at the time of the Conqueror's survey. The arable land was eight carucates, the mill of the yearly rent of 28s.; ten acres of meadow, and five acres of underwood. The whole had been valued in the former reign at 60s., but was now rated at 100s. Ulmar, who had held half a hide of this estate at the time of Edward the Confessor, now held the same of the earl. In the reign of Henry III., Ralph de la Haye, son of Robert de la Haye, held one knight's fee and a half in both Bramptons of Philip de Neville, son to Eustachia, the wife of the said Robert de la Haye. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), Robert de Neville held one knight's fee, and Peter Pickett half a knight's fee, of the Earl of Leicester, who held it of the king in capite; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1316), Philip de Nevill was certified to be lord of the two Bramptons. In the same year a fine was levied of lands in Great Brampton, and of the advowson of the church by Maud de Segrave, daughter and heir of Nicholas de Segrave, and wife of Edmund de Bohun, who in 1317 presented to the rectory. The successor to Maud de Segrave was Sir Gerard de l'Isle, who was succeeded by his daughter Margaret, the wife of Thomas Lord Berkeley, from whom the estates descended to their daughter Elizabeth, wife to Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick. Upon the death of Richard Earl of Warwick, in the seventeenth of Henry VI. (1439), his three daughters by Elizabeth, his first wife, heir to Thomas Lord Berkeley, succeeded to their mother's inheritance, and in the partition of the estate this manor was assigned to Elizabeth, the youngest daughter, wife to George Nevill, Lord Latimer; and afterwards, upon the division of the estates of John Lord Latimer, the manor of Church Brampton seems to have been allotted to Dorothy, his second daughter, the wife of Thomas Cecil, eldest son to the Lord Treasurer Burleigh, and afterwards created Earl of Exeter. Of the Earl of Exeter it was purchased by Sir Christopher Hatton, Lord Chancellor of England, from whom it descended to his adopted heir, Sir William Hatton, alias Newport, the son of Sir John Newport, by Dorothy, sister to Sir Christopher Hatton, who dying without male issue, it passed to his godson, Christopher Hatton, pursuant to the will of Sir Christopher. At the coronation of James I., Christopher, the successor of Sir William Hatton, was made Knight of the Bath, and dying in 1720, left his manor to Christopher Hatton, his son and heir, a minor. It was found, by inquisition taken at his death, to be held of the Crown, as of the Honor of Leicester, parcel of the Duchy of Lancaster, by the service of one knight's fee. A manor in Church Brampton, containing 200 acres of arable land, 20 acres of meadow, and 80 acres of pasture, which belonged to the family of Neville, and was claimed by Edmund Peverel in the third of Edward III. (1330), was granted by the Crown in the fourteenth year of Richard II. (1391), to John Holt and others; and in the thirty-fourth year of Elizabeth it was in the possession of Sir Christopher Hatton, and descended with his other possessions to his heirs and successors.

Besides these two manors, which were held by the family of Holt and the descendants of Lord Latimer, Sir Thomas Tresham of Sywell, in the second year of Edward IV. (1463), charged with high treason, was found to be seized of a manor here, which with the rest of his estate was forfeited to the Crown, and in the fifth of this reign was granted to John Donn and Elizabeth his wife. In the first year of Queen Elizabeth (1558) this manor, which consisted of 18 virgates of arable land, 20 acres of meadow, and a rent-charge of five shillings yearly, was found in the possession of Sir Thomas Tresham, the last prior in England of the order of Hospitallers of St John of Jerusalem, and who held it of the Lord Latimer in common socage by fealty and the yearly payment of 4d. In the nineteenth of James I. (1622), Sir Christopher Hatton died seized of it, when it passed to his son, Lord Hatton, who sold the whole of the manors and estates to William Gore, Esq., in 1657. In this family they descended to the four sisters and co-heiresses at law of Charles Gore, Esq., with whose representatives the trustees under the will of Sarah Duchess of Marlborough contracted in 1750 for the purchase of this manor, with the fishery, and about 790 acres of land in Church and Chapel Brampton, for £13,900; and after a long Chancery suit, arising out of the wills of the co-heirs, it passed by indenture of bargain and sale in January 1754 into the hands of John Spencer, Esq., afterwards Earl Spencer, from whom it descended to Frederick fourth earl, and is now possessed by the present Earl Spencer. The Abbey of St James had 20 acres of pasture and 40 acres of heath here, which William Hatton of Holdenby died seized of in 1546.

The Village of Church Brampton is situated on a gentle ascent about four and a half miles N.W. by N. of Northampton. Ten neat cottages were built in the village about twenty-five years ago by the late Earl Spencer, and are let to the poor at low rents. Besides these there are six cottages for poor widows, built by the present earl in memory of his father and mother.

The Church, dedicated to St Botolph, stands at the western extremity of the village, and consists of an embattled tower containing four bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. The windows of both aisles are of the fourteenth century, but the chancel is of a later date, and is divided from the nave by an open arch. The chancel has been rebuilt on the old foundations during the incumbency of the present rector, and corresponds in architectural style with the nave. There are at present three stained windows—one in memory of Letitia Beasley, wife of John Beasley, Esq.; another to Mr Richard Bray by his widow. The third, in the chancel, is to Elizabeth Onslow, by her sister, Mrs Willan. There is a brass, dated 1585, to Joan wife of James Furnace; and, what is somewhat singular, there is a stone slab, nearly 100 years later, to another Joan Furnace, wife of another James Furnace. The arms of Edward III. are in a stone shield over the south aisle door; and a head of the same monarch, in oak, is set in the wall to the north-east. This church is one of the few dedicated to the memory of St Botolph, who lived about the middle of the seventh century. He was of German descent, and of noble family, and was distinguished by his sweetness of disposition, and a long life spent in prayer and in teaching those around him. At the east end of the north aisle is a stone staircase which formerly led to the rood-loft. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £25, 19s. 7d., but now worth about £400 a year. The President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, are patrons, and the Rev. G. F. de Teissier is rector. Here is an ancient and curious parish chest with original iron work in front, which seems to be coeval with the church; it belongs to the Early English period, and is figured in Parker's

"Glossary of Architecture." At the enclosure of the commons, 332 acres were granted in lieu of the glebe and all tithes whatsoever of Church and Chapel Brampton.

The Rectory House is a modern building, in the Elizabethan style, standing in a beautiful garden, and is in good keeping with the neat village which borders close upon it.

Post-Office.—Wall-box. Cleared at 5.30 P.M.

Teissier Rev. George Frederick de, B.D. rector
Tarry Samuel, shopkeeper

Farmers.

Allin John, Brampton Grange

John Garrett
Deacon Stephen Higgins
Payne John Wells

BRINGTON GREAT PARISH.

This parish includes the hamlets of Little Brington, Nobottle, and a part of Clasthorp; it is bounded on the north by the parishes of Long Buckby, East Haddon, and Holdenby, on the east by Harlestone, on the south by Harpole and Floore, and on the west by Brockhole and Whilton. Brington is called in the Domesday survey Brinintone and Brintone, and in later records Brighton. The parish, including the above-named hamlets, contains 3017 acres, the rateable value of which is £4420. The population in 1801 was 772; in 1831, 887; in 1841, 795; in 1851, 798; in 1861 (including Althorp), 888; and in 1871, 812. The gross estimated rental is £5195. In Bridges' time "Great Brington consisted of sixty-one houses, Little Brington of fifteen, and Newbottle of twelve." The soil is principally a dark-coloured loam, and the greater part of it is in pasture and feeding land. Earl Spencer is the lord of the manor, and principal proprietor.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, William Peverel, the Conqueror's natural son by the daughter of Ingelric, founder of the Collegiate Church of St Martin-le-Grand, London, held one hide and a half in Brington. Walter de Langton, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, obtained a grant of free warren in Newbottle, Brinton, and other places, in the thirty-fifth of Edward I. (1307), and in the ninth of Edward II. (1316) was certified to be lord of Brington. This Walter de Langton, as we apprehend, says Bridges, conveyed this manor to Robert Peverel and Alice his wife for the term of their lives, with remainder to Edmund Peverel and his heirs in fee. In the fifth year of Edward III. (1332), William Peverel died seized of a moiety of the manor of Newbottle and Brintone, in which he was succeeded by John Peverel, his son, an infant half a year old. John de l'Isle of Rougemont released to William de la Pole all his right in this and other lordships in the twenty-fifth of this reign (1352), and in seven years after a fine was levied of a third part of the manor, between Robert Rigge and William de la Pole in fee simple to the said William. This third part was claimed by Robert as the dower of Isabel his wife, the widow of John Peverel. We meet with no further account of this manor till the third year of the reign of Henry VIII. (1512), when a fine was levied of it and other estates between John Spencer, Esq., and others, and Thomas Marquis of Dorset, deforciant, with the right of frank pledge and free warren in the several estates. Sir William Spencer, Knight, succeeded John; and Earl Spencer, the present lord of the manor, is his lineal descendant. Besides the lands in Brington, which in the Conqueror's time were held by William Peverel, the Earl of Morton held half a hide, valued at the time at 20s., which was held in succeeding times as of the fee of Leicester. John de Roseles held one carucate of the heirs of Robert de Keynes, who held the same of the Earl of Leicester, who held it of the king in capite; and in the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), Margery de Bingham, John Cheynel, and John de Cotesbroke, accounted for a third part of one small fee of the fee of Keynes. This estate was in the possession of the Bulmer family for several generations afterwards, and, with the rest of the lordship, is now in the hands of the Earl Spencer.

The Village of Great Brington, pleasantly situated on an eminence, commanding extensive and very beautiful rural views, is distant about seven miles N.W. by W. from Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands at the north-east angle of the village, on the verge of a hill, and consists of an embattled tower containing six bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, chancel, and north chapel. The date of the erection of the church is supposed to be about the latter part of the thirteenth century. The tower is flanked by corner buttresses of two stages. The pillars of the south side of the nave are octagonal, but each side is hollowed, which gives them the appearance of fluted columns, whilst the pillars of the north side are simply octagonal, though the design of the whole seems to be of one period. The chancel and north chapel were rebuilt by Sir John Spencer, and are in the Tudor style. In the chancel are the sedilia and piscina; and at the east end of the south aisle is another piscina. The north chapel is divided from the chancel by three pointed arches, built up with monuments, and communicates with the north aisle by a peculiarly graceful pointed arch. There is a piscina at the east end of the south wall, and some relics of painted glass in the windows. In this chapel, which belongs to the Spencer family, are many sumptuous sepulchral monuments to the memory of various members of it, from the reign of Henry VIII. to the present time. Amongst these magnificent memorials may be noticed that of Sir John Spencer and his wife, Isabella Graunt (dated 1522), with their recumbent effigies: the knight is in plain armour, his head resting on his helmet and his feet on his gauntlets; the lady is habited in a long scarlet gown, over which is a white bodice bordered with gold, and on a girdle beneath hangs her rosary. Sir John Spencer and his wife, Catherine Kitson (dated 1586), whose figures are also recumbent: the knight is in plain armour, with a double frill round his neck, and trunk hose appearing below his surcoat; the lady's head rests on flowered cushions; she is habited in a white vest and bodice, and a coverlet is gracefully spread over her and rolled down to the waist. Sir John Spencer and his wife, Mary, daughter and heir of Sir Robert Catelin, both habited like the last-mentioned. Robert, the first Baron Spencer, and his wife, Margaret Willoughby (dated 1599): the baron is cased in a rich suit of plate armour, with helmet plumed and visor up; the lady reclines on flowered cushions, and is partly covered with a heraldic counterpane. William, second Baron Spencer, and his wife, Penelope Wriothesley (dated 1636): the baron is in ermined robes of state, and the lady in a vest with embroidered ruffles at the wrists, and a mantle lined with ermine. Over these and other beautiful monuments are erected splendid and elegantly-wrought arches, canopies, &c., and the whole are richly charged with the armorial bearings, rich devices, &c., of the families. A monumental arch and high pedimental canopy, with the recumbent figure of an ecclesiastic, were discovered some years since in the exterior of the south wall, which had been covered with weeds and rubbish for ages. In 1846, Frederick, the late Earl Spencer, opened the chancel arch by removing a gallery parlour pew, which had been erected in that situation for the use of the family above fifty years before. In the same year he erected a small bay of five sides to the memory of his father, mother, and brother. It projects from the middle of the north wall of the Spencer Chapel; each side has a window of one light, with tracery copied from that of the original windows; the angles of the bay are occupied by slender stilted shafts, from the capitals of which spring the fans of the stone vaulting; these surround a central ring of masonry, in the form of a slightly-raised dome, the curvature of which coincides with that of the fans, and is covered with tracery radiating from a keystone enriched with flowers, and bearing the arms of the earl and countess. The windows are glazed with painted glass, correctly imitating the style of the early part of the sixteenth century. The centre window has a figure of St John the Evangelist, copied from one on Henry the Seventh's tomb at Westminster, standing in a richly-canopied niche, with an angel bearing the name on a scroll beneath his feet, and two angels in the tracery-lights above, with harps. The windows on either side have profiles of the second and third earls, bordered, as the windows themselves are, with a continuous wreath of Tudor roses. The extreme windows on either side are bordered by continuous wreaths of leaves and lilies, and contain the armorial bearings of the deceased, and of the late earl and countess, all within circular wreaths, and the quarries are all adorned with a heraldic fret. On the floor, following the form of the bay, is this inscription, in Gothic letters of brass, relieved with black enamel: "This bay was erected by Frederick, fourth Earl Spencer, to the memory of his father, mother, and brother—viz., George John, second earl, K.G.; Lavinia, his wife; and John Charles, third earl—anno Domini MDCCCXLVI." In 1847 the same noble patron presented a new Gothic pulpit and reading-desk of carved oak, removed the high pews, and replaced them with open oak seats with poppy heads, similar to the original ones, many of which remain still. He also gave a fine-toned organ, and opened the arch by which the Spencer Chapel is entered from the east end of the north aisle. The large "Parlour Pew" has also been removed, and the family now sit in the open seats. The windows of the south aisle, and one in the clerestory, whose mullions and tracery were destroyed about eighty-five years since, were restored in 1847. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £40, and now worth £500 a year. Earl Spencer is patron, the Rev. Frederick J. Ponsonby, M.A., is rector, and the Rev. W. E. Kinch is curate. At the enclosure of the common in 1742, the commissioners allotted 318 acres in lieu of tithes, in addition to which the rector has nearly 32 acres in lieu of the tithes of Nobottle, and a modus of £6, 13s. 4d. per annum for the hamlet of Althorp, within this parish. The tithes of Clasthorp were commuted, with those of the old enclosure, for £62, 10s. per annum.

The Rectory House is an Elizabethan edifice, and adjoins the south side of the churchyard.

The Baptists have a small chapel here. The Day-School, erected in 1851 by Earl Spencer, is a large stone structure situated between the two Bringtons, and there is also an Infant School in each parish.

Charities.—The Commissioners of Enclosure allotted 122a. and 28p. 0 the feoffees of the poor's land, which, with the farmhouse attached, and nine acres of old enclosure and several cottages, is now worth upwards of £230 a year.

LITTLE BRINGTON is a hamlet in this parish, situate about one mile south of Great Brington. This Manor was in the possession of Walter de Langton, Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, in the ninth year of the reign of Edward II. (1316), and in the fourth of Edward IV. (1465), Thomas Bernard, Esq., died seized of it, with its appurtenances in Newbottle, Bucby, and Olthorp, and which he held of the king as of the fee of Peverel, then in the hands of the Crown. In the twenty-fourth of Henry VIII. (1533), Sir William Spencer, Knight, died possessed of this manor, which he had held of John Bernard, Esq., by an unknown service. This John Bernard, dying in the second of Edward VI. (1549), left it to Francis Bernard, his heir. In the fourth of Charles I. (1629), Robert Lord Spencer died seized of it, and from him it passed to the present Earl Spencer, his lineal descendant.

The Church of St John, Little Brington, was built by the late Earl Spencer in 1855 at a cost of £2000. It is in the Early English style, and consists of a nave, chancel, tower, and spire.

The Baptists have a small chapel at Little Brington, and also a small place of worship at Nobottle. The late Miss Kenning in 1862 built a house for the minister, which cost about £400, at Little Brington, where there is also a small Wesleyan chapel.

NOBOTTLE, or NEWBOTTLE, is another hamlet in the southern part of this parish, two miles S.E. of Great Brington, containing about 660 acres, and in 1841, 99 souls. Its population in 1871 is included with that of the parish. Newbottle Wood was selected in the time of the Saxons to designate the hundred.

The Manor of Nobottle, called in the Domesday Book Nevbote and Neubote, was in the hands of William Peverel at the time of the Conqueror's survey; it then consisted of one hide and half a virgate. In the reign of Henry

II. the lordship of Newbottle and Brington was certified to contain six hides. In the first of King John (1199) it was in the possession of William Earl of Ferrers and Derby, a descendant of Henry de Ferieres, who came into England with the Conqueror, and in whose family it continued for several generations. Upon the death of William de Ferrers of Groby, Knight, in the twenty-third of Henry VI. (1445), it descended to Elizabeth, wife of Sir Edward Grey, and daughter of Henry, the son of the said William de Ferrers. Sir Edward Grey was second son to Reginald Lord Grey of Ruthyn by Joan his wife, the daughter and heir of William Lord Astley; and upon succeeding to the lands of his lady's inheritance, he had the title of Lord Ferrers of Groby conferred upon him. In the third of Henry VIII. (1512) a fine was levied of this manor and other lordships between John Spencer, Esq., and others, and Thomas Marquis of Dorset, deforciant, as stated above. John Spencer, who was afterwards knighted, transmitted the manor to his posterity, with whom it still continues.

CLASTHORPE is a small hamlet, partly in this and partly in Floore parish.

Great Brington—Post-Office.—George Dunkley, subpostmaster and parish clerk. Letters arrive from Northampton at 7.20 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 5.20 P.M.

Burdett John, wheelwright and carpenter	Hensman John, blacksmith	Elliott Frederick
Casidy John, vict. Fox & Hounds	Ponsonby Rev. Fred. James, M.A. rector	*Hornsby John, and butcher
Chouler Wm. Pepys, park-keeper and woodranger to Earl Spencer	Spencer Serg.-Major Edward	*Hornsby Joseph, and butcher
Hensman Mrs Rebecca, teacher of Infant School	Farmers and Graziers. (Marked thus * are yeomen.)	Starmer Richard
	Browning Thos. Glebe Farm	*Worley George, and groc
		Wykes John
		Wykes William

Little Brington—Post-Office.—Wall Box. Arrivals from Northampton 7.40 A.M., despatched 5 P.M.

Co-operative Stores, George Stow, manager	Robinson Rev. John Cornell, (Baptist)	Cory Mrs Hannah, Nobottle
Gent Edward, carpenter	Seal Chs. schoolmstr. (National)	Elliott John (executors of)
Gent Mrs Thirza, teacher of Infant School	Worley Rt. joiner and builder, and vict. Britannia Inn	*Gent Henry
Kenning Mr Charles	Wykes John, steward and clerk of works to Earl Spencer	Heygate Richard Harris, Nobottle
Muddiman William, victualler, Saracen's Head	Farmers and Graziers. (Marked thus * are yeomen.)	*Kenning Henry
Newton Mr Luke Marshall	Cave George, Nobottle	*Kenning George, Nobottle
Payne John, blacksmith		Lowick Mrs Sophia
		Sail George
		Wykes John

BROCKHALL PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Brington, on the east and south-east by Floore, on the south by Dodford, on the west by Norton, and on the north-west by Whilton. It contains 721 acres, the rateable value of which is £1363. Its population in 1801 was 70; in 1831, 58; in 1841, 59; in 1851, 62; in 1861, 54; and in 1871, 42. The gross estimated rental is £1581. The lordship, which contains about 850 acres, was inclosed in 1619-20, and is nearly all in the possession of the Rev. T. C. Thornton, the lord of the manor. The soil is a deep rich loam, and nearly the whole of the lordship is in permanent pasture. The parish is intersected by the western branch of the river Nene, the London and North-Western Railway, the old Roman road Watling Street, and the Grand Junction Canal.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, the Earl of Morton had three virgates in Brocole and Miscote (Bridges says the lordship is usually called from the adjoining hamlet, Brockhole cum Muscot), which were valued at 40s., and had been the freehold of Leuric in the reign of Edward the Confessor. The manor was at this time in the hands of Ralph Wac or Wake, who left it to his son; and in the reign of Henry III., Matthew Wake accounted for one small fee and a half, which he was certified to hold of Simon de Montford of the Honor of Leicester. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), the vills of Brockhole and Mescote, except seven virgates of the fee of Warwick, were in the tenure of Joan de Lucien, and held of the heir of Robert de Keynes, who held of the Earl of Leicester, and the Earl of the king in capite; and by inquisition after the death of Sir Robert Tirwhit, in the third of Edward VI. (1550), the manor of Brockhole and Muscot was found to be held of Humphrey Stafford, Esq., as of his manor of Dodford, by service of a knight's fee and a half, and two shillings rent. The manor continued in the hands of the family of Tirwhit until the eighteenth of Elizabeth (1576), when Sir Robert Tirwhit, the then possessor, leased it out to William Salter and Henry Roper, who afterwards assigned their leases to Laurence Eyton of Norton. In the twenty-fourth of Queen Elizabeth (1582), Laurence Eyton and Edward his son purchased of William Tirwhit the manor of Brockhole, in which family it continued until 1625, when Edward Eyton and Laurence his son sold it to John Thornton, Esq. of Newnham, from whom it descended to Thomas Reeve Thornton, who died in 1862, and was succeeded by his son, the Rev. Thomas Cooke Thornton, the present owner.

The Village of Brockhall, which is small, is situated on rising ground commanding extensive views of a rich and fertile country, about $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Daventry, 2 miles from the London and North-Western Station, Weedon, and about 8 miles W. by N. of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, is a small edifice, consisting of a nave and south aisle, porch and chancel, with an embattled tower containing three bells. It is partly in the Norman, Early English, and a style of architecture of a later date. The nave may be referred to the fourteenth century, and the chancel is modern. The interior is suitably fitted up. The nave is separated from the tower by a lofty pointed open arch, and from the chancel by a similar one. In the church are several monuments to the memory of various members of the Thornton family. Near the east end of the south aisle is a monumental arch with crockets, and finials, and flowers in the hollow mouldings, rudely executed, inclosing an inner trefoil arch; and beneath, on a slab, was an inscription for Peter de Thurlaston, rector in 1281, now nearly obliterated, the matrix of the brass only remaining. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weedon, rated in the king's books at £13, 10s. 7d., and now valued at £245, in the patronage of the Rev. T. C. Thornton, and incumbency of the Rev. Thomas Kenworthy Brown, M.A.

The Rectory House stands north of the church, and is a pleasantly situated residence.

The Manor House, or Brockhall House, the seat of the Rev. Thomas Cooke Thornton, stands a little south of the church, on an elevated situation. It is a handsome edifice of Harleston stone, with three fronts, supposed to be built by the Eytons; but much improved by the late possessor. The view from the hall is of a pleasing and diversified character.

Post-Office (under the patronage of the Rev. T. C. Thornton).—Joseph Carter, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive here from Weedon at 7.30 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 6 P.M.

Brown Rev. Thos. Kenworthy	Farmers.	Payne William
M.A. rector		Judkins James
Thornton Rev. Thos. Cooke,	Denny John
Manor House

BUGBROOKE PARISH.

Bugbrooke is bounded on the east by Kislingbury, on the north by Heyford, on the west by Stowe, and on the south by Gayton and Gattishall. It contains 2188 acres, the rateable value of which is £9859, including the railway, which is valued at £3600, and the canal, which intersects the parish from north to south, £60. The gross estimated rental is £11,974. Its population in 1801 was 611; in 1831, 865; in 1841, 953; 1851, 860; in 1861, 935; and in 1871, 942 souls. Bugbrooke, or, as it is called in Domesday Book, Buchebroc, is intersected by the London and North-Western Railway. The soil is chiefly loam and strong clay, well adapted for wheat, beans, and barley; and its principal proprietors are—the Rev. J. H. Harrison (the lord of the manor), Captain Adams, and several resident yeomen. A considerable portion of the parish is in pasture. Mr Baker tells us that in the limestone of this lordship there is an unusual quantity of escallop-shells in good preservation, most of them exhibiting the substance of the shell itself; and Morton mentions an ammonite with five wreaths, and petrified wood, as sometimes found here. On the rectorial land is a remarkably copious spring, called the West Hills, in the occupation of Mr Thomas Peasnell; and there are two chalybeate springs in the parish also, one on the estate of Captain Adams, and the other on the farm of Mr John Ashby.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey the Earl of Morton had four hides of land in Bugbrooke, with two mills, of the yearly value of 40s., thirty acres of meadow land, and four acres of wood. "Robert Earl of Moreton or Mortaigne, in Normandy," writes Mr Baker, "was uterine brother of William the Conqueror, who raised him to the earldom of Cornwall, and enriched him with lands of the ejected Saxons to an extent far exceeding the most lavish allotments to any other of the Norman favourites. The aggregate of this earl's manors, dispersed through the counties of Cornwall, Devon, Dorset, Hants, Sussex, Suffolk, York, Nottingham, Northampton, Cambridge, Hertford, Middlesex, Bucks, Oxford, Gloucester, and Wilts, amounted to the almost incredible number of 793. In this county alone 99 manors were held by or under him. Besides Bugbrooke, he held in demesne the whole or parts of Little Billing, Weston Favell, Church Brampton, East Haddon, Ravensthorp, Heyford, Yelvertoft, Helmdon, Alderton, Cosgrave, and Sywell, retaining only a paramount interest over the remaining manors, which were distributed in unequal proportions amongst nearly twenty of his retainers or dependants, under certain reserved feudal services. Before the right of primogeniture was firmly established, the eldest son frequently received a specific share only, instead of the whole of the paternal inheritance; and, conformably to this practice, on the decease of William the Conqueror, William Rufus, the second son, ascended the English throne, in exclusion of his elder brother Robert, whom his father had previously provided for in the Duchy of Normandy. The Earl of Moreton joined the confederacy, headed by his brother, Odo Earl of Kent, in favour of Robert's claim to the crown; but being attacked in his Castle of Pevensey, in Sussex, he surrendered to King William on a stipulated promise of pardon. When he died is uncertain; but he was succeeded by his son William, second Earl of Moreton and Cornwall, a man of a turbulent and ambitious spirit. King Henry I. refusing to accede to his demand of the earldom of Kent as heir of his uncle Odo, he repaired to Normandy, and zealously engaging in the cause of Duke Robert, was taken prisoner with him at the battle of Tenerchebray in 1106 (sixth year of the reign of Henry I.), and being brought back to England, was imprisoned for life and deprived of his eyes by order of the king. Dugdale presumes that he had neither wife nor issue; but according to Lodge, in his Irish Peerage, he left two sons, Adelm, ancestor of the De Burghs, Earls of Clanrickarde, in Ireland; and John, ancestor of Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent in the reign of Henry III. He was banished the realm, his castles razed to the ground, and all his lands and honours confiscated on his first quitting the kingdom. The immense possessions which escheated to the Crown by this forfeiture formed one of the principal funds which supplied the two succeeding monarchs with the means of rewarding the fidelity, and sometimes the treachery of their respective adherents." The lordship of Bugbrooke being thus seized into the king's hands, appears to have been afterwards given to Ranulph, surnamed de Bricasard, Earl of Chester, and sister's son to Hugh Earl of Chester in the reign of the Conqueror. This earl dying in the twenty-ninth year of Henry I. (1129), was succeeded by Ranulph, his eldest son, called Ranulph de Gernons to distinguish him from his father, who died in the eighteenth of Stephen, leaving his possessions to Hugh, his son and successor in the earldom. This Hugh, named Kevelioc, was succeeded in the twenty-seventh of Henry II. (1181) by his son Ranulph, who was knighted by the king in the thirty-fourth of the same reign, and married to Constance, the daughter and heir of Conan Earl of Brittany, and widow of Geoffrey, son to King Henry II. In the several contests during this reign he always continued firm to the Crown. In the second of Henry III. (1218) he joined an expedition to the Holy Land, and was general of the Christian army at the siege of Damietta. He afterwards joined the discontented barons, and sent an insolent message from Leicester to the king, who was celebrating the festival of Christmas at Northampton. He made his peace afterwards with the king (see page 111), and died without issue in the sixteenth of the same reign (1232), leaving his estate to be divided between his sisters. In the partition of his inheritance this manor was assigned to Agnes, third sister, the wife of William de Ferrers, Earl of Derby. This William, the sixth in descent from Henry de Ferieres, who came into England with the Conqueror, was the son of William Earl of Ferrers, who attended Richard I. in his expedition to the Holy Land, and died at the siege of Acon in the third of this reign. Soon after the accession of King John to the throne he created him Earl of Derby, of which earldom his father had been dispossessed in the preceding reign; and by the continuance of his fidelity obtained of the Crown several grants of lands to himself and his heirs. In the eleventh of the following reign (Henry III., 1227), upon the difference between the king and Richard Earl of Cornwall, his brother, this Earl of Derby, with several of the nobility, took up arms in behalf of the earl; but this dispute, with other grievances, was soon after settled at Northampton. He died in the thirty-first of this reign (1247), and was succeeded in the earldom of Derby by William, his eldest son; but, by a deed of gift, the manor of Bugbrooke passed to Hugh, his younger brother, who in the thirty-fifth of the same reign (1251) obtained a grant of free warren to himself and his heirs in all his demesne lands here. From this lord the manor of Bugbrooke descended to his daughter Cecilia, the wife of Geoffrey de Beaumont, who in the sixth of Edward I. (1278) levied a fine of it. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), Ralph Bigott, a descendant of Bertha, sister of Hugh Earl of Derby, was certified to be lord of Bugbrooke. The manor soon after reverted to the family of Ferrers, with whom it continued till the twenty-eighth of Henry VI. (1450), when Sir William de Ferrers of Charteley, Knight, dying, left it to Anne, his daughter, afterwards married to Walter Devereux, Esq. By the inquisition taken upon his death it was certified to have been held of the Crown as of the Duchy of Lancaster, by the service of a twentieth part of one knight's fee. No particular mention is made of this manor henceforward till the seventeenth of James I. (1620), when Richard Ashbie died seized of a messuage and a quartern of land, which he held of Richard Cope, Esq., as of his manor of Bugbrooke. It came afterwards into the hands of Thomas Lord Crewe of Steane, and on the partition of the Crewe estates amongst his daughters and co-heiresses, it was assigned to Armyne, wife of Thomas Cartwright, Esq. of Aynho, whose lineal descendant, William Ralph Cartwright, Esq., conveyed it in 1808 to Mr Samuel Hughes of Northampton, who in the following year sold it to George, the second Earl Pomfret, from whom it descended to George William Richard, the third earl, who sold the manor farm to Mr Levitt, from whom the manorial rights were purchased by the late Rev. James Harwood Harrison, whose son, the present rector, is lord of the manor.

The Village of Bugbrooke, which is small, is situate about six miles W.S.W. of Northampton, at the western extremity of which are two wharves adjoining the Grand Junction Canal.

The Church, dedicated to St Michael, stands in a spacious churchyard at the west end of the village, and exhibits various styles of English architecture. It consists of a nave, north and south aisles, north chapel, chancel, south porch, and tower, in which are five bells and a clock. The tower is surmounted by a low spire. The roof is open, and there is a gallery at the west end. The chancel is divided from the nave by a richly-ornamented wooden screen and rood-loft, and the north chapel, which was formerly separated from the aisle by a wooden screen, communicates with the chancel by an open pointed arch. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weedon, valued in the king's books at £33, and now worth about £800 per annum. It is in the patronage and incumbency of the Rev. James Harwood Harrison, M.A.

At the enclosure of the common in 1779, 390a. 2r. 23p. were allotted in lieu of glebe lands and all tithes in the open fields; about 80 acres of the old enclosures are still tithable. The rector receives also an annual payment of £21 for tithes of lands in Upper Heyford, besides an allotment of 3a. 37p. under the Nether Heyford Enclosure Act, in lieu of certain small portions of land and tithe.

The Rectory House, a handsome edifice, is situate a little west of the church.

The Calvinistic Baptists have a neat chapel near the centre of the village.

The National School, with a house for the master attached, was built in 1844 at the expense of the rector, aided by grants of £150 from the Society for Promoting Education. The building is of white brick with stone quoin dressings, and has two gables in front, projecting about four feet, between which is an open woodwork verandah. One of the gables is surmounted by a bell campanile. The New School, recently erected in the village by the School Board at a cost of about £2100, is a large and commodious building.

Charities.—Whitfield's Charity, consisting of about four acres, yielding about £20 a year, is distributed in bread amongst the poor who regularly attend the parish church every Sunday. Johnson's Charity, consisting of the interest of £900, 3 per cent., left in 1826, to be equally divided, half-yearly, between four poor widows; and also the interest of £270, 3 per cent., to be applied to the apprenticing poor boys of the parish. In 1623, James Bracegirdle left a rent-charge of £1 per annum, to be given on St Thomas' Day to the poor of the parish, at the discretion of the churchwardens and overseers.

Several fossil remains of fish and shells, of various kinds, have been found at different periods in Dryhurst pit, in the north-east of this parish. About thirty-five years since, whilst levelling a hill in front of Mrs Lovell's house, several human skulls, together with a crocodile in a petrified state, were discovered, and horse-shoes have been found at various depths, which has impressed the idea upon the old inhabitants that this must have been the scene of a sanguinary skirmish. A human skeleton was also discovered at the bottom of this road, the head of which appeared severed from the body.

Post-Office.—Mark Eales, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive here from Weedon at 7.30 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 5.45 P.M. The nearest Money-Order Office is Weedon.

Ashby Mr Robert Alfred
Baker Mr George Frederick
Bates Miss Mary, plumber and glazier
Billing Wm. Faulkner, butcher
Bruce George, shoemaker
Cartwright Harry Gordon, surgeon
Claypole Alfred, tailor
Collins George, shopkeeper
Eales Abel, tailor
Eales Mark, butcher, shopkeeper, and postmaster
Harris Wm. coal merchant
Harrison Rev. Jas. Harwood, M.A. Rectory
efford Joseph, vict. Baker's Arms
Heygate Robert, miller and farmer, Bugbrooke Mill
Hickman Thomas, shopkeeper
Industrial Provident Society
Stores (Mrs J. Frost, mangr.)
Ireson Ed. baker and shopkpr.

Jeffrey John,
Johnson Edward, mason
Lovell Henry, rate collector
Lovell Mrs Jane, plumber, glazier, &c.
Moore John, farmer and vict.
Swan
Oliver Mr Samuel
Pearson Geo. carpenter and timber dealer
Phipps Thomas, maltster and vict. Wagon and Horses
Roddiss Miss Ellen and Eliza, Ladies' School
Roddiss Mr Thomas
Rodhouse John H. stationer
Tarry Edw. baker and grocer
Tarry Thomas, shoemaker
Thompson Jabez, coal mercht. and vict. Crown
Tibbs Edward, grocer
Walker Wm. Henry, surgeon
Ward John, carpenter
Waring John, carpenter

Wickens John, blacksmith
Wright Joseph, bak er

Farmers and Graziers.

(Marked thus * are yeomen.)

*Adam Joseph Oliver
Amos Thomas
*Atterbury William Turland
Billingham Thomas
*Brown Thomas Garlick
*Burbridge Thomas Turland
*Garrett George
Harris Richard
Heygate Robert, Bugbrooke Mill
*Ireson Edward
Moore John
*Moore John, jun.
*Peasnall Thomas, butcher and vict. Five Bells
Roddiss Thomas, jun. & saddler
*Stafford Thomas
*Turland John

Carriers to Northampton.—Jacob Eales—Monday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday; and Mrs Maria Rush—Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday.

DALLINGTON PARISH.

Dallington, situate on a branch of the river Nene, by which it is divided from Northampton and Kingsthorpe on the east, is bounded on the north by Harleston, and on the west and south by Duston. The north side of St James's End, a hamlet adjoining Northampton, is in this parish, the south side being in Duston parish. Dallington, or, as it is written in Domesday Book, Dailintone, contains 1520 acres, with a population in 1801 of 302; in 1831, 479; in 1841, 519; in 1851, 565; in 1861, 686; and in 1871, 1051 souls (including St James's End; the village population in 1871 was only 375). Its rateable value is £5726, and the gross estimated rental is £6425. Its soil is various, consisting principally of a strong clay on the eastern side, and a light sand towards the north and north-west. The land nearly all belongs to Earl Spencer, K.G.

Manor.—Dailintone contained four hides of land, which were held by the Abbot of Peterborough at the time of the Conqueror's survey. The mill was worth 20s. yearly, which, with five acres of meadow, had been rated at 40s. in Edward the Confessor's time, but was then advanced to £5. In the first year of the reign of Richard I. (1189) the manor of Dallington was in the hands of Almaric Despencer, in right of his wife, who held it of the Convent of Peterborough by the ancient service of two knights' fees. Sir Geoffrey Lucy died seized of this lordship, in the twelfth of Edward I. (1284), which he was certified to hold of the Abbot of Peterborough by the service of one knight's fee and an annual payment of 20s. Upon the decease of Sir Geoffrey it was assigned in dower to Elena de Lucy, his relict, who was certified to be lady of the manor in the ninth of Edward II. (1320). Geoffrey de Lucy succeeded his mother, and in the sixth of Edward III. (1333) obtained a grant of free warren to himself and his heirs, and dying in the twentieth of the same reign, left it to Geoffrey, his son and heir. In the thirty-second of this reign Sir William Lucy settled this lordship upon trustees for the use of himself and Margaret his wife, his heirs and assigns. Upon the death of Sir William Lucy and Margaret his wife, Elizabeth Countess of Worcester was found to be his heir; and dying in the fourteenth of Henry VII. (1499), she was succeeded by her grandson, Robert Corbet, with whose descendants it continued for several generations. In 1607 the manor passed into the hands of Sir Henry Wallop and Elizabeth his wife, and to the heirs of the said Elizabeth. "Robert Wallop, Esq., their only son, disposed of all his Northamptonshire property a few years before the commencement of the Civil War, in which he embarked with zeal, and having sat in the Painted Chamber as one of the king's judges, though he did not sign the death-warrant, he was sentenced, at the Restoration, to be drawn on a sledge under Tyburn gallows, with a halter round his neck, and imprisoned in the Tower for life, where he died 16th November 1667, but was buried with his ancestors at Farley, in Hampshire." Sir Richard Raynsford, formerly M.P. for this county, and afterwards Lord Chief-Justice of the King's Bench, purchased the manor of Dallington about the year 1640, and died in 1679, leaving his estates to Richard Raynsford, Esq., his eldest son. This Richard left an only daughter and heiress, who brought it in marriage to James, second Lord Griffin. In 1720 it was conveyed to Sir Joseph Jekyll, the Master of the Rolls, who, dying without issue, devised Dallington to Joseph Jekyll, Esq., one of his great-nephews, and from whom it descended, through his only daughter, to Anne Barbara Wright. Earl Spencer is the present lord. The Hospital of St John and St James, Northampton, had possessions here.

The Village of Dallington is small, and pleasantly situate about one and a half mile N.W. of Northampton, and a little north of the turnpike road to Dunchurch.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is an ancient edifice, situate on a rising bank, and consists of a nave, north and south aisles, south porch, chancel, north chapel, and a low embattled tower containing four bells. The north aisle retains its original character, and is probably as early as the beginning of the thirteenth century. The interior is pewed with oak. The font is octagonal, bearing the arms of the Raynsfords on a shield in the centre. The nave is divided from the chancel by an open arch. The north or Raynsford Chapel contains some handsome monuments to the Raynsford family, and there are also monuments to the Jekyll family. Almost every part of the church, except the nave and the chancel, has been restored during the last twenty years. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Northampton, valued in the king's books at £6, 15s. 8d., and now worth about £300 per annum. It is in the patronage of Earl Spencer, and incumbency of the Rev. Christopher Cookson.

The Vicarage House, a commodious residence, a little north-east of the church, was built in 1741, and enlarged and improved since.

Dallington Hall, the residence of Samuel Sharp, Esq., is a handsome quadrangular mansion of Harleston stone, erected on the site of the old manor-house, west of the church, and is occupied as a ladies' school by Mrs Sharp.

The National School was erected in 1840 by subscription, aided by grants from the National Society and its Northamptonshire branch.

Almshouse.—Lord Chief-Justice Raynsford erected and endowed an almshouse in 1673 for two poor men and two poor women, with a weekly allowance of 2s. each. The endowment consists of a rent-charge of £27, 14s. 10d. per annum on certain messuages in the parish of St Saviour, Southwark.

Post-Office.—Thos. Croft, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 5.45 A.M., and are despatched at 7.15 P.M.

Cookson Rev. Christopher, B.D. vicar	Rose Miss Margaret, school- mistress.	Trasler James, parish clerk
Golby Thomas, shopkeeper	Sharp Mrs Caroline, ladies' boarding-school, Dallington Hall	Farmers and Graziers.
Hodson Wm. vict. Wheat Sheaf	Sharp Sam. Esq. F.S.A., F.G.S. Dallington Hall	Crowder Abraham
Neepe Wm. currier at North- ampton		Hunt Benjamin
Orton Alfred, corn-miller		West Thomas George

(For that portion of the Directory included in St James's End, see Northampton.)

DUSTON PARISH.

Duston is bounded on the east by Northampton and Dallington, on the north by Harleston, on the north-west by Harpole, and on the south by the western branch of the river Nene, which separates it from Hardingstone. The parish contains 1896 acres, of the rateable value of £6758. Its population in 1801, was 386; in 1831, 603; in 1841, 687; in 1851, 714; in 1861, 1162; and in 1871, 1640 souls. The gross estimated rental is £10,541. The soil is in general a light sandy loam, well adapted for barley, turnips, and potatoes.

The Hamlet of St James's End is partly in this and partly in Dallington parish, and being separated from Northampton only by the west bridge, may be considered the western suburb of that town. At St James's End, Duston, are also the extensive tanning and currying works of Messrs Wetherall & Neepe, which employ many hands, being the largest works of that character in the county.

The Rolling-Mills of Messrs Stenson & Co., at St James's End, where iron of the very best quality is manufactured from scrap iron and pig-iron, were erected in 1853. The works at present employ about a hundred hands, who produce an annual "output" of 200,000 tons.

Minerals.—About the same time as ironstone was discovered in this county, a fine bed of it was found at Duston in the slopes facing south to east, running in some places to the depth of twenty feet, and extending over an area estimated at 200 acres. It is a hydrated oxide of iron ore, the matrix of which is chiefly silex, and will produce iron varying in quality according to the skill of the manipulator. To the exertions of Messrs Butlin & Co. we are indebted for the state of perfection to which it has been brought. Pig-iron of the finest quality can now be produced from it without the admixture of any other ore, the secret of success entirely depending on the degree of chemical and physical agency applied. The Northamptonshire ore is now extensively used by all the iron works of South Wales, and its increased demand is mainly attributable to the perseverance of G. E. Bevan & Co., who have also extensive workings at Blisworth.

At New Duston are extensive quarries, belonging to Earl Cowper, and worked by Mr S. Goldby, which produce excellent stone for all building purposes. These quarries contain strata of greyish-brown stone, called Ryelands; brown ragstone, which is employed in building walls, cottages, &c.; yellow or ochreous freestone, locally denominated Harleston stone, calculated for the better sort of buildings ; and a blue ragstone of a fine grit, which gradually loses its blue tint by exposure to the air, used for paving and gravestones. Midway of the section is a slaty course, overlying a stratum of oolite or roestone, so denominated from its resemblance to the hard roe of fishes.

The iron ore quarries at Duston and the stone quarries at Old Duston belong to the same geological formation (the Inferior Oolite), and abound with fossils, as many as two hundred and fifty distinct species from these quarries having been identified and enumerated in a treatise (published by the Geological Society of London) by the author of the article on Geology (see page 9). Prominent among these are—numerous and very various bivalves (lamellibranchiata and brachiopoda), univalves (gasteropoda and cephalopoda), including numerous ammonites, very large examples of nautilus and belemnites, much coral (in the hollows left by the decay of which are frequently casts of the crypts of the small boring bivalve Lithodomus inclusus in clusters, which have been called “eagles’ nests” by the quarrymen), plant remains and much wood, numerous echinodermata, including a unique star-fish, Stulaster Sharpii, Pygaster semisalcatus, Acrosalenia Lycettii, &c., the dorsal plate of a kind of crocodile (Teleosaurus), and a fine tooth of an immense land lizard, as large as a crocodile (Megalosaurus). Besides these, slabs with ripple markings have been found in both quarries : these are traversed in various directions by the tracks of sea-worms and small crustaceans, and prove that, at some incalculably remote period, a sea-shore existed at no great distance from these quarries.

Extensive quarries in limestone (Great Oolite) are worked near Duston Village, the property of Mr George Pell, and on Hopping Hill, the property of Mr Watkins. An abundance of fossils characterizing this geological formation have been found in both quarries.

Important brickworks are carried on in the clay of the upper estuarine bed (see geological article, page 10), in the comparatively high ground of Hopping Hill, by Mr Watkins ; and in the upper lias clay of the low ground, between the Duston ironstone quarries and the river Nene, by a company.

Roman Remains.—Upon the site of the Duston ironstone quarries existed, prior to A.D. 450, a Roman cemetery. This was discovered soon after the opening of the quarries. Numerous sepulchral and other Roman remains—pottery, bronze, iron, and bone objects, coins, coin-moulds, human skeletons, and animal bones and teeth—have been found, many of which are now exhibited in the Northampton Museum. An essay, giving an account of the Roman occupation of this district, and describing the Roman objects which up to that time had been discovered at Duston, by Mr Sharp, F.S.A., of Dallington Hall, was read before the Society of Antiquaries of London, February 1870, and was published by that society in the volume of the Archæologia for that year.

Manor.—William Peverel, the reputed son of the Conqueror, held four hides of land in Duston at the time of the Domesday survey ; the mill of the yearly rent of 20s., and thirty acres of meadow, the whole of which had been rated in the Confessor’s time at 40s., but was now advanced to £5. The manor of Duston became merged in the crown in 1199, on the accession of King John to the throne, where it has continued ever since. In the 7th year of the reign of King John (1206), William de Duston obtained a confirmation of the lands in Duston, which Walkelin, his father, was possessed of when he put on the habit of a religious. “This Walkelin,” says Bridges, “was probably the same with Walkelin who was elected Abbot of St James’s Monastery in the 26th of Henry II. (1180), and died in the 7th year of this reign.” William de Duston accounted for two knights’ fees here, of the Honor of Peverel, in the time of Henry III. John de Grey was certified to hold three parts of one knight’s fee in Duston of the king in capite in the 24th of Edward I. (1296), and Robert de la Warde held the other part at the same time of Reginald de Grey, who held it of the king in capite by the service of mewing one falcon. Isabella de Grey, daughter of William de Duston, died seized of this manor in the 33rd of this reign (1305), and was succeeded by John de Grey, her grandson. In the 9thth of Edward II. (1316), John de Grey, son of the above-named John, was certified to be lord of Duston, and a moiety of St James's-street. In the 4th of Edward III. (1331), he obtained a grant of free warren in this lordship; and in the 20th of the same reign, he accounted for one knight's fee in Duston of the Honor of Peverel. This gentleman died in the 33rd of this reign (1360), and was succeeded by his son John, and the manor continued with the family of De Grey until the reign of Richard II., when Joan, daughter of Robert de Grey, brought it in marriage to John Lord Deincourt. It was afterwards divided between Alice, wife of William Lord Lovell, and Margaret, wife of Ralph Lord Cromwell, of Tatteshall, in Lincolnshire, daughters of John Lord Deincourt; but upon the death of Margaret in 1455, the whole became vested in Alice, who was succeeded by her grandson, Francis Lord Lovell, one of the favourites of Richard III. On the accession of Henry VII. (1485), this nobleman's property was confiscated, when the manor of Duston fell into the hands of the crown, and was granted to Sir Charles Somerset, to be held by the usual services. This Sir Charles was the natural son of Henry Beaufort, Duke of Somerset, who was made a prisoner at the battle of Hexham, and beheaded in the 3rd of Edward IV. (1464). Sir Charles obtained several distinguished civil and military appointments, and in the 5th of Henry VIII. (1514) was created Earl of Worcester. On his decease in 1526, he was succeeded by his son and heir, Henry, second Earl of Worcester, whose son William sold this manor for £620 to his uncle. In the 1st of Elizabeth (1558), it was demised to Sir Edward Griffin, the Attorney-General, who died seized of it in 1560, leaving it with his other estates to his son and heir, Sir Edward Griffin, who alienated them to Sir Christopher Hatton, the Lord Chancellor, who died in possession of them in 1591. The manor then passed to his adopted nephew and heir, Sir William Newport, alias Hatton, whose widow held it in jointure, and whose second husband, the celebrated Lord Chief-Justice Coke, enjoyed it for life. Frances, only daughter of Sir William, brought the manor of Duston in marriage to Richard Rich, second Earl of Warwick. At what time it passed out of this family is not certain, but in 1653 the trustees for the sale of sequestered lands conveyed this lordship, with the other estates of Thomas Coke, Esq., a delinquent, to Richard Wollaston, Esq., of London, for the sum of £4922, 14s. 2d., to hold during the life of the said Thomas Coke. In 1751, the family estates devolved on Charlotte, sister to George Lewis Cooke, Esq., and wife of Sir Matthew Lamb, Bart., from whom they passed to Peniston, Viscount Melbourne of the kingdom of Ireland, and Baron Melbourne of Melbourne, in Derbyshire. On the death of this nobleman the estates passed to his sister, Viscountess Palmerston, who was succeeded by her grandson, Francis Thomas de Grey Cowper, Earl Cowper, K.G., P.C., the present possessor.

The minor manor or estate in Duston, which, in the 24th of Edward I. (1296), was in the hands of Robert de la Warde, was in the possession of Robert de Eton in the 1st of Edward II. (1307). By inquisition after his death it was found that he possessed a messuage, two virgates of land, five acres of meadow, and 17s. per annum rents of assize in Duston, a parcel of the manor of Eton, by the service of keeping one of the king's gerfalcons. He was succeeded by Nicholas de Eton, a minor two years old, who afterwards sold the estate to John Garlekmongere the younger, who in the 23rd of Edward III. (1350) obtained licence for himself and his heirs to hold it by the usual service.

St James's Abbey or monastery for black canons of the order of St Augustin was founded by William Peverel in the beginning of the 12th century. He endowed it with forty acres of land and the mill and church of Duston, which donations were confirmed by Henry I., and again by Henry II., with a further confirmation of sixty acres at Hyde and at Rokeland (Rode). Their revenues became soon augmented by several benefactions, and in the 52nd of Henry III. (1268), they obtained licence for a fair to be held at the convent on the eve of the festival of St James and the two following days. This grant was renewed in the 14th of Henry IV. (1413), and the fair continued to be held in the abbey grounds long after the dissolution of the monastery, but was afterwards removed to the town of Northampton. Some very small portions of walls are still to be seen west of the hamlet of St James's End, near the road leading from the west bridge to the Upton and Harlestone turnpike gates. Ralph, elected in 1158, is the first abbot on record, and during his time the church and abbey were rebuilt, and the situation changed. The monks left the old, and took possession of the new house in 1173. In the 37th of Henry VIII. (1546), the site and demesne lands of the abbey, the revenues of which were valued at £175, 8s. 2d., were granted to Nicholas Gifford of Duston.

A Church or Chapel dedicated to St Margaret formerly stood at St James's End, and was annexed to the vicarage of Duston about the year 1259. The site of this church is contiguous to the west end of the toll-house, and is still called Churchyard Close. It seems to have been standing when Leland visited Northampton, as he evidently alludes to it in his "Itinerary,"—"There be in the suburbs two parochie chirches, wherof I saw one yn the west suburbe as I rode over the west bridge."

The Village of Duston is small, and situated on a slight eminence about two miles west of Northampton, and a little north of the turnpike road to Daventry.

The Church, dedicated to St Luke or the Blessed Virgin, stands at the eastern extremity of the village, on an elevation commanding a pleasing view of Northampton, and is a handsome edifice in the Gothic and Early English style. It consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch and chancel, with a central embattled tower containing three bells. The inner door of the south porch is Norman; the aisles are of a corresponding length with the nave; the roof is open, and three of the brackets of the principal springers are carved into grotesque figures of musicians. The church was restored in 1856 at a cost of £700, raised by subscription; the interior was thoroughly renovated and repewed, the building newly roofed, and new windows inserted. The Vicarage House is a neat stone building, pleasantly situated near the church. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Northampton, rated in the king's books at £6, 8s. 10d., and its present estimated value is about £160 a year. It was endowed with £200 private benefactions and £400 royal bounty; and is in the patronage of Earl Cowper, and incumbency of the Rev. Peake Banton.

There is a small Baptist Chapel in the village, built in 1844, which will seat about 200.

The National School is now being thoroughly repaired and enlarged; and a new school is about to be built at New Duston on a site given for the purpose by Mr Banks.

Duston House, erected in 1822, and enlarged in 1832 by Colonel Samwell, is now the property of Mr William Butlin, who, during the present year (1873), has thoroughly restored and enlarged it by the addition of billiard-room, conservatories, &c., and a very neat lodge, at a cost of £3000.

The Charities of Duston consist of ten acres of land, called the poor's allotment, which yields about £40 a year; it was granted at the enclosure in lieu of the right to cut turf and furze on the common. There is also the interest of £20 left by Arthur Reynolds for the poor, and 10s. yearly arising from what is called Facer's dole.

Post-office.—Wall Box, cleared at 5 P.M. for Northampton.

Banton Rev. Peake, vicar	Clarke Alfred, carpenter	Harris Mrs Mary
Beesley Fras. & Sons, corn millers, St James End Mill , and Pitstone, Tring .	Clarke Joseph, carpenter	Irons Henry, shopkeeper
Braybrook John, shopkeeper, New Duston	Daniel John George, corn miller and grazier	Loake Henry, baker, &c.
Brewett Mrs	Farmer John, market gardener	Mallard George, shopkeeper
Bruce William, shoemaker	Gardner William, baker, &c.	Meadows George, stone mason
Butlin William, ironmaster	Garrett Henry, agent	Oakley David, manager for Stenson & Co.
Cattell John Wm., vict. Hare and Hounds , and farmer, New Duston	Goodson Thomas, blacksmith	Rutter Henry, shoemaker, New Duston
	Goldby Samuel, stone quarries, New Duston	Shaw Josh., beerho., N. Duston
	Haines Mr George, Stanley Villa , New Duston	Smalley Thomas, vict. Md-bourne Arms

Smith Charles, shopkeeper, New Duston	Williams Joseph, shoe manu- facturer	Butlin Ilston
Smith George, vict. Squirrel	Wooley Joseph, beer retailer and carpenter	Gough John
Smith Wm., beerho., N. Duston	•	Hensman Harry Descher, Lodge
Tucker Mr William	Farmers and Graziers.	Laurence John
Watkin James & Son, timber and slate merts., brick and tile mfrs., at Northampton	Banton George Francis	Smith John and James Walker William White Augustine, New Duston
Carriers to Northampton. —Wm. Mallard and Chas. Smith on Wednesday and Saturday . (For continuation of Directory see St James's End, Northampton.)

FLOORE PARISH.

This parish includes part of the villages of Clasthorp and Upper Heyford, and is bounded on the north by Brington, on the north-east by Harpole, on the east by Upper Heyford, on the south by the western branch of the river Nene, on the south-west and west by Stowe and Dodford, and on the north-west by Brockhall. It contains 2623 acres; its population in 1801 was 821; in 1831, 955; in 1841, 1032; in 1851, 1161; in 1861, 1138; and in 1871, 1080 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £5765, and the gross estimated rental £6823. The soil is principally of a loamy nature, and a meadow of about forty acres, called Floore Lake, adjoining the churchyard, is considered one of the finest pieces of old pasture in the county. There is a strong chalybeate spring south of the village, near the mill. The principal owners of the soil are the Earl Spencer (who is lord of the manor), John Christopher Pack, Esq., Rev. T. C. Thornton, and Messrs Thomas Capell, James Phillips, John William B. Tibbil, Esq., and Miss Sharman. It may be considered worthy of remark, that a plot of land of about four acres, now occupied by Mrs Sarah Wilding of Welton, has been in the possession of her husband's ancestors for two centuries, previous to which it was in the hands of the Muscot family for more than six centuries.

Manor.—Floore, Flore, Flower, or Flora, as it is variously called in early records, was in the hands of several persons at the time of the Conqueror's survey. William de Cahinges (Keynes) had one hide of land here, which, with a mill and four acres of meadow, were valued at 20s., and had been the freehold of Ernui in Edward the Confessor's time. Olbald held one hide and one virgate of Gunfrid de Cioches, which was then rated at 25s.; and Baldwin held half a hide of Geoffrey de Mandeville, which, with a mill and four acres of meadow, was then valued at 15s. The Earl of Morton had likewise three virgates and a mill, valued at 40s., which had been the freehold of Leuric in the reign of the Confessor; and William Peverel, the Conqueror's natural son, held half a hide here of the soke of Nivebote, which had been the freehold of Gitda. In the account of hides taken in the reign of Henry II., Otnar was found to hold four small virgates of the fee of Geoffrey Earl of Essex; Ansel de Chokes one hide, and one virgate; Ralph Fitz-Sewan, half a hide of the fee of Peverel; and Hugh de Cheney one hide and four small virgates of the fee of Keynes. In the scutage assessed in the reign of Henry III., Robert de Grimmescot, and Isabella his wife, accounted for one knight's fee in Flore of the Honor of Chokes; and Adam Fitz-Richard for the fourth part of one knight's fee, which he held of Henry de Hinton, who held it of the Honor of Mandevil. In the 24th of Edward I. (1296), Maud Dru held one knight's fee here (the estate formerly in the hands of Gunfrid de Cioches), of William de Goreham, who held it of Roger de Yelle, by whom it was held of William de Fens, who held it of the king in capite. Peter de Flegg and Henry Tylley were lords of Flore and Clasthorpe in the 9th of Edward II. (1316). That part of the lordship which belonged to the fee of Keynes was at this time in the possession of Sir William Trussell. This Sir William was descendant of Osbert Trussell, lord of Billesley, in Warwickshire, in the reign of Henry II., and had his principal seat at Flore. In the 20th of this reign (1327), he was appointed by the Commons in Parliament to pronounce sentence of deposition on the king, by which they disclaimed all future fidelity and allegiance to him. For this and other offences the manor of Flore was seized into the hands of the crown, and in the 3rd of Edward III. (1330), was granted to Thomas de Bourne, at an annual payment of £25, 15s. 10d.; but in the following year it was restored to Sir William Trussell, the former possessor. In the 5th of Edward III. (1332), he obtained a grant of free warren in this lordship, and in two years afterwards had the privilege of holding a weekly market on Mondays, and an annual fair, beginning on the eve of St Barnabas, and continuing for eight days after. In the 20th of Edward III. (1347), the heirs of Richard de Grymmescote accounted for one knight's fee here of the fee of Chokes; and in the 29th of the same reign (1356), Sir Theobald Trussell, the son and successor of Sir William Trussell, levied a fine of the manor to the use of Agnes Trussell. In the 18th of Henry VI. (1440), Sir John Trussell died seized of this manor, and left it to his wife, Margaret, from whom it passed with all his other estates to Robert Tanfield, Esq., who died in the 1st of Richard III. (1483), and left it to his wife, who survived him. Edward Villers, of Hoothorp, died seized of this manor in the 5th of Henry VIII. (1514), and was succeeded by Clement, his son, a minor. In the 33rd of this reign (1542), Sir Thomas Pulteney, Knight, was possessed of it at his death, and left it to Francis, his son and heir; but it soon afterwards reverted to the family of Villers, and Edward Villers died seized of it in the 44th of this reign (1553). This Edward Villers left issue three daughters, his heirs—Mary, afterwards married to Calcot Chambre, Jane, and Elizabeth, all at that time under age.

The other manor in Flore, which was called Tilley's Manor, from the family of that name, who possessed it from the 9th of Edward II. (1316) till the reign of Henry V., when Jane, daughter and heiress of Sir John Tilly, conveyed it in marriage to John Tame, Esq. In the 2nd of Henry VI. (1424), it was claimed by Joan, the wife of William Sibthorp; and in the 9th of Henry VII. (1494), John Turpin died seized of it. This manor continued in the hands of the descendants of the said John Turpin till the beginning of the reign of Elizabeth, in the 2nd year of which it was in the possession of Anne Countess of Bedford, from whom it passed to Francis Earl of Bedford, between whom and Blaze Saunders a fine was levied of it in the 4th year of the same reign. Sir James Enyon died seized of this manor in the 17th of Charles I. (1642), from whom it descended to his three daughters and co-heiresses. This Sir James was unfortunately killed in a duel with Sir Nicholas Crispe. "Both parties," writes Mr Baker, "were volunteers in the royal cause, and the dispute arose at their quarters in Gloucestershire. The fatal result made an indelible impression on the mind of the survivor, who ever after wore mourning, except in the field of battle, when he cherished the hope of being united to his friend by a fortunate bullet; and through life hallowed every return of the melancholy anniversary by closing his chamber in darkness, and devoting himself to fasting and prayer." This manor afterwards became the property of Henry Rushton, Esq., who dying in 1700, William Rushton, Esq., his son and heir, sold a part of it in 1723, and the residue in 1727, to George Devall, Esq., of London. Sarah, the widow of John Devall, sold it, in 1771, to Richard Kerby, Esq., who died in 1804, leaving his wife, Mary, a tenant for life, with remainder to his nephew, Richard Pack, Esq. The manorial privileges exercised are confined to a game deputation. Various religious houses had possessions in Flore: Merton Priory, in Surrey, had the advowson at an early date; St Andrew's Priory at Northampton had the tithes of Burchard, in this parish; St James's Abbey had forty acres; Lenton Priory, near Northampton, and the Priory of St John of Jerusalem, had temporalities here.

The Village of Flore, which is large, is pleasantly situated on a slight eminence, about five miles S.E. from Daventry, seven W. of Northampton, and one mile from the Weedon Station of the London and North Western-Railway.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands in a spacious churchyard, at the southern extremity of the village, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch, and chancel, and a square embattled tower, containing a peal of six bells. The chancel was restored in 1867 at a cost of nearly £500. Portions of the edifice are in the Decorated, with considerable insertions in the later style of English architecture. A neat wooden screen divides the nave from the chancel; at the east end of the south aisle is a piscina, and at the west end of the nave is a gallery. After the dissolution, the advowson was granted (in 1546) to the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, who demise the impropriate tithes on lease of twenty-one years, renewable every seven years, but retain the advowson in their own hands. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Weedon, rated in the king's books at £17, and the gross income now is about £600. At the enclosure of the common in 1778, 168 acres were allotted in lieu of the rectorial, and 204 acres for the vicarial tithes. The Rev. Frederick Pigot Johnston, M.A., is vicar.

The Vicarage House is a neat structure, which was rebuilt by the late incumbent.

The Independent Chapel in the village, erected in 1810, is a plain building, and is at present served from Weedon.

The Quakers had formerly a chapel here, and there is still a place called the Quaker's burial-ground, now in possession of Mr Thomas Capell.

The National School, for boys, was first erected in 1836, and rebuilt in 1871, at a cost of £500, by private subscription, having an endowed foundation of £1485, left by Mr R. Capell, an inhabitant of Floore, who died in 1835, the interest to be applied to the education of twenty free scholars. The money realises about £70 per annum, principally on mortgages.

There is also a National School for girls, with an endowment of £3 per annum for the education of three poor girls.

Floore House (the manor-house), the seat of Major Fairfax Cartwright, son of the late General Cartwright, is situate near the village.

CLASTHORPE or GLASTHORP is a hamlet in the parishes of Floore and Brington, which now consists of a few detached houses, though tradition points out Great Buryfield as the spot where the village formerly stood.

Charities.—Besides the school endowment, James Curtis, of Floore, left land in 1728, which lets for £22 a year, for the relief of forty-eight poor widows of this parish. The town close, containing 7a. 39p., was awarded by the Commissioners of Enclosure in lieu of Gardiner, Steer, and Muscot's charities, which are now incorporated, and let for about £23, 14s. a year, which is alternately devoted to the necessitous poor widows of the parish and to apprenticing poor boys; and Abigail Rushton left £100 in the 3 per cents. for teaching four children to read and spin. George Knight's charity has not been paid for many years.

Post-office.—Robert White, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Weedon at 6.35 A.M., and are despatched at 6.45 P.M.

Amos Edward, baker	Gardner Thos., higgler & beerh.	Pearcey Thomas, timber mert.
Ashley William, corn miller and farmer	Garner John, farm labourer	and vict. White Hart
Bazeley Thomas, road surveyor	Garrett Wm., vict. Royal Oak	Phillips John, wheelwright and blacksmith
Begley Matthias, chimney swp.	Gibson Thomas, tailor	Poole Daniel, asst. overseer and vict. Chequers
Bosworth James, grocer, &c.	Goddard Thomas, cattle dealer	Rhodes Mr Thomas William
Bottrill John, threshing-machine proprietor	Green William, blacksmith	Rigby Joseph, schoolmaster
Bromwich Mrs Jane	Hawley Miss Sarah	Robinson Daniel, rope maker and parish clerk
Bunker Mr Charles	Ireland Miss Millicent, school-mistress	Roddiss Thomas, saddler, &c.
Cartwright Major Fairfax, Floore House	James William, butcher	Sharp George, whip maker
Collett Mrs Sophia	Johnson Rev. F. P., M.A., vicar	Sharp Henry, whip maker and beer retailer
Co-operative Stores (Joseph Muscott, manager)	Marriott Mr James	Spokes Jabez, plumber, &c.
Cosford George Edw., butcher	Marsh Mark, carpenter	Starmer Mrs Eliz., beer retlr.
Court Miss Jane, school	Marshall Mr Thomas	Taylor Capt. George William, Woodfield House
Cross Daniel, shoemaker	Masters Thomas, tailor	Thorneycroft Henry, butcher and gardener
Dicks Miss Mary Ann, school	Mawby Mrs Emma	Thorpe Mrs Mary Ann
Evans Mrs Mary	Mead Fred., carpenter & grocer	Tibbs Mrs Matilda, baker
Facer Mrs Elizabeth	Mead John, carpenter and beer retailer	Towers Jonathan, shopkeeper
Floyer Mrs Ann	Minor Jonas Collins, plumber, painter, and paperhanger	Watson Mrs Sarah
Floyer Mr Hubert William	Orland Thomas, mason and gravestone cutter
Floyer Wm. Hubert, surgeon	Orland Wm., joiner & builder

Farmers and Graziers.
(*Marked * are Yeomen*).

*Capell John
*Capell Thomas

Court John (and cattle dealer)
Hadland Henry and Harry
George (and horse dealers)
Hadland Mrs Mary Ann

Hadland Vincent
Hadland Wm. Marriot
Lowick Richard Manning
*Phillips James, jun.

Carriers to Northampton.—Daniel Meacock, Tuesday and Saturday; John Rogers, Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday; and William Trasler, Wednesday and Saturday.

HADDON EAST PARISH.

Haddon East, or East Haddon, so called to distinguish it from West Haddon, a neighbouring parish in the hundred of Guilsborough, is bounded on the north by Ravensthorpe, from which it is divided by a brook, on the east by Holdenby, on the south by Brington, and by Long Buckby and West Haddon on the west. It contains 2602 acres, the rateable value of which is £4441, and its population in 1801 was 259; in 1831, 644; in 1841, 616; in 1851, 700; in 1861, 727; and in 1871, 726. The gross estimated rental is £5245. The parish is rather hilly, and affords some very pleasing prospects. The soil is generally a light fertile loam, except the lower parts of the parish, which are a blue clay. "The gravel pits adjoining the road to Ravensthorpe," Mr Baker tells us, "furnish fibrous gypsum, jasper, and stone marl, and of extraneous fossils, gryphites, ammonites, belemnites, escallop shells, muscles, and corallites." A quantity of human bones were discovered imbedded in gravel about forty years since, in a field a little north of the village, belonging to the vicarage. The pits were filled up about nine years since, and turned into playgrounds for children. There is a strong chalybeate spring in the village. The principal proprietors are the Rev. Edward Henry Sawbridge (lord of the manor), Thomas Clarke, Esq., Mr Walter Smith, Lord Clifden, and Mr William Lantsberry.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, the Earl of Morton held 2½ hides of land in Eddone, one of which was in demesne, and, with a mill of the yearly rent of 10s. and 8 acres of meadow and 10 acres of wood, was rated in the Confessor's time at 40s., but now valued at £4. At the same time, one Ralph held half a hide of the Earl of Morton, which was then valued at 5s. The lordship of East Haddon was certified to contain four hides, which were held of the fee of Leicester in the reign of Henry II. It was afterward divided into three distinct manors. In the 24th of Edward I. (1296), Ralph Dyve, Roger de St Andrew, and Thomas de Bray, were certified to hold the township of East Haddon of the Earl of Leicester, who held it of the crown. In the 4th of Edward II. (1311), Roger de St Andrew obtained a grant of free warren within his lands at Haddon; and in the 9th of the same reign (1316), John de Radenden was certified to be lord of this town. By a fine levied in the 33rd of Edward I. (1305), the manor in the family of St Andrew was settled upon Richard de St Andrew, Alice his wife, and their heirs; which Richard, dying in the 3rd of Edward III. (1330), left it to John, his brother, a minor sixteen years old. In the 31st of Edward III. (1358), John Ragon levied a fine of a third part of East Haddon manor in fee-simple to himself. In the 5th of Henry V. (1418), this manor was in the hands of Reginald Ragon, from whom it descended to his son Thomas, who, in the 20th of Henry VI. (1442), gave up the reversion of it to Thomas Aydrop and others. Sir Lewis Dyve was in possession of this manor previous to 1652, as in that year the Parliamentary Commissioners of Sequestration sold it to John Willes and John Moulton. Sir Lewis, however, regained possession of it, either by restitution or repurchase, about the time of the Restoration, and, in 1661, conveyed it to Sir Justinian Isham, Bart., of Lamport, whose great-grandson, of the same name, alienated it, in 1789, to Henry Sawbridge, Esq., from whom it descended to its present proprietor. The other manor, or estate, appears to have been settled on a junior branch of the family of St Andrew, and descended from Alice, in course of succession, to John St Andrew, who was possessed of it in the 3rd of Henry VIII. (1512). It was afterwards carried in marriage by a coheirress of the family to Sir Oliver

St John, of Woodford, near Thrapston, with whose descendants it continued till 1807, when, as Mr Baker says, after an uninterrupted descent of six centuries, it was alienated by Andrew, the 13th Lord St John, to William Sawbridge, Esq., who was previously in the possession of the other manors by inheritance from his father. From William it passed to Henry Barnes Sawbridge, Esq., who was succeeded in 1851 by his widow, Mrs Grace Julia Sawbridge; and at her decease in 1872, it came into the possession of the Rev. Edward Henry Sawbridge, the present proprietor and lord of the manor. The estate, which, in the time of Edward I., was in the hands of Thomas de Bray, was in the possession of William Sanders, Esq., of Welford, in the time of Henry VIII., in the 33rd of whose reign (1542) he died seized of it, with 13 messuages, 3 cottages, 1 windmill, 340 acres of arable land, 140 acres of meadow, and 120 acres of pasture. By inquisition taken at his death, these premises were certified to be held of the king, as of his barony of East Haddon, parcel of the Duchy of Lancaster, by fealty and suit of court. This estate is also in the hands of the Rev. E. H. Sawbridge. The lordship of East Haddon is within the paramount jurisdiction of the Duchy of Lancaster, and owes suit and service to the court formerly held here, but now kept at West Haddon.

The Village of East Haddon, which is rather large, is situate on a slight eminence $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles N.W. of Northampton, and in the line of the London and North-Western Railway.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands near the centre of the village, and is an ancient structure, partly in the Decorated style of larchitecture. It consists of a nave, south aisle and porch, chancel, and embattled tower surmounted by pinnacles, and containing a peal of five bells. The nave is divided from the chancel by a wide open arch; at the east end of the aisle is a plain piscina; and at the east end of the south wall is a projecting trefoil-headed piscina, and three stone sedilia of Decorated character. The south aisle and porch were rebuilt in 1839, and the tower in 1673. The organ was presented by H. B. Sawbridge, Esq., and there is a modern gallery in the west end. This church was given to the abbot and convent of Sulby by William de Dyve. At the dissolution, the advowson fell to the crown, and was afterwards granted to Sir Thomas Chaloner and his heirs. It then passed through several possessors, till it was purchased, in 1796, by Christopher Smyth, of Northampton. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Haddon, valued in the king's books at £15, and now worth about £250 a year. The Rev. Christopher Smyth, rector of Woodford, and the Rev. Edward Henry Sawbridge are the patrons, the latter having a third of the presentation. The Rev. William Poulter Mackesy, M.A., is the incumbent. The Commissioners of Enclosure allotted 249a. 2r. 23p. in lieu of the rectorial tithes of the parish, and 94a. 38p. in lieu of glebe and vicarial tithes.

A New Vicarage House was erected in 1856; it is a substantial building of stone in the Gothic style.

The Independent Chapel, erected in 1812, will seat about 250 persons, and is supplied by the ministers from the neighbouring villages.

There are male and female schools in the village, which are well attended.

East Haddon Hall, the seat of the Rev. Edward Henry Sawbridge, stands a short distance north of the village, and is a commodious residence of freestone.

Charity.—The poor's allotment consists of 3a. 27p., allotted at the inclosure in lieu of land in the open field, which lets for £9, 6s. a year.

Post-office.—William Garrett, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 6.30 A.M., and are despatched at 6.14 P.M.

Andrew Wm., shopkeeper
Atkins Thomas, blacksmith
Brains Wm., master of Nat.
School
Co-operative Stores, William Brains, sec.
Eales Thomas, shopkeeper

Ford John, tailor, Northampton
Garrett William, shopkeeper and parish clerk, P.O.
Howe William, saddler, and at Buckby
Mackesy Rev. William Poulter,
M.A., vicar

Police Station, Geo. Cutler, constable
Rushton Mr John Perkins
Minards Thomas, baker
Sawbridge Rev. Edw. Henry,
M.A. The Hall
Smith Fred. J. shoemaker

Smith Mrs Marion
 Smith Samuel J., shoemaker
 Soden Miss Cath., shopkeeper
 Soden Charles, wheelwright
 Soden Frederick, carpenter and vict., Red Lion
 Soden George, wheelwright

Soden John, carpenter
 Soden Miss M. Ann, vict.
Plough.

Farmers and Graziers.

Clarke Mrs Catherine
 Earl Thomas, Lodge

Garrett James, Steepleton
 King George, The Poplars
 Main Henry (and butcher)
 Main Richard (and maltster)
 Rolfe Richard White, Lodge
 Russell Thomas
 Smith Walter (yeoman)

Carriers to Northampton.—Joseph Chapman, Richard Soden, and Ephraim Smith, Wednesday and Saturday.

HARLESTONE PARISH

Is bounded by the parishes of Dallington and Brampton on the east, on the north by Holdenby, on the west by Brington, and on the south by Harpole and Duston. The parish contains 2504 statute acres, of the rateable value of £3721, and the gross estimated rental is £4383. Its population in 1801 was 437; in 1831, 645; in 1841, 639; in 1851, 610; in 1861, 651; and in 1871, 583 souls. The soil varies from a light red land to white loam and clay. The principal owner is Earl Spencer, the lord of the manor. "The success of the air at Halston," writes Morton, "and of the heaths in the neighbourhood, in curing coughs that are not to be abated by the force of ordinary medicines, I myself have experienced more than once, and should choose to recommend it in the like cases." This parish has long been famed for its quarries of excellent building-stone. The ancient delves may still be traced in the park by large deep hollows. "The hollows of the old delves," continues Morton, "are large; and the town's name, as some would have it, implies the antiquity of the quarry; Halston, or Harleston, for thus it is anciently wrote, deriving itself from Harle, the Saxon word to draw, and Stane, a stone, alluding to the business of the quarriers, then perhaps the principal inhabitants of that place." The Reverend David Morton, M.A., is of a different opinion. He says—"I have no doubt that the village was called after Herolf or Herolve, and not from Harle, to draw, which might be given to every place where there is a quarry of stone." The stone is exactly of the same nature and quality as that already described in Duston parish, and there are both white and red brick and lime kilns in the parish. Mr Bridges tells us that races were formerly held on the heath south of the town. "The corporation of Northampton," says he, "by deed bearing date 16th January 1632, in consideration of the sum of £200 paid by William Lord Spencer, and other gentlemen of the county, obliged themselves to provide yearly a gilt silver cup and cover of the value of £16, 13s. 4d., to be ridden for on Thursday in Easter-week yearly; with covenant that, upon notice given in the race-week, they will return the said money within the year following." These races have been discontinued since 1739.

Manor.—The Earl of Morton had two estates in Herolvestune at the time of the Domesday survey. The principal one, which consisted of 1½ hide and a mill, was valued in the Confessor's time at 5s., but now rated at 30s. William, the ancestor of Keynes, held this estate of the earl; and the other consisted of half a bovate. These parcels had been the freehold of Leurie and Orgar before the Conquest. William Peverel was certified to hold 1½ hide here at the same time. This, with other estates in Newbottle, Althorpe, Brington, Clasthorp, and Floore, had been the freehold of Gitda in the reign of the Confessor, and was rated at £4, but now valued at £7. By a very early survey, probably about the time of Henry III., it appears that four virgates here were held of the crown, two virgates of the fee of Berkhamstead, ten virgates of the fee of Dodford, and ten and a half of the fee of Newbottle. That part held of the crown was in the possession of Henry de Bray, whose great-grandfather Brixton, in the reign of Richard I., held certain lands and tenements of William de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, by the service of an annual payment of 4s. and suit of court at his manor of Newbottle. Henry de Bray was succeeded by his son Henry, with whose descendants it continued till Alice, daughter and heiress of Henry de Bray, brought it in marriage, with other lands in this parish, to John Dyve of Brampton. Sir Lewis Dyve, the tenth in descent from John and Alice, being a zealous royalist, his estates were seized by the Parliament for delinquency, and in 1652 his manor of Harlestone, with the manor-house, "built of square stone, with offices, &c.," were sold by the trustees for the sale of sequestered lands, to John Hesilrigge, Esq., and William Denton, Esq., of Blisworth, for £2893, 7s. 3d. The remainder of the lordship of Harlestone was in the hands of Ralph de Bulmere, and Roger de Lomeley, or De Heyford. In the 24th of Edward I. (1296), John de Roseles and John de Bulmere held a moiety of the township of Harlestone of the heirs of Robert Keymes by the service of half a knight's fee; and Hugh de Chaunceus a fourth part of the said township of the king in capite, by an unknown service. This fourth part was in the hands of Henry de Bray, who, in the 34th of this reign (1306), held 9 messuages, 1 toft, 6 cottages, and 3 virgates of land in Herleston, of the said Hugh de Chaunceus, as of his manor of Upton. Roger de Lomeley was found to be lord of Harlestone in the 9th of Edward II. (1316). In the 20th of Edward III. (1347), Ralph de Bulmere and Roger Lomeley accounted for one knight's fee in Harlestone and Heyford of the Honor of Leicester. In the 20th of Edward II. (1327), this Ralph Bulmere was appointed deputy governor of York Castle, and in the 4th of Edward III. (1331) was made the governor. This part of the lordship continued with the family of Bulmer till the 20th of Henry VI. (1442), when Sir Robert Bulmer, Knight, gave up to Sir William Tresham and others all his lands, &c., in Harlestone and other places. This estate appears to have been in the hands of John Dyve, Esq., in 1598, and Sir Salathiel Lovell, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, in 1709. In 1753 it passed, by purchase of William Wildman, second Viscount Barrington, into the possession of the family of Andrews. The estate in the possession of Roger de Lomeley continued with this family till the 15th of Henry VII. (1500), when John Lumley, Esq., and Alice, his wife, sold it to Thomas Andrew, Esq., with whose descendants it remained until 1832, when it was purchased by the late Earl, and is now possessed by his son, the present Earl Spencer.

St James's Abbey and St Andrew's Priory, at Northampton, and Swardsley Priory had possessions in this parish.

The Village of Harlestone, which is very picturesque and beautiful, is scattered over a considerable space of ground, about four miles N.W. of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, is an ancient edifice, consisting of a nave, side aisles, chancel, and south porch, and a tower containing a peal of six bells. It was erected between the years 1320 and 1325. The nave and aisles are well paved and re-seated; the chancel is entered under a low open arch; the altar is ascended by three steps, and in the chancel is a large projecting piscina resting on a bracket representing a large head. On the south side are three sedilia of equal height, the trefoiled arches of which are beautifully executed. There are some fine monuments belonging to the families of Andrew and Lovell in this church. The living is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £20, 9s. 7d., and its gross value now is £600. It is in the patronage of Earl Spencer, and incumbency of the Rev. David Morton, M.A. At the enclosure of the common, the commissioners allotted 309a. 5p. in lieu of the glebe lands and tithes. The Rectory House is close to the church, and is erected on the original site. The glebe land attached to it consists of about 11 acres.

Here is a small Baptist Chapel, and there is a National School in the village, which is well attended.

Harleston Park, the property of Earl Spencer, contains about 160 acres. The mansion-house is a very beautiful structure. It is now occupied by Ismania Catherine, daughter of W. Nugent, Esq., and second wife of the third Lord Southampton, who died in 1872, and was succeeded by their eldest son, Charles Henry Fitzroy, the fourth and present Lord Southampton, who was born in 1867. Town residence, 58 Grosvenor Street.

Charities.—The sum of £250, arising from several bequests for teaching and apprenticing poor children, was expended long ago upon the purchase of 25 acres of land at Shuckburgh, in Warwickshire, and 4 acres at Kislingbury, which yield about £78 a year. Mr John Murcott, who resided here in his early years, bequeathed the sum of £100 to the poor of this parish in 1833.

Post-Office.—William Mead, postmaster. Letters arrive here from Northampton at 6 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 6.50 P.M.

Archer Hy., gardener & grazier	Lumley John, farmer, maltster, and vict., Fox and Hounds	Wilson William, groom
Belton Samuel, stone merchant, &c., Harlestone Quarry	Manning Thomas, stone mason	Wilson Mr Thos., Harlestone Paddock
Chowler Wm., keeper	Mead Wm., carpnt. & shopkpr	Worley Robert, tailor
Cooch Mrs Jane, machine maker and carpenter	Morton Rev. Dav., M.A., rector	Yelland John, schoolmaster
Cooper John, butcher & farmer	Pendred Thos. Knight, maltster and grazier	York John, blacksmith
Co-operative Stores (groceries), Elizabeth A. Smith, manager	Smeeton Wm., baker & farmer	Farmers and Graziers.
Cox Thomas, parish clerk	Southampton Lady, Harlestone Park	Cooch Mrs Jane
Craddock Josiah, corn miller and farmer	Thursby Mrs Sophia Eliz.	Hensman Thomas Dexter
Fisher Wm., butcher & farmer, and beerho. & shopkeeper	Vials Miss Annie	Moore John
	Wells Eli, carpenter	Rice John
	Wells Mrs Martha, beerhouse	Vials William
		Williams Robert

Carriers to Northampton.—Joseph Green and Henry Hines, Wednesday and Saturday.

HARPOLE PARISH.

Harpole parish is bounded by Harlestone on the north and north-east, by Duston and Upton on the east, by Kislingbury on the south, from which it is divided by the western branch of the river Nene, and by Heyford and Newbottle on the west. It contains 1823 acres, and its population in 1801 was 545; in 1831, 711; in 1841, 669; in 1851, 711; in 1861, 833; and in 1871, 824. The rateable value of the parish is £4798, and the gross estimated rental is £5332. This parish is situated low, upon a clayey soil, with a mixture of gravel, and it is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture. Here was formerly a wood called Oakhill Wood, extending over 40 acres, the site of which is still called Harpole Wood. The principal landowners are Mr Edward Scriven; the Rector in right of the church, and several resident freeholders.

Manor.—At the time of the general survey, Biscop, the Saxon lord, held 2½ hides of land in Hoopor of William Peverel; there were 10 acres of meadow and 10 acres of wood, the whole of which had been valued, in the reign of King Edward, at 30s., but now rated at 40s. This is one of the few instances in which the Saxon possessor was permitted to hold his estate as sub-tenant to the Norman grantee. When the Peverel estates became forfeited to the crown, Harpole became two distinct manors. There were four hides in this lordship of the fee of Beauvoir in the reign of Henry II.; Peter de Horepol held one and a half hide, and another hide was held of the fee of Peverel. One of the two manors in Harpole was held of the crown as of the Honor of Peverel, belonging to Robert de Haustede; and the other was in the possession of the family of St Hilary, which was held of the fee of Belvoir. In the 15th of Edward II. (1322), Robert de Haustede died, leaving issue Robert, his son and heir, and Margery, his wife, surviving. Margery, being jointly seized of this manor with her husband, continued to hold it for the term of her life. At her death the manor, with the advowson of the church, reverted to Henry de Whetthnous, who settled it on Robert de Haustede, her son, for his lifetime, with remainder to Nicholas de Crophull, Margery his wife, and their heirs, to be held of the chief lord of the fee by their usual services. Robert de Haustede dying before his mother, the manor upon her decease, in the 12th of Edward III. (1339), descended to the said Nicholas and Margery de Crophull. In the 39th of this reign (1366), Sir Nicholas Crophull levied a fine of the manor of Harpole, which he possessed, together with the advowson of the church, in fee-tail to Simon Warde, Elizabeth his wife, and their heirs-male, with remainder to Maud, the daughter of the said Simon, and her heirs-male. Simon and Elizabeth Warde dying without male issue, the manor descended to Robert Thame, the son and heir of the said Maud, from whom it passed, in the 8th of Henry V. (1421), to his brother and heir, Thomas Thame. In the 1st of Richard III. (1483), it came into the possession of the family of Tanfield, and lineally descended to Francis Tanfield, Esq., afterwards knighted, who in 1597 sold it in parcels to several yeomen of Harpole, and the dispersed members have never since been united.

The other manor belonging to the family of St Hilary, was demised to Edmund de Pinkeney, for the term of his life, at the annual rent of £11. Upon his decease in the 6th of Edward III. (1333), it reverted to Thomas de St Hilary, who, in the 20th of the same reign (1347), accounted for half a knight's fee here of the Honor of Beauvoir. It came afterwards into the hands of Sir William Vaux, Knight, who being attainted of high treason in the 1st of Edward IV. (1441), this manor, with all his other possessions, became forfeited to the crown, and in the 4th year of the same reign was granted to Ralph Hastings. The manor came again into the family of Vaux, and William Lord Vaux of Harrodon died seized of it in the 37th of Elizabeth (1595). It afterwards passed to the Gregory family and other possessors, and was sold by Sir Francis Tanfield to Francis Gregory, who died seized of it in 1610. The successor of Francis Gregory disposed of his estates here to several yeomen a few years afterwards, and the manor still continues distributed in shares. The manor-houses have long since been destroyed. The site of Vaux's is in the Moat Close, near the churchyard, and that of Tanfield's in the Hall Close. The Abbeyes of St Alban and St James, and the Priors of Chacombe and St John of Jerusalem, had possessions in this parish.

The Village of Harpole is pleasantly situated a short distance north of the turnpike road to Daventry, about four miles west of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands near the centre of the village, and is an ancient edifice, partly in the Norman and partly in the Early English style. It consists of a coped tower with small pinnacles, and contains five bells and a clock, a nave, north aisle and chapel, south aisle and porch, and chancel. The porch was rebuilt in 1867, and two memorial windows in stained glass were inserted in the church in 1870, to the Soutter and Linnell families. The tower is supposed to be of the early part of the thirteenth century; the south aisle and chancel are of later date. The north chapel is separated from the aisle by a closed arch, and from the chancel by a widely-pointed open one. There are piscinas at the east end of the south aisle, and in the south-east angle of the chapel. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weedon, rated in the king's books at £8, 13s. 4d., and now worth about £550. The Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam is the patron, and the Rev. Robert Bruce Dundas, M.A., is rector. At the enclosure of the common, the commissioners allotted 383a. 2r. 16p. in lieu of glebe lands and tithes, which, with 3a. 3r. of old enclosure, and a rate-tithe of 19s. 6d. per annum for homesteads not exonerated under the Act, is the property of the rector.

The Rectory House, built in 1816, is a genteel residence, adjoining the churchyard on the west.

The Calvinistic Baptists have a neat chapel in the village, built in 1809; and enlarged and otherwise improved in 1861 and 1870. A new school-room and vestry were added, and circular windows inserted. These alterations, &c., which cost £250, were effected during the ministry of the present pastor, the Rev. Amos Smith. There is also a small Wesleyan Chapel here, built in 1837.

The School is endowed with 26a. 3r. 5p., yielding £52 a year, for which all the children of the parish are taught free. It is a good stone building, erected in 1835, and considerably enlarged in 1864, to give accommodation to 140 children. The average attendance is 100, and the annual expenditure £120.

Harpole Hall, a respectable brick building situate in the village, is at present occupied by Robert Oldry, Esq.

The Charities consist of 20 acres, called the poor's allotment, which lets for about £50, and is distributed annually in fuel, meat, clothes, &c., to the poor; Smith's bequests for bread to the poor, amounting to about £12 annually; and other bequests amounting to £135, £125 of which is invested in the consols—the interest of £105 is distributed annually to the poor in money, and the interest of the remaining £30 is laid out every other year in providing coals or gowns for five poor people.

Biography.—Sir Richard Lane, Lord Keeper to Charles I., was born here and baptized in 1584. He was son to Richard Lane, of Courteenhall, and was educated for the bar in the Middle Temple. He was appointed deputy recorder of the town of Northampton in 1615. He conducted the defence of the Earl of Strafford on his impeachment by the House of Commons in 1640-1; was appointed attorney to Prince Charles, and was knighted at Oxford. He was one of the royal commissioners at the treaty of Uxbridge, and became Lord Keeper in 1645. He died in France in 1650. He published "Reports in the Court of Exchequer," from the third to the ninth year of King James I. It is stated, that on Sir Richard leaving London in 1640, he entrusted his chamber in the Temple, with his furniture and an excellent library, to his intimate friend Bulstrode Mitlock, who, on their being afterwards required of him by the son of Sir Richard, had the baseness and audacity to deny that he ever knew such a man as Sir Richard.

Roman Remains.—A few years ago, were discovered, upon the Rectory lands lying north of the village, the remains of an extensive Roman villa, and a coarse unornamental tessellated Roman pavement was exposed, which had been covered by only a few inches of soil.

Post Office.—Rd. Love, post-mr. Letters arrive from Weedon at 9 A.M., & are desp. 4.30 P.M.

Beasley Miss Fanny
Blackwell Mrs Elizabeth
Boon James, vict. White Swan
(and farmer)
Co-op. Stores, Ebzr. Ellis, mnr.
Dickens, J. butcher
Dix Mr George, Vine Cottage
Dundas Rev. Robert Bruce,
M.A., rector
Dunmore Edward, shoe agent
Frost Richard, butcher, shopkeeper, and cowkeeper
Garner Mrs Eliza
Goode Chas. threshing-machine proprietor
Farmer Mrs Maria, butcher and vict. Bull.
Harris William, blacksmith

Hines John, parish clerk
Lovell John Maltman, sec. to Agricul. Soc., and to Mutual Cattle Insur. Assoc., & farmer
Mellowes George, shoe agent
Nutt, John, stone mason
Oldrey Robert, Esq. The Hall
Robins, Thos. shopkr. & carrier
Rolfe Mrs Ann
Rolfe Mr John, Dial Cottage
Sargeant Charles, corn miller
Smith Mrs Catherine
Smith Richard, carpenter
Smith William, shopkeeper
Smith Rev. Amos (Baptist)
Starmer Henry, shopkeeper
Starmer John, vict. Red Lion
Steele William, shopkeeper

Tarry John, shopkeeper
Thorpe William, schoolmaster
Webster Joshua, carpenter
Webster Paul, beer retailer
Williams Charles, shoe agent

Farmers and Graziers.

(Marked * are Yeomen.)

Baker William
Blackwell Samuel (and baker)
*Cory Samuel
*Garner Sam. Norwood House
Goosey Thomas
Ratcliffe Richard
*Rolfe John, jun.
*Rolfe Samuel
*Scriven George Scriven John

Carriers to Northampton.—Thomas Collins, Richard Gibson, and James Mellowes, on Wednesday and Saturday; and Thomas Robins, on Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday.

HEYFORD NETHER PARISH

Is bounded on the north by the river Nene, which divides it from Upper Heyford; on the east by Kislingbury and Bugbrooke, from which it is partly separated by Horestone brook, which rises from springs in Farthingstone, Cold Higham, and Pattishall lordships, and falls into the river Nene; on the south by Stowe; on the west by Weedon; and on the north-west by the river Nene, which divides it from Floore. The parish contains 1690 acres, and its population in 1801 was 264; in 1831, 507; in 1841, 559; in 1851, 700; in 1861, 807; and in 1871, 779 souls. Its rateable value is £7352, and the gross estimated rental £8277. The soil is principally a good grey loam, with a mixture of strong clay and red land. The parish is well supplied with springs, one of which, called Holy Well, is medicinal. About half the lordship is meadow and pasture, and it furnishes excellent white gravel. The manorial rights are divided between Sir R. Knightly, Bart., and Alfred Crawley, Esq., and the principal proprietors are Messrs J. O. Adams, Francis Montgomery, Thomas Starmer, T. Baker, George Garratt, John Judkins, J. Whitmell, Rev. T. W. Crawley, and the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, 2 hides and 1 virgate of land were held in Heiforde by one William, of the fee of the Bishop of Baieux; this had been valued at 10s., but was then rated at 20s., and had been the freehold of Biscop and Ailet in King Edward's time. Walterius held 1½ virgate of the Earl of Morton, which, with a mill and 4 acres of meadow, had been valued at 10s., and now advanced to 30., and had been the freehold of Biscop before the Conquest. Ralph held 1½ virgate of the Earl of Morton, the value of which had been advanced from 5s. to 10s. ; and the Earl of Morton possessed also 1½ virgate of the same value as those held by Ralph. These three parcels belonged to the soke of Buchebroc. Sasgar held 1 hide and 1½ virgate here of Gilbert de Gant at the same time, which had been advanced in value from 10s. to 20s. In the reign of Henry II. there were found to be 4 hides here of the fee of Morton. In the time of Henry III., the heir of Roger de Heyford, or De Lumley, was certified to hold one small fee here and at Harlestone of the Honor of Leicester ; Gilbert de Gant two fees here and at Kislingbury ; and Richard Fitz-Robert, of Floore, a fifth part of one knight's fee here of the Honor of Clare. In the 6th year of the reign of Edward II. (1313), John de Pateshull levied a fine of a manor here, and in the 9th of the same reign he was certified to be lord of Heyford. In the 7th of Edward III. (1334), a second fine was levied of this manor by William and Joan de Pateshull in fee to Philip Pateshull. In the 20th of this reign (1347), Ralph Bulmere and Roger Lumley accounted for one knight's fee here and in Harlestone of the Honor of Leicester ; and Nicholas de Heyford for a twelfth part of one knight's fee here of the Honor of Clare. Henceforward the families of Bulmer and Lumley enjoyed these estates for several generations. In the 33rd year of Edward III. (1360), Sir William de Pateshull, Knight, died seized of an estate in Heyford, which had belonged to his ancestors, a part of which was held of the manor of Upton by the annual payment of 6d., and part of Gerard de l'Isle by the like annual payment. Leaving no issue, his sisters and their children became his heirs, and in the partition of the estates this manor was assigned to Catherine, the wife of Sir Robert de Tudenham, with whose successors it continued for generations. In the 25th of Henry VI. (1447), John Mauntell levied a fine of the manor and of 35 messuages in fee-simple. This latter was the manor and estate which belonged to the family of Lumley. John, grandson of the said John Mauntell, being attainted and convicted of rebellion, his estates here and in other places were escheated to the crown. This manor and estate came afterwards into the possession of Francis Morgan, Esq., one of the Judges of the King's Bench, in the reign of Philip and Mary. "Judge Morgan," says Bridges, "pronounced sentence of death upon Lady Jane Grey ; soon after which he is said to have gone mad, crying out in his fits, 'Take away the Lady Jane from me ;' and in this distraction he ended his life." This is, however, contradicted by Mr Baker, who says that, "The judge on whom that melancholy office devolved was Sir Richard Morgan, Lord Chief-Justice of the Common Pleas, and not this Francis Morgan, who was not elevated to the Bench till 23rd January, 2nd and 3rd Philip and Mary (1557-8), when he was constituted one of the Justices of the King's Bench, and died in August following, seized of the manor of Heyford." From this family the manor was carried in marriage to Sir John Preston, of Furness, in Lancashire, from whom it passed to his brother, Sir Thomas Preston, who, in May 1685, settled the manors of Heyford Nether, Heyford Upper, &c., on his daughter Mary, in marriage with William Lord Herbert, son and heir of William Earl of Powis.

In 1758, the Heyford manors, with those of Clasthorpe and Newbold, were disposed of in lots, by public auction, for the sum of £65,424. These three manors, now called the manor of Heyford, together with the manor-house in Lower Heyford, about 340 acres in both Heyfords, and Dodford Woods, containing about 190 acres, were purchased by John Deval, gentleman, of London. At the decease of this John Deval, his Northamptonshire property was sold by auction, for specific purposes, in 1759, when the manor of Heyford, the manor-house, and 30 acres of land, were bought by the rector, the Rev. Henry Jephcott, from whom they passed to his daughter and heiress, Elizabeth, who, with her husband, the Rev. Roger B. Hughes, rector of Kislingbury, conveyed them, in 1802, to the then rector, the Rev. John Lloyd Crawley, from whom they have descended to his youngest son, Alfred Crawley, Esq., the present possessor.

The Abbays of St James, near Northampton, and Pipwell, had possessions in this parish.

The Village of Nether Heyford is situated about 6½ miles W. by S. of Northampton, and equidistant from Daventry and Towcester. The parish is on the line of the London and North-Western Railway, and the Grand Junction Canal passes through it. The Weedon Station is $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles from the village.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter and St Paul, is an ancient edifice, consisting of a nave and side aisles, south porch, and chancel, with a low-coped tower containing four bells and a clock. The nave and tower were restored in 1854. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weedon, rated in the king's books at £3, 8s. 5d., and now worth about £315 per annum, in the patronage and incumbency of the Rev. Thomas William Crawley, M.A. In the church is a large painted mural monument of Judge Morgan and his wife, on which they, together with their two sons and three daughters, are represented kneeling before an altar, on which two open books are placed; and another tomb bears the figures in brass, about four feet in length, of Sir Walter Mauntell and his wife. The knight is in a handsome suit of plate armour. The Rectory House is situated a little north of the church, and was built in 1850, on the site of the old rectory.

There is a Baptist Chapel in the village, erected in 1826, and restored in 1871; and a small Primitive Methodist Chapel, built in 1838.

The Manor-House, a substantial stone building situated a little north-east of the church, is at present occupied by the Rev. John Thos. Henry Smith.

Charities.—The School was founded and endowed in 1674, by William Bliss, of London, a native of this place, with the sum of £400, £100 to be laid out in the purchase of a schoolhouse in Lower Heyford, and the remaining £300 to be disposed of in the purchase of land or rent-charges, to be held in trust for the master, who was to instruct gratuitously the children born and living in Nether and Upper Heyfords, and all of the name of Bliss residing within five miles. The money was expended in the purchase of a schoolhouse at Nether Heyford and land in Long Buckby, in lieu of which, the commissioners under the Act for enclosing that parish granted 45 acres to the trustees, of which about two acres since have been sold to the Grand Junction Canal Company, and the remainder was sold in March 1873 to J. A. Craven, Esq., of Whilton Hall. It has also the dividends of $1\frac{1}{2}$ share in the said canal. Edmund Arnold, Esq., of Doctors' Commons, London, another native of this parish, by will dated 1st May 1675, devised his manor and estate of Furtho in trust for the poor and for apprenticing children in this parish. That portion left to the poor now yields over £20, and that for the latter purpose more than £40 per annum. The erection of a new school is now in contemplation for the accommodation of 100 children.

Antiquities.—A very elegant and remarkable tessellated Roman pavement was discovered in the year 1699 in Horsetone Meadow, about half a mile west of the ancient Roman road, Watling Street, in this parish. Morton says, "It is indeed a most noble piece of art, exceeding all I have seen or read of, of the same kind in England." It was "composed of square bricks or tiles," says Bridges, "somewhat larger than common dice, artificially stained with white, yellow, red, and blue colours, as smooth as polished marble, and disposed into various regular figures with great exactness. It lay covered with mould and rubbish in a part of the meadow which is every year overflowed with land floods. By what was found of the south side of the pavement, it appeared to be 15 feet long from east to west; the extent from north to south could not be so certainly known, as the discovery did not reach far enough. The whole is, however, reasonably presumed to have been a square. When first uncovered, it would bear walking on as well as a stone floor; but being exposed to the weather and night dews, the cement became relaxed, and the squares were easily separable." Morton supposes it to have been the floor of a square room in a circular building, and about twenty yards in diameter, perhaps the villa or manor-house of some eminent person amongst the Romans. Some of the rooms of this house, he says, "were floored with a firm plaster of lime mortar, drawn upon pebbles fixed in lime. The borders or sides of the floors were painted with three straight and parallel lines of three different colours—red, yellow, and green—so fresh and lively, that when the floors were uncovered by the diggers, the strokes of the hairs of the painting brush were plainly visible. No painting appeared upon the inner part of any of them. Upon one of the floors were found three urns, which were broken by the country people before any curious person had a sight of them." There were also several fragments of urns and other antique earthen vessels found here, with a curious hammer head.

Eminent Men.—John Stanbridge, one of the earliest and most eminent philologists, was a native of this parish; he was head master of the free school adjoining Magdalene College, and died in 1522. He published many valuable works, amongst which were "Embryon Relimatum Institutiones," "Vulgaria Stanbridgiana," "Accidentia Stanbridgiana," &c.

John Preston, D.D., a distinguished Puritan divine of the 17th century, was born here, and baptized at Bugbrooke, October 17, 1587. He was a very popular tutor, and Fuller styles him "The greatest pupilmonger in England in man's memory." He was appointed one of James the First's chaplains, and he was also preacher of Lincoln's Inn, and prebendary of Lincoln, but never held any parochial benefice. A great number of his sermons, and several spiritual works written by him, have been published. He died at Fawsley, in the prime of life, in July 1628.

Mr William Taylor, son of the Rev. George Taylor, rector of Keston, in Kent, was many years master of the free school here, and was employed by Mr Bridges to copy monumental inscriptions and collect information for his intended history of this county. Taylor died here in great poverty in 1771.

Post-Office.—Mrs Milicent Threadwell, postmistress. Letters arrive from Weedon at 8 A.M., and are despatched at 6 P.M.

Adams Miss Sarah
Atwood Geo., tailor & vict. Sun
Bradshaw Thos., boat builder, timbr. & lime merh., vict. Globe
Capell Edward, butcher
Claridge Joseph, beer retailer
Claridge Wm. baker, butcher,
and beer retailer.
Crawley Rev. Thomas William,
M.A., rector [Arms]
Dunkley John, vict. Foresters'
Faulkner Thos., baker & grocer
Garratt Alfred, beer retailer
Garratt Charles, beer retailer
Marsh Alfred, carpenter
Masters William, mason

Newton Rowland Hy., grocer
Pell George, ironmaster
Peasnell Miss Elizabeth
Pinnock George, sexton
Robinson Mr Richard
Smith John, blacksmith
Smith John, carpenter & builder
Smith Rev. John Thomas
Henry M.A., Manor-House
Stanton Thomas, schoolmaster and assistant overseer
Starmer George, blacksmith
Starmer John, plumber, &c.
Tibbs Mary, lime burner, and coal and blue brick and tile dealer, Lane Wharf, Floore

Wadhams Mary, schoolmistress (infant)
Watson Thos., corn merchant Woodhams Isaac, baker and shopkeeper

Farmers and Graziers.

Judkins John (yeoman), and road surveyor Montgomery Elizabeth (yeoman), White Hall
Starmer Thomas (yeoman), and maltster
Tarry George
Thompson William (and boat builder), High House, Weedon

Carrier to Northampton.—John Eales, Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday.

HEYFORD UPPER

Is a hamlet in the several parishes of Nether Heyford, Floore, and Bugbrooke, containing about 88½ acres. Its population in 1801 was 122; in 1831, 112; in 1841, 111; in 1851, 100; in 1861, 116; and in 1871, 121. The gross estimated rental is £2044, and its rateable value £1919. It is situated about 6 miles E.S.E. of Daventry, and in Bridges' time it consisted of 22 houses, most of which were in the parish of Floore, some in Bugbrooke, and two only in the parish of Nether Heyford. It was formerly called Little Heyford. The soil is similar to that of Nether Heyford, and is possessed by several small proprietors, of whom Earl Spencer, and Messrs Stanton, Adams, Denny, Packe, Boyes, Montgomery, and Blake are the principal.

The inhabitants of this hamlet pay £20, £61, and £12 tithes to the respective incumbents of Bugbrooke, Floore, and Nether Heyford.

Manor.—At the time of the general survey, the Earl of Morton held a third part of one virgate of land here, which was valued with the capital manor, and in the issue of Henry II. there were certified to be four hides in Clacethorp and Little Heyford. In the 24th year of the reign of Edward I. (1296), Reginald de Hottot and Amablea his wife held one carucate of land with its appurtenances in Little Heyford, by socage of the heir of Robert Kaynes, who held it of the Earl of Leicester, who held it of the crown; and in the 9th of Edward II. (1316) John Bellasis was lord of Little Heyford. John Mauntell, Esq., died seized of this manor in the 18th of Henry VII. (1503), and from this family it passed to that of the Morgans, and by inquisition taken upon the death of Lady Morgan, in the 2nd of Charles I. (1627), it was found to have been held of the king by knight's service, as of the Honor of Leicester. It was afterwards incorporated with the manor of Nether Heyford. The manor-house of the Mauntells and Morgans is supposed to have stood in the field called the Upper Park.

Charities.—Besides the joint benefit of the free school with Nether Heyford, this village has about £40 per annum from Arnold's charity, for apprenticing poor children.

Post-Office.—See Nether Heyford.

The principal inhabitants are—Edwin George Cosford, corn miller; John Deacon, shopkeeper; and the farmers are—Richard Robbins Boyes (yeoman); Mrs Elizabeth Cockerill; Thomas Stanton (yeoman); and John Capell, Heyford Lodge.

HOLDENBY PARISH.

Holdenby, or, as it is usually called, Holmby, is bounded on the north by Spratton, from which it is divided by a small brook; on the east by Church Brampton, on the south-east by Harlestone, on the south by Althorp Park, and on the west by East Haddon. It contains 1843 acres, and its population in 1801 was 119; in 1831, 181; in 1841, 187; in 1851, 187; in 1861, 184; and in 1871, 172. The rateable value of the parish is £2783, and the gross estimated rental £3278. The soil is principally a dark heavy loam, but towards the north it is of a lighter colour and quality. More than three-fourths of the lordship is in pasture and grazing land. Lady Clifden is the lady of the manor and owner of the whole lordship.

Manor.—At the time of the general survey, one Ralph held two hides and one virgate of land in Aldenesbi of the Earl of Morton. It was of the soke of Edone, and had been valued in the Confessor's time, when it was the property of Siward and nine socmen, at 20s., but was now advanced to double that sum. In the reign of Henry II. there were certified to be three hides in Haldeneby of the fee of the Earl of Leicester. In the 24th of Edward I. (1296), Margery de Cowle held here and in Ravensthorpe one knight's fee of Roger St Andrew, who held it of the Earl of Leicester; Ralph Neville, a fourth part of one knight's fee here of Elen de Zouche, as of the Honor of Winchester; Richard de Holdenby, a fourth part of a knight's fee of Thomas de Arderne, who held it of Robert de Pinkeney of the said Honor of Winchester; and Peter de Welles, four virgates of the heir of Robert de Keynes, who held them of the Earl of Leicester. In the 7th of Edward II. (1314), William de Neville and William de Haldeneby held one knight's fee here, and two years after William de Neville was lord of Holdenby. In the 3rd of Henry VIII. (1512), Joyce, the widow of John Haldenby, died seized of this manor, which she held of Henry Maxe and Thomas Inguardsby, as of their manor of Sprotton, by an unknown service. From the Holdenby family the manor descended by marriage to the family of Hatton. The celebrated Sir Christopher Hatton, who possessed this manor in the reign of Elizabeth, was born here in 1548. "It is not a little remarkable," writes Mr Baker, "and deserves to be recorded on the bead-roll of Northamptonshire fame, that during the brilliant reign of Elizabeth, this county furnished the Lord Treasurer and Prime Minister, Cecil Lord Burleigh of Burleigh; the Lord Chancellor, Sir Christopher Hatton of Holdenby and Kirby; the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Walter Mildmay of Apethorp; and the Speaker of the House of Commons, Sir Christopher Yelverton of Easton Maudit. Sir Christopher Hatton," continues Mr Baker, "was a Gentleman Commoner of St Mary's Hall, Oxford, but left the university before he had taken a degree, and entered himself a student of the Inner Temple. His handsome person, graceful dancing, and prepossessing manners, exciting the Queen's attention at a masked ball, he was introduced into the royal household in the capacity of one of the Gentlemen Pensioners, and continuing to rise in her majesty's favour, was successively appointed Gentleman of the Privy Chamber, Captain of the Guard, and Vice-Chamberlain. His talents secured and extended the influence gained by his personal accomplishments: he was admitted into the Privy Council, and 'his opinion became an oracle to his sovereign.' In 1586 he was included in the commission issued against Mary Queen of Scots, who was induced by his arguments and address to submit to trial, when she resisted every other solicitation to bow to the jurisdiction of the court. On the 29th of April following (1587) the Great Seal was delivered to him with the title of Lord Chancellor, though he had never undergone the probation of any subordinate legal office, and had long relinquished the profession. The appointment, as might naturally be expected, gave great dissatisfaction to the bar, and the sergeants at first refused to plead before him, but their prejudices were speedily subdued by the acuteness and rectitude of his judgment. 'His place was above his law, but not above his parts, which were so very pregnant and comprehensive that he could command other men's parts to as good purpose as his own.' His last illness was attributed to the mortification and chagrin consequent on the Queen's unkindness, in unexpectedly demanding instant payment of an old debt: he protested his present inability, and begged a short respite; which being denied him, preyed on his spirits, and brought on a fever. The Queen relented when informed of his danger, and condescended to carry him cordials with her own hands; but it was too late—the malady had taken too deep a root, and he yielded to its force on the 20th of November 1591, in the 51st year of his age. . . . He published 'A Treatise concerning Statutes or Acts of Parliament, and the Exposition thereof,' 4to, 1677, and his speeches during the time of his chancellorship are still extant in MS. He lived in a style of costly hospitality, and erected two splendid mansions in this county at Holdenby and Kirby; the former, though destroyed, will ever live in remembrance as the prison of the unhappy Charles; and the latter descended to the adopted representative of the family." Sir Christopher, dying without issue, devised the whole or greatest part of his inheritance to his nephew, Sir William Newport, Knight, entail-male, on condition of adopting the name of Hatton. This Sir William erected a magnificent monument to the memory of Sir Christopher Hatton in St Paul's Cathedral, where he lies buried. The manor, containing about 1768 acres of land, and "the great mansion-house of Holdenby," including the park and lands, which were valued at £1596, 13s. 11d., and the timber in the lordship, £1922, 3s., were afterwards sold to King James I. for £9922, 3s., and other specified considerations. Charles Duke of York, second son of James I., on whom Holdenby was entailed, became Prince of Wales on the death of Henry, his elder brother, in 1612, and in 1625 succeeded his father on the throne, under the title of Charles I. In the political struggle between him and his Parliament, Holdenby was seized in common with the whole of the royal demesnes, and by deed dated 5th May 1650, sold to Adam Baynes, Esq. of Knowsthorp, in Yorkshire, a captain in the Parliamentary army, and M.P. for Leeds in the only parliament in which it was ever represented, for £22,299, 6s. 10d. After the restoration, Charles II., it is presumed, gave Holdenby to his brother, James Duke of York (afterwards King James II.), who sold it to Lewis Duras (Marquis of Blanquefort, in France), who was created Baron Duras of Holdenby in 1673, and in 1677 succeeded to the Earldom of Feversham, but dying without issue in 1709, his titles became extinct. The representatives of the Earl of Feversham sold Holdenby to John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, "an accomplished courtier, an able statesman, and the most illustrious hero of the age," from whom it descended to his eldest daughter, Henrietta, wife of Francis Earl of Godolphin. From this lady the lordship passed, in 1733, to her nephew, Charles Spencer, fifth Earl of Sunderland, afterwards Duke of Marlborough, whose son, George, third Duke of Marlborough, sold it to Henry-Welbore-Agar Ellis, second Viscount Clifden, in Ireland, from whom the manor and lordship descended to Henry Agar Ellis, the third Viscount Clifden, and on his death in 1868 they passed to Henry George Agar-Ellis, his only son by Eliza Horatia Frederica, daughter of F. C. W. Seymour, Esq., born 1863. Residences—Holdenby House, Northampton; Roehampton, Surrey; and Dover House, Whitehall, S.W.

Holdenby House, which ranked among the royal palaces, was esteemed by Lord Chancellor Hatton, "the last and greatest monument of his youth." Camden says it was "a faire patterne of stately and magnificent building, making a faire glorious show;" and Norden describes it as "a very beautiful building, erected with such uniformity, and so admirably contrived as for the quantity and quality, as not to be matched in this land. In the hall there are raised three peramides, very high standing, insteade of a shryne, the midst whereof ascendeth unto the rooffe of the hall, the other two equal with the syde walls of same hall, and on them are depainted the armes of all the gentlemen of the same shire, and all the noblemen of this land. The situation of the same house is very pleasantlie contrived, mounting on an hill environed with most ample and lardge fields and goodly pastures, manie young groves newly planted, both pleasant and profitable; fishponds well replenished, a parke adjoyning of fallow deare, with a large warren of conyes, not far from the house, lyinge between East Haddon and Long Bugbye." King James occasionally resided here, and it became remarkable for the imprisonment of King Charles I. in 1646. "The decisive battle of Naseby," says Mr Baker, led to the irretrievable ruin of the royal cause; and the King, despairing of a reconciliation with his enemies, and finding his personal safety insecure, voluntarily surrendered himself to the Scotch army, then at Newark-on-Trent. The Lords and Commons immediately joined in a vote "That the person of the King shall be disposed of as both Houses of the Parliament of England should think fit." He was consequently conducted, in the charge of commissioners, to his princely mansion of Holdenby on the 15th of February, where he was met by many hundreds of the gentry of the country, and thousands "of spectators thronged the road, and hailed his majesty with acclamations," causing many a smile from his princely countenance. After the King was confined here for some months, he was forcibly carried away to the army. The only remains of this magnificent structure are two archways of uniform design, bearing date 1583, and part of the north side of the second quadrangle, which, since the date of its demolition, has been used as a farmhouse. It has been recently replaced by a splendid mansion, which, from its position and size, is one of the finest seats in the county, and is now the residence of Lady Clifden, widow of the late and mother of the present Viscount Clifden.

The Village of Holdenby consists of a few cottages contiguous to the old mansion, and is about $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. by N. of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is situate at the foot of a hill below the old house, about half a mile from the village, and consists of a nave and side aisles, chancel, south porch, and a low embattled tower containing two bells. These two were substituted for six bells presented by the Lord Chancellor Hatton, "weighing seven thousand lbs. weight," and worth £166, 13s. 4d. The chancel is entered by and through an elegantly-carved oak screen, which once was part of the old screen in the great hall of the mansion; it was placed there by the gift of Mr Amiand; and on each side of the chancel are four wooden stalls, with ornamented miserere seats. The chancel was rebuilt in 1848 by the then rector. The nave was restored in 1868 by Sir Gilbert Scott, the expense being defrayed principally by a sum of money left by the late Viscount Clifden, to which subscriptions from the present Viscount, the rector, and the parishioners were added. The living is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £20, 2s. 11d., in the patronage of the crown, and incumbency of the Rev. F. C. Alderson, M.A.; the tithes were commuted in 1843 for £673, 13s. 8d. There is a good rectory house inconveniently placed about half a mile from the church; there is also about eleven acres of glebe, which were exchanged to the living by the late and present Viscount Clifden. A Chantry was founded and endowed in 1391 by Rodert de Holdenby in a chapel to the honour of the Blessed Virgin within his mansion-house here.

A very respectable and commodious house in the village is at present used as a School.

Post-Office.—Wall Box, cleared at 5.15. P.M.

The principal inhabitants are—Rev. Frederick Cecil Alderson, M.A., rector; Lady Clifden, Holdenby House; William Clifton, shopkeeper; Ann Page, shopkeeper; Miss Martha Reading, schoolmistress; Mrs Ann Orland, corn miller; and the farmers are—William Gardner, Thomas Gulliver, Richard Letts, and William Painter.

Carrier to Northampton.—William Clifton, Monday, Wednesday and Saturday.

KISLINGBURY PARISH.

This parish, which lies on the southern bank of the river Nene, is bounded on the east by Upton, on the north by Harpole, from which it is divided by the Nene; by Upper Heyford on the west, and by Bugbrooke and Rothesthorpe on the south. It contains 1809 acres, of the rateable value of £4942; and its population in 1801 was 482; in 1831, 682; in 1841, 686; in 1851, 690; in 1861, 723; and in 1871, 669 souls. The gross estimated rental is £5569. The soil varies from a dark loam to gravel, and a large proportion of the parish is in pasture and meadow. The principal proprietors are—Mr Richard Harris, the Executors of the late Mr Charles Watts, Mr Thomas Manning, and a few resident yeomen.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, Gilbert de Gant, to whom Geoffrey was tenant, held 3½ hides of land in Ceselingeberie, which with 2 mills of the yearly rent of 40s., 14 acres of meadow, and 10 acres of wood, had been valued in King Edward's time at £4, but was then rated at £6. The Earl of Morton held half a hide here at the same time, which had been the freehold of Leuric, and was valued at 10s. before the Conquest, but was then advanced to 20s. Gilbert de Gant's possessions descended to his posterity, and in the reign of Henry II. it was certified that there were 3½ hides here of the fee of Gilbert de Gant, and half a hide of the fee of the Earl of Leicester. The lordship appears at this time to have been in the hands of John de Armenters, whose son Henry gave two parts of the tithes of his demesnes in this parish to the monks of Vermandois, which they afterwards let to the Prior of St Andrew's at Northampton. Nicholas de Segrave levied a fine of this manor in the 6th of Edward II. (1313), and in three years after was certified to be lord of Kislingbury. This Nicholas was succeeded by Warine de l'Isle, who was declared to be the heir to John de Armenters, and who was afterwards beheaded at Pontefract for having taken up arms and joined the nobility against the King. On this occasion his manor and estates here were seized into the hands of the crown, and in the 19th of the same reign (1326), granted to Roger de Whatton for the term of six years. But before the expiration of the year, the King's pardon was granted, and the estates restored to De l'Isle. From this family the manor passed by marriage, in the 6th of Richard II. (1383), to Thomas Lord Berkeley, from whom it passed, in course of descent, into the family of Neville, the last of which family, John Lord Latimer, died seized of it in the 19th of Elizabeth (1577), and dying without male issue, it was assigned to Elizabeth, the wife of Sir John Danvers of Dantesy, in Wiltshire, and was afterwards sold in parcels to different purchasers. The half hide of land which, in the reign of Henry II., was held of the fee of Leicester, was in the hands of Hugh Luvell in the reign of Henry III. In the 20th Edward III. (1347), Richard Lymell accounted for the third part of a knight's fee here of the Honor of Leicester; and this manor or reputed manor passed afterwards into the family of Shuckburgh. The Rev. Benjamin Tomkins of Harpole became possessed of this estate in 1658, and it was afterwards sold to different individuals. There are no remains of either of the manor-houses: the site of one of them is in the Hall Close, north-west of the churchyard.

The Village of Kislingbury is pleasantly situated at the northern extremity of the parish, near the river, over which there is a stone bridge leading to the turnpike-road from Northampton to Daventry, about $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles W. by S. of the former town, at which is the nearest railway station.

The Church, dedicated to St Luke, stands at the north end of the village, in a spacious churchyard, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch, chancel, and embattled tower (in which are five bells) supporting an octagonal spire. The chancel is divided from the nave by an open arch; in the chancel are sedilia and piscina, and at the east end of the south aisle is an ornamented piscina. It was thoroughly repaired in 1829-30, and a vestry added to the north side. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weedon, rated in the king's books at £13, 9s. 7d., and now valued at about £570 a year. The Rev. C. West, M.A., of Northampton, is the patron and rector. The rectory consists of 4a. 1r. 11p. of old enclosure, and 222a. and 3p. awarded by the Commissioners of Enclosure in 1779, in lieu of glebe and all tithes and moduses. The Rectory House, which is a respectable residence of Harleston stone, is situate at the north-east side of the churchyard.

The Baptist Chapel in the village is a small building, erected in 1828; and the Wesleyan Methodists have a small chapel, which was built in 1826.

Charities.—The town and charity estates consist of 33a. 3r. 21p. of land, allotted by the Commissioners of Enclosure, 16 tenements or cottages, and certain quit-rents, the whole of which produce about £110 per annum, of which £50 a year is given to the schoolmaster, the remainder is expended on the poor, repairs, &c. A new school was built in 1838 from the funds of the charity. Margaret Welsh's charity comprises 4a. 3r. 11p., yielding about £16 a year, which sum is applied by the rector and churchwardens, as trustees, in apprenticing orphan children, as opportunities arise and the state of the funds in hand permits.

Post-Office.—Wall Box. Letters arrive from Weedon at about 8.30. A.M., and are despatched at 5.10. P.M.

Billingham Thomas, beerhouse	Killingbeck James, relieving	Warwick Wm., carpenter, &c.
Bishop George, baker	officer (Bugbrooke district)
Borton Mr John Alexander	Linnell Mrs Mary	Farmers and Graziers.
Co-operative Stores (Mr Hedge,	Paine Thomas, butcher and	(Marked * are Yeomen).
manager)	vict. Red Lion
Davis Samuel, corn miller	Poole Mrs Mary, vict. Fighting	Coles George
Dunmore John, mason	Cock	Dunkley Thomas
Easton John, higgler	Smith Thomas, beer retailer	*Harris Richard
Farey Joseph, blacksmith	Starmer George, shopkeeper	*Simons William
Hannell Mrs Eliza., beerhouse	Stevenson Miss Harriet, school	Spokes Thomas
Hannell Abraham, baker	Thompson Mr James	Stanion John

Carriers to Northampton.—William James, Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday; and Mrs Sarah Ward, Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday.

RAVENSTHORPE PARISH.

Ravensthorpe comprises the hamlets of Teeton and Coton (the latter of which is locally situated in the hundred of Guilsborough), and is bounded on the east by Spratton and Creaton, on the north by Guilsborough, on the south by East Haddon, and on the west by a brook which rises in the parish, and divides it from West Haddon. The parish, inclusive of the hamlets, contains 2806 acres, and the population in 1801 was 390; in 1831, 612; in 1841, 712; and in 1871, 651;—exclusive of the hamlets the acreage is 1437, and the population in 1871, was 464 souls. The rateable value is £2567, and the gross estimated rental is £2975. The soil varies from a strong clay to a light arable and a gravelly land. The principal proprietors are—Lord Willoughby de Brooke (lord of the manor), Mrs Mary Lantsbery, Rev. E. H. Bateman, Mrs Louisa Langton, Mr J. Clarke, Mr William Trasler, Mr J. Robinson, Mr J. B. Hall, and Rev. T. Hillyard.

Manor.—The Earl of Morton held half a hide of land of the crown in Ravensthorpe at the time of the Conqueror's survey: it was the freehold of Edmar before the Conquest, and was valued at 5s. Drogo held 1 hide and 1 virgate of William Peverell, which had been advanced in value from 10s. to 20s; and Gilbert the Cook had one virgate here at the same time. In the reign of Henry I. the lordship was in the hands of Peter de Goldington, who had a grant of free warren in Cotes and Ravensthorpe, as had his ancestors. In the time of Henry II. Ravensthorpe and Cheta consisted of 4 hides of the fee of Peverell, and in the reign of Henry III., Peter de Goldington accounted for one knight's fee in Ravensthorpe, Cotes, and Tecne, which he held of the king, as of the Honor of Peverell; and Philip de Cowele for one knight's fee in Handenebe and Ravensthorpe, of the fee of Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester. In the 15th of Edward I. (1287), the heirs of Peter de Goldington accounted for half a knight's fee in Ravensthorpe and Cotes of the Honor of Peverell. Isabella de Hastings, the wife of William de Hastings, was lady of the manor of Ravensthorpe in the 9th of Edward II. (1316); and in the 20th of Edward III. (1347), Alice de St Andrew accounted for one knight's fee of the Honor of Leicester, a fourth part of which was in this lordship, and was held by the family of Cowele. In the 9th of Henry V. (1422), a fine was levied of this manor by Sir Thomas Beauchampe, Knight, in fee to Thomas Barton, and it appears to have reverted afterwards to the family of Brooke, who possessed it about the beginning of the reign of Edward III. From the Brookes the manor of Ravensthorpe appears to have passed into the family of Champernon, it being found by inquisition in the 15th of Edward IV. (1476), that John Champernon died seized of it, having held it of the king in capite by knight's service. This John de Champernon not leaving male issue, his inheritance passed to his daughters, Blanche, the wife of Sir Robert Willoughby, and Joan, a minor, at that time unmarried. "Sir Robert Willoughby, Knight," says Bridges, "was the son and heir of John Willoughby descended from the Willoughbys of Ersby, in Lincolnshire. In the reign of Richard III., he attached himself to Henry Earl of Richmond, appeared in arms in his behalf, and was a considerable instrument in gaining the victory on Bosworth field. On this account he was regarded as a person in whom the King might confide, and was soon after sent to prevent any commotions in Yorkshire, and to bring with him Edward Earl of Warwick, son and heir to the Duke of Clarence, whom Richard had confined in the castle of Sheriff Hutton. For his fidelity in these services he was created a Baron of the realm by the title of Lord Brooke, from his residence at Brooke, near Westbury, in Wiltshire." The manor of Ravensthorpe is still in the possession of the family of Brooke, the present Lord being Henry Peyto Verney, eighth Lord Willoughby de Brooke, of Compton Verney, Warwickshire.

The Village of Ravensthorpe is situated about $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. by N. of Northampton, and about the same distance N.E. by N. of Daventry.

The Church, dedicated to St Dennis or St Dionysius, stands in a churchyard separated from the road by a sunken wall, and consists of a nave and side aisles, chancel, and south porch. At the west end is an embattled tower with small pinnacles, containing five bells. The chancel was rebuilt in 1808. Underneath the communion-table is a large and curious chest, covered all over with thin plates of iron crossing each other at right angles. The church was partially restored in 1867 at a cost of £300, a moiety of which was supplied by subscription, and the other moiety by the patrons. The fabric seems to have been originally in the Early Decorated style. There is a piscina in the south aisle; a narrow arched entrance for the rood loft still remains at the south-east end of the nave; and the entrance to the chancel from the nave is through an ancient wooden screen handsomely carved. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £11, 13s. 4d., and now worth about £300 a year. It is in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, and incumbency of the Rev. William Arthur Strong, M.A. The vicarage consists of 59a. 1r. 20p., and a rate tithe of £1, os. 4d. per annum in Ravensthorpe, allotted at the enclosure in lieu of vicarial tithes; 32a. or. 10p. in lieu of the vicarial tithes of Coton, and a pecuniary composition for the vicarial tithes of Teeton. The rectory and advowson were presented in 1546 to the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford.

The Vicarage House is a respectable residence, situated a little north-west of the church.

The Calvinistic Baptists have a chapel here ; it is a brick building erected in 1812, is well pewed and fitted up, and will seat about 300 persons. The Rev. Josiah Robinson is the minister.

The National School was opened on the 15th of January 1838, and will accommodate 70 children.

Charities.—Mrs Palmer's charity consists of 19a. 26p., the rent of which, £29, 4s. 6d. per annum, subject to a rent-charge of £3 per annum to the poor of Abington, and £1 per annum to the poor of Creaton, is distributed annually on St Thomas's Day amongst the poor of Ravensthorpe. The town land, consisting of 13a. 3r. 39p., yields about £21, 4s. a year, and is distributed to the industrious poor not receiving parochial relief.

TEETON, or TETON HAMLET, forms the north-east angle of Ravensthorpe parish, and contains 666 acres, with a population, in 1871, of 102 souls. The rateable value is £1096, and the gross estimated rental £1291. The village of Teeton, which is situate about 2 miles S.E. of Ravensthorpe, contains a few good houses. Lord Clifden is lord of the manor and principal proprietor of the soil, which is chiefly a strong loam, with a portion of light red land. Miss Langton, Charles Rose Lucas, Esq., and others, have small estates here.

Manor.—William Peverell had 2 hides of land, which one Drogo held of him at the time of the Norman survey : it was valued before the Conquest at 10s., and now rated at 20s. In the reign of Henry III. it was part of the possessions of Peter de Goldington, and thenceforward was included in the jurisdiction of Ravensthorpe ; and Allan Fitz-Roald, the son-in-law of Peter Goldington, was certified in the 24th of Edward I. (1296), to hold the townships of Ravensthorpe and Teeton. The family of Gretton obtained an interest here at an early period ; and in the 39th^o of Elizabeth (1597) Robert Breton died seized of this manor, with 9 virgates of land, the rectory, and all the tithes. This is the first record we meet with in which Teeton is mentioned as a distinct manor. This family, after being seated here five centuries, became extinct, in the direct male line, on the death of Robert Breton, Esq., in 1714 ; and in 1718, his daughter alienated it to John Langton, Esq., of London, whose grandson, Thomas Langton, Esq., was succeeded by Lord Clifden, the present possessor.

There was formerly a Chapel in Teeton ; the commissioners, in 1547, state that there is "A chapell of Ese at Teton, within the parishe of Ravensthorpe, distant a myle from the parishe church, to which there belongethe no lands, and the parson of Ravensthorpe sayithe mass there once a weke. Howstling, people" (communicants) "there, xl."

Teeton House, the seat of Miss Langton, is a large and commodious mansion built by one of her ancestors.

COATON, or COTON HAMLET, is locally situated in Guilsborough hundred though forming a portion of Ravensthorpe parish. It contains 703 acres, of the rateable value of £1027, and its gross estimated rental is £1212. The population in 1871 was 85. The village is situate about one mile N.E. of Ravensthorpe.

Manor.—At the time of the general survey, William Peverell had 3½ virgates of land in Cota, which, with a mill and two acres of meadow, was valued in the Confessor's time at 15s., but now advanced to 30s. In the 35th of Henry III. (1251), Peter de Goldington was possessed of the manor of Cotes, and obtained a grant of free warren. Alan Fitz-Roald accounted for one knight's fee in Cotes, of the Honor of Peverell, in the 7th of Edward I. (1279) ; it afterwards passed through the families of Champernon, Willoughby de Brooke, and Grevill, and is now in the possession of the lord of the manor of Ravensthorpe.

Post-Office.—Edwin William Simpson, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 7. A.M., and are despatched at 6. P.M.

(Marked ¹ reside at Coton, ² at Teeton.)

Billing Thos., carpent & shopkr	Langton Miss, Teeton House	Farmers and Graziers.
Billing William, beerhouse	² Litchfield Thomas, beerhouse (and farmer)	¹ Adams John
Brains George, shoemaker	Mumford Hannah, shopkeeper	¹ Biggs William
¹ Bull John, corn miller	² Orland Edw., miller & farmer	Clarke John (yeoman) ¹
Butlin Mr John	Phipps Jas., vict. Chaquer Inn	Clarke William
Clarridge William, carpenter	Robinson Rev. Josiah (Baptist)	Clarke William (jun.)
Cowley John, shopkeeper	Russell Edward, blacksmith	Emery Samuel
Dickens Mr John	Russell Samuel, blacksmith	Hall John Butlin (yeoman)
Emerton John, baker & farmer	Simpson Edwin Wm., provision dealer, draper and post-office	Harris A. H.
Gammage William, tailor	Smith William D. plumber (and grazier)	Haynes Jon., Ravensthorpe Lodge
Gammage William, shoemaker	Soden Henry, carpenter	Langley Thomas
Green John, shoemaker	Strong Rev. William Arthur, M.A., vicar	Marsh Samuel
Haddley Thomas, bricklayer	Tarry Joseph, baker	² Painter John
Hickman Ann, beerhouse	Tarry Mr Thomas	Robinson John (yeoman)
Hickman Edward Underwood, butcher	¹ Tyrrell Geo., beerho. & tailor	Trasler Thomas (yeoman)
Hart Mr Robert		Wakelin Joseph
Hollowell Susan, schoolmistrs		Wiggs William
Landspery Mrs Mary		Wiggins Robert

The nearest railway station is Spratton (L. and N. W.), $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant.

Carriers to Northampton.—Harry Hickman, on Saturday, and John Hickman, on Wednesday and Saturday.

UPTON PARISH.

Upton is bounded on the east by Duston, on the north and west by Harpole; it is divided by the river Nene on the south from Kislingbury, and south-east from Wootton. The parish contains 967 acres, and its population in 1801 was 32; in 1831, 48; in 1841, 59; in 1851, 42; in 1861, 36; and in 1871, 33. The rateable value is £2632, and the gross estimated rental is £2798. There is a small wood in this parish containing about 30 acres. Morton tells us that "in one of Upton grounds, not far from Duston, there was lately felled a very stately oak, the body of which was 6 feet in diameter, and 18 feet in circumference, the stick or trunk 31 feet in length, the distance betwixt the extremity of the branches 42 feet. It yielded 12 waggon-loads and 8 good carriage-loads of timber, besides sap and roots, and a load and a half of bark." A considerable portion of the parish is in meadow and pasture. The soil varies from light red land and gravel to a strong grey loam, and the principal proprietor is Gervase Wright, Esq.

Manor.—The king himself held Optone, which consisted of two hides of land, at the time of the Domesday survey. There were a mill of the yearly rent of 12s. 8d., 6 acres of meadow, and half a hide of land at Harleston pertaining to this manor, the whole of which was valued, as in the time of King Edward, at £15 yearly. The manor of Upton continued in the hands of the crown till the reign of Henry II., when it was given with its appurtenances to Robert Fitz-Sewin, otherwise called Robert de Chaunceux, of Northampton. By inquisition taken in the reign of Henry III., John de Chaunceux was certified to hold the manor of Upton, with the hundred of Newbottle-Grove belonging to it, by the serjeanty of finding one armed soldier in the king's army in time of war for 40 days at his own cost. The manor thus continued in the possession of this family till the 21st of Edward III. (1348), when Nicholas de Chaunceux died seized of it, and was succeeded by Nicholas Parles. By inquisition taken at his death, he was found to hold this manor of the king in capite, by the service of finding an armed soldier for 40 days within the four seas at his own expense, and a bailiff to execute the sheriffs' writs within the hundred of Newbottle-Grove. Roesia, the wife of Nicholas Parles, died seized of this lordship in the 31st of this reign (1358), and was succeeded by Richard, the son of William de Clendon, who obtained the king's license in the 21st of Richard II. (1398) to enfeoff Nicholas de Hilton and William de Grendon, in the said lordship and hundred. He afterwards conveyed them to William Krendon, John Cydlington, and Walter Clendon, who, in the 7th Henry V. (1420), were fined 10 marks for the offence of purchasing the premises without license from the crown. The same year they were sold by them to Richard Knightley, Esq., in which family they continued till about the year 1600, when Sir Richard Knightley sold them to William Samwell, Esq., of Northampton (afterwards knighted), for £7366, 13s. 4d. The great grandson of Sir Thomas Samwell was created a baronet in 1675; the title became extinct on the death of Sir Wenman Samwell, the fourth baronet, in 1789; but this manor, with the other family estates, devolved, under the limitations of the will of Sir Thomas Samwell, the third baronet, to his nephew. T. S. Watson, Esq., who adopted the name and arms of Samwell, by Act of Parliament, in 1790. Gervase Wright, Esq., Miss Drought, and Sir Henry Fairfax are the present proprietors. St James's Abbey, near Northampton, had Upton mill and other possessions here, which were granted to it by Robert Fitz-Sewin.

The Village of Upton, which is very small, is about 2 miles W. of Northampton.

The Church, or Parochial Chapel, dedicated to St Michael, is an ancient building, consisting of an embattled tower containing two bells, nave, south porch, and chancel. The chancel and body is of one piece without any division. The church presents a very peculiar and pleasing exterior, being entirely covered with ivy even to the top of the tower. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of St Peter's, Northampton, in the patronage of the Masters, Co-Brothers, and Sisters of St Katherine's Hospital, London. The Rev. E. N. Tom, M.A., is rector. In the church are monuments to the memory of members of the families of Samwell, Knightley, and Watson.

Upton House is the seat of Gervase Wright, Esq. The oldest part of the mansion is of stone; but the east front was rebuilt of brick, and a wing added, by the father of Sir Thomas Samwell.

Biography.—James Harrington, Esq., an eminent political writer, eldest son of Sir James Harrington, by Jane, daughter of Sir William Samwell of Upton, was born in the manor-house in 1611. He was one of the grooms of the bedchamber to King Charles I. during his confinement at Holdenby, and though a zealous republican in principle, he was much attached to the person of the unfortunate monarch, and was with him on the scaffold. Some short time before the Restoration, he, with other ingenious persons, established a political debating society called the Rota, which met nightly in London, and in which was projected a scheme of commonwealth government by rotation and balloting. The design was, that a third part of the House should be removed every year by ballot, so that every ninth year the whole body would be entirely altered. He published several books both in verse and prose, the principal of which is "The Commonwealth of Oceana," dedicated to Oliver Cromwell. He died of a paralytic stroke in 1677, and was buried in St Margaret's Church, Westminster.

A County Asylum is now being built in Berry-wood in this parish, for the accommodation of 402 inmates, at an estimated cost of £70,720. The probable cost, it is thought, will be £100,000.

Letters arrive from Northampton by way of Duston.

The principal inhabitants are—Gervase Wright, Esq., Upton House; William Boswell, farmer; Edward Loake, farmer; and John Spokes, farmer and corn miller.

WHILTON PARISH

Is bounded by Long Buckby on the north, by Brington on the east, on the south by Brockhall, and on the west by Norton, from which it is partly divided by the Roman road, Watling Street. The parish contains 919 acres, of the rateable value of £3710. It contained a population in 1801 of 309; in 1831, 397; in 1841, 401; in 1851, 357; in 1861, 350; and in 1871, 351. The gross estimated rental is £4328. The parish is intersected by the London and North-Western Railway, the Grand Junction Canal, and the Roman Watling Street. The railway occupies 11a. 2r. 27p., which is rated at £1168. The soil varies from gravel to a dark loam with a mixture of clay, and the lordship is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture. There are limekilns near the Grand Junction Canal. The principal landowners are Rev. John Thomas Henry Smith, and John Albert Craven, Esq. of Whilton Lodge.

Manor.—In the time of the Conqueror, the Earl of Morton had 1 hide of land in Waltone, which, with a mill of the yearly rent of 40d., and 5 acres of meadow, was rated, in the Confessor's time (when it was the freehold of Bovi), at 10s., but now advanced to four times that sum. "This hide of land, in Henry II.'s time," says Bridges, was in the hands of Roger de Mowbray, whose father, Nigil de Albini, for his fidelity to Henry I., had granted to him the forfeited lands of Stuteville and the possessions of Robert de Mowbray, Earl of Northumberland, and assumed the surname of Mowbray, to which family he was related by his mother's side, by the king's express command. William de Stuteville afterwards laying claim to the barony of Mowbray, William, the heir of Roger de Mowbray, on condition that he should renounce all pretensions for the future, gave him up 18 knights' fees, in which number appears to have been included this hide in Whilton, which was held from henceforward of the successors of William de Stuteville." From the family of De Stuteville this manor descended to the Wakes; and in the 9th of Edward II. (1316), William de Neville was lord of Whilton. In the 20th of Edward III. (1347), James de Neville accounted for one knight's fee here, which he held of the Lady of Hanlowe. This lady was Margaret, the widow of Edmund of Woodstock, Earl of Kent, grand-daughter to Baldwin de Wake, and heir of John and Thomas Wake, her brothers. She was succeeded by John Plantagenet, Earl of Kent, who died possessed of 3½ knights' fees, in Whilton and Staverton in the 26th of this reign (1353). In the 14th of Richard II. (1391), the manor and advowson of the church, being then in the hands of the crown, were granted to Sir John Holt, who left them to his son. In the 35th of Edward III. (1362), John Mowbray, lord of Axiholme, was found to die seized of 3 knight's fees in Whilton, Staverton, and Grimscote, in the possession of Thomas de Wake. A fine was levied in the 26th of Henry VI. (1448); a fine was also levied by Humphrey Duke of Buckingham of the manor of Whilton and tenements in Staverton. This duke was cousin and heir to Joan, daughter of Hugh Earl of Stafford, widow of Thomas, elder brother to Edmund Holland, Earl of Kent, who had enjoyed these 3 knight's fees as part of her dower. Alice, the wife of William Huggefurd, died seized of the manor of Whilton and advowson of the church in the 12th of Edward IV. (1473), which were held of John Duke of Norfolk as of his manor of Melton-Mowbray, and was succeeded by Humphrey Beaufe, her son and heir by a former husband. From this gentleman it came, in course of descent, to Thomas Beaufoy, Esq., who, in 1625, conveyed it to several persons in trust, to convey their respective shares to the purchasers in fee; but the manor was specially reserved, under the penalty of a bond, and was accordingly re-conveyed to the vendor, whose son, Henry Beaufoy, Esq., levied a fine of it in 1656, and soon after alienated it to Samuel Theed of Daventry. This Samuel Theed sold it, in 1664, to Richard Freeman of Whilton, from whom it descended to his grandson, Richard Freeman, Esq., who bought several of the small freehold estates originating in the sale of 1625. By virtue of a deed of settlement made in 1709, on his marriage with Elizabeth Langton, the manor devolved to her eldest son, the Rev. Langton Freeman, who devised it to his nephew, Thomas Freeman of Daventry, whose daughter carried it in marriage to Charles Rattray, M.D., from whom it passed, by purchase, to Mr John Clarke, senior, of Long Buckby, the present possessor.

All memory of the site of the manor-house has perished, but it is supposed to have stood in the field still called the park.

The Village of Whilton is pleasantly situated on a slight eminence, about 4 miles E.N.E. of Daventry, 8 N.W. of Northampton, and 4 miles from the Weedon Station on the London and North-Western Railway.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, is a small structure, consisting of a tower, nave, side aisles, south porch, and chancel. The interior is tastefully fitted up and much modernised. The upper part of the tower was erected at the expense of the late W. Rose, Esq., some years since, who also presented a peal of six bells. Over the entrance to the chancel is a small organ, presented by the Rev. W. L. Holden Rose, formerly rector of this parish, who also rebuilt the chancel. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £12, 16s. 3d., and now valued at about £400 a year. W. G. Rose, Esq., is the patron, and the incumbent is the Rev. Randolph Skipwith, M.A. The Commissioners of Enclosure awarded 187a. 2r. 8p. in lieu of glebe, tithes, and moduses of both old and new enclosures.

The Rectory House, which is a good residence, built several years ago by the Rev. W. L. H. Rose, stands to the north-west of the churchyard, and contains a few good family portraits.

The School was endowed in 1768 by Mr Jonathan Emery with the sum of £500, which sum was expended in the purchase of a schoolhouse and garden adjoining in Whilton, and nearly 11 acres of land in Long Buckby, which now lets for about £36 a year. Here is an Infant School, mainly supported by the rector.

Charities.—Mrs Judith Worsfold, of Edmonton, in Middlesex, daughter of the Rev. John Spateman, formerly rector of this parish, died in 1815, and by her will bequeathed £1000, 3 per cent. consols, to be laid out in the purchase of land, and the profits thereof to be applied in teaching poor children to read and write. The stock was sold in 1824 for £952, out of which £900 has been paid for the purchase of land, and the remainder was applied towards the expense of the conveyance, &c., and it now lets for £32 a year. The other charities are—the interest of £20, a portion of Langton Freeman's gift, to be distributed among the poor of Whilton; the interest of £400, 3 per cent. consols., for clothing 12 poor girls; and the interest of £100, left to the poor by Mr John Murcott in 1833.

Antiquities.—"In that part of Whilton Field," says Morton, "adjoining to the Watling Street, have been ploughed and digged up old foundations, the stones of ruined walls, and the like; and amongst the ruins some pieces of Roman money, which, with the country people there, have the name of Dane Money."

The remains of the Rev. Langton Freeman, a native of this parish, and a man remarkable for his eccentricities, lie enveloped in a feather-bed in a summer-house a little south of the village, in accordance with the following extract from his will, dated 16th September 1783:—"And first, for four or five days after my decease, and till my body grows offensive, I would not be removed out of the place or bed I shall die on; and then I would be carried and laid in the same bed, decently and privately, in the summer-house now erected in the garden belonging to the dwelling-house where I now inhabit in Whilton, and to be laid in the same bed there, with all the appurtenances thereto belonging, and to be wrapped in a strong double winding-sheet; and in all other respects to be interred as near as may be, to the description we receive in Holy Scripture of our Saviour's burial: the doors and windows to be locked up or bolted, and to be kept as near in the same manner and state they shall be in at the time of my decease; and I desire that the building or summer-house may be planted around with evergreen plants, and fenced off with iron or oak pales, and painted of a dark-blue colour." His body was deposited in the said summer-house on the 11th of October 1783.

Post-Office.—Letters arrive here from Daventry at 9.30. A.M., and are despatched thereto at 4.40 P.M. The nearest Money-Order and Telegraph Office is Long Buckby—Wm. Smith, postmaster.

Adams James, baker
 Boot Thomas, corn miller
 Carvell William, vict. Plough
 Collins William, tailor, Whilton Locks
 Craven Jno. Albert, Esq. J.P. Whilton Lodge
 Darlow Joseph, butcher
 Dunkley William, baker
 Dyer John, schoolmaster
 Elliott Mrs Elizabeth, vict. Spotted Cow

Emery Mrs Elizabeth
 Emery Miss Matilda
 Langton Jno. butcher
 Marks Benjamin, carpenter
 Reynolds Thomas Hy. corn & coal mert. Whilton Wharf
 Skipwith Rev. Rph., M.A. vicar
 Smith Wm. grocer & postmaster
 Thompson George, blacksmith, Whilton Locks
 Tilley Jno. shoemaker, Whilton Locks

Townley Jno. saddler
 Wright Thomas, butcher and grocer, Whilton Locks

Farmers and Graziers. *(Marked * are Yamen.)*

*Emery James
 Emery Robert
 *Langton Perridge
 Reynolds Thomas Henry, Whilton Locks
 Terry Edward

Carriers to Daventry.—James Adams, Mon. Wed. and Friday; Thomas Boot and William Dunkley, Wednesday; and to Northampton, each of the three on Saturday only.

GUISLBOROUGH HUNDRED

Is situated in the north-west part of the county, bordering on Leicestershire, from which it is separated by the river Avon. It is bounded on the east by the hundred of Orlingbury, on the north by that of Rothwell, on the west by Fawsley hundred and a part of Warwickshire, and on the south by Nobottle-Grove and Spelhoe hundreds. It averages about seven miles square, and contains 42,054 statute acres.

Until the reign of Charles I., this hundred seems to have been in the possession of the crown, when it was granted to William Lord Craven, son of Sir William Craven, Lord Mayor of London in the year 1612, who, after having acquired much military honour under Gustavus Adolphus in Germany, and Henry Prince of Orange in the Netherlands, was created a baron of the realm by the title of Lord Craven of Hampsted Marshall, in Berkshire, in the second of Charles I.; and, in consideration of his loyalty during the rebellion, he was created Earl Craven, of Craven, in Yorkshire, by Charles II., in 1665. Lord Craven settled the hundred of Guilsborough upon Sir William Craven, of Winwick, Knight, on the occasion of his marriage with Mary, the daughter and co-heir of George Clerke, Esq., of Watford, who died in possession of it in 1707.

This hundred is divided into seventeen parishes, of which the following is an enumeration, showing the population in 1871, with the number of houses, rateable value, gross estimated rental, and the acreage of each parish according to the rate-book:—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	Houses.			Population.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Ashby Cold,	2,077	101	6	—	215	187	402	£ 3,074	£ 3,605
Buckby Long,	3,591	588	25	1	1,243	1,250	2,493	11,173	13,455
Murcott, part of, Hamlet }
Clay Coton,	963	26	—	—	63	57	120	1,990	2,243
Cottesbrooke,	2,777	48	6	—	101	99	200	4,611	5,026
Creaton Great,	932	112	12	1	204	213	417	1,788	2,128
Crick,	3,207	206	35	3	425	472	897	6,759	7,705
Elkington,	1,849	11	—	—	29	28	57	2,908	3,240
Guilsborough, with Nor- toft, Hamlet ,	2,180	140	19	—	279	308	587	4,167	4,804
Hollowell,	1,023	61	15	—	112	117	229	1,598	1,865
Haddon West,	2,596	228	7	—	432	471	903	5,651	6,339
Lilbourne,	1,624	70	1	—	141	140	281	3,352	3,769
Naseby,	3,324	148	2	2	374	319	693	4,630	5,222
Coton, Hamlet (part of) Ravensthorpe parish)...	703	20	4	—	46	39	85	1,027	1,212
Stanford,	2,051	8	—	—	18	10	28	3,703	4,143
Thornby,	1,182	54	1	—	115	123	238	2,152	2,457
Watford,	3,385	103	3	—	216	228	444	12,349	14,170
Welford,	3,030	253	29	1	467	495	962	6,473	7,328
Winwick,	2,012	34	—	—	67	74	141	3,468	4,035
Yelvertoft,	2,185	156	12	—	297	284	581	4,593	5,229
	40,691	2,367	177	8	4,844	4,914	9,758	85,466	97,975

CHARITIES OF GUILSBOROUGH HUNDRED, as abstracted from the Parliamentary Reports, with the date of each bequest, and the name and purpose of the donor. See also the histories of the parishes:—

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purpose applied.	Annual value.
1710.	William Wilkes (land).....	Ashby Cold parish, for teaching children	£18 0 0
1736.	Richard Ward (land)	Ditto (and Welford), ditto	12 0 0
"	Church Land	Ditto	21 10 0
"	Poor's Land and Doles	Buckby Long parish	37 0 0
1783.	Langton Freeman (£400)	Ditto, school	20 0 0
"	Ditto, ditto. (£50)	Ditto, poor	2 10 0
"	Ancient benefactions (£80 in 4 per cents)	Clay Coton parish, poor	4 4 0
"	Elizabeth Caves (£20 in 4 per cents) }
1738.	Valentine Brewis (£25)	Clay Coton parish, church	0 17 0
1655.	John Langham (land)	Cottesbrooke parish, hospital for 8 poor people	60 0 0
1780.	Elizabeth Ives (£100, 3 per cent. } consols)	Cottesbrooke parish, poor	3 0 0
1809.	Miss Langham (£100)	Ditto, ditto	4 2 4
1731.	Mary Palmer (land)	Creaton parish, bread to poor ...	1 0 0
1622.	John Bucknell (rent)	Crick parish, poor	0 8 4
1776.	Poor's Land	Ditto, ditto	20 0 0
1806.	Richard Rayson (land)	Ditto, poor and school	30 0 0
1819.	George Judkin, (£100 4 per cents) ..	Ditto, school	4 0 0
1822.	Elizabeth Heygate (£100)	Ditto, Sunday-school	5 0 0
"	William Henfray (£364, 3 per ct. } consols	Ditto, school and Independent minister	4 16 0
1688.	Sir John Langham (rent)	Guilsborough parish, Free Grammar School	80 0 0
1609.	William Gilbert and others (£205)...	Guilsborough parish, Writing School	65 0 0
1771.	Bridget Bateman and — Butlin (£15)	Guilsborough parish, poor	0 15 0
1754.	Dorothy Dixon (£20)	Ditto, poor widows (lost)
1756.	Elizabeth Lucas (£30)	Hollowell Hospital, poor (half of it is lost)	0 15 0
"	Church Land	Lilbourne parish	18 0 0
1707.	William Clark (£2 a year)	Ditto, poor	2 0 0
1796.	Thomas Perkins (£20)	Ditto, ditto	1 0 0
1707.	James Townsend (rent)	Ditto, ditto	0 10 0
"	Saml. Harris and Thos. Wright (£11)	Naseby parish, poor (lost).
"	Church Land	Thornby parish	5 0 0
1763.	Thomas Breet (£6)	Ditto, bread to poor	0 6 0
1702.	Sarah Clarke (£400)	Watford parish, school	35 0 0
1690.	Charity Estate	West Haddon parish, poor	100 0 0
"	Church Land	Ditto, ditto	24 0 0
"	Jacob Lucas, Ed. Burnham, etc. (£50)	Ditto, apprenticing children	2 10 0
"	Church and Poor Land	Welford parish	60 0 0
1747.	Rene Payne (£100)	Ditto, school	5 0 0
1764.	John Payne (£100)	Ditto, ditto	5 0 0
1736.	Richard Ward (land)	Ditto, ditto	4 10 0
1807.	Poor Rates (£228)	Ditto, ditto	10 0 0
1647.	John Lord Craven (£200)	Winwick parish, poor	24 0 0
1786.	John Dixon (land)	Yelvertoft parish, reprs. of chrch. ..	50 0 0
"	Poor's Land	Ditto, poor	16 0 0
1820.	John Cattell (£50)	Ditto, ditto	2 10 0
"	Several benefactions	Ditto, Free School	45 0 0
Total,			£805 3 8

ASHBY COLD PARISH.

Ashby Cold, or Cold Ashby, is bounded on the east by Naseby parish, on the north by Welford, on the west by Winwick, and on the south by Thornby. It contains 2077 acres; its population in 1801 was 379; in 1831, 385; in 1841, 433; in 1851, 467; in 1861, 444; and in 1871, 402 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3074, and the gross estimated rental £3605. It is called Essebi in Domesday Book, and, from its high and exposed situation, has since been called Cold Ashby. The quality of the soil is good, and chiefly of a loamy nature; there is some excellent grazing and also corn land. The ground towards the south is undulating, and a valley commences close to the village, which winds along by Guilsborough towards Northampton. The principal proprietors of the soil are—Robert Willis Blencowe, Esq. (lord of the manor); George Buxton, Esq.; Isaac E. Lovell, Esq.; Samuel Walker, and the Trustees of Christ's Hospital.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, this lordship consisted of two hides of land of the soke of Winwicke, and belonging to the monks of Coventry. The manor of Winwicke, of which Ashby was a member, was one of the twenty-four villages with which Earl Leofric, the founder, endowed the Abbey of Coventry in the reign of Edward the Confessor. The Earl of Morton held half a hide here; William Peverel had likewise one and a half virgate, and here were also two and a half virgates pertaining to the manor of Welford at the same time. The lands which belonged to the Abbey of Coventry appear to have been held by Hugh de Leycester, the founder of the Priory of Daventry, and whose descendants bestowed a great part on Pipwell Abbey. Osbert, the son and successor of Hugh de Leycester, gave fourteen virgates of the fee of Poer to the monastery of Pipwell, and ten virgates which he held of the fee of Richard de Kaynes. These benefactions were afterwards ratified by Hugh Poer, his grandson and heir. The abbot built the grange on a part of these lands. In the reign of Henry II. Essebi contained two and a half hides of the fee of Coventry, one large virgate of the fee of Peverel in the hands of Henry de Mundevill, three large virgates held by Hugh de Kaynes, and half a hide of the fee of Welford in the possession of one Robert. In the twenty-fourth year of the reign of Edward I. (1296), the Abbot of Pipwell was certified to hold here half a knight's fee of Roger de Mowbray, who held it of the king in capite; the heir of Watford a fourth part of one knight's fee in capite of the crown; and the Prior of Coventry a fourth part of one knight's fee also of the crown in capite. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), the Abbot of Pipwell was lord of the manor of Cold Ashby; and in the seventeenth of the same reign (1324), he levied a fine of the manor in fee simple. In the twentieth of Edward III. (1347) Adam de Asheby accounted for the fourth part of one knight's fee here, which he held of the prior of the Abbey of Coventry, and the heir of Peter de Goldington one and three-quarter parts of a knight's fee in Cold Ashby and other places, of the Honor of Peverel. By the survey taken in the twenty-sixth of Henry VIII. (1535), the revenues of Pipwell Abbey in this lordship were rated at £20, 12s. 4d. After the dissolution of the religious houses, certain possessions in Cold Ashby belonging to the Abbey of Pipwell were granted to Sir Edward Knightley and Dorothy Dayrell, the wife of William Saunders, Esq., and in the twelfth of Elizabeth (1570), certain lands called the Wonge and the Furze, in this lordship, belonging to this monastery, were granted to Sir Christopher Hatton. In the twenty-second of Elizabeth (1580) a messuage, part of the possessions of the Hospital of St John of Jerusalem, was granted to Edward Earl of Lincoln.

The Village of Cold Ashby occupies a healthy situation on a tract of elevated ground stretching along the north-western verges of the county, about eleven and a half miles N.N.W. from Northampton, eleven north-east from Daventry, nine south-west from Market Harborough, and six from the Crick Station of the London and North-Western Railway. There is a perennial spring of soft water in the village, which forms one of the sources of the river Nene, and flowing down the above valley meets with other streams, especially one rising in the village of Naseby, two and a half miles distant, and which is another of the chief sources of the Nene.

The Church, dedicated to St Denis, or St Dionysius, is a small ancient edifice, supposed to be originally Norman, the remains of a Norman arch being discernible on the north side. It consists of a nave, chancel, and a low embattled tower, in which are three bells and a clock. One of the bells, which is very ancient, and is said to have been brought from Sulby Abbey, bears this inscription in Gothic capitals, MARIA VOCOR ANO DNI. MCCCXVII. The font is massive and very beautiful. The church was restored in 1840, under the direction of the late patron and incumbent, the Rev. William Mousley, M.A., who presented it with an organ. A handsomely bound set of books for the desk was presented at the same time by Joseph Faux, Esq. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £6, os. 5d., and now worth £280 per annum. The Rev. Gregory Bateman, M.A., the incumbent of this parish, is the author of "Sacred Poems," etc. The glebe land consists of 120 acres. The Vicarage House is situated near the village.

A handsome School, with a residence for the teacher, was erected here by subscription in 1867—Joseph Faux, Esq., being the principal contributor, assisted by contributions from R. W. Blencowe, Esq., George Buxton, Esq., and others. The site was given by the vicar, to whom and the churchwardens the school was conveyed in perpetuity.

Biography.—Richard Knolles, or Knowles, the famous historian of the Turkish empire, was a native of this parish. He entered the University of Oxford about 1560, and became a fellow of Lincoln College. He published his celebrated work in London in 1610, and he translated Bodin's six books of a "Commonwealth" into English in 1606. It was the perusal of Mr Knowles's work, "The History of the Turks," that first inflamed Lord Byron with a desire to visit Turkey. Mr Knowles was born in 1540; his marriage with Mrs Frances Lyoldenby is recorded in the Cold Ashby register, June 1560, and his burial in 1601. He had a numerous family, the baptisms of three sons and three daughters being in the register.

Charities.—Mr William Wickes by will, dated August 19, 1710, left a rent-charge of £18 a year to the minister of this parish for the time being and his successors, upon condition that they should teach the children of the poor of this parish to read the Bible, and catechise them publicly in the church during the season of Lent and certain other Sundays mentioned in the will. The ministers have performed these duties. A sum of £6 per annum, derived from a piece of land called the Cole-pit meadow, left by Mr Richard Ward in 1736, is applied to the school, which is now established under the Elementary Education Act 1871, and under five elected trustees, of which the vicar is chairman. The land above mentioned produces £12 per annum, half of which is left to the parish of Welford for the education of the children of the poor of that parish. The church land of the parish consists of six acres, producing a yearly rent of £21, 10s., which is expended in the repairs of the church.

Post-Office.—Wall Box. Cleared at 5.20 P.M.; letters via Welford.

Askew John, shopkeeper	Haddon, Mrs Ann	Webb James, blacksmith
Attfield David, butcher & farmer	Haddon, David, higgler and grazier	Wickes John, shoemaker
Bateman Rev. Gregory, M.A. vicar	Jeffs Wm. Haddon, shopkr.	Farmers and Graziers.
Beal George, baker	King Samuel, butcher & farmer	Ashby Edward
Beal, John, carpenter and grzr.	Moss Thomas, shoemaker	Burdett Samuel
Bennett Charles Wm. vict.	Odd George Wm. butcher	Carvell Joseph
Black Horse	Perkins Wm. wheelwright and carpenter	Dexter William
Buckingham Miss Susannah, schoolmistress	Rigby Mrs Emma	Gilbert Joseph (yeoman)
Cattell Mr Richard	Rigby Mrs Mary	Gilbert William, Lodge
Cherry Wm. carpenter & shopkr.	Walden Wm. gardener	Parker George
Eames John, vict. Bull , & farmer	Watts Thos. bricklyr. & bldr.	Wright William and John Carriers.—James Walden and David Haddon to Northampton on Saturday, and Samuel King on Wednesday and Saturday.

BUCKBY LONG PARISH.

This parish comprises a part of the hamlet of Murcott, and is bounded on the east by East Haddon, on the north by West Haddon, on the west by Welton, and on the south by Whilton. It contains, with Murcott, 3,591 acres, and its population in 1801 was 1,600; in 1831, 2,078; in 1841, 2,145; in 1851, 2,340; in 1861, 2,500; and in 1871, 2,493 souls. The rateable value is £11,173, and the amount of the gross estimated rental is £13,455. The parish is intersected by the London and North-Western Railway. The soil is various: in some parts the quality is inferior, while in others it is very productive. The principal proprietors are—Earl Spencer, Alfred Seymour, Esq. (lord of the manor), Captain Senhouse, Rev. J. T. H. Smith, and others. Bridges says, in his time, "Long Buckby contained one hundred and seventy-five houses, and upwards of two hundred and forty families, and that there are four old houses besides, the lodge and the folly" continues he, "both standing on the heath to the east of the town, a water-mill near Murcott, and another water mill a little below the town. From the length of the village it is commonly called Long Buckby." There is a tradition confirmed by the discovery of old foundation walls eight or ten feet thick, that there was formerly a castle here. In Buckby lordship are some quarries of good building stone. Upon the heath is a large open warren, and an enclosed one was destroyed some years ago. A brook, which takes its rise from Nenmore springs in West Haddon field, bounds this lordship from north to south; and a second brook, rising from a spring on the heath, runs from east to west, and divides Buckby from East Haddon, Brington, and Whilton. The Watling Street way touches on a part of the lordship.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey Alured held of the Earl of Morton three virgates of land in Buchebi, as it was then called, which had been the freehold of Turbern and Alric before the Conquest, and was valued at 30s. In the reign of Henry II., Saier de Quincy held two and a half hides and one large virgate in Buckby of the fee of Aunsel de Chokes; William Fitz-Alfred half a hide of the fee of Montacute; and the Earl of Leicester held three large virgates at the same time. Saier de Quincy was succeeded by Saier, his youngest son, afterwards advanced to the dignity of Earl of Winchester, who having married Margaret the sister and co-heir of Robert Fitz-Parnell, Earl of Leicester, became possessed of a moiety of the Honor of Leicester. Bridges tells us that "when the barons took up arms, he associated with them, and upon the death of King John continued to resist his successor. At the battle of Lincoln, in the first year of Henry III. (1216), where the barons' forces were defeated, Saiher Earl of Winchester was one of the chief prisoners taken that day; but upon a proper submission obtained his liberty, and the restoration of his lands, which had been seized by the crown. The next year he entered, with several others of the English nobility, on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, and died in the fourth year of this reign on his progress towards Jerusalem." His successor was Roger de Quincy, his second son (Robert the elder son being in the Holy Land), who, by the king's permission, assumed the title of Earl of Winchester; but dying without male issue in the forty-eighth of Henry III. (1264), his estate descended to his three daughters and heirs by Helen his first wife. The manor of Buckby appears to have devolved, after this time, to Henry de Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, who, marrying Margaret daughter and heir of William, the son of William Longspe, Earl of Salisbury, claimed by his marriage the Earldom of Salisbury. In the eighth of Edward I. (1280), he obtained for himself and his heirs a weekly market on Thursday at his manor of Buckby, and two annual fairs, one on the eve of St. Gregory and the three days following, and the other on the eve of St. Lawrence and the three following days. The market and fairs being changed in the following year, he obtained a charter for a weekly market upon Tuesday, and for two fairs yearly, each lasting four days, one beginning on the eve of St. Philip and St. James, and the other on the eve of St. Michael. By inquisition taken in the eleventh of Edward I. (1183), he was certified to hold two parts of the township of Buckby of the king in capite by the service of half a knight's fee; and the Prior of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem another part of the said township of the heirs of Montacute, who held it of the Abbot of Gresteyn, who held it in frank almon. The Earl of Lincoln died in the fourth of Edward II. (1311), leaving Alice his daughter, the Countess of Lancaster, his successor in this lordship; and in the ninth of this reign (1316) the Earl of Lancaster was certified to be lord of the manor. "Thomas Earl of Lancaster," writes Bridges, "was the chief of those nobles who combined together against the King's favourite, Piers de Gaveston; and, with the Earl of Warwick, was instrumental in causing him to be put to death. After this he promoted the insurrection on account of the Dispensers, and in the fourteenth of this reign sent a message from St Albans by the Bishops of Ely, Hereford, and Chichester, to the King at London, requiring him to banish them as guilty of great misdemeanours and extremely obnoxious to his subjects. Having thus drawn upon himself the King's resentment, and being closely pursued by his forces, he was taken after a short skirmish at Burrough Bridge in Yorkshire, conveyed to Pontefract, and there beheaded." At his death the manor of Buckby was forfeited to the crown, and in the fifteenth of Edward II. (1322) was given to Ralph Basset, of Drayton, and his heirs. This Ralph was appointed constable of Northampton Castle in the fourteenth of this reign, and in the year following joined in commission with John de Somery to seize the Castle of Kenilworth, confiscated to the crown by the forfeiture of the Earl of Lancaster, and constituted steward of the Duchy of Aquitain. He died in the seventeenth of Edward III. (1340), and was succeeded by Ralph his grandson, who after having visited several foreign countries and performed a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, died in the thirteenth of Richard II. (1320). By his death the line of Basset and Stafford became quite extinct, and this manor came to Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, son to Thomas Earl of Warwick, elder brother of Joan the wife of Ralph Basset. In the eleventh of Richard II. (1388), he appeared with other nobles in arms at Hornsey Park, and obliged the King the year following to call a parliament. Having lost the royal favour by this means, he was invited in the twenty-first of this reign (1398) by the King to an entertainment, suddenly arrested, accused of high treason, condemned and beheaded, and his lands confiscated to the crown. The manor of Buckby was then given to John Marquis of Dorset and Margaret his wife. This John was the eldest son of John of Gaunt by Catharine Swinford his last wife. He was created Earl of Somerset in the twentieth of this reign (1397), and was constituted Lord Chamberlain of England in the first of Henry IV. (1399.) After his decease in the eleventh of this reign (1410), Margaret his countess married Thomas Duke of Clarence, second son to the King, who by this marriage succeeded to the lands of her inheritance. After the decease of Margaret Duchess of Clarence, this lordship was granted to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Winchester, Durham, and others; but notwithstanding these grants, the manor appears to have been possessed by the descendants of the Earl of Warwick, with whom it continued till Anne Countess of Warwick gave it up to King Henry VII., who had levied a fine of it in the third year of his reign (1488). A portion of land in this parish, which in the time of Henry III. was in the possession of Hugh Revell, passed into the hands of William Catesby in the twenty-second of Edward IV. (1483), and became forfeited to the crown upon his being attainted of high treason. It was granted to William Owen by the name of Revell's manor in the fourth of Henry VII. (1489). The Knights Hospitallers and the Abbey of St. James, near Northampton, had possessions also in the parish. The royalty of Buckby passed through several hands after this period, amongst whom were Mr Breton of Norton, and Mr Thomas Barker of Daventry; and it is now in the possession of Alfred Seymour, Esq., the present lord of the manor, in right of his wife. A crown rent of £81 8s. 4d. per annum is payable out of this parish to the Earl of Sandwich.

The Village of Long Buckby, which is, as its name implies, long, is pleasantly situated about five miles north-east of Daventry, and nine north-west of Northampton.

The Church, which is dedicated to St. Lawrence, was restored in 1863 at a cost of £1500, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch, chancel, and an embattled tower containing five bells. The tenor bell bears this inscription—

"If at my sound you don't prepare,
You are not inclined to come to prayer."

The second, "Christ of Heaven, may the king please thee;" and the fourth, "Jesus, the Saviour of man, the Son of God, the King of the Jews, have mercy on me." The tower is in the Early English, and the rest of the church seems to have been in the Decorated style, but has been much altered from time to time; in the chancel are three sedilia and a fine foiled piscina. There is also a square locker in the north wall of the chancel, and the place of a chantry altar is marked in the bay of the north aisle by a bracket. Under an arch between this chantry and the chancel there seems to have been a tomb. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £10, and now valued at £220. It has been endowed with £400 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1,600 parliamentary grant. The Bishop of Peterborough is the patron, and the Rev. Chas. Alex. Yate, M.A., is the incumbent. The great and small tithes of the parish, exclusive of Murcott, the property of the patron, lay impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1765. It does not appear when or by whom the chantry within this church was founded. In the second of Edward VI. (1549), lands of the yearly value of £3, 13s. 4d. were returned as appropriated to it. A Vicarage House has been erected at the end of the village, and the vicar has thirty-seven acres of glebe land.

A new Church, or chapel of ease, is about to be erected at Buckby Wharf, for the accommodation of the inhabitants of the district, on a site given by John Albert Craven, Esq. of Whilton. The building will cost about £500, £300 of which is already subscribed.

The Independent Chapel, built in 1771 and enlarged in 1819, will seat nearly seven hundred persons. There are Sunday-schools for boys and girls in connection with this chapel, erected in 1825 by bequest of Mr. David Ashby of this parish. The congregation is under the pastoral care of the Rev. Thomas Grear.

The Baptist Chapel, erected in 1846, is a neat building, which will seat about six hundred persons, and is situated about the centre of the village.

The National School was erected in 1844 at the sole expense of Mr Thos. Bland, then a resident of this parish. It is endowed with £20 per annum, being the interest of £400 left by the Rev. Langton Freeman in 1783. There are twenty boys taught free, and the rest pay one penny per week.

The other Charities of the parish are the interest of £50 (£2. 10s.) left to the poor by the Rev. Langton Freeman; and poor's land and doles, which produce about £37 a year.

MURCOTT is a hamlet situated partly in this and partly in the parish of Watford, a little west from Long Buckby. Its acreage is included with Long Buckby, and its population in 1841 was 81. The population for 1871 is included in the Buckby returns.

Buckby Hall.—The seat and property of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Fred. Horn, K.C.B.

Post, Money Order, and Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank.—Thomas Marriott Clarke, postmaster. Letters arrive from Rugby at 7.5 A.M., and are despatched at 6.10 P.M.

Abbey Misses Mary-Ann, Elizabeth, and Ellen	Cooper Joseph, newsagent	Gurney Urban, tailor and woollen draper
Andrew Mrs Jemima, shopkr.	Co-op. Stores, Wm. Bond, mgr.	Hawkes Mrs Louisa
Ashby Miss Mary, Murcott	Cox Arthur, surgeon	Haynes Mrs Elizabeth, grocer
Banatt Wm. vict. Horse Shoe	Davis Brothers (Carter & Saml) shoe manufacturers	Healey Thomas Everard, day and boarding school
Barrett Henry, shoe manufr.	Davis Thomas, stonemason	Henson Wm. general dealer
Bennett Mr Charles	Dacey Mrs My. straw bonnet mr.	Hewitt Miss Sarah Ann, draper
Birch David, grocer	Dix Fred. Wm. surgeon	Hill James, shoe manufacturer
Bishop Thomas, shoe manufr.	Draper David, pig dealer	Hobbs John, linen draper
Clarke Mrs Elizabeth	Eales John, vict. Red Lion , and carrier	Hobbs Richard, tailor
Clarke John, jun. grocer, and agent for Norwich Union Insurance Company	Ellard John, butcr. and shopkr.	Horn Lieut.-Gen. Sir Fredk. K.C.B. Buckby Hall
Clarke Robert, baker, and licensed to let horses	Eyre & Co. (John & Thomas) shoe manufacturers	Howe Wm. saddler
Clarke Thos. Marriott, grocer	Eyre George Clark, victualler, Greyhound	Incley John, wheelwt. & grazier
Agent for W. & A. Gilbey, wine and spirit merchant, and Salt & Co's ales, and agent for Liverpool and London and Globe Ins. Co., and pst.-mtr.	Fall James, draper, &c	Incley Wm. baker, grocer, and grazier
Clarke Wm. watchmaker	Frisby Vincent, corn miller	Jeffery William, shopkeeper
Coleman Edwin, butcr. & graz	Gibson John, tailor	Johnson Miss Martha, straw bonnet maker, and draper
Coleman Wm. Fred. assistant overseer, and photographer	Grear Rev. Thomas (Indpt.)	Johnson Robert, builder, and brickmaker
	Green John, blacksmith	Judkins George, vict. George Inn, Wharf
	Griffiths Geo. & Son (Wm.) linen drapers and bakers	Judkins Mr Wm. Arth. Wharf
	Groom Miss Charlotte, shop-keeper, Buckby Wharf

Keightley Edward, tallow chandler	Robinson William, shoemaker	Yate Rev. Charles Allix, M.A. vicar
Kilsby Mr Peter	Robinson William, shopkeeper	York Wm. watchmaker and hairdresser
Kilsby Miss Sarah Ann, con- fectioner	Robinson Wm. & Son, lime burners and coal merchants, Wharf and Crick Station	Farmers and Graziers.
Kinch David, beerhouse	Sabin William, beerhouse	Abbott John
King James, brazier	Sabin William jun. brick- maker	Ashby John, Elm Lodge
Leake Richd. Frncs., solicitor	Stanton Benjamin, shoemaker	Ashby William
Leeson William, cabinetmkr.	Statham, Edw. John, relieving officer and registrar of births and deaths, Long Buckby dist.	Ashby Wm. jun. (& miller)
Letts John, beerhouse	Tebbitt Mrs Eliza	Basset George
Letts William, plumber	Thomson Jno. vict. Gate, Wharf	Berry George
Lever David, pinmaker	Thompson Edward, basket maker, Wharf	Bincow Wm. & Son (Richard)
Lowe Mrs Elizabeth, shopkr. and beerhouse, Wharf	Thompson, Eli, rope and twine maker, Wharf	Capell John
Mabbott Samuel, shoemaker	Thompson Jno. brickmr. Wharf	Cattell William (& saddler)
March Mr Thomas	Thompson John, shopkeeper, Wharf	Clarke John
March Thomas, jun. druggist and stationer	Thompson Thomas, basketmkr	Hagger Richard (and coal merchant), Wharf
Merrill Jesse, vict. Admiral Rodney	Tilley Mrs Susanah & Son (John) blacksmiths	Howard James (grazier)
Montgomery Francis & Wm. brewers, Wharf	Tomlinson Wm. blacksmith	Lee James (and corn miller), Murcott Mills
Moore George, vict. Peacock	Vann Thomas, shopkeeper	Litchfield Wm. Surney Lodge
Newitt Wm. agent to Phipps, brewers, and horses for hire	Vavasour Miss Emilie, Furze	Perkins John
North Henry, auctioneer	Ward Joseph, beerhouse	Robinson John
Pebody Richard, tailor, Wharf	Watts Geo. vict. Anchor, Wharf	Robinson Robert
Pittam Mrs Eliza	White Mrs Elizabeth, baker	Robinson Thomas & Samuel
Pittam Wm. beerhouse	Wills Wm. plumber & glazr.	Russell John
Ringrose Mr John	Wood Enoch, beerho. Wharf	Russell John England
Robinson Mr George		Tebbitt Charles, Murcott
Robinson Thomas, beerhouse		Wadsworth Samuel
		Warren William
		Watson William

Carriers.—Charles Haynes, George Letts, and William Lovell, to Northampton on Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday; and John Eales to Daventry, Wednesday and Saturday.

CLAY-COTON PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Elkington, on the north by Stanford, on the west by Lilbourne, and on the south by Yelvertoft. It contains 963 acres; and its population in 1801 was 116; in 1831, 83; in 1841, 107; in 1851, 104; in 1861, 112; and in 1871, 120 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1990, and the gross estimated rental is £2243. A stream, which rises in Winwick, and joins the Avon at Lilbourne, runs through a part of this parish towards Dowbridge. The soil, as the name of the parish implies, is clayey, with a mixture of gravel in some parts, and the lordship is principally grazing land. William W. Elkins, Esq. of Elkington, and Joseph Norton, Esq. of Yelvertoft, are the lords of the manor and the principal landowners.

Manor.—There is no mention of this parish in Domesday Book, and in later times it is always reckoned as a member of Lilbourne lordship. Thomas de Estleye possessed the manor of Cley-Cotes in the third year of the reign of Edward III. (1330), and in Henry VIII.'s time it was in the hands of Thomas Marquis of Dorset, who died seized of it in the twenty-second of this reign (1531), and was succeeded by his son Henry, a minor thirteen years of age. By inquisition taken he was found to have held it of the king as of his Duchy of Lancaster by an unknown service. In the thirty-seventh of the same reign (1546), a fine was levied of the manor of Clay-Coton, and the advowson of the church, by Christopher Alyn, from whom they passed in course of succession to Giles Alleyne of London, who sold them afterwards to William Nicholls, Esq. This William died seized of them in the tenth of Elizabeth (1568), and was succeeded by Francis his son and heir, a minor fifteen years of age. The manor appears to have passed from the family of Nicholls to that of Farren, and through other families to the present proprietors.

The Village of Clay-Coton, which is very small, is situate upon low ground, about seven miles N.E. of Rugby, four S.W. of Welford, and fifteen N.W. of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, is an ancient edifice, in the Decorated style, consisting of a nave, chancel, and a low tower with a diminutive spire, and containing three bells. The nave and chancel arch were entirely rebuilt, and the church partly reseated in 1866, at a cost of £1000. In the chancel, which is separated from the nave by a wide and lofty arch, is a piscina and shelf, and the rude old font has been replaced by a new one. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £10, but now worth about £380 a year. The tithes were commuted for £295, and the Rev. J. T. H. Smith, M.A., is the patron, and the Rev. John Copeland Poole, M.A., the incumbent. Mr Poole has for many years supplied the want of a parish school at his own expense; but it is expected that a new school will shortly be built at Yelvertoft, which will include accommodation for the children of this parish.

Charities.—The poor's land consists of twenty-five acres, which is now let to the highest bidder every year, and the amount distributed amongst the poor of the parish. For the other charities of this parish, see the table prefixed to this hundred.

Post-Office.—Wall Letter-Box. Letters arrive from Rugby at 7.50 A.M., and are despatched at 6.30 P.M.

Aston John, general dealer
Harper Mary, vict. Fox and Hounds
Harper Philip, cowkeeper

Mawby William, shopkeeper
Poole Rev. John Copeland, M.A. rector
Rollston Francis, shopkeeper

Farmers and Graziers.

Bailey John
Cattell Joseph
Harfield Charles

COTTESBROOKE PARISH.

This parish is bounded by Brixworth, Lamport, and Draughton on the east; on the north by Hazlebeech, on the west by Nortoft, and by Creaton on the south. It contains 2,777 statute acres, and its population in 1801 was 290; in 1831, 226; in 1841, 252; in 1851, 252; in 1861, 201; and in 1871, 200 souls. The rateable value is £4611, and the gross estimated rental is £5026. The soil is chiefly a stiff clay, and in some parts it is mixed with a little sand; a brook, which is formed by springs at Maidwell, parts the lordship on the east from Brixworth, and runs on to Pitsford.

Manor.—Walterius Flandrensis, to whom Dobin was under-tenant, held one hide and one virgate of land in Cotesbroc at the time of the Norman survey. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 12d., and the whole had been valued before the Conquest at 10s., but was now rated at 30s. In the reign of Henry II. this lordship was in the possession of Sir William Boutevillein, the founder of Pipwell Abbey. He was succeeded by Robert his son, who was certified in this reign to hold two hides here of the fee of Wahul. In the reign of Henry III., Fulk Basset, the Dean of York, as guardian of the heir of William Boutevillein, accounted for two knights' fees in Cotesbroc, with the site of the Abbey of Pipwell, which were held of Saer de Wahul. Robert the heir and successor of William Boutevillein, levied a fine of this lordship in the fourth of Edward II. (1311), and was slain in 1314 with the Earl of Gloucester in Scotland. Nichola his widow was certified to be lady of the manor in the ninth of this reign (1316), and was succeeded by her son William Boutevillein. In the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), Thomas Wale accounted for two knights' fees here, with the site of Pipwell Abbey, one of which was held by the abbot of the fee of Wahul. No mention is made of this manor from this period till the time of Henry V., when it was in the possession of Robert Butvyleyn, Esq., who died seized of it in the ninth of the same reign (1422), leaving it to his son William, who leaving no issue, it devolved to his cousins and his heirs. During the reign of Henry VII. the manor changed possessors several times, having been sold and resold, and in the third of Edward VI. (1550), William Lane, Esq., third son of William Lane, Esq. of Orlingbury, levied a fine of it. He died in the twelfth of Elizabeth (1570), and was succeeded by Peter his eldest son, a lunatic, upon whose decease without issue in the 28th of this reign (1586), his two sisters became his heirs. The lordship was soon after this in seven parts or shares, one moiety of which was purchased in the fourth year of the reign of James I. (1607) by Sir William Saunders, who sold it in the eleventh of the same reign (1614) to Sir John Carey, who, in the thirteenth of Charles I. (1638), conveyed it for the sum of £18,000 to John Langham, Esq., alderman of London. Alderman Langham also purchased the other moiety of the lordship, of Martin Harvey, Esq., in the seventeenth of this reign (1642) for £17,000, and thus he became possessed of the whole lordship. "This gentleman," says Bridges, "was the son of Edward Langham of Guilsborough, by Anne the daughter of John West, of Coton-End, bred a Turkey merchant, and by his industry and probity acquired a very large fortune. In 1660, being then an alderman of London, he was deputed, with Mr Alderman Bunce, to wait on Charles II. at Breda, and to invite him on behalf of the citizens of London to take possession of his kingdoms. Here he received from his majesty the honour of knighthood, and after the Restoration was created a baronet by letters patent bearing date the 16th June 1660. He was afterwards considerably engaged in public business, and in 1668 was a member of the committee at Brook-House. Sir John Langham was famed for his readiness of speaking florid Latin, which, as Bishop Burnet informs us, he had obtained to a degree beyond any man of the age; but his style was too poetical, and full of epithets and figures." Sir John Langham died in 1671, leaving issue Sir James Langham, Bart., his successor in his estate, and several other children. Upon the decease of Sir James without male heirs, in 1699, the title and lordship of Cottesbrooke devolved upon Sir William Langham, his younger brother, from whom it descended lineally to Sir James Hay Langham, Bart., the present lord of the manor, and principal owner of the soil.

The Village of Cottesbrooke is situate about nine and a half miles N.N.W. of Northampton, nine miles S. of Market Harborough, and seven S.E. from Welford.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands in a sequestered and picturesque situation, about a quarter of a mile east of the village, in the midst of pastures bounded by the park and wood which surround the Hall. It consists of a nave, chancel, south transept, south porch, and a massive tower, containing six bells and a clock. It had originally a north transept and porch. The whole fabric, with the exception of the porch, is original, and of one date and style, the very Early Decorated. The handsome tower, with its embattled parapet and graceful proportions, is perhaps the most attractive portion of the church. There is scarcely anything left of the original arrangement in the interior; the whole has a flat domestic ceiling; the triple sedilia and the well-wrought screen, which separated the nave from the chancel, have disappeared. The church contains some handsome monuments of the Langham family, and the parapet of the tower is adorned with four shields bearing the arms of Butvileyn. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £26, os. 10d., and now worth about £646 per annum. Sir J. H. Langham, Bart., is patron, and the Rev. John Tyrwhitt Drake, B.C.L., is the present incumbent. The Rectory House is a handsome residence, situated east of the church.

The School is a small stone building, erected in 1813, and will accommodate forty children.

Here are Alms-houses for eight poor people, established in 1561 by Mr Alderman Langham, and endowed with fifty-three acres of land in Sibbertoft.

Cottesbrooke Hall, the seat of Sir James Hay Langham, Bart., and occupied by Herbert Langham, Esq., is a handsome modern-built mansion, embosomed in thriving plantations and pleasure-grounds, about a quarter of a mile from the village. The ancient manor-house stood higher up, and nearer the church. Sir James is son of the tenth baronet by the sister of Sir Francis Burdett, Bart. He was born in 1802, married the eldest daughter of Lord Kenyon in 1828, and succeeded his father in 1833. His heir-presumptive is Herbert Langham, Esq., born in 1804.

Kalender Meadow, formerly called Kaylend, in this lordship, was given by William de Buttevillan to the abbot and convent of Sulby, who placed here a cell of Premonstrasian canons dedicated to St John. Large foundation stones have been dug up in the Kalender Meadow, and the cell, when standing, appears to have been moated round.

Charities.—Besides the hospital or almshouses endowed by Alderman Langham, Elizabeth Ives, by deed dated 22d September 1780, left £100 (3 per cent. consols), and Miss Langham, who died in 1809, bequeathed £100 to the poor of this parish.

Post-Office.—Wall Box. Letters arrive from Brixworth at 8.45 A.M., and the Letter-Box is cleared at 4 P.M.

Bailey John, blacksmith	Holt George, carpenters' fore-	Langham Herbert Hay, Esq.
Boyer Wm. steward to Sir J.	man	The Grange
H. Langham, Bart	Holt Mary, shopkeeper	Payne Samuel, shoemaker
Day Henry, steward's clerk	Langham Herbert, Esquire,	and parish clerk
Drake Rev. J. T., B.C.L. rector	Cottesbrooke Hall	Simmons Annie, schoolmistress

The nearest Railway Station is Brixworth (London and North-Western) about two and a quarter miles distant.

Carrier.—John Brown to Northampton, Wednesday and Saturday.

CREATON GREAT PARISH.

Creaton Magna, or Great Creaton, is bounded by Brixworth on the east, by Cottesbrooke on the north, by Hollowell on the west, and Spratton on the south. A brook, which rises from springs in Naseby field, divides this lordship from Spratton, and flows on to Pitsford; and another brook, rising from springs in Maidwell and Draughton, bounds it on the east, and joins the former between Spratton and Brixworth. The parish contains 932 acres; its population in 1801 was 341; in 1831, 543; in 1841, 505; in 1851, 505; in 1861, 583; and in 1871, 417 souls. The gross estimated rental is £2128, and the rateable value is £1788. The soil is principally clay, and a great part of the lordship is in grass. Sir James Hay Langham, Bart. and Mr John Orland are the principal owners.

Manor.—At the date of the Domesday survey, Gunfrid de Cioches held one hide of land in Craptone, Creptone, or Cretone, as it is variously called in that record. It had been rated before the Conquest at 20s., but was now valued at 30s. Anselin, the successor of Gunfrid, held this hide in the reign of Henry II. By inquisition taken in the thirty-first year of the reign of Henry III. (1185), Richard de Chokes was found to hold half a knight's fee here of Robert de Gynes of the Honor of Chokes, for which he paid 2s. yearly for the sheriff's aid, and 5s. for the guard of Northampton Castle. Robert de Watford purchased the estate of Creton of Robert de Chokes, and, with Simon Fitz-Richard, was certified to hold the township of Great-Creton in the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296) by the service of half a knight's fee. Philip held it of William de Fenys, who held it of the king in capite. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316) Robert de Watford was lord of Creaton, and was succeeded by William de Watford, his son and heir. Upon the death of Theobald de Gayton in the sixteenth of this reign (1323), he was found to die seized of a fourth part of a knight's fee here in the possession of William de Watford, and an eighth part of a knight's fee in the hands of John Fitz-Simon, and the advowson of the church of Creaton. In the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), this William de Watford and John Symond accounted for half a knight's fee in Great Creaton of the fee of Chokes. Upon the death of Theobald de Gayton without issue this lordship descended to his sisters, Julianna Murdock and Scholastica de Meux. From John de Meux, the son and successor of Scholastica, the manor passed into the possession of the family of Trussell. Robert de Tanfield, Esq., died seized of it in the twenty-first of Edward VI. (1482), and was succeeded by William his son, with whose descendants it continued for several generations, and passed from them to John Reade, Esq., of Cottesbrooke, who, in the second of James I. (1605), died possessed of the manor and advowson of the church, which he held of the king in capite by knight's service, as of the Honor of Peverel. He was succeeded by his seven daughters and co-heirs. The estate here which, in the reign of Edward III., was in the hands of William de Watford, passed from his brother Roger to Margery de Crawford, his sister, whose daughter Emma carried it in marriage to John de Catesby of Ashby-Legers. In the fourth of Henry VII. (1489), upon the attainder of William Catesby, Esq., it was granted, by the name of Watford's manor in Great Creaton, to William Owen. John Owen, Esq., sold it to Gregory Isham, from whom it descended to Eusebius Isham his son. In the fourth of James I. (1607), George Tarry died seized of a manor here, which is supposed to have been the eighth part of a knight's fee which, in the sixteenth of Edward II. (1322), was held by John Fitz-Simon. The Abbey of Sulby had possessions here, which in 1535 were valued at 14s. yearly. In the thirty-seventh of Henry VIII. (1546) they were given to George Tresham and Edward Twyncho. Sir James Hay Langham, Bart., is the present possessor of the manorial rights and the greater part of the lordship.

The Village of Creaton Great is situated about 8 miles N.N.W. of Northampton, 12 N.W. from Daventry, 12 N.W. by W. from Wallingborough, 12 S.W. from Kettering, and 73 from London. The Rev. Thomas Jones, a former curate of this parish, who died in 1844, built six cottages on a piece of waste land in the village for the accommodation of aged widows. There is a small green in the centre of the village.

The Church, dedicated to Saint Michael, is a stone structure in the Early English style, consisting of nave, chancel, south aisle, vestry, north porch, and square tower, containing five bells. It was restored in 1857 at a cost of £600, when a south aisle was added to it; it was also re-roofed and seated throughout. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £11, 1s. 8d., and now worth £350 per annum. It is in the patronage of the Rev. F. B. Beynon, and incumbency of the Rev. Edward Crow, M.A.

The Rectory House, a brick building which stands east of the church, has been enlarged and nearly rebuilt by the present rector.

There is an Independent Chapel in the village, which has a Sunday-school attached—the former was built about the year 1792. There is a residence for the minister near the chapel.

The National School, built in 1844, at a cost of about £400, is supported by the rector, government grant, and school-pence. John Meredith and Miss Mary Ann Tudor are the teachers.

Post-Office at Mr John Meredith's. Letters arrive from Northampton at 8 A.M., and are despatched at 4.40 P.M. The nearest Money-Order Office is Brixworth.

Andrew Mr John	King Mrs Caroline, shopkpr.	Tipler Mr George
Arber Geo. plumber & glazier	King Mrs Eliza	Underwood Mrs Mary Ann
Bailey John, blacksmith and vict. Horse Shoe	King Wingate, butcher and shopkeeper	Wilson Jesse, thrashing machn. owner
Buswell Edw. baker and grocer	Lettes Mrs	Wootton Charles, carpenter & shopkeeper
Butlin Charles, tailor	Meredith Jno. national school-master, draper, & post-master	Farmers and Graziers.
Collins Mrs Eliza	Noyes Rev. Thos. B.A. (indept.)	Dunkley Samuel
Cornish Mrs Ann, beerhouse	Powers Wm. boot & shoemkr.	Gossage Thomas
Crow Rev. Edw. M.A. rector	Rose William, gardener	Orland John (yeoman)
Industrial Co-operative Store,	Shermon Mr Francis Packwood	Pickering William
Edwin Rose, manager and shoemaker	Tarry Charles, baker & shopkpr.

Carriers.—William Webb to Northampton on Wednesday and Saturday, and James Langton on Saturday.

CRICK PARISH.

Crick or Creek parish is bounded on the east by Winwick, by Yelvertoft on the north, on the west by Hill-Morton in Warwickshire, and by Kilsby and Watford on the south. It contains 3207 acres, and its population in 1801 was 961; in 1831, 945; in 1841, 1,006; in 1851, 986; in 1861, 999; and in 1871, 897 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £6,759, and the gross estimated rental is £7,705. A small brook takes its rise from springs about the town, and directs its course to Hill-Morton. The Roman road, Watling Street, divides this lordship from Hill-Morton and Kilsby. "In a part of this lordship called Portlow," says Bridges, "are several eminences which have the appearance of tumuli." Near the church was anciently a stone cross, the foundation of which was applied some years ago to build the ascent from the church to the belfry. The soil is principally a stiff clay; the land is much subdivided, and possessed chiefly by the rector and several resident yeomen.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Geoffrey de Wirce held four hides, less one virgate, of land here of the crown. There were twelve acres of meadow, and the whole had been rated in the time of Edward the Confessor at 30s., but now valued at £4. 10s. Bridges tells us that "Geoffrey Wirce was a native of Little Brittany, in France, and descended from a family who derived their name from the territory of Guerche, adjoining the Anjou. He came over with the Conqueror, and is supposed to have been in that part of the army commanded by Alan Fergant. As it doth not appear he had any issue, his possessions, after his decease, seem to have reverted to the crown, and were granted by Henry I. to Nigel de Albini, ancestor to the family of Mowbray." In the reign of Henry II. Roger de Camvile, great grandson to Gerard de Camvile, whose principal seat in the reign of King Stephen was at Lilbourne, in this neighbourhood, had three and a half hides and one large virgate in Crek of the fee of Roger de Mowbray. Upon his decease without issue his inheritance descended to his sisters. Thomas de Astley, the husband of Maud, one of Roger de Mowbray's sisters, seems to have been in the possession of the whole lordship a short time afterwards, and having joined the rebellious barons, was slain in the battle of Evesham. His estate being confiscated, this manor, with other lordships, was given to Warine de Bassingburne. Andrew the son and heir of Thos. de Astley compounded with Warine de Bassingburne for the restoration of his inheritance by the payment of 320 marks, and gave security to the king for his future allegiance. He died in the twenty-ninth year of the reign of Edward I. (1301), and was succeeded by Nicholas de Astley, his son and heir. By inquisition taken after his decease it was found that he held this manor of the fee of Roger de Mowbray, who held of the king in capite, pertaining to the barony of Melton Mowbray. In the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), Thos. de Astley and Thos. de Swynardton accounted for one knight's fee in Creek as held of the lord of Mowbray. The family of De Astley retained possession of this manor until the reign of Henry VI., when Sir William de Astley died, leaving issue Joan an only daughter, who first married Thomas Raleigh of Farnborough, and after his decease, Reginald Lord Guy of Ruthin. Upon his decease, in the thirty-sixth of Henry VI. (1458), this manor, with his other possessions, descended to Sir John Grey, Knight, his eldest son, who was slain in the battle of St. Alban's fighting on the part of the King three years after. Sir Thomas Grey, his son and successor, was created Marquis of Dorset in the fourteenth of Edward IV. (1475.) Thomas Marquis of Dorset son of the first marquis, was appointed general of the army which was to join the forces of the Emperor Ferdinand in Spain, and proceed to the invasion of Guyenne in the third of Henry VIII. (1512.) He died in the twenty-second of this reign (1531), and was succeeded by Henry Marquis of Dorset, his eldest son, a minor under fourteen years of age. By the inquisition taken after his decease, he was found to hold this manor of the heirs of Robert Corson, as of his manor of Croxhall, by the annual payment of a rose. From Henry Marquis of Dorset it passed to Sir Ralph Warren, Knight, alderman of London, who levied a fine of it in the second of Edward VI. (1549); and it was purchased by Sir William Craven, Knight, Lord Mayor of London in 1611.

In the twenty-third of Henry III. (1249); William de Essebye held an estate here of twenty-one virgates of Roger de Mowbray, by the service of a third part of one knight's fee. This William having unfortunately killed a man at Crick, his possessions here were escheated to the superior lord, and in the sixteenth of Edward II. (1323) were declared to be a parcel of the manor belonging to John de Mowbray. This estate passed afterwards into the hands of William de Vineter, a descendant of Sir Adam Vinter, sometimes called Adam son of Philip of Northampton, who, in the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), was certified to hold, with the heirs of William de Esseby, the township of Creke of Roger de Mowbray, by the service of one knight's fee. In the thirty-eighth of Edward III. (1365), Henry de Buckingham levied a fine of this manor in fee simple, and in the seventh of Richard II. (1384), it was in the possession of Alice wife to Thomas Grantham, and daughter of William Vinter. This manor, called Vinter's manor, passed through various hands afterwards, and was carried into the possession of several families both by fine and marriage. There was, besides these two manors, a third manor in Creek, of which Richard Andrewe, Esq., died seized in the thirty-first of Henry VIII. (1540), and with which family it continued for several generations. In the fourth of Henry VII. (1489), a moiety of a manor in Crick, part of the possessions of William Catesby, Esq., whose estate was forfeited to the crown, was granted to William Owen, and passed afterwards into the possession of the family of Isham. Since the enclosure no manorial rights have been exercised, with the exception of certain old claims upon a few cottages made by the representatives of the Langham family.

The Village of Crick is situated about seven miles north-east of Daventry, six from Rugby, and fourteen from Northampton, in the vicinity of the London and North-Western Railway, on which there is here a station three miles from the village, and bisected by the Derby and Leicester Grand Union Canal.

The Church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a very handsome structure, consisting of a nave, north and south aisles, chancel, and tower containing four bells and a clock, surmounted by a pyramidal octagonal spire. The building was originally in the Early English style, but the Decorative has been introduced at later periods. The tower and spire are considered the most beautiful in the deanery. The east window and the north and south doors in the chancel are very beautiful; and the chancel is entered from the nave through a wide and lofty arch. The church at one time seems to have been ornamented throughout with rich painted glass, and the walls decorated with fresco paintings; some remains of the latter were discovered during the repairs a few years since. The sedilia and piscina are very rich in design, and evidently of the original fabric. Without the chancel on the north side is the door to the rood loft, the steps of which still remain, but the loft is gone. The screen has been converted into decorations for the modern reredos, which is raised on a base of white stone. The font is a cylindrical bowl, resting on three monsters, and adorned with hemispherical figures, and lined with lead. The pulpit is of Painswick stone, designed in harmony with the church; the seats in the aisle are open, as are also those in the chancel. The parishioners are much indebted to the late rector, the Rev. C. L. Swainson, for his judicious arrangement and substantial repairs of the church, as well as the very beautiful altar-plate which he furnished chiefly at his own cost. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Haddon, valued in the king's books at £32, 13s 1½d., and now worth about £1,050 a year. It is in the patronage of the President and Fellows of St John's College, Oxford, and incumbency of the Rev. James B. Gray, B.D. The commissioners allotted land in lieu of tithes at the enclosure of the common.

The Rectory House is a commodious residence built principally of stone, and situated in spacious grounds near the church.

The Independent Chapel, a plain building erected in 1820, will seat about three hundred, and to which is attached a large vestry or class-room, which is now used as a day school. There has been a Dissenting interest here since 1662. There is also a small Wesleyan Methodist Chapel in the village.

The National School, erected in 1847, will accommodate about eighty-five children. It has an endowment of £35, 10s. derived from the bequests of Richard Drayson and William Henfray. The former in 1806 left a piece of ground containing seventeen acres, that the rents and profits should be applied to the purchase of a fat cow not exceeding in price the sum of £15, to be killed and distributed at Christmas amongst the poor of the parish, and the residue of the rents and profits to be applied to the instruction of the children of the poor; and the latter bequeathed a sum of money, by which £394 3 per cent. consols was purchased, two-thirds of the dividend to be paid to the schoolmaster for teaching twelve poor children to read and write, and the remaining third part to be paid to the Independent Minister of the village. The dividends of £100, 12s. 9d. new 4 per cent. annuities, were also left by George Judkin in 1819 to be paid to the schoolmaster for instructing seven poor boys. The other Charities of the parish are—the poors' land, consisting of nine and a half acres, lets for about £20 a year, which sum is distributed amongst the poor not receiving parochial relief; and the sum of £100 left by Elizabeth Heygate in 1822, the interest of which was to be applied to the Sunday-school.

There is an Infant School adjoining the rectory garden, which was erected in 1846 at the expense of the late rector.

Sub-Post-Office at Mrs Mary Elliott's. Letters from Rugby arrive at 6 A.M., and are despatched at 7.15 P.M.

Adams Thos. wheelrt. & carptr.
 Ashby Mr Joseph
 Bagshaw Mr Thos. Mill Bank
 Basley Thomas, shoemaker
 Bennett Mrs Lucy, butcher
 Bland Mr John
 Browning Thos. Grand Union
 Coal Wharf
 Butlin William, beerhouse
 Christmas Robt. Denn, surgn.
 Clarke Eliz., baker, provision dealer, & vict. Wheat Sheaf
 Cowley George, blacksmith
 Cowley John, farmer and vict.
 Royal Oak
 Crofts Ann, indpt. schoolmrs.
 Dicey Owen, grocer & draper
 Dunkley Mrs Lydia
 Edmunds William, butcher
 Elliott Mr Thomas
 Evans Charles, shopkeeper
 Fretter John, higgler, coal dealer and carrier
 Fryer Emma, grocer & draper
 Fryer Jane Augusta, boarding
 & day school for young ladies
 Gilbert John, tailor
 Gray Rev. Jas. Black, B.D. rtr.
 Grove Henry, brewer
 Haddon Frederick, carpenter and cabinetmaker
 Harper John, baker
 Hayles Richd. butchr. & farmr.
 Howe George, saddler
 Kennard C. J. Esq.
 Lloverock Louisa, draper
 Loydall John, blacksmith
 Lucas William, shoemaker
 Mawbey Joseph, gen. dealer
 Newitt George, tallow-chandler and ironmonger
 Newitt John, relieving-officer, regstr. of births dts. and mars.
 Newitt Wm. carpenter, and parish clerk
 Pedley Alfred, schoolmaster
 Pike Mrs Elizabeth
 Pike John, shopkpr. and grzr.
 Pike Wm. corn miller (steam)
 Reynolds Thos. tile and brick manufacturer
 Robinson Nehemiah, shoemkr.
 Smith Mr Edward
 Smith James, vict. Red Lion
 Swingler Mr William
 Thornton Richard, carpenter
 Thornton William, builder
 Towers Thomas, shoemaker
 Turner Ellen, vict. Shoulder of Mutton
 Walker The Misses Mary Ann,
 Sarah, and Elizabeth
 Walker Thos. Osborne, surgn.
 Ward James, buikler
 Whitmill The Misses Susan,
 Eliza. and Martha

Willis Chas. plumber and glzr.
 painter, and paperhanger

Farmers and Graziers.

(Marked * are yeomen.)

Bates Edward
 Beacham Thomas
 Berridge William
 Bromwich John
 *Buckwall William
 Carbell James
 Cooper John
 Cooper T. W. G.
 *Cowley Thomas
 Crofts Henry
 Edmunds John
 *Edmunds Thomas
 Frost William
 *Gilbert James
 *Marson Thomas Edward Mawby Joseph, Mount
 Pleasant
 Page Jonas
 Perkins William
 Pike James
 Pike John
 Pike Thomas
 *Redgrave Thomas
 Watts William
 *Watts York
 Whitmill Stephen

Carriers.—Benjamin Facer, Rugby, Tuesday and Saturday. John Fretter, Rugby, Tuesday, and Northampton, Saturday. William Hardwick, Daventry, Saturday. Jonathan Walton Market Harborough, Tuesday; Daventry, Wednesday; and Northampton, Saturday.

ELKINGTON PARISH

Is bounded by Cold Ashby on the east, by Welford on the north, on the west by Clay-Coton, and on the south by Winwick. The parish contains 1849 acres of land, tithe free, of the rateable value of £2908; its population in 1801 was 62; in 1831, 43; in 1841, 46; in 1851, 47; in 1861, 60; and in 1871, 57 souls. The gross estimated rental is £3240; and the situation of the lordship is high, commanding extensive prospects. The soil is of a mixed quality, principally clay and red loam, on a clay subsoil, and said to be as highly cultivated as any in the kingdom. Its principal owners are—Sir James Hay Langham, Bart. (lord of the manor), the Earl Spencer, R. Blencowe, Esq., and J. B. Howes, Esq. The Union Canal passes through the parish.

The "hills and hollows" here are most romantic and full of interest for sight-seers. There is no correct account of the formation of these hollows—some attribute them to earthquakes, and some date them back to an antediluvian period. The view from Honey Hill embraces a tract of country extending for miles on every side. Coventry spire can be distinctly seen, and the most picturesque parts of Leicestershire may be traced by the naked eye. At the foot of one of the hills, in what is called "Robinson's grounds," is a chalybeate spring, dating from time immemorial, said to possess very healing properties, especially for the eyes.

Manor.—The Earl of Morton held one hide and three virgates of land in Eltetone at the time of the general survey, which before the Conquest had been the freehold of Turbern, and was rated then, as it was now, at 40s. Turchil held of Wido de Reinbudcurt three parts of one virgate at the same time, which was valued at 2s.; and a fourth part of one virgate pertained to the manor of Wellesford, belonging to Geoffrey de Wirce. Hugh de Leycester and his son of the same name, gave afterwards one and a half hide and twenty-four virgates here to the monks of Pipwell Abbey, and William de Kaynes gave them four virgates here, which donation was confirmed by William his son and heir, with an exemption from all secular service. These lands, with Eltendum Grange and the gifts of other benefactors, were confirmed to the abbey by the charter of Henry II. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), William de Walsull and the Abbot of Sulby were certified to be lords of the manor of Elkington. It also appears that the lordship about this time contained, besides the demesne lands, forty-eight virgates, of which forty-three belonged to the Abbey of Pipwell. At the time of the survey in the reign of Henry VIII. (1535), the lands belonging to the Pipwell monastery in this parish were valued at £96, 14s. yearly, and at the suppression of the religious houses were granted to different persons. Those parts called the south field, the park, and the middle field, &c., were given to Francis Pigot in exchange for the manor of Oven Shenley in Buckinghamshire; and the grange and certain lands were granted to Sir Edward Knightley. In the seventh of Edward VI. (1554), Sir Edward Montague, Kt., obtained a grant of High Elkington with certain other closes. The lands belonging to the Abbey of Pipwell were sold by John Lane, Esq., in the fifteenth of Elizabeth (1573), for £120, to Roger Montague, citizen and skinner of London. A large portion of this lordship was afterwards in the hands of the family of Pell, and about three hundred and thirty acres were in the possession of the family of Griffin, which passed about the year 1580 to Sir Christopher Hatton. The lands granted by Henry VIII. to Francis Pygot, Esq., were sold by him to Sir Robert Catlyn, Lord Chief-Justice of England, in the third of Elizabeth (1561). They passed afterwards into the possession of Sir Edward Montague of Boughton, whose descendant, Sir Sydney Montague, alienated them to William Lord Spencer. Robert, Earl of Sunderland sold them in 1674 for £6000, in fee, to Sir William Langham, whose lineal descendant, Sir J. H. Langham, Bart., is the present possessor.

The Village of Elkington, which is very small, is situated about two and a half miles S. from Welford, eleven N.N.E. from Daventry, nine E. from Rugby, eleven S.W. from Market Harborough, and fourteen N.W. from Northampton.

The Church has long since been demolished, and the inhabitants resort to the neighbouring parochial churches. There is no tradition at what time it was destroyed; but it was given by Hugh de Leycester to the monks of Daventry, who afterwards bestowed it upon the Abbot of Pipwell and his successors.

The principal inhabitants are—William W. Elkins, George Gee, Wm. Sherman, Elkington Lodge, and Joseph Ward, farmers and graziers.

GUILSBOROUGH PARISH.

This parish, which occupies an elevated situation, and comprehends the hamlet of Nortoft, is bounded on the east by Creaton, on the north by Naseby, on the west by West Haddon, and on the south by Ravensthorpe. It contains 2180 statute acres (including Nortoft), and its population in 1801 was 758, in 1831, 1069; in 1841, 939; in 1851, 669; in 1861, 730; and in 1871, 587. The rateable value of Guilsborough and Nortoft is £4167, 7s. 2d., and the gross estimated rental is £4804. This lordship, which is nearly square, gives name to the hundred, and is supposed to derive its own name from an extensive Roman encampment called the Burroughs or Borough Hill, which is situated on the top of a hill between the sources of the Avon and the Nene; the form is a parallelogram, 600 feet by 300. The whole is encompassed by a single fosse and vallum, comprising an area of about eight acres. It is on the property of Allesley Boughton Leigh, Esq. (lord of the manor), who, with the Rev. Edward Bateman, John F. Edmonds, Esq., and the vicar, are the principal owners of the soil, which is generally fertile. The Stowe brook flows through the parish.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Alured held $3\frac{1}{2}$ virgates of land in Gisleburg of William Peverel, which, in the time of Edward the Confessor, was the freehold of Gitta, and rated at 6s., but was now advanced to 30s. There was also 1 virgate pertaining to the church, a part of the manor of Norton, which was held of the Earl of Morton. In the reign of Henry II., the $3\frac{1}{2}$ virgates of the fee of Peverel were in the possession of William Fitz-Alured; and a priest had 1 small virgate of the fee of Leicester. In the reign of Henry III., William de Novancourt was certified to hold this manor of the Honor of Peverel, and by inquisition taken upon the death of William de Kirkeby, in the thirty-first year of the reign of Edward I. (1303), he or his successor was found to hold of the said William as of the manor of Akle. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), Agnes de Novancourt and Elizabeth Hastings were ladies of Gilsburgh and its members; and in the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), Margery de Egebaston accounted for one knight's fee in Gildesborgh of the Honor of Peverel. In the twenty-sixth of this reign (1353), Sir Walter de Thorpe, Knight, gave this manor to Sir John Brocas, Knight, Margaret his wife, and Bernard their son; and in the thirteenth of Richard II. (1390), Sir Bernard Brocas, Knight, gave it to Sir Nicholas Lillinge, Knight, Isabella his wife, and their heirs. This Sir Nicholas in the fourth of Henry V. (1417) alienated it to John Love, William Hercy of Northampton, and William Lobenham of Brycklesworth. In the twenty-sixth of Henry VI. (1448), William Hercy, citizen of London, and son of the above named Henry, sold it to William Tresham, John Heton, Robert Olney, Richard Willoughby, and others; and in the same year Sir John Bernard, grandson of Sir Nicholas Lilling, confirmed them in the purchase, and gave up all claim upon the premises. In the thirty-seventh of the same reign (1459) the manor passed to Thomas Osborn, Esq., who died in the first of Henry VIII. (1509), and was succeeded by Thomas his son. The son and successor of this gentleman, who was also lord of Whitfield manor, the place of his residence, sold the manor of Guilsborough in the first of Mary (1553) to Thomas Andrews, Esq., of Charwelton, for £283. Sir Thomas Andrews died seized of it in the sixth of Elizabeth (1564), and was found by inquisition to have held it of the crown in capite by knight's service. Thomas Andrews, Esq., of Winwick, conveyed the manor, with its appurtenances, to William Belchier, Esq., in the sixteenth of the same reign (1574), with whose descendants it continued till 1627, when William Belchier, Esq., conveyed it to Serjeant Clerke of Watford, whose son and successor, George Clerke, Esq., transferred it, in 1669, to Edmund Bateman of Creek. William the son of Edmund Bateman sold the manor of Guilsborough, with several houses and 150 acres of land, to John Ward, Esq., from whom they passed to Sir Thomas Ward. William Zouch Lucas Ward succeeded Sir Thomas, and at his death the manor descended to his eldest son William, who died in 1848, leaving it to his youngest son, John Ward, who married the daughter of Sir Egerton Leigh, of Brownsover House in Warwickshire, and upon the death of Lady Leigh, his wife's mother, took the name of Boughton Leigh, whose son Allesley Boughton Leigh, Esq., of Brownsover, is the present lord of the manor.

The Village of Guilsborough is pleasantly situated on an eminence commanding extensive prospects, and is about 10 miles N.W. by N. of Northampton, and 4 from the source of the Avon at Naseby; 10 N.E. from Daventry, 11 from Lutterworth, 10 S.S.W. from Market Harborough, 12 E. from Rugby, 7 N.E. from Crick Station on the London and North-Western Railway, and 76 from London.

The Church, dedicated to St Etheldreda the Virgin, is a handsome structure on an eminence a little south-west of the village, and consists of a nave, chancel, north and south aisles and porches, and a square tower surmounted by a spire, and containing a clock and a peal of six bells bearing Latin inscriptions; four of the bells were recast in 1852. The tower and spire are the only portions of the exterior that retain their original character; the former is in the Early English, and the latter in the Decorated style, as are also the nave and aisles; the windows are chiefly square-headed, and filled with stained glass. The roof and seats are of oak, the latter being carved and open throughout; these and other internal restorations were effected in 1815 by the then vicar, the Rev. Thomas Sykes, aided by the parishioners; and the interior of the chancel was subsequently renovated and furnished with costly fittings by the late incumbent, the Rev. J. D. Watson, M.A. A new pulpit, reading desk, and other improvements, have been added by the Rev. Thomas Sykes Hichens, M.A., the present vicar, who is also patron of the living, which was valued in the king's books at £17, 3s. 4d., but is now worth £500 per annum. The church was given by William Dive to the Knights Hospitallers of St John of Jerusalem, and the prior and convent of that order presented until its suppression by Henry VIII. Upon the removal of an embankment west of the church about sixty-five years since, a quantity of human bones were discovered, which were carefully removed to the churchyard. The spot is supposed to have been the place of sepulture connected with the Roman encampment on Borough Hill. The Vicarage House, commanding some pleasing prospects, is pleasantly situated about the centre of the village.

The Baptist Chapel, which was erected in 1793, stands in the centre of the village; it is a substantial building capable of accommodating about 600 persons, and near to it is a house for the minister. The Rev. William Symonds is the present pastor.

The Latin Grammar School is a large building of stone, of a mixed style of architecture: it was founded in 1688 by Sir John Langham of Cottesbrooke, and endowed with an annual rent of £80 a year, for which the schoolmaster was to teach Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, or any of them, to boys, of whom the children of parents inhabiting the parishes of Guilsborough, Cottesbrooke, Thornley, and Cold Ashby, should have the priority of admission. The antique oak staircase here is said to be the most perfect piece of work of its kind in the county; it is finely carved, of astonishing thickness and solidity, and mounts in a square the whole height of the building. The school was restored in 1858 by subscription, at a cost of £1700; it is conducted by the Rev. Samuel Burgess, M.A., and an efficient staff of assistants.

Guilsborough Grange, the residence of Lady Eleanor Clifton, is a substantial building, situate about $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile west of the village. A little east of the church is a good stone residence, occupied by Mrs Bateman, near to which is a petrifying spring, the use of which is considered beneficial to several diseases.

Guilsborough Hall, the property of Allesley Boughton Leigh, is a large square mansion, now the residence of the Dowager Countess Spencer and Lady Sarah Spencer; it is situated a little west of the church in a park containing about 40 acres.

NORTOFT is a hamlet in this parish, situated on the north side of Guilsborough. The village, which is watered by the Stowe brook, contains several good houses, and its population in 1841 was 322 souls. In 1871 its population was returned with Guilsborough. A fire occurred here in 1792, by which the entire hamlet was reduced to ashes. The Rye Hills, the commodious residence of R. Stephens, Esq., is pleasantly situated about a quarter of a mile north of Guilsborough. The rateable value of Nortoft is £2600, 13s., and its area, 1505 acres.

Manor.—The Earl of Morton held two hides of land of the crown in Nortoft at the time of the Norman survey. There were eight acres of meadow and a mill of the yearly rent of 8d., and the whole had been valued at 3s., but was now advanced to 30s. At the same time William Peverel held half a hide here pertaining to the manor of Clay Coton. The Earl of Leicester, who succeeded to the Earl of Morton's possessions, had two hides and one large virgate here in the reign of Henry II., and the half hide of the fee of Peverel was in the hands of one Coleman. The estate belonging to the Earl of Leicester here was held by the family of Dive, and was given by Hugh de Dive to the Knights Hospitallers of St John of Jerusalem. After the dissolution of the religious houses, the manor of North-thoft was granted, in the thirty-third of Henry VIII. (1542), to Charles Duke of Suffolk. It was soon after in the possession of Alexander Belchier, with whose family it continued till the year 1627, when William Belchier, Esq., conveyed it, with the manor of Guilsborough, to Serjeant Clerke, from whom they passed through several intermediate possessors to John Ward, Esq., who purchased them in 1710. A. B. Leigh, Esq., is the present lord. The five virgates belonging to the fee of Peverel formed part of the estate of Peter de Goldington, in the reign of Henry III., and were held of him by William de Nortoft by the service of a third part of a knight's fee. This estate was called a manor in the twenty-first of Edward III. (1348), and a fine was levied of it by Simon Simeon in the same year. He died seized of it in the eleventh of Richard II. (1388), and by inquisition taken after his decease, was certified to have held it of Sir Richard Champenoun, by the service of attending, once in three weeks, at his court at Coton. His heir could not be determined, and it afterwards passed into the family of La Ware. The Abbey of Sulby had revenues in Nortoft, which were valued at 18s. yearly, in 1535, and afterwards given to Richard Andrews and Leonard Chamberleyn.

A Writing School, in which thirty to forty children are instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic free of expense, was founded in 1609 by William Gilbert, who endowed it with £50; and an additional £50 was raised by subscription towards the erection and support of a Free School, which is now conducted under the National system. This bequest, with other donations, were laid out in the purchase of certain lands now producing £65 per annum. A new school-house, with one for infants annexed to it, was built in 1867 at the sole expense of the present vicar.

Post, Money-Order, and Telegraph Office, Savings Bank, and Government Life Insurance.—William Tyrrell, subpostmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 7 A.M., and are despatched at 5.45 P.M.

Barefoot James, vict. Red Lion , and grazier, Nortoft	Hopkins Robert, sen. beerho., butcher, and grazier	Stanton James, draper, &c.
Baseley Mr Joseph, Nortoft	Irons Ephraim, tailor & draper	Stephens R. Esq. Rye Hills , Nortoft
Bateman Miss Mary Ann	Johnson Liz. dressmkr. Nortoft	Symonds Rev. Wm. Baptist minister
Bird Joseph, tailor	Johnson W., shopkpr., Nortoft	Symonds Wm. stationer, &c.
Burgess Rev. Samuel, M.A.	Kilworth Mr William, Nortoft	Tallant the Misses Alice and Sarah, ladies' board.-school
Butlin Joseph, butcher, farmer, and grazier	Lake Geo. vict. Ward Arms , and farmer and grazier	Tomlinson John, boot & shoe maker, and parish clerk
Clifton Lady Eleanor, Guilsborough Grange	Leatherland John, boot & shoemaker, Nortoft	Tyrrell William, shopkeeper
Colyer Joseph, Maning, wheelwright	Letts James Wm. carpenter	Watts, Charles, saddler, collar and harness maker, Nortoft
Conquest George, builder	Loydall Edward, blacksmith	Webb Alfred, baker
Dowell Mr Samuel, Nortoft	Matthews John, shopkeeper & cabinetmaker, Nortoft	Wilson Richard Langland, surgeon, Nortoft
Eady Thomas, butcher, farmer, and grazier, Nortoft	Macdonald Lord (occasional residence)	Wormleighton Jas. blacksmith
Gaylor Chas. relieving officer, & registrar of births, deaths, and marriages, Nortoft	Newham Hy. national schoolmaster, agt. for Co. Fire Insr.
Gibbings Mrs Caroline, Hill House	Newitt William Chas. boot & shoemaker, Nortoft	Farmers and Graziers.
Harris Emma, shopkr. Nortoft	Patrick Wm. shopkr. & tailor	Garret Chs. Wm., Nortoft Lodge
Harris John, builder, Nortoft	Reeves Rd., auctioneer, Nortoft	Gulliver George, Nortoft Lodge
Hichens Rev. T. S. M.A. vicar, Nortoft	Roberts Mrs Elizth. Nortoft	Hollis John William, Nortoft
Hollis Mrs Mary, Nortoft	Spencer the Dowager Countess, and the Lady Sarah Spencer, Guilsborough Hall	Hopkins Robt. York, Nortoft
		Jeacock Millin
		Lovell Edward Isaac
		Peabody Benj. Nortoft Lodge

The nearest railway station is Brixworth (London and North-Western), about 5 miles distant.

Carriers.—Joseph Bettle, to Northampton, Wed. and Sat.; William Johnson, Sat.; Joseph Valentine to Market Harborough, Tuesday; and Northampton, Wednesday and Saturday.

HADDON WEST PARISH.

Haddon West or West Haddon, so named to distinguish it from East Haddon, is bounded on the east by Guilsborough, on the north by Winwick, on the west by Crick, and on the south by Long Buckby. It contains 2596 acres; its population in 1801 was 806; in 1831, 909; in 1841, 1013; in 1851, 989; in 1861, 963; and in 1871, 903 souls. The gross estimated rental is £6339, and the rateable value is £5651. Here are two brooks, one of which bounds the lordship and divides it from Guilsborough; and the other, parting West Haddon from Long Buckby, joins the Nene at Heyford. The lordship is well watered with springs; the most considerable is Nenmore, which is considered one of the sources of the Nene. "In West Haddon field is an eminence called Ostor Hill," says Bridges. "Under it, according to vulgar report, are buried several officers who fell in battle during the Wars of the Barons. At their interment they struck a spear in the ground, and to erect a monument raised up the ground even with the head of the spear. Such is the common tradition; and we infer from it, that this hill is an ancient tumulus or sepulchral monument, and from the name we conjecture it is the tumulus of Publius Ostorius, the celebrated Roman Pro prætor under the Emperor Claudius. That he died in Britain is evident from Tacitus, worn out with cares and the fatigues of war. Neither the exact place of his death nor yet that of his burial is recorded in history. But it is not easy to assign one more probable than this place, in the neighbourhood of the great military works at Daventry and Guilsborough, supposed to be of his erection, and the memory of it seems sufficiently preserved by the name itself, by its vicinity to these encampments, and the confused remains of an obscure tradition." The soil varies from a light land to dark loam; and the lordship is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture land. The principal proprietors are Herbert Atterbury, Esq. (lord of the manor); Mr Chas. Heygate, Mrs Gulliver; Rev. G. Grepp; and Messrs Isaac Edward Lovell, John Lovell, Thomas Smith, Charles Percival, Charles John Slye, John Heygate Turner, and Charles Parsons.

Manor.—The lordship of Eddone, Hadone or Haddon was divided amongst several possessors at the time of the Norman survey. The Abbot of Coventry had two hides of land here, which before the Conquest belonged to Leofric Earl of Merca, who gave it to the Priory of Coventry when he first founded it. The value of these two hides was 20s. One Ralph held half a hide here of the Earl of Morton, which was valued at 5s. at the same time. William Peverel was certified to hold one virgate pertaining to the manor of Cotes; and one virgate was in the possession of Gunfrid de Cioches. In the reign of Henry II., Hugh Vicecomes, the founder of Daventry Priory, held two hides and one great virgate here as under-tenant of the Prior of Coventry. There was at the same time one and a half great virgate of the fee of Peverel, one great virgate in the possession of Aunsel de Chokes, the Earl of Leicester had half a hide, and Nigel de Albany half a hide of the fee of Roger de Mowbray. Hugh Poer the grandson of Hugh Vicecomes de Leycester, with the consent of the monks of Coventry, the lords of the fee, gave his estate here to the Priory of Daventry to be held by the annual payment of 10s.; and in the reign of Henry III., the Priory of Daventry was found to hold half a knight's fee here of the Prior of Coventry, who held it of the king in capite. In the twenty-eighth of Edward I. (1300), the convent of Daventry obtained for themselves and successors a weekly market here upon Thursdays, and an annual fair beginning on the eve of the Invention of the Holy Cross and continuing three days. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), the Prior of Daventry was certified to be lord of the manor of West Haddon; and in the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), he accounted for a fourth part of one knight's fee here held of the prior of Coventry. This manor continued with the monastery of Daventry till the reign of Henry VIII., when upon the suppression of that house in the seventeenth of this reign (1526), it was given to Cardinal Wolsey with other possessions. Upon the cardinal's fall it was granted to the king's new foundation in Oxford; and being afterwards resumed by the crown, was purchased by Edward Waldegrave in the first of Edward VI. (1547.) Sir Richard Waddon, Knight, and alderman of London, was the principal tenant in this parish under the monastery, and dying in the ninth of Henry VIII. (1518) he was succeeded by his son William, from whom the estate passed to Thomas his grandson and heir. The virgate of land here possessed by Aunsel de Chokes in the reign of Henry II., came in course of succession to Robert advocate of Bethune, of whom Gilbert de Preston held one knight's fee here and at Easton Neston in the first of Henry III. (1216.) This estate continued with the family of Preston till the eighth of Henry VI. (1430,) when Wymer de Preston, Esq., gave it up with his other possessions in this county to John and Henry Hertwell and their heirs for ever. The half hide possessed by the Earl of Leicester in Henry II.'s time, passed into the possession of the family of Dyve, from which it afterwards came into the hands of Simon de Montfort. Upon De Montfort's rebellion his possessions were seized by the crown, and Henry III. gave his lands in West Haddon to his steward Sir Thomas Bray. From the De Brays it passed to the family of Mallore, with which it continued till the forty-fifth of Edward III. (1372), when Sir Richard Mallore gave it up to John de Haddon and his heirs. With this family it continued for several generations. The family of Catesby had considerable possessions here, which were called a manor in the reigns of Henry VIII. and Queen Elizabeth. The lands held of the fee of Mowbray in the reign of Henry II., amounted to half a hide here and within the limits of Crick. The Abbey of Sulby and the Hospital of St John of Jerusalem had possessions in this parish also.

The Village of West Haddon is large, and pleasantly situated on an eminence about six miles south from Welford, seven and a half north-east of Daventry, and eleven miles north-west from Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands nearly in the centre of the village, and is an ancient edifice consisting of a massive embattled tower containing five bells, a nave and side aisles, chancel and south porch. There was once a spire, which falling to decay was taken down in 1648. There is a piscina in the chancel and two in the south aisle, denoting the existence of chauntries or private chapels. The chancel is entered from the nave through a lofty arch. The font is a Norman square, with sculptures representing events in the life of our Saviour, and there is an ancient carved chest in the chancel. The organ is the gift of the late John Heygate, Esq. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £13, 16s. 8d., and now valued at £350 a year. It is in the patronage and incumbency of the Rev. George Lillie Woodhouse Fauquier, B.A. Hugh Poer gave this church to the Priory of Daventry in the twelfth century, with which the patronage continued till the Reformation. This parish gives name to the deanery of Haddon.

The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, capable of seating about five hundred persons, was erected in 1811; and the Baptist Chapel, built in 1820, will seat about four hundred. A house for the minister was built in 1868. Rev. T. Fielder is the pastor. The Sunday-schools are well attended.

The Charity School, erected in 1826, is endowed with the interest of £1000, and a house and garden for the master and mistress, and two cottages, left by John Heygate, Esq., in 1825, for the perpetual gratuitous education of all the children of the poor of this parish, and ten poor children of Winwick parish.

West Haddon Hall, the seat of Mr Thos. Coaton Smith, is a handsome mansion, pleasantly situated near the village; West Haddon Cottage, the seat of Mr George Lenton, about a mile from the village; the Manor-House, belonging to Mr Hy. H. Atterbury; and The Grange, occupied by Mr J. H. Turner, are very neat and commodious residences.

Charities.—John Heygate, Esq., of West Haddon Grange, who died on the twenty-fourth of December, 1837, also bequeathed the sum of £500 to the trustees of the school, the annual proceeds of which were to be distributed on or about Candlemas Day to the most necessitous poor of this parish. Mr Samuel Walker left by will in 1825 the sum of £200, the interest of the same to be applied thus: one guinea annually to the Church Sunday-school; one guinea to the original Friendly Society; and the remainder to be distributed on New Year's Day in bread and coals to the poor of the parish. William Lovett, Esq., of Haddon Grange, built cottages for twelve poor persons of this parish, aged sixty-eight years or upwards, with a garden to each; and a handsome turret-clock was erected over the cottages at a cost of £50 by Mrs Catherine Woodcock, sister of the aforesaid William Lovett. Mr John Kilsby bequeathed in 1808 the interest of £10 for ever to the Church Sunday-school. The Charity Estate lets for about £100 a year, which is expended upon the poor, the church, and the highways. The Church Land, of about six acres, lets for about £24 a year, and is applied with the church rate.

The Apprenticing Fund consists of £50, arising from the benefactions of Jacob Lucas, Edward Burnham, and another, the interest of which is expended in apprenticing poor children.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank.—William West, postmaster. Letters arrive from Rugby at 7.15 A.M., and are despatched at 6.15 P.M.

Adams Thomas and James,
carpenters and joiners
Adams Wm. carptr. & wheelrt
Bale George, chimney sweep
Booker Henry, blacksmith
Buswell Mrs Ann
Bothell Wm. baker and grzr.
Cameron Chas. Edward, Esq.
West Haddon Lodge.
Coles Wm. shoemaker, baker,
and shopkeeper
Co-operative Stores (grocery,
&c.) Rt. Buswell, manager
Cross Henry, baker
Dunkley Thomas, higgler
Eagleston James, beerhouse
Facer Chas. drugst. & shopkpr.
Farm Wm. saddler and grazier
Fauquier Rev. George Lillie
Woodehouse, B.A., vicar
Fielder Rev. Frederick (Bapt.)
Folwell Miss Mary Ann
Furniss George, tailor
Garratt Jos. farmer and vict.
Grasier's Arms
Harday George, surgeon
Healey Mr John
Healey Thomas, tea dealer
and assistant overseer

Heygate Miss Ann
Hoole Thos. brazier & tinner
Jelly John, tailor
King John, butcher & beer ret.
Lenton, Mr Geo. The Cottage
Line Chas. & Thos. bricklayers Manton Wm. grocer & ale & porter agent, and grazier
Newcombe Arthur, vict. Crown
Page Mr William
Parsons Charles, surgeon
Parsons Mrs Sarah
Robins George, bricklayer
Seal John, vict. Sheaf
Seal Mr James
Seal Ths. carpenter & wheelwt.
Sharpe Henry Walker, plumber, painter, &c
Thompson Alf. tailor & shopkr.
Townley Daniel, blacksmith
Townley Jon. tailor and outfitter
Underwood Henry, shoemkr.
Underwood Wm. shoemaker
Vause John, cattle dealer
Watts Edward, butcher & grzr.
West John, shopkr. & beerho.
West Wm. shopkeeper and post-office
Weston Walter, excise officer

Farmers and Graziers.

(Marked * are yeomen.)

*Atterbury Henry H. The Manor House
Burton Miss
Darker Wm. (& Lond. salesmn.)
Gilbert John Montgomery
*Heygate Charles
Heygate John
*Johnston John
*Johnston John, jun.
*Kilsby John
Ladkin Richard
Lake William
*Parson Charles
Parnell Mrs Elizabeth
Parnell Richard (and butcher and London salesman)
*Percival Charles
*Slye Charles John
*Smith Thomas Coaton, West Haddon Hall
Tew John
Turner, Jno. Heygate, West Haddon Grange
Watts, Misses Martha, Sarah, and Alice

Carriers.—Joseph Garratt, to Northampton, Wednesday and Saturday, and Joseph Healey on Saturday, and Henry Underwood to Rugby on Saturday.

HOLLOWELL.

Hollowell, or Holywell, formerly a hamlet of Guilsborough, is now an independent parish, situated in a valley 1 mile south-east from Guilsborough, 4 from Brixworth Station and 9 from Northampton, and contains 1023 acres; and its population in 1841, was 273; in 1851, 300; in 1861, 266; and in 1871, 229 souls. Its rateable value is £1598, and the gross estimated rental is £1865. The village contains a few good houses, and the principal landowners are—Sir J. H. Langham, Bart., John Baron Howes and A. B. Leigh, Esqs.

Manor.—Holewelle, as it is called in Domesday Book, belonged to several owners at the time of that survey. The Earl of Morton had the site of a mill here; Gilbert the Cook had half a virgate of land; and there was also one virgate pertaining to the manor of Clay Coton. In the reign of Henry II. Robert de Dyve held one and a third hide here of the Bishop of Lincoln. Alan Fitz-Roald, who succeeded Peter de Goldington in his estates, was certified in the twenty-fourth year of the reign of Edward I. (1296) to hold three parts of one knight's fee in Holewell and Nortoft. From him this estate descended to Elizabeth Hastings his daughter, who together with Agnes de Norancourt, in the ninth of Edward II. (1316), were possessed of Guilsborough and its members. In the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), Agnes Dyve and Robert de Holewell accounted for one knight's fee here held of the Bishop of Lincoln and the heir of Peter de Goldington. Henceforward no mention occurs of this manor till the third of Edward IV. (1464), when we find it in the possession of the family of Burneby, from which it passed in the beginning of the reign of Henry VIII. to the Montague family. Edward Montague, Esq., sold it in the thirty-second of this reign (1541) to William Lane, Esq., who levied a fine of it in the fourth of Elizabeth (1562). From this gentleman it passed, in the tenth of this reign (1568), to his daughters and co-heirs, from whom it descended to the late J. W. B. Leigh, Esq., who died in 1870, and was succeeded by his son Allesley Boughton Leigh, Esq., the present lord of the manor.

The Church, dedicated to St James, is in the Early English style, and consists of nave with eastern apse, a high pitched roof of open-woodwork, and at the west end a turret or gable containing one bell. The apse is lighted by three lancet-shaped windows, filled with stained glass, very richly designed, and over the west door is a beautiful wheel-window of stained glass. The mouldings of the arches, both of the west door and the apse, are worthy of notice on account of their great depth. The interior presents a very good appearance, and is furnished with open carved seats. The building, which is of a most substantial character and constructed of Brixworth and Duston stone, was erected in 1840, at the sole expense of the Rev. J. D. Watson, M.A., the then rector of the parish. In the church is a small organ by Holdich; also a memorial cross to the Rev. R. M. Dykes, a former curate who died in 1843. The living is a vicarage of the yearly value of £155, with residence, in the gift of A. B. Leigh, Esq., and incumbency of the Rev. Wm. Roscoe Burgess, M.A. The tithes of the parish were commuted in 1848 for a rent-charge of £63, 4s. 3d, which is paid to the vicar.

There is an Infant School in the vicarage grounds, built in 1853 at a cost of £300: it is a brick building with a small tower and clock, and will accommodate fifty children. The Baptists have a small chapel in the village.

Post-Office.—Letter-box cleared at 5 P.M. Guilsborough Money-Order Office.

Bray John, miller and farmer	Leatherland Hannah, wheel-	Farmers and Graziers.
Burgess Rev. Wm. Roscoe,	wright and carpenter
M.A. vicar	Mobbs Joseph Adcock, vict.	Chapman, John
Chapman Henry, plumber and	Coach and Horses	Letts James painter	Townley Daniel, blacksmith	Mackanass John
Emerston Frances, schoolmis.	Wetherby Mr Joseph	Ward William
Johnson Abraham, shopkeeper	Wright Wm. butcher, grocer,	Underwood Edward and beerhouse

LILBOURNE PARISH.

This parish is situated on the banks of the Avon, by which it is divided on the north from Leicestershire; it is bounded on the east by Clay Coton, on the south by Yelvertoft, and the ancient Roman road Watling Street separates it from Warwickshire. It contains 1624 acres, and its population in 1801 was 243; in 1831, 274; in 1841, 279; in 1851, 279; in 1861, 292; and in 1871, 281. Its rateable value is £3352, and the gross estimated rental is £3769. The soil is principally a dark mould, and the pastures are excellent. The principal landowners are—Corbet Smith, Esq. (lord of the manor); Mr Thomas Gilbert, of Swinford Lodge; Mrs Arnold; Mrs Amelia Howkins; the Clipston Charity; Mr Harris (trustee); Mr H. Harper; Mrs Buckoll, and Mrs Cattell.

Antiquities.—"Upon the banks of the Avon, which runs here with a small stream, was anciently a castle, whose vestigia are still visible. The southernmost part is a square piece of ground, appearing to have been raised, and in its sides answering to the four quarters of the heavens. At the south-east and south-west angles are hillocks, which have the resemblance of bastions. From one angle to the other runs a bank of earth, and a like bank along the eastern and western sides. The area is about the fifth part of an acre. To the north-west is a large high mount, on which, according to tradition, there stood a fort or watch-tower, of whose demolished walls the churches of Lilbourne and Clay Coton are said to have been built. About half a mile west from the town is a high eminence of a circular form, in shape and size not unlike Berry Mount at Towcester, called the Round Hill. About it are some slight marks of a moat. Some persons, as we are told by Camden, dug into this hill in expectation of finding concealed treasure, but they met with only coals. From this circumstance that learned antiquary conjectures it was thrown up as a boundary or limit; and shows, from approved authority, that under landmarks of this kind it was usual to put coals, bones half burnt, potsherds, and things of the like nature. These hillocks are termed Botontines. Mr Morton, who thinks this hill too high and big to have been a tumulus, and that the Watling Street was itself a sufficient boundary, and who says further, that the notion of coals being found here is founded only upon a vulgar tale, is of opinion it was erected for a watch-mount. On this round hill have been planted a sycamore, an aspen, and a willow tree. Upon the Watling Street way, near a furlong south of Dowbridge, was another hillock, in levelling which were found human bones with ashes and wood-coals. From hence and from its vicinity to a military way, Mr Morton conjectures this was a tumulus of Roman erection. Many human bones and skulls have been found in this neighbourhood and near the Round Hill; and the tradition of the place is, that here was formerly a fight between the Saxons and the Danes. It is Mr Morton's opinion that there was anciently a severe action in these parts between the Britons and the Romans. From its situation and these marks of antiquity, Camden supposeth Lilbum was a Roman station, and its distance from Bennavenna and Vennones hath induced Mr Morton and a late learned commentator on the 'Itinerary,' to fix the tripontium of the Romans here, rather than at Towcester."—(Baker.) About a mile from Lilbourne,

"Where ever-gliding Avon's limpid wave Thwarts the long course of dusty Watling Street,"

the river, which here divides the counties of Northampton and Leicester, is crossed by a long bridge, known as Dove or Dow Bridge, and here, according to Dr Stukeley and others, the Romans had a pons, if not three, and hence the name of Tripontium. Dr Stukeley says, "The bridge is placed in a sweet little valley, with the sides pretty steep. The stream here divides into two, with a bridge over each; upon one is a stone inscription, very laconic, showing the three counties (Northampton, Warwick, and Leicester) that repair it. Hard by antiquities have been found, both at Catthorpe and Lilbourne, one on the north and the other on the south side of the river, so that the Roman city stood on both sides." Vestiges of encampment appear both on the Northamptonshire and on the Leicestershire sides. The Roman road passed through the middle of an encampment, which Mr Ireland thinks "was indisputably the Roman station mentioned by Antoninus in his journey from London to Lincoln under the denomination of Tripontium." Camden assigns this station to Towcester, and Dr Henry fixes it at Rugby. Dyer the poet was for some time rector of Catthorpe, a little beyond Lilbourne, on the Leicestershire bank of the Avon. He was originally an itinerant painter in his native country (South Wales), and having afterwards entered the church, he was presented to the living of Catthorpe in 1741, and there he remained about ten years. The rectory house is on a hillside, looking over the vale of the Avon, which is here very beautiful, and all about it is just the placid scenery that such a poet might delight to wander among. "His wife's name," he tells us, "was Ensor, whose grandmother was a Shakespeare, descended from a brother of everybody's—Shakespeare." He was a man of a kindly, unambitious temper, strongly attached to a country life, and his poetry has all the sweetness and simplicity of his character.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, the crown held 2 hides and half a virgate of land in Lilbourne, which, with 12 acres of meadow, had been rated before the Conquest at 2s., but was then valued at 30s. In the Confessor's time it formed part of the possessions of the Saxon Earl Albericus. The Earl of Morton had 1 virgate, and Rudolph held 1½ virgate of the crown at the same time. In the reign of King Stephen the lordship was in the hands of Gerard de Camville, who resided at the castle here. Richard, his son and successor, founded Combey Abbey, in Warwickshire, in this reign, and in the twentieth of the same reign (1155), he was a witness to the King's recognition of the liberties and rights of the people. In Henry II.'s time the Earl of Leicester, whose ancestors appear to have obtained a grant of the lands possessed by Earl Albericus, held 4 hides here and in Clay Coton, and William Fitz-Alfrid 1 large virgate. Upon the decease of Roger, grandson of Richard de Camville, in the twelfth of John (1211), without male issue, this lordship came to Elena his daughter, from whom it passed to her father's sisters, Elena, the wife of Thomas de Astley, Maud, of Robert de Esseby, and Petronilla, who afterwards married Richard Curson, who divided it between them. In the reign of Henry III., Richard de Curson, Thomas de Astley, and William de Esseby, held one knight's fee here and at Clay Coton of Simon de Montfort of the Honor of Leicester. Maud de Esseby conveyed her share of the lordship to William de Waleys, who, in the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), was certified to hold the township of Lillburne and Cley Cotes of William de Botyler, by the service of one knight's fee. Upon the forfeiture of Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, Edmund, younger son to King Henry III., was created Earl of Leicester, and obtained the Honor of Leicester with all the lands and knight's fees belonging to it. At his death he was possessed of one fee in Lilburne, which William de Boteler held of him by knight's service. His son and successor was Thomas Earl of Lancaster, who, in the ninth of Edward II. (1316), was superior lord of this manor and its members. The part of the lordship possessed by William Waleys passed to his son, grandson, and great grand-daughter, who, in conjunction with her husband Robert de Heygate, granted it to Robert de Holland and Maud his wife, who were in possession of it in the third of Edward III. (1330). The part belonging to Thomas de Astley continued with the family for many generations; and the part allotted to Petronilla and Robert Curson passed successively to Adam le Wyvic, Adam de Papton, and the family of De Waunci, who possessed it in the third of Edward III. In the same year, Robert and Maud de Holland, Thomas de Astley, and Robert Waunci, were the joint possessors of the lordship. In the twentieth of this reign (1347), Thomas de Astley, Richard de Egebaston, and Robert de Waunci, accounted for one knight's fee here of the Honor of Leicester. The inheritance of the De Astleys came in succession to Thomas Grey, Marquis of Dorset, who died seized of this manor in the twenty-second of Henry VIII. (1531), from whom it descended to his son. William Leigh, Esq., levied a fine of it in the third of Edward VI. (1550); and it was afterwards sold and resold, and passed into the possession of William Corbet Smith, Esq., of Batewell Hall, near Lutterworth, who purchased it of the trustees of J. A. Arnold, Esq. Corbet, the son and heir of the said William Corbet Smith, who attained his majority in 1865, is the present lord of the manor. Lilbourne had formerly a weekly market on Monday, together with the privilege of pillory and ducking-stool.

The Village, which is small, is situate about 4 miles E.N.E. of Rugby, 7 S.W. from Welford, 10 N. from Daventry, and 18 W. of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands at the north-western extremity of the village, and is a small ancient edifice. It consists of a nave and side aisles, with parapets, chancel, south porch, and a square embattled tower, containing five bells. The nave and aisles are supposed to be of the thirteenth century; the rood steps remain in the south aisle; there is a sancte-bell cot over the nave gable, and the bell is still preserved in the church. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £6, and now worth about £140; it is in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor, and incumbency of the Rev. Robert Charles Evors, M.A. The glebe land is 64 acres.

The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, erected in 1820, was rebuilt in 1868, at a cost of £220, and will accommodate ninety persons; there is a Sunday-school attached to it.

The National School, a small brick building erected in 1852, is supported out of the poor's land.

Charities.—The Church and poor's land.—This property, consisting altogether of 25a. 1r. of land, is under the management of the minister and parish officers, and is appropriated to the repairs of the parish church, and to the use of the poor. The portion which belongs to the church, containing four acres or thereabouts, is let yearly to the highest bidder. The rent is about £18 per annum. Part of the land, which includes both pasture and meadow ground, is let at under rents, one rood per head to each poor person in the parish; the rest in pasture is let annually to the highest bidder, and realises nearly £100. The property is understood to have been appropriated to the uses above-mentioned at the time of the enclosure in 1681. William Clarke in 1707 bequeathed 40s. a year out of his estate for ever to the minister and churchwardens of this parish, to be distributed at their discretion, in two equal payments, in March and September, to the poor of the parish. James Townsend left by will in 1707, 10s. a year to the poor of this parish, and two closes of land for ever, now belonging to Mr John Beesley. Thomas Perkins bequeathed to the minister of this parish in 1796, £20 in trust for ever, the interest arising from said sum to be distributed annually to the poor of the parish as the minister should think fit.

Post-Office.—Wall Box. Letters arrive from Rugby at 8 A.M., and are despatched at 6.30 P.M.

Crisp Jeremiah, bricklayer, &c.	Line Matthew, asst. overseer	Hall Mrs Elizabeth
Crisp Phœbe, shopkeeper	Patchett Robert, butcher and vict. Bell	Hall John
Drake William, carpenter	Seamour Rich., boot & shmkr.	Harper Hy. Lilbourne Lodge
Dunn Miss Sarah	Stafford Wm. blacksmith and vict. Chequers	Howkins Jinx, Furze
Evors Rev. R. C., M.A. vicar	Vaughan Benjamin, hawker	Hurst William
Harper Nathaniel and Henry, graziers and vict. Bull		Ladkin William Richard
Hefford John, carptr. & grazier	Farmers and Graziers.	Lee Humphrey (and shopkpr.)
Howkins Mrs Amelia	Beesley John	Marson John
Line Eliza, schoolmistress

Carriers.—Henry Crisp, to Lutterworth on Thursday, and to Rugby, Tuesday and Sturday and John Lee, to Rugby on Tuesday and Saturday.

Railway Station, London and North-Western, $\frac{1}{2}$ mile from the village in Catthorpe parish.

NASEBY PARISH.

Naseby, in Domesday Book called Navesberie, and in later records Navesby and Nathesby, is bounded on the east by Haselbeech and Kelmars, on the north by Sibbertoft and Clipston, on the west by Sulby and Cold-Ashby, and on the south by Cottesbrooke. It contains 3324 statute acres; and its population in 1801 was 538; in 1831, 707; in 1841, 889; in 1851, 858; in 1861, 812; and in 1871, 693 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £4630, and the gross estimated rental £5222. The soil is various, and the proprietors are—Viscount Clifden (lord of the manor), and George Ashby Ashby, Esq., J.P. D.L.

Manor.—William Peverel, natural son of the Conqueror, held seven hides of land here at the time of the Norman survey ; there were eight acres of meadow, and the whole had been valued at the time of Edward the Confessor at 20s., but was then rated at 60s. Upon the Honor of Peverel being escheated to the crown, these seven hides were granted to Guy de la Val, from whom they passed to Roger de Lacy, Constable of Chester, in the first year of the reign of King John (1199). In the fourth of Richard I. (1193), this Roger was at the siege of Acre, in the Holy Land, was engaged in the battle against the Saracens, and was present at the taking of Damietta. In the fifth of this reign (1204), he obtained a weekly market here upon Tuesdays ; and at his death, which occurred in the thirteenth of the same reign (1212), he was succeeded by John his son and heir. John de Lacy was created Earl of Lincoln in the seventeenth of Henry III. (1233) ; and in the twenty-first of this reign, upon the assembly of the English prelates by appointment of Otho the pope's legate, he was sent with other nobles in the king's name to prohibit the legate from establishing any constitution derogatory to his crown and dignity. Richard de Clare, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford, marrying Maud the daughter of John de Lacy, became possessed of the lordship of Naseby ; and by a fine levied in the thirty-third of the same reign (1249), he conveyed the manor, with the advowson of the church, to William Earl of Albemarle. In the third of Edward I. (1275), Maud de Clare, Countess of Gloucester, then a widow, recovered the manor of Isabel de Fortibus, the relict of the Earl of Albemarle. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), Gilbert de Clare, the son and successor of Richard, Earl of Gloucester, died seized of this manor, which he held in capite of the Earl of Lincoln ; and was succeeded by Gilbert his son, by Joan of Acres, daughter to the king, a minor under five years of age. This Gilbert was slain in the battle of Bannockburn, in the seventh of Edward II. (1316), and not leaving male issue his inheritance descended to his three sisters and co-heirs. In the partition of his estates, this manor was assigned to Margaret, his second sister, and was at this time in the hands of John Gifford as under-tenant. In the ninth of the same reign, this John Gifford was certified to be the lord of Naseby. The manor was afterward in the possession of the Stafford family, with which it continued for several generations ; and in the ninth of Henry V. (1422), it devolved upon Humphrey Earl of Stafford, afterwards created Duke of Buckingham, and slain at the battle of Northampton fighting valiantly on the part of King Henry VI., in the thirty-eighth of this reign (1460). (See page 116). His successor, John Stafford, was created Earl of Wiltshire in the ninth of Edward IV. (1470), and at his decease, in the thirteenth of the same reign, his title and estates descended to his son Edward, a minor three years old. Edward Earl of Wiltshire having no issue, this manor reverted at his death to Edward Duke of Buckingham, who was attainted of high treason, and beheaded upon Tower-hill in the thirteenth of Henry VII. (1522), and his lands confiscated. The manor of Naseby was given in the same year to Sir William Fitz-William, Knight, and passed through several families, by purchase, down to John Fitz-Gerald, Esq., who sold it in 1855 to the late Viscount Clifden, who died in 1866, and was succeeded by his son, the present Viscount Clifden, who is a minor. The convent of Sulby had possessions in this parish, which were given with other lands in the neighbourhood, in the tenth and twelfth of Elizabeth (1568-70), to Sir Christopher Hatton.

In the lordship, which was enclosed in 1822, are several hills, on one of which the village is situated, and the parish is considered to be the highest ground in England. At Naseby Woolleys the height above the sea is 567 feet ; at the large cross by the church 667 feet, and at the base of the Obelisk, 697 feet. These measurements were taken by the late Captain Langham Rokeby in 1870.

The Village of Naseby, which is large, scattered, and irregular, is situate in or near the centre of England, about three and a half miles S.E. from Welford, eleven and a half N.N.W. from Northampton, seven S. W. of Market Harborough, and seventy-eight miles from London. Naseby, as we have seen, was once a market-town, and the market-cross still stands at the corner of the road leading to Market Harborough. Nearly the whole of the old mud-wall houses have been pulled down and substituted by neat cottages and substantial brick buildings, which give the village a pleasant appearance.

The lordship is remarkable for its excellent springs, no less than six rising in the village alone. One of them, the Lesser or Upper Avon, is the immortal Shakespeare's own river. Leland's notice in the "Itinerary" of the source of the Avon, deserves quoting, if only as a little sample of the rugged English of the time (1540-50):—"The hedde of Avon river visiteth (riseth) a little sidenham of Gilesborough (Guilsborough) village, and cummeth by it there, first receiving a bottom." That which Leland calls the head of the Avon is another branch of it which rises near Cold Ashby, not far from Guilsborough, but is not considered the main branch.

The classic stream takes a westerly course through Stanford Park, separating this county from Leicestershire for a short distance, then winds away through a good portion of the counties of Warwick and Worcester, and unites with the Severn at Tewkesbury in Gloucestershire. Tewkesbury is in a direct line about fifty-five miles south-west of Naseby. But the course of the river is very devious, and though it flows on the whole in a south-westerly direction, it does so by no means uniformly. On its way it passes by Rugby, Warwick, Stratford-upon-Avon (the birthplace of Shakespeare), Evesham, and Preshore, before it arrives at Tewkesbury. Although the Avon is one of the most famous of our rivers, it is by no means one of the most beautiful. Its interest arises mainly from its associations, but in them it is alone among English rivers—perhaps among the rivers of the world. The river Nene also rises here from a spring called Chapel Well. Some historians affirm that the Welland also has its source in this parish, whilst others contend that it rises near the vicarage-house at Sibbertoft. However this may be, one head of the river Ise certainly has its source here, in the north-eastern corner of the parish. Thus, says the Rev. J. Mastin, a former vicar, "Naseby boasts of giving birth to three rivers of great public as well as private utility, flowing from the very centre of the island to seas almost diametrically opposite"—one proof, amongst others, of its great elevation.

The Battle of Naseby.—This memorable battle between the Royalists and Parliamentarians, in which the former were defeated, the Royal cause determined, and which in the end cost Charles I. his life, was fought in Naseby field on the 14th June, 1645. The site of the battle is a wide and long stretch of ground with a gentle slope from the northern and southern extremities to the lower space between, about one mile north of the village. There are some depressions in the field, but it is not generally broken, though somewhat of its ruggedness is now probably worn off. At the time of the fight it was an open heath, and remained so till the present century—a rough, undulating stretch of high moorland, covered with gorse and fern and scattered bramble-bushes. The following account of this remarkable engagement is from the pen of an able writer: "The battle occurred in the middle of June, 1645. Charles was at Harborough when he heard that Fairfax had drawn off from Oxford, and he resolved to advance towards him. The King and all about him were in high spirits, fully believing that the Parliament army was in a disorganised state, that the new model which had just been adopted was unsuccessful, and that he had but to appear and victory would at once, of necessity, declare for him. Charles advanced to Daventry, where he waited several days for more correct intelligence of the movements of the enemy. Intelligence came, but of another kind than he expected. Fairfax, he learned, was close at hand; he had reached Northampton with an army more considerable than had been reported to him, and in good condition. This being the case, he resolved to fall back upon Harborough, and from thence proceed as rapidly as he might to Leicester. Meanwhile Fairfax had not been idle; anticipating an engagement, he had written to the Parliament, requesting that Cromwell might be spared from his attendance at the House of Commons, in order to take the command of the horse, an engagement being likely to happen speedily. On Friday, June 13, a council of war is summoned to determine what it is best to do. While the debate is going forward, a loud noise is heard in the camp. Cromwell is come! and "the horse give a mighty shout for joy of his coming to them." He has brought, too, seven hundred of his own Ironsides with him—good men all—but himself a host. There is little hesitancy now. Onward is the word. An alarm soon reaches Harborough that the Roundheads are at hand—that they are quartered within six miles. No chance of reaching Leicester now: that is plain enough, whatever else is doubtful. "A council was immediately called; the former resolution of retiring presently laid aside; and a new one as quickly taken 'to fight,' to which there was always an immoderate appetite when the enemy was within any distance. They would not stay to expect his coming, but would go back to meet him. And so, in the morning early, being Saturday, the 14th of June, all the army was drawn up upon a rising ground of very great advantage, about a mile south from Harborough (which was left at their back), and there put in order to give or receive the charge."—(Clarendon.) But they did not stay there. Fairfax had set out from his quarters by daybreak, and after a march of an hour or two, sees some of the King's troops on the high grounds before him. Charles had been led to move his troops from their former and, as it would seem, preferable position, owing to his misconceiving the purport of some movements on the part of his adversary, and now had scarcely time to arrange his army before the enemy made signs of attacking him. The position which the King's army had now taken is on the north-eastern side of Naseby field; the Parliament's army occupies the hill about half a mile on the south. The deep hollow is between them. The order of battle is soon formed. On the King's side, Prince Rupert has the command of the right wing, Sir Marmaduke Langdale of the left, while the main body is commanded by Lord Ashley; the King being with the reserves, and having Lord Lindsey, Sir George Lisle, and others with him. On the opposite side, Cromwell commands the right, and Ireton the left wing; the centre is under the charge of the General (Fairfax) himself and Major Skippon; Rainsborough, Hammond, and Pride commanding the reserves. Each party forms a line stretching across the field; the order of each is similar—the infantry being in the centre, with the cavalry as wings. Yonder hill, where the King's troops are, is Broad Moor; they have a warren on their left. This, whereon the Parliament's army is ranged, is Mill Hill, that Fenny Hill on the left, a troop of Ireton's dragoons is behind the hedge that divides Naseby and Sulby Honors. Both armies are well placed; it is clear, though, that Cromwell has the advantage. He has secured such a position as to screen a considerable part of his men by means of the broken ground from the observation of the enemy, while he commands a full view of them, and can detect at once all their movements. In number there is little difference between them. In courage they are equal, but not in confidence. That "mighty shout" of the horse yesterday, when "Fairfax's invincible lieutenant" came, was it not a pre-sage to victory?—"There is some hopeless confusion here between the various accounts of the victorious party on the one hand, and Clarendon on the other—neither hours nor movements can be made to agree, and it seems as though here, as elsewhere, Clarendon had not taken much trouble about the exact veracity of his narrative."—(Milton.) Fairfax himself, too, his looks were pale as death yesterday, but now he is all alacrity, his soldiers see in his cheerful countenance the promise of victory? On the other side, the cavalry is full of assurance, but the infantry is hardly so hopeful. Those marchings and countermarchings and constant changings of plans do not speak well for their commanders' decisions and clear-sightedness. A mighty difference; it is the hour of life or death, and they cannot confide in their leaders' firmness and foresight, on which both depend! But they are brave men, and will do bravely. The Royalists place bean-stalks in their hats; the others have no directions on the subject; a few of their own accord put up some white paper or linen, the rest carry no mark.

Thus, then, these twenty thousand men stand face to face on that fair summer morning waiting for the word in order to fall upon each other. The broad moor glows with the broom in full flower—its golden glory mingling with the lowlier blossoms of the heath. The wind blows sharply from the north-west, and there is a little preparatory manœuvring to obtain the advantage of it. A few shots are fired from the scanty artillery on either side. And see, a forlorn hope of three hundred musketeers advances towards the Royal army; its orders are to advance steadily, to wait in the vale till it is charged, and then fall back as steadily as it advanced. The battle is begun. Rupert with his right approaches the left of his opponents. He charges swiftly, terribly, crying "Queen Mary!" while the answering shout is, "God is our strength!" Brave is the meeting, Ireton is not made to yield; bravely is that fierce charge encountered, but it is irresistible. Ireton is borne down, his horse is killed, himself thrust through the thigh with a halberd and wounded in the face; his eyes become dim, he is carried off a prisoner, and his troops fly swiftly, while Rupert's as swiftly pursue them. How fares it on the other wing? Has the Invincible given away? Not he. Langdale charged him, but he yielded not a step. His Ironsides charge in turn—"like a torrent driving all before them." Down they rush into that narrow valley, conquerors and conquered, but his clear eye sees when to stay the pursuit. He drives them fairly from the field, far enough to prevent them rallying, then he as quickly returns to it. Work is yet to do there, and he well knew his work was undone while anything remains to do—scattered troops may rally, but the danger is from those who stand. With those in the centre there has been hot work. Ashley comes on with ready energy—there is one discharge on each side, and then closing they meet hand to hand, fighting with the butt-ends of their muskets. For a brief space this continues, then all of the Roundheads but Fairfax's own regiment give way. But they rally. The general, bareheaded (for he lost his helmet in the first charge), with a spirit "heightened above the ordinary spirit of man," thinks not for a moment of retreat. He is "to and again in the front, carrying orders, bringing on divisions in thickest dangers, and with gallant bravery."—(Clarendon.) Skippon, too, is busy; he brings on a troop that is not quite disorganised, but in doing it is shot in the side, "yet he leads them on." Nor will he quit the field though Fairfax desires him. "No, general, I will not stir," replies the brave old man; "I will not stir while a man will stand."—(Fairfax's Letter.) But the disorder is too great to be remedied. Then the commanders with their colours, and such of the soldiers as are firm, fall into the reserves, order is re-established, and these fresh troops advancing quickly compel the wearied Royalists to fly. Not all! there stands one regiment "like a rock."—(Rushworth.) Again and again Fairfax charges, but they stand rock-like still, though their comrades have all deserted them, and though the King, for whom they are dying, stands with his untouched reserves idly on the hill there. What heed they! They know their duty and will do it. Grievous is it to see brave men thus stand hopeless. Fairfax despatches Skippon with his regiment to the other side, and so with sharp shots and heavy blows, they beat their way through that rock and meet in the middle. It is battered down, crushed. But why stand those reserves idly there? Will decision never reach their counsels? The King will charge—is ready to do so—plainly must do so—is not the foot everywhere breaking? He places himself at the head of his Guards, but the Earl of Carnewarthy, who rides next him, "lays his hand on the bridle of the King's horse, and with two or three full-mouthed Scottish oaths cries, 'Will you go upon your death in an instant?' and before the King understands what he will have, turns his horse round." Straight flies the word—"the King runs, every one shift for himself,"—and without a blow—without advancing towards the field—all of that reserve fly as though the Invincible were indeed upon them.

But where tarries Rupert all this while? Alas! he is a gallant soldier, but not a wise one. He drove far the troops who fled before him—too far, but he returned at last? The foolish boy! he comes upon the train of his adversaries on his return, and must needs stay to take it. He wants trophies—his men want booty, and so they fall on there, while their fellows are being hewed to pieces in the field—clean forgotten! But the train is well guarded,—Cromwell is not a careless soldier,—and Rupert cannot make an impression upon it. Again he tries, but it is in vain. Again? No—"to the field." It is too late; all is lost there, and he has some difficulty in rejoining the King, who has rallied his reserves about half a mile beyond his old station. Meanwhile Cromwell had returned and completed his work of destruction in the field; then calling off their men, the generals put them again in order, and they advanced ready for battle as at first.

Not so with the King's men. "One charge more and we regain the day," pleads he, and pleads in vain. Rupert's men declare they have acted their parts—the battle is over, they will not begin the day again. They have no "Cause" to fight for. "That difference was observed shortly from the beginning of the war," as Clarendon tells us, "in the discipline of the King's troops and of those which marched under the command of Cromwell, that though the King's troops prevailed in the charge, and routed those they charged, they never rallied themselves again in order, nor could be brought to make a second charge again the same day; whereas Cromwell's troops, if they prevailed, or though they were beaten and routed, presently rallied again, and stood in good order till they received new orders." In vain, therefore, was it to entreat them to stand when they saw those men before them closing steadily upon them. They retreat slowly at first, ever quickening, till retreat becomes a chase for life or death. It was "extreme hot work," as one who was in it said, and hot was the chase afterwards. "We pursued them," said Cromwell in his letter, written directly after, "from three miles short of Harborough to nine beyond, even to sight of Leicester, whither the King fled." And now, when a peaceful peasant is digging a trench from some of the meadows, or by the roadside, it often happens that the spade strikes upon the bones of one of those poor stragglers. From Naseby to Leicester—a weary sixteen miles for those miserable men. What was it to them that the fields were fair, that the trees were bending beneath their graceful foliage, that the gentle sun was sliding softly and in beauty towards the west—they dared not even stop to drink from the brook murmuring so gently by the wayside heedless of all that bloody work. Frightful was the encounter, more terrible the flight. The field still retains evidence of the event. The bodies were collected and buried in several huge pits that were hastily dug; and the earth with which they were covered has sunk considerably, so that now they form large hollows—some of the deeper, from the water collecting in them, except in very dry weather, form ponds, and being left waste round the borders, have become fringed with brambles and weeds. The plough is not carried over any of the graves, and they have a solemn effect when it is known what they are. In cultivating the soil, bullets are sometimes still turned up. About half or three-quarters of a mile from the battlefield a stone obelisk was erected by the late John Fitzgerald, Esq., in 1823, in commemoration of the battle.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, pleasantly situated on elevated ground close to the source of the river Avon, is a stone structure in the Early English character, consisting of nave, chancel, north and south aisles and porches, square embattled tower, surmounted by a handsome crocketed spire, containing a peal of five bells and a clock. There were formerly only the tower and a half spire, with a copper ball on the top. The church was thoroughly restored in 1860 by subscription at a cost of nearly £2000, George Ashby Ashby, Esq. of Naseby Woolleys, and the late Rev. James Jones, being the principal contributors. During these restorations, the old copper ball, taken from Boulogne in Henry VIII.'s time, was taken down and presented by the parish to Mr Ashby. Open sittings, a carved oak pulpit on a stone base, and a reading-desk were added; and a west window (by Clayton and Bell), representing the Crucifixion and Ascension, was erected by the parishioners to the memory of the Rev. James Jones, the late vicar. The south window in the chancel was restored with new stone-work and stained glass (by Lavars, Barraud, & Westlake), in memory of Edward Waring Ashby, third son of George Ashby Ashby and Helen his wife, who died at school, 5th December 1872, in his 10th year. In the south aisle is a trefoil-headed piscina in good preservation. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Rothwell (third portion), rated in the king's books at £8, and now valued at above £90 a year and residence. Land was allotted in lieu of tithes at the enclosure in 1822; and the vicarage was augmented with £800 from Queen Anne's Bounty, with which land was purchased in Long Buckby. The patronage is vested in George Ashby Ashby, Esq., and the Rev. James Rynd Briscoe, B.A., is the present incumbent.

The Vicarage House is a good substantial brick building, re-erected in 1847. There are twelve acres of land and some cottages in the hands of the churchwardens, the yearly rent of which (£38) is applied to the repairs of the church.

The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel is a brick building erected in 1825 and restored in 1871, when it was re-furnished with open sittings and a new pulpit. It will seat about two hundred persons.

National School, a brick building, will hold upwards of a hundred children, and has a teacher's residence attached. It was erected in 1843 on land given by the Fitzgerald family. John and Miss Sarah Oliver are the teachers.

Post-Office at Mrs Sarah Bennett's. Letters arrive from Husbands Bosworth at 9 A.M., and are despatched at 4.50 P.M.

Ashby Geo. Ashby, Esq. J.P. and D.L. Naseby Woolleys	Martin William, victualler Fitzgerald Arms	Farmers and Graziers.
Adnitt Charles, carpenter	Shaw Adam, basket and sieve maker	Cattell Thos. Watts, Millhill
Andrew Joseph, baker & groc.	Tarry Benjamin, shoemaker	Colpman William, The Grange
Birchall William, saddler	Tresler John, blacksmith	Everard David, Broad Moor Farm
Bonsor Jos. brick and tile mkr.	White Mrs Sarh. vict. Royal Oak	Everard John, Vale Farm
Briscoe Rev. James Rynd, B.A., vicar, The Vicarage	Wilford Benjamin, baker	Gilbert Jph. Shuchburgh Farm
Coles Joseph, corn miller	Wilford Jno. threshing machine owner	Haddon William
Cox Danl., gardenr. & seedsman.	Winkles John, carpenter	Ilston John, Red Hill Farm
Halford Cheney, tailor	Wright John, tailor and draper	King Henry, Manor Farm
Henson Mrs Eliza. butcher	Wrighton John Watson, wheel- wright and carpenter	Perrins Mrs Mary
Jarman Thomas, baker & groc.		Smeeton John Booth, Lodge
Langley Henry, butcher		Varnam Edw. Oak Farm
		Watts Thomas, Lodge

Carriers.—Jeremiah Wilford and Samuel Underwood to Northampton on Wednesday and Saturday, to Market Harborough on Tuesday.

RAVENSTHORPE (PART OF) PARISH.

COTON HAMLET.—See Nobottle Grove Hundred.

STANFORD PARISH,

Generally called Stanford-upon-Avon, is bounded on the east by Welford, by Clay-Coton on the south, Lilbourne on the west, and on the north it is separated from Leicestershire by the Avon. It contains 2051 acres. Its population in 1801 was 45; in 1831, 24; in 1841, 32; in 1851, 41; in 1861, 42, and in 1871, 28 souls. The gross estimated rental is £4143, and the rateable value of the parish is £3703. The general appearance of this parish is very pleasing; it formerly consisted of two manors, which were called Down and Stanford. On the bank of the river, at the Northamptonshire side, once stood a village still called Down-hill or Down-town, and in which was a chapel of ease to Stanford church. Large foundation stones have been turned up in ploughing here; and on the top of the hill is a fine spring which formerly worked a water-mill at the foot of it.

Hempley-hill, a short distance from Down-hill, commands a very extensive prospect. The soil is light, and the parish is chiefly laid down in pasture.

Manor.—Guy de Reinbudcurt, a Norman, who possessed this lordship soon after the Conquest, gave it, free of all secular customs and services, to the convent of Selby, a Benedictine Abbey in Yorkshire founded by William the Conqueror. The land consisted of two hides, wanting half a virgate, and eight acres of meadow, which in the Confessor's reign had been rated at 20s., but was now valued at 40s. Before the Conquest it was the freehold of Leuric. With Selby monastery the lordship continued till the dissolution of that house, when the manor, rectory, and advowson of the vicarage, part of the possessions of Selby Abbey were purchased of the crown by Thomas Cave, Esq., in the thirty-first of Henry VIII. (1540). This gentleman's ancestors, who were seated here many years before they were in possession of the manor, were descended from Jourdain, lord of North Cave and South Cave, and other lordships in Yorkshire in the seventh of William Rufus (1094.) The manor of Stanford has continued in the possession of Sarah Otway Cave, the Baroness Braye, daughter of Sir Thomas Cave, Bart. (lineal heir and representative through his grandmother, of the second daughter and eldest co-heir of the first Lord Braye), by the daughter of John Edwards, Esq. In 1790 she married Henry Otway, Esq., who died in 1815, and she assumed the name of Cave in 1818 by sign manual. This barony, in abeyance since 1557, was revived in 1839, in favour of its late holder, as the representative (through her great-grandmother) of one of the co-heirs of the first Baron Braye. The late baroness died in 1869, and was succeeded by her three daughters, the Hon. Maria Otway Cave, Catherine, Countess Beauchamp, and the Hon. Mrs Wyatt Edgill, who are joint possessors of the manor, and the principal owners of the soil.

The Village of Stanford consists of a few dispersed houses, pleasantly situated five miles S.E. of Lutterworth, three S.W. from Welford, eight N.E. of Daventry, twelve S.W. of Market Harborough, and seventeen N.W. from Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St Nicholas, is a fine ancient edifice, consisting of a nave and side aisles, south porch and chancel, and an embattled tower with crocketed pinnacles containing four bells. The interior presents a very imposing appearance—the east and four other windows in the chancel are filled with stained glass, representing the apostles and other saints; in the south aisle is an elegant piscina, and a bracket of wood still marks the place of a chantry altar. In this aisle there is also an original sepulchral recess of much beauty, with a mutilated recumbent figure. The tower arch is obstructed by an open gallery. The organ once belonged to the royal palace of Whitehall, but it was sold by Cromwell and erected here. There is some good perpendicular screen work beneath this gallery, and the present rood screen was brought some years past from Lutterworth. The former furniture of the pulpit, reading desk, and communion table, of crimson damask, elegantly trimmed with various coloured silk, and a Bible and Prayer-Book, bound likewise in damask, and embroidered with gold, were all worked by Lady Rowe, and dedicated to the service of this church, gratefully to commemorate her own and Sir Thomas Rowe's preservation in a violent storm at sea on their return to England from Turkey, where he was sent as an ambassador to Constantinople in 1621, and whence they precipitately fled, on account of the Sultan having discovered too great a regard for Lady Rowe, who excelled in both the beauties of her mind and person. This gift and history are recorded in a leaf of the Bible, in the handwriting of that day. The ancient monuments of the Cave family in this church are both numerous and beautiful. There is a splendid one in marble by Mrs Thorneycroft to the late Baroness Braye, erected by her daughter Catherine, Countess Beauchamp—also one in marble by Westmacott, to the late Hon. Robert Otway Cave, M.P., erected by his widow; and there is another of exceeding beauty, in basso relievo, by Kessel, to the late Hon. Thomas Otway Cave. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £9, 10s. 5d., and now worth about £85. It is in the patronage of Hon. Maria Otway Cave and her sisters, and in the incumbency of the Rev. John Lindsay, M.A., who resides in a neat vicarage house in the village.

GUILSBOROUGH HUNDRED.

Stanford Hall, the seat of the late Baroness Braye, and now the residence of her daughters, the Hon. Maria Otway Cave, the Countess Beauchamp, and the Hon. Mrs Edgill, was rebuilt about 1670 by Sir Roger Cave, Bart. It stands at the north side of the Avon, in the liberty of Westrill, Leicestershire, a short distance from the village of Stanford, and about three-quarters of a mile from the Yelvertoft Railway Station, in a fine deer park, enlivened by the Avon, the banks of which have been extended in front of the house. The ancient manor-house, the family seat of the Caves, stood in Stanford, near the church.

Letters arrive from Rugby (by way of Swinford) at 7.30 A.M.

Beauchamp Catherine, Countess Stanford Hall	Edgill Hon. Mrs Wyatt, Stanford Hall	Ireson John, bailiff at the Hall
Cave Hon. Maria Otway, Stanford Hall	Eardley Thos. station-master	Lindsay Rev. John, M.A. vicar
	Ireson Henry, assessor of taxes and gamekeeper	Chamblin Jno. farmer and gardener

THORNBY PARISH.

Thornby, or Thurnby, or, according to Domesday Book, Torneberie, is bounded on the east by Guilsborough, by Naseby on the north, on the west by Cold Ashby, and by Nortoft on the south. The parish contains 1182 acres, and its population in 1801 was 184; in 1831, 198; in 1841, 229; in 1851, 220; in 1861, 252; and in 1871, 238 souls. Its rateable value is £2152, and the gross estimated rental is £2457. The soil is of a mixed character, and the principal landowners are—J. W. Bateman, Esq. (lord of the manor), Isaac Lovell, Esq., Mr Thomas Charles Matts, and General Steele.

Manor.—At the time of the general survey, William Peverel held one hide of land here, belonging to the manor of Clay Coton; and the Earl of Morton held one and a half hide here at the same. Robert Fitz-Alegod was possessed of William Peverel's part in the reign of Henry II., and in Henry III.'s time, the other estate was in the possession of Walter de Wydevill, who held it of Simon Montford, as of the Honor of Leicester, by the service of half a knight's fee. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), Thomas de Bray was lord of Thurnby. In the nineteenth of Edward III. (1346), Richard de Wydeville paid a fine of 10s. for licence to alienate twelve virgates of arable land, twenty-eight acres of meadow, and eight acres of pasture, in Thurneby. No further mention is made of this manor till the time of Henry IV., when a fine was levied of the advowson of the rectory, and a manor in Cold Ashby, by John Chosell, in tail to Hugh Rydell. This Hugh was succeeded by Henry Rydell, Esq., from whom the premises descended to Robert Halley, who married the daughter and heir of Henry Rydell, and left issue, John Halley, Esq., who died seized of the manors of Cold Ashby and Thornby, in the eighth of Henry VIII. (1517), and which he was certified to have held of George Burnabye by an unknown service. His successor was Ann, his daughter, afterwards married to John Stydolfte, who died seized of the manor in the fifteenth of this reign (1524), and left it to Anthony Stydolfte, her son and heir, a minor three years of age. The Grange, formerly belonging to the Abbey of Pipwell, with several other lands and tenements here, were in the possession of Thomas Pell, Gent., in the first of Elizabeth (1533), from whom they descended to his posterity. The Abbeys of Sulby and Pipwell had large possessions in this parish, which, after their dissolution, were given to Richard Andrewes and Leonard Chamberlyn, Nicholas Temple, and Sir Christopher Hatton.

The Village of Thornby, which is rather neat, is situate partly on a declivity, about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. from Welford, 11 miles N.N.W. of Northampton, 12 W. from Daventry, 9 N.E. from Market Harborough, and $76\frac{1}{2}$ from London.

The Church, dedicated to St Matthew or St Helen, is a neat stone structure in the Early English style, consisting of nave, chancel, north aisle, vestry, south porch, and square embattled tower, containing a peal of five bells and a clock. It was thoroughly restored in 1870, at a cost of more than £1400, when a north aisle was added, the chancel rebuilt, and the whole of the interior tastefully fitted up. In the wall of the chancel is a fine trefoil-headed piscina, and another in the nave, which was discovered during the restoration. In the nave is a memorial window to Joseph Faux, Esq. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £13, and its gross income now is £377. The Rev. John Couchman, B.A., is both patron and incumbent. The tithes were commuted for 320 acres of land. There is a National School in the village supported by subscription.

The Rectory House is a neat building, pleasantly situated, near the church.

A commodious School, with a teacher's residence attached, was built at the expense of the present rector in 1862.

Post-Office.—Wall Box.—Cleared at 5 P.M. Letters through Rugby via Welford; the nearest Money-Order Office is Guilsborough.

Adnitt Chas. tailor & draper	Flesher Mr Charles Gilbert,	Voss Samuel, parish clerk
Bateman J. W. Esq. Thornby Hall	The Grange	Wallis James, shoemaker
Chapman Geo., vict. Red Lion	Hames Thomas, shopkeeper
Couchman Rev. John, M.A. rector	Hamson George Best, vict.	Farmers and Graziers.
Dexter Edw. butcher & farmer	George and Dragon , and grazier	Atterbury Herbert
Emerton John, brwr. & malster	Lovell Isaac, Esq.	Hern George
Facer Job, blacksmith & agricultural implement maker	Matts Mr Thomas Charles	Lovell Isaac
	Varnan Mr Isaac	Matts Charles Wager
	Vesty John, shopkeeper

WATFORD PARISH

Is bounded by Long Buckby on the east, on the north by Winwick, by Ashby-Legers on the west, and on the south by Welton. It is also bounded on the west by the ancient Roman road Watling Street, and is in the line of the London and North Western Railway, the Crick Station of which is situate in this parish. Watford contains 3,385 acres, of the rateable value of £12,349; and the gross estimated rental is £14,170. The soil varies very much; there are some strong chalybeate springs in the vicinity; and the lord of the manor and principal proprietor is Lord Henley.

Manor.—Gilbert the Cook held 2 hides of land of the crown in Watford, at the time of the Conqueror's survey, previous to which it was the freehold of Thor, and rated at 10s., but now advanced to 40s. Baldwin, the son and successor of Gilbert, was possessed of 4 hides here in the reign of Henry II., and dying without issue, his lands on his decease were escheated to the crown. The manor was at this time in the hands of Eustachius de Arden, or de Watford, with whose descendants it continued till the 4th of Edward I. (1276), when Eustachius de Watford, the fourth possessor of that name, died seized of it; and partition was made of it between his four daughters, Atheline, wife of William Bray, of Brune, Sarah, of John de Burnaby, Joan, of William Parles, and Elena, unmarried. The part allotted to Atheline Bray was by her conveyed to Henry de Bray, from whom it passed some years afterwards to the crown, and was granted, in the 31st of Edward I. (1303), to Eustace de Burnaby and Maud his wife. In the 24th of this reign (1296), Henry de Bray was certified to hold a fourth part of the township of Watford of Athelina de Brun but of whom or by what service is not known, and three of the daughters of Eustachius de Burnaby and John Parles were lords of Watford. In the 20th of Edward III. (1347), Nicholas de Burneby and Walter Parles accounted for three parts of one knight's fee in Watford, Syvesworth, and Murcote, which they held of the king in capite. The estate in the possession of Nicholas de Burnaby continued with that family for several generations. The fourth part of the manor possessed by the family of Parles, was carried in marriage to the Cumberland family about the year 1590, and was called herewith the Cumberland manor. In the 24th of Elizabeth (1582), Christopher Lewys, Gent., died seized of a manor here, supposed to be the same which belonged to the family of Cumberland, and was succeeded by his son Clement. It was afterwards purchased by Robert Lord Spencer, who left it at his death, in the 4th of Charles I. (1629), with certain lands and tenements in Watford and Silsworth, formerly purchased of Thomas Cumberland, to William Lord Spencer, his son and successor. Sir George Clarke afterwards received it in discharge for an estate at Bodington, and it passed to his descendants.

Besides the above manors, there was an estate here in the possession of the family of De Watford, from which it was carried in marriage to Robert de Cranford. This Robert left issue Emma, who marrying John de Catesby of Lodbroke, in Warwickshire, transferred this estate into that family, and hence it was called the Catesby Manor. From John de Catesby it came, in course of descent, to his great grandson, William Catesby, Esq., one of the chief instruments employed by Richard III., and attainted of high treason in the first Parliament under Henry VII. This manor passed from the family of Catesby to that of Watkins, with whom it continued for several generations. It and the other three manors afterwards fell into the hands of Sir George Clarke by purchase, and passed from him, in 1689, to Sir Robert Clarke, son to his younger brother, Robert Clarke, Esq. of Long Buckby. St James' Monastery, near Northampton, the Abbey of Sulby, and the Priory of Daventry had possessions in this parish. The present lord of these manors is Lord Henley.

Anthony Henley Henley is son of the second Baron Henley by the daughter of Sir Robert Peel (first bart.); he was born in 1825, and married, in 1846, the only daughter of the Very Rev. John Peel, Dean of Worcester. She died Feb. 15, 1862, and Lord Henley married secondly (June 30, 1870) Clara Campbell Lucy, daughter of H. S. Tekyll, Esq. He succeeded his father in 1841, and was appointed a deputy lieutenant of Northamptonshire in 1846. The first peer was brother to the first Lord Auckland, and filled the highest diplomatic situations at different courts from 1776 to 1790. The second peer was many years a Master in Chancery, and assumed his maternal name of Henley in lieu of his patronymic Eden. His lordship's heir is his son Frederick, who was born on the 17th April 1849. The family seat is Watford Court, Northamptonshire.

The Village of Watford, which is neat, is situate on a slight eminence, about $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.N.E. of Daventry, and about 10 miles N.W. of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to Sts Peter and Paul, stands in a very pleasant situation, and consists of a nave, north and south aisles, and porches, north chantry chapel, chancel, and embattled tower, containing six bells. There are three sedilia and a piscina in the chancel, and a piscina in the south aisle. In the north wall of the north aisle are three sepulchral arches, and in the south wall of the same aisle is another with very rich mouldings. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £11, 7s. 8½d., and now worth about £270 a year. The patronage is in the crown, and the Rev. William Seymour, D.C.L., is the vicar. The church contains several monuments of the Clarke family. Land was allotted in lieu of tithes at the enclosure of the common in 1771. Lord Henley is the lay rector. The Vicarage House is a substantial building.

There is a small Wesleyan Chapel in the village, erected in 1846. The National School is endowed with £35 per annum, arising from an estate of 30 acres of grazing land in Haselbeech, purchased with £400 left by Sarah Clarke in 1702. A new school was built here in 1857, principally at the expense of Lady Harriet Henley. It is a handsome and substantial stone structure of a mixed style, and will accommodate 85 children; and a very neat detached class-room has been recently built by Lord Henley, which will accommodate 20 children. Both schools are the property of Lord Henley.

Watford Court, the seat of Lord Henley, is an ancient mansion situated in a beautiful park contiguous to the village. It has been considerably improved and enlarged within the last few years.

MURCOTT is a hamlet, partly in this and partly in Long Buckby parish.

Post-Office.—Mrs Esther Butlin, sub-postmistress. Letters arrive from Rugby via Kilsby at 6.20 A.M., and are despatched at 6.40 P.M.

Ashby Miss Mary, Murcott	Newton John, carpenter	Ashbey Robert
Billing Thomas, schoolmaster	Orton Ralph, wheelwright	Collis William, Murcott
Bounds Thomas, shopkeeper	Peabody Martha, shopkeeper	Cowley William
Butlin Miss Eliz., vict. Henley	Pool Thomas, butcher	Gilbert William and Nathaniel
Arms	Seymour Rev. Wm. D.C.L. vicar	Gilbert William
Butlin Mrs Esther, Post-Office	Thomson William, vict. Bar-	Haynes Thomas
Capell Edward, horses to let	ley Mow	Payne Mrs Elizabeth
Cole Mrs Mary, brickmaker	West, Biddles, & Co., coal-	Poole John
Darker John, vict. Stag's Head	merchants, Crick Station	Reeve Mrs Ann and farmer, Crick Station	Wood John, shoemaker	Tebbett Mrs Ann, Murcott
Henley Lord, M. P., J.P.,	Farmers and Graziers.	Underwood William
Watford Court	Abbey Edmund	Whitmell Jno. Silsworth Lodge
Mann William, station master

The omnibus from Guilsborough meets the 9.30 A.M. train at Crick Station, and leaves after the 5.30 train in the evening.

WELFORD PARISH.

Welford, or Wellesford, on the borders of Leicestershire, is bounded on the east by Sulby, on the north by Husbands Bosworth, in Leicestershire, from which it is divided by the Avon, on the west by Stanford, and by Cold Ashby and Elkington on the south. It contains 3030 acres, and its population in 1801 was 931; in 1831, 1,011; in 1841, 1,074; in 1851, 1,153; in 1861, 1,099; and in 1871, 962 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £6473, and the gross estimated rental £7328. The soil is of a mixed quality; nearly three parts of the parish is laid down for grazing, and the arable land is very productive. The principal landowners are—the Earl of Normanton (lord of the manor), George Gee, James Topham, and Thomas Orton, Esqs. In Bridges' time, Welford contained 108 houses, besides 12 erected for the poor; and there were 53 yard-lands in tillage, each annually rented at £10. (A yard-land consisted of as much arable land as was suited to the number of cattle which a man's farm-yard could maintain in winter.)

Manor.—Geoffrey de Wirce, to whom Alfrid was under-tenant, held four hides of land of the crown, in Welford, at the time of the Conqueror's survey. To this manor pertained two and a half virgates in Cold Ashby, and two and a half hides in Sulby. The whole had been the property of Leuric in the reign of the Confessor, and was valued at 20s., but was now advanced to 60s. Geoffrey dying without issue, his lands were given to Nigel de Albini, of whose descendant Roger de Mowbray, in the reign of Henry II., William de Wyvill was certified to hold, in Welford, four hides and one large virgate. In the seventeenth year of the reign of King John (1216), the custody of the lands in Welford belonging to Richard de Wyvill was granted to Robert de Ieland or Yeland during the king's pleasure. Nicholas de Yeland, successor to Robert, in the seventh of Henry III. (1223), obtained a grant of a weekly market on Wednesday in every week in his manor of Welford. William de Launde and Eustachia de Wyvill his wife accounted in this reign for one and a half knight's fee here, of the fee of Roger de Mowbray, held of the king in capite. In the twenty-ninth of Edward I. (1301), John Wyvill died seized of this manor, which he held in capite of the heir of Roger de Mowbray, and left it to William, his son and heir. In the reign of Henry III., a charter was granted to William de Wyvill, empowering him to hold a weekly market here on Fridays, and an annual fair, beginning on the eve of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin (14th August), and continuing the two following days. Sir Ralph de Hastings purchased this manor, with the advowson of the Abbey of Sulby, of William de Wyvill, in the seventeenth of Edward III. (1344.) This gentleman was a descendant of a younger branch of the noble family of Hastings, and in the twentieth of this reign, having a command in the army, he was mortally wounded in a battle with the Scots, near Durham, and was buried in Sulby Abbey. He was succeeded by his son Ralph, who received the honour of knighthood, and was engaged in some important offices in the state; his son and successor Ralph, being attainted of high treason and beheaded in the eleventh of Henry IV. (1410), Richard, his brother, obtained the restoration of his lands; and, in the fourth of Henry VI. (1426), being then knighted, was nominated Sheriff of Yorkshire. At his decease, without issue, the manor descended to Leonard Hastings, of Kirby, his younger brother and heir, from whom it passed to his successor William, afterwards Lord Hastings. This nobleman filled many honourable offices, and was distinguished by the many favours conferred upon him. He was Master of the Mint, Lord Chamberlain of the Household, and amongst the many lordships which he obtained grants of, was that of Ashby de la Zouche, lately belonging to James Earl of Wiltshire, attainted of high treason. Upon the accession of Edward V., he concerted measures with the Duke of Gloucester (afterwards Richard III.) for sending Lord Rivers and Sir Richard Grey, the Queen's brother and son, to Pontefract Castle, where they were soon after beheaded. But the Duke of Gloucester, finding he could not be brought to forward his ambitious designs, resolved on his death; and at the council which met at the Tower, previous to the coronation, had him unexpectedly seized as a traitor, immediately brought out and beheaded on the green before the chapel. Thus died the Lord Hastings, on the same day that Rivers and Grey were put to death at Pontefract. Soon after Henry VII. had attained the crown, he restored to Edward Lord Hastings, his son, by letters patent, his paternal estate, and at his death, in the twenty-third of this reign, he was succeeded by George, his son, who sold his lordship to William Saunders, Esq., third son of Edward Saunders, of Harrington, between whom and George Earl of Huntingdon a fine was levied of it in the thirty-second of Henry VIII. (1541.) In the twenty-first of James I. (1624), William Saunders died seized of the manor called Hastings Manor, and another manor here called the Queen's Manor, belonging to the late dissolved Monastery of Sulby, and purchased of Queen Elizabeth, which he was certified to have held of the king in capite. His successor was William, his son, who transmitted it to his descendants.

Besides the Manor of Welford, anciently possessed by the family of Wyvill, there was another manor here, consisting in Henry II.'s time of one and a half hide of the fee of Baldwin Fitz-Gilbert. It passed into the possession of the family of Luvat or Lovet, from which it was called Lovet's Manor, in Welford. No further mention is made of it till the reign of Edward VI., when it was purchased by John Randolph of Robert Warner. From one of the descendants of John Randolph, it passed into the hands of Thomas Brewster, of Welford, who died seized of it in the fourth of Charles I. (1629), and was succeeded by his son Robert. The Earl of Normanton is the present lord of the manor of Welford. The Talbot Inn, now a private residence, was formerly the manor-house of the Saunders family. The possessions of the Abbey of Sulby in this lordship, by the survey in 1535, were valued at £24, 2s. 4d. per annum. The Sulby district, formerly extra-parochial, is now an independent parish.

The Village of Welford, which is large, is situated in the line of the Grand Union Canal, about 8 miles S.W. by W. of Market Harborough, and 14 north of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, consists of a nave and side aisles, chancel, north and south chantry chapels, south porch, and tower containing five bells. The earliest portions of the church are in the Early English style, the chancel and north aisle are Decorated, and the south chantry and tower Perpendicular. An organ was placed in the chantry chapel in 1863. The chancel was resealed in 1867, and in 1869 it was newly roofed, and had a stained window inserted to the memory of F. Cox, Esq., by his friends; and there is also a memorial window in the south chantry chapel to the Rev. John Ferraby, a former vicar of this parish, by his friends. The church was thoroughly restored in 1872 at a cost of about £3000 as a memorial of the late Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. F. W. C. Villiers, of Sulby Hall, by the parishioners and his friends. Open oak sittings were supplied, the north aisle rebuilt, a south porch erected, and a handsome clock placed in the tower; the gallery at the west end was removed, and the west arch thrown open. A handsome stained window was placed in the south aisle, and a neat font was presented by the children of the parish. In the south aisle is a handsome trefoil-headed piscina, and in the chancel are some neat tablets to the Payne and Orton families. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Haddon, now worth about £250 a year; it is in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough, and incumbency of the Rev. George Ayliffe Poole, M.A. The patronage was vested in the Abbey of Sulby until the suppression of that house.

The Vicarage House is pleasantly situated at the south end of the village.

The Independents have a chapel in the village, which will seat about 500 persons. This body have been established here since the year 1793. The Rev. Moses Biggs is the present minister. The Sunday-school in connection with the chapel was built in 1847 at a cost of £400. It is used as a lecture-room and for other purposes. There is a library attached to the chapel, which contains about 1000 volumes, and is open to the public on payment of 1s. per quarter. There is also in the village a reading-room and library, established a few years since by the late Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. F. W. C. Villiers, which is well supplied with the London daily, local, and provincial papers, periodicals, &c.

The Parochial Free and Infant Schools, which have been erected during the incumbency of the present vicar, are supported by endowment, subscriptions, and Government grants.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph-Office, and Savings Bank.—William Woodford, jun., postmaster. Letters arrive via Rugby at 7 A.M., and are despatched at 6.35 P.M., on Sundays at 5 P.M.

Abbott Mrs Rebecca H.	Hedley Charles, surgeon	Pebody Benjm., general dealer
Attenberg John Herbert, draper	Hefford John, carpenter	Pebody John, watchmaker
Biggs Rev. Moses (Indpt.)	Hefford Richard, carpenter	Pebody William, shoemaker
Biggs Mr William	Hewitt John, carpenter & wheelwright	Poole Rev. George Ayliffe A.M. vicar
Billson Wm. bookseller & stationer, agent for Sun Fire & Life Office	Hewitt Saml. Stains, shoemkr.	Porter Thomas, saddler
Bishop Mrs Alice	Hill Mrs Elizabeth	Porter William, shoemaker
Brown Wm., baker & confectioner.	Hurst Mrs Ann, vict. Wheat Sheaf	Seaton William, parish clerk
Bulbeck John Fred. master, Endowed School.	Industrial Co-operative Society, Miss Jane Butlin, storekpr.	Scrimshire Charles, shoemaker
Burman Mr Job	Isherwood John Bradshaw Esq. Manor-House	Spencer Mr John
Buswell Alfred, ale & porter agt.	James John, bricklayer	Spencer Wm. maltster & grazier
Buswell Charles, tailor	Johnson Thos. Allen, carpenter and builder	Stephens John Edmund, Inland Revenue officer
Chandler Mr Edward	Kay James, blacksmith	Topham Jas. Esq., The Hemploe
Chapman Thomas, threshing-machine owner	Knight George & Sons (Thos. & Geo. jun.), bricklayers & builders	Topham John George Esq. do.
Clay John, shoemaker	Laurence the Misses	Ward Francis, tailor
Cooke Mr William	Laurence Mr Welton	Ward Thomas, carpenter
Cooksey John, vict. Sun	Malin Miss Mary, day-school	Webb Mr Samuel
Cowley Mr William	Marriott Mrs Mary	White Joseph, blacksmith
Day Misses Eliz. Watts & Mary Anne, milliners & dressmakers	Martin Mrs Mary, day-school	Wilkinson James, baker
Dun Mrs Sophia, day-school	Matthews William, shopkeeper	Woodford Chas. Taylor, blacksmith
Elliott Warden, butcher	M'Call John, tinner & brazier	Woodford Hy. Hodgkin, tailor
Eyston John Esq.	Middleton Mrs Eliza, dressmr.	Woodford Jonathan, plumber
Ferreday Mr Charles Henry]	Miller Thomas, shopkeeper	Woodford Wm. jun. grocer & agent for Royal Fire & Life Office
Gamble Wakelin, vict. Peacock	Newitt Charles, vict. Shoulder of Mutton	Woodhouse Charles, shopkr. & coal merchant
Gardner John, shopkeeper	Partridge John Coulson, wheelwright and grazier	Wootton Frederick, butcher & do.
Garner Charles Bank, grocer & Italian warehouseman	Pearsall John, vict. George Commercial Inn , tile, coal, lime, and brick merchant, Welford Wharf	Wortley John, vict. Crown .
Garratt William, tailor]		York John, shoemaker;
Gee, Mr George		Farmers and Graziers.
Gee Mrs Mary		Abbott Joseph, Lodge
Gee Mrs Matilda		Biggs Benj. Ths., Welford Lodge
Harrold John, corn miller

Biggs Woodhouse
Butlin Mrs Matilda
Gardner Henry
Gardner William
Gee John (yeoman)

Holman William
Lovell Edward
Pearsall John, Wolford Wharf
Spencer William
Voss William

Weston Francis & George
Wood John (yeoman)
Woodford Thomas William
Woodford William, sen.

Carriers.—John Wortley and John Wilson, to Leicester Wed. and Sat.; Thomas Miller, to Northampton Wed. and Sat.; to Market Harborough Tues., and Lutterworth Thur.; and Thomas Butlin, to Northampton on Wed. and Sat.

WINWICK PARISH.

This parish is intersected by the Grand Union Canal, and is bounded on the east by Guilsborough and Thornby, on the north by Elkington, on the west by Crick, and on the south by West Haddon. It contains 2012 acres of the rateable value of £3468; and its population in 1801 was 124; in 1831, 159; in 1841, 165; in 1851, 155; in 1861, 122; and in 1871, 141. The gross estimated rental is £4035. The soil varies from a stiff clay to a light gravel, and is generally productive. The owners are the executors of Messrs Thomas and William Lovell, Mr W. Hensman, and Mr Harrison. From the Hill Field in this parish, which commands a very extensive prospect, may be seen objects at the distance of nearly forty miles. Here, in what was formerly a warren, is found some good building-stone, little inferior to that of Harleston. Kilworth's spring in the village is chalybeate.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, the monks of Coventry held 3 hides and 1 virgate of land here, valued at 50s., which in the reign of the Confessor was the freehold of Leofric, Earl of Mercia, who gave it, with twenty other lordships, to the Priory of Coventry. There were also 3 virgates here of the fee of Peverel pertaining to the manor of Clay-Coton; and in the reign of Henry II., besides the land held by the monks of Coventry, Robert Alegod held 8 small virgates of the fee of Peverel. The estate in Winwick belonging to the Priory of Coventry was in the possession of John de Bayeux in the time of Henry III., but it does not appear how he obtained it. Stephen de Blukevil gave a house and 6 virgates of land, called Winwick Grange, to the Abbey of Pipwell, which grant was confirmed, with other possessions, to the monks of Pipwell in the first year of Henry I. (1100.) From the family of De Blukevil their estate passed to that of Mallorye; and in the 16th of Edward I. (1288), Stephen and Peter Mallorye or Mallore held certain lands here of Elias de Rabayne and Maud his wife, of the fee of Stephen de Bayeaux, by the service of half a knight's fee and an annual payment of five marks to the Prior of Coventry. It continued with this family for several generations, and in the 9th of Edward II. (1316), Sir Stephen Mallore was lord of Winwick, and accounted for a tenth part of a knight's fee here in the 20th of Edward III. (1347), which he held of the Prior of Coventry. Nicholas Mallore died seized of it in the 4th of Henry VIII. (1513), and was succeeded by his two daughters, Dorothy, the wife of Edward Cave, and secondly, of George Ashby; and Margery, first married to Clement Cave, and afterwards to John Cope. By Dorothy Mallore, Edward Cave had two daughters, Catherine, married to Thomas Andrews, who, in right of his wife—her sister Margaret, wife of Thomas Boughton, leaving no issue—became possessed of Winwick Manor. With the family of Andrews the manor continued till about the year 1611, when we find it in the hands of Sir William Craven, Knight, Lord Mayor of London, one of the wealthiest and most eminent citizens of that age. From him it passed by gift, with the hundred of Guilsborough, to Sir William Craven, Knight, on his marriage with Mary, daughter of George Clarke, Esq., of Watford. Sir William died in 1707, leaving Lady Craven, his relict, in possession of the manor, the greater part of the parish, and the hundred of Guilsborough. Sir James H. Langham was the next lord, and from him it passed to the late Thomas Lovell, Esq., and is at present held by his executors.

Winwick Hall, an ancient and substantial building, now the residence of Mr William Smart, was formerly the manor-house for this lordship and Guilsborough hundred. A fine stone arch (part of the original structure), which is supported by four fluted pillars, surmounted by an ancient coat of arms, and covered with curious figures and devices, gives entrance to the house.

The Village of Winwick is very small and dispersed, and is situated about five miles south from Welford, eight north-east of Daventry, and twelve and a half north-west from Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St Michael, is a small edifice, consisting of a nave, chancel, transepts, porch, and embattled tower at the west end, containing three bells. The tower is Early Perpendicular, and is the best part of the building; the chancel and transepts are plain Early English, and the nave and porch are in the Decorated style. In the interior are some good open seats, the base of a rood screen, and a stall in the chancel. There is a sepulchral recess at the end of each transept. The east windows of the north transept are blocked up by two vast monuments of the Craven family. Considerable alterations and improvements were effected in 1853 and 1856. The chancel was rebuilt, and the flat roof replaced by a high-pitched one; a small vestry was erected, the nave was restored, and a new roof, after the pattern of the old one, added; open seats were substituted for the old pews and seats, and a new pulpit and reading-desk were also added, at the expense of the present rector. The benefice is a rectory in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £15, 6s. 8d., and now worth about £620 a year. The Bishop of Peterborough is patron, and the Rev. A. L. Bromhead, M.A., incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1839 for £420; the gross rent-charge is at present £474, 17s. The patronage was originally in the hands of the Prior of Coventry.

A Rectory House was built in the village in 1850 at a cost of about £2000. It is a very commodious residence, of red brick, relieved with white brick facings.

A Sunday-school was erected near the church in 1846 by the Rev. J. A. Jeremie, D.D., the late rector, to which the present rector has made considerable additions, for the purpose of establishing a day-school. The waste on which the school was originally built, as well as the additions made by the rector, was purchased in 1870 by the late lord of the manor, in order to secure the school and house adjoining for the education of the poor children of Winwick in the principles of the Established Church for ever.

Charities.—John Lord Craven left in 1647 the sum of £200 to the poor of Winwick, £160 of which sum was expended in the purchase of twelve acres of land in Cold Ashby parish, which now yields £24 a year. The remaining £40, with the sum of £50 left by the Rev. John Bateman of Guilsborough for the same purpose, is invested in the public funds. Mr Thomas Lovell, late of Winwick Warren, by will bequeathed £150 to the rector and churchwardens, the interest arising from it to be distributed annually in prizes to the children who attended the Winwick school.

Letters from Rugby via West Haddon.

Bromhead Rev. Alexander Leslie, M.A., rector	Leeson Thomas, miller, Winwick Mill	Matthews William
Binnington Hannah, school-mistress	Farmers and Graziers.	Smart Thomas, Manor-House
	Hensman, William, Flint Hill	Smart William, do.

YELVERTOFT PARISH.

This parish is also intersected by the Grand Union Canal, and is bounded on the east by Winwick, on the north by Elkington, on the west by Lilbourne, and on the south by Crick. It contains 2185 acres. The rateable value of the parish is £4593, and the gross estimated rental £5229. Its population in 1801 was 526; in 1831, 596; in 1841, 618; in 1851, 700; in 1861, 631; and in 1871, 581 souls. The soil is of a stiff clayey nature, and the principal part of the land is in grass. There is a rock of fine-grained building-stone in the parish, and a brook, which rises in West Haddon Field, bounds the lordship on the east and west, and runs into Clay-Coton. The land is in the hands of several proprietors, the principal of whom are—Mr W. W. Elkins, Mr J. F. Elkins, Mrs M. Daniel, Mr W. Lovell, Mr John Norton, Rev. C. Wyncoll, and Mr W. Wilkins.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Alured held of the Earl of Morton three virgates of land in Gelurecote, which in the Confessor's reign had been valued at 5s., but was now rated at 10s. By the same survey, Hugh Earl of Chester held two hides and one virgate in Givertoft, which was rated at 20s. Before the Conquest it was the freehold of Godric. In the reign of Henry II. the Earl of Leicester held two and a third hides, and Ralph Fitz-Osmund half a hide here of the fee of William Fitz-Alured. In Henry III.'s time the Hospital of St John of Jerusalem possessed a third part of one small fee here pertaining to the manor of Hetherinton; Richard de Curson half a small fee of Simon de Montfort of the Honor of Leicester; and Richard de la Hose one knight's fee of Hugh de Albini of the Honor of Chester. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), Roger de la Zouche held one knight's fee in Yelvertoft of Roger de Mortimer, who held it of the king in capite; the Prior of St John of Jerusalem held half a knight's fee of John de Montacute, who held it of the Abbot of Chester, who held it of the king; and the heirs of Robert de Kaynes half a fee, held likewise of the king. Roger de Somerye was certified to hold lands here at the same time.

Roger de la Zouche was succeeded by Alan his son, upon whose decease, in the seventh of Edward II. (1314), without male issue, his estate descended to his daughters, Elena, married to Nicholas de St Maur, and Maud the wife of Robert de Holland. On the division of the estate, his lands in Yelvertoft, with the advowson of the church, were assigned to Robert de Holland, which Robert, with the Prior of the Hospital of St John of Jerusalem, in the ninth of this reign (1316), were certified to be lords of the manor. In the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), Thomas de la Heuse accounted for one knight's fee here, held of Lady Holland, of the Honor of Winchester. Sir Robert de Holland was succeeded by Sir Robert, his eldest son, who dying in the forty-seventh year of this reign (1394), left issue Maud, his only daughter and heir, the wife of Sir John Lovell. Upon the death of Maud, Lady Lovell, in the first of Henry VI. (1422), Sir William Lovell, her son, succeeded to this estate, and left it at his death, in the thirty-third of the same reign (1455), to Sir John Lovell, his son. By inquisition taken in the second of Richard II. (1379), it was found that Edward, late Prince of Wales, died seized of a knight's fee here, probably the lands which formerly belonged to the Earl of Chester. The intermediate possessor is supposed to have been Edward le Despenser, son to Hugh le Despenser, who levied a fine of a manor here in the sixteenth of Edward III. (1343). He was succeeded by Edward his son, who died in the forty-eighth of this reign (1376). Thomas Lord Despenser, his son and successor, was created Earl of Gloucester in the twenty-first of Richard II. (1398.) In the first of Henry IV. (1399), he was degraded from his honour by Parliament, though he had been one of the principal peers who joined in deposing Richard II., and sentenced to surrender up all his lordships and lands. Having engaged in a design of seizing the king's person in the same year, he was taken at Bristol, condemned by a vote of the Commons to be put to death, carried by the populace into the market-place, and there beheaded. His lands being forfeited to the crown, this manor in Yelvertoft was granted for his lifetime to Edward Duke of York, with remainder to Sir Richard Beauchamp de Bergavenny and Isabel his wife, sister and heir of Richard, son of Thomas Lord Despenser. After the Duke of York's death, in the third of Henry V. (1416), it came to Sir Richard Neville Beauchamp, Lord Bergavenny, whose relict afterwards married Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, cousin to her former husband, and transferred it into that family. Richard was succeeded by his son Henry in the seventeenth of Henry VI. (1439), upon whom the king conferred many honours and dignities. The manor afterwards passed to Anne, his sister, wife of Richard Neville, Earl of Salisbury, who, on the death of his niece, had the title of Earl of Warwick confirmed to him and his heirs. This Earl, called the king-maker, is famous in history for his enterprising courage, and the part he bore in the wars between the houses of York and Lancaster. He was slain at the battle of Barnet, and his inheritance, by authority of Parliament, was taken from his Countess and settled on her daughters, Isabel, wife of George Duke of Clarence, and Anne, wife of Richard Duke of Gloucester. In the third of Henry VII. (1488), this act was repealed, and both her daughters being dead, the possession of her estate was restored to her; but the same year, by a special grant, all the premises, amongst which was this manor of Yelvertoft, were given up to the king, and entailed on his male issue. In the twenty-first of Edward IV. (1482), Nicholas Cowley died seized of a manor in Yelvertoft, called Zouche's manor, which descended to Agnes Veysy, the daughter of John Cowley, and upon the accession of Henry VII. was granted in the sixth of that reign to John Moton. Other lands here belonged to the family of La Zouche, from which they passed to William Catesby, Esq.; but being forfeited to the crown, were given to John Moton in the sixth of Henry VII. (1491.) It was afterwards restored with the other possessions of the Catesby family; and in the reign of Edward VI. was in the hands of the family of Fielding, who held it of Lord Zouche, as of his manor of Baroughby. William Saunders, Esq., of Welford, died seized of two parts of the manor of Yelvertoft in the thirty-third of Henry VIII. (1542), with other lands, supposed to be those which, in the reign of Henry III., pertained to the Knights Hospitallers of St John of Jerusalem. This property passed to the family of Cave, and soon after reverted to the family of Saunders, Francis Saunders, Esq., having levied a fine of it in the ninth of Elizabeth (1567). The manor of Yelvertoft is now divided.

The Village, which is large and dispersed, occupies a pleasant situation on the borders of Warwickshire, near the Grand Union Canal, and is watered by a small brook which falls into the Avon. It is distant about five miles south-west from Welford, ten north from Daventry, seven east from Rugby, thirteen south-west from Market Harborough, eight south-east from Lutterworth, fourteen north-west from Northampton, and eighty from London.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient structure, consisting of a nave, one north and two south aisles, south porch, chancel, and tower containing five bells. A new organ was erected in 1870, the old pews were removed and carved open oak seats substituted; several of the windows were restored; and the want of gas has been supplied by a very unique arrangement of lamps. These improvements have been effected at the expense of the present rector. In the chancel are three sediliæ; the east end of the first or original south aisle extends one bay into the chancel, and was evidently used as a chantry chapel; and there is a very beautiful tomb, to receive which a whole bay of the north side of the chancel has been rebuilt. The effigy of this monument reposes beneath a rich canopy of alabaster; and tradition assigns it to John Dyeson, rector from 1445 to 1479. The window over this monument is very rich. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Haddon, rated in the king's books at £25, os. 10d., and now valued at £600 a year. It is in the patronage and incumbency of the Rev. Charles Wyncoll. The tithes were commuted for land in 1776. The Rectory House, pleasantly situated adjacent to the church, is a comfortable residence.

The Independent Chapel, erected here in 1797, and enlarged in 1832, is a commodious building, capable of seating about four hundred persons. This body of Dissenters have had an interest here for about a century. The Rev. B. W. Evans is the present minister. A substantial house for the minister stands near the chapel, to which is also attached a garden and orchard belonging to the body. There is likewise a Sunday-school in connection with this chapel, which is supported by voluntary contributions.

The Parish School is endowed with 28a. 19p. of land, which now lets for £45 a year, and for which thirty children are taught free, and it is in contemplation to erect a new school for the accommodation of the children of Clay-Coton, Elkington, and Yelvertoft. The Sunday-schools in the village are well attended.

The other Charities of the parish are—the church lands, consisting of twenty-seven and a half acres, and a few tenements, which yield about £50 a year; the poor's land, 7a. 3r., lets for £16 a year; and the interest of £50 at 3 per cent. consols, left in July 1820, to be divided amongst the poor widows and widowers of the parish on Old Christmas Day annually and for ever.

Post-Office.—Mr J. Broadley, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Rugby at 8 A.M., and are despatched at 6 P.M. The nearest Money-Order Office is at West Haddon.

The nearest railway station is Yelvertoft (L. N.-Western), about two miles distant.

Ashwell Mrs Emma
Blunt Chas. vict. Knightley Arms
Bradshaw William, gardener
Bray Mrs Ellen
Bray Wm. miller and grazier
Broadley Jph. shopkpr. & P.-O.
Chandler Wm. schoolmaster at Long Buckby
Daniel Mrs Martha
Evans Rev. B. W. (Indpt.)
Hall Wm. wheelwrt. & carptr.
Harper Wm. sheepdsr. & grazr.
King David, butcher & grazier
Lee John, general dealer
Lines Wm. shoemr. & shopkpr.
Lucas Samuel, shopkeeper
Matthew Misses Ann and Eliz.
Matthew Robert, carpenter
Matthew Rt. ropemkr. & grazr.
Matthews Mr Joseph
Matthews Mr Thomas

Matthews Mr William
Morris Joseph, butcher & grazr.
Norton George, coml. travlr.
Palmer James, bricklayer and stone cutter
Perkins Owen, vict. Panniers'
Inn
Robinson James, coal dealer & vict. Boat
Roddis Richard, baker
Smart Mark Rd. plumr. & grazr.
Smith Richard, carpenter
Stimson Miss, Emily Ann, ladies' day school
Tatton Edw. baker & shopkpr.
Townsend John, shoemaker
Townsend John, jun. shoemakr.
Weston Edward, baker
Wheeler William, schoolmaster
Winter John, blacksmith
Wyncoll Rev. Charles, rector

Farmers and Graziers.

Bolton William (yeoman)
Cattell Miss Jane
Cattell John
Elkins John Francis (yeoman)
King Joseph (yeoman)
King Samuel (yeoman)
Landsbury Edward
Lumley Thomas
Malin Benjamin
Malin Robert
Matthew Stephen
Morris Henry
Morris Thomas
Norton John (yeoman)
Vann Mrs Harriet
Walden John
Widdrington Reginald, Esq.
Shenley Lodge
York John

Carriers.—Geo. Clarke, to Rugby, Tues. and Sat.; James Kendrick, to Rugby, Tues., and Daventry, Wed.; Owen Perkins, to Lutterworth, Thurs., and Northampton, Sat. (and Wed. in summer).

FAWSLEY HUNDRED.

THE hundred of Fawsley lies on the west side of the county, bordering on Warwickshire; it is bounded by the hundreds of Nobottle-Grove and Guilsborough on the east, and by Towcester, Greens Norton, and Chipping Warden hundreds on the south. The eastern side is traversed for about fourteen miles by the Watling Street Roman road. This hundred, which is partly of a triangular form, comprises 42,386 acres; extending about thirteen miles from north to south, and eight miles in breadth at its widest point from east to west. At the time of the Domesday survey, it was divided into two distinct hundreds, named Gravesende and Aluadeslea or Aluratleu; the former comprehended the parishes of "Falewesle, Chelurdescote, Fardingstone, Wedon, Charwelton, Catesby, Eliden (Hellidon), Preston, Lichebarue, Everdon, Snobescombe, and Stow;" and the latter, "Buddeby and Newenham, Norton, Thorp, Beruby, Gildesborn (Kilsby), Stav'ton, Braundeston, Davintre, Welton, Esseby (Ashby), Dodeford, and Chelredscote." We find the whole hundred under the name of Fawsley first mentioned in Henry III.'s time (1225), when Hugh Russell was lord of the manor, holding a fee-farm for life; and Hugh de Capes, one of his successors also in the manor, obtained a like grant of this hundred, to hold during life, upon paying annually fifteen marks, eight shillings, and four pence (£10, 8s. 4d.) Queen Margery, the Dowager to Edward I., possessed it in the ninth of Edward II. (1316); Isabella, Queen Dowager to Edward II., was seized of it during her life, and at her death it was given to Queen Philippa, wife of Edward III. Ralph Rawlins, Esq., was bailiff of the liberty of the hundred of Fawsley in the nineteenth of Henry VI. (1440-1), and fined twenty shillings for negligence in the discharge of his duty. Thomas Bradley, Esq., obtained a grant of the hundred, with its bailywick, upon the payment of ten pounds per annum for the farm of it, in the twenty-eighth of Henry VI. (1450); a like grant was made of it to Thomas Willoughby, Esq., in 1455, at an advanced rent; but before the expiration of the same year, it was given from him to Thomas Rothwell and John Allen; it was resumed by the crown upon the restoration of the house of York, and granted by Edward IV. to his queen, Elizabeth, to hold for life. It seems after this to have passed into the hands of Henry VII., but how long it continued in the crown it is not easy to determine. The Knightleys, by lease from the crown, have been lords of this hundred for a long period, though when it was first demised to them is not known. The hundred court was formerly held in Fawsley Park, beneath the branches of an enormous beach-tree, that measured nineteen feet in circuit above the spurs, and was called Mangrave. It was felled about ninety-five years ago, and, according to Morton, it "seemed to be two or three different stems united in their growth, rather than one single trunk." The site of this venerable member of the forest is well known. Fawsley hundred is divided into twenty-one parishes, of which the following is an enumeration, showing the population in 1871 of each parish, with the number of houses, rateable value, gross estimated rental, and the number of acres according to the rate-book:—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Ashby St Ledgers,	2,050	65	3	—	153	144	297	4,660	5,242
Badby,	2,370	142	8	1	317	291	608	3,575	4,098
Barby,	3,556	139	12	5	305	284	589	8,230	9,668
Braunston,	3,026	267	33	—	514	556	1,070	8,296	9,334
Catesby,	1,977	18	6	—	45	51	96	3,003	3,606
Newbold Grnds, ham. }
Charwelton,	2,266	52	3	—	109	105	214	3,639	4,235
Daventry,	3,423	894	79	—	1,979	2,072	4,051	14,825	17,955
Drayton, ham. }
Dodford,	1,349	57	1	—	119	111	230	4,542	5,176
Everdon,	2,499	171	19	—	335	337	672	4,734	5,340
Farthingstone,	1,737	76	5	—	175	164	339	2,267	2,692
Fawsley,	1,794	7	—	—	23	23	46	2,691	3,027
Hellidon,	1,536	90	11	—	191	188	379	2,454	2,907
Kilsby,	2,274	126	11	—	243	258	501	8,722	10,161
Litchborough,	1,704	110	11	—	188	190	378	3,203	3,525
Newnham,	1,881	117	10	—	225	241	466	3,682	4,170
Norton,
Muscott, ham. }	2,926	104	2	—	234	209	443	7,191	7,976
Thorp, ham. }
Preston Capes,	2,696	64	5	—	154	129	283	3,252	3,793
Staverton,	2,086	112	15	—	231	247	478	3,758	4,397
Stowe Nine Churches, ...	1,840	77	4	—	141	144	285	4,902	5,441
Weedon-Beck,	1,855	374	52	—	1,025	836	1,861	7,263	9,163
Welton,	1,896	140	11	—	257	273	530	3,650	4,171
	46,741	3,202	301	6	6,963	6,853	13,816	108,339	126,077

CHARITIES OF FAWSLEY HUNDRED, with the date of the bequests, the name of the donor, the amounts, appropriation, and annual value, as abstracted from the Reports of the commissioners for inquiring respecting charities, printed by order of the House of Commons. See also the histories of the parishes, &c. :—

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what places and purposes applied.	Annual value
1764.	Poor's estate	Ashby St Ledgers parish, poor...	£42 0 0
1658.	Thomasine Janson (rents)	Ditto, sermons	11 2 0
"	Mrs Ashley's charity (£34, 4s. 9d.), } church attendance. }	Ditto	1 0 6
"	Lady Senhouse's charity (£100), ...	Ditto, poor	3 0 0
1733.	Thomas Coles (rent)	Badby parish, bread to poor	3 18 0
1813.	Sir John Knightley (£191, 17s. 3d.)	Ditto, Sunday-school	5 15 0
1852.	Miss Ann Hanson's charity (£200) } 3 per cent. annuities)	Ditto, Church schools	6 0 0
1630.	Town lands	Barby parish	86 0 0
1778.	Poor's land	Ditto	28 0 0
"	Town lands	Braunston parish	290 0 0
"	Donor not known (£13)	Ditto, poor	0 16 0
"	Coal land	Ditto, ditto	30 0 0
"	Poor's allotment	Ditto, ditto	50 0 0
"	Church allotment	Ditto, ditto	10 0 0
1733.	School fund (£573)	Ditto, ditto	19 0 0

CHARITIES OF THE TOWN AND PARISH OF DAVENTRY.

1576.	William Parker (rents)	Grammar-school	20 0 0
"	Ditto, ditto	Six poor beadsmen	10 0 0
1740.	John Sawbridge (£150)	To purchase a house for the } schoolmaster	14 0 0
"	Edward Sawbridge (£100)	Ditto
1729.	John Farrer (£400)	For procuring assistance to the } curate	39 14 0
1736.	Edwd. Maynard, D.D. (£200)	Charity school
1719.	William Sawbridge (£10)	Ditto
"	Mrs S. Bromwich (£40)	Ditto	125 0 0
"	Thomas Wilson (£10)	Ditto
"	John Sawbridge (£50)	Ditto
"	Catharine Coombe (£300)	Ditto
"	Nathaniel, Lord Crewe (rent)	Teaching one poor boy	6 0 0
1772.	Edward Sawbridge (£4 a year)	Schoolmaster	4 0 0
"	Sale of timber, &c. (£1800)	Put in 3 per cents. for the charity } school	54 0 0
1734.	Peter Sutch (£100)	Apprenticing one poor boy	5 0 0
1740.	John Sawbridge (£100)	Six poor beadsmen	9 0 0
1762.	John Walters (£200)	Six poor beadsmen	10 0 0
1765.	Mary Walford (£100)	Poor beadsmen	3 0 0
"	Ditto (£200)	Poor	6 0 0
1738.	Frances Thompson (£100)	Thirteen poor widows	9 0 0
1762.	Mary Watters (£100)	Poor widows	5 0 0
"	Eleanor Bromwich (£42)	Poor widows	2 12 0
1656.	Timothy Newton (£100)	Poor	5 0 0
1708.	Erasmus Dryden (£100)	Poor	5 0 0
1665.	Richard Farmer (£20 a year)	Minister of parish	20 0 0
"	Ditto (£10 a year)	Poor	10 0 0
1772.	Edward Sawbridge (£1400)	Forspecified purposes; appren- } ticing a poor boy, and for the } poor	81 0 0
1740.	John Sawbridge (£100)	Parish clerk and sexton	9 0 0
"	Church land	Ditto	18 2 6
1748.	John Welch (£1000)	Educational and other pur- } poses of Daventry and Beth- } nel Green (Dissenters)	21 0 0
1760.	Sarah Floyds (£200)	Dissenting minister	8 4 3
1811.	Christian Linnell (£150)	Ditto	6 5 6
"	Caleb Ashworth, D.D. (£100, 3 per } cent. consols)	Ditto	3 0 0
1842.	Jane Freeman (£60) poor	Dodford, poor	1 16 0
1845.	Frances King (£40) poor	Ditto, poor	1 4 0
1779.	Town land	Everdon parish	37 8 0
1813.	William Folwell (£500)	Ditto, Dissenting preacher	17 3 6
"	Ditto (£500)	Ditto, school	17 4 6
1802.	Sir John Knightley (£200)	Ditto, Sunday-school	6 0 0
"	Ditto (£233, 6s. 8d.)	Farthingstone parish, ditto	6 15 0
1618.	John Ball (£20 a year)	Hellidon parish, school	20 0 0
"	Ditto (£100)	Ditto, to build a schoolhouse ...
"	Langston Freeman (£20)	Ditto, bread to poor	1 0 0

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what places and purposes applied.	Annual value
1802.	Sir John Knightley (£200).....	Ditto. Sunday-school	5 8 0
1714.	Cowlie's charity (rent)	Kilsby parish, poor	16 0 0
1670.	Lady Katherine Leveson (rent)	Litchborough parish, two poor } widows	20 0 0
"	Ditto, ditto	Ditto, apprenticing two poor } boys.....	20 0 0
"	Ditto, ditto.....	Ditto, schoolmaster	25 0 0
"	Ditto, ditto.....	Ditto, schoolhouse and garden	7 8 0
"	Bidford charity	Ditto, poor.....	60 0 0
"	Town lands, ditto	Ditto	49 0 0
1802.	Sir John Knightley (£140, 4s. 9d.)...	Newenham par. Sunday-school	4 0 0
1864.	Mrs Oliver's charity (£45, 3 per } cent. annuities)	Poor widows	1 11 0
"	Church or Town Charity estate	Norton parish.....	70 0 0
1647.	Richard Knightley (£200)	Preston Capes parish, poor	10 0 0
"	Ditto (£200)	Ditto, school	10 0 0
"	Peter Coles (£15)	Ditto, poor.....	0 15 0
1653.	William Randall (£100).....	Ditto, school	5 0 0
"	Richard Butler (£5 a year).....	Ditto, apprenticing a boy.....	5 0 0
1708.	Erasmus Dryden (£40)	Poor of Little Beston	2 0 0
1767.	Rev. Francis Baker (land)	Staverton parish, Free School... ..	66 0 0
"	Catherine Burbidge (£100)	Ditto, school	5 0 0
1802.	Sir John Knightley (£200)	Ditto, Sunday-school	6 0 0
1767.	Thomas Grooby (£100, 3 per cent. } consols)	Ditto, poor.....	3 0 0
"	Poor's land	Ditto, ditto	31 9 0
"	Arnold's charity	Stowe Nine Churches, for ap- prenticing a boy.....	20 0 0
"	Arnold's charity	Weedon Beck parish, for ap- prenticing children.....	18 0 0
1712.	Nathaniel Billing	Ditto, charity school and cloth- ing twenty boys	95 0 0
1736.	John Rogers (£76)	Ditto, poor and school	2 5 0
1719.	Thomas Judkins (£50)	Ditto, ditto.....	2 10 0
1780.	George Bliss (£50)	Ditto, poor shoemakers.....	2 10 0
"	John Freeman (£50)	Ditto, poor.....	2 15 0
"	Poor's land	Ditto, ditto.....	13 0 0
"	Church land	Ditto	10 12 0
"	Town land.....	Welton parish.....	159 0 0
Total			£1,952 3 9

ASHBY ST LEDGERS PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Kilsby; on the east by Watford and the Roman road Watling Street; on the south by Welton; and on the west by Braunston. In Domesday Book it is called Ascebi, and the addition of Ledgers, from the patron saint of the church, is to distinguish it from the other Ashbys in the county. It contains 2050 statute acres, and its population in 1801, was 232; in 1831, 257; in 1841, 257; in 1851, 256; in 1861, 300; and in 1871, 297 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £4660, 11s. 6d.; and the gross estimated rental £5242, 11s. 6d. The soil on the north of the parish is a deep clay, and towards the south and west it is light and gravelly; it is very productive, and nearly equally divided between arable and pasture land. William Senhouse, Esq. (lord of manor), and the vicar are the sole proprietors.

Manor.—At the time of the general survey Hugh de Grentemaisnil held four hides of land in Ashby; there were eight acres of meadow, and the whole was then valued at 60s. This Hugh accompanied the Conqueror in his expedition to England, and was rewarded for his services with upwards of a hundred manors in different counties, twenty of which were situate in Northamptonshire. He was associated with Odo Bishop of Bayeaux, and William Fitz-Osborn, in executing the high office of Justiciary of England two years after the Conquest. In the following year he was Governor of Hampshire, and afterwards Sheriff of the county of Leicester. He died in the seventh year of the reign of William Rufus (1094), in six days after he had assumed a religious habit, and was succeeded by his son Robert, from whom the estate descended in 1122 to Ivo de Grentemaisnil, his eldest surviving brother and heir. In the third of Henry I. (1103) this Ivo joined the confederacy in support of Robert Duke of Normandy, but the enterprise failing, and being heavily fined for his delinquency, he applied for protection to Robert Earl of Mellent, one of the King's chief counsellors, at whose suggestion he undertook a pilgrimage to Jerusalem. To enable him to pursue his intention, the Earl lent him five hundred marks (£333, 6s. 8d.), for which he mortgaged to him all his possessions in England by way of security, for fifteen years, on condition that it should be restored to his son Ivo, whom the Earl engaged on oath should be married to his niece, the daughter of the Earl of Warwick. The King ratified this agreement, but Ivo the father dying on his pilgrimage, the son was deprived both of his wife and inheritance. Hugh de Grentemaisnil, the successor of the younger Ivo, appears to have recovered his patrimony, which descended to his daughter Petronilla, who marrying Robert Blanchmaines, Earl of Leicester, the grandson of Robert Earl of Mellent, his possessions were all transferred into that family. In the reign of Henry II. Ashby contained four hides of the fee of the Earl of Leicester, and subsequently became parcel of the Duchy of Lancaster. From the reign of King John till the latter part of the reign of Edward III., this lordship was in the hands of the family of De Cranford, when Emma, the daughter of Robert de Cranford, carried it in marriage to John de Catesby of Ladbroke in Warwickshire. Sir William Catesby, grandson of John, was one of the three favourites who ruled the kingdom under Richard III.; the others, being Sir Richard Radcliffe and Viscount Lovell, gave rise to this memorable distich—

“The Rat, the Cat, and Lovell our dog, Rule all England under the hog,”— alluding to the King having adopted a boar for one of his supporters. For this poetical libel, Collingbourn, the author, was “hanged, headed, and quartered” on Tower Hill. Catesby obtained grants of various forfeited manors and lucrative wardships; and attending his master in his last expedition against the Earl of Richmond, he was taken prisoner in Bosworth Field, fighting valiantly for him, and in three days after was beheaded at Leicester. His lands were escheated to the crown, and granted to Sir James Blount, but were restored by act of Parliament to his son George in the eleventh of Henry VII. (1496.) George Catesby, Esq., was succeeded by his son William, a minor, who dying without issue, the estates descended to his younger son Richard, who was member for Warwickshire in the famous Parliament of the thirtieth of Henry VIII. (1539), which proved so destructive to the monasteries. Sir William Catesby, grandson and successor of Richard, and others, were cited before the Court of Star-Chamber in the twenty-third of Elizabeth (1581), and charged with harbouring the Jesuits in their houses, and being present at the celebration of the mass, of which offences they were convicted. Robert Catesby, Esq., his son and successor, was the alleged projector of the Gunpowder Plot in 1605. He was shot by one of the sheriff's officers in attempting to take him prisoner at the house of Stephen Lyttleton, one of his associates, in Holbeach, in the parish of King's Swinford, in Staffordshire; and his estates having become escheated to the crown, the lordship and advowson of Ashby Ledgers were granted in 1611 to Sir William Irving in fee. The manor, lordship, and advowson, were sold by Sir William Irving in 1612 to Bryan Janson, Esq., and Ann his wife, with whose descendants they continued till 1703, when they were purchased by Joseph Ashley, Esq., and from him they descended to the late Lady Senhouse, who died in 1850, and was succeeded by her son William Senhouse, Esq., the present proprietor and lord of the manor. Another part of this parish, Ashby Lodge Estate, which in the ninth of Edward II. (1316) was held by Nicholas de Turville, was purchased in 1680 of the Jansons for £4400, by Thomas second Lord Leigh of Stoneleigh, in Warwickshire, and sold by the Hon. Charles Leigh, of Leighton Buzzard, Bedfordshire. His second surviving son sold it in 1718 to George Arnold, Esq., and from him it descended to George Henry Arnold, Esq., who died in 1844, leaving one daughter, Georgiana, who married a Mr Cope, and had issue Cope Arnold, the present possessor, who came of age in 1866. The Priors of Catesby and Nuneaton, and the Hospital of St John of Jerusalem, had possessions in this parish. Over the gateway, between the west end of the church and the house, is an old chamber, where, according to tradition, Sir William Catesby held frequent conferences with his conspirators.

The Village of Ashby St Ledgers, which is very ancient, is pleasantly situated on an eminence, about four miles north from Daventry, sixteen north-west from Northampton, and two from the Crick Station of the London and North-Western Railway.

The Church, dedicated to St Leodegarius, or Ledgers, Bishop of Autun, in France, stands at the east end of the village, and consists of nave, side aisles, and porches, chancel, north chapel, and tower, in which are four bells. The chancel is of an earlier date than the body. An ancient oak screen of light and beautiful execution, spreading out into curves of delicate tracery, and surmounted by a richly carved moulding, which forms the basis of a rood loft, separates the chancel from the nave. In the south wall of the chancel is a piscina and locker, and at the east end of the south aisle is another piscina. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Daventry, rated in the king's books at £6, 13s. 4d., and now valued at £130 a year. The patronage is vested in William Senhouse, Esq., and the Rev. Jenkin Jenkins, M.A., is the present incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land in 1764—the rectorial for 148a. 11. 16p., and the vicarial 66a. 5p. The north chantry chapel is appropriated for the burial-place of the Arnold family, and in it is a magnificent monument belonging to them; and a handsome stained glass window was inserted by the late Mrs Arnold. Within the altar rails, on a marble slab, is a rich brass to Sir William Catesby, the favourite of Richard III., and his wife; and there are several beautiful mural monuments to the Catesbys, Jansons, Ashleys, &c., in the church. The chantry founded here by some of the Catesby family in the twenty-sixth of Henry VIII. (1535), was worth £6, 13s. 4d. per annum.

The Manor-House, the seat and property of William Senhouse, Esq., stands near the north side of the churchyard. It was formerly the residence of the Catesbys, and is in a good state of preservation. The east front has been modernised, but the remainder of the building retains its original character. In the hall, which is wainscoted, are several portraits of the Ashley family. Another manor-house stood at the north-western extremity of the village. It is now a cottage, but in the adjoining field the foundations of an extensive building, probably the residence of the families of Dyve and Stoke, are still visible.

Ashby Lodge, the seat of William James Angerstein, Esq., stands about one mile north-west of the village. It was built in 1722 by George Arnold, and contains an interesting collection of pictures by old masters, amongst which may be noticed the "Crucifixion," by Cornelius Poelemburg; the "Virgin and Child," by Paul Veronese; "A Magdalen," by Rubens; "Belshazzar's Feast," the figures by Rubens, the architecture by Old Franck; "Joseph of Arimathea, preparing the tomb for the body of our Saviour;" "King William and Queen Mary going in state to Parliament through the old Horse Guards," by Old Wycke; and several family portraits, cabinet pictures, &c., &c. The library contains one of the best private collections of British topography and natural history in the kingdom. The views from the grounds are extensive and magnificent, including Edgehill, the Malvern hills, the Clee hills, in Shropshire, and the spires of Coventry. With the aid of a glass, some of the Welsh mountains are said to be visible.

Charities.—The poor's estate consists of 21a. or. 15p., and ten cottages; the former lets for about £42 a year, and the latter are generally occupied by parish paupers at a low rent. Tomasine Janson, by deed bearing date 1658, left a yearly rent-charge of £10, 10s., and 12s. for the preaching of a sermon on the first Tuesday in every month at Ashby Ledgers. The 12s. is allowed to the parish clerk. The interest of £100 consols, the bequest of the late Lady Senhouse, to be given to the most deserving poor. Also the interest of £34, 4s. 9d. consols, the bequest of Mrs Ashley to the poor, to encourage attendance at church.

Post-Office.—John Butlin, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Rugby at 4.59 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 8.34 P.M. Braunstone is the nearest Money-Order Office.

Angerstein William Jas., Esq., Ashby Lodge	Senhouse William, Esq., Manor House	Faulkner William
Bull Nathan, wheelwright	Smith John, boot & shoemaker	Faulkner Owen
Butlin John, baker, cornmillers, and post-office	Smith Joseph, shopkeeper	Gilbert Mrs Harriet
Butlin Mrs Louisa, day-school	Underwood Daniel, bailiff to W. Senhouse, Esq.	Goode Samuel
CarrJesse, vict. Coach & Horses	Farmers and Graziers.	Hall Robert
Jenkins Rev. Jenkin, M.A., vicar	Capell John Henry, Foxhill	Montgomery Dennis, & maltster
Montgomery William, butcher	Coleman Richard Lee	Nunneley Edward Miall, The Grove
Noon Joseph, parish clerk	Cowley Mrs Elizabeth	Phillips Thomas
	Cowley William Payne	Southam John
		Williams John

BADBY PARISH.

Badby, or, as it is called in Domesday Book, Badebi, is bounded by Newnham on the east; by Daventry on the north; on the west by Staverton; and by Fawsley on the south. It contains 2370 acres, and its population in 1801 was 462; in 1831, 583; in 1841, 624; in 1851, 596; in 1861, 618; and in 1871, 608 souls. The gross estimated rental of the parish is £4098, and the rateable value £3575. Newnham is considered a parochial chapelry in this parish, but in the parliamentary returns is recognised as an independent parish. The lordship of Badby is hilly; the prospect from Badby Down is extensive and beautiful, and Badby Wood, containing about 180 acres, lies on a hill at the other side.

Arbury Hill, supposed to have been an ancient Roman encampment, is about a mile westward of the village. The site of the camp occupies the whole summit of the hill, which was surrounded by a wide ditch, 20 feet deep, enclosing an area of about 10 acres. This earthwork is 804 feet above the level of the sea, and some assert that it is the highest point of ground in England. The soil of the downs is a red sand, and of the lower parts of the parish a grey loam. There are quarries of hard blue ragstone, and numerous springs of excellent water in the parish. Sir Rainald Knightley is lord of the manor, and the largest proprietor.

Manor.—The manor of Badby was given by one Norman, a sheriff, to the Abbey of Croyland, and the grant was confirmed by Witlaf and Beorred, Kings of Mercia in the years 833 and 868, when the manor contained 4 hides of arable land and 30 acres of meadow. About three years afterwards, King Beorred, under pretence of enabling him to carry out the war against the Danes, who had made a sudden irruption into Mercia, seized the whole Isle of Ely, and the lands and revenues of several religious houses. Most of these, however, were redeemed, in 948, by the favour of Edrid, King of Britain, at the solicitation of Turketul, Abbot of Croyland, the King's Chancellor, and the manor of Badby among the rest. In 1013, when the Danes renewed their hostilities under Sweyn, the Abbot of Croyland, having no money to purchase assistance, stipulated with Norman, the son of Leofric, Earl of Chester, who was one of the greatest military officers under Edric Earl of Mercia, to settle on him the manor of Badby for a hundred years to hold of St Guthlac, by a peppercorn rent, on condition of his agreeing to defend and protect the abbey from its enemies. But Norman and Edric were both slain in 1017 by King Canute, who seized all the lands belonging to Norman, but restored them afterwards to his brother and heir, the Earl Leofric, who assigned the manor of Badby to the Abbey of Evesham for the residue of the term. In 1018, King Canute gave the lordship of Badby and Newnham to the monks of Evesham, but this was only a ratification of the grant previously made by Earl Leofric. Though Badby was in the possession of the Abbey of Evesham at the time of the Domesday survey, it is returned by mistake amongst the lands of Croyland Abbey, and certified to contain 4 hides of land, a mill worth 2s. yearly, and 30 acres of meadow, with a wood 4 quarentines of furlongs in length, and 2 furlongs in breadth. The whole was valued then, as in the Confessor's time, at £8 yearly. In the 30th of Henry III. (1246), the abbot of Evesham and his successors obtained a charter of free warren in Badby and Newnham, a member of the said manor, and in the same year he received of the king the additional privilege of enclosing Badby Wood for a park. In the 3d of Edward III. (1330), the abbot was called upon to show his authority for the claim he laid upon his privileges here, but it was found by the jury that he held of the king in capite, and that he and his predecessors had done so "time out of mind;" that he had a court leet, assize of bread and beer, and everything pertaining to these liberties, with free warren in all his demesne lands within the said manor, and that he made a yearly payment of 4 marks and 5s. into the king's exchequer for the enjoyment of these liberties in this his manor of Badby and Newnham. At the dissolution of the monasteries, the united lordship of Badby and Newnham, which was valued at £54, 6s. 2d., fell to the crown, and in the 33d of Henry VIII. (1542) was granted to Sir Edmund Knightley, in exchange for the manor of Blisworth, and on his decease without issue, it passed to Sir Valentine Knightley, of Fawsley, whose descendant, Sir Charles Knightley, Bart., came into possession in 1812, and was succeeded in 1864 by his son, Sir Rainald Knightley, Bart. of Fawsley Hall, the present proprietor. The manor-house, or court-house, formerly the grange of the Abbey of Evesham, stood eastward of the village green, and was encompassed by a moat on all sides but the west, where a brook ran which supplied the moat with water.

The Village of Badby stands on the ascent of a hill, formerly part of the sandy heap called Badby Down, about 2 miles S.W. from Daventry, 4 W. from the Weedon Station, 15 N.N.E. from Banbury, 12 N.W. from Towcester, and 12 S.W. by W. from Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands at the north-west end of the village, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch, chancel, and a tower containing five bells. The tower was rebuilt in 1707, the former steeple having fallen down in 1705. The chancel is entered through an open pointed arch; the eastern window of the chancel is a beautiful pointed one of three lights, with mullions trefoiled; in the north aisle is a trefoiled piscina cut out of the eastern pillar, and in the south wall of the chancel are two seats under uniform arches, supported by circular columns, and adjoining them is a piscina under a cinquefoil-headed arch. The living is a discharged vicarage united to that of Newnham, in the deanery of Daventry, rated in the king's books at £14, and now valued at £400 a year. It is in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, and incumbency of the Rev. William Scratton, M.A. The registry of the church has the following melancholy record:—"Simon Marriott, Robert Marriott, his son, and Thomas Borros, killed altogether with thunder and lightning, 27th July, and buried 28th July, 1691." The impropriate rectory consists of 223a. 19p.; and the Badby glebe with Newnham, including 16 acres at Priors Marston, in Warwickshire, comprising 165 acres, were allotted by the Commissioners of Enclosure in lieu of glebe lands and vicarial tithes. The Vicarage House stands eastward of the church, and has been partially rebuilt by the late vicar.

An Independent Chapel has just been erected here at the expense of Mr Briggs of Daventry, which will seat more than 200. The Rev. William Eagles is the minister.

Badby House, the residence of the Hon. John George Hugh Massey, is a handsome building, pleasantly situated on an eminence about a mile south of Daventry.

The Village Green is ornamented with a charity school, called Lady Knightley's school from its foundress, which is supported by Sir Rainald

Knightley. It is a small Gothic building, cruciform in shape, from a design by Wyatt, and being almost entirely covered with ivy, presents a very pretty appearance : nineteen poor girls are taught free here.

The other Charities of the parish are, the interest of £191, 17s. 3d., in the 3 per cent. annuities, for the support of the Sunday-school (which is also used as a day-school), left by the Rev. Sir John Knightley, in 1813; and an annual rent-charge of £3, 18s., to be distributed in threepenny loaves to six of the poorest inhabitants of the parish, left by Thomas Coles in 1733. There are also £200 in the 3 per cent. annuities, left by Miss Ann Hanson of Birmingham, 1852, in aid of the Church of England schools of this parish.

Post-Office.—William Foster, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Daventry at 8 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 7.30 P.M. Daventry is the nearest Money-Order Office.

Barnes Mr Josephus
Bird Joseph, boot & shoemaker
Bromwich Mrs Hannah, vict.

Maltsters' Arms

Bromwich Miss Emily, school-mistress

Capell Mrs Rebecca, vict.

Windmill

Douglas Benjamin, butcher
Douglas Mrs Francis
Dudley Jph. boot & shoemaker
Eagles Rev. William (Indepnt.)
Flowers Mrs Ann, schoolmrs.
Forster William, tailor Frost James, vict. Bridge Inn

Goodman John, farm bailiff
Green William, shopkeeper
Grose Jph, wheelwt. & carpter.
Homan Mrs Charlot. wheelwrgt.

Hudson John, bricklayer

Massey Hon. John George

Hugh, Badby House

Masters John, shopkpr. & baker

Phillips Mr James

Powell John, cart-owner

Scrutton Rev. Wm. M. A. vicar

Sutton William, butcher

Walker Edward, blacksmith

and shopkeeper

Walker Thomas, blacksmith

Wills John, carpenter
Wadsworth William, baker

Farmers and Graziers.

(*Marked * are yeomen*).

Bird William Goodman

Bromwich Bede

Lewin John

Lindsay William

Phillips James

*Phillips Thomas Francis

*Turner William Edward

Warner George

*Youmans Richard

Carriers.—Mrs Mary Ann Blundell, to Daventry, Wed. & Fri., & Northampton, Saturday.

BARBY PARISH.

Barby, formerly called variously Bercheby, Berouby, Bereweby, Berughby, and Barughby, is bounded on the north by Hilmorton in Warwickshire, on the east by Kilsby, from both of which it is divided by Rangebrook, till near the south; on the south by Braunston, and on the west by Dunchurch and Bilton in Warwickshire. The parish contains 3556 acres, and its population in 1801 was 597; in 1831, 637; in 1841, 640; in 1851, 645; in 1861, 645; and in 1871, 589 souls. Its rateable value is £8230, and the gross estimated rental is £9668. The parish includes the hamlet of Onley, and an insulated portion of about 190 acres, called Nortoft, distant about half a mile from the nearest point of the parish, and separated by the intervention of Kilsby. About two-thirds of the lordship is in permanent pasture. The soil on the south is gravelly with a mixture of sand, and a strong clay in the other parts. The principal owners are Lumley Chivers Arnold, Manor-House, lord of manor; the rector in right of the church; and Messrs Berson and Mr Thomas Pellom, and some resident yeomen. There are several excellent springs in the parish, one of which, Rodwell, is chalybeate. There were formerly two woods in Barby, one of which is mentioned in Domesday Book, but they have both been cut down and enclosed long since.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey William Peverell had this lordship, of whom Pagan held two hides of land. These two hides, with six acres of meadow, and a wood six perches long and four in breadth, had been valued in the reign of the Confessor at 30s., but was then rated at 60s.; Pagan was probably Peverell's younger brother. In the reign of King John, William de Cantilupe, who had the wardship and custody of the lands of Catharine, daughter and heir of Hugh de Lisle, held two knights' fees here as part of her inheritance. In the second of Henry III. (1218), he paid a fine of 200 marks for leave to marry the said Catharine to one of his younger sons, and of which marriage was born Eustace de Cantilupe, who in the twenty-fifth of this reign (1241) was seized of two hides here, which were held of the Honor of Peverell.

In the thirty-seventh of the same reign (1252) the manor was granted to William de Cantilupe, the grandson of the before-mentioned William, who at his decease was succeeded by his son George. This George dying without issue in the first of Edward I. (1272), Milisent, the relict of John de Montalt, and wife of Eudo la Zouche, his eldest sister, and John, the son of Henry de Hastings by Joan, his youngest sister, were found by inquisition to be his heirs. In the partition of the estate, this manor was allotted to Milisent, the eldest daughter of William de Cantilupe, from whom it descended to her son William la Zouche, who in the ninth of Edward II. (1316), was certified to be lord of the manor of Barby. In this family it continued till after the accession of James I., when it was purchased by Gregory Isham, Esq., eldest son of Henry Isham, Esq., Comptroller of Customs in the reign of Elizabeth. It was again sold in 1683 by John Burrard, Esq., to Edmund Bromwich, Esq., of Daventry, by whose son and heir, John Bromwich, of Husband's Bosworth, it was conveyed in 1705 to Thomas, Lord Leigh, of Stoneleigh Abbey, in Warwickshire. George Arnold, Esq., of Ashby Lodge, purchased it in 1718 of the Hon. Charles Leigh, of Leighton Buzzard, in Bedfordshire, and from him the manor descended to George Henry Arnold, who died in 1844, leaving it in his will to his grandson, Lumley Chivers Arnold, Esq., the present possessor, who came of age in 1864. The Manor-House, which was moated, stood in Hall-close, at the north end of the village.

The Village of Barby is pleasantly situated on the borders of Warwickshire, near the Oxford canal, and within a mile of the Kilsby tunnel, on the London and North-Western Railway. It is about six miles N.W. from Daventry, four and a half N.E. from Rugby, fifteen from Coventry, and sixteen from Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a plain Gothic structure, and stands near the centre of the village. It consists of a nave, north and south aisles and porches, south chapel and chancel, and a tower containing four bells and a clock. It bears date 1600, and was paved and pewed by the parishioners in 1811. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Daventry, valued in the king's books at £30, 2s. 11d., and now worth about £965 a year. The rectory consists of 497 acres, allotted at the enclosure in 1778 in lieu of the glebe and tithes of the open fields, and the rectorial tithes of the homesteads and old enclosures of Barby and Onley. The living is in the patronage of Mrs Jackson and incumbency of the Rev. Laurence Jackson, M.A. The Rectory House, which was built in 1869 by the present rector, stands near the church, and is a handsome residence. The Independent Chapel was built by subscription in 1855, and is served from Kilsby.

The School, which adjoins the church, is endowed with £35 a year out of the rents of the town land, for which sum twenty-five children are taught free. It was rebuilt by subscription in 1865, and will now accommodate eighty children.

The Town land, which consists of 32a. 3r. 39p., and several cottages, yields an annual rent of about £86, which is expended in repairing the church, highways, footpaths, and roads in the parish, and the endowment of the above school. £70 of this money was expended some time since in sinking a well for the use of the inhabitants. The Sunday-school is allowed £3, 18s. a year out of this fund. The poor's land, eight and a half acres, allotted at the enclosure in 1788, lets for £28 a year, which sum is distributed on St Thomas' Day, among the most honest and industrious poor not receiving parish relief.

Morton gives the following remarkable case of longevity in this parish:—"Rebeckah Hall, an old inhabitant of Barby, was born at Scaldwell, in this county, who died in the year 1704; was then 106 years old, and was attended to her grave by her six children, two sons and four daughters, the youngest of them 60, the eldest 77; and all of them likely to live long, being hearty of their age."

ONLEY is a hamlet in this parish containing a few farmhouses; its population and acreage is included with Barby. There is a tradition of a chapel having formerly stood in a field here, which still retains the name of Chapel-close.

Post-Office.—James Roddis, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive here from Rugby via Kilsby at 7 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 7 P.M.

Arnold Lumley Chivers, Esq., Manor House	Roberts Ricd., boot & shoemr.	*Evans Miss Elizabeth
Chambers Edw. blacksmith	Roddis Jas., baker and grocer	*Goode William
Cleaver John, bricklayer	Sargent Wm., bricklayer	Grocock Matthew
Coleman Mrs Eliz.	Thompson, Joseph, vict. Star	Haddon James, & rate collectr.
Coleman Mrs Elizabeth, vict., Arnold Arms	Warren John, schoolmaster	Hammond Job
Dacey William, tailor & grocer.	Woodfield John Thos., butcher and vict. Black Horse	Harris Thomas
Flarell Henry, blacksmith	Farmers and Graziers.	Heckford Martin, Onley
Foster Zacarh., vict. Old Crown	(Marked * are yeomen.)	*Lee Richard and William
Gillbee Mrs Maria Jane	*Barker Edwin William	Middleton John
Hopkins Thomas, wheelwright and farmer	*Barker Samuel	*Pittom Richard
Jackson Rev. Lau., M.A., rector	*Bosworth Thomas	*Pittom Thomas
Jakeman Geo., boot & shoemr.	Cartwright Walt. Joel, Onley	*Pittom William Pratt
Lucas Mrs Ann	Care and Knapp, Onley	*Ridley John
Norman John, coal dealer	*Clarke Joseph	Seymour John, Onley
Radbone Edward, carpenter	Butler Job	Smith John
Ridley James, carpenter	Dodd Richard	Snow Robert
	*Elliott Zaccheus Chapman	Turner Thomas
		Wiggins Thomas
		Worster John

Carriers.—John Smith and Mrs Sarah Batchelor, to Daventry on Wednesday, and to Rugby on Tuesday and Saturday; and Mrs Ann Lucas, to Rugby on Saturday.

BRAUNSTON PARISH.

Braunston or Brandestone, on the borders of Warwickshire, is bounded on the north by Barby, on the east by Ashby St Ledgers, on the south by Staverton, and on the west by Willoughby, in Warwickshire, from which it is divided by a small stream. It contains 3026 acres, and its population in 1801 was 909; in 1831, 1380; in 1841, 1469; in 1851, 1180; in 1861, 1128; and in 1871, 1070 souls. The gross estimated rental is £9334, and the rateable value £8296. About two-thirds of the lordship is laid down in permanent pasture. The soil of the arable land is a reddish loam on a stone bottom, and that of the grass land a strong clay. The lordship produces excellent gravel, and there are some very good springs. The principal landowners are Luke Borman, Esq. (the lord of the manor); R. H. Lamb, Esq.; Mrs Ann Reeve; Mr William Tibbitts; W. R. Rose, Esq.; Captain Senhouse, and Mr Samuel Bates.

Manor.—Walter de Eincourt held three and a half hides of land of the King in Braunston at the time of the general survey. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 2s., eight acres of meadow, and one of wood, all which had been valued at 20s. in the reign of the Confessor, when it was the freehold of Tori, but was now advanced to £4, 10s. William de Peverel held also one virgate of land here of the fee of the Bishop of Bayeux at the same time. This Walter de Eincourt had large revenues assigned him by the Conqueror, but Braunston was his only estate in this county. From him or his successor these three and a half hides were transferred to Pagan Peverel, half brother to William Peverel, who was succeeded by his son William, and dying without issue, on his journey to Jerusalem, the estate descended to his four sisters. In the partition of their brother's inheritance, the estate at Braunston was assigned to Roesea or Rose, the wife of Rollo de Harecourt, by whom she had issue Albreda de Harecourt, the wife of William Trusbut, who became possessed in her right of her mother's lands in Braunston. Albreda by this marriage had three sons and three daughters; the sons dying without issue, this estate was equally divided amongst the three sisters, whose names were Roesea de Ros, Hillaria de Buillers, and Agatha Meinfelin. Hillaria, the second daughter, having no children, left her lands here to the Abbey of Lilleshull, in Shropshire, for the support of a priest who should every day say mass for the souls of herself and family. Agatha also dying without issue, divided her possessions between the nuns of De-la-Pre Abbey, near Northampton, and the Hospital of Newstead, near Stamford.

Everard de Ros, the husband of Roesea, died in the thirty-second year of the reign of Henry II. (1186), and was succeeded by his eldest son, Robert, a minor, about thirteen years of age. This Robert joined the confederated barons against King John, and was appointed one of the twenty-five Conservators to enforce the King's adherence to Magna Charta. "In the sixteenth year of this unquiet reign," writes Bridges, "he continued faithful to the King; yet soon after deserted him, held out the Castle of Carlisle against him, and was one of the revolting barons who, in the following year, met in arms at Stamford, marched to Brackley, and laid siege to Northampton." Leland says "they divided the rebellious part of the kingdom amongst themselves, and that Northumberland fell to the share of this Robert de Ros." His lands were then seized and granted to Robert Barret, but were soon restored to him. He died in the forty-second of Henry III. (1258), leaving his inheritance to his son Robert. Oliver de Eincourt, the grandson of Walter de Eincourt, the son of Ralph, accounted for one knight's fee and a half in Braunston, which he held of the King, and under him the Abbot of Lilleshull, William de Ros, and the Prior of Newstede, held each one moiety of a knight's fee, and which moieties were afterwards distinguished as three different manors. "Robert, the son of William de Ros," continues Bridges, "was one of the chief persons who, in the forty-eighth of Henry III. (1264), engaged with the Earl of Leicester to make war upon the King, and took him prisoner, with Prince Edward, at the battle of Lewes. The Prince was committed to his custody, and by him kept under a strong guard in Hereford Castle, whereupon after his happy escape, and the victory of Evesham, Robert de Ros was declared a rebel, and his lands were forfeited; by means, however, of the composition at Kenilworth, he soon after had them restored." He died in the thirteenth of Edward I. (1285), and was succeeded by his eldest son, William, who, in six years after, laid claim to the crown of Scotland, as being a descendant of Isabel, his grandmother, the daughter of William, King of Scotland. After his decease, in the tenth of Edward II. (1317), his lands here passed into the possession of the family of De Boketon, but soon appear to have reverted to the family of Ros, for in the thirty-seventh of Edward III. (1364), Margery, the widow of William de Ros, died seized of that moiety, which had been held by the De Boketons. William de Ros, son and heir to the last-mentioned William de Ros, attended the King in his expedition into France, in the twentieth of this reign (1347), and was one of the commanders of the second brigade at the glorious battle of Cressy. He died without issue at Jerusalem, and Thomas de Ros, his younger brother, succeeded to his estates. This Thomas distinguished himself by his courage and fidelity to the King on several occasions in France, and died while preparing for a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, in the seventh of Richard II. (1344). His son John, who succeeded him, was one of the knights made by the King at his coronation, and was famous for his exploits in the wars with France. He also undertook a journey to Jerusalem, and died at Paphos, in the Isle of Cyprus, in the seventeenth of this reign (1354), leaving his estate to Sir William de Ros, his brother and heir, who was Lord Treasurer of England in the fourth of Henry IV. (1403), and dying in the second of Henry V. (1415), was succeeded by John his son. This John also displayed great proofs of military skill and courage with the King in his expedition against France, especially at the siege of Rouen; and was afterwards slain, with the Duke of Clarence, at the battle of Bauge, in Anjou. Thomas de Ros, his younger brother and successor, trod in the footsteps of his ancestors, and followed the Duke of Bedford to France. He was knighted by Henry VI. at Leicester, and died about the ninth of this reign (1431), leaving his son Thomas, an infant under four years of age. This Thomas was a faithful adherent of Henry VI. during the whole course of his reign, and, upon the defeat of that monarch in Towton Field by the Lancastrians, fled with him into Scotland. In the following parliament he was attainted, and his lands confiscated. He died at Newcastle in the same year. Edmund, his son and heir, attained a like affection with his father for the house of Lancaster, and was obliged to fly beyond the sea for security. He soon afterwards returned, and, in the fourth of Edward IV. (1465), joined with the Duke of Somerset and the northern forces, which were defeated at Hexham. His estates were forfeited to the Crown, and again restored to him, and, dying without issue in the last year of Henry VII. (1485), his three sisters became his successors. Eleanor, the eldest, was married to Sir Robert Manners, of Etall Castle, in Northumberland, and was succeeded by her eldest son George, from whom the estates descended to Thomas Manners, Lord Roos or Ros, his eldest son, who, in the fourteenth of Henry VIII. (1523), was Warden of the Marshes of Scotland. In the sixteenth of the same reign he had special livery of the lands of his grandmother Eleanor, and her sister Isabel, and in the next year he was created Earl of Rutland. In the thirty-second of this reign (1541), he was made Chief Justice in Eyre of all the King's forests beyond Trent, and in the following year obtained a grant of a large share of their late possessions. Amongst the rest, he had the lands here which belonged to the Abbey of Lillishull and the Hospital of Newstead, which were given by his ancestors to these establishments. He died in the thirty-fifth of this reign (1544), and his possessions in Braunston were sold by Henry, his eldest son, second Earl of Rutland, in 1554, to Gregory Isham, Esq. Besides the manor and abbey lands the family of Ros possessed here 700a. of arable land, 20a. of meadow, 20a. of pasture, and 1a. of wood, with the advowson of the church. From Gregory Isham, who was the third son of Eusebius Isham, Esq., of Pitchley, the manor descended in the sixth of Mary (1559), to his son Eusebius, who was afterwards knighted, and on the decease of his uncles, Giles and Robert, succeeded to the paternal estate of Pitchley. From this family the manor and estate of Braunston passed to the Webbs of Canford, in Dorsetshire. Sir John Webb, the second baronet, was lord of the manor in 1687, and from him the manor lineally descended to the late Sir John Webb, the fifth baronet, who left his estates in Yorkshire to his natural son, James Webb, Esq.; those in Lincolnshire to his natural son, John Webb, Esq.; and those in Northamptonshire, Durham, Wiltshire, and Middlesex, to his natural son, Frederick Webb, Esq., from whom it passed by purchase in 1865 to Luke Borman, Esq., the present lord of the manor or manors of Braunston.

The holders of copyhold land are governed by very peculiar rules in this manor; amongst them it may be noticed, that a copyhold held by a husband in right of his wife may, with their mutual consent, be surrendered to the use of any person in fee-simple, and that if a copyholder die seized of a copyhold, his widow can hold the lands for her life by attending the Lord's Court next ensuing the death of her husband, and presenting a purse with a groat (4s.) in it. A copyholder can fell timber, pull down buildings, &c., and his tenure cannot be forfeited for any default, or denial of payment of rent, fine, or heriot, or for the breach of any custom whatsoever. A farmhouse at the west end of the village was formerly a manor-house, though it is not known to which it was originally attached; and a spot in Bury Fields, which was formerly moated round, is supposed to be the site of the manor-house of the Ros family.

The Village of Braunston, which is nearly a mile in length, is about 3 miles from Daventry, 8 from Rugby, and 74 from London, and is in two detached portions, called Great and Little Braunston. It stands on a rising ground, which commands an extensive view into Warwickshire; and an interesting foreground to the landscape is formed by the church, the manor-house, the parsonage, and a line of rural homes crowning the ridge of the hill, with the windings of the canal, and its ornamental bridges. The village is populous, and being crossed by the highroad to Chester and Wales, was lively and bustling a few years since, no less than sixty mail and stage coaches passing and repassing daily; but now, in common with other villages on this once great thoroughfare, these conveyances have all deserted it. There are extensive warehouses and wharfs at Braunston, and the Grand Junction and the Oxford Canals unite within the limits of the parish. Mention is made in a charter of Edward III. to the nuns of Delapre, of a village or hamlet called Fawcliff, which stood to the north-east of Braunston, but of which there are no present traces. Bridges describes a remarkable stone cross, 24 feet in height, which stood "towards the upper end of the town," but which was levelled to the ground many years since, and the material applied to the repair of the highways.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, was entirely rebuilt in 1849, and forms a conspicuous object on the brow of a hill, at the west entrance to the village. The old church, being in a dilapidated state, was taken down, and the foundation-stone of the present structure laid, on the 20th of June 1848, by R. H. Lamb, Esq. of Bragborough Hall. It occupies the site of the old church, which was supposed to have stood for six centuries, and which evidently superseded one of an earlier date, as several fragments of Norman arches, capitals, and window jambs, were found embedded in the walls. This church (the old one), we are told by Bridges, "was polluted by murder during the episcopate of Oliver Sutton, Bishop of Lincoln, who, in the year 1290, granted a licence of reconciliation to the rector; but for some reasons, which we know not of, this ceremony appears to have been at that time omitted, for, in 1299, the same bishop gave a new commission to the Abbot of Croxton to perform it." Amongst the monuments in the old church, was one supposed to be to William, the fourth Lord Ros, who died in Palestine in the reign of Edward III.; it is a cross-legged effigy in grey marble. The present church, like the old one, is in the Decorated style, and consists of a nave, north and south aisles, south porch, chancel, and south chapel. At the west end is a handsome pinnacled tower containing six bells, and surmounted by a lofty crocketed octangular spire, rising to the height of 150 feet. The accommodation of the old church amounted to 363 sittings, 66 of which were free; whilst that of the present structure is 732 sittings. Mr R. C. Hussey, of Birmingham, was the architect. A new organ was added at the re-opening of the edifice, and there are several memorial windows—to the late rector, the Rev. A. B. Clough, and to the Marriot, Butlin, and other families. The cost of the present building was £6000, exclusive of the old material, which sum was raised by voluntary subscription and numerous liberal donations of the nobility and gentry of the county, aided by a loan of £1200 on parochial security, and grants of £250 each from the Church Building Society, and the Peterborough Diocesan Society. The benefice is a rectory in the Deanery of Daventry, rated in the king's books at £31, 2s. 11½d., and now valued at about £1000 per annum. It is in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Jesus College, Oxford, and the incumbency of the Rev. Lewis Gilbertson, B.D. There was formerly a chantry belonging to the manor, founded probably by the family of Ros; it is not noticed in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535, or in the chantry roll prior to the dissolution. The rectory principally consists of 384a. 1r. 6p., awarded in lieu of tithes, glebe, &c., by the Commissioners of Enclosure.

The Rectory House, which is a handsome structure, was built about the year 1838 by the then rector, and stands a little south of the church.

There is a Baptist Chapel of brick, erected in 1796, in the centre of the village; and the Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel, and a day-school attended by about 50 children of both sexes.

The National School, a spacious brick building, has been considerably enlarged by the late rector, and is attended by about 200 boys and girls. It is supported by the rental of an endowment allotted at the enclosure in lieu of a piece of land left by William Makepeace in 1733, together with various subsequent donations of money, and producing about £30.

The other Charities of the parish are—the town land, yielding an annual rent of about £240; the coal land, 11a. 3r. 31p., about £25 per annum; 4a. 1r. 3p. of church land, which yields about £9 per annum; the poor's land, 19a. 2r. 15p., which lets for about £30; various donations made by William Foster, Edward Reeve, Anne Reeve, William Dunn, and Helen Jenkins, now vested by the Commissioners of Charities; the interest of which, amounting on the whole to about £10 a year, is distributed at Christmas to the most deserving and industrious of the poor of Braunston; and the interest of £13 a year, given by some person unknown, now merged in the charges upon the town land.

Post, Money-Order, and Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank.—Miss Sarah Ann Pebody, post-mistress. Letters arrive from Rugby at 6.40 A.M., and are despatched at 6.10 P.M.

Atkins Timothy, schoolmaster and shopkeeper	Hancock Mrs Catharine & Sons, butchers	Spraggett Wm. shoemaker
Bennett Charles, surgeon	Hewitt John, blacksmith and vict. Castle	Steanes William, blacksmith
Bennett Rev. Edwin, curate of Willoughby, Ivy House	Hollis John, baker	Stevenson Wm. boat-builder
Biggs Samuel, bricklayer	Howell Wm. coal mer. & vict., Ship	Stubbs James, corn miller
Boswell Mrs Hannah, brickmkr.	Jones Admiral Oliver John	Swain Robt. carpnt. & builder
Boswell Daniel, coal merchant	Leeson Mr Joseph	Towers John, organist
Boswell Philip, vict. Wheat Sheaf	Lamb Richard Howson, Esq. J.P., Bragborough Hall	Waldin Richard, shopkeeper
Boswell William, vict. Anchor	Linnell Joseph, plumber and vict. Cross Gums	West Mrs Ann, day school
Bowers, Henry, baker	Lowndes Lieut.-Colonel John Henry, J.P.	White Chas. tailor & shopkpr.
Bradshaw & Sons, builders and boat-builders	Lucas Hy. rope & twine mkr.
Branthwaite Miss	Lumsden William, surgeon	Farmers and Graziers.
Brown Euseby, butcher	March Wm. grocer and druggist	Aston David
Bucknill Mrs	Mawby John, shoemaker	Band Wm. Ashby St Ledgers Lodge
Collins Harry, stonemason and builder	Morgan Mrs Milicent, school-mistress	Baylis William (yeoman)
Cowley Samuel, blacksmith	Ramsay Rev. A. C., curate	Bowers Richard
Dexter Mrs, schoolmistress	Randall Joseph, tailor	Bowers William
Dunn Henry, butcher	Reeve Miss Eliz., vict. Harrow	Butler Edward
Edwards Euseby, grazier and vict. Plough	Rowledge William, parish clerk	Butlin William
Fall Mrs Eliz., vict. Champion	Rushall Benjamin, saddler	Cross James, Drayton House
Garratt Capt. Thomas	Smallwood William, shoemaker	Dunn William
Gilbertson Rev. Lewis, B.D., rector	Smith Edwin Howson, school-master	Mason Samuel (& coal merchant)
Glover Mr Philip	Smith Eli, vict. Dog and Gun	Masters John (yeoman)
Hakesley Ezekl waggon propr.		Reeve Mrs Ann

Carriers.—William Waite, to Crick on Friday, Rugby on Monday, and Daventry on Wednesday and Saturday; Ezekiel Hakesley, to Coventry on Friday, Daventry on Wednesday and Saturday, and Rugby on Tuesday and Saturday.

CATESBY PARISH.

Catesby parish includes the hamlet of Newbold Grounds, and is bounded on the north by Staverton, on the east by Badby, on the west by Shuckburgh, in Warwickshire, and on the south by Hellidon. It contains 1977 acres, including the hamlet of Newbold Grounds, and its population in 1801 was 95; in 1831, 103; in 1841, 105; in 1851, 107; in 1861, 107; and in 1871, 96 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3003, and the gross estimated rental £3606. The soil is in general a deep fertile loam, and towards the east there is some excellent red land. More than three parts of the lordship is meadow and pasture. Morton says that the ground in this lordship is so rich, that they seldom or never let it lie fallow; and though tilled year after year without intermission, it produces excellent crops with little or no help from manure. Newbold brook, which rises from two heads, Hellidon Leam, and Marston Moor, passes through the parish, and there are three hills called Righten Hill, Studborrow, and Church Hill, with a plentiful supply of good springs in the lordship. The principal landowners are—Geo. Attenborough, Esq. (lord of the manor), Rev. R. Garrett, Thomas Green, and Miss Hickman of Newnham Hall.

Manor.—At the time of the Norman survey, William Peverel held 4 hides of land in Catesby, which, with 2 mills of the annual value of 16d., and 4 acres of meadow, had been valued at 40s., but was then rated at £4. Before the Conquest it was the freehold of Gttda. In the 33rd year of the reign of Edward

III. (1360), William de Esseby died seized of the villages of Catesby and Newbold, which he held of the king in capite by the service of one knight's fee. This William de Esseby was a descendant of Sasfrid, one of the principal feudatory tenants of William Peverel, under whom he held the manors of Catesby, Great Ashby in Leicestershire, and Baseford in Nottinghamshire. The posterity of Sasfrid adopted the local surname of Esseby or Ashby, but his immediate descendants seem to have varied their names with their residence, and were denominated De Esseby, De Baseford, and De Catesby. Philip son of Sasfrid gave certain lands to the Priory of Lenton, which were confirmed by his son, under the appellation of Robert son of Philip de Baseford. The above-mentioned William was the son of Robert de Esseby or Catesby of Great Ashby, in Leicestershire; he was succeeded by his son Robert, a minor, who dying without issue, his estates descended to William de Catesby, his youngest brother. This William was convicted of killing one Hugh Russell at Crick, in the 50th of Henry III. (1266), and his estate was forfeited to the king.

Catesby Priory.—This religious establishment was founded in the 12th century by Robert de Esseby, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and St Edmund, for a prioress and nine nuns of the Benedictine, or, according to some writers, the Cistercian order. He endowed it with the church and parsonage of Catesby, the chapel of Hellidon, and with his lands, tenements, mills, &c., in Catesby, and the churches of Ashby and Basford, with other revenues and liberties in these two parishes. "After his decease," writes Bridges, "his family continued the like favour to the prioress and convent. William, the son of Robert de Esseby, gave them a meadow in Catesby. Philip, the son of Robert de Esseby, gave them 4 virgates of land with tofts and crofts, meadow grounds and pastures, and all the profits arising from them in Thedingworth. William, the son of a second Robert de Esseby, gave up to them the right of common he had or might have in the crofts of Great Ashby, where they kept their sheep. Another William de Esseby gave 1 virgate of land in Catesby and half a virgate of the villenage, which was held by Robert de Brichevine and his daughter Felicia, and which Felicia afterwards resigned to them. And William de Magna Esseby gave them a toft and croft in Great Ashby." Besides these donations from the founder and his family, they had possessions in Byfield, Bodington, Hellidon, Staverton, Sulgrave, Northampton, Drayton, Harrowdon, &c. At the dissolution its clear annual value, after all deductions, was £132, 1s. 1d. Some attempts were made to keep this well-conducted and useful convent standing, but without effect, neither the acknowledged exemplary conduct of the prioress and her nuns, nor the mediation of the king's commissioners, could avert the impending fate of the establishment. According to Bridges, the first prioress on record is Margaret, sister of St Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury, a prelate of most exemplary piety, who died in 1241, and was canonised by Pope Innocent IV. (1246.) Such was her reputation for sanctity, that miracles are said to have been wrought at her tomb in Catesby through her merits. She was succeeded by Alice, her sister. "In the early ages," observes Mr Baker, "it was far from unusual for the bodies of persons of rank to be buried in one place, and their hearts and viscera in another. A case in point may be noticed here, which is the more singular, as the motive is inexplicable; none of the family having been benefactors to, or in any way connected with this monastic foundation. William Manduit, Earl of Warwick, died in 1267 (52 Henry III.), when his body was interred in Westminster Abbey and his heart in Catesby Priory." In the 31st of Henry III. (1247), the nuns obtained a grant of a weekly market on Mondays at their manor of Catesby; and two years after the additional privilege of an annual fair there on the eve of St Edmund and two following days. Both have been discontinued for centuries. In the 28th of Henry VIII. (1537), the king, in consideration of £400, and a moiety of a manor in other counties, granted to John Onley, Esq., and his heirs for ever, the house, site, precincts, and circuit of the late nunnery at Catesby, with the water-mills, church, bell-tower, and cemetery of the said monastery, and the advowson of the parish church of Catesby, together with all the demesne lands in the occupation of the monastery when dissolved, comprising 788 acres of pasture, 83 of meadow, and 161 of arable land, of the clear yearly value of £78, 18s. 2d., to hold by the service of the tenth part of a knight's fee. Edward, the grandson of John Onley, Esq., obtained the honour of knighthood, and dying without issue, the estate descended to Richard Onley, Esq., his younger brother, whose son and successor Edward, sold it to John Parkhurst, Esq., son of Sir Robert Parkhurst, of Pirford, in Surrey. On his decease, in 1730, the manor-house, and about 450 acres of land, and the advowson of the vicarage descended to his grandson, John Parkhurst, Esq., who was succeeded, in 1765, by his eldest surviving son, the Rev. John Parkhurst, M.A., the celebrated lexicographer. This eminent man was born here in June 1728, and received the rudiments of his education at Rugby School, from whence he removed to Cambridge; he entered into holy orders, but never took any preferment. He commenced his literary career in 1753, with "A Serious and Friendly Address to the Rev. John Wesley, in relation to a principal Doctrine maintained by him and his Assistants." In 1762 he published "An Hebrew and English Lexicon," with a "Methodical Hebrew Grammar" added; in 1769, "A Greek and English Lexicon to the New Testament," to which a Greek Grammar was prefixed. In 1787, he published "The Divinity and Pre-existence of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ Demonstrated from Scripture." The merits of his philological labours were fully appreciated by the classical world. He died on the 21st of February 1797, in the 69th year of his age, and his estate descended to his sons, in whom direct male line failed. After which it passed to his nephew and heir-male, John George Parkhurst, Esq., who was succeeded by George Charles Parkhurst Baxter, Esq., and it passed from him by purchase to James Attenborough, and is now in the possession of his nephew, George Attenborough, Esq. of London.

The Village of Catesby, or Upper Catesby, as it is usually called, is small, and situate about 4 miles S.W. of Daventry, 15 N.N.E. of Banbury, 17 N.W. of Towcester, 17 N.W. by W. from Northampton, and 76 from London, on the left of the Warwick road, and near the border of the river Leam, which separates this parish from Warwickshire. Nether Catesby, about a mile northward, is now reduced to a few cottages, near which stands the chapel.

The Church was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; upon the destruction of the monastery, it was in part demolished, and the ruin is now reduced to a small fragment of the west wall. The ground immediately contiguous is still appropriated to the parish burial-ground; a large slab, overhung with drooping foliage, being the receptacle for the corpse while the funeral service is being read. In the churchyard is a handsome marble monument—an altar tomb, terminating in a pyramid, surmounted by a gilt ball—belonging to the Parkhurst family. The situation of the ruin is in the most elevated part of the parish, overlooking an extensive valley, rich in pasturage and scenery, and broken by the rising and lofty hills beyond.

A broad avenue, down the steep declivity of the hill, which is shaded by a double row of trees, connects the burial-ground with Nether Catesby and the chapel, which stands on the site of the ancient Priory Chapel. The latter was pulled down about the year 1859, and the present chapel built, principally of the old materials. It is a neat structure of stone, having a bell-turret over the entrance. The chancel window is filled with stained glass, and there is a small stained window on the left, divided so as to represent the "Marriage Feast of Cana" and the Last Supper. On the right is the piscina and a trefoil pedimental arch, vestiges of the old conventual church. The pulpit, reading-desk, and pews are of ancient carved oak; and in the churchyard is a handsome marble monument to the Parkhurst family. The living is a donative in the Deanery of Daventry, and rated in the king's books at £10. There is neither glebe nor residence, and no other income than an annual stipend of £25 paid out of the Parkhurst estate. The Rev. C. S. Holthouse, M.A., vicar of Hellidon, officiates. The impropriate tithes of the parish are vested in the lord of the manor.

Catesby House, the residence of Richard Edward Sheppard, Esq., stands in the avenue about midway between Upper and Nether Catesby. It is a handsome stone building of a mixed style of architecture, situated on the steep declivity of a hill facing the old priory grounds, from which it is approached by a noble avenue of elms. The quaint and remarkable mansion of the sixteenth century, which adorned the site of the ancient priory, was pulled down in 1862 by George Attenborough, Esq., to supply materials for the present Manor-House, which was completed in 1863.

Charities.—Charles Parkhurst, Esq., left £500, 17s. 6d. to be invested in the 3 per cent. consols, the interest to be laid out annually in purchasing coal for the inhabitants of Catesby.

Roman Coins, particularly those of Faustina and Maximinus, have been found in Catesby Park.

NEWBOLD GROUNDS is a hamlet in the parish containing three farmhouses and about 700 acres of land. It is nearly environed by Newbold brook, and occupies the western side of the parish. The soil is a deep rich loam, and nearly the whole is meadow and pasture.

Manor.—In the reign of Henry III., Stephen de la More had a tenement in Newbold, and brought an action against the Prioress of Catesby for right of common in Catesby, but withdrew his suit in the 49th year of the same reign (1265). In the 20th of Edward III. (1347), one of his successors, Thomas de la More, accounted for half a knight's fee in Catesby of the Honor of Peverell. In the 9th of Edward II. (1316), the Prioress of Catesby was certified to be lady of this hamlet, from whom the family of Moor held it in after times. From this family it passed to that of Newnham, who held it till the 1st and 2d of Philip and Mary (1554), when Sir Thomas Newnham and Mary his wife, conveyed it by indenture and fine to the king and queen. Three years afterwards it was granted to Sir Edward Saunders, Lord Chief-Justice of the King's Bench, and Francis Morgan, Esq., Serjeant-at-law, and afterwards one of the judges of the King's Bench. These families became united by marriage, and the manor descended to the Powis family. On the sale of the Powis estate, in 1758, the manor and estate of Newbold was purchased by Hitch Young, Esq., of Roehampton, in Surrey, who dying in the following year, it descended to his sister and heiress, Mary, then widow of Bartholomew Clarke, Esq. of Hardington, whose daughter and heiress, Mary, was first wife of Jacob Viscount Folkestone, by whom she had William first Earl of Radnor. Jacob, the second earl, sold Newbold, in 1801, to Mr King of Banbury, of whom it was purchased by Mr Higgins of Alveston; who, in 1812, sold it to the Rev. John Lucy, of Charlecote, and from whom it descended to his son, George Lucy, Esq. The Rev. R. Garrett is the present proprietor.

Letters arrive from Daventry at 7.30 A.M., and return at 5.30 P.M.

Farmers and Graziers.
Burnham Thos. Highfield Ho.
Frost John

Green Geo. Lg. Furland Farm
Page John, Newbold
Page Mark, Newbold

Sheppard Richard Edward,
Esq. Catesby House
Warwick Thomas, Newbold

CHARWELTON PARISH,

On the borders of Warwickshire, is bounded on the east by the parish of Fawsley; by Byfield, Hellidon, and Marston on the north and west; and by Preston-Capes on the south. It contains 2265a. 3r. 37p., and its population in 1801 was 185; in 1831, 266; in 1841, 227; in 1851, 238; in 1861, 214; and in 1871, 214 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3639, and the gross estimated rental £4235. The soil is principally a deep dark loam, and on the hills a light red land; three-fourths of the parish is in grass, and the principal proprietors are—Sir Rainald Knightley, Bart., M.P. (lord of the manor),

Rev. T. C. Thornton, and Mr John Hitchcock. There is a good bed of gravel near the village.

Charwelton, or Cherwelton, takes its name from the river Cherwell, which rises from a spring or well in the cellar of Charwell House, a grange about a mile N.W. of the village. "It emerges from its subterranean bed at the corner of the farmyard," writes Mr Baker, "where it forms a head, and from thence crosses the entrance to the village from the Daventry road, under an ancient stone horse-bridge; and, after intersecting this lordship, enters Woodford, and passes on to Chacombe, from which place to Banbury, a distance of about three miles, it divides this county from Oxfordshire, and then pursues its course to the city of Oxford, where it unites with the Isis."

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, the Earl of Morton held 2½ hides in Cerweltone, which, with a mill of the yearly rent of 2s., was then valued at 60s. He also held half a hide here, which had been the freehold of Ulric, and was rated at 20s. The monks of Thorney, in Cambridgeshire, held half a hide here, which was rated at 5s.; and Hugh de Grentemaisnil had 1 virgate, which was held of him by one Walter, and valued at 5s., at the same time. After the possessions of the Earl of Morton were escheated to the crown, on his being attainted of high treason, King Stephen, in the fifth of his reign (1140), granted them to Reginald de Dunstanvill, an illegitimate son of Henry I. Upon his death, in the twenty-first of Henry II. (1175), the king distributed a small portion of his estate amongst his daughters, and retained the remainder with the earldom, which he designed for his son John, afterwards king. In the reign of Henry II., the monks of Bec in Normanby, held 2 hides and 4 small virgates here of the fee of Berkhamsted (which is supposed to be the lands formerly in the possession of the Earl of Morton); the Abbot of Thorney, 4 small virgates, formerly named half a hide; and Hugh de Chaham (Keynes), half a hide of the fee of Leicester. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), the Abbots of Thorney and Bittlesden were certified to be lords of Charwelton, and in their hands these manors remained till those monasteries were dissolved. Upon the suppression of the priories alien in the fourth of Henry V. (1417), the lands in this parish belonging to the monks of Bec were seized into the hands of the king, re-annexed to the Earldom of Cornwall, and soon afterwards granted, in great part, to Thomas Andrews, Esq., who, in the twelfth of Henry VII. (1427), died seized of three messuages, with 100 acres of arable land, 40 acres of meadow, 40 of pasture, and 1 of wood, which were held of Prince Arthur as of his Honor of Berkhamstead. This Thomas Andrews was a descendant of a very ancient family in the North, who, in 1286, had a seat and considerable estate at Carlisle. He married Emma, daughter of Richard Knightley, Esq. of Fawsley, by whom he had one son, Thomas, who added the manor of Little Charwelton, and the lands of the late dissolved monastery of Bittlesden, with the advowson of the church, to his father's possessions. Sir Thomas Andrews, his son and successor, in the thirty-fourth of Henry VIII. (1543) obtained a grant of the manor held by the monks of Thorney in Charwelton, with 40 acres of arable land, 200 acres of pasture, and 20 acres of heath. The greater part of these estates, with the advowson of the rectory, continued in the possession of this family till after the decease of Sir Eusebius Andrews in 1619, when that portion of it which was held of the Honor of Berkhamstead was purchased by John Ball, Esq. of Hellidon. The principal part of this estate, with a respectable residence, passed subsequently to the Knightley family of Byfield and Charwelton, a branch of the family of the same name at Fawsley. The Knightleys of Fawsley had an interest here as early as the beginning of the reign of Edward IV.; and in the twenty-sixth of Henry VIII. (1535), Sir Richard Knightley died seized of 300 acres of pasture in Charwelton, which he held of the king as of his principality of Wales, of which the Honor of Berkhamstead was a parcel.

The Thorney Manor-House stood at the north extremity of the village, and is now reduced to a farmhouse. The Bittlesden Manor-House is west of the church, and was partly rebuilt by the Adams family. Sir Rainald Knightley, Bart., M.P., is the present lord of the manor.

The Village, which in the olden time was divided into Great or Town Charwelton, and Little Charwelton, but now reduced to one, is situated on the turnpike road from Daventry to Banbury, 5 miles S.W. by S. from the former, and $11\frac{1}{2}$ N.N.E. from the latter; 12 N.W. from Towcester, and 14 S.W. from Northampton. Bridges says that "Church Charwelton was formerly a considerable village, and famous for affording safe and convenient inns to travellers who passed from Warwick, and other places, to London. But during the civil wars between the Houses of York and Lancaster, it was in a great measure depopulated; insomuch that passengers were obliged to turn out of their way, and take up their lodgings in Little Charwelton, which had suffered likewise from the depredations of the soldiers, and was in great danger of being wholly destroyed."

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, stands nearly a mile S.E. of the village, and a short distance from the Bittlesden manor-house, and is an ancient structure, consisting of a nave and side aisles, north chapel, chancel, south porch, and a massive embattled tower, containing four bells. The edifice was built in the fourteenth century, but the chancel, which is entered through an open arch, is of a more recent date. The font is very elegantly chiselled, and is conjectured to be of greater antiquity than the church; on the faces of the basin, which is octagonal, are the emblems of the Blessed Trinity, a rose, and other ornaments. Several of the windows are square-headed. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Daventry, rated in the king's books at £20, 2s. 11d., and now valued at about £650 a year. Sir Rainald Knightley, Bart., M.P., is patron; the Rev. Valentine Knightley, M.A., rector; and the Rev. Philip William Story, B.A., curate. The rectory consists of 58a. 3r. 1p. of glebe land, and the tithes of the whole parish, which have been commuted. There is no parsonage-house. There was a chantry founded here in the chapel of St Anne, in the reign of Henry VII., by Thomas Andrews, Esq., who endowed it with 12 marks a year, 10 of which were to be given to the priest, with "a convenient habitation assigned to him to lodge in," and 16s. 8d. "to a child who should assist him in saying mass." Within the church are several monumental brasses in excellent preservation; a fine marble monument, with recumbent effigies of Sir Thomas Andrew and his two wives; and a mural one, with 13 marble figures in relief belonging to the same family. The church is about to be thoroughly repaired.

The Day School, a good brick building, erected here in 1859 at the expense of Sir Charles Knightley, and supported by voluntary contributions, will accommodate 80 children.

Charity.—The bequest of the late Sir John Knightley, Bart., of Fawsley, toward the support of a Sunday-school here, produces £5, 15s. per annum.

Post-Office.—Wall-box. Letters through Daventry. The Box is cleared at 5.35 P.M. The nearest Money-Order Office is at Byfield.

Checkley Silas, farrier and vict.
Fox and Hounds
Fowke Fred. Gustavus, surgeon
Hortin William, shopkeeper
Inns William, shopkeeper
Mason Thomas, shopkeeper

Parritt Samuel, carpenter and parish clerk
Story Rev. Philip William, B.A. vicar of Fawsley

Farmers and Graziers.
Bromwich Esmy

Fowke Henry
Hammond George Reading, and Francis, Charwell House
Hitchcock Jno. Charwell House
Lodge
Johnson Samuel
Parsons John Eyre

DAVENTRY PARISH.

Daventry parish is bounded on the north by Welton, from which it is separated by the Grand Junction Canal; on the east by Norton, from which it is divided by Borough Hill; on the south by Newnham; on the west by Staverton; north-west by Braunston, and on the south-west by Badby. The parish, including the hamlet of Drayton, contains 4090 acres, and its population in 1801 was 2582; in 1831, 3646; in 1841, 4565; in 1851, 4430; in 1861, 4124; and in 1871, 4051. The gross estimated rental is £17,955, and the rateable value of the lands and houses is £14,825, including the canal, &c., £551, 10s. The soil is various, but about two-thirds of the parish is a strong brownish loam, which produces excellent crops of wheat, barley, beans, and turnips. Borough Hill and the eastern part of the lordship is a light sandy loam. The principal proprietors are—Rd. Trevor Clarke, Esq., of Welton Place (lord of the manor), Lord Overstone, and the executors of the late C. Watkins, Esq. There are two large reservoirs in this parish belonging to the Grand Junction Canal Company; one is situated about a mile east of the town, and covers 117½ acres, of which 7½ acres are in Norton parish; when full, the water is 35 feet deep, and it is estimated to contain about 7300 locks of water of 9000 cubic feet each. The other, which is in Drayton hamlet, contains 32½ acres; when full, the water stands 26 feet, and will supply about 1300 locks. The whole of the Braunston tunnel on the Grand Junction Canal, which is 2042 yards in length, runs through this parish, except 39 yards, which is in Braunston. This tunnel was completed in June 1796; from the surface of the ground to the deepest point of the base is about 60 feet; the passage is 19 feet 6 inches high, 16 feet 6 inches wide, and admits two boats to pass each other.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey the Countess Judith possessed the whole of Daventry, which consisted of 8 hides of land: there were 12 acres of meadow, and the whole had been valued in the reign of the Confessor at £3, but was then advanced to £8. After the Conqueror had deprived Judith, who was his niece, of her possessions for refusing to marry Simon de St Liz, they were given, together with the Earldoms of Northampton and Huntingdon, to the said Simon in marriage with Maud, her daughter (see pages 100 and 286), and by this means the manor of Daventry, which was annexed to the Earldom of Huntingdon, was transferred into the family of St Liz. Simon de St Liz had issue by this marriage, Simon, his eldest son and successor; Waltheof, Abbot of Melrose in Scotland, and two daughters. She survived her husband, and was married a second time to David, the brother and successor of Alexander, King of Scotland, to whom was granted the Earldom of Huntingdon by Henry I. Her eldest daughter, Maud, married Richard de Tonebrige, by whom she had two sons, Walter and Simon. The lordship of Daventry descended to Walter, her eldest son, who gave it to Simon, his younger brother, as a reward of his valour. To this Simon was born Robert de Daventre, whose son, Walter Fitz-Robert, held 8 hides here in the reign of Henry II. of the fee of the King of Scots; and in the 9th of the same reign (1163) was certified to be lord of Daventry. He held it of Robert Fitz-Walter, who held of the fee of Huntingdon. In the reign of King John, this Robert Fitz-Walter had a grant of a fair and market here, where the tradesmen were exempt from all customs due to the hundred, and free of toll. In the 24th of Edward III. (1351), this manor was conveyed to Henry Earl of Lancaster, grandson of Edmund Earl of Lancaster, the youngest son of Henry III. He died seized of it in the 35th of the same reign (1358), when on a partition being made of his estates between his two daughters, it was assigned to Blanch the younger, who married John of Gaunt, Earl of Richmond, the fourth son of King Edward III., and afterwards Duke of Lancaster. From this time forward the lordship was annexed to the Duchy of Lancaster, and as such was claimed by Edward IV., who in the 15th of his reign (1476) recovered it from the then possessors, and it was afterwards divided among several tenants. In the 9th of Henry VII. (1494), William Staverton, Gent., died seized of 24 messuages, 200 acres of arable land, and 20 acres of meadow, in Daventry and Drayton, which he held of the king as of his Duchy of Lancaster. In the 13th of Henry VIII. (1522), Thomas Andrews, Esq. of Charwelton, possessed 200 acres of arable land, 10 messuages, 80 acres of meadow, 60 acres of pasture, and 3 acres of wood, which were held of the king as of his Duchy of Lancaster, in socage by fealty, and an annual payment of 6s. Thomas Barker, Gent., Sir William Spencer of Brington, and Sir Richard Knightley of Fawsley, had possessions here in the same reign. Richard Andrews, Esq. of Harleston, died seized of certain lands in Daventry and Drayton in the 31st of this reign (1540), which were formerly in the possession of Thomas Andrews, Esq. of Charwelton. In the 5th of Elizabeth (1563), Henry Thornton, Esq., died seized of certain tenements here, which he held of the queen in socage, as of her manor of Daventry, and appertaining to her Duchy of Lancaster. Sir Henry Finch, Recorder of London, and his mother, were in possession of Daventry in 1629, and Sir Heneage Finch was seized of it about the year 1649. This gentleman was made a baron of the realm by the title of Lord Finch, of Daventry, in the 25th of Charles II. (1674), and in the 33rd of the same reign was created Earl of Nottingham. His son Daniel became 6th Earl of Winchelsea in 1729, and one of his descendants George Earl of Winchelsea and Nottingham, sold the whole of his property here, in 1786, for £21,673. John Clarke, Esq. of Welton Place, was the purchaser of the manorial rights and privileges of Daventry and Drayton, and about 380 acres in Daventry, and his descendant, R. T. Clarke, Esq., is the present possessor. The park here was formerly inclosed with a stone wall, and the ground still retains the name of Park Meadow.

Antiquities.—Borough Hill.—Nearly a mile eastward of the town of Daventry is Borough Hill, the site of the most extensive Roman encampment in the kingdom. It is called the Beneventa of the Britons, and Isannavaria of the Romans. Its shape is rather oval, gradually narrowing towards the north, and it was calculated to accommodate no fewer than 99,700 soldiers. The summit presents an extensive panoramic view of the surrounding country, abounding with objects of historic interest, as Naseby Field, where Charles I. was defeated, Holmby House, where he was confined; Northampton, Weedon Depot, Barden Hill, in Charnwood Forest, distant 40 miles; Hanslope church, Buckinghamshire, 20 miles distant, and the spires of Coventry; and immediately below it the compact town of Daventry, and the reservoir of the Grand Junction Canal, which adds considerably to the aspect of a rich agricultural landscape, beautifully diversified by hill and dale. A branch of the great Roman Way, Watling Street, passes within a short distance of the northern point of the hill, and its course may be traced for several miles. Mr Baker, who devoted a great deal of time and attention to this encampment, and who discovered the Roman Prætorium, tells us that “the outer circumference of the ramparts is rather more than two miles and a quarter; the diameter from north to south one mile; from east to west, at the widest point, three furlongs; and the contents of the whole area about 150 acres.” “Below this encampment or rampire,” writes Mr Morton, “about 250 yards on the south-east side of the same hill, is a lesser camp, if I may so call it, surrounded by a single trench and a bank of earth on the inside of it. The area is supposed to be about an acre, the figure an oblong square. The entrances into it appear to have been on the east, and another on the opposite or western side. The use of it perhaps was for lodging carriages. On the south side of the Borough Hill, at the foot of it, almost a quarter of a mile below the rampire, is that place, by the country people called Burnt Walls, where many loads of stone, of ruined walls and foundations, have been digged up. It takes up about six acres of ground, seems to have been moated round, and perhaps had water conveyed to it from the old pools at no great distance in that called Daintry Park.” That Borough Hill had been a primitive settlement of our aboriginal ancestors previous to the invasion of the Romans, there can scarcely be a doubt; and Mr Baker is of opinion that when Ostorius, the Roman general, succeeded in routing and dispersing the Iceni and the Coritani, he adopted Benaventa for one of his stations, converting the northern point of the hill towards the Watling Street into a castra æstiva, or summer camp, and changing the name of the town to Isannavaria, and its site to the Burnt Walls in the valley between the southern extremity of this hill and the hill on which, till some years since, Daventry wood stood; and that, after the final evacuation of this island by the Romans, in the 5th century, the importance of Borough Hill as a military post could not be overlooked, and it must have been occupied by the Saxons, and probably by the Danes, and consequently undergone many changes and modifications. At the northern point of the hill was a mount called Bunker's Hill, which in all probability was a speculum or beacon tumulus. In November 1823, Mr Baker had the western side of the hill excavated, when he discovered the site of the prætorium, or residence of the Roman general, consisting of several rooms and a bath, with curiously wrought tessellated pavements, a large portion of which is now at the Museum, Northampton. Several fragments of Roman pottery, burnt earth, and charred wood, a part of an instrument resembling a sacrificing knife, teeth, jaw-bones, and other bones of horses and other animals, were discovered at the same time. A range of tumuli was also opened, and fragments of sepulchral urns discovered. "Just within the entrenchments," says Morton, "the whole circuit of the area, excepting only about a quarter of a mile in the northern part of it, hath for several years been a celebrated course for horse-races; which, as it hath been measured and is now usually computed, wants about 28 yards of two miles." These races were held annually until 1741, when they were partially discontinued, though occasionally resumed till the hill was enclosed in 1801. Vestiges of a fortification have been discovered at the opposite side of the road, which probably were connected with this great Roman station, though the inhabitants assign it to John of Gaunt, and it is still called John of Gaunt's Castle. Several Roman coins have been frequently found here, and a denarius of Constantine, by Mr Baker. There is another hill in this lordship, called Fox Hill, in which are several rocks of blue rag-stone, well adapted for building purposes.

The Priory, for monks of the Cluniac order, a scion of the Benedictines, and dedicated to St Mary de Caritate, and St Augustine, apostle of England, was founded about 1090 by Hugh de Leycester, or, as he is frequently called, Hugh Vicescomes. It originated in an anterior foundation at Preston-Capes, where the number of the monks did not exceed four, and the situation proving inconvenient through the want of water and its proximity to his castle, he translated them here, and erected a monastery near the parish church, with the consent of Simon de St Liz, Earl of Northampton, and lord of Daventry. The first endowment consisted of the churches of Preston-Capes, Elkington, and Thorpe Mandevill, the lands of Edric de Everdon, amounting to about six virgates, and the revenue arising from a mill called Molendinum Vicecomites, at Everdon, together with three virgates of land in Fawsley, in consideration of the loss they might sustain by removing; and Hugh Poer, grandson to the founder, added the churches of West Haddon and Cold Ashby. The founder, who was seneschal or high steward to Maud de St Liz, obtained for them of her the church of Daventry and five carucates of land, containing Armele wood, certain meadow grounds, and a mill. Henry I. afterwards granted the church of Fawsley, and in consideration of the poverty of the monks, exempted them from the payment of certain customary duties. Besides these benefactions, with others very considerable from the descendants of Maud de St Liz, "Robert, the son of Vitalis Palfrey, or Fitz-Violi, lord of the manor of Foxton, gave them the churches of Foxton, Gutmundeley, Bittlesbrook, Scaldeford, Braybrook, and Lubenho. Stephen de Welton, lord of Staverton, gave them the church of Staverton; Henry de Noers, lord of Norton, the church of Norton; William de Novo Mercato, lord of Welton, restored to them the chapel of Welton, to which Daventry was the mother-church; and Geoffrey Malesoures, lord of Waldegrave, gave them the church of Walgrave. They had likewise large temporal revenues and privileges bestowed on them by several benefactors in Daventry, Drayton, Norton, Staverton, Welton, Thorp, Houghton, Northampton, Dodford, Buckby, Watford, Everdon, Fawsley, Thorp, Mandeville, Preston, West Haddon, Cold Ashby, Ravensthorp, Walgrave, Broughton, Foxton, Lubenho, Middleton, Braybrook, Bittlesbrook and Scaldeford; all which, at the time of their suppression, were rated at £236, 7s. 4d. per annum. This was one of the monasteries which was dissolved by the permission of Pope Clement VII., and King Henry VIII., in the 17th of his reign, granted it to Cardinal Wolsey towards the erection of his new colleges in Oxford and Ipswich" (Bridges). Stowe remarks on the fatal success of the principal actors in this affair, that of the five persons who were the cardinal's chief instruments, "two fell at discorde between themselves, and the one slewe the other, for the which the survivor was hanged; the third drowned himself in a well; the fourth being well knowne, and valued worth £200, became in three years so poor that he begged till his dying day; and the fifth, called Dr Allane, being chief executor in these doings, was cruelly maimed in Ireland even at such time as he was a bishop; the cardinal falling afterwards into the King's grievous displeasure, was deposed and died miserably; the colleges which he meant to have made so glorious a building came never to good effect, the one at Ipswich cleane pulled down, and the other in Oxford unfinished." Upon the death of Cardinal Wolsey in 1530, the revenues of the intended colleges fell to the crown, and in two years after, when the unfinished undertaking was refounded under a new designation (King Henry VIII's College in Oxford), this monastery, with all its possessions, was included in the endowment, and continued annexed to it till the dean and canons surrendered their charter to the King in 1545, preparatory to the college being converted into the seat of a bishopric. The priory stood contiguous to the west end of the church, extending northwards. There are no visible remains of it at present; the last vestiges, supposed to have been the refectory, and which had been used for some time as the National School, being considered in a dangerous state and incapable of repair, were taken down in 1824, and the present gaol and schools erected partly on its site.

THE TOWN OF DAVENTRY.

Daventry, which is a compact and respectable market and corporate town, having separate jurisdiction, is the head of a Union and of a County Court district, and one of the polling-places for the southern division of the county, in the rural deanery of Daventry, archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough. It occupies a pleasant situation on the ascent and summit of an elevated hilly district, 12 miles W. by N. from Northampton, 12 N.W. from Towcester, 16½ S.S.E. from Lutterworth, 20 from Coventry and Warwick, and 72 N.W. from London on the great road from London to Chester. The Weedon Station of the London and North-Western Railway, 69½ miles from London, and 42½ from Birmingham, is about 4 miles distant. The town consists of three principal streets, High-street, Sheaf-street, and New-street, with several smaller streets and a market-place of an irregular square. The houses are well built, the shops very good, the streets exceedingly clean, and the town is well watered, and lighted with gas. The water is conveyed through pipes from a reservoir on Borough Hill, which abounds in springs of remarkable purity, to a cistern in the town, whence many of the houses are supplied; and the gas-works were established in 1833 by a company of shareholders. The present nominal capital is £3750, raised in £10 and £20 shares. There are two gas-holders, capable of containing 16,000 cubic feet of gas, or 8000 each, which now (1873) sells at 6s. 3d. per 1000 cubic feet, subject to a discount of 5d. if paid within the month. There are 47 public lamps, and the annual consumption is over 4,000,000 cubic feet. Daventry, Mr Baker supposes, may date its origin from the decline of a neighbouring British or Roman station, or both, at Borough Hill; and that as civilisation advanced, the Britons deserted their mountainous residences, or reserved them for retreat in danger, and descended into the sheltered valleys. "And it is not an improbable supposition," continues he, "that in the present instance Daventre was their second position, especially as the final syllable tre is British for town; and the prefix of the first and the termination of the second name would designate the upper and the lower town." Tradition, however, assigns the origin of the town to the Danes, and hence the name of Danetre, as it is still locally pronounced. "But this notion," says Mr Bridges, "is without any foundation, Danetree being evidently no more than a contraction from Daventrei, the ancient name; and this name is very probably supposed to be a compound of the British Dwy Avon Tre, the town of the two Avons. From this fanciful conceit, however, hath been taken the device of the town-crier, who bears upon his badge the effigies of a Dane cutting down a tree." The town seal, which is dated 1595, has similar effigies instead of arms, with the circumscription Sigillum Commune Burgi de Danetre, N.S. The first charter was granted by King John. The corporation of the town consists of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councilmen. In the 20th of Edward III. (1347), after the navy had been dispersed by a tempest, Daventry was one of the seven places in this county considered of sufficient consequence to contribute recruits for the king's expedition against France, when it furnished three armed men for its quota. In the reign of Charles I. (1636), in the assessment for ship-money, the borough of Daventry was charged at £50 for its share of the £6000 levied in this county, and during the civil commotions which succeeded it was the frequent scene of military operations. After Charles I. had taken the town of Leicester by storm on the 31st May 1645, he arrived in Daventry on the 7th of June, where he fixed his headquarters, and slept at the Wheat Sheaf Inn for six nights. His army, consisting of about 10,000 men, in nearly equal proportions of cavalry and infantry, were stationed in the fields and the neighbouring villages. On the 12th of June, the King having received an alarm from a skirmishing party of the Parliamentary troops, had his whole army encamped on Borough Hill, and under arms all night; on the morning of the 13th he commenced his march northwards, and rested that night at Lubenham, near Market Harborough; and on the morning of the 14th he summoned a council of war at two o'clock, and adopted the fatal resolution (the enemy being near) which within a few hours issued in his irreparable defeat at Naseby. (For an account of the battle see page 360.) "It is not a little remarkable," observes Mr Baker, "that the battle which decided the fate of the first Charles and the last struggle of the interregnum, which terminated in the restoration of the second Charles, both took place in this county, and within a few miles of Daventry." Daventry was once famed for the manufacture of whips, but this trade has almost entirely disappeared. The chief staple trade of the town is the manufacture of boots and shoes, which is extensively carried on. The market on Wednesday is supplied with corn, cattle, &c. There are 13 annual fairs for the sale of horses and cattle held on the second Tuesday in every month, and on the 27th of October (unless it should fall on Sunday, when it is held on the following day). Those held on the second Tuesday in April and October are for the sale of cheese also. Nearly all those fairs are toll free, and this is considered the most central horse-market in England. Mops for hiring servants are held on the three Wednesdays following Old Michaelmas Day. The Northamptonshire Banking Co., the Northamptonshire Union Bank, and the Northampton Savings Bank, have branches here.

The Parish Church, the foundation-stone of which was laid on the 8th of April 1752, occupies the site of an ancient one on the Abbey Hill, dedicated to the Holy Cross. It is a handsome structure in the Grecian or Doric style, consisting of a nave, side aisles, chancel, and tower, surmounted by an octagonal spire, and containing a peal of 8 sweet-toned bells. The chimes attached to the clock are musical, and are played every third hour. The interior is neatly fitted up, and has north, south, and west galleries; the nave is divided from both aisles by four lofty Doric pillars, supporting low circular arches, and a covered roof. The elegantly stained chancel window has lately been presented by the Watson family, and the organ has undergone very extensive repairs. The whole expense of the erection of this church, including the hanging the bells, clock, and chimes, amounted to £3486. There are three entrances in the west end corresponding with the nave and aisles. The church is enclosed in an extensive burial-ground, which was enlarged in 1816, and no interments being permitted within the church, it abounds with an unusual number of memorials. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Daventry (which is co-extensive with the hundred of Fawsley), valued at £40; but its net annual value is about £400. The Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, are the patrons; the Rev. John Martyn Collyns, M.A., incumbent. A Chapel of Ease, in connection with the church, was erected in St James's street, in 1845, by voluntary subscription. The Rectory occupies a pleasant situation adjoining the churchyard.

The other places of worship are—an Independent Chapel in Sheaf street, built in 1722, which will seat about 500 hearers, the Rev. Thomas Adams, minister. Attached to it are Sunday-schools, built in 1870 at a cost of £700. This chapel is rendered memorable from the circumstance of the celebrated Dr Doddridge, author of the "Family Expositor," having preached here on several occasions. The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, in New street, was erected in 1824, and will accommodate 500 persons. In 1871 it was repewed and otherwise improved, at a cost of about £250. It has schoolrooms and dwellings for the resident ministers attached, and the Sunday-school in connection with it is well attended. Adjoining Waterloo House is a brick building, the property of Mr John Gardner, now used as a chapel, which will seat 200 persons. It was first fitted up as a place of worship in 1866, when it was occupied by the Baptists, but is at present held by no particular sect.

Schools.—The Free Grammar School, which is held in a house in New street, bearing date 1600, was founded and endowed by William Parker the elder, citizen and draper of London, but a native of Daventry, who, by will, dated 6th April 1576, "devised to Agnes his wife his manor of Upwicke Hall, and all his lands thereto belonging, in Aldbury, Stortford, and Little Hadham, in the county of Herts, and Farnham, in the county of Essex, and all his lands and hereditaments in those towns, to hold to her for her life, upon condition that she should find an honest, discreet man to keep a grammar school, and to instruct children, to the number of 50, in the science of grammar, in Daventry, and pay yearly at four feasts, or within six weeks, by equal division, £15 to the schoolmaster, and £5 to the usher; and that she should pay yearly, at the said feasts, by equal portions, £10 to the relief of six poor persons in the town of Daventry." John Sawbridge, in 1740, gave £150 towards purchasing a house for a master of the grammar school; and his brother, Edward Sawbridge, in his lifetime gave £100 for the same purpose. These donations, together with £30 given by the corporation of Daventry, were laid out, in 1768, in the purchase of a house; but it being found some time afterwards that the house was inconvenient and unsuitable for the master's residence, it was sold with his consent, in 1779, for £367, which sum was expended in the purchase of £400, 4 per cents., now $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. bank annuities, standing in the name of four trustees, and has since been employed in providing a new house for the master. The school is considered free for grammatical instruction in the learned languages to the sons of parishioners of Daventry, not exceeding 50 in number, and the master "professes himself ready to communicate such instruction to any boys properly qualified who may be sent to him." The present master, Rev. Philip Hale, B.A., receives yearly, as his salary, the stipend of £15, the usher's stipend of £5, and a house. John Farrer, of Daventry, by will dated 29th March 1729, further endowed this school with £400, which was to be expended in the purchase of land, the rents thereof to be paid to the master, if he should be in holy orders, upon condition that he should read morning and evening prayers every Sunday, and morning prayers every Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday in the year, except when either of those weekdays should be a holiday, and also that he should at all times assist the minister of Daventry in administering the holy sacrament; but if there should be no schoolmaster, or such schoolmaster should not be in holy orders, or should neglect or refuse compliance with those conditions, then he directed his trustees, during such time to find such person or persons as they should think fit to read prayers and assist the minister as aforesaid, and pay him the rents of the lands so to be purchased, his will being that prayers should be read in the church of Daventry, in manner as aforesaid, the minister reading prayers on all holidays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

The National School was erected in 1826, partly on the site of the old priory. This school was incorporated with the English Charity School, which was endowed by Dr Maynard in 1736. The sums of £200 left by Dr Maynard, £10 given by William Sawbridge in 1719, £40 by Mrs Shuckburgh, Bromwich, £10 by Thomas Wilson, £50 by John Sawbridge, and £300 given by Thomas Thornton at the desire of Catharine Combe (all of which were given for educational purposes generally, or to the charity school) were laid out, in 1745, together with other benefactions for different charitable purposes, in the purchase of an estate at Cosford, subsequently exchanged for an estate at Woodford, near Thrapston, on the 28th October 1848. The deed of conveyance states that the whole amount of the purchase-money was £1210, and that the estate was valued at £1500, but that Mr Sawbridge was willing to contribute the overplus in value of the estate for the charitable purposes for which the funds were given, but more especially for augmenting the revenue of the charity school. The charity school was further supported by an annual rent-charge of £6, left by Nathaniel Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham, for teaching a poor boy, and by an annual payment of £4, given by Edward Sawbridge, Esq., in 1772. There also belongs to this charity the sum of £1800, 3 per cents., which was purchased by means of savings of income from time to time, and money arising from the sale of timber on the Cosford estate. The estate lets for £186 a year. The present finances of the trustees enable them to clothe and educate 24 boys and 12 girls, and to apprentice 2 boys annually, with which a premium of £10 each is paid. The Girls' School, adjoining the other, was erected in 1841, at a cost of above £400, which sum was paid by the trustees of the old charity school. There is also an Infant School in Church walk, and another at Drayton, both built and established by the late Rev. D. Veysie, incumbent. These schools are numerous attended. The British School, established in 1842, is held in the Independent Sunday-school, Foundry place; it is supported by voluntary contributions, and is also well attended.

For the other Charities of the parish, see table, page 378.

The Daventry Poor-Law Union embraces an area of 95 square miles, and comprehends the following 28 parishes:—Ashby St Ledgers, Badby, Braunston, Brockhall, Buckby Long, Byfield, Canons' Ashby, Catesby, Charwelton, Daventry, Dodford, Everdon, Farthingstone, Fawsley, Floore, Hellidon, Newnham, Norton, Preston Capes, Staverton, Stowe-Nine-Churches, Watford, Weedon Beck, Welton, West Haddon, Whilton, Winwick, and Woodford. The Union Workhouse, erected in 1836–37, is situated on a most pleasant and healthy eminence, looking towards Borough Hill, on the London road, south of the town. It is a red brick building, covered with blue slate, and surrounded by extensive gardens, intersected by gravel walks, and fronted with a broad terrace, ornamented with shrubs and evergreens, which give it a very pleasing appearance. It is enlivened in fine weather by the residents of the town, who have chosen it for their favourite promenade. The house will afford accommodation to 232 persons, but the average number during the past year was 105; the expense of food and clothing was 3s. 8d. each per week. There was a good infirmary added in 1870, at a cost of about £780. Robert Henry Hewitt, Esq. of Dodford, is chairman of the Board of Guardians (consisting of 32 gentlemen); Mr William Wilkins, of Daventry, vice-chairman; Mr George Norman, clerk to the board; Mr Thomas and Mrs Atkins, master and matron. The medical officers are Mr B. C. Gowing, for the Preston district; Mr Cox, Long Buckby district; Mr F. B. Swann, Weedon district; Mr B. C. Gowing, Daventry district; Mr T. G. Fowke, Byfield district; Mr Charles Bennett for the Braunston district; and Mr Charles Parsons for West Haddon district. Divine service is performed in the morning and afternoon of Sunday, and afternoon of Friday, by the chaplain, the Rev. Philip Hale. Several of the noblemen and gentlemen of the neighbourhood are ex officio guardians. Mr Henry B. Whitworth, of Northampton, is treasurer. Miss M. A. Anderson, schoolmistress. The Board meet at the Workhouse every Wednesday. The relieving officers are—Thomas Kilburn, for Daventry district; Edward John Statham, for Long Buckby district. Registrars—births, deaths, and marriages—George Norman, superintendent; Thomas Kilburn, for Daventry district;

Edward John Statham, for Long Buckby district; and William Watson, for Weedon district.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.—Though tradition attributes the incorporation of Daventry to King John, its earliest extant charter is dated the eighteenth of Elizabeth (1576). By virtue of this charter the borough was governed by a bailiff, a recorder, and a town-clerk, who were obliged to be barristers-at-law; 14 burgesses, 20 common councilmen, 2 sergeants-at-mace, and other officers, under the name of The Bailiff, Burgesses, and Commonalty of the Borough of Daventry. King James I., by letters-patent, confirmed this charter in 1606-7, and a third charter was granted by Charles II., in the twenty-seventh of his reign (1675), introducing some important alterations in the constitution of the borough, and conferring additional privileges. After the passing of the bill for the "Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," in 1835, the old body was dissolved, and a new corporation established, which consists of a mayor, 4 aldermen, and 12 councillors, of which the following are the names for the present year, 1873-74 :—

Mayor.	Councillors.
George Emery, Esq.	Philip Owens Hillman.	William Wilkins.
	William Faulkner.	Robert Burnham.
Aldermen.	Cuthbert Newington Hughes	George Emery.
Richard Wilcox.	Johnson.	William Tew Bromley.
Charles Maud.	John Young.	Edwin Ashworth Briggs.
William Line.	Thomas Eales.	John Sheppard Glover.
Clement Clarke.	George Norman.	E. C. Burton, town-clerk.

The Assembly Hall, in New street and Foundry place, was built in 1871 by a company of shareholders, at a cost (including purchase of site) of about £1400, raised in £1 shares. It is of red brick, has a very handsome interior, with stage, anterooms, and vestibule, and is capable of accommodating upwards of 600 persons.

The Moot or Town Hall formerly stood across the end of High street, rendering the entrance to the Market-place narrow and inconvenient, but it was taken down in 1806, and the present building, then a private dwelling, purchased. In it are held the Borough Sessions by the mayor and magistrates of the town daily; and the County Court for the recovery of debts under £50 is held in the County Police Station once a month. The County Petty Sessions, at which the county magistrates preside, are also held every Wednesday at the County Police Station, New street.

The Gaol Lock-up, which occupies the ground-floor of the National School, is a substantial building, comprising a good residence, a hall, and three large cells. There are two constables for the town.

The County Police Station, situated in New street, erected in 1860, at a cost of about £1900, is of brick with stone facings, in the Elizabethan style. The Daventry division comprises 34 parishes and hamlets, which has one superintendent, one inspector, two sergeants, and eight constables.

The County Court District of Daventry comprises the following parishes and hamlets :—Ashby St Legers, Badby, Braunston, Brockhall, Buckby Long, Byfield, Canons Ashby, Catesby, Charwelton, Daventry, Dodford, Drayton, Everdon, Farthingstone, Fawsley, Flecknoe (Warwick), Floore, Hellidon, Hinton, Murcott, Nethercote (Warwick), Newnham, Narton, Preston Capes, Sawbridge (Warwick), Stowe, Watford, Weedon-Beck, Welton, West Farndon, West Haddon, Winwick, Wolthampcote (Warwick), Woodford.

The Benefit Societies here are the Manchester Independent Order of Odd-fellows, who hold their meetings at the Saracen's Head Inn; and the Nottingham Imperial Union have lodges at the Crown and Cushion and Dun Cow Inns.

The Working Men's Club was established here December 16, 1871, and occupies a building in Oxford street, which contains an entrance-hall, reading and conversation rooms, and a room for lectures and entertainments. There is a circulating library for the use of the members, who are also supplied with the London and provincial newspapers and periodicals. There are at present about 160 members, who pay a quarterly subscription of 2s. each. The management of the club is intrusted to a committee consisting of twelve working men and three trustees.

There is a small Theatre (now called Lecture Hall) in New street.

Falconer's Hill, the pleasant seat of Captain Stopford, is situated about half a mile north-west of Daventry.

DRAYTON.—This hamlet forms the north-western suburb of the town.

Eminent Men.—George Holland, a priest of the Catholic Church, and a Bachelor of Divinity, was born here in the middle of the sixteenth century. He was a B.A. of St John's College, Oxford; but renouncing the Protestant religion, he quitted this kingdom, and was admitted into the English Catholic College at Douay, in Flanders, where he was ordained priest. In 1578, he removed to Rheims, where he was one of the most active and able English translators of the Rhemish Testament. He was a lecturer on divinity at the monastery of Anchine, where he died at an advanced age in 1625. He wrote and published several doctrinal works, which were but little known in this country.

George Andrew, an Irish bishop, was born here in 1573, and educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford. He was rector of Dromcliffe, in the diocese of Killaloe, and in 1635 was consecrated Bishop of Ferns and Leighlin. On the breaking out of the civil war, he was compelled to desert his see, and died in London in 1648.

John Oxenbridge, A.M., an eccentric divine of the seventeenth century, was born at Daventry in January 1608. Having been dissatisfied with or excluded from the Church of England, he left the country, and made two successive voyages to the Bermudas, where he continued to preach till 1641, when he returned to England. He was ejected from Berwick-upon-Tweed by the Act of Uniformity in 1662. In 1664 he was pastor of Beverley, in Yorkshire, but soon after undertook a kind of missionary voyage to Surinam, from whence he sailed, 1667, to Barbadoes. In 1669 he settled in New England, and died suddenly at Boston of apoplexy, which seized him towards the close of a sermon which he was preaching. He published several discourses, &c.

John Smith, the celebrated mezzotinto engraver, was born here in 1652, and, after serving his apprenticeship to a painter in London, he studied the art of engraving in the mezzotinto style, under Becket and Vander Vaart. Thus initiated, Sir Godfrey Kneller received him into his house, and employed him in engraving his portraits. In his profession he soon stood unrivalled, and by industry and perseverance, aided by habits of frugality approaching to penuriousness, a quality seldom found in the possession of men of genius, he was enabled to purchase the manor-house, with certain lands, in Upper Boddington, and to amass a fortune of £20,000, which he divided between his son and daughter. He died on the 17th January 1742-43, at the age of ninety, and was buried in St Peter's churchyard, Northampton, where a marble tablet is placed to his memory.

Charles Lucas, A.M., was also born here in 1769. He was ordained in 1792, and soon after took the curacy of Avebury, in Wiltshire, from which he moved to Devizes, in that county, where he was curate. Amongst the numerous works which he wrote and published are "A Descriptive Account of the Old Serpentine Temple of the Druids at Avebury;" "Free Thoughts on a General Reform, addressed to every independent man;" "The Castle of St Donat's, or the History of Jack Smith," a novel; "The Infernal Quixote, a Tale of the Day," a novel which was translated into French; "The Abyssinian Reformer, or the Bible and Sabre," a novel; "Gwelygordd, or the Child of Sin," a novel, &c.

DAVENTRY DIRECTORY.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph-Office, and Savings Bank.—James Henry Reynolds, post-master. Letters arrive from all parts, through Rugby, at 5.20 A.M., and through Weedon at 10.10 A.M., and are despatched to London and the South, Birmingham and Black Country, via Weedon, at 10.15 A.M. To London, and through London, and all places between Weedon and London, at 12.50 noon. To London and all parts via Rugby at 8 P.M.

ABBOTT Miss Louisa, dressmaker, New street
 Abbotts Thomas, wine & spirit mert, High st.
 Adams Caleb, shopkr. & grindery dr. Warwick st.
 Adams Caleb, jun. stationr. & newsagt. High st.
 Adams Jesse, farmer, Warwick street
 Adams Rev. Thomas (Independent), Sheaf st.
 Adams Wm. currier & leather mert. New st.
 Applebee William, tailor & draper, Sheaf st.
 Applebee Wm. bailiff of Co. Court, St James' st.
 Archer Mrs Elizabeth, butcher, Brook street
 Arnold Mrs Catherine, blacksmith, Oxford st.
 Ashwell Geo. cabt. mkr. & carpenter, Oxford st.
 Ashwell Thomas, j. joiner, New street
 Ashwell William, j. tailor, Church walk
 Ashwell William, baker, Abbey street

BAILEY Misses Mary, Maria, & Caroline Ann, school, New street

Bailey Charles, vict. Dun Cow, Brook street
 Bailey Oliver, baker, Brook street
 Bailey William, vict. Volunteer, London road
 Baker Samuel, vict. George Inn, St James' st.
 Bale Thomas, chimney sweep, Brook street
 Barrett Misses Martha, Louisa, & Fanny, school, Warwick street

Barrett Thos. & Son, chemists, printers, book-sellers, & stationers, Sheaf street

Barrett John Wm. (Thos. & Son) & proprietor & publisher of the Daventry Express, New st.
 Batchelor Mrs Sarah & Son (Joseph) coal merchants, Oxford street

Bates Charles, grazier, High street

Bates Mrs Eliza, High street

Bates Miss Harriet, High street

Bates Thomas, grocer & tea dealer, Sheaf st.

Baxter Rev. Andrew (Wesleyan), Warwick st.

Bazley Thos. shoemkr & furniture bkr. Brook st.

Bazley Wm. carpnt. & clothes delr. Sheaf st.

Begley Francis, chimney sweep, Chapel lane

Berry John, glass & china delr. photographer, & publisher of Daventry Spectator, High st.

Billingham Fd. master British sch. Warwick st.

Billington Richard, tinner, &c. Brook street

Bird Jno. Sanders, grocer & tea dealer, High st.

Bird William, clicker, Warwick street

Bland Thomas, baker, Market place

Bliss Richard, & Cooper, drapers, High street

Bliss Miss Jane, The Cottage

Bliss Charles Peabody, auctioneer, New street

Boddington Dvd. plmber. painter, &c. High st.

Bolton Richard, farmer, Middlemoor

Brewster Rev. Jas. Geo. M.A. curate, The Abbey

Bricknell Miss Mary Ann, New street

Briggs Edwin Ashworth, Esq. New street

Brightwell John, hay & straw delr. Oxford st.

Brimley John, butcher, Abbey street

Brimley Thomas, grocer, &c. Abbey street

Brimley William Bloxham, shopkr. Oxford st.

Bromley William Tew, draper, High street

Bromwich James, butcher, High street

Bromwich Mrs Jane, Sheaf street

Brooks Edward, painter, &c. New street

Brooks Rd. Clark, joiner & builder, New st.

Brown Miss Elizabeth, Market place

Browning David, inspr. of county police, New st.

Bunting Louis Galand, manager, Union Bank

Burbridge Mr Joseph, Oxford road

Burgess Charles, saddler, Sheaf street

Burnham Robert, grocer & seed factor, & delr. in wines & ales, High street

Burnham William, vict. Royal Oak, Drayton

Burton & Willoughby, solicitors, Moot Hall

Burton Edward Charles (B. & W.) house, High st.

Burton Miss Isabell, New street

Buston William, vict. Crown, Sheaf street

CASTELL Jph. printer, statnr. & chem. High st.

Cattell Samuel, joiner and builder, New st.

Chambers Miss Caroline, New street

Checkley George, jun. butcher, High street

Checkley John, tripe dresser, Sheaf street

Clarke Clement, tailor and draper, High st.

Clayton George, soda-water mfr. Chapel lane

Cleaver Mrs Sarah Ann, milliner and registrar for servants, Sheaf street

Cleaver Wm. painter, plumber, &c. Sheaf st.

Cock Charles, scavenger, Chapel lane

Collier James, superv. of incl. rev. Market pl.

Collins Pinckard, grocer, &c., and agent for W. & A. Gilbey, spirit merchants. High st.

Collins Rev. John Martyn, M.A. rector

Cork Mrs Jane, Church walk

Co-operative Society, bakers, grocers, & provision dlsr. Sheaf st. (Jas. Edwards, manager).

Cooper Henry, draper (Bliss & Cooper) h. High street

Cox Benjamin, beerho. & farmer, Drayton

Cox Edward, landowner, Drayton

Cox Miss Ann, Church walk

Crofts Edward, vict. Black Horse, Market pl.

Cropper & Norman, aucrs. & valuers, High st.

Cropper Wm. (C. & Norman), h. Rugby

Cross Miss Emma, school, Warwick street

Cross Mrs Mary, Warwick street

DANIEL, Charles, draper, &c. High street

Daventry Express (Jno. Wm. Barrett, propr. and publisher), Sheaf street

Daventry Joint Stock Advance Co. (Limited), New street, Eli Warden, secretary

Daventry Literary and Scientific Institute, Sheaf street

Daventry Spectator (Jno. Berry, pub.) High st.

Davies Miss Eliz. boarding school, High st.

Deacon Jno. Dingly, vict. World's End, Sheaf st.

Dickins Butlin, corn dealer, Sheaf street

Dickins, Miss Fanny Eliz. school, Market pl.

Dickins Wm. newsagt. & fancy reposry. Sheaf st.

Dodd Mr William, Rose Cottage

Dunkley Mr Thomas, Woodbine Cottage

Dunkley Mrs Selina, & Sons (John Radburn & Thos.), grocers, tallow chandlers, &c. High st.

Dwyer John, painter, &c. New street

EALLES Thomas, auctioneer & valuer, High st.

Edgar William, draper & tea dealer, Sheaf st.

Edmonds Mrs Adelaide, butcher and vict. Saracen's Head & Comm. Hotel, Brook st.

Edmonds Hill, butcher, Market place

Edmunds William, farmer, New street

Edmunds Wm. Fred. vict. Peacock Hotel, market, private, comm. & posting house, High st.

Edwards Jas. shop manager, Warwick st.

Elkington Mrs Eliza Jane, Warwick street

Elliman Benjamin, furniture broker, High st.

Elliott Mrs Alice, straw-bonnet maker, Sheaf st.

Elliott Miss Jane, dressmaker, Oxford street

Emery George, farmer, Drayton Lodge

Emery Thomas, butcher, Sheaf street

FARDEN Edward, whitesmith, Brook street

Faulkner & Hillman, drapers and sewing-machine agents, Sheaf street

Faulkner Mrs Elizabeth, Brook street

Faulkner William, haberdasher, &c. High st.
 Flowers Thomas, coal dealer, Drayton
 Forster Thompson, surgeon, High street
 Foster George, police constable and inspector of nuisances, Warwick street
 Freear Henry, pig dealer, Chapel lane
 Frost George, farmer, Wood Farm
 Frost Thomas, shoe manager, New street
 Fulton Mrs Sarah, vict. Bear Inn, High st.

GARDNER John, millinery, drapery, and shoe warehouse, Waterloo House
 Gas Works (Davenport Gas & Coke Co. Limit.)
 Brook street, Thomas Simpson, manager
 Gee John, joiner and builder, New street
 George Edward, beerhouse, Abbey street
 George William, carr. & beerhouse, Sheaf st.
 Gibbard Cornelius, whipmaker, Brook street
 Gibbins Mrs Samuel, Church walk
 Glover John Sheppard, corn dealer, Sheaf st.
 Goodman Joseph, farmer, Drayton Grange
 Goodwin Edwin, baker & confectr. High st.
 Goodwin John, wheelwright, Sheaf street
 Goodwin John, jun. greengrocer, Oxford st.
 Gowing Benjamin Chaston, surgeon, High st.
 Green George, brick & tilemaker, Wood brick yard, and Middlemoor, Drayton, h. Welton
 Gurden Mrs John, Warwick street

HADDON Thos. Laur. tobacconist, High street
 Hale Rev. Philip, B.A. master of Grammar School, New street
 Hallworth Wm. clothier and vict. Crispin's
Arms, St James' street
 Hammond, W. vict. Coach & Horses, Warwickst.
 Hancock Thos. vict. Warwick Arms, High st.
 Harris Thomas, vict. Lion and Lamb, High st.
 Harris William, shopkeeper, Brook street
 Hart Jph. prov. dir. & vict. Greyhound, High st.
 Hart Thomas, vict. Wagon & Horses, Sheaf st.
 Hawgood, Wm. joiner and builder, Brook st.
 Haynes James, shepherd, Church walk
 Hence William Henry, watchmaker, Sheaf st.
 Hensman Osborn, bookbinder, North street
 Herbert Jas. master of Nat. School, The Abbey
 Hewitt Mrs Catherine, New street
 Higham Jos. carrier & greengrocer, Sheaf st.
 Highton Fredk. Wm. inland rev. officer, Sheaf st.
 Hillman Philip Owen (Faulkner & H.), Sheaf st.
 Hinkes Miss Eliz. dressmaker, New street
 Hinkes Thomas, implement agent and vict.
Plough & Bell, New street
 Hodges Samuel, pork butcher, Sheaf street
 Hollis William, hairdresser, High street
 Holloway George, basket maker, Drayton.
 Hopcroft Alf. (exors. of), brewer & spirit merchant, Oxford st. & Brackley & Banbury,
 Hy. Kendrick, agent
 Horn Misses Ann, Lizzie, Emma, Flora, and Alice, The Lodge
 Horn Job, shopkeeper, Oxford street
 Houghton Mrs Mary, Sheaf street
 Howard William, shoemaker, Warwick street
 Howes Wm. grocer and seedsman, Market pl.
 IRONS Wm. shoemr. & leather seller, Abbey st.

JAMES Charles, blacksmith, Foundry place
 Jeffs Charles, tailor, New street
 Jesson Jph. White agt. (P.&R. Phipps) High st.
 Johnson Cuth. Newington Hughes, surgeon,
 Sheaf street
 Johnson Daniel, farmer, Borough Hill

Johnson Thomas, vict. Swan, Market place
 Jones Mrs Ann, Brook street
 Jones Mrs Sel. straw bonnet maker, Norton rd.
 Jordan Mrs Phoebe, butcher, Brook street

KENDRICK Henry, agt. (exrs. of A. Hopcroft),
 High street
 Kendrick Miss Mary, New street
 Kilburn Thos. reg. of births, deaths, & mar.
 and relief. offl. for Daventry dis. Warwick st.
 Knott Miss Car. mtrs. Nat. Sch. Church walk

LAW Mr Edwin, North street
 Leeson John, butcher, Sheaf street
 Leigh John, baker & confectioner, High street
 Lighterness Wm. Beatty, painter & writer,
 New street
 Line Wm. and John, shoe manuf. New street
 Line Mrs Ann, Warwick street
 Lissiman Mr James, Church walk

MAJOR Joseph, tailor, High street
 Major Miss Martha, milliner, High st.
 Marriott Thos. greengr. town-crier, Chapel ln.
 Marriott Thos. Harris, bank clerk, High street
 Marsh Misses Elizabeth & Ellen, dressmakers,
 Chapel lane
 Martin John, school, North st. h. Church walk
 Mather Frederick, vet. surgeon, Chapel lane
 Maud Charles, watchmaker, High street
 Merifield Jno. vict. Wheat Sheaf Hotel, family, commercial, and posting-house, Sheaf street
 Miller Mr Thomas, North street
 Mold Mr Thomas Clark, Oxford street
 Morgan Charles Bletsoe, Esq. Warwick street
 Morton Mr Joseph, Warwick street
 Morton Jph. jun. baker & confectr. Brook st.
 Moss Richard, tailor and draper, High street
 Mountain John, contracting currier, Waterloo
 Mountfort Jas. Bromwich, butcher &c. Sheaf st.

NEAL John, tailor & parish clerk, New street
 Neale Miss Emma Rebecca, milliner, High st.
 Newitt John, greengrocer, Brook street
 Nicholas John, clock cleaner, Brook street
 Norman Geo. clk. to Bd. of Guardians & Super.
 Registrar, New st. h. Manor House, Drayton
 Norman Geo. jun. auctioneer (Cropper & N.)
 and farmer, High street
 North, Thos. vict. Fox and Hounds, London rd.
 Northampton Brewery Co. brewers & maltsters,
 Sheaf st. & Northampton & Burton-on-Trent,
 Alfred Martin Scott, agent.
 Northamptonshire Banking Co. High street,
 Thomas Willoughby, manager
 Northamptonshire Union Bank, High street,
 L. G. Bunting, manager

ORAMS Jeremiah, watchmaker, High street
 Orton Thomas, shopkpr. & greengr. High st.
 Osborn Hy. Edmund, vict. Plume of Feathers,
 Market place
 Osborn Jn. gr. ironmgr. & tal. chldr. Sheaf st.
 Osborn Joseph Philips, ironmonger, High st.
 Osborn Wm. fishmgr. game dlr. & fruiter. Sheaf st.

PACKER Miss Charlotte, Woodbine Cottage
 Page Wm. Godfrey, photographer, Oxford st.
 Paine Mrs Mary, Warwick street
 Parker Mrs Mary Ann, shopkeeper, Sheaf st.
 Payne Thomas, saddler, High street
 Peet Francis, chimney sweep, Brook street

Penny Mr James, Drayton
 Penny William, tailor & draper, High street
 Perkins Edward, cooper, High street
 Perkins Ed. Newitt, joiner & upolar. High st.
 Perkins Fred. nursery & seedman, Sheaf st. and Northampton
 Phipps, Pickering, & Richard, brewers, malts. wine & spirit merchts. High st. & Northampton & Towcester, J. W. Jesson, agent
 Potts Henry John, solicitor, New street
 Pratt & Son, wine & spirit merchts. High st.
 Pratt John, tea dealer, tobacconist, & assistant overseer, Sheaf street
 Pratt Thos. (Pratt & Son), house, Market pl.
 Pratt Thos. Ralph (Pratt & Son), High street

REEVE Mrs Elizabeth, Warwick street
 Reynolds James Henry, veterinary surgeon & postmaster, Market place
 Rixom George, farrier, Abbey street
 Roche Charles Bennett, solicitor, West place; house, High street
 Rodhouse Charles, shoe manufactr. Waterloo
 Rodhouse Edward, shoe mfr. Warwick street
 Rodhouse Mrs Mary Ann, Waterloo
 Royle Saml. police constable and inspector of weights and measures, Market place

SARGENT Richard, basket maker, Brook street
Savings Bank, Market place
 Schofield Edward, solicitor's clerk, High street
 Scott Alfred Martin, agent for Northampton Brewery Co. Sheaf street
 Sharp Edwin, shoemaker, Market place
 Sharp Edw. whip mfr. Market pl. h. Floore
 Sheasby Joseph, boot & shoe mkr. Sheaf st.
 Simpson Thos. mangr. of gas wrks, Warwick st.
 Simpson William, shopkeeper, High street
 Slark Miss Elizabeth, New street
 Smith George, vict. Prince Regent, Sheaf st.
 Smith Joseph, vict. White Horse, Brook street
 Smith William, leather & grindery dealer, & boot-top maker, High street
 Smith William, marine store dealer, shopkeeper, & vict. Red Lion, Brook street
 Smith William, marine store dealer, Chapel ln.
 Society for Propagating Christian Knowledge, Rev. J. Ley and Rev. J. M. Collyns, secretaries, Sheaf street
 Soden Sam. Reynolds, coach blder. Warwick st.
 Starmer Henry, boot & shoemaker, New st.
 Starmer Wm. shoe mfr. & auctiner. Oxford st.
 Stead & Simpson. shoe mfra. New street, and Leicester and Leeds
 Stopford Capt. Edw. R.N. J.P. Falconer's Hill
 Stretton John, blacksmith, New street
 Stuchbury Edward, Berlin wool and fancy repository, High street

Summers Geo. baker & confectioner, Sheaf st.
 Summers Mrs Martha, dressmaker, Abbey st.
 Sutton Thomas, cart-owner, St James' street

TAYLOR Alfred, chemist and druggist, High st.
 Thwaites Fredk. brazier & tinner, High st.
 Timms Benjamin John, shopkeeper, High st.
 Todd Robert, saddler, High street
 Tooby Charles, tailor & draper, Sheaf street
 Tooby William, bricklayer, Warwick street
 Turner David, chapel clerk, St James' street
 Turner Mr John, Yew Cottage
 Turnock John, plumber, &c. London road
 Tysoe Levi, vict. Crown & Cushion, High st.

UPTON Mr John, London road
 Upton Thomas, baker, London road

WAITE Chas. furnre. bkr. Brook st.; h. Waterloo
 Wall George, corn & flour dealer, Abbey st.
 Wall Mrs Ann, Warwick street
 Walton Mrs Sarah, furniture bkr, &c. High st.
 Warren Samuel, upholsterer, paperhanger, and furniture dealer, New street
 Warwick William, farmer, Brook street
 Watson William, confectioner, High street
 Watts Richard, butcher, High street
 Webb David, shopkeeper, Abbey street
 Webb William, hurdle, &c. maker, Foundry pl.
 Webb Wm. currier & leather seller, High st.
 Weston Wm. machine top closer, Church walk
 White Rev. John Penberthy (Wesyn.), New st.
 Whitehead Thomas, umbrella maker, Brook st.
 Whiting George, hairdresser, New street
 Wiggins Jno. Edw. vict. Marquis of Grandby, Sheaf street
 Wiggins Thomas, coal merchant, New street
 Wilcox Richard, yeoman, Oxford street
 Wilkins Miss Anne Maria, High street
 Wilkins William, yeoman, High street
 Wilkinson Samuel, vict. Boot, Abbey street
 Willey William, j. tailor, Warwick street
 Williams Joseph, farmer, Drayton
 Willoughby Jas. Wesley, bootmaker, High st.
 Willoughby Thos. manager for Northamptonshire Banking Company, High street
 Willoughby Wm. solicitor (Burton & W.) h. New street
 Wilson (Miss Sarah) & Hickman (Mrs Hannah) milliners, Sheaf street
 Wise Miss Charlotte, ladies' school, North st.
 Working Men's Club, Oxford street, William Thomson, secretary
 Wright Ewd. upholsterer & paperhgr. New st.

Young John, wine & spirit mert. High street
 Yorke Mrs Sarah Frances, Market place

TRADES AND PROFESSIONS.

Academies and Schools.

Bailey Misses M. M. & C. A. New street
 Barratt Misses M. L. & F. Warwick street
British School, Foundry place, Fred. Billingham
 Cross Miss Emma, Warwick st.
 Davies Miss E. (bordg.) High st.
 Dickens, Miss F. E. Market pl. Grammar School, New street, Rev. Philip Hale, B.A.
 English Charity and National School, Market place (boys and girls), James Herbert and Miss Caro. Knott
 Martin John, North street
National (infants), Church wk.
 Mrs Maria Todd

National (infants), Drayton, Mrs Caroline Gurney
 Wise Miss Charlotte, North st.

Attorneys.

Burton & Willoughby, Moot Hall
 Potts Hy. Jno. New street
 Roche Chas. Bennet, West pl.

Auctioneers & Appraisers.

Bliss Char. Peabody, New st.
Cropper & Norman, High st.
Eales Thomas, High street
Starmer William, Oxford st.

Bakers.

Ashwell William, Abbey street
Bailey Oliver, Brook street
Bland Thomas, Market place
Co-operative Society, James
Edwards, manager, Sheaf st.
Goodwin Edwin, High street
Leigh John, High street
Morton Joseph, jun. Brook st.
Summers George, Sheaf street
Upton Thomas, London road

Banks.

Northamptonshire Banking Co.
High st. (draw on London & Westminster Bank, London),
T. Willoughby, manager
Northamptonshire Union Bank,
High st. (draw on Williams, Deacon, & Co. London), L.
G. Bunting, manager
Savings Bank, Market pl. open on Wednesday from 12.30 till 1.30 p.m.

Basketmakers.

Holloway Geo. Drayton
Sargent Richard, Brook street

Blacksmiths.

Arnold Mrs Cath. Oxford street
Farden Edw. (white), Brook st.
James Chas. Foundry pl. and Norton
Shetton John, New street

Bookbinder.

Hensman Osborn, North street

Booksellers, &c.

Barrett Thos. & Son, Sheaf st.
Castell Joseph, High street

Boot and Shoemakers.

Bayley Thomas, Brook street
Gardner John (dlr.), High st.
Howard Wm. Warwick street
Irons William, Abbey street
Sharp Edwin, Market place
Sheasby Joseph, Sheaf street
Starmer Henry, New street
Willoughby Jas. Wes. High st.

Boot and Shoe Manufacturers (wholesale).

Line Wm. & John, New street
Rodhouse Edw. Warwick st.
Rodhouse Charles, Waterloo
Starmer Wm. Oxford street
tead & Simpson, New street,
Sand Leicester and Leeds

Braziers and Tinnerns.

Billington Rd. Brook street
Thwaites Fredk. High street

Brewers' (Stores).

Hopcroft Alfred (exors. of), Oxford street, and *Brackley &
Banbury*—Hy. Kendrick, agt.
Northampton Brewery Co. Sheaf
st. & Northampton & Burton-on-Trent—A. M. Scott, agt.
Phipps, Pickering, & Richard,
High st. and Northampton and Towcester—J. W. Jenson, agent.

Brick & Tile Manufacr.

Green George, Wood Brickyard, & Middlemoor, Drayton

Bricklayer.

Tooby William, Warwick st.

Builders.

Cattell Samuel, New street
Brooks Richard Clark, New st.
Gee John, New street
Hawgood William, Brook st.

Butchers.

Archer Mrs Eliza, Brook st.
Brimley John, Abbey street
Bromwich James, High street
Checkley George, jun. High st.
Edmonds Mrs Adel. Brook st.
Edmonds Hill, Market place
Emery Thomas, Sheaf street
Hodges Saml. (pork), Sheaf st.
Jordan Mrs Phoebe, Brook st.
Leeson John, Sheaf street
Mountfort James B. Sheaf st.
Watts Richard, High street

Cabinet Makers.

Ashwell George, Oxford street
Perkins Edw. Newitt, High st.

Carpenters and Joiners.

Ashwell George, Oxford street
Brooks Richard Clark, New st.
Cattell Sainuel, New street
Gee John, New street
Hawgood William, Brook street
Perkins Edw. Newitt, High st.
Webb William (hurdle, &c. maker), Foundry place

Cart-Owner.

Sutton Thomas, St James' st.

Chemists and Druggists.

Barrett Thos. & Son, Sheaf st.
Castell Joseph, High street
Taylor Alfred, High street

Chimney Sweepers.

Bale Thomas, Brook street
Begley Francis, Chapel lane
Peet Francis, Brook street

Clothes Dealer.]

Hallworth Wm. St James' st.

Coachbuilder.

Soden Samuel R. Warwick st.

Coal Merchants.

Batchelor Mrs Sarah, & Son,
Oxford street
Flowers Thomas, Drayton
Higgins Thomas, New street

Confectioners.

Goodwin Edwin, High street
Leigh John, High street
Morton Joseph, jun. Brook st.
Summers George, Sheaf street
Watson William, High street

Cooper.

Perkins Edward, High street

Corn, &c. Dealers.

Dickins Butlin, Sheaf street
Glover Jno. Sheppard, Sheaf st.
Wall George, Abbey street

Curriers.

Adams William, New street
Webb William, High street

Farmers and Graziers.

(Marked * are yeomen.)

Adams Jesse, Warwick street
Bates Charles, High street
Bolton Richard, Middlemoor
Edmunds William, New street
Frost George, Wood Farm
Emery George, Drayton Lodge
Goodman Jph. Drayton Grange
Johnson Daniel, Borough Hill
*Mountford James B. Sheaf st.
Norman George, Manor House,
Drayton
Norman George, jun. High st.
Warwick William, Brook st.
*Wilcox Richard, Oxford st.
*Wilkins William, High st.
Williams Joseph, Drayton

Farrrier.

Rixom George, Abbey street

Fire and Life Offices.

Accidental—Charles P. Bliss,
New street
County (hailstorm)—Wm. T.
Bromley, High street
County Fire Office—T. Willoughby, Old Bank
General (life and fire)—Butlin
Dickins, Sheaf street
Liverpool & London & Globe—
Wm. T. Bromley, High st.
London (guarantee and accident)—Wm. T. Bromley,
High street
Manchester (fire)—Clement
Clarke, High street

Northern—Jas. W. Willoughby, High street
Phœnix (fire) and Pelican (life), John Young, High street
Provident (life)—T. Willoughby, Old Bank
Railway Passengers' Assurance (against accidents of all kinds)—T. Willoughby, Old Bank
Royal—P. O. Hillman, Sheaf st.
Royal Exchange—Edw. Turner, New street
Royal Farmers'—Thos. Eales, High street
Scottish Widows' Fund (life)—L. G. Bunting, High street
Star (fire)—Clement Clarke, High street
Sun—L. G. Bunting, High st.
Geo. Norman, New street
Temperance and Gen. Provident—P. O. Hillman, Sheaf street
Union—Alfred Taylor, High st.

Fishmonger.

Osborn Wm. (and game dealer and fruiterer), Sheaf street

Furniture Brokers.

Bazley Thomas, Brook street
 Elliman Benjamin, High street
 Waite Charles, Brook street
 Walton Mrs Sarah, High street
 Warren Samuel, New street

Gardeners and Green-grocers.

Goodwin John, jun. Oxford st.
 Higham Joseph, Sheaf street
 Marriott Thomas, Chapel lane
 Newitt John, Brook street
 Orton Thomas, High street
 Osborn John, Sheaf street

Glass, China, &c. Dealer.
 Berry John, High street

Grindery Dealers.

Adams Caleb, Warwick street
 Smith William, High street

Grocers, Tea, &c. Dealers.

Bates Thomas, Sheaf street
 Bird John Sanders, High street
 Brimley Thos. Abbey street
 Burnham Robert, High street
 Collins Pinckard, High street
 Co-operative Society, James Edwards, manager, Sheaf st.
 Dunkley & Sons, High street
 Howes William, Market place
 Osborn John, Sheaf street

Haberdasher.

Faulkner William, High street

Hairdressers.

Hollis William, High street
 Whiting George, New street

Hay and Straw Dealer.
 Brightwell Jno. Oxford street

Hotels, Inns, &c.

Bear (& Commercial), Mrs Sarah Fulton, High street
Black Horse, Edward Crofts, Market place
Boot, Sam. Wilkinson, Abbey st.
Coach & Horses, Wm. Hammond, Warwick street
Crispin's Arms, Wm. Hallworth, St James' street
Crown, Wm. Buston, Sheaf st.
Crown & Cushion, Levi Tysoe, High street
Dun Cow, Charles Bailey, Brook street
Fox & Hounds, Thos. North, London road
George, Sl. Baker, St James' st.
Greyhound, Jos. Hart, High st.
Lion & Lamb, T. Harria, High st.
Marquis of Grandby, Jno. Ed. Wiggins, Sheaf street
Peacock Hotel (market, private, coml. & posting-house), Wm. Fredk. Edmunds, High st.
Plough & Bell, T. Hinkes, New st.
Plume of Feathers, Hy. Edmund Osborn, Market place
Prince Regent, G. Smith, Sheaf st.
Red Lion, Wm. Smith, Brook st.
Royal Oak, Wm. Burnham, Drayton
Saracen's Head (& commercial), Mrs Adel. Edmonds, Brook st.
Swan, Ths. Johnson, Market pl.
Volunteer, William Bailey, London road
Wagon & Horses, Geo. Hart, Sheaf street
Warwick Arms, Thos. Hancock, Warwick street
Wheat Sheaf Hotel (family, commercial, and posting), John Merifield, Sheaf street
White Horse, Joseph Smith, Brook street
World's End, John Dingley Deacon, Sheaf street

Beerhouses.

Burnham Robert, High street
 Cox Benjamin, Drayton
 George Edward, Abbey street
 George William, Sheaf street

Ironmongers.

Osborn John, Sheaf street
 Osborn Jph. Phillips, High st.

Leather Sellers.

Adams William, New street
 Irons William, Abbey street
 Smith William, High street
 Webb William, High street

Linen & Woollen Drapers.

Bliss Rd. & Cooper, High st.
 Bromley William Tew, High st.
 Daniel Charles, High street
 Edgar William, Sheaf street

Faulkner & Hillman, Sheaf st.
 Gardner John, Waterloo House, High street

Maltsters.

Glover Jno. Sheppard, Sheaf st.
 Northampton Brewery Co. Sheaf street, and Northampton
 Phipps, Pickering, & Richard, High street, and Northampton and Toucester

Marine Store Dealers.

Smith William, Brook street
 Smith William, Chapel lane

Milliners & Dressmakers.

Abbott Miss Louisa, New st.
 Cleaver Mrs Sarah Ann, Sheaf st.
 Elliott Miss Jane, Oxford st.
 Faulkner & Hillman, Sheaf st.
 Gardner John, Waterloo House
 Hinkes Miss Eliz. New street
 Major Miss Martha, High street
 March Misses E. & E. Chapel ln.
 Neale Miss E. R. High street
 Summers Mrs Mar. Abbey st.
 Wilson & Hickman, Sheaf st.

Newsagents & Stationers.

Adams Caleb, jun. Sheaf street
 Dickens William, Sheaf street

Newspapers.

Daventry Express (Saturday), Jno. Wm. Barrett, Sheaf st.
Daventry Spectator (Saturday), John Berry, High street

Photographers.

Berry John, High street
 Page Wm. Godfrey, Oxford st.

Pig Dealer.

Freear Hy. Chapel lane

Plumbers, Painters, &c.]

Boddington David, High street
 Brooks Edward, New street
 Cleaver William, Sheaf street
 Dwyer John, New street
 Lighterness Wm. B. New st.
 Turnock John, Warwick street

Printers.

Barrett Thos. & Son, Sheaf st.
 Castell Joseph, High street

Saddlers.

Burgess Charles, Sheaf street
 Payne Thomas, High street
 Todd Robert, High street

Seedsmen.

Burnham Robert, High street
 Howes William, Market place
 Perkins Fredk (and nursery), Sheaf st. and Northampton

Shopkeepers.

Adams Caleb, Warwick street
 Brimley Wm. Blox. Oxford st.
 Co-operative Society, Jas. Edwards, manager, Sheaf st.
 Hart Joseph, High street
 Harris William, Brook street
 Horn Job, Oxford street
 Orton Thomas, High street
 Parker Mrs Mary Ann, Sheaf st.
 Timms Benj. John, High street
 Webb David, Abbey street

Soda-Water Manufac.

Clayton George, Chapel lane

Straw-Hat Makers.

Elliott Mrs Alice, Sheaf street
 Elliott Miss Jane, Oxford st.
 Jones Mrs Selina, Norton road

Surgeons.

Forster Thompson, High street
 Gowing Benj. Chaston, High st.
 Johnson Cuth. N. H. Sheaf st.

Tailors.

(Marked thus * are also drapers.)

* Applebee William, Sheaf st.
 * Clarke Clement, High street
 Jeffs Charles, New street

Major Joseph, High street
 * Moss Richard, High street
 Neal John, New street
 * Penny William, High Street
 * Tooby Charles, Sheaf street

Tallow Chandlers.

Dunkley & Sons, High street
 Osborn John, High street

Tea Dealer.

Pratt John, Sheaf street

Tobaccoonists.

Haddon Thos. Law, High st.
 Pratt John, Sheaf street

Toy, &c. Dealers.

Dickins William, Sheaf street
 Stuchbury Edw. High street
 Walton Mrs Sarah, High street

Tripe Dresser.

Checkley John, Sheaf street

Umbrella Maker.

Whitehead Thomas, Brook st.

Upholsterers.

Perkins Edw. Newitt, High st.
 Warren Samuel, New street
 Wright Edward, New street

Veterinary Surgeons.

Mather Fredk. Sheaf street
 Reynolds Jas. Hy. Market pl.

Watchmakers.

Hence William Hy. Sheaf st.
 Maud Chas. High street
 Orams Jeremiah, High street

Wheelwright.

Goodwin John, Sheaf street

Whip Manufacturers.

Gibbard Cornelius, Brook st.
 Sharp Ed. Market pl. & Floore

Wine and Spirit Merchts.

Abbotts Thos. High street
 Hopercroft Alf. (exors. of), Oxford st. Hy. Kendrick, agent
 Phipps, Pickering, & Richard, High st.—J. W. Jeason, agt.
 Pratt & Son, High street
 Young John, High street

PUBLIC ESTABLISHMENTS, OFFICERS, &c.

Assembly Hall, New street—T. H. Marriott, secretary, Old bank
County Court, Moot Hall—Richard Harington, Esq., judge; Wm. Willoughby, registrar; Alex. M'Kay, high bailiff
Gas Works, Brook st.—Thos. Simpson, mangr.
Inland Revenue Office—Wheat Sheaf Hotel, Jas. Collier, supervisor; Frederick Wm. Highton, officer
Literary and Scientific Institute—Sheaf street
Police Stations—(Borough) Market pl. Saml. Royle & Geo. Foster, constables; (County) New st. David Browning, inspector
Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge—Sheaf street, Rev. J. Ley and Rev. J. M. Collyns, secretaries
Stamp Office, Sheaf st.—P. O. Hillman, sub-distributor
Union Workhouse, London road—Thomas Atkins, master
Working Men's Club, Oxford street—William Thomason, secretary

Public Officers.

Borough Treasurer,—Wm. Willoughby, Moot Hall
Clerk to Commissioners, to Land Assessed, and Property and Income Taxes—Edmond Chas. Burton, Moot Hall
Clerk to County and Borough Magistrates—Edmond Chas. Burton Improvement Commissioners for Paving, Lighting, &c.—surveyor, George Ashwell; treasurer, Northamptonshire Banking Company

Collector of Taxes and Assistant Overseer—John Pratt, Sheaf street
Inspector of Nuisances and Common Lodging Houses—Geo. Foster, Warwick street
Inspector of Weights and Measures—Samuel Royle, Borough Gaol, Market place
Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, and Relieving Officer for Daventry District—Thomas Kilburn, Warwick street
Registrar of Births and Deaths, and Relieving Officer for Long Buckby District—Edward John Statham, Long Buckby
Registrar of Births and Deaths for Weedon District—William Watson, Weedon
Superintendent Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages—George Norman, New st.
8th Northamptonshire (Daventry) Rifle Volunteers (enrolled 1860)—Captain, E. C. Burton; lieutenant, T. Willoughby; drill sergeant, L. Lucas; colour-sergeant, T. H. Marriott

Conveyances.

Omnibuses from Peacock Hotel, High street, to the Weedon Station (L. & N. W.) four times a day (Sunday excepted)

Carriers to Northampton.

William George, on Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday; and Joseph Higham, on Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday

CARRIERS FROM THE INNS, &c.

Ashby St Ledgers —Thomas Crock, Crown & Cushion, Wednesday	Napton —Wm. Muddiman, Crown & Cushion, Wednesday
Badby —James Blundell, Wednesday; and Alfred Turner, Dun Cow, daily	Newnham —Geo. Wills, all days except Thur.
Banbury —Wm. Gardner, Dun Cow, Wed. & Sat.; Levi West, Crown & Cushion, Wed.	Norton —Geo. Major, Bear, Monday, Wednesday, and Friday
Barby —Mrs Sarah Batchelor & John Smith, Dun Cow, Wednesday	Preston Capes —Herbert Hickman, Crown & Cushion, Wednesday and Saturday
Braunston —Ezekiel Hakesley and Wm. Waite, Wednesday and Saturday	Prior's Marston —Smith Jester, Crown and Cushion, Wednesday; and — Dumbleton, Saracen's Head, Wednesday and Saturday
Byfield —see Banbury	Ravensthorpe —Johnson, Wednesday
Charwelton —Samuel Higham, Lion and Lamb, Wednesday and Saturday	Rugby —Chas. Turner, Bear, Wed.; and Thos. Gardner, Lion and Lamb, Tues. and Sat.
Cold Higham —Thos. Reeve, Greyhound, Wed.	Shuckborough —Wm. Bilson, Saracen's Head, Wednesday and Saturday
Crick —Jonathan Walton, Plume of Feathers, Wednesday	Southam —Simon Warner, Crown & Cushion, Wednesday
Dunchurch —Morgan, Crown & Cushion, Wednesday	Staverton —Wm. Bulliman, Saracen's Head, Wednesday and Saturday
Everdon —George Wills, all days except Thur.	Stockton —Cleaver, Bear, Wednesday
Flecknoe —Chas. Turner, Bear, Wednesday; and — Spencer, Wednesday and Saturday	Towcester —George Brice, Monday
Floore —Geo. Major, Bear, Wednesday	Welton —Martin Smith and John Gregory, Black Horse, Wednesday and Saturday
Granborough —John Hudson, Dun Cow, Wed.	Whilton —Thomas Boot, Black Horse, Wed.; and James Adams, Plume of Feathers, Monday, Wednesday, and Friday
Hellidon —Richard Bates, Wed. and Sat.	Willoughby —John Drinkwater, Dun Cow, Wednesday
Kilsby —Thomas Crock, Crown & Cushion, and Thos. Gardner, Lion & Lamb, Wed.	Woodford —Samuel Hiam, Lion and Lamb, Wednesday and Saturday; and William Marriott, Bear, Wednesday
Leamington —Beechnee, Crown and Cushion, Wednesday	Yelvertoft —Jas. Kendrick, Crown & Cushion, Wednesday
Long Buckby —John Eales, Wed. and Sat.
Lutterworth —Thomas Gardner, Lion & Lamb, Thursday
Morton Pinkney —Hy. Gardner, Saracen's Head, Wednesday

DODFORD PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Norton, on the east by Floore, on the west by Newnham, and on the south by Weedon. It contains 1349 acres; its population in 1801 was 205; in 1831, 279; in 1841, 228; in 1851, 219; in 1861, 234; in 1871, 230 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £4541, 15s. 10d., and the gross estimated rental £5176. The parish being situated on a branch of the Nene, derives its name, according to Fuller, from a ford over that river here, at which grew a description of water-weed called Dods. The soil is principally a strong deep loam; about three-fourths of the lordship is in rich pasture, almost unequalled in the county. There are several springs: two or three of them are slightly chalybeate; and there is plenty of good diluvial gravel in the parish. According to Morton, the inhabitants of this parish are famous for longevity, and generally live to the age of seventy or eighty. In the great Mayflood in 1664, "the water in a short space arose at least eight feet above the ordinary surface of the rill that runs through the town." Sir Rainald Knightley, Bart. (lord of the manor), and Robett Hewitt, Esq., are the principal proprietors.

Manor.—Dodford, or Dodefod, contained 3 hides of land at the time of the Domesday survey, which was held by the Earl of Morton; there were 2 mills of the yearly rent of 10s., and 12 acres of meadow, and the whole had been valued in the reign of the Confessor at 40s, but was then advanced to double that sum. The Saxon proprietors of this land were Turbern, who held half of it, and Orgar, Aluric, and Leuric, who held the other half. In the beginning of the reign of Henry II., these 3 hides were in the possession of Ralph de Keynes, the elder son of Ralph de Keynes, or de Kainets, who came over with the Conqueror. Ralph, the grandson of the above-named Ralph, having joined the rebellious barons, in the 17th of this reign (1171) his lands in this county were given by the king to Imbert de Hereford, but were afterwards restored, as he died seized of them in the sixth of Henry III. (1222), and was succeeded by his son William, who enclosed a park and warren here, which were found to be an infringement on the rights of the king's manor at Fawsley. William was succeeded by Robert, his son, who was knighted, and in the 10th of Edward I. (1282) died seized of this manor, which he was certified to have held of Edmund Earl of Leicester, the youngest son of Henry III., by the service of 4½ knight's fees. This Edmund had the title of King of Sicily, having been invested by the Pope with the dominions of Sicily and Apulia in the thirty-eighth of Henry III. (1254). Whilst a youth he was created by his father the Earl of Chester, and in the forty-ninth of this reign, upon the forfeiture of Simon de Montford, Earl of Leicester, was by letters-patent created Earl of Leicester, and in the year following obtained a grant of the Honor of Leicester. In the fifty-first of this reign he was made Earl of Lancaster, and had the castle and town of Lancaster conferred upon him, and after two years was made High Steward of England. He died in the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), and was succeeded by Thomas, his son, who dying without issue, the honours and estate descended to Henry, his younger brother, whose son Henry, in the twenty-fifth of Edward III. (1352), was advanced to the title and dignity of Duke of Lancaster. From that time the manor of Dodford was held of the Duke of Lancaster as of the fee of Leicester. It continued in the possession of the family of De Keynes until the forty-ninth of this reign, when the male succession failed, and it passed to the sister and aunt of John de Keynes, who dying without issue in a few months, the manor descended to Alice, great-grand-daughter of William de Keynes, wife of Lewis Cardigan. From this lady it passed through several intermediate possessors, after being subject to illegal descent or legal contention for upwards of a century, to Thomas Stafford, Esq., from whom it descended, in the ninth of Henry VIII. (1518), to his nephew, Humphry Stafford, Esq. of Blatherwycke, afterwards knighted. Sir Humphry Stafford, his son, sold the manor of Dodford, in the thirty-eighth of Henry VIII. (1547), to John Wyrley, of Dodford, and John Wyley, Esq., grandson of the purchaser, in 1647 made a settlement of it upon his daughters, Anne, wife of Henry Sanderson, Esq., and Jane, wife of William Colley, Esq. By virtue of this settlement, one moiety passed to John Colley, eldest son of Jane; and Henry Sanders, Esq., on leaving no issue, the other moiety was conveyed to Henry Benson, Esq., eldest son of Anne, by Richard Benson, Esq., her second husband, who purchased the other moiety in 1685. Being thus possessed of the whole manor, he settled it, with all his other estates, in 1723, in moieties on his two daughters, Elizabeth Christiana and Jane Grey. The former died unmarried in 1731, and left her moiety to her sister, then wife of Lacy Knightley, Esq., from whom it passed to Sir Charles Knightley, Bart., who, according to Baker, is of the blood of William Keynes, the Norman grantee, though not the representative. There were 14 mesne manors belonging to this barony: at Brockhole and Muscott, Floore and Clasthorpe, Harleston, Heyford, Holdenby, Spratton, Hannington, Thurnby, Yelvertoft, Walton near Aynho, and Astrop; all of which places, with the exception of Astrop, are still within the jurisdiction of its view of frank-pledge or court-leet.

The Priors of Luffield, Daventry, and Canons Ashby, and Broomsgrove chantry, in Worcestershire, had each possessions in this parish. The Manor-House stood south of the churchyard.

The Village of Dodford stands on the highroad to Chester through Daventry, occupying a narrow valley, through which runs a small rivulet, which rises near Borough Hill, and being fed by springs principally rising in this lordship, forms a tributary to the Nene. It is about three miles E.S.E. of Daventry, and one mile N. of Weedon. The London and North-Western Railway, the Grand Junction Canal, and the old Roman road, Watling Street, run nearly parallel in the vicinity.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands on a gentle elevation between the Chester road and the village, and consists of a nave and north aisle, south porch, chancel, and tower containing six bells. The north aisle is in the Early English style, the body about a century later. The font is very ancient, and the chancel, which was rebuilt in 1850, is approached from the nave by an ascent of two steps under a pointed arch, under which is an open carved screen of wood. The east end of the aisle is appropriated to a chapel or burial-place for the lords of the manor. The clock and chimes are the gift of Mr Joseph Cooke in 1710. The living is a vicarage in the Deanery of Weedon, rated in the king's books at £10, and now valued at £275 per annum. The Rev. T. C. Thornton of Brockhall is the patron, and the Rev. Henry John Thomson, M.A., incumbent. The impropriate rectory consists of 100 acres of land awarded in lieu of great tithes; and the vicar's income arises from a glebe of 129 acres. A window of three lights was placed in the north aisle in 1863 by Robert Hewitt, Esq. of Northampton, in memory of his wife and his brother Richard.

There are several interesting ancient monuments in the church, amongst which are two with effigies, one of a cross-legged knight in banded mail, of which there are only three in the kingdom. This is supposed to be the effigy of Sir William Keynes, who died in 1344, and was buried here.

The Vicarage House, which is a commodious residence, stands in the village, a little north of the church.

The Parish School is endowed with the following bequests:—Joseph Cooke of this parish, who died in 1780, bequeathed £100, the yearly interest to be applied from time to time in apprenticing poor children of the parish; and £500, the yearly interest to be applied in paying the master of the parish school. The late Thomas Reeve Thornton, Esq. of Brockhall, in 1842, added by gift the sum of £300 to the aforesaid charities—viz. to the apprenticing fund £50, and to the school fund £250, to be disposed of and managed in the same manner as the original bequests. The present school was built in 1840.

Jane Freeman of Coventry, who died in 1842, bequeathed £60, and her niece Frances King, who died in 1845, bequeathed £40, the yearly interest to be distributed among the poor of this parish, in such manner as the vicar and his successors shall think proper.

Biography.—Robert Dodford, a learned Benedictine monk, was a native of this village, and flourished in the 13th century; he was educated at Ramsey Abbey, where he became librarian, and devoted his time to the study of Hebrew. He wrote several sermons, with Postills, on the Proverbs, which, says Fuller, “the envy of time hath intercepted from us.”

Post-Office.—Wall Box, cleared at 5 P.M. Letters arrive here from Weedon, which is the nearest Money-Order Office.

Baker James, shopkeeper
Crofts John, parish clerk
Humphrey Mrs Elizabeth, vict.

Thompson Rev. Henry John,
M.A. vicar
Turner Edward, vict. Swan.

Hewitt Rt. Hy. (& land agent)
Humphrey Mrs Elizabeth
Rayson William, Glebe Farm
Russell James
Sargent Joseph

New Inn

Linnett Thos. rate collector
Russell James, corn miller,
Dodford Mill

Farmers and Graziers.
Broomwich William

Carrier to Daventry—George Judkins, Wednesday and Saturday.

EVERDON PARISH.

Everdon parish includes Great and Little Everdon and the hamlet of Snoscomb. It is bounded on the east by Weedon, on the north by Newnham, on the west by Fawsley, and on the south by Farthingstone. It contains 2499 acres; its population in 1801 was 586; in 1831, 745; in 1841, 777; in 1851, 712; in 1861, and in 1871, 672 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £4734, and the gross estimated rental £5340. The soil is a rich loam on the low grounds, and light and sandy on the hills; and the greater part of the lordship, except the hills, is in grass. A few brooks run through the parish, and there are several springs, one of which, Swiftwell Spring, is a mineral. The principal landowners are—the Provost and Fellows of Eton College (the lords of the manor), Sir Rainald Knightley, Bart., Robert Canning, Esq., Sanders Pepper, Esq., J. G. Todd, Esq., Mr James Bromwich, Mr Joseph Rivolta, and Mr John Stockley.

Manor.—William Peverell held half a hide of land in Everdon of the fee of the Bishop of Bayeux, and soke of Fawsley, at the time of the general survey. In the reign of Edward I. it was the freehold of Bern, and had been rated at 5s., but it was then advanced to 10s. "Odo, Bishop of Bayeux, was half-brother to the Conqueror by the mother's side, and attended him in his expedition against Harold. He was present with many clergy at the battle which gained his brother the crown, and is supposed by his supplications and advice to have been instrumental in procuring success. For these services, and his entire affection to the person of the king, he was raised to the Earldom of Kent, the first office of trust and dignity conferred after the victory. With this post of honour he received many large possessions, and besides the manors lying in other counties, he had 12 in Northamptonshire, which were given him by the Conqueror"—(Bridges). In the reign of Henry II. the monks of Bernay held $2\frac{1}{2}$ hides, and 2 small virgates in Everdon; the monks of Daventry held 8 small virgates of Hugh de Leicester, and Ralph de Maundeville and Walter had each 4 small virgates here. The Abbey of Bernay, which was of the Benedictine order, in the diocese of Lisieux in Normandy, was founded by Judith, wife of Richard, second Duke of Normandy. Dugdale and Tanner are of opinion that there was a cell belonging to this abbey in Everdon. In the beginning of the reign of Edward I., the Abbot of Bernay was lord of the manor of Everdon. Robert Young, as under-tenant to the monks of Daventry, held 6 virgates of the fee of Huntingdon, which owed suit to the hundred of Fawsley, and Geoffrey de Maundeville held 4 virgates of the fee of Albany. The abbot performed suit and service at the Huntingdon court twice a year. Upon the suppression of the alien monasteries, the manor of Everdon, with the priory, was granted by King Henry VI., in the nineteenth of his reign (1440), to the Provost and Fellows of Eton College, in whose possession it still continues.

The Eton Manor-House, formerly the priory, stood at the east end of the village. The lands which belonged to the monks of Daventry, and were called the manor of Little Everdon, were granted to Cardinal Wolsey at the dissolution of that monastery, and afterwards to King Henry VIII.'s new foundations in Oxford.

Everdon Hall, formerly the Manor-House of Little Everdon, and which afterwards became a farmhouse, was purchased, together with the estate, in 1809, by Gabriel Doveton, Esq., M.P., a general in the East India service, who converted the house into a good residence. It is now the seat and property of David St Paul, Esq.

The Village of Everdon is situated in a vale overlooked by a range of hills on the north-west and south, about 4 miles S.S.E. of Daventry, and nearly 12 miles from Northampton. A dreadful fire broke out in this village on the 13th April 1786, when nearly 40 houses were consumed. It was occasioned by a plumber's fire in the belfry, some sparks of which were blown by the wind out of the window upon a thatched building.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands near the centre of the village, and consists of a nave, side aisles, porches, and chancel, with a tower containing five bells. It is in the Decorated style of architecture, and is a very neat edifice. The chancel is divided from the nave by a wooden screen beneath a lofty arch, and in the south wall of the chancel are two seats and a piscina. The east end of the chancel was rebuilt about 1860, and the old chancel window replaced by a new one at the expense of the late rector. A portion of the south aisle is appropriated to the inhabitants of Snoscomb. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Daventry, rated in the king's books at £24, 2s. 11d., and now worth about £600 a year. The Provost and Fellows of Eton College are the patrons, and the Rev. Henry Luxmoore, M.A., is the rector. The Commissioners of Enclosure awarded about 162 acres of land, and an annual rent-charge of £100, in lieu of the glebe and tithes of Everdon in 1764, besides which the rector has the tithes of Snoscomb.

Bridges informs us that the churchyard of Everdon was polluted by murder whilst Oliver Sutton was Bishop of Lincoln, who granted a commission to the Priors of Daventry to reconcile it, in 1292. A rood of land has been recently added to the churchyard.

The Rectory House, a neat residence, stands in the village. It was thoroughly repaired about 1861, and part of it newly roofed.

Here is a small Independent Chapel, which was built in 1813; and William Folwell, Esq., bequeathed the interest of £500 towards the support of the minister in the same year. He also left the interest of £500 towards a Charity School here, which was built in 1828 by subscription, and a grant from the National Society; and the Rev. Sir John Knightley, Bart. of Fawsley, left the interest of £133, 6s. 8d., which yields about £5, 5s. per annum, for the support of the Sunday-school. Here is also a small Wesleyan Meeting-house; and there is a Girls' Day School in the village, supported by the rector and other subscribers.

The town land consists of 16a. 2r. 28p., and lets for about £30 per annum, which is expended in the repairs of the church and church bells, and the bridge at the east end of the village.

Several Roman coins, particularly of Constantine, Constantius, and Magnentius, were ploughed up, some years since, in a field called Longsmall, in this parish. Mr Baker is of opinion that this field lies in the line of the Roman road from Benaventa, through Preston Capes and Woodford, to the station of Brenavis, at Chipping Warden.

SNOSCOMB or SNORSOMB, occupies the southern portion of this parish, and consists of about 640 acres, the whole of which belong to Sir Rainald Knightley, Bart., who is lord of the manor.

Manor.—The Earl of Morton held 1½ virgates in Snochescumbe at the time of the general survey: it was valued at 10s., and had been the freehold of Turbern. In the reign of Henry II. Snoscomb consisted of 4 small virgates, which were held of the fee of Leicester. In the reign of King John, the manor of Snoscomb was in the possession of the Lovell family, with which it continued till the fourteenth of Richard II. (1391), when John Lord Lovell and Holland conveyed it to John de Everdon. From the De Everdons it passed to the family of Knightley, and descended with Fawsley to the present proprietor.

In Bridges' time it was "a hamlet of five houses, including the mill, but reputed to have been formerly a more considerable village." The manor-house, now reduced to a farmhouse, a cottage, and the water-mill, include the whole of Snoscomb.

Post-Office.—James Wright, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive here from Daventry at 8.39 A.M., and are despatched at 5.30 P.M.

Ayres Mrs Mary, Westcomb
Ayres Jas, woodmn. Snorscomb
Baseley Matthew, carpenter
Bird Mrs Eliz. beerh. & shopkr.
Bird Mr Richard
Bird Wm. corn mlr. bkr. & grzr.
Bishop William, blacksmith
Bliss Joseph, butcher
Bodily Robt. mason & bricklr.
Borman Mrs Ann Lt. Everdon
Bradley George, higgler
Bromwich Miss Sarah
Brown Mrs Sarah, schoolmrs.
Brown Mr William
Buswell William, butcher
Butlin Henry, blacksmith and vict. Plough
Carter Hy. scholmr. & rate col.

Coates Mrs Sarah, Lt. Everdon
Elliott Robert, baker
Ellis Rev. J. S. curate
Hopcroft Wm. grocer & farmer
Hollier Wm. beerhouse
Jenkins Mr John
Jenkins William, shopkeeper
Luxmoore Rev. Henry, M.A., rector
Mann Wm. carpnt. & bird stff.
Oliver Edward, saddler
Oliver Sam. machst. & shopkr.
Osborn George, victualler, Plume of Feathers
St Paul David, Everdon Hall
Stevens Jno. wine & spirit mer.
Sutton Wm. tailor & sexton
Wright Jas. shoemkr. P.-O.

Wright Joseph, carrier, beerhouse & shopkeeper
Farmers and Graziers.
(Marked thus * are yeomen.)
*Bromwich James
Brown Thomas
*Burton Thomas
Coates Hy. Little Everdon
*Goodman Jno. Little Everdon
Gudgeon Elisha
Mountfort Thomas (& corn miller), Snorscomb
Osborn George
Payne John, Little Everdon
*Pepper Sanders (& surveyor)
Smith Mrs Sarah Ann, Little Everdon
*Stockley John (& maltster)

Carriers to Northampton.—George Bradley, 'on Wednesday and Saturday, and George Wills, to Daventry on all days except Thursday, FARTHINGSTONE PARISH.

Farthingstone, or Farraxton, is bounded by Everdon on the north, by Stowe on the east, on the south by Maidford, and by Preston Capes on the west. It contains 1737 acres, and its population in 1801 was 230; in 1831, 293; in 1841, 315; in 1851, 313; in 1861, 316; and in 1871, 339 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £2267; and the gross estimated rental £2692. The soil is principally a stiff clay, and nearly half the lordship is in permanent pasture. Dodford and Castle Dykes woods are extensive, and remarkable for the growth of oaks. The principal proprietors are—Sir Joseph Henry Hawley, Bart. (the lord of the manor), Arthur William Grant, Esq., Rev. T. C. Thornton, of Brockhall, William Harris, Esq., and Mr George Watkins.

Castle Dykes.—"At the western extremity of Farthingstone Wood is an extensive and irregular intrenchment on an elevated situation, and occupying an area of about 13 acres, called Castle Dykes. It is surrounded by a single ditch, and an outer bank or vallum, varying rather in height, but at all points much lower than the inner vallum. A deep ditch completely intersects it, and produces two nearly equal divisions. The northern one approaches to a square with the angles rounded; the depth of the vallum from the crown to the centre of the fosse is about 17 feet, and the height from the level of the inner area about 7 feet. The southern division is surrounded by a ditch about 28 feet below the crown of the rampart, which is about 15 feet above the level of the inner area; in the centre of this division is a circular mound or keep, on the same level with the rest of the area, and encompassed by a ditch and rampart of the same dimensions. The only decided entrance appears to have been near the middle of the south division, and to have been protected to the south-east by an additional vallum and ditch within the outer one. It bears a striking resemblance to the double Saxon camp described by Dr Stukeley. Morton attributes it to the same era, conjecturing that it was one of the numerous castles and forts erected in 913 under the direction of Æthelfleda, relict and successor of Æthelred, viceroy of Mercia, and that it was set on fire and demolished by the Danes under Sweyn in 1013. The site of the circular keep seems to have been subsequently converted into the baronial castle of the feudal lords. Morton, who is quoted by Baker, has given a circumstantial detail of the proceedings of some workmen in digging up the ruins for stones to build the house which is now standing at a short distance from the Castle Hill. 'They discovered,' he says, 'a room with a vaulted stone roof, and another room beneath. Amongst other stones in the rubbish, they met with three very rudely carved, each with an ill-proportioned figure standing out upon it. One a bearded head, another that seems to have been designed for a woman's head, the third of a man or woman with arms akimbo, all which were placed with the faces outward in the wall of the said house adjoining to the Dykes, and are still to be seen.' The two former are still remaining, but are mere corbels of no very remote antiquity. In a field recently reclaimed from wood to tillage, about a furlong south-west of Castle Dykes, and described by Morton as 'a plot of ground called Castle Yard,' is a square intrenchment with only the inner vallum remaining; but on the north side, which is within the wood, both the vallum and the fosse between are still visible." There can be little doubt of this being a summer encampment of the Romans, several hundredweight of scoria of iron, intermixed with charcoal, the socket of a spear, and other relics of that warlike people, having been found there.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey Fordineston was granted by the Conqueror to his half-brother, the Earl of Morton, and was divided into two lordships. One contained 3 hides and 1 virgate, and the other 1 virgate. Before the Conquest 1½ hide had been the freehold of Uleric, and Orgar, Tedgar, and Godric held the remainder. All lay within the soke of Fawsley. In the reign of Henry II. the first of these lordships was in the hands of the king, and the second was held by William de Strafford of Hervicus Belet. In the reign of Henry III. the superior lord of Farthingstone appears to have been Richard de Keynes, the grandson of William de Keynes, who took King Stephen prisoner at the battle of Lincoln. Walter de Gaddesden was certified to be possessed of this lordship in the beginning of Edward I.'s reign, and Robert de Grimescot to hold 8 virgates of the fee of Belet. The lordship then contained 4 hides, formed a part of the fee of Leicester, owed suit and service to the hundred of Fawsley, and paid a rent of 26s. per annum to the king. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), Richard de Bray and Richard Lovell were lords of this manor. It afterwards passed through several hands, and was sold by Sir Charles Shuckburgh to James Hawley, Esq., M.D., of Leybourn Grange, Kent. Dr Hawley was succeeded in 1777 by his son Henry Hawley, Esq., who was created a baronet in 1795, and from him the title and estate descended, in 1831, to Sir Joseph Henry Hawley, Bart., the present lord of the manor, who was born in 1815. The Manor-House, now a farmhouse, stands at the entrance to the village.

The Village of Farthingstone is pleasantly situated on a slight eminence about 6 miles S.E. from Daventry and 7 N.W. of Towcester, 4 from the Weedon Station, and 10 from Northampton.

The Church, which was restored and reseatd in 1852, is dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; it is situated in the village, and consists of a tower containing five bells, nave, south porch, and chancel. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Weedon, rated in the king's books at £13, 18s. 11½d., and its gross income is £275 per annum. The patronage is vested in the Bishop of Peterborough, and the Rev. Amos Westoby, M.A., is the present incumbent. The rectory consists of 187a. 1r. 20p., allotted in lieu of glebe lands and tithes; and the Rectory House stands south of the churchyard.

There is a small Baptist Chapel in the village, erected in 1846.

The Sunday-school is endowed with the interest of £233, 6s. 8d., 3 per cent. consols, left by Sir John Knightley, Bart., in 1802.

Post-Office.—George Castle, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Weedon via Litchborough at 8.45 A.M., and are despatched at 4.45 P.M.

Buswell Jno. plumber & grazier
Castle Geo. boot & shoemaker,
P.O. and shopkeeper
Chambers Joseph, butcher
Chambers Vincent, blacksmith
Darby Wm. stonemason, grocer and vict. King's Arms
Fields Wm. harness maker
Judkins Mrs Ann

Stamp Robert, tailor
Welsh Charles, surgeon
Westoby Rev. Amos, M.A.,
rector
Wilson William, parish clerk

Farmers and Graziers.

Chambers Quintus
Chambers Robert

Earl William
Goff John
Haynes Thomas
Hurley John
Hurley John Albert
Hurley William (and builder)
Hurley William, jun.
Poole Thomas

Carrier to Northampton.—John Masters, on Saturday.

FAWSLEY PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the east by Everdon, by Preston Capes and Charwelton on the south and west, and by Badby and Newnham on the north. It contains 1794 acres; and its population in 1801 was 29; in 1831, 22; in 1841, 48; in 1851, 48; in 1861, 64; and in 1871, 46 souls. The gross estimated rental is £3027, and the rateable value £2691. The soil is a rich deep loam, and the entire lordship is laid down in rich pasturage, except about 47 acres, which are arable.

Manor.—The king himself held the manor of Falewesle, which contained 1½ and one-fifth part of a hide, at the time of the Norman survey. It was rated then, as in the time of the Confessor, at £15. In the reign of Henry II. the king held 2 hides of land at Fawsley. In the reign of King John it was granted in fee-farm to Hugh Russell, the yearly rent of £15 being reserved out of it to the crown. This Hugh obtained a grant for a weekly market to be held here every Sunday, in the 8th of Henry III. (1224), but it was afterwards changed to

Thursday. Hugh de Capes, great-grandson of the said Hugh Russell, died seized of this manor in the 40th of Henry III. (1256), and was succeeded in it by Thomas, his son, who sold it to Simon, the son of Robert de Daventre, sometimes called Simon de Fawesley. In the 10th of Richard II. (1387), John de Fawesley alienated it to John de Watham, clerk, afterwards Bishop of Salisbury, who granted it in the 16th of the same reign to Geoffrey de Somerton. In the 3d of Henry V. (1416), Richard Knightley, Esq., and Elizabeth, his wife, purchased it of the said Geoffrey, and he afterwards added the manors of Hellidon and Upton with the hundred of Newbottle-grove. This Richard Knightley was descended from an ancient family in Staffordshire, who took their name from the manor of Knightley in that county, of which they had been possessed from the 20th of William the Conqueror. In the 10th of Henry VII. (1494), Richard, the grandson of the purchaser of Fawsley, was knighted, and his son and heir, Sir Richard Knightley of Upton, surviving him but three years, and leaving no male issue, the family estates passed to his next brother, Sir Edmund Knightley, a lawyer of considerable eminence, one of the commissioners for inspecting the religious houses previous to their dissolution, and a sergeant-at-law. Sir Richard dying without issue, the inheritance devolved on his next brother, Sir Valentine Knightley, who was knighted in the 1st of Edward VI. (1547); and his son and successor, Sir Richard Knightley, was dubbed a knight at Fotheringay by the Earl of Leicester in the 8th of Elizabeth (1566). This Sir Richard partitioned his several manors and estates between his sons; the manor of Fawsley descended to his son Sir Valentine, after whose decease without male issue a portion of his estate descended to his three daughters and co-heiresses; but the manors of Fawsley and Snorscomb passed to his brother Edward's son and heir, Richard Knightley, Esq. of Preston Capes, who died in 1639, having by entail and will devised these estates to Richard Knightley, Esq. of Burgh Hall, Staffordshire, son of Sir Richard's brother Thomas in tail-male. "He was an active adherent of the Parliament from the commencement of the struggle with the crown, and his eldest son, Richard, having married the daughter of the celebrated John Hampden, and thus become allied also to the protectorate house of Cromwell, the ties of social connection were superadded to the force of public principle, and produced one of the most formidable private combinations of that eventful period. At Fawsley the plan is said to have originated for retrenching the royal prerogative by depriving the crown of the right of making peace or war, and placing the royal revenues under the direction of four councils, to be appointed by Parliament, which was to meet annually without summons from the sovereign, and to have the control of the militia, and the disposal of all places of trust and profit. He died in 1650, having been a leading member of all the local committees nominated by Parliament for this county, as was also his son and successor, Sir Richard Knightley, K.B. He did not, however, sanction the trial and execution of the King; and in 1660 was one of the council of state which promoted the recall of Charles II., who at the Restoration received him into favour, and made him one of the Knights of the Bath previous to the coronation" (Baker). Richard, his eldest son, died unmarried in 1665, when this estate devolved upon Essex Knightley, Esq., son of Sir Richard by his second wife, on whose decease Fawsley and the entailed estates in this county became vested in his uncle, Devereux Knightley, Esq. After the decease of Devereux Knightley, Esq., son of the above-named Devereux, in 1695 unmarried, the manor of Fawsley and the family estates passed to his first cousin, Lucy Knightley, who died unmarried in 1726. Lucy Knightley, Esq., son of Valentine Knightley, died without issue in 1791, leaving Fawsley and the family estates to his brothers Valentine, John, and Charles in tail-male. Valentine Knightley, Esq., having died unmarried in 1796, the estates descended to Sir John, who was created a baronet in 1798. Sir John, dying without male issue in 1812, was succeeded by his nephew Sir Charles Knightley, D.C.L., eldest son of the Rev. Charles Knightley, by the only daughter of Henry Boulton, Esq. of Moulton, Lincolnshire. He was born in 1781, married in 1813 the eldest daughter of F. L. Hervey, Esq. of Englefield Green, Surrey, grandson of the first Earl of Bristol. Sir Charles was a deputy lieutenant of the county, and for many years M.P. for South Northamptonshire. He died in 1864, and was succeeded by his son, Sir Rainald Knightley, third baronet, and the present lord of the manor. Sir Rainald was born in 1819, married in 1869 Louisa Mary, daughter of the late Sir E. Bowater. He is J.P. and D.L. for Northamptonshire, and M.P. for the Southern Division of the county. Family residence, Fawsley Park.

There is no village in this parish ; it contains but four houses altogether.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands a short distance east of the Hall, and is a handsome structure, consisting of a nave and side aisles, south porch and chancel, and a tower containing four bells. The interior is fitted up with extreme neatness ; it is pewed with oak, in the panels of which are introduced some of the ancient grotesque carving from the ends of the old seats. All the windows are of stained glass. The living is a vicarage in the Deanery of Daventry, rated in the king's books at £7, 9s. 7d., now valued at about £100 a year ; it is in the patronage of Sir Rainald Knightley, Bart., and incumbency of the Rev. Philip William Story, B.A., for whom the Rev. P. W. Story, B.A., officiates. The church was granted to the Daventry Priory by King Henry II. ; at the dissolution it fell into the hands of the crown, and was subsequently granted to the Knightley family. The endowment of the vicarage anciently consisted of Cyric seat, church scot or church seed, which was an offering of the first-fruits of harvest, ordained by Ina, King of the West Saxons, in the seventh century, and subsequently confirmed by Kings Edgar and Canute, to be paid yearly at St Martin's Mass. This tribute was paid to the church of Fawsley by all the neighbouring parishes, but when the custom of paying it ceased is not known. The church contains several very fine monuments of the Knightley family.

Fawsley Hall, or the Manor-House, the seat of Sir Rainald Knightley, Bart., M.P., was built in the reign of Henry VII., and is an extensive and imposing structure. It has been the residence of the Knightley family for four centuries, and is situated on a gently elevated lawn commanding a very extensive and beautiful prospect, the foreground of which is enlivened by two fine sheets of water. In this mansion is a magnificent Gothic hall, 54 feet long, 24 feet wide, and 43 feet high, with an open timber roof. There are several interesting family and other portraits in the mansion ; the windows of the hall and breakfast parlour are filled with heraldic alliances, and at the south end of the hall is the family achievement, marshalling no less than 334 quarterings. The Park, including Badby Wood, extends over nearly 700 acres : it is well stocked with deer, and the prospect from some parts of its diversified surface is truly delicious. Here are evident traces of an ancient encampment, and the picturesque ruins of the Lodge, once the residence of some of the members of the Knightley family.

Eminent Men.—John Dod, M.A., a learned Puritan divine, generally styled the Decalogist, from his celebrated exposition of the ten commandments, was born in Cheshire in 1555 ; resided here for several years, under the patronage of the Knightley family, and was vicar of Fawsley. He was several times silenced for Nonconformity, and published the "Plain Exposition of the Ten Commandments," "An Exposition of the Book of Proverbs," and several sermons. His sayings acquired great provincial celebrity, and were printed in various forms. He died in 1645. John Wilkins, D.D., a learned prelate and practical philosopher of the 17th century, was born here in 1614, in the house of the above-named Rev. John Dod. He was vicar of his native place, but afterwards joined the Presbyterians, and took the Solemn League and Covenant. He married Robina, widow of Peter French, and sister of Oliver Cromwell, then Lord Protector, and obtained the mastership of Trinity College, Cambridge, from which he was ejected at the Restoration. He was afterwards Dean of Ripon, and in 1668 elevated to the bishopric of Chester. He died at the house of his friend, Dr Tillotson, in London, in 1672. He encouraged the study of astronomy, published a work entitled "The Discovery of a New World," and other works ; was reputed a good mathematician, and published "Mathematical Magic," and several sermons and discourses.

Knightley Sir Rainald, Bart., M.P., Fawsley Hall	Waters Richard, land agent to Sir Rainald Knightley Johnson John, farmer	Handley James, gardener Miller James, woodman
--	--	--

HELLIDON PARISH.

Hellidon, Eliden, Helidane, or Halidon, which lies in a sequestered and hilly district, abounding with beautiful views of the surrounding country, is bounded on the north by Newbold Grounds and Catesby, on the south by Charwelton, on the west by Priors Marston, in Warwickshire, and on the north-west by Shuckburgh, in the same county. It contains 1536 acres; and its population in 1801 was 340; in 1831, 426; in 1841, 397; in 1851, 397; 1861, 449; and in 1871, 379 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £2454, and the gross estimated rental £2907. The soil of the upper parts of the parish is a light red land, and of the lower a deep loam and clay; about a third of the whole is arable; and George Attenborough, Esq. (the lord of the manor), Robert Canning, Esq., Rev. John Storer, M.A., and Sir Francis Shuckburgh, are the principal proprietors. "Rydon Hill, a hill near Hellidon," says Morton, "if you take in its several stations, has the most extensive view of all the high hills adjoining. Thence you see the Malvern Hills with ease, when the eye is assisted with a glass, and 'tis thought, may descry the Wrekin in Shropshire." The river Leam rises at the foot of a small hill close to the eastern entrance to the village of Hellidon, and forms a considerable basin, called Leam Pool; from whence, after being augmented by several rills in this lordship, Staverton, and Catesby, it enters Warwickshire, and after naming two towns, Leamington Hastang and Leamington Priors, now a place of fashionable resort for its saline waters, flows into the lesser Avon near Warwick. There are also several other springs in the parish.

Manor.—Hellidon is not mentioned in Domesday Book, and its history prior to the reign of Henry II. is buried in obscurity. At this time, however, we find that it contained 4 hides of land of the fee of Berkhamstead. In the reign of Henry III., Roger de Baskerville held half an knight's fee here of the Honor of Clare, of which Richard de Clare, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford, was the superior lord. In the 9th of Edward II. (1316), John Gifford and Roger de Baskerville were certified to be lords of Hellidon. In the 13th of Edward III. (1340), John Gifford levied a fine of this manor, and accounted for one knight's fee here in the 20th of this reign. In the 17th of Richard II. (1394), Richard Gifford and Joan his wife levied a fine of it, and in the 10th of Henry IV. (1409), Roger Gifford, Esq., died seized of it. In the 8th of Henry VI. (1430), Thomas Gifford, Esq. of Twyford, was lord of Hellidon, and from him it lineally descended to Ursula, daughter and heiress of Thomas Gifford, Esq., and wife of Sir Thomas Wenman; Sir Thomas sold it, in 1556, to Robert Glover of Hellidon, and it has since been alienated in parcels.

The lordship, which in Edward II.'s time was in the possession of Roger de Baskerville, and which was henceforth called Baskerville Manor, descended to Sir Walter Baskerville, his eldest son, who was succeeded by John, his son, who died in the forty-eighth of Edward III. (1375). By inquisition taken at his death, this lordship appears to have been then held of the Baron of Brimmersfield, a descendant of Gilbert, the last Earl of Clare, by the service of a rose, presented annually upon the feast of St John the Baptist. John, his son and heir, dying in infancy, the manor was restored to his paternal aunt, Margaret, wife of Robert Foulehurst, in whose line it continued till the death of William Foulehurst, without issue, in the eighteenth of Henry VI. (1440), when it vested in Sir John Baskerville, who sold it in the following year to Richard Knightley, Esq. of Fawsley. Sir Valentine Knightley sold it to John Lambert, Gent., who died seized of it in the forty-fourth of Elizabeth (1602); and in 1613, Richard, his son and successor, sold it to John Ball, Gent. From him it passed to his nephew, George Mariott, Gent., who died in 1622, and from whose son or immediate successor it was alienated to the Onleys of Catesby, of which family both Catesby and Hellidon were purchased by John Parkhurst, Esq. Upon the death of John George Parkhurst, his successor, it devolved upon his nephew and heir, Charles Parkhurst, Esq. of Catesby, who, dying in 1824, devised this manor with that of Catesby to George Charles Parkhurst Baxter, Esq. (son of Mrs Baxter, daughter of the late J. G. Parkhurst, Esq.) The present possessor is George Attenborough, Esq. The Gifford Manor-House stood in a field called Woodhill, at the east entrance to the village, and the Baskerville Manor-House, now a farmhouse, is at the west end.

The Village of Hellidon is situated on an eminence about 5 miles S.W. of Daventry, 14 N.E. by N. from Banbury, and 17 N.W. by W. from Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, stands on a steep ascent in the village, and consists of a nave, chancel, and tower, in which are four bells. The east window in the chancel is filled with stained glass. The living is a discharged vicarage in the Deanery of Daventry, rated at £20, and now worth about £100. It was augmented with £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty in 1756, with which 8 acres of land have been purchased at Welford; and the commissioners allotted about 60 acres to the vicar in lieu of tithes. The Rev. Charles Scrafton Holthouse, M.A., is the present patron and incumbent.

There is a small Wesleyan Chapel in the village, which was built in 1813.

The School is endowed with a rent-charge of £20 a year, left by John Ball, Esq., in 1618. It has been rebuilt and enlarged by subscription, at a cost of £250, and the Rev. Sir John Knightley left the interest of £200 in aid of the Sunday-school in 1802.

Post-Office.—Thomas Billingham, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Daventry at 8.15 A.M., and are despatched at 5.30 P.M. The nearest money-order office is at Priors Marston.

Allibone Job, higgler
 Billingham Thos. postmaster
 Branson Thos. parish clerk
 and shopkeeper
 Canning Robert, Esq. Hellidon House
 Davis Rev. — curate
 Edmunds Mrs Jane, vict.
Barley Mow
 Edwards Miss Matilda
 Gilbert Mr Richard
 Gilks Mrs Ann, baker & miller

Gilks Edw. Aris, shopkeeper
 Gossage Robert, shoemaker
 Gossage William, shopkeeper
 Haycock John, butcher
 Haycock Richard, carpenter and wheelwright
 Haycock Thos. wheelwright
 Haycock William, victualler,
Red Lion
 Haynes Wm. blacksmith
 Holthouse Rev. Charles Scrafton, M.A., vicar

Storer Rev. John, M.A.
 Watkins Charles, carpenter
 Watson Ephraim, school-master & assistant overseer
 Wells William, shoemaker
 Williams William, stonemason
 Winkless John, tailor

Farmers and Graziers.

Haynes John, Manor-House
 Turner William

Carrier to Leamington.—Richard Bates, Tuesday and Saturday.

KILSBY PARISH

Is bounded by Watford on the east, on the north by Crick, on the west by Hill Morton, in Warwickshire, and by Ashby St Legers on the south. It contains 2274 acres, and its population in 1801 was 703; in 1831, 690; in 1841, 655; in 1851, 635; in 1861, 539; and in 1871, 501 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £8722, and the gross estimated rental £10,161. The soil of the lower parts is a strong deep loam on a clay bottom, and of the higher grounds a light loam on a gravelly bottom. The greatest part of the lordship is in pasture. There is excellent gravel in the parish, which is also plentifully supplied with springs. Range brook is the boundary for some distance between this county and Warwickshire; Ashby brook divides in this lordship, and sends one of its streams to Warwick and the other to Northampton; another brook separates this parish from Barby; and a fourth brook divides it from Crick, and enters the Avon at Dove bridge. The Oxford Canal passes through the parish, and the ancient Watling Street forms its western boundary. The parish is also intersected by the London and North-Western Railway, which here passes through the well-known Kilsby tunnel, 2400 yards, or nearly 1½ mile in length, 25 feet in breadth, and 28 feet high. It penetrates Kilsby Hill, the high terminus of a ridge of hills running towards Banbury; it is the largest tunnel on the line, and is considered a masterpiece of engineering skill and workmanship. It is ventilated by two large shafts, each 60 feet in diameter, one 120 feet deep, the other 90 feet. These ventilators answer their purpose admirably, for in a few minutes after an engine and train has passed through, the vapour is carried up the shafts, and the tunnel is rendered so clear, that the one end may be seen from the other. Difficulties of an unusual character presented themselves during the completion of this tunnel. These arose from the existence of an extensive quicksand in the line of the tunnel. Extra shafts were sunk, and four powerful pumping engines erected, which continued to pump from the quicksand for six months, with scarcely a day's intermission, at the rate of 1890 gallons per minute, till at length the difficulty of tunnelling in the sand was reduced, though the operation was still one of extreme difficulty and danger. With the exception of the quicksand, it is cut through a succession of the hardest rocks, and its cost was £300,000. Mr Stephenson was the engineer.

Manor.—The monks of the Abbey of Coventry held two hides of land in Chidesbi at the time of the Domesday survey, which they received from Leofric Earl of Mercia in the reign of Edward the Confessor; the Bishop of Lincoln held them in the reign of Henry II.; and in the 9th year of Edward II. (1316), he was the lord of Kildesby. In the 3d of Edward III. (1330), Henry Burghesh, Bishop of Lincoln, being called to show cause why he claimed the goods of felons, view of frank-pledge, assize of bread and beer, &c., within the manor of Kilsby, pleaded that the king, out of devotion to the Blessed Virgin, the patroness of the church of Lincoln, and his special regard for the claimant, had granted and confirmed these liberties to that see. The manor continued an appendage to the see of Lincoln till the 1st of Edward VI. (1547), when the then bishop conveyed it with several other manors in various counties in exchange to the king in fee. James I. granted it to George and Thomas Whitmore, Esquires, in 1610; and in the 23d of Charles I. (1647) it was purchased by Daniel Reading, Gent., of Northampton, for £500. It was afterwards sold in parcels to several persons; and L. C. Arnold, Esq., and T. R. Colledge, Esq., M.D., are the present lords of the manor, conjointly. Messrs John Cowley, T. H. Cowley, T. R. Cowley, and several resident yeomen have estates here. A considerable portion of the lordship is copyhold.

The Manor-House is supposed to have stood in the Hall Close, north of the churchyard. Bridges says, "There is a place in this lordship called Gallows Bank, which according to tradition had anciently a gallows standing there, as it is said that the lords of Kilsby had the privilege of trying and executing felons within their manor. In the town there is a spot of ground called Malt-Mill Green, where the lord's mill was formerly placed, and at which every tenant was obliged to grind his malt and pay toll; and the town bakehouse and oven are still standing at a corner of a close, called the Hall Close, where, according to old custom, the tenants were wont to bake their bread;" but these buildings and customs have long since disappeared.

The Village of Kilsby, which is large and dispersed, is situated on an eminence on the turnpike road to Lutterworth, about 5½ miles N. by W. of Daventry, and 15 from Northampton. Courts-leet and baron are annually held here.

The Church, dedicated to St Faith, is a handsome structure, consisting of a north aisle and chapel, south aisle and porch, nave, chancel, and tower in which are four bells and a clock, and surmounted by a low octagonal spire. The edifice, which was much mutilated, was restored in 1869 at a cost of about £1200. The north chapel is separated from the aisle by a low arch, and a portion of the north aisle is appropriated as a burial-place to the Cowley family of this parish. The living is a discharged vicarage in the Deanery of Daventry, rated in the king's books at £7. It has lately been augmented by a grant from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and is now valued at £300 per annum. The patronage, formerly attached to the precentorship of Lincoln Cathedral, is now vested in the Bishop of Peterborough.

The present vicar is the Rev. Anthony Bunting, B.A. The Commissioners of Enclosure allotted to the precentor or chanter of Lincoln, with the prebend of Kilsby annexed, 317a. 8p. in lieu of glebe lands, tithes, and moduses, of which about 28 acres were sold to defray his share of the expenses of the act; and in lieu of the great tithes of the demesne lands of the manor they allotted 35a. 1r. 17p. to the prebend of Lincoln, who sold about 2½ acres to defray his share of the expenses of the said act. The vicarage received an augmentation in 1768 of £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty, with which 7a. 2r. 17p. were purchased from the lessee of the precentor; and the Commissioners of Enclosure allotted 76a. 2r. 28p. in lieu of glebe and vicarial tithes. A small tithe of a few orchards and gardens was commuted in 1845 for £2, 10s.

The Independent Chapel, erected in 1765, is a stone building which will seat about 400 persons; the Rev. William Edwards is the present minister. The interior of the chapel has been much improved; and the vestry, which has been enlarged, is now used as a day-school.

A National School was erected in 1872 at a cost of £270.

Charities.—Moses Cowley left about 5 acres of land in Lilbourne in 1714, which yields about £16 a year, to be expended upon bread for the poor, and educating poor children; and the rent of the poor's close, containing about 6a. 1r. 39p., which now lets for £19, is distributed yearly amongst the poor at Christmas.

Post, Money-Order, & Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank.—John Masters, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Rugby at 4.30, and are despatched at 8.50 P.M.

Bird John, vict. Devon Ox	Iliff Mrs Ann	Waters Joseph R. wheelwright and carpenter
Bracebridge Mr Chas. Edward	Loomes Mrs Eliz. shopkeeper	Wolfe Mrs Criscilla
Bunting Anthony, B.A. vicar	Lucas Wm. butcher & grazier	Woodford, Wm. James, baker and grocer
Chambers Wm. blacksmith	Masters John, rate-collector, post-office
Cherry, Eliz. vict. George	Montgomery Mr William	Farmers and Graziers.
Clarke Miss Ann	Odey Mr John, jun.	(Marked * are yeomen.)
Clarke Mr Thomas	Paterson, Mrs Matilda	*Ashby John
Cooke Thos. B. butcher and shopkeeper	Piercy Mrs Mary	Cowley Mrs Ann
Cowley Mr John Charles	Regester John, tailor	Cowley John, Kilsby Grange
Crooke Jas. Wm. plumber, &c.	Simmons Mr William	*Cowley John Roberts
Edwards Rev. Wm. Independt.	Sleath John, shoemaker	*Cowley Thomas Hall
Esson Miss Ann, ladies' school	Sleath William, shoemaker and parish clerk	Howes Mark
Esson Miss Maria	Timms Mrs, Independt. school-mistress	Johnstone Mrs Sarah Eliza
Frisby Sam. vict. Red Lion	Turner Mr George	Lickorish Joshua
Goodman Sam. carpenter	Vann Rich. Moreton, butcher and grazier	Mountford John
Hall Mr John	Warwick Wm. grocer & draper	*Odey John
Hodson John, saddler		*Sale Richard
Hopkins Richard, baker, corn-miller, and grazier		Wiggins Robert

The nearest railway station is Crick, about 3 miles distant.

Carriers.—Thomas Crook, to Rugby, on Tuesday; Daventry, Wednesday and Saturday; and Lutterworth, Thursday. Thomas Gardner, to Rugby, Tuesday and Saturday; Daventry, Wednesday; and Lutterworth, Thursday.

LITCHBOROUGH PARISH.

Litchborough, Lichborough, or, as it is called in Domesday Book, Liceberge, signifying a cemetery or burial-place, is bounded on the north by Stowe, from which it is separated by Stow brook, on the east by Cold Higham, on the south by Blakesley, and on the west by Maidford. It contains 1704 acres (exclusive of 54 acres belonging to it in the adjoining manor of Foxley), of the rateable value of £3203; the gross estimated rental is £3525; and the population in 1801 was 302; in 1831, 415; in 1841, 408; in 1851, 418; in 1861, 449; and in 1871, 378. The soil varies from clay and loam to a light red land; about three-fourths of the lordship is in permanent pasture, and there are several springs, one of which, Willpile Spring, is slightly chalybeate. The principal owners are Arthur William Grant, Esq., William Blake, Esq. (lord of the manor), the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy, the Executors of the late Charles Watts, Rev. H. H. Bridgewater, and the Trustees of Buckby and Bilton Schools.

Manor.—Liceberge contained 4 hides of land at the time of the general survey, which were in the possession of the Abbey of Evesham in Worcestershire. Levenot was the Saxon proprietor, and they were valued in the Confessor's time at 40s., and now rated at the same valuation. In the reign of Henry II., these 4 hides were in the possession of Hugh le Poer or Poher, and were held by his successors of the fee of William de Stutevill. From Hugh le Poher this estate descended to Hugh de Mortimer, and in the third year of the reign of Edward I. (1275), Robert his son succeeded him. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), Richard Malore was lord of the manor of Litchborough; and dying in the third of Edward III. (1330), he was succeeded by his only son, Peter, a minor. Sir William Pateshull, Knight, died seized of certain lands and tenements here in the thirty-third of Edward III. (1360), and leaving no issue, his sisters became his heirs, when his possessions in this parish were allotted to Thomas de Fauconberge, the son of Maude, his younger sister by Walter de Fauconberge. In the seventh of Henry VII. (1492), Roger Salisbury, Esq., died possessed of 3 messuages, 80 acres of arable land, 20 acres of meadow, and 10 acres of pasture in Litchborough, which were held of John Leeke by fealty and the annual payment of a peppercorn. The manor seems to have continued in the possession of the Malores till the fourth of Henry VII., when it was forfeited into the hands of the king by John Malore, and restored upon his decease to Thomas Malore, Esq., in the thirteenth of Henry VIII. (1522). From this family it passed to Sir John Nedham, Knight, one of the queen's gentlemen-pensioners. Daniel Nedham, son of Sir John, sold it, in 1699, to George Smith, Gent., of Everdon, who conveyed it, in 1706, to the Rev. George Butler, the trustees under whose will sold it, in 1729, to Hannibal Roussey, Esq. From his daughters it passed by purchase, in 1768, to John Darker, Esq. of Gayton; whose grand-daughter Mary, daughter and heiress of John Nash, Esq., carried it in marriage to the present possessor, William Blake, Esq. of Welwyn, in Hertfordshire. St James' Abbey, near Northampton, had possessions in this parish; and the Priory of Canons Ashby had 3 virgates and 20 acres in demesne from Hugh Russell, on condition that a priest should say mass every day for his soul.

The Village of Litchborough stands about two miles east of the Chester road, and six miles N.W. from Towcester, seven from Daventry, and ten from Northampton. "Lichborrow," says Bridges, "is now a village of sixty-four houses, but it is reported to have been formerly a place of greater consideration, and was probably one of the four British garrisons said to have been taken by the Saxons in 571."

The Church, dedicated to St Martin, stands near the centre of the village, on a slight elevation, and consists of a nave, south aisle, porch, and chancel, and a tower containing three bells. The interior is well paved, and pewed with oak; in some of the windows are slight remains of painted glass; and Mr Grant placed the arms of Grant and Ives in the east window of the aisle some years since. There are also two handsome memorial painted windows, placed by the Grant family. There is a stone seat, piscina, and square locker in the chancel. The church was repaired, and a gallery added, in 1842. Among the monuments are an altar tomb to Sir John Nedham, who died in 1618, bearing an alabaster figure of a knight in plate armour: his plumed helmet supports his head; at his left side is a sword, and in his right hand his leading staff; and a small monument of white marble with a black pyramidal background to Edward and Jane Grant, who died in 1811 and 1812. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Weedon, rated in the king's books at £16, 9s. 7d., and now worth £564, 6s. yearly, exclusive of residence, 21 acres of glebe, and tithe rent-charge, commuted in 1845. The Rev. Wm. Addington Taylor, B.A., is the present patron and incumbent.

The Rectory House is situated east of the church, and is now (1873) being repaired by the rector.

Litchborough House, the seat of Arthur William Grant, Esq., stands in the village, and was formerly the residence of the family of Leake, who had an estate here in the fifteenth century. On the staircase is a full-length portrait of Sir John Nedham in armour, holding his staff of office as gentleman-pensioner.

The Baptists have a chapel here, built in 1862 at a cost of about £200.

A memorial school to the late William Grant, Esq., of this parish, was built by subscription in 1870, at a cost of £500, including the cost of the site, &c. There is also a Sunday-school in the village, supported by subscription.

Charities.—Lady Katharine Leveson left to this parish the annual sum of £20 for two poor widows; £20 for apprenticing two poor boys; and also one-third of the surplus rents of her estate, after the payment of the several sums in her will, which is expended according to the discretion of the churchwardens, &c. Out of this surplus, £42, 8s. is annually expended on the rent of school-house and garden, and the master's salary. There is £60 a year from the Lady Alicia Dudley's, or the Bedford Charity, which, with the Foxley Charity, is devoted to the school and poor. The following ancient benefactions were left to the church and poor:—The town close, 17 acres, let for £27 per annum; the Gore Meadow, 6 acres, which yields £15, inclusive of tithes, &c.; and the Gore Close, 4 acres, let in allotments, which yield £7 per annum.

Post-Office.—Wall-box. Letters arrive from Weedon at 8.30 A.M., and the box is cleared at 5.30 P.M.

Adams Caleb, parish clerk
Alcock George, butcher
Barnes John, shopkeeper
Bedford Isaac, coal dealer
Bird Mrs Mary
Bromwich Thomas, beerhouse
Brown Mark, blacksmith
Carvell Richard, carpenter
Darby John, stonemason
Grant Arthur William, Esq.
Litchborough House

Howard Jno. vict. Old Red Lion
Howard Robert, builder
Howard William, baker
Jones William, saddler
M'Connell John, shoemaker
Minor Mrs Jane, coal dealer
Norris Edmund, shopkeeper
Norris Henry, shoemaker
Taylor Rev. Wm. Addington,
B.A., rector
Old Charles, shoemaker

Oliver John, miller, Foxley Mill
Wait Miss Sarah Anne
Farmers and Graziers.
Garlick John
Garratt Charles (and butcher)
Haynes William
Oliver James, Foxley
Messinger Richard
Savage George & William
Wait James
Wait Mrs William

NEWNHAM PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Daventry and Norton, on the east by Dodford, on the south by Everden, from which it is partly divided by the western branch of the Nene, and on the west by Badby. Newnham is considered a parochial chapelry in the parish of Badby, but in parliamentary returns it is recognised as an independent parish. It contains 1881 acres, and its population in 1801 was 302; in 1831, 415; in 1841, 583; in 1851, 579; in 1861, 514; and in 1871, 466 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3682, 5s. 11d., and the gross estimated rental £4170. The soil on the hills is sandy, and the other parts a rich loam; and the principal landowners are Rev. T. C. Thornton of Brockhall (lord of the manor), and Miss Ann Hickman of Newnham Hall. The greater part of the land is in permanent pasture, watered by the river Nene, which flows through the parish.

The lordship of Newnham being formerly a member of Badby, the early part of its manorial history has been anticipated in that parish. John Thornton, Esq., purchased it in 1634, and from him it has lineally descended to the present proprietor. The principal part of the lordship is copyhold. The Manor-House stood in the field contiguous to the south side of the churchyard, and was taken down about seventy years since. Newnham Wood lies northward of the village.

The Village of Newnham is pleasantly situated in a deep valley, entirely surrounded by hills, from the slopes and summits of which views of exceeding beauty are obtained. It is about 2½ miles S. by E. of Daventry, 3½ from the Weedon Station, 11 W. of Northampton, 11 N.N.W. of Towcester, and 16 N.N.E. of Banbury.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, consists of a nave, north and south aisles, south porch and chancel, and an embattled tower containing six bells, which chime at 3, 6, 9, and 12, and a clock, and is surmounted by a octagonal spire. The tower originally stood on four open arches, flanked by buttresses, which are now built up with rubble. The interior is only partially pewed, and some of the old parallel benches still remain. The nave is divided from the chancel by a Gothic wooden screen; at the east end of the south wall of the chancel are two stone seats and a piscina; and in most of the windows throughout the church are small insulated fragments of painted glass. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Badby, in the Deanery of Daventry; in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, and unitedly of the value of £400 a year. The present incumbent of Badby and Newnham is the Rev. William Scratton, M.A. The Commissioners of Enclosure allotted 183a. 3r. 24p. in lieu of the rectorial tithes, which are now included in the estate of the Rev. T. C. Thornton, the impropiator.

There is a small place of worship belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists in the village, built in 1845, and a Sunday-school, now used as a day-school, which is endowed with the interest of £140, 4s. 9d., left by the Rev. Sir John Knightley in 1802, and invested in the 3 per cent. consols, which yields £4, 4s. per annum. The other charity consists of £45, left by the late Mrs Oliver of Newnham in 1864, and invested in the consolidated 3 per cent. annuities, for the benefit of poor widows of this parish, and now yielding about £1, 11s. per annum.

Newnham Hall is the seat of Miss Ann Hickman.

Biography.—Thomas Randolph, the poet and dramatist, was born in this village, and baptized here on the 15th of June 1605. He was second son of William Randolph of Little Houghton, Gent., and was gifted with such extraordinary talent, that he is said to have written the history of the incarnation of our Saviour when but ten years old. He entered Westminster School as a king's scholar, from whence he was elected in 1623 to Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was a Fellow and M.A. He wrote "The Muses' Looking-Glass," and five other dramas, and his miscellaneous poems were held in high estimation. He died whilst on a visit to his friend, William Stafford, Esq. of Bletherwyck, and was buried there. Sir Christopher, afterwards Lord Hatton, of Kirby, erected a marble tablet to his memory in the church of that place.

Post-Office.—Wall-box. Cleared at 6.15 P.M.—Week-days only. Letters from Daventry at 7.30 A.M.

Adams Newman, butcher, grocer, and timber merchant
Bailey George, attorney's clerk
Frost John, gardener
Frost Rd. blacksmith & rate col.
Frost Mr Thomas
Haynes Mrs Ann, corn miller
Haynes George, vict. New Inn
Hickman Miss Ann, The Hall
Irons John, shoemaker
Johnson Joseph, parish clerk
Jones Mrs Harriet
Key Miss Eliz. Newnham Cot.

Miles Mrs Ellen, infant school
Norton Thomas, vict. Bakers'
Arms
Pittam Richard, carpenter
Russell Hy. carpenter
Russell Hy. coal dealer
Russell Jas. shopkeeper
Wagstaff Joseph, groom
West Mrs Maria, Newnham House
Wright John, grocer and baker
Wright Miss Martha, school-mistress

Farmers and Graziers.

(Marked thus * are yeomen.)

Frost Richard
Hazlewood Mrs Ann Eliz. Lee
Key John
Key Thomas
Longland Edw. (& cattle dealer)
Perkins George
*Perkins Thomas
*Reeve John
Russell Henry
Russell William
*Walker Joseph

NORTON PARISH.

This parish includes the hamlets of Thorp and Muscott, and is bounded on the east by Whilton, on the north by Long Buckby, on the west by Daventry, and on the south by Dodford. It contains, with its hamlets, 2926 acres, of the rateable value of £7191. The population in 1801 was 362; in 1831, 541; in 1841, 582; in 1851, 579; in 1861, 480; and in 1871, 443 souls; and the gross estimated rental is £7976. The soil varies from a clay or deep loam to a light red loam; the lordship is well supplied with springs, and the principal proprietors are Alfred Seymour, Esq. (the lord of the manor); Rev. T. C. Thornton of Brockhall, and Earl Spencer. In forming the London and North-Western Railway, several human skeletons were found in the vicinity of this parish; and in a field called Great Shawney, near the footpath to Whilton, in March 1813, a skeleton was discovered with the face downwards, and several Roman coins of the reigns of the Constantines. Norton Wood formerly skirted Borough Hill to the east, but has been brought into cultivation several years. The Watling Street Roman road passes through the lordship; about one half of which is rich pasturage, and the remainder arable and very fertile.

Manor.—The Earl of Mellent held $2\frac{1}{2}$ hides of land in Northon at the time of the Norman survey, which, with a mill of the yearly rent of 10s., and 25 acres of meadow, had been the freehold of Agemund before the Conquest, when it was valued at £6, but it was now advanced to £8. Robert Earl of Mellent attended the Conqueror in his expedition into England, and in the memorable Battle of Hastings, which gained him the kingdom, was the first who charged and broke the enemy's ranks with the regiment which he commanded in the right wing of the Norman army. In the reign of Henry II., these $2\frac{1}{2}$ hides and 2 virgates were held of the fee of Warwick: William, the then Earl of Warwick, being grandson to Henry de Newburgh, a younger brother to Robert Earl of Mellent, whom the Conqueror advanced to the Earldom of Warwick towards the latter end of his reign. In the reign of Henry III., the manor of Norton was sold by Roger de Whelton to William la Zouche, who gave it in marriage with his daughter to Robert de Mortimer, from whom it seems to have passed into the hands of William de Marchia, Bishop of Bath and Wells. Hugh de Mortimer, and Maud his wife, jointly purchased the manor of the said bishop, and it descended to their daughters Joan and Margaret. In the partition of the estates of Hugh de Mortimer, the manor of Norton, with several others, was assigned to Margaret, the wife of Geoffrey de Cornwall. In the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), John Golafre and Sybil, the widow of Richard, son of Geoffrey de Cornwall, accounted for one knight's fee in Norton as held of the fee of Warwick. The estate held by John Golafre appears to have continued with his descendants for several generations, and the manors of Norton and Thorp in the possessions of the family of De Cornwall up to the time of Henry VIII. In the eighteenth of this reign (1527), John Mauntell, Esq., died seized of a manor which he held of the king in capite, the estates of the earldom of Warwick having escheated to the crown by the death of Edward Plantagenet, the late Earl of Warwick, who was beheaded in the preceding year upon an accusation of high treason. This manor is supposed to have been the estate held by the Golafre family, and henceforth it was called the Mauntell's manor. John, a descendant of the above-named John Mauntell, having joined in the rebellion against Queen Mary, his estate became confiscated to the crown, and in 1557 this manor was sold by the commissioners to William Gent, Esq., together with another manor in Norton, which was part of the possessions of King Henry VIII.'s College, Oxford, and had belonged to the Priory of Daventry, lately suppressed. In the sixth of Elizabeth (1564), William Gent died seized of Mauntell's manor, Henry VIII.'s College manor, and one moiety of a third called Cornwall's manor. From this family they passed by purchase to Sir Richard Knightley of Fawsley, whose eldest son, Sir Seymour Knightley, sold them to Nicholas Breton, Esq., son of John Breton, Esq., of Tamworth, both officers in the army of Queen Elizabeth. Nicholas Breton was succeeded by his son John in 1624, and from this time the three manors were blended together under the general designation of the manor of Norton; and in 1800, the trustees of the late Michael Harvey Breton, Esq., sold it, together with the appropriate rectory of Norton, and about 940 acres of land, to Thomas Botfield, Esq., of Shropshire, who devised them to his third son, Beriah Botfield, Esq. This gentleman died in 1813, and was succeeded by his only son, Beriah Botfield, Esq., who died August 7, 1863, leaving his widow in possession, and by her it was carried in marriage to Alfred Seymour, Esq., the present lord of the manor.

The Village of Norton, containing several respectable farmhouses, is situate on a slight eminence about 2 miles E.N.E. of Daventry, 3 from Weedon, 12 from Northampton, 22 from Coventry, and 22 from Warwick.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands at the S.W. extremity of the village, and consists of a nave, side aisles, south porch, chancel, and embattled tower containing five bells. It was thoroughly repaired, and a new organ erected, about twenty-five years since. The interior is paved and pewed; at the west end is a gallery for the choir and charity children; at the east end of the north aisle is a piscina; and the chancel window and most of the other windows are enriched with stained glass. On the south wall is a monument in alabaster to the memory of Elizabeth Seymour (fourth daughter of the Protector Somerset, and second wife of Sir Richard Knightley, Bart., of Norton), who died in 1602. The pulpit, which is very old, is of curiously carved oak, and the chancel is separated from the nave by a wooden screen. The living is a vicarage in the Deanery of Daventry, now valued at £300 per annum. The Rev. Thomas Corser, M.A., is the present incumbent and patron. In the chancel is a beautiful monument to the memory of Mrs Charlotte Botfield, dated October 26, 1825. The late patron is represented (full length) weeping over the tomb of his deceased parent. The rectorial land consists of 184a. 35p., which is the property of the lord of the manor; and 47a. 36p. were allotted by the commissioners in 1756 in lieu of the vicarial tithes of the open fields of Norton; the old enclosures remaining tithable are now being commuted.

The Charity School, a neat Gothic building, in which 22 children are taught free, was erected in 1840, and is supported by Alfred Seymour, Esq., and the neighbouring gentry. There is likewise a small Methodist Chapel in the village.

Norton Hall, the seat of Alfred Seymour, Esq., M.P., is a fine mansion, greatly improved and modernised by Beriah Botfield, Esq., father of the late proprietor.

Charities.—The church and poor's estate, consisting of 27a. 2r. of land and 9 cottages, yields about £70 a year.

THORP.—The hamlet of Thorp or Thrupp-Grounds, as it is usually called, forms the northern division of this parish, and contains upwards of 700 acres, most of which belong to the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford. The soil varies from a black sand to a light gravel. The greater part of this lordship was formerly in the possession of the Priory of Daventry, and here was a chapel of ease to Norton Church, or chantry chapel of St John the Baptist, in a field called the Priory, now corrupted to the Biary meadow. In the fields here, for the space of upwards of 30 acres, thick foundation walls and fragments of ancient pottery have been frequently discovered; and human skeletons have also been occasionally found.

MUSCOTT or MUSCOTE is a hamlet, which in its ecclesiastical relations is dependent on Norton, to which it contributes poor and church rates; but in its civil capacity is a member of Brockhall parish. The hamlet contains nearly 270 acres of land, of which about 200 belong to Earl Spencer, and 70 to Rev. Thos. Cooke Thornton, son of the late T. R. Thornton, Esq.

Post-Office.—Wall-box. Cleared at 5.15 P.M. Letters are received through the Daventry post-office.

Collier Thomas, carpenter	Lowe Mrs, vict. New Inn ,	Bliss William
Corser Rev. Thos., M.A., vicar	Thrupp	Bromwich William
Faulkner Matthew, shoemaker	Peake Miss Jane, schoolmistress	Denny John, Muscott
Faulkner Stephen, shoemaker	Pebody Rd. tailor, Norton Lock	Edmunds Edmund, Thrupp
and parish clerk	Seymour Alfred, Esq., M.P.,	Edmunds John (and brick and Humphrey John, rate collector	Norton Hall	tile maker), Thrupp
Hyde Mrs Eliza, vict. White Horse	Yates John, farm bailiff	Humphrey William, Lodge
Industrial Co-operative Stores	Wright James, jun. carpenter	Litchfield William
(William Ballard, manager)	Farmers and Graziers.	Radburne Jno. (yoman), Thrupp
James Charles, blacksmith	Ashby Wm. (& miller) Muscott	Wait George, Borough Hill

Carrier to Daventry.—George Major, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, and to Northampton on Saturday.

PRESTON CAPES PARISH.

This parish includes Great Preston, West Preston or Preston-on-the-Hill, and Little Preston or Wood Preston. It is bounded on the north by Fawsley, on the east by Farthingstone and Maidford, on the west by Charwelton, and on the south by Canons Ashby. It contains 2696 acres, and its population in 1801 was 380; in 1831, 378; in 1841, 354; in 1851, 363; in 1861, 320, and in 1871, 283 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3252, and the gross estimated rental £3793. The soil is principally a deep loam, and the greater part of the lordship is in permanent pasture.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Alured held $1\frac{1}{2}$ virgates of land, and Nigel, $1\frac{1}{2}$ hides in Preston, of the Earl of Morton, the whole of which had been the freehold of Fregis before the Conquest, and had been valued at 6s., but was now advanced to 40s. Soon after the Conquest, Hugh de Leycester, who founded a priory adjoining his castle here, and then removed it to Daventry, was lord of the town and castle of Great Preston. In the reign of Henry III. the manor of Great Preston was purchased by Hugh de Capes, who obtained license from the Prior of Daventry to build a chapel within the said manor. From him it descended to Thomas de Capes, his son, who sold it to John Hylberd of Fawsley. The lordship of Little Preston appears at this time to have been held of the family of Montacute. In the 11th of Henry III. (1227) John de Montacute paid a fine of 40 marks for leave to inclose a park in Little Preston; and his successor, William de Montacute, accounted for half a fee in Little Preston, as held of the Honor of Aquila. "This William de Montacute," writes Mr Bridges, "in the 19th of the same reign, came to an agreement with the monks of Daventre, by which, for the benefit of his own soul, and the soul of Agnes his wife, he gave to the convent all the tithe-sheaves of his demesne lands in Little Preston, with all the small tithes, 4 acres and 2 rods of arable land, pasture for 2 cows and 25 sheep, with pannage or mast for 5 hogs, upon condition that they should provide him a chaplain to officiate daily in the chapel adjoining to his house in Little Preston, whenever he or his family should reside there. The chancel of this chapel was to be covered at the expense of the convent, and the body of it by William de Montacute and his heirs, and the chaplain was to eat at his table. This gentleman seems to have died without leaving any male issue behind him; for in the 4th year of Edward I., died Thomas de Audenham seized of this half fee in Little Preston, which he is certified to have held of the Honor of Aquila, and of the inheritance of Isabel his wife, whom I therefore apprehend to have been the daughter and heir of this William de Montacute." In the 32d of Edward I. (1304), John de Lyons held half a knight's fee in Preston Capes, of Thomas de Wahul, as of the fee of Wahul; and in the 9th of Edward II. (1316), Richard Francis de Athell and Margery de Lyons were certified to be the lords of the two Prestons. Sir John de Lyons levied a fine of the manor of Great Preston in the 20th of Edward III. (1347), and soon after conveyed it to Thomas de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, with whose descendants it continued till the 10th of Edward IV. (1471), when Richard Earl of Warwick and Salisbury, with Anne his wife, made a grant of it, with the manor-house and all the lands and tenements which they held in Preston, to the Dean and Chapter of the Collegiate Church of our Lady at Warwick, who levied a fine of them in the same year. Upon the dissolution of this Collegiate Church, in the 37th of Henry VIII. (1546), the manor of Preston Capes was granted to George Tresham and Edward Twynchi; the estates in this parish belonging to the monasteries of Kenilworth, Bittlesden and Canons Ashby, having been given in the previous year to Thomas Palmer and Lawrence Grey. In the 1st of Elizabeth (1558), they were all in the possession of William Butler, Esq., son of Thomas Butler, Esq., of Bewsey, in Lancashire. Richard Butler, his son and successor, sold it to Edward Knightley, Esq., the second son of Sir Valentine Knightley of Fawsley, in whose family it has been since, and is now in the possession of Sir Rainald Knightley, Bart., M.P., who owns the whole of the lordship, containing 1744 acres, except the vicarial estate of about 165 acres. To return to the manor of Little Preston: from the Montacute family it descended to the St Clere's, and their descendants, and in the 17th of Henry VIII. (1526), Thomas Chiprey, of Northampton, merchant, sold a moiety of it to Sir Andrew Windsor, afterwards created Lord Windsor. In the 13th of Elizabeth (1561), Peter Coles died seized of the manor, having purchased one moiety of it of Edmund Forde, Esq., of Harting, in Sussex, and the other moiety of Thomas Andrews, Esq., of Charwelton. Mary, the grand-daughter of this Peter Coles, brought it in marriage to Edward Knightley, Esq., who purchased the manor of Great Preston from Mr Butler. This lady married Sir Robert Beville, K.B., after the decease of Richard Knightley, and her son, Richard Knightley, Esq., in 1635, sold the reversion in fee of this manor for £1000, subject to the lives of himself and his wife Bridget, to his uterine brother, Sir Robert Beville, K.B., on whose decease in 1640, without issue, his three sisters and coheiresses became jointly entitled, and it was divided amongst their heirs or successors in 1701. Sir Henry Dryden, Bart., now possesses two parts of these estates, one of which descended lineally to him from Sir John Dryden, husband of Honor, one of the sisters and coheiresses of Sir Robert Beville.

The Castle of Hugh de Leycester stood on the hill at the entrance from Fawsley. Every vestige of this building has now disappeared, but the keep forms a prominent elevation. A short distance from it stood the mansion of the more modern lords, now degenerated into a farmhouse; and in the neighbourhood was a religious house, founded, as has been stated, by Hugh de Leycester, steward to Maud, the wife of Simon de St Liz, the first Earl of Northampton after the Conquest, for four monks; but the situation proving inconvenient, both from want of water, and its contiguity to the castle, it was removed to Daventry.

The Manor-House of Little Preston stood on the hill, north-east of the village; and the Chapel is supposed to have stood in a close called Graves Piece.

The Village of Preston Capes, so called to distinguish it from Preston Deanery, near Northampton, is situated on an eminence, from which there are good prospects, about five miles south of Daventry.

LITTLE PRESTON, a hamlet in this parish, about three-quarters of a mile from Great Preston, contains several respectable farmhouses.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, stands in the village, and is principally in the Perpendicular style of architecture. It consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch and chancel, with an embattled tower, containing a peal of five bells and a clock. Nearly the whole of the church is covered with ivy, which has all but reached the summit of the tower, and both in appearance and situation is highly picturesque. The church was restored in 1853, and reseated with handsomely carved open oak sittings. The flat roof of the chancel was also replaced by a high angular one; and the old chancel window was removed, and a handsome stained one substituted. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Daventry, rated in the king's books at £8, os. 5d., and now valued at £410 per annum; the patronage is vested in Sir Rainald Knightley, Bart., and the Rev. Valentine Knightley, M.A., is the present incumbent. On the enclosure of Great Preston, in 1659, an allotment of 110 acres was made to the vicar in lieu of the vicarial tithes and rights, and another of 54 acres in lieu of the rectorial tithes or parsonage impropriate. The tithes of Little Preston have been commuted for £200.

The Rectory House, which has been thoroughly repaired, adjoins the east end of the churchyard. The Wesleyans have a small place of worship here.

The School, a stone building erected in 1845, was enlarged in 1871, and will now accommodate 70 children. The Sunday-school is supported by the Rev. Valentine Knightley, M.A.

Antiquities.—Mr Baker discovered traces of the Roman road from Benna-venta or Isanavaria (near Daventry) to Brinavis (Chipping Warden), near the hill south of the church, where are vestiges of a foss and intrenchment.

Charities.—The school is endowed with £30 a year, the interest of £600 arising from the bequests of Richard Knightley, Esq., in 1637; Richard Knightley, Esq., in 1647; William Randall in 1653; Richard Butler, Peter Coles, and Erasmus Dryden; and the interest of £300 distributed annually to the poor, is derived from the same source. There is also a charity school for girls in the village, which is supported by Sir Rainald Knightley and the rector.

Post-Office.—William Bird, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Daventry at 9.15 A.M., and are despatched at 4.40 P.M.

Bailey Sarah, shopkeeper
Bird William, schoolmaster Knightley Rev. Val., M.A.,
rector
Sheppard Mrs Mary
Thompson Mr Samuel, *Little
Preston*
Underwood John, butcher and vict. Swan

Waples Samuel, shoemaker
Willoughby James, carpenter
Winkless Thomas, tailor

Farmers and Graziers.

Barrett Mrs Maria Anne, *Little
Preston*
Bromwich William

Flowers Edward (& steward to Sir Hy. E. L. Dryden, Bart.)
Flowers George, Little Preston
Goff George
Holton John, Little Preston
Howes William, Preston Fields
Johnson William
Jones Thomas, Preston Lodge
Willoughby Mrs, Little Preston

Carrier.—Hickman Herbert, to Daventry, Wednesday and Saturday.

STAVERTON PARISH.

This parish is situated on the borders of Warwickshire, from which it is divided by the river Leam, and is bounded on the north by Braunston, on the east by Daventry, on the south by Catesby, and on the west by Shuckburgh and Flecnoe, in Warwickshire. It contains 2086 acres, and its population in 1801 was 437; in 1831, 475; in 1841, 503; in 1851, 600; in 1861, 486; and in 1871, 478 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3757, 12s., and the gross estimated rental is £4396, 12s. The soil varies from a strong clay to loam on a substratum of shelly rock; the lordship is well supplied by springs rising within its own boundary; and the principal proprietors are Messrs Goodman and other resident yeomen. The greater part of the lordship is in permanent pasture.

Studbury Hill, in this parish, we are told by Bridges, "is judged to be the highest spot of ground in all England, and the conjecture is supported by this observation, that the rain-water which falls from this hill runs to three different points; part of it westward to the Leame, and thence into the western ocean; part eastward to the Nyne, and thence into the eastern sea, and part southward to the Cherwell, in which direction it continues for nearly thirty miles as far as Oxford, and there joins the Thames." But according to the Ordnance Survey, Arbury Hill, in Badby lordship, is eight feet, and Staverton Hill fourteen feet higher than Studbury Hill. That it is one of the highest eminences in this part of the kingdom is certain; but it can have no pretensions to rank in elevation with the mountainous tracts of the northern counties. The western branch of the river Nene has its source at Hartwell spring, in this parish, bordering on Badby.

Manor.—The Earl of Morton held 3 hides of land in Staverton, 1½ hides of which lay within the soke of Fawsley, at the time of the Conqueror's survey. Before the Conquest it was the freehold of Saulf, Edric, and Alwin, and had been valued at 40s., but was now rated at 60s. Hugh de Grentemaisnil held also 1 hide here at the same time, which had been the freehold of Baldwin, and valued at 15s. This hide, in the reign of Henry II., was held by William de Novofofo of the fee of Leicester; and Hugh de Grentemaisnil and Stephen de Welton possessed the other 3 hides of the fee of Roger de Mowbray, son of Nigel de Albini, who came to England with the Conqueror. These 3 hides passed afterwards into the possession of William de Stuteville, from whom the estate descended to his successors. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), William de Nevyll was lord of Staverton, and his successor, James de Nevyll, in the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), accounted for half a knight's fee, and three-eighth parts of a fee in Staverton. In the tenth of Edward I. (1282), Baldwin de Wake, a descendant of William de Stuteville, died seized of this estate, and was succeeded by John, his son and heir, whose two sons dying without issue, their inheritance descended to their sister Margaret, the widow of Edmund of Woodstock, Earl of Kent, and from her to John Plantagenet, Earl of Kent, her grandson. This John died in the twenty-sixth of Edward III. (1353), possessed of $3\frac{1}{2}$ knight's fees in Whilton and Staverton, which were held of him by the heirs of Roger de Welton, Eustace de Welton, Richard de Boltisham, and Robert de Mortimer. Upon the decease of Elizabeth Countess of Kent, widow of John Plantagenet, Earl of Kent, in the twelfth of Henry IV. (1411), the reversion of these $3\frac{1}{2}$ knight's fees in Whilton and Staverton fell to the heir of the Lady Joan, late Princess of Wales, his sister and heir. To her succeeded Thomas, her son by her first husband, Sir Thomas Holland, who, in the thirty-fourth of Edward III., assumed the title of Earl of Kent, in right of the said Joan, his wife. His two sons dying without issue, their five sisters became their heirs, and in the partition of the family estates, these $3\frac{1}{2}$ fees in Whilton and Staverton were allotted to Thomas Earl of Salisbury, the husband of Eleanor, the younger sister, who died seized of them in the seventh of Henry VI. (1429), and left them to Alice, his only daughter, whose husband, Richard Nevill, took the title of Earl of Salisbury. In the reign of Edward IV., we find the estates descended to the family of Beaufoy, who held them as of the manor of Melton Mowbray; and in the eighth of Henry VIII. (1517), John Beaufoy, Esq., died seized of the manor of Staverton. In the same year, Sir Richard Haddon, Knt., died seized of 6 messuages, 200a. of arable land, 40a. of meadow, 300a. of pasture, 40a. of wood, and 100a. of heath, of which 3 messuages and 200a. of arable land were held of this John de Beaufoy, Esq., by an unknown service, and the rest of the King, as of his Duchy of Lancaster. The manor of Staverton seems to have continued with the family of Beaufoy for a considerable time, as Thomas Horwood succeeded to a small estate here in the forty-fifth of Elizabeth (1603), which was certified to have been held of Thomas Beaufoy, Esq., as of his manor of Staverton. Henry Beaufoy, Esq., son of Thomas, levied a fine in 1656 of the manors of Whilton and Staverton, both of which were sold a few years afterwards. Samuel Theed, Gent., purchased the manor of Staverton of Simon Wyrley, Gent., about the year 1690, and one of his descendants alienated it; for in 1760 it belonged to William Daniel, Esq., of Southam, in Warwickshire, on whose decease, in 1774, it descended to his only child, the Rev. William Daniel, who died in 1817, and whose widow, about the year 1828, sold it to John Moore, Esq., from whom it passed to his nephew, George Moore, whose son, George, sold all his possessions in this parish in 1872 to divers purchasers.

The Priors of Daventry, Catesby, and Henwood, in Warwickshire, had each possessions in this parish previous to the dissolution of the monasteries.

The Manor-House of the Beaufoyes and Theeds is now reduced to a farmhouse.

The Village of Staverton or Stareton, which is very respectable, is situated on the turnpike-road to Southam and Warwick, about two miles S.W. of Daventry, and fifteen W. from Northampton. In 1720, a destructive fire occurred in the village, which, in about three hours, burnt twenty-two dwelling-houses, besides out-offices, &c., and destroyed property to the amount of nearly £3000.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands at the southern extremity of the village, and consists of a nave, north and south aisles and porches, chancel, and north chapel, and a handsome square embattled tower containing five bells and a clock. There are two elegant stained-glass windows, the gift of the Rev. J. Bull, late vicar; and in the north chapel is a handsome monument, with an inscription in brass, to the memory of Thomas Wylmer, gentleman, who died in 1580. The living is a discharged vicarage in the Deanery of Daventry, certified at £30, and now valued at about £650. It is in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, and incumbency of the Rev. Jacob Ley, B.D. The benefice consists of 276a. 6p. allotted by the Commissioners of Enclosure, in lieu of the rectorial and vicarial tithes, and 74a. 1r. 37p. in lieu of the glebe lands. The Vicarage House is a handsome building.

The Free School is endowed with 27a. 3r. of land, allotted by the commissioners in lieu of half-a-yardland left by Mrs Eliz. Darly, for teaching twenty poor children of the parish, and which the Rev. Fras. Baker, by deed of 5th February 1767, the then vicar, conveyed for that purpose to certain trustees. The land lets for about £66 per annum. Miss Catherine Burbidge's legacy of £100 for educational purposes was laid out in the purchase of a house and a small piece of ground for the schoolmaster. In consideration of this endowment, the master teaches twenty-five children free. The other Charities are—the poor's land, consisting of 11a. 3r., which lets for £31, 9s. ; Mr Wm. Thos. Grooby's charity of £100, left to the poor in 1767 ; and the interest of £200, bequeathed by the Rev. Sir John Knightley to the Sunday-school in 1802.

Post-Office.—Simon Worley, Beasley sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Daventry at 7.15 A.M., and are despatched at 6.40 P.M. The nearest money-order office is Daventry.

Baseley Thomas, shoemaker
Branson James, tailor
Bulliman Wm. coal dealer, &c.
Burnham Wm. Hall, schoolmaster and rate collector
Burnham Thos. vict. New Inn
Clarke Mrs Abigail
Cooper Miss Elizabeth
Dickens William, carpenter, wheelwright, and parish clerk
Elms William, blacksmith
Foster Joseph, beerhouse
Goodman Mr Thos.
Hall Samuel, vict. Windmill
Hall William, blacksmith
Hands Miss Ann

Hands Miss Maria, Compton
Cottage
Hands Mr Stephen
Harris Mrs Eleanor
Holden Benjamin and Eliza, shopkeepers
Jeffery Mr Thomas
Kitching Miss Jane, shopkeeper
Ley Rev. Jacob, B.D. vicar
Masters James, coal dealer
Page Thomas, butcher
Robbins William, shopkeeper
Taylor George, bricklayer
Vickers Edw. police constable
Waite William, shoemaker
Webb Caleb, shopkeeper

Farmers and Graziers.

(Marked thus * are yeomen.)

Bagshaw Samuel
*Basely George
Bates Jas. Sam. Manor-House
Boddington Robert
Burnham James (and butcher)
Clarke, Jas. Staverton Cottage
Clarke Thomas
Freeman John
*Goodman Clarke
*Goodman Uriah & James
*Hall William
*Hands George
*Hands William
*Roberts Edward Thomas
Roberts Thos. (and rate collr.)

Carrier to Daventry.—William Bulliman, on Wednesday and Saturday.

STOWE-NINE-CHURCHES PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Heyford and Bugbrooke, on the north by Weedon, on the west by Farthingstone, and on the south by Cold Higham and Litchborough. It contains 1840 acres, and its population in 1801 was 311 ; in 1831, 404 ; in 1841, 392 ; in 1851, 391 ; in 1861, 353 ; and in 1871, 285 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £4902, and the gross estimated rental £5441. The soil is chiefly a light loam, and the principal landowners are the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy, who are the lords of the manor. About four-fifths of the lordship is in tillage, and Stowe Wood, which was formerly more extensive, now consists of about 120 acres.

Manor.—Stowe, or Stowe-Nine-Churches (from the lord of the manor having had the right of presentation to that number of churches), consisted of 4 hides of land, which were held by Gilbert de Gant at the time of the general survey. This Gilbert, who was nephew to the Conqueror, was succeeded by his eldest son, Walter, who is said to have been a man of eminent piety and courage. Though advanced in years, he was an officer in command at the famous engagement against the Scots called the Battle of the Standard, at North-Allerton, in Yorkshire, and by his prudence and conduct is said to have gained the victory. In the reign of Henry II., John de Armenters held 4 hides in Stowe of the fee of Gilbert de Gant. Henry de Armenters, his son and successor, in the 6th of Richard I. (1195), paid a fine of 60 marks for leave to inclose a park here. To him succeeded John de Armenters, who, in the reign of Edward I., was found to be lord of the manor. In the 9th of Edward II. (1316), Nicholas de Segrave was lord of Stowe ; and in his time a fire occurred here, which consumed a great part of his outhouses and stables. Warine de Lisle, his successor, took up arms against the king, under the command of Thomas Earl of Lancaster, and was made prisoner with him at the battle of Borough Bridge, in Yorkshire, and the week following executed at Pontefract. The manor of Stowe at this time was seized into the hands of the king, and in the 19th of this reign (1326) granted for life to Gilbert de Middleton, Archdeacon of Northampton. In the 1st of Edward III. (1327), Gerard de Lisle, son of Warine de Lisle, was restored to his father's possessions; and in the 20th of this reign (1347) accounted for one fee here as of the Honor of Gant. Warine, his son and successor, dying without male issue, this manor descended to his daughter Margaret, the wife of Thomas Lord Berkeley, from whom it descended to his daughter Elizabeth, the wife of Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick. In the 17th of Henry VI. (1439), Richard Beauchamp died, leaving issue three daughters, and in the partition of his estates, the manor of Stowe was allotted to Elizabeth, wife of George Neville, Lord Latimer. The second wife of John Lord Latimer, one of the descendants of George, was Catherine, the daughter of Sir Thomas Parr, of Kendal, Knight, afterwards married to King Henry VIII. John, the last Lord Latimer of this family, dying without male issue, his inheritance was divided between his four daughters, and this manor was assigned to Lady Elizabeth, wife of Sir John Danvers, Knight, of Dantesey, in Wiltshire. Her second son, Henry, who succeeded to the manor of Stowe, was created Earl of Danby by Charles I., made a member of his Privy Council, and a Knight of the Garter. He died in 1643, after having repaired and beautified the parish church in 1639 at his own expense. From the family of Danvers the manor passed to Lord Wharton, and from him by sale to Edward Harley, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, who sold it, with other manors, in 1716, to the executors of the Rev. Thomas Turner, President of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, for £15,500, part of the residue of his property bequeathed in trust for the purchase of lands for the Governors of the Charity for Relief of the Poor Widows and Children of Clergymen. Dr Turner was son of Thomas Turner, Dean of Canterbury, and at his death he bequeathed to his friends and relations £4000, above £1000 to the church of Ely, £6000 to Corpus Christi College, and £20,000 in trust for the relief of widows and children of clergymen. The Manor-House, now a farmhouse, stands at the north-east side of the churchyard.

The Village of Stowe is pleasantly situated on an eminence, and consists of two parts, now called Church Stowe, and Stowe-Nine-Churches. In Bridges' time the first was "a village of twelve houses, and Far Stowe (or Little Stowe) of thirty." It is 6 miles S.E. of Daventry, 6½ N.N.W. of Towcester, 9 S.W. by W. from Northampton, and about 2 from the Weedon Station, and on the west side of the old Roman Watling Street, and the high road to Holyhead.

The Church, dedicated to St Michael, stands on the brow of a declivity north of the village, and consists of a nave, side aisles, and chapels, south porch, and chancel, with an embattled tower containing four bells. The door entering the tower from the nave is a curious relic of the original Norman edifice. The nave is divided from the chancel by a wooden screen, with circular columns supporting an entablature. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Weedon, rated in the king's books at £18, and now valued at £707. The Rev. J. L. Crawley is patron, and Rev. Henry Crawley, M.A., rector. The tithes were commuted in 1839 for £133, 3s. 4d., due to the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy, and £500, 7s. to the rector; besides which, the rector has 93a. 2r. 19p. of glebe, and two several annuities of £55, 16s. 8d., and £5, 11s. 8d., allotted under the Nether Heyford Enclosure Act in 1749. The church contains very handsome monuments to Dr Turner and Lady Elizabeth, daughter of John Lord Latimer; and upon a plain altar-tomb, with the arms of Lisle on the front, is exhibited the effigy of a cross-legged knight, armed cap-à-pie in chain mail. That of Lady Elizabeth is perhaps the most elegant tomb in the kingdom, and was the chef-d'œuvre of that great statuary Nicholas Stone. Her figure is of white marble, lying recumbent on a slab of black. The attitude is the most easy possible, that of one asleep; her head, covered with a loose hood, reclines on a rich cushion. One hand is placed on her breast, the other lies on one side. Round her neck is a quilled ruff. The fashionable stiffness of her embroidered stays is a disadvantage to this elegant sculpture. Her gown flows to her feet in easy folds, and covers them. She lies on a long cloak, lined with ermine, fastened at her neck with rich jewels. At her feet is a griffin holding a shield of the family arms. The whole rests on a white marble altar-tomb, with inscriptions and arms on the sides.

In Upper Stowe, or Stowe-Nine-Churches, is a very elegant Chapel of Ease with a burial-ground attached; and in CHURCH STOWE is a commodious well-built school, which will accommodate about seventy children.

Post-Office.—Letters arrive here from Weedon at 7 A.M., and are despatched at 6 P.M.

Capel Edward, baker & butcher
Collins Joseph, blacksmith
Crawley Rev. Hy. M.A. rector
Ladkin John, schoolmaster
Lucas William, parish clerk and shopkeeper

Pateman James, vict. Bird-in-Hand
Rainbow Thomas, shopkeeper
Roberts Edmund, carpenter
Trusler Harry, shoemaker

Farmers and Graziers.

Cotterell Wm. Manor-House
Foll John
Johnson Jno. Ayre, Stowe Lodge
Whitehead William

Carrier to Northampton.—John Warwick (from Stowe-Nine-Churches), on Saturday.

WEEDON BECK PARISH.

